Refon woll that a lovir be
In his yestis more large and fre
Than chorles that ben not of loving;
For who therof can any thing,
He shall be lese aie for to yeve,
In londis lore who so would leve;
For he that through a sodain sight,
Or for a kissing anon right
Yave whole his herte, in will and thought,
And to himself kepith right nought,
Aftir this swift gift 'tis but reason
He give his gode too in a bandon.

NOW woll I shortly here reherce
Of that I have ysaid in verce, Allè the sentence by and by,
In wordis fewe compendiously,
That thou the bet maiest on hem thinke,
Wher so it be thou wake or winke;
For the wordis do little greve
A man to kepe, whan thei be breve.
Who so with Love woll gon or ride

He mote be curteis, voide of pride,
Merie, and full of jolite,
And of Largesse a losid be.

*First I joigne The here in penaunce
That evir without repentaunce
Thou set thy thought in thy loving
To last withoutin repenting,
And think upon thy mirthis swete,
That shall folue' aftir whan ye mete.

2290 And for thou true to Love shalt be I will, and eke commaunde The
That in one place thou set all whole
Thine herte, withoutin halfin-dole,
For trecherie and skirnesse;
For I loved nevir doublenesse;

To many' his herte that woll depart,
Everiche shall have but little part;
But of him drede I me right nought
That in one place settith his thought;

2300 Therefore in o place thou it set,
And let it nevir thennis flet,
For if thou yevest it in lening,
I holde it but a wretchid thing;
Therefore yev' it whole and quite,
And thou shalt have the more merite,
If it be lent than aftir soyne

The bounde and the thanke is doyn;
But in Love a fre yevin thing
Requirith a grete guerdoning.

2310 - Yeve it in yest all quite fully,
And make thy gift debonairly,
For men that yest holdin more dere,
That yevin is with gladsome chere:

- That giftè nought to praisin is That a man gevith mal gre his; Whan thou hast yeven thine hert, (as I Have said The here all opiny)
Than aventuris shull The fall,

2320 Whiche hard and hevy ben with all;
For ofte whan thou bethinkist The
Of thy loving, where so thou be,
Fro solke thou must depart in hie,
That none perceive thy maladie,
But hide thine harme thou must alone,
And go forth sole, and make thy mone.

Thou shalt no while be in o state,
But whilom colde, and whilom hate,
Now red as Rose, now yelowè and fade,
Such sorow I trow thou ner had, seure.

2330 Cotidien, ne the quarteine
It is not half so full of peine,
For oftin timis it shal fal
In love, among thy painis al,
That thou thy selfin all wholly Forgettin shalt so uttirly,
That many timis thou shalt be Still as an image made of tro,
Domme as a stone, without stering
Of fote or honde, without speking.

2340 And than sone aftir al thy paine,
To memo'rie shalt thou come againe,
A man abashid wondir fore,
And aftir sighin more and more;
For witethou wele withoutin wene,
In suche astate ful ofte have bene,
That have the' evill of love assaide,
Where thorough thou art so dismaide.

2350 A Ftir a thought shal take The so,
That thy love is to ferte The fro;
Thou shalt sa (God) what may this be
That I ne may my lady se?

Mine

Mine hert alone is to her go,
And I abide al sole in wo,
Departid fro mine ownè thought,
And with mine eyin se right nought.

Alas! mine cien sene I ne may send I in my

My carefull herte to convey;
Mine hert'is guidè but thei be,
I praise nothing what er thei se;
Shul thei abidin than? why nay,
But gone and se without delay
That whiche mine hert desirith so,
For certainly, but if thei go,
— A sole my selfe I may well holde,
Whan I ne se what mine hert wolde;
Wherfore I wol gone her to sene,
Or esid shall I nevir bene,
But that I have some tokining.

— Than gost thou forth without dwelling,
But ofte thou failest of thy desire,
Er thou maist come her any nere,
And wastist in vaine thy passage,
Than fastist thou in a newe rage,
For want of sight thou ginnist myrne, o.
And homwarde pensite dost returne; oi
In grete mischese than shalt thou be,
For than againe shal come to The Sighis and plaintis with newe wo
That no itching prickith The so;
Who wote it nought, he maie go lere
Of them that buyin love so dere.

No thing thine hert appesin maie,
That oft thou wolt gone and allaie,
If thou maist sene by aventure
Thy liv'is joye, thine hert'is cure;
So that by grace, if that thou might Attaine of her to have a sight,
Than shalt thou done non othir dede
But with that sight thine cyin fede,
That faire freshe whan thou maist se,
Thine hert shal so ravishid be,
That ner thou woldest thy thankis lete,
Ne remove, for to se that swete;
The more thou seest, in forthfastnesse,
The more thou covitest that swetenesse,
The more thine herte brennith in fire,
The more thine herte is in desire;
For who considrieth every dele,
It may be likened wondir wele
The paine of love unto a fere;
For evighmore thou neighist nere,
In thought, or how so that it be,
(For very sothe I tel it The)
The hotter evir shal thou brenne,
As experience shall The kenne;
Where so comist in any coste, at thou
Who is next fire he brennith moste;
And yet forsothe for al thine hete,
Though thou for lovè swelte and swete,
Ne for no thing thou felin may Thou shalt not wille to passe away;
And though thou go, yet must The nede,
Thinkin al day on her faire hede,
Whom thou behelde with so gode will,
And holde thy selfe begilid ill
That thou ne haddest none hardiment
To shewe her aught of thine entent;
Thine hert ful fore thou wolt dispise,
And eke reprove of cowardise,
That thou so dull in every thing
Were domme for drede, without speking.

Thou shalt eke thinke thou diddest foly;
That thou were her so fastè bie,
And durst not venture The to say
Some thing, er that thou came away,

For thou haddist no more wonne.
To speke of her whan thou begonne;
But yet if she would for thy sake
In armis godely The have take, 2500
It should have be more worthe to The Than of trefour a grete plentè.

Thus shalt thou morne and eke complaine,
And get encheson to' gon againe
Unto thy walke, or to thy place,
Where thou behelde her fleshy face;
And n'ere for false suspèction
Thou woldist finde occasion
For to gone in unto her house,
Thou artè than so desirous 2510
A sight of her but for to have,
If thou thine honour mightist save,
Or any crande mightist make Thi'ir, for thy lov'is sake,
Ful faine thou woldist, but for drede
Thou goest nor, lest that men take hede;
Wherfore I rede, in thy going,
And also' in thine again comming,
Thou be wel ware that men ne wit,
Feinè The othir cause than it 2520

To go that waie, or fastè bie, y
To helin wel is no folie; y
And if so be it happè The
That thou thy love there maist yse, y
In sikir wise thou her salewe,
Wherwith thy coloure woll transmewe,
And eke thy blond shal al to quake,
Thy hewe eke chaungin for her sake;
But worde and wit with chere ful pale, 2530
Shul want for to tellin thy tale;
And if thou maist so ferforth winne
That thou to reson durst beginne,
And woldist saine thre thinges or mo,
Thou shalt ful scarfly saine the two,
Though thou bethinke the ner so wele,
Thou shalt foryetin yet somdele;

BUT if thou dele with trechery; 13
For false lovirs mowe all fully Sain what 'hem lust withoutin dred,
Thei be so double' in ther falsshed; 2540
For thei in hert can thinke o thing,
And saine an othre' in ther speking;
And whan thy speche is endid all,
Right thus to The it shal befall;
If any worde than come to minde,
That thou to say hast left behinde,
Than thou shalt brenne in grete mariere,
For thou shalt brenne as any fire;
This is the strife and eke the' affraie, 2550
And the batill that lastith aie;
This bargaine ende may nevir take,
But if that she thy pece wil make.

And whan the night is come anon,
A thousande angres shal come on;
To bed as fast thou wolte The dight,
Where thou shalt have but smal delight;
For whan thou wenist for to slepe,
So ful of painè shalt thou crepe,
Sterte in thy bed about ful wide, 2560
And turne ful ofte on every side,
Now dounward grouse, and now upright,
And walow in wo the long night,
Thine armis shalt thou sprede a brede, 2490
As man in warre were forwerede;
Than shal The come a remembraunce
Of her shape, and of her semblaunce,
Wherto none othir may be pere;
And were thou wel withoutin were

That

*l. Urchin. See.
V. 3135.*

That The shal se somtime that night
That thou hast her, that is so bright,
Nakid bitwene thine armis there,
Al sothfastnesse as though it were;
Thou shalt make castels than in Spaine,
And dreme of joy, al'but in vaine,
And The delitin of right nought,
While thou so slombfrist in that thought,
That is so swete and delitable,
The whiche in sothe n'is but a fable,
For it ne shall no while last;
Than shalt thou sighe and wepè fast,
And say dere God! what thing is this?
My dreme is turnid al amis,
Whiche was ful swete and apparent,
But now I wake it is al shent;
Now yede this mery thought away,
Twenty timis upon a day
I would this thought would come againe,
For it alegith wel my paine,
It maketh me ful of joyfull thought,
It sleeth me that it lastith nought:
Ah lord! whi n'il ye me socoure?
The joye I trowe that I langoure;
The deth I would me shoulde flo
While I lie in her armis two;
Mine harme is harde withoutin wene
My gret unse ful ofte I mene.

BUT wouldè Love do so I might Have fully joye of her so bright,
My paine were quitte me richily,
Alas! to gret a thing aske I;
It is but foly', and wrong wening
To aske so outrageous a thing;
And who so askith folily
He mote be warnid hastily;
And I ne wote what I may say,
I am so ferre out of the way,
For I would have ful grete liking
And ful grete joy of lasse thing;
For would she of her gentilnesse,
Withoutin more, me onis kesse,
It were to me a grete guerdon,
Relese of all my passion;
But it is harde to come therto,
Al is but foly that I do,
So highe I have mine hertè sette
Where that I may no comfort gette;
I n'ote wher I say well or nought,
But this I wote well in my thought,
That it were bette of her alone,
For to stintin my wo and mone,
A loke on her I cast godely,
Than for to have al uttirly
Of an othir al whole the play;
Ah lord! where I shal bide the day
That ere she shal my lady be!
He is ful cured, that may her se.
Ah God! whan shal the dauning springe,
To liggin thus is angry thing;
I have no joy thus here to lie,
Whan that my love is not me bie;
A man to lien hath grete disese,
Which maie not slepe, ne rest in ese,
I would it dawed, and were now day,
And that the night were went away;
For were it daye, I would up rise.
Ah slowè sonne! shewe thine enprise;
Spede The to sprede thy bemis bright,
And chace the derknesse of the night,
To put away the sloundis strong,
Whiche in me lastin al to long.
The night shalt thou continue so

Withoutin rest, in paine and wo,
If er thou knew of love distresse,
Thou mowe lerne it in that siknesse;
And thus enduring shalt thou lie,
And rise on morow up erly
Out of thy bed, and harneis The,
Er evir dawning thou maist se;
Al privily than shalt thou gone,
What wethre' it be, thy selfe alone, 2650
For reine, or haile, for snowe, for flete,
Thiðir she dwelleth, that is so swete,
The whiche maie fal a slepè be, back
And thinkith but lite upon The:
Than shalt thou go, ful foule aferde,
Loke if the gatè be unsperde, back
And waite without in woe and paine,
Ful ill a colde in winde and raine;
Than shalt thou go the dore before,
If thou maist findin any shore, 2660
Or hole, or reffe, what ere it were,
Than shalt thou stoupe, and lay to ere,
If thei within a slepè be, 2690
I mene al save thy lady fre,
Whom waking if thou maist asprie,
Go put thy selfe in jupardie,
To askin grace, and The bimene,
That she maie wete withoutin wene,
That thou all night no rest hast had,
So fore for her thou were bestad. 2670
Women wel ought pitè to take
Of them that sorowen for ther sake;
And loke, for love of that relike, back
That thou thinkè none othir like, back
For whan thou hast so gret anney, on Shall kisse The er thou go away, The gate h. c. fr.
And hold that in ful grete deintè;
And for that no man shall The se
Before the house, ne in the way,
Loke thou be gon againe er day; 2680
Suchè comming, and suche going,
Suche hevinesse, and suche walking, l. talking
Makith lovirs withoutin wene
Undir ther clothis pale and lene;
Love ne leveth colour, ne clerenesse,
Who lovith trewe hath no fatnesse;
Thou shalt wel by thy selfin se,
That thou must nedes assayid be;
For men that shape 'hem othir way
Falsely ther ladies to betray, 2690
No wondir is though thei be fatte,
With false othis ther loves thei gatte;
For ofte I se suche losingeours
Fattir than Abortes or Priours. 2620
Yet with o thing I wolke The charge,
That is to say, that thou be large
Unto the maide, that her doth serve,
So best her thanke thou shalt deserve:
Yeve her gestis, and get her grace,
For so thou may, thankè purchase, her 2700
That she The worthy holde and fre;
Thy lady', and al that may The se,
Also her servautes, worship aie,
And plesin as muche as thou maie; l. please him.
Grete gode through them may come to The,
Bicause with her thei ben privè;
Thei shal her tel how thei The fande
Curteis and wise, and wel doande,
And she shal preise The wel the more.
Loke out of londe thou be nor fore, 2710
And if suche cause thou have, that The Behoveth to gone out of countrè,
Leave wholely thine hert in hostage,
Til thou againe make thy passage,
O o o Thinkè

Thinke long to se the swete thing,
That hath thine hert in her keping.
Now have I tolde The, in what wise
A lovir shal do me service; s/
Do it than, if that thou wolt have
The mede, that thou dost aftir crave.

WHan Love al this had bodin me,
I said him, sir, how may it be,
That lovirs may in suche manere
Endure the paine ye have said here?
I marvailin me wondir faste
How any man may live or laste
In suche paine, and in suche brenning,
In forse and thought, and suche sighing, tenet. Tr.
Aie unrelifid wo to make,
Wher so it be thei slepe or wake,
In suche anoy continually;
As helpe me God this mervaile I,
How man, but he were made of stele,
Might live a month, such paines to fele.

THE God of Love than said to me,
Frende, by the faith I owe to The,
May no man have gode, but he it bie;
A man lovith more tendirlic
The thing, that he hath bought most dere;
For were thou well withoutin were,
In thanke that thing is takin more,
For which a man hath suffrid sore;
Certis no wo ne may attaine
Unto the sore of lov's paine,
None evil therto may amounte
No more than a man may counte
The droppes that of the watir be,
For drie as wel the grette se
Thou mightist, as the harmis tell
Of all them, that with love ydwell,
In service; for peine them flyeth;
And that eche woulde fle the deth;
And trowe thei should nevir escape,
Ne were that hope ycouth 'hem make Glad; as a man in prison sete,
And maie not gettin for to ete
But Barlie bred and watir pure,
And lieth in vermin and ordure,
With alle this yet can he live,
Gode hope suche comfort hath him yeve,
Whiche makith wene that he shal be Reliefed and come to liberte;
In fortune is fully his trust,
Although he lie in strawe or dust,
In hope is al his sustaining;
So fare Lovirs in ther weyning,
Whiche Love hath shutte in his prisoun,
Gode hope is ther salvacioun,
Gode hope (how fore that thei smerte)
Yevith 'hem both will and herte
T' offre ther bodie to martyre;
For Hope so fore doth 'hem desire
To suffre eche harme that men devise,
For joye that aftirwarde shal rise.

Hope in desire cathe victory,
In hope of Love is al the glory;
For hope is all that Love maie yeve;
Nere hope, there should no lengir live;
Blessid be hope, which with desire
Avaunceth lovirs in suche manere:
Gode hope is curteise for to plesse,
To kepe Lovirs from all discesse;
Hope kepeth his londe, and woll abide
For any peril maie betide;
For hope to lovirs, as most chese,

Doth 'hem endurin all mischefe;
Hope is ther helpe whan mistir is;
And I shal yeve The eke i-wis
Thre othir thinges, that grete solace
Doth to them that be in my lace. 2790

2720 The first gode that maie be yfounde
To them that in my lace be bounde,
Is Swete thought, for to recorde Double penit
Thing wherwith thou canst accorde
Best in thine herte, whethir she be Thinking in absence gode to The.
Whan any lovir doth complaine,
And livith in distresse, and paine,
Than Swete thought shal come as blive,
Awaie his angre for to drive; 2800
It maketh lovirs have remembraunce
Of comforte, and of high plesaunce,
That hope hath hight him for to winne;
For thought anone than shal beginne,
As ferre God wot, as he can finde,
To make a mirrour of his minde;
For to beholde he wol not let,
Her person he shal fore him set,
Her laughing eyen persaunt and clere,
Her shape, her forme, her godely chere; 2810
Her mouthe, that is so gracious,
So swete, and eke so savourous,
Of al her fetirs shal take hede,
His eyen with al her limmis fede.

2740 Thus Swete thinking shal aswage
The paine of lovirs, and ther rage;
Thy joye shal double without gesse,
Whan thou thinkest on her semelnesse,
Or of her laughing, or her chere,
That to The made thy lady dere. 2820
This comforte wol I that thou take,
And if the nexte thou wolte forsake,
Which is not lesse savourous,
Thou shouldest [not] ben to daungirous. 8 Tr.

THE second shal be swete speche, Double parlor
That hath to many one be leche,
To bring 'hem out of wo and were,
And helpe many a bachilere,
And many a lady sent socour,
That hath ylovid Paramour; 2830
Thorough speking (whan thei might here)
Of ther lovirs to them so dere;
To me it voidith al ther smerte, f. Sone
The whiche is closid in ther herte,
In hert it maketh 'hem glad and light,
Speche, whan thei mowe not havin sight.
And therefore nowe it cometh to minde,
In old dawis, as I finde
That Clerkis writtin that her knewe;
There was a lady freshe of hewe, 2840
Whiche of her love madin a song,
On him for to remembre among,
In which she said, whan that I here
Spekin of him, that is so dere
To me, it voidith alle smerte, may
Iwis he sireth so nere mine herte;
To speke of him at eve or morowe,
It curith me of al my sorowe;
To me is none so high plesaunce
As of his person daliaunce; 2850
She wist ful wel that Swete speking
Comfortith in ful mochil thing;
Her love she had full well assaie,
Of him she was ful wel apaie;
To speke of him her joye was set.
Therefore I rede The that thou get
A felowe that can wel concele,
And kepe rhy counsaile, and welle hele,

To whom go shewe wholly thine herte,
Both wele and woe, and joye and smerte;
To get comforte to him thou go,
And privily bitwene you two Ye shal speke of that godely thing,
That hath thine hert in her keping,
Of her beautè and her semblaunce,
And of her godely countinaunce,
Of al thy state thou shalt him saie,
And aske him counsaile how thou maie
Do any thing that maie her plesse,
For it to The shal do gret ese,
That he maie were thou trust him so
Both of thy wele and of thy wo,
And if his herte to love be sette,
His companie is moche the bette,
For Reson wol he shewe to The Al uttirly his privite,
And what she is he lovith so
To The plainly he shal undo, Withoutin drede of any shame,
Both tel her renome and her name,
Than shall he forthir ferre and nere,
And namely to thy lady dere
In sikir wise, ye every other
Shal helpin as his ownè brother,
In trouthe withoutin doublensse,
And kepin close in sikirnesse:
For it is noble thing in fay
To have a man thou darstè say
Thy privy counsaile every dele,
For that woll comforte The right wele,
And thou shalt holde The wel apaid
Whan suche a frende thou hast assaied.

THE thirdè gode of grete comfort,
That yevith lovirs most disport,
Comith of sight and beholding,
That is yclepid Swete-looking, Doux regard
The whichè may none ese ydo
Whan thou art ferre thy lady fro; Wherfore thou prese alway to be,
In placè, where thou maist her se,
For it is thing most amirous,
Moste delitable and favirous, savour
For to asswage a mann's sorow,
To sene his lady by the morow;
For it is a ful noble thing,
Whan that thine eyin have meting
With that relike so precious,
Whereof thei be so desirous;
But al daie aftir, sothe it is,
Thei have no drede to faren amis,
Thei dredin neithir winde ne raine
Ne non othir manir (of) paine;
For whan thine eyen were thus in blisse,
Yet of ther curtisie iwisse
Alone thei can not have ther joye,
But to the hertè thei convoye
Parte of ther blisse, to him thou sende it they s.
Of al this harme to make amende. his
The eye is a gode meslangere,
Which can to the hert in suche manere
Tidingis sende, that he hath sene,
To voide him of his painis clene;
Wherof the hert rejoyfith so
That a grete partie of his wo
Is voided, and put away to flight;
Right as the derkenesse of the night
Is chased with clerenesse of the mone,
Right so is al his wo ful sone
Devoidid clene, whan that the sight
Beholdin may that freshe wight,
Whiche that the hert desirith so,

2860 That al his derkenesse is ago,
For than the herte is all at ese,
When thei sene that that maie hem plesse.
Now have I declared The al our
Of that thou were in drede and doute;
For I have tolde The faithfully
What The may curin uttirly,
And al Lovirs that wollin be Faithful, and of stabilitè; 2940
Gode hope alway kepe by thy side,
And swete thought make eke abide,
2870 Swete Loking, and swete Speche,
Of al thine harmes thei shal be leche,
Of bale thou shalt have grete plesaunce,
Yf thou canst bide in suffraunce,
And servin wele without feintise,
Thou shalt be quite of thine emprise
With more guerdoun, if that thou live,
But al this time this I The yeve. f. at. 2950

2880 THE God of Love, whan al the day
He had taught me, as ye have herd say,
And enformid compendously,
He vanishid al sodainly,
And I alone ylefte al sole,
So full of complaint and of dole,
For I sawe no man there me by;
My woundes me grevid wondirly, -ly
Me for to cure nothing I knewe,
Save the bothum so bright of hewe, 2960
Wheron was sette wholly my thought,
Of othir comforte knewe I nought,
2890 But it were through the God of Love,
I knew nat else to my behove, nought
That might me ese or comfort gette,
But if he would him entermette.

The Rosir was withoutin dout Yclosid with an hedge without,
As ye to forne have herde me saine;
And fast I besied, and would saine 2970
Have passid the hay, if I might Have gettin in by any sleight
To the bothum so faire to se,
But evir I dradde blamed to be,
Yf men would have suspicion,
That I would of entencion
Have stole the Rosir that there were,
Therefore to entre I was in fere;
But at the laste, as I bethought
Whethir I shuldè passe or nought, 2980
— I sawe come, with a gladde chere;
To me a lusty Bachilere

2910 Of gode stature and of gode height,
And Bialacoil forsoth he height; Belacoil J. B. Belacoil
Sonnè he was to Curtisie,
And he me grauntid ful gladlie
The passage of the uttir hay,
And saide, sir; how that ye may,
Passe, if that it your wille ybe
The freshe Rosir for to se, roses 2990
And ye the swete savour sele, other sw. so. for to sele
Your warrant I may be right wele;
2920 So thou The kepin fro folie,
Shal no man do The vilanie, Yf I maie helpin you in ought
I shall not saine, dredith right nought,
For I am bounde to your service
Fully devoide of all feintise.
Than unto Bialacoil saide I,
I thanke you, sir, ful hertily, 3000
And your behest I take at gre,
That ye so godely profir me;
2930 To you it cometh of grete fraunchise
That ye me profir your servise.

Than astir ful delivirly
Through the breris anone went I,
Wherof encombrid was the haie,
I was well plesed, the sothe to saie,
To se the bothum, faire and fore,
So freshe ysprong out of the rote.

AND Bialacoil me servid wele,
Whan I so nigh me mightin fele
Of the bothum the swete odoure,
(And) so lusty hewd of coloure:
But than a chorle, foule him betide,
Beside the Rosis gan him hide,
To kepe the Rosis of that Rosere,
Of whom the name was Daungere.
This chorle was hid there in the greves,
Ycovirid with grasse and leves,
To spie, and take whom that he fonde
Unto that Rosir put an honde.

He was not sole, for there was mo,
For with him werin othir two,
Of wickid manirs, and ill fame,
That one was clepid by his name
Wickid tonge, God yeve him forowe,
For neithir at eve ne at morowe
He can of no man gode yspoke,
On many a juste man doth he wreke.

There was a woman that eke hight
Shame, that who can rekin right,
Trespasce ywas her fathir's name,
Her mothir Reson; thus was shame
Ybrought forth of these ilke two,
And yet had trespasce nere adoe
With Reson, ne nere leie her by,
He was hidous and so ugly;
(I mene this, that Trespasce hight)
But Reson conceveth of a sight
That shame, of which I spake afore;
And whan that Shame was thus yborne,
It was ordained, that Chastite
Should of the Rosir Lady be,
Whiche of the bothums more and las;
With sondrie folke assailid was,
That she ne wiste what to doe,
For Venus her assailith so,
That night and daie fro her she stail
Bothoms and Rosis ovir all;
To Reson than praieth Chastite,
Whom Venus hath slemmed ore the se,
That she her doughtir would her lene,
To kepe the Rosir freshe and grene.

Anon Reson to Chastite
(Is) fully assentid that it be,
And grauntid her, at her request,
That Shame, bicause she is honest,
Shall kepir of the Rosir be,
And thus to kepe it there were thre,
That none should hardie be ne bolde,
(Were he yongè, or were he olde)
Again her will awaie to bere Bothoms ne Rosis, that there were.
I had well sped, had I nat ben
Awaitid with these thre and sene;
For Bialacoil, that was so faire,
So gracious and debonaire,
Quitte him to me ful curtisly,
And me to plesin, badde that I Should drawe to the bothom nere,
Plesin to touchin the Rosere,
Whiche bare the Rose, he yafe me leve,
This graunt ne might but litill greve;
And for he sawe it likid me
Right nigh the bothom pullid he
A lefe all grene, and yave me that,

The whiche full nigh the bothom sat;
I madin of that lefe full queint;
And whan I felt I was aquente
With Bialacoil and so prive,

I wende all my will had ybe;
Than wext I hardie for to tell

To Bialacoil how me befell
Of Love, that toke and woundid me,
And sayid, sir, so mote I The,
I maie no joie have in no wise

Upon no side, but it arise
For sithè (if I shall not faine) f. l. Fro this; for if he.

In herte I have had so grete paine,
So grete anoie, and soche affraie,
That I ne wotte what I shall saie,
I drede your wrothè to deserve,
Levir me were that knivis kerve
My bodie should in pecis small,
Than in any wise it should fall

That ye wrothid should ben with me.
Saie boldily thy will (qð he)
I n'll be wrothe, if that I maie,
For nought that thou shalt to me saie.

THAN saied I sir, not you displese
To knowin of my grete unese,
In whiche only Love hath me brought;
For painis grete, disese and thought
Fro daie to daie it dooth me drie;
Supposith not, sir, that I lie;
In me five woundis did he make,
The sore of whiche shall nevir flake,
But ye the bothom graunte me,
Whiche is most passaunt of beauté,
My life, my deth, and my martyre,
And trespasce that I moste desire.

Than Bialacoil affrayid all
Sayid, sir, it maie not befall,
That ye desire, it maie not rise,
What would ye shende me in this wise?

A mokill folè than I were,
If I suffrid you awaie to bere
The freshe bothom, so faire of sight;
For it were neithir skill ne right
Of the Rosir ye broke the rinde,
Or take the Rose afore his kinde;

Ye are not curteis to aske it,
Let it still on the Rosir sit,
Let it growe till it amendid be,
And perfitly come to beauté;
I n'olde not that it pullid were,
Fro the Rosir that doth it bere,
To me it is so lefe and dere.

With that anon stert out Daungere
Out of the place where he was hidde,
His malice in his chere was kidde;
Full grete he was and blacke of hewe,
Sturdie and hidous, who so him knewe,
Like sharpe urchons his heere was growe,
His eyes red-sparcling as fire glowe,
His nose frouncid full kirkid stode,
He come criande as he were wode,
And saied; Bialacoil tel me why

Thou bringist hiðir so boldely
Him that so nigh to the Rosere? f. This man, or fellowe, or 3129.
Thou worchist in a wrong manere, f. Him that so nigh to the, or 3130.
He thinkith to dishonour The,
Thou art well worthy to have malgre;
To let him of the Rosere Witte,
Who servith Fellone is ill quitte.
—Thou wouldist have doon grete bounte,
And he with shame would quite The.
Flie hens felowe, I rede The go,
It wantith lite he wol The flo.

For

For Bialacoil ne knewe The nought,
Whan The to serve he set his thought;
For thou wolt shame him if thou might,
Bothe again reson and 'gainst right;
in. m. l. r. I woll no more in The affie,
S That comest so slightly for t' espie;
For it provith wondirly wele f. is proved
Thy sleight and treson every dele.

I durst no more make there abode,
For the chorle, he was so wode;
3160 So gan he threstin and manace,
And through the haie he did me chace;
S For feresof him I trembled and quoke, .f.
So chorlishely his hedde he shoke,
And saied, if eft he might me rake,
I should nat from his hondis scape.
Than Bialacoil is fled and mate,
And I all sole disconsolate
Was left alone in pain and thought, 3170 Fro shame to deth I was nigh brought;
Than thought I on my high folie,
How that my bodie uttirlic
Was yeve to pain and to martire,
And therto had I so grete ire,
That I ne durst the hayis passe,
There was no hope, there was no grace,
I trowe nevir man wiste of pain
But he were laced in Lov's chain,
Ne no man wist (and soth it is)

But if he love, what angir is. St. angir is. 3180
Love holdeth his heste to me right wele,
Whan pain (he sayd) I should fele;
No herte maie thinke, no tonge can, or may. f. in the f.
A quartir of my wo and pain;
I might not with the angir last,
Mine herte in point was for to braft,
Whan I thought on the Rose, that so
Was thorough Daungir cast me fro.
[A long while stode I in that state,
Till that me sawe so madde and mate
The Ladic, of the high ward,
Whiche from her toure looked thiðirward.

Reson men clepin that Lady,
Whiche from her toure delivirly
Came doune to me withoutin more;
But she was neither yong ne hore,
Ne high, ne lowe, ne fatte, ne lene,
But best, as it were in a mene;
Her eyin two were clere and light
As a candill, that brennith bright,
And on her hedde she had a croune,
3200 Her semid well and high persounes;
For round environ her crounet
Was full of riche stonis afret;
Her godely semblaunt by devise
I trowe was made in Paradise,
For nature had nevir soche grace
To forge a worke of soche compace;
For certain, but if the lettir lie, S
Grete God himself, that is so hie,
Formid her aftir his image,
And yafe her sithe soche avauntage,
That she hath might and seignorie
To kepē men from all folie,
Who so woll trowe wele her lore,
Ne maie offendin nevirmore.

And while I stode thus derke and pale
Reson began to me her tale;
She saied, al haile my swete frende,
Folie and childhod woll The shende,
Whiche The have put in grete affraie;
Thou hast bought dere the time of Maie,

That made thine herte merie to be;
In evill time thou wentest to se
The gardin, whereof Idilnesse
Ybare the keie and was maistresse,
Whan that thou yedist in the daunce
With her, and haddin' acquaintance; St. her, ut l. seq.
Her acquaintance is perillous, 3230 First soft, and aftir full noious;
She hath The trashid without wene;
The God of Love had The nat sene,
Ne had Idilnesse The conveide
Within the verge, where Mirthe him pleide;
If Folie have surprisid The,
Doe so that it recovered be,
And be well ware to take no more
Counsaile, that grevith aftir sore,
He' is wise that woll himself chastise.
3240 —Though a yong man in any wise
Trespasse emong, and doe folie,
Let him nat dwelle, but hastilie
Let him amende what so be mis;
And eke I counsaile The i-wis
The God of Love wholly foryete,
That hath The in soche pain ysete,
And The in herte tourmentid so,
I can not sene how thou maicst go
Othir waies The to garisoun, to thy p.
3250 For daungere, that is so feloun, D
Fellie purposeth The to werreie,
Whiche is full cruill, sothe to seie.

AND yet of Daungere cometh no blame,
In reward of my doughtir shame, St.
Whiche hath the Rosis in her warde,
As she that maie be no mufarde,
And wickid tong is with these two,
That suffrich no man thiðir go,
For er a thing be doc, he shall,
3260 Where that he comith ovir all,
In fourtie placis, if' it be sought,
Saie thing that nere was don ne wrought,
So moche traifon is in his male,
Of falsenelle for to faine a tale.
Thou delect with angrie folke iwis,
Wherefore to The the bettir is
From these folkis awaie to fare,
For thei woll make The live in care; L.
This is the ill that love thei call, 3270 Wherein there is but folie all;
For love is folie every dell,
Who loveth, in no wise maie doe well,
Ne set his thought on no gode werke;
His schole he leleth, if he be clerke;
Or othir craft, if that he be, f
He shall not thrive therein, for he
In love shal have more passioun
Than Monke, or Hermite, or Chanoun.
This pain is herd out of mesure, a
The joie maie no while endure; 3280
And eke in the possession
Is mochil tribulacion;
The joie it is so short lasting,
And but in hape is the getting;
I se there many in travaile,
That at the last shall foully faile; l. fully. fr. de tout
I was nothing thy counsailler,
Whan thou were made the homager
Of God of Love to hastily,
Where was no Wisedome, but Folie, 3290
Thine harte was jolic, but not sage,
Whan thou were brought in soche a rage,
To yelde The up so redily 3220 To Love of his grete maistiry.

P P P

I rede

f. l. folie off is gr. ma.fr. une folie est tout compo.Wise in whiche in maistiry.

I Rede The Love awaie to drive,
That maketh The reche not of thy live;
The Foie more fro daie to daie
Shall growe, but thou it put awaie;
Take with thy tethe the bridill faste
To daunt thy herte, and eke The caste,
If that thou maigest, to get defence
For to redresse thy first offence:
Who so his herte alwaie woll leve
Shall finde emong that shall him greve.
Whan I her herd thus me chastise,
I answerde in full angrie wise,
*I prayid her cesse of her speche,
Eithir to chastise me or teche,
To biddè me my thought refrein, Whiche Love hath caught in his demein: or What wenin ye Love woll consent
(That me assayith with bowe bent)
To drawe mine herte out of his honde,
Whiche is so quickly in his bonde?
That ye counsaile maie never be,
For whan he first arestid me,
He toke mine herte so fore him till,
That it is nothing at my will,
He taught it so him for to obeie,
That he it sparrid with a keie.
I praie you let me be all still,
For ye maie well, if that ye will,
Your wordis waste in idilnesse,
For uttirly, withoutin gelle,
All that ye saie is but in vain;
Me were levir die in the pain,
Than Love to meward should arette, r
Falshe, or trefon on me sette;
I woll me gettin pris, or blame, - e,
And Love true for to save my name,
Who me chastiseth, I him hate.
With that worde Reson went her gate
Whan she sawe for no termoning
She might me fro my folie bring.
Than dismayid I left all sole, urru
For-werie, for-wandred as a sole,
For I ne knewe no cheyfaunce. v
Than fell into my remembraunce
How Love ybadde me to purveie
A felawe, to whom I might seie,
My counsaile and my privite,
For that should moche availin me.
With that bethought I me, that I
Yhad a felaw false by,
True and sikur, curteis, and hende,
And he called was by name a frende;
A truer felawe was no where none.
In hast to him I went anone,
And to him all my wo I told,
Fro him right nought I would withhold, h
I tolde him all withoutin were,
And made my compleint on Daungere,
How for to seie he was hidous, h
And to meward contrarious,
The whichè through his cruilte
Was in point to have meimid me,
With Balafoil whan he me seie
Within the gardin walke and pleie,
Fro me he made him for to go,
And I be left alone in wo:
I durst no lengir with him speke,
For Daungir saied he would be wreke, Whan that he sawe how that I went
The freshe bothom for to hent,
If I were hardie to come nere
Bitwene the haie and the Rosere.
This frende, whan he wist of my thought,
He discomfortid me right nought,

But saied felawe, be nat so madde,
Ne so abashid nor bestadde,
My felse I knowe full well Daungere,
And how that he is fiers of chere,
At primè temps, Love to manace, - r
Full oft I have ben in his case, f. thy, or that,
A felon first though that he be,
Affir thou shalt him souple se;
Of long passid I knewe him wele;
Ungodelic first though men him seie,
He woll meke astre' in his bering
Ben, for service and obeissing;
I shall The tell what thou shalt doe;
Mekely I rede thou go him to,
Of herte praie him specially
Of thy trespase to have mercie,
And hotip him well here to plese,
That thou shalt ner more him displese;
Who can best serve of flatiry
Shall plese Daungir most uttirly.

My frende hath saied to me so wele,
That he me esid hath somede, 3390
And eke allegged of my tourment;
For through him had I hardiment
Again to daungir for to go,
To preve if I might make him so. f. make. for. arrayer

TO Daungir cam I all ashamed,
The whichè asorne me had yblamed,
Desiring for t' aperse my wo,
But ovir hedge durst I nat go,
For he forbode me the passage,
I founde him cruill in his rage,
And in his honde a grete bourdoun;
To him I knelid lowe adoun,
Full meke of port, and simple' of chere,
And saied, sir, I am comin here
Onely to ask of you mercie;
It grevith me full gretely,
That evir I have wrathid you; u
But for to amende I am come now,
With all my might, bothe loude and still,
To doin right at your owne will,
For Love madin me for to do, 3410
That I have trespassed hi' dirto,
Fro whom I ne maie drawe mine herte,
Yet shall I nere for joie ne sinerte
(What so befall me, gode or ill)
Offendin more again your will;
Levir I have endure difese
Than doe that whichè should you displese.

I You require, and praie that ye
Of me have mercie and pite,
To stint your ire that grevith so, 3420
That I woll swere for evirmo
To be redressed at your liking,
If I trespase in any thing,
Save that (I praie The) grauntè me
A thing, that maie nat warnid be,
That I maie love all onily,
None othir thing of you aske I;
I shall doin all wele i-wis,
If of your grace you graunt me this, 3430
And that ye maie nat lettin me,
For well wore ye that love is fre,
And I shall loven soche that I will,
Who evir like it well or ill;
And yet ne would I for all Fraunce f. for France.
Doe thing to doe you displefaunce.

Than Daungir fill in his entent
For to foryeve his male talent;

But

3397 I may your Daunce, esse of your speche. f. r.

But all his wrathe yet at the last
He hath relefed, I praied so fast,
Shortly (he sayid) thy request
Is nat to mokill dishonest, Ne I woll nat wernin it The,
For yet nothing engrevith me;
For though thou love thus evirmore,
To me is neithir softe ne fore, f. sole.
Love where The list, what rechith me?
So ferre thou fro my Rosis be,
Trust not on me for none assaie
In any time to passe the haie:

—Thus hath he grauntid my praier.
[Than went I forthe withoutin were Unto my frende, and told him all,
Whiche was right joifull of my tale;
(He saied) now goeth well thine affaie,
He shall to The be debonaire,
Though he aforne was dispitous,
He shall hereafter be gracious,
If he were touched on some gode veins;
He should yet rewine on thy peins;
Suffir, I rede, and go boste make,
Till thou at gode mes maigest him take:
—By suffraunce, and by wordis soft
A man maie ovircomin oft
Him, that aforne he had in drede,
In bokis sothly as I rede.

[Thus hath my frende with grete comfort
Avauncid me with high disport,
Whiche would me gode as moche as I;
And than anon full sodainly
I toke my leve, and streight I went Unto the haie; for grete talent
I had to sene the freshe bothom, "
Wherein laie my salvacion,
And Daungir toke kepe, if that I,
Kepe him covinaunt truily;
So sore I drede his manasing, " f. drad.
I durst not brekin his bidding;
For lest that I were of him shent,
I brake not his commaundment;
For to purchasin his gode will,
It was, for to comin there till,
His mercie was to ferre behinde
Ykept, for I ne might it finde;
I complainid and sighid sore,
And languishid evir the more,
For I ne durst nat ovir go
Unto the Rose I lovid so,
Throughout my deming uttirly
That he had knowlege certainly;
Thay Love me ladde in soche wise,
That in me there was no feintise,
Ne falsheide, ne no trecherie;
And yet he full of villanie,
And of disdaie, and cruilte,
On me ne would have no pite,
His cruill will for to refrain,
Tho I wept aie, and me complain. "

Th AND while I was in this furment
Were come of grace, by God ysent
Dame Fraunchise, and with her Pitè
Fulfilde the bothom of bountè;
Thei go to Daungir anon right
To ferthir me with all ther might,
And helpe me, in worde and in dede;
For well thei sawe that it was nede.
First of her grace dame Fraunchise
Ytaken hath of this emprise;
She saied, Daungir, grete wrong ye doc
To worche this man so mochil woe,
Or pinin him so angirlic,

3440 It is to you grete villanie;
I can not se, ne why ne how
That he hath trespassed again you, 10
Save that he loveth, wherefore ye shoid
The more in charite for him hold, " f. A.
The force of love maketh him doe this,
Who would him blame he did amis,
He leivith more than he maie doe,
His pain is harde, ye maie se, lo! 3520
And Love in no wise would consent
That he have powir to repent;

3450 For though that quicke ye would him slo,
Fro Love his herte ne maie nat go
Now, swete sir, 'tis your ele
Him for to angir or disese?
Alas! what maie it you avaunce
To doen to him so grete grevaunce?
What worship is 't again him take,
Or on your man a werrè make, 10 3530
Sithe he so lowlie every wise
Is redy, as ye luste devise?

3460 If Love have caught him in his lace
You for t' obaie in every cace, 10
And ben your subject at your will, He is y. or. And h. or. y. or. h. or.
Should ye therfore willin him ill?
Ye should him sparin more all out
Than him that is bothe proude and stout;
Curtise would that ye succoure
Them, that ben meke undir your cure; 3540
His herte is hard, that will not make,
W. am men of mkenesse him b. fike.

3470 THis is certain, sayid Pitè,
We se oft that Humilite, h
Bothe ire, and also felonie
Venquisheth, and also melancolic, h
To stondin forthe in soche duresse
This cruilte and wickidnesse; 10
Wherefore I praie you, sir Daungere,
For to maintein no lengir here 3550
Soche cruill warre again your man,
As wholly your's, as er he can,

3480 Nor that ye worchin no more wo
On this caitise languishing so,
Whiche woll no more to you trespase;
But put him wholly in your grace;
And his offence ne was but lite,
The God of love it was to wite,
That he your thrall so gretely is, 1
If ye him harme, ye doen amis, 3560
For he hath had full hard penaunce,

3490 Sith that ye rest him th' aquaintaunce
Of Bialacoil, his moste jore,
Whiche all his painis might acoie,
He was before anoyid sore,
But than ye doublid him well more,
For he of blisse hath ben full bare,
Sith Bialacoil was fro him fare;
Love hath to him done grete distresse,
He hath no nede of more duresse; 3570
Voidith from him your ire, I rede,

3500 Ye maie not winnin in this dede; ugh
Maketh Bialacoil repaire again,
And havith pite on his pain;
For Fraunchise woll, and I Pitè,
That mercifull to him ye be;
And sithe that she and I accorde,
Have upon him misericorde;
For I you praie, and eke moneste, 10
Nought to refusin our requeste, 10 3580
For he is hard, and full of thought, f. sole. 10

3510 That for us two, woll doe right nought.
Daungir ne might no more endure,
He mekid him unto mesure.

I woll

I woll in no wife, saith Daungere,
 Denie that ye have askid here,
 It were to grete uncurtisie;
 I woll ye have the companie
 Of Bialacoil, as ye devise,
 I woll him lett n in no wife.
 To Bialacoil than went in hie,
 Fraunchise, and saied full curtisie,
 Ye have to long ben deignous - dis-
 Unto this lovir, and daungefrous,
 Fro him to withdrawe your presence,
 Whiche hath doe to him grete offence,
 That ye not would upon him se,
 Whertore a so'rowfull man is he;
 Shape ye to paie him, and to please,
 Of my love if ye woll have ese;
 Fulfill his will, sith that ye knowe
 Daungir is dauntid and brought lowe,
 Through helpe of me and of Pite;
 You dare no more aserde to be.
 I shall do right as ye will, all fr. loud.
 Saieth Bialacoil, for it is skill,
 Sith daungir woll that it so be;
 [Than Fraunchise hath him sent to me:

Bialacoil at the beginning
 Saluid me in his coming, ew.
 No straungenesse was in him sene,
 No more than he ne had wrathid ben,
 As faire semblaunt than shewed he me,
 And godely, as aforne did he,
 And by the honde withoutin doubt
 Within the haie right all about,
 He lad me with a right gode chere;
 All environ on the vergere
 That daungere had me chafid fro,
 Now have I leve ovre all to go;
 Now am I raised at my devise Fro hell up unto Paradise.
 Thus Bialacoil of gentilnesse
 With all his pain and byfinesse
 Hath shewid me onely of grace
 The eftirs of the sore place.

I sawe the Rose, when I was nigh,
 Was gretir woxin, and more high,
 Freshe, and roddy, and faire of hewe,
 Of colour evir illiche newe:
 And whan I had it longe sene,
 I sawe that through the levis grene
 The Rose spred to spannishing,
 To sene it was a godely thing,
 But it ne was so sprede on brede
 That men within might knowe the sde,
 For it covert ywas and close
 Bothe with the leves and with the Rose,
 The stalke was even and grene upright,
 It was thereon a godely sight,
 And well the bettir without wene
 For that the sde was not yfene,
 Full faire it sprad the God of blesse, f. G. in bl. fr.
 For soche an othir, as I gesse,
 Aforne ne was, ne more vermaile; e/
 I was abawid for marveile,
 For er the fairir that it was,
 The more I am boundin in love's laas.
 Long I abode there, sothe to saie,
 Till Bialacoil I gan to praie,
 Whan that I sawe him in no wife
 To me to warnin his service, f
 That he to me would graunt a thing,
 Whiche to remembre is well-fitting, f. fit - fr. brinfast.
 This is to saine, that of his grace
 He would me yeve leisir and space, e/

To me that was so desirous
 To have a kissing precious fr. sarour cnd.
 Of the so godely freshe Rose
 That so ~~swere~~ly smelleth in my nose; solaly fr. 3660
 For if it you displecid nought, sof.
 I woll gladly, as I have fought,
 Havin a kisse thereof frely
 Of your yeste, for certainly
 I woll none have, but by your leve;
 So lothe me were you for to greve.

HE sayid, frende so God me spede,
 Of Chastite I have soche drede,
 Thou shouldest not warnid be for me,
 But I dare not for Chastite;
 Again her dare I not misdoe;
 For alwaie biddith she me so,
 To yeve no lovir leve to kisse,
 For who thereto may winnen i-wisse,
 He of the surplus of the praie
 May live in hope to get some daie,
 For who so kissing maie attain,
 Of Lov's pain hath (soth to sain)
 The best and the moste avynaunt,
 And ernest of the remjnaunt. e

OF his answer I fighid sore,
 I durst assaie him tho no more,
 I had suche drede to greve him aie;
 A man should not to muche assaie,
 To chafe his frende out of mesure,
 Nor put his life in avinture; f. himselfe.
 For no man at the firste stroke
 Ne may not fel adoune an oke,
 Nor of the reifins have the wine,
 Till grapes be ripe and wel a-fine, f. Glos.
 Be fore empresse, I you ensure,
 And drawin out of the pressure:
 But I forpeinid wondir strong,
 Thoughte that I abode right long
 Aftir the kisse, in paine and wo,
 Sith I to kisse desirid so;
 Till that rewing on my distresse
 There comj Venus the goddesse, e/
 (Whiche aie werryith Chastite)
 Came of her grace to socour me,
 Whose might is knowin ferre and wide;
 For she is mothir of Cupide
 The God of Love, as blinde as stone,
 That helpith lovirs many one.
 This lady brought in her right honde
 Of brenning fire a blasing bronde,
 Whereof the flame and hore fire
 Hath many a Lady in desire
 Of Love ybrought, and sore yhette,
 And in her service her herte sette.
 This Lady was of gode entaile,
 Right wondirful of appaile,
 By her atire so bright and shene
 Men might percevin well and sene
 She was not of Religioun;
 Nor I n'il makin mencion,
 Nor of her robe, nor of tresour, ve.
 Of broche, ne of her riche attour,
 Ne of her girdle about her sids,
 For that I n'il not long abide;
 But knowith well, that certainly
 She was arrayid richily;
 Devoide of pride certaine she was.
 To Bialacoil she went a paas,
 And to him shortly in a clause
 She sayid, sir: what is the cause
 Ye ben of porte so daungirous
 Unto this lovir, and dainous,

To graunt him nothing but a kisse;
To warne it him ye done amisse;
Sithe well ye wotin how that he Is Love's servaunt, as ye may se;
And hath beaute, wher through he is Worthy of Love to have the blis;
How he' is semely, beholde and se,
How he is faire, how he is fre,
How he is sote, and debonaire,
Of age yonge, lusty, and faire,
There is no Lady so hauteine,
Duchesse, Countesse, ne Chastelaine,
That I n'olde holde her ungodely
For to refuse him uttirly.

- His brethe is also gode and swete,
And his lippes roddy, are thei mete
Only to plaine, and not to kisse?
Graunt him a kisse of gentilnesse.

- His teth arne also white and clene,
Me thinkith wrong withoutin wene
If ye now warne him, trustith me,
To graunte that a kisse have he;
The lasse ye helpe him that ye haste,
And the more time shul ye waste.

Whan the flame of the very bronde,
That Venus brought in her right honde,
Had Bialacoil with his hete smete,
Anone he bade me without lette,
And grauntid me the Rose to kisse,
Than of my paine I ganne to lisse;
And to the Rose anon went I,
And kistid it ful faithfully;
Nede no man aske, if I was blith,
Whan the favour so softe and lith
Stroke to mine hert withoutin more,
And me alleggid of my fore,
So was I ful of joye and blisse;
It is faire suche a floure to kisse,
It was so sote and savirous
I might not be so anguifhous,
That I mote glad and joly be,
Whan that I do remembre me,
Yet evr among (sothly to saine)
I suffre noie and mochil paine.

THE se may nevir be so still,
But with a litill winde at will May ovirwhelme and tourne also,
As it were wode in wawis go;
Aftir the calme the trouble sone
Mote folow and chaunge as the mone.

Right so fareth Love, that selde in one
Holderh his ancre, for right anone,
Whan thei in ese wene best to live,
They ben with tempest all fordrive.
Who servith Love, can tel of wo,
The stoundmele joye more ovirgo;
Now he hurtith, and now he cureth,
For selde in o pointe Love endureth.

Now is it right me to procede,
How Shame gan medle and take hede,
Through whom fel angirs I have hade,
And how the stronge wall was made,
And the Castill of brede and length,
That God of Love wan with his strength,
Al this in Romance will I set,
And for no thing ne will I let,
So that it liking to her be,
That is the floure of all beaute,
For she may best my labour quite,
That I for her Love shal endite.

Wickid tonge, whiche that the covine
Of every Lovir can devine

3730 Worste, and aie addith more somdele,
(For wickid tonge saith nevir wele)
To mewarde bare he right gret hate;
Espying me erly and late,
Til he hath sene the gretè chere
Of Bialacoil and me ifere,
He ne might not his tonge withflonde
Worse to reportin than he fonde,
He was so ful of cursid rage;

It sat him wele of his linage,
For him an' Irishe woman bare; 3810
His tonge was filid sharpe and square,
And right poignaunt, and right kerving,
And wondir bittir in speking;
For whan that he me gan espie,
He swore (affirming sikirly)
Bitwene Bialacoil and me
Was ill aquaintaunce and prive.

He spake therof so solilie, 3820
That he awakid Jelousie;
Whiche all afraid in his rising;
Whan that he herdè the jangling;
He ran anon as he were wode
To Bialacoil there that he stode,
Whiche had levir in this caas
Have ben at Reines or Amias,
For fore-hote in his felonie
To him thus saidè Jelousie:

"Why hast thou ben so negligent
"To kepin, whan I was absent, 3830
"This vergir here leste in thy warder"
"To me thou haddist no regarde,
"To trust (to thy confusion)
"Him thus, to whom suspicion
"I have right grete, for it is nede,
"It is well shewid by the dede;
"Grete faute in The now have I founde;
"By God anon thou shalt be bounde,
"And faste lockin in a Toure,
"Withoutin resuite or socoure. 3840

3770 FOR shame to long hath be The fro;
"Ovir sone she was ago;
"Whan thou hast lost both drede and fere,
"It semid well she was not here;
"For she was besy in no wise
"To kepin The and to chastice,
"And for to helpin Chastite,
"To kepe the Rose, as thinketh me,
"For than this boie knave so boldly 3850
"Ne shoulde nat have be hardy,
"Ne in this vergir had suche game,
"Which now me tournith to grete shame.

Bialacoil n'is what to saie, 3860
Ful faine he would have fled awaie,
For fere have hyid, n'ere that he
All sodainly toke him with me;
And whan I sawe that he had so,
This Jelousie, takin us two,
I was astoned, and knewe no rede,
But fledde away for very drede.

3790 Than Shame came forth ful simpilly,
She wende have trespaced ful gretely,
Humble' of her porte, and made it simple,
Wering a vaile in stede of wimple,
As Nonnis done in ther Abbey,
Bicause her hert was in affray,
She gan to speke within a throwe
To Jelousie, right wondir lowe.

3800 First of his grace she him besought,
And sayid, sir, ne levith nought

Wickid

Wickid tonge, that false espie,
Which is so glad to faine and lie;
He hath you made through flatering,
On Bialacoil a false lesing;
His falsnesse is not nowe a newe,
It is to longe that he him knewe;
This ne is not the firste daie;
For wickid tonge hath custome aie
The yonge folkis to bewrie,
And false lesingis on 'hem lie.

longe. V. glap in soigne

Yet nere-thelesse I se among
That the soigne it is so long too. Tr. trop.
Of Bialacoil, hertis to lure
In Lov's service for to endure,
Ydrawing such folke him to un-
That he hath nothing with to do;
But in sothnesse I trowe nought
That Bialacoil had er in thought
To do trespase or vilanie,
But for his mothir Curtisie
Hath taught him evir for to be Gode of aqueintaunce and prive;
For he lovith none hevinesse,
But mirth and play, and all gladnesse;
He hatith eke alle trechours,
And soleine folke and envious,
For ye wele wetin how that he Wol evir glad and joyful be Honestly with folke to pley;
I have be negligent in fey
To chastise him; therfore now I do.
Of herte xerie you here mercy, do.
That I have ben so rechiles too. Tr.
To tamin him, withoutin leas,
Of my foly I me repent,
Now wol I whole set mine entent
To kepin both low and still:
Bialacoil, to do your will.
O Shame, O Shame, faide Jelousie;
To be bitrashed grete drede have I, too. Tr.
Lechery hath yclombè so hie;
That almost blerid is mine eie;
No wondir is, if drede have I,
Ovir al reignith Lechery, too. Tr.
Whose might ygrowith night and dey,
Both in Cloistre and in Abbey,
Chastite is werried ovir all;
Therfore I woll with sikir wall
Close both the Rosis and Rosere;
I have to long in this manere
Leste 'hem unclosid wilfully;
Wherfore I am right inwardly
Sorrowfull, and repentè me;
But now thei shall no lengir be Unclosid, and yet I drede fore
I shall repentè ferthirmore,
For the game goith all amis,
Counsaile I muste newe i-wis;
I have to long ytrustid The,
But now it shal no lengir be;
For he may best in every coste
Decevin, that men trustin moste;
I se well that I am nigh shent,
But if I set my full entent
Some remedie for to purveie;
Wherfore closin I shall the way
From them that woll the Rose espie,
And come to waite me vilonie;
For now in gode faith and in trouth,
I wol not lettin for no slouth.
(To live the more in sikirnesse)
Do make anon a fortresse,
Than close the Rosis of gode favour;

Sancti.

In middis shal I make a tour,
To put Bialacoil in prison,
For evir I drede me of trefon;
I trow I shal him kepè so,
That he shal have no might to go
About to makin companie
To them that thinke of vilanie, 3950
Ne to no suche as hath ben here
Afore, and founde in him gode chere,
Whiche han assailid him to shende,
And with ther trowandise to blende;
A solè is eith to begile;
But may I live a litil while,
He shal forthinke his faire semblaunt.
And with that worde came Drede avaunt,
Whiche was abashed, and in grete fere,
Whan he wist Jelousie was there, 3960
He was for drede in suche affray,
That not a wordè durste he say,
But quaking stode ful stil alone,
(Til Jelousie his way was gone)
Save Shamè, that him not forfoke,
Both Drede and she ful fore quoke;
That at the lastè Drede abraide
And to his Cosin Shamè faide.

Shamè (he said) in sothfastnesse
To me it is gret hevinesse. 3970
That the noise is so ferre ygo,
And eke the sclaudir of us two;
But sithin that it is befall,
We maie it not againe call,
Whan onis sprongin is a fame;
For many a yere withoutin blame
We have ben, and many a day;
For many an Aprill, many a May
We han ypassid nothing shamed,
Til Jelousie hath us yblamed, 3980
Of mistrust and suspicion
Canselless, without encheson;
Go we to Daungir hastily,
And let us shewe him opinly
That he hath not aright ywrought,
Whan that he settè not his thought
To kepin bettir the purprise,
In his doing he is not wise,
He hath to us do grete wrong,
That hath suffrid now so long 3990
Bialacoil to have his will,
Alle his lustis to fulfill,
He must amende it uttirly,
Or els shal he villainously
Exilid be out of this londe;
For he the werre maie not withstonde
Of Jelousie, nor bere the grese,
Sith Bialacoil is at mischese.

TO Daungir Shame and Drede anon
The rightè way ben both ygon, 4000
The chorle thei foundin 'hem afore
Ligging undir an hawethorne;
Undir his hed no pilowe was,
But in the stede a trusse of gras;
He slombrid, and a knappe he toke,
Til Shamè pitously him shoke,
And grete manace on him gan make.
Why slepiest thou, whan thou should wake?
(O Shame) thou doest us vilanie;
Who trustith The, he doth folie, 4010
To kepè rosis or bothoms,
Whan thei ben faire in ther sesons;
Thou arte woxe to familiere,
Wher thou should be straungè of chere, - est

Stoute

Stroute of thy porte, redy to greve;
Thou doest grete folie for to leve
Bialacoil here inne to call
The yongie-man, to shender us all,
Though that thou slepe, we mowin here
Of Jelousie grete noise here;
Art thou now late, rise up an hie,
And stoppe sone and delivirly
Alle the gappis of the hay,
Do no favour, I do The pray,
It fallith nothing to thy name
To make fayre[semblaunt] where thou mayste blame.

4020

I

IF Bialacoil be swete and fre, Doggid and fel thou shouldist be,
Froward and outrageous i-wis;
A chorle chaungith that curteis is;
This have I herde oft in saying
That man ne maie for no daunting
Make a sperhauke of a bosarde;
Al men wol hold The for musarde,
That debonaire have foundin The,
It sitteth The nought curteis to be;
To do men plesauce or servise
In The it is recreaundise;
Let thy werkis ferrè and nere
Be like thy name, whiche is Daungere.

4030

Than al abasid in shewing
Anon spake Drede, right thus saying,
And sayid, Daungir I drede me
That thou ne wolte, bese be
To kepin that thou hast to kepe,
Whan thou shouldest wake, thou art a-slepe;
Thou shalt be grevid certainly,
If The aspyr in Jelousie,
Or if he finde The in blame;
He hath to day assailid Shame,
And chased away, with grete manace
Bialacoil out of this place,
And swerith shortly that he shall Enclose him in a sturdy wall;
And al is for thy wickidnesse;
For that The failith straungenesse,
Thine hert I trowe be failid all,
Thou shalt repent in special;
If Jelousie the sothe knewe,
Thou shalt forthinke, and fore rewe,

4040

4060

With that the chorle his clubbe gan shake,
Frowning his eyin gan to make,
An hidous chere, as man in rage;
For yre he brent in his visage,
Whan that he herde him blamid so;
He said, out of my witte I go,
To be discomfite I have grete wrongs;
Certis I have now lived to long,
Sithe I may not this clofir kepe;
Al quicke I would be dolvin depe,
Yf any man shal more repayre
To this gardin for foule or fayre;
Mine hert for ire goith a-fere
That I let any entre here;
I have do foly now I se,
But now it shal amendid be;
Who settith fote here any more
Truly he shall repent it fore;
For no man more into this place
Of me to entre shall have grace;
Levir I had with swerdis twaine
Throughout mine hert, in every vaine,
Percid to be, with many a wounde,
Than slouthè should in me be founde;
From hennisforth by night or day,
I shall defende it if I may,

4080

Withoutin any excepcion
Of eche manir condicion;
And if I it any man graunte,
There holdith me for recreaunte.

4090

THan Daungir on his fete gan stonde;
And hent a burdon in his honde;
Wrothe in his ire ne left he nought,
But through the vergir he hath sought
If he might findin hole or trace,
Where through that me more forth by pace,
Or any gappe, he did it close,
That no man might touchin a Rose
Of the Rosir alle about,
He shittith every man without.

4100

Thus day by day Daungir is wers,
More wondirfull and more divers,
And fellir eke, than evir he was;
For him ful oft I singe alas!
For I ne may nought, through his ire,
Recovir that I molte desire;
Mine hert (alas!) wol brest a-two
For Bialacoil I wrathid so;
For certainly in every membre
I quake, whan that I me remembre
Of the bothom, whiche that I wolde
Ful oft a day sene and beholde;
And whan I thinke upon the kille,
And how much joie, and how much blisse
I haddè through the favour swete,
For want of it I grone and grete;
Me thinketh I fele yet in my nose
The sote favour of the Rose;
And now I wote that I more go
So ferre the freshe flouris fro,

4110

To me ful welcome were the dethe,
Absence therof (alas!) me lethe;
For whilom with this Rose (alas!)
I touchid nose, and mouthe, and face;
But now the deth I must abide,
But Love consent an othir tide,
That onis I touche maie and kisse,
I trow my paine shal never lisse;
Theron is all my covetise,
Whiche brent my hert in many wise;
Now shal repaire againe sighing,
Long watche on nightes, and no sleping,
Thought in wifhing, turment, and wo,
With many a touning to and fro,
That halfe my paine I cannot tell,
For I am fallin into hell
From paradise and welthe; the more
My turment grevith, more, and more,
Anoyith now the bittirnesse,
That I to some have felte swetnesse;
And wickid tonge, throughe his falshede,
Ycausith all my wo and drede;
On me he lieth a pitous charge,
Bicause his tonge was to large.

4130

4070

Now is it time shortly that I
Tel you somthing of Jelousy,
That was in grete suspeccion;
About him leste he no mason,
That stonè could laie, ne no querroure,
He hirid hem to make a tour;
And first the Rosir for to kepe
About hem made he a dighe depe,
Right wondir large, and also brode,
Upon the whichè also stode,
Of squarid stone, a sturdy wall,
Whiche on a cragge was foundid all,
And right grete thicknesse, eke it bare;
About it was yfoundid square

4150

An

An hundrid fa'ome' on every side,
 It was alliche both long and wide,
 Lest any time it were assailed,
 Ful wel about it was batailed;
 And rounde environ eke were set
 Ful many' a riche and faire tournet;
 At every cornir of this wall
 Was set a tour ful principall;
 And everiche had without fable
 A portcolise defensible,
 To kepe of en'emies, and to greve
 That therether force would preve. - en
 And eke amidde this purprise - dis
 Was made a tour of grete maistrise,
 A fairir saugh no man with sight,
 Large and wide, and of grete might,
 Thei draddè nought none assaut,
 Of ginn, or gonn, nor of skaffaut;
 The tempercure of the mortere
 Was made of lycoure wondir dere,
 Of quicklime persaunt and egre,
 Which temprid was with vinegre. l
 The stonè was harde of Adamaunt,
 Wherof thei made the foundemaunt,
 The tour was rounde made in compas,
 In al this world no richir was,
 Ne bettir ordained therewithall;
 About the tour was made a wall,
 So that betwixt that and the toure
 Rosis were set of swete savoure,
 With many Rosis that thei bere;
 And eke within the castil were Springoldis, Gonnès, Bowes, and Archers,
 And eke about at the corners
 Men seinin ovir the wall stonde
 Grete engins, which ywere nere honde,
 And in the kernils here and there
 Of arblastirs grete plentie were,
 None armour mighte ther stroke withstonde,
 It were foly to prese to honde;
 Without the diche were listis made
 With wal bataillid large and grade,
 For men and horse should not attaine
 To nigh the diche ovir the plaine;
 Thus Jelosie hath environ
 Yfette about his garnison
 With wallis rounde, and dichè depe,
 Onely the Rosir for to kepe;
 And Daungir bothe erly and late
 The keyes kept of the uttir gate,
 The whiche opened towarde the est,
 And he had with him at the lest
 Thirty servauntes echone by name.
 That othir gate was kept by Shame,
 Whiche opinid, as it was couthe,
 Towardis the parte of the Southe, Sergeauntes assignid were her to Full many, her will for to do.
 Than dredè had in her baillie
 The keping of the constable'rie
 Towarde the North I understonde,
 That opened upon the leste honde,
 The whiche for nothing may be sure
 But if she do her besy cure
 Erly on mor'we', and also late
 Strongly to shette and barre the gate;
 Of every thing that she may se
 Drede is aferde, where so she be,
 For with a puffe of litill winde
 Drede is astonied in her minde;
 Therefore for steling of the Rose
 I rede her nat the yate unclofe;
 A foul's flight would make her fle,
 And eke a shadowe, if she' it se.

4160 THan wickid tonge full of Envy,
 With soudiers of Normandy,
 As he that causith all debate,
 Was kepir of the fourthè gate,
 And also to the tothir thre
 He went ful oftē, for to se;
 Whan his lorte was to walke a night,
 His instrumentis would be dight,
 For to blowin and makin sounce
 Oftir than he hath enchesounce,
 And walkin oft upon the wall,
 Cornirs and wickittes ovir all
 Ful narowe serchin and espie,
 Though he nought fonde, yet would he lie;
 Discordaunt er fro armonie, h-
 And dissonid fro melodie,
 Controve he would, and foulè faile,
 With hornpipis of Cornèwaile
 In floitis made he discordaunce,
 And in his musike with mischaunce
 4180 He wouldè seine with notis newe,
 That he ne fonde no woman trewe,
 Ne that he sawe nere in his life
 Unto her husbonde a trewe wife,
 Ne none so ful of honestè,
 That she n'il laugh and mery be,
 Whan that she hereth or may espie
 A man spekin of Lecherie; Evèriche of 'hem hath some vice,
 One is dishonest, tothir nice;
 4190 Yf one be ful of vilanie,
 An othir hath a lico'rous eie;
 If one be ful of wantonessè,
 An othir is a chidireffe.

Thus wickid tonge, God yeve him shame,
 Can put 'hem everichone in blame,
 Without desert and causilese,
 He lieth, though thei ben giltilese;
 4200 I have pity to sene the sorowe
 That wakith bothe evin and morowe,
 To innocentes doth fuche grevaunce,
 I pray God yeve him evil chaunce,
 That he evir so besy is
 Of any woman to' seine amis.
 Eke Jelosie may God confounde,
 That hath makid a toure so rounde,
 And made about a garison,
 To sette Bialacoil in prison,
 4210 The whiche is shette there in the tour,
 Ful long to holdè ther sojour,
 There for to livin in penaunce;
 And for to do him more grevaunce, Whiche hath ordainid Jelosie, f. Eke
 An oldè vecke for to espie
 The manir of his governaunce;
 The whiche Devil in her infauce
 Had lernid all of lov's artz,
 And of his pleyis toke her partz;
 4220 She was expert in his servise,
 She knewe eche wrenche and every gife
 Of Love, and every secret wile;
 It was right harde her to begile.
 Of Bialacoil she toke aie hede,
 That er he liverh in wo and drede;
 He kepte him coye and eke privè,
 Lest that in him she haddè se f. shalde
 Any lite foly countinaunce;
 For she knew all the oldè daunce.
 4230 And after this, whan Jelosie
 Had Bialacoil in his Baillie,
 And shette him up, that was so fre,
 For sure of him he would' be,

He

4170 f. l. the that ther force there wolden preve.

He trustith fore in his castell,
The stronge werke him likith well;
He draddè nat that no glotons
Should stele his Rosis or bothoms;
The Rosis weren assidid all,
Defencid with the stronge wall;
Now jelousie full well may be
Of drede devoide in liberte;
Whether that he or slepe or wake
Of his Rosis may none be take.

BUT I' (alas) now mornè shall Bicause I was without the wall,
Ful mochil dole and mone I made;
Who so had wist what wo I had,
I trowe he would have had pitè;
Love all to dere had soldè me,
The godè that of his love had I;
*I went about it al queintly,
But now through dubling of my paine
I se he wold it sell again,
And me a newè bargain lere,
The whiche all out the more is dere,
For the solace that I have lorne,
Than I had it never asorne;
Certain I am full like in dede
To him that caste in yerth his fede,
And hath joie of the newe springing,
Whan it grenith in the ginning,
And is so faire and freshe of floure,
Lustie to sene, sore of odoure;
But er he it in shevis there,
Maie fall wethir that shall it dere,
And makin it to fade and fall
The stalke, the greine, and flouris all,
That to the tiller is fordoynè
The hope he had conceived to sone;
I drede certaine that so fare I,
For hope and travaile sikirly
Ben me birafte all with a storme,
The floure n'ill fedin of my corne,
For Love hath so avauncid me,
Whan I began my privite
To Bialacoil all for to tell,
Whom I ne founde froward ne fell,
But toke agre all whole my plaie;
But Love is of so harde assaie,
That all at ones he revid me,
Whan I wened best above to have be;
It is of Love, as of fortune,
That chaungith oft, and n'ill contune,
Whiche whilom will on folkè smile,
And glombe on 'hem an othir while;
Now frende, now foe, thou shalt her fele,
For a twincing tournith her whele.
— She can writhin her hedde awaie;
This is the concourse of her plaie,
She can arise, that doith mourne,
And whirle adoune and ovirtourne
Who sittith hiest, (but) as her lust;
A sole is he that wold her trust;
For it is I that am come doune
Through charge and revolucioun,
Sith Bialacoil more fro me twin,
Shette in her prison yonde within,
His absence at mine herte I fele,
For all my joie and all mine hele
Ywas in him, and in the Rose,
That but you wold, whiche him doeth close,
Opin, that so I maie him se,
Love wold not that I curid be Of the painis that I endure,
Nor of my cruill avinture.

AH! Bialacoil mine own dere,
Though thou be now a prisonere,
Kepith at lest thine herte to me,
Suffir not that it dauntid be;
Ne let not jelousie in his rage
Puttin thine herte in no servage,
Although he chastice The without,
And make thy bodie to him lout,
Have herte as harde as Diamant,
Stedfast, and stout, and naught pliant,
In prison though thy bodie be,
At large kepe thine herte fre,
A trewe hert ne will not plie,
For no manace that it maie drie.
If jelousie doith The pain,
Quite him his wilè thus again,
To vengè The at lest in thought,
If othir waie thou mayist nought,
And in this wise full subtillic,
Worchin, and winne the maistiry.
But yet I am in grete affraie
Lest thou sholdest nat doe as I saie,
I drede thou canst me grete mangre,
That thou enprisoned art for me;
But yet right nought for my trespass,
For through me nere discovered was Yet thing, that ought to be secrè,
Well more annoie, is in me
Than is in The of this mischaunce,
For I endure more hard penaunce
Than any man can saie or thinke,
That for the sorowe almoste I sinke,
Whan I remembir me of my wo,
Full nigh out of my witte I go.
Inward mine herte I felè blede,
For comfortlesse the deth I drede;
Owe I nat well to have distresse,
Whan false, through ther wickidnesse,
And traitours, that arne envious
To noien me, be so coragious?
Ah! Bialacoil, full well I se,
That thei 'hem shape to-deceve The,
To make The buxum to ther lawe,
And with ther cordè The to drawe,
Where so 'hem lust, right at ther will,
I drede thei have The brought there till,
Withoutin comfort, thought me steth;
This game would bring me to my deth;
For if that I your gode will lese,
I more be dedde, I maie not chese;
And if that thou foryetè me,
Mine herte shall nere in liking be,
Nor elliswhere findin solace,
If I be put out of your grace,
As it shall never ben I hope;
Than shuldin I fall in wanhope.
Alas, in wanhope! naie parde,
For I wold nere dispeirid be,
If hope me faile, than alle am I
Ungracious and unworthy;
In hope I wold comfortid be,
For Love, whan he betaught her me,
Sayid, that Hope where so I go,
Should aie be relesè to my wo.
But what and she my balis bete,
And be to me curteis and swete,
She is in nothing full certain,
Lovirs she put in full grete pain,
And makith 'hem with wo to dele,
Her faire behestè decevith fele;
For she wold behore sikirly,
And failin afir uttirly.
Ah! that is a full noious thing,
For many a lovir in loving

Hangereth

He wende to have bought it, &c.
Fr. Que custode auter richesses.

Hangeth upon her, and trustith fast,
Whiche lefe ther travaile at the last.
Of thing to comme she wote right nought,
Therefore if it be wisely fought,
Her counsaile Folie is to take;
For many times, whan she wolle make
A full gode syllogisme, I drede
That astirwarde there shall in dede
Folowe an ill conclusion;
This put me in confusion;
For many times I have it sene
That many have begilid bene
For trust that thei have set in hope,
Whiche fell 'hem astirward a-slope.

BUT nath'less, yet gladly she wold,
That he that wolle him with her hold
Had all timis her purpose clere, Withoutin deceipt any where,
That she desirith sikirly;
Whan I her blamed I did foly.
But what availith her gode will,
Whan she ne maie staunche my stound ill?
That helpith lite that she maie doe,
Out-take behestes unto my wo,
And helle certain in no wise
Without ifere is not to preise.

yeftis. Fr. and son.

Whan helle and dede a sondir vary,
The doin a gretè contrary;
Thus am I possid up and doun
With dole, thought, and confusioun;
Of my disese there is no nomber;
Daungir and Shame me encomber,
Drede also, and Jelosie,
And wickid Tong full of envie,
Of whiche the sharpe and cruill ire
Full oft me put in grete martire; Thei have my joie fully let,
Sith Bialacoil thei have beset
Fro me in prison wickidly,
Whom I love so entierly,
That it wolle in my banè be,
But I the sonir maie him se.

And yet moreovir worst of all
There is set to kepe, soule her befall,
A rimplid vecke ferre ronne in age,
Frowning and yel'we' in her visage,
Whiche in awaite lieth daie and night,
That none of him maie have a sight.

NOW mote my sorowe enforced be;
Full sothe it is that Love yafe me
Thre wondir yestis of his grace,
Whiche I have lorne now in this place,
Sith thei ne maie withoutin drede
Helpin but lite, who takith hede;
For here availith no Swete thought,
And swete Speche helpith right nought,
The thirde was callid swete Loking,
That now is lorne without lesing.

i. The yestis -

Yestis were faire, but nat for thy Thei helpin me but simplily,
But Bialacoil losid be
To gone at large and to be fre;
For him my life lieth all in dout,
But if he come the rathir out.

Alas! I trowe it wolle nat ben,
For how should I ere more him sene?
He maie nat out, and that is wrong,
Bicause the tourè is so strong,
How should he' out, [or] by whose prowess,
Out of so strong a fortirese?

By me certain it n'll be doe,
God wotte, I have no witte therto,
But well I wote I was in rage
Whan I to Love did my homage;
Who was the cause (in sothfastnesse)
But her self dame Idilnesse?
Whiche me conveide through faire priere
To'entir into that faire vergere;
She was to blame me to leve,
The whiche now doeth me sore greve;
A fol's worde is nought to trowe,
Ne worthe an apple for to lowe,
Men should him snibbe bittirly
At primè temps of his folie;
I was a fole, and she me leved,
Through whom I am right nought releved,
She accomplishid all my will,
That now me grevith wondir ill.

Reson me sayid what should fall;
A fole my self I maie well call,
That Love aside I had not laied,
And trowid that dame Reson saied;
Reson had bothè skill and right,
Whan she me blamed, with all her might,
To medle' of Love that hath me shent;
But certain now I wolle repent.

AND should I repent? Naie pardè,
A false traitour than should I be,
The devil's engins would me take,
If evir I love would forsake,
Or Bialacoil falsly betraie;
Should I at mischief hate him? naie,
Sith he now for his curtisie
Is in prison of Jalousie;
Curtisie certain did he me
So moche, it maie not yoldin be,
Whan he the haie passin me lete
To kisse the Rosè, faire and swete,
Should I therefore conne him maugrè?
Naie certainly, it shall nat be,
For Love shall never save gode will,
Here of me, ne through worde or will,
Offence or complaint, more or lesse,
Neithir of Hope nor Idilnesse;
For certis it were wrong that I
Hatid 'hem for ther curtisie,
There is nog els, but suffre' and thinke,
And wakin whan I shouldè winke,
Abide in hope, till love through chaunce,
Sende me foccour or allegaunce,
Expectaunt [aie] till I maie mete
To gettin mercie of that swete.

Whilom I thinke how Love to me
Sayid that he would take at gre
My service, if unpacience
Ycausid me to doen offence;
He saied, in thanke I shall it take,
And high maistir eke The ymake,
If wickidnesse ne reve it The,
But sone I trowe that shall nat be;
These were his wordis by and by,
It semed he lovid me truly.

Now is there nog but serve him wele,
If that I thinke his thanke to fele,
My gode, mine harme, lithe whole in me,
In Love maie no defaute ybe;
For true Love ne failed never man;
Sothly the faute mote nedis than,
As God forbide, be founde in me;
And how it cometh, I can not se.

Now

Now let it gone as it maie go,
Wher Love woll soccour me or flo,
He maie do whole on me his will,
I am so fore ybounde him till,
From his service I maie not flene,
For life and deth withoutin wene
Is in his hande, I maie nat chese,
He maie me doe bothe winne and lese;
And sithe so fore he dogeth me greve,
Yet if my lust he would acheve,
To Bialacoil godely to be,
I yeve no force what fell on me;
For though I die, as I mote nede,
I praie Love of his godelihede
To Bialacoil doe gentillesse,
For whom I live in soche distresse,
That I mote dyin for penaunce:
But first, withoutin repentaunce
I will me confesse in gode entent,
And make in haste my Testament,
As lovirs doen that felin smertes;
To Bialacoil leve I mine herte
All whole, withoutin departing,
Or doublenesse or repenting.

THUS as I madin my passage
In compleint, and in cruill rage,
And I n'or where to finde a leche,
That couthe unto mine helping eche,
Sodainly again comin down
Out of her toure I sawe Resoun,
Discrete and wise, and full plesant,
And of her porte full avenant;
The right waie she toke unto me,
Whiche stode in grete perplexite,
That was poshid in every side,
That I n'ist where I might abide,
Till she demurely sadde of chere
Sayid to me as she came nere;
Mine ownè frende, art thou agreved,
How is this quarell yet acheved

WHAN I had herid Reson sain,

Whiche love to God is nat plesure,

Complaining

Complaining of the preteritte,
 And the present, that nat abitte,
 And of her oldè vanite;
 That but aforne her she maie se
 In the future some smale socoure
 To leggin her of her doloure,
 To graunt her time of repentaunce,
 For her sinnis to do penaunce,
 And at the last so her governe,
 To winne the joye that is eterne,
 Fro whiche go backwarde youth her made,
 In vanite to drowne and wade;
 For present time abidith nought,
 It is more swifte than any thought,
 So litill while it doth endure,
 That there is compte ne mesure.
 But how that evir the game go,
 Who list love joye and mirth also
 Of love, be it or he or she,
 Or he, or lowe, who so it be,
 In frute thei shouldin 'hem delite,
 Ther parte thei maie not ellis quite,
 To save 'hem self in honeste.
 And yet full many one I se
 Of women, sothly for to saine,
 That desirin, and wouldin faine
 The plaie of Love, thei be so wilde,
 And not coveite to go with childe;
 And if with childe thei be perchaunce,
 Thei wol it holde a grete mischaunce;
 But what so evir wo thei fele,
 Thei wol not plainin, but concele,
 But it be any sole or nice,
 In whome that shame hath no justice;
 For to Delite echone thei drawe
 That haunt this worke, both he and lawe,
 Save suche that arnè worth right nought,
 That for money wol be ybought;
 Suche love I prysin in no wise,
 Whan it is given for covetise
 I preise no woman, though she is wode,
 That yeveth her selfe for any gode;
 For litill should a man stelle
 Of her, that wil her body selle,
 Be she a maide, or be she wife,
 That quicke wol selle her by her life,
 How faire chere that evir she make;
 He is a wretche I undirtake
 That love suche one, for swete or soure,
 Though she him called her paramoure,
 And laugheth on him, and maketh him feste;
 For certainly no suchè beste
 To be lovid is nat worthy, f. beloved
 Or berin the name of Drury;
 None should her plese, but he werawode,
 That wol dispoile him of his gode.
 Yet nathelless I wol not saie
 That she for solace and for plaie
 Maie a Jewil or othir thing
 Take of her lov'is fre yeving,
 But that she aske it in no wise
 For drede of shame, or covetise,
 And she of hers maie him certaine
 Without sclaudir yevin againe,
 And joyne ther hertes togiðir so
 In love, and take and yeve also;
 Trowe nat that I wollin 'hem twinne,
 Whan in ther love there is no sinne,
 I wol that thei togiðir go,
 And done al that thei han ado,
 As curtis should and debonaire,
 And in ther love berin 'hem faire Withoutin vice, both he and she,
 So that alwaie in honeste

Fro folly love to kepe 'hem clere, f. Love do
 That brennith hertis with his fere,
 And that ther love in any wise
 Be devoide of all covetise.
 Gode lovè should engendrid be
 Of trewe hert, juste, and secrè,
 And not of suche as set ther thought
 To have ther lust, and ellis nought;
 So are thei caught in lov'is lace,
 5020 Trewly for bodily solace;
 Fleshely delite is so present
 With The, that set al thine entent
 (Withoutin more, what should I glose?)
 For to gettin and have the Rose,
 Whiche makith The so mate and wode,
 That thou desirest none other gode;
 But thou art not an inche the nerre,
 But evre' abidest in forrue' and werre,
 As in thy face it is yfene,
 5030 It makith The bothe pale and lene,
 Thy might, thy vertue gothe awaie;
 A fory gylt in gode saie
 Thou herborist than in thine inne,
 The God of Love whan thou let inne;
 Wherefore I rede thou shette him oute,
 Or he shal greve The out of doute;
 For to thy profite it wol turne,
 If he no more with The sojourne;
 In grete mischese and sorow sonken
 5040 Ben hertis, that of Love arne dronken,
 As thou peraventure knowen shall,
 Whan thou hast lost thy time all,
 And spent thy thought in idilnesse, f. youthe. fr.
 In waste, and woful lustinesse,
 Yf thou maist live the time to se
 Of love for to delivered be,
 Thy time thou shalt bewepè sore,
 The whiche nevir thou maist restore,
 For time ylost, as men may se, 5050 For nothing may recovered be;
 And if thou scape yet at the laste
 Fro lovè that hath The so faste
 Yknitte and boundin in his lace,
 Certaine I holde it but a grace;
 For many one, as it is seine,
 Have loste, and spent also in veine
 In his service without socour,
 Body and soule, gode, and tresour,
 And witte, and strength, and eke richesse,
 5060 Of whiche thei had nevir redresse.

 5070 Wordè by worde the matir all,
 But unto Love I was so thrall,
 Whiche callith ovir all his praie, f. chaith
 He chasith so my thoughtis aie, f. chasith. fr. capt.

 As trusty' and trewe as any stele;
 So that I no devocion
 Ne haddè in the wise sermon
 Of dame Refon, ne of her rede
 I toke no sojour in mine hede;
 5080 For allè yede out at one ere
 That in that othir she did lere;
 Fully on me she lost her lore,
 Her speche me grevid wondir fore;

That

That unto her for ire I faide,
For angir, as I did abraide;
Dame, and is it your will algate
That I not Love, but that I hate
All men, as ye me now do teche?
For if I do aftir your speche,
Sith that you seine Love is not gode,
Than must I nedis [say] with mode,
Yf I it leve, in hatrid aie
Livin, and voidin Love awaie
Ferre from me a sinful wretche,
Yhatid of allè that tetches;
I may not go none othir gate,
For eithir must I love or hate,
And if I hatin men of newe,
More than Love it wol me rewe,
As by your preching semith me,
For Love nothing ne praisith The;
Ye yeve gode counsaile sikirly,
That prechith me al day, that I
Ne should not lov'is lore alowe,
He were a fole woulde you not trowe;
In speche also ye han me taught
Anothir love, that knowen is naught,
Whiche I have herde you not repreve;
To love eche othir, by your leve,
If ye would definin it me,
I woulidin gladly here to se
At the lest if I mowin lere
Of fondry lov'is the manere.

Raïson.

Certis frende, a grete fole art thou,
Whan that thou nothing wolt alow
Whiche that I for thy profite saie,
Yet wol I saie The more in faie;
For I am redy at the lest
To accomplishin thy request,
But I n'ot wherè it wol aveile,
In vaine perav'nture I travaille;
Lovè there is in sondrie wise,
Right as I shall The here devise.
For some love lesul is and gode;
I mene not that whiche maketh The wode,
And bringith The in many' a fitte,
And ravisheth fro The al thy witte;
It is so marveilous and queint,
With such love be no more aqueint.

Comment Raïson diffinist Aunfete. devide.

Love of frendshippe also there is,
Whiche makith no man don amis,
Of wille yknitte betwixtin two,
That wol not breke for wele ne wo,
Whiche long is likely to contune,
Whan wil and godes ben in commune,
Groundid by Godd'is ordinaunce,
All whole withoutin discordaunce,
With them yholding commaunce,
Of al ther gode in charite,
That there be none exceptioun
Through chaunging of ententioun,
That eche helpe othir at ther nede,
And wisely hele both worde and dede;
Trewe of mening, devoide of slouth,
For wit is nought withoutin trouthe;
So that the t'one dare all his thought
Saine to his frende, and sparin nought,
As to him selfe, without dreding
To be discovered by wreying;
For glad is that conjunctioun,

Whan there is none suspectioun
Betwixtin 'hem, whome thei wold prove,
That trewe and perfite werex in Love;
For no man may be amiable,
But if he be so ferme and stable,
That fortune chaunge him not ne blinde,
But that his frende alway him finde,
Bothe pore and riche, in one estate;
For if his frende through any gate
Wol complaine of his povertè,
He should not bide so long, til he
Of his helping doth him require,
For gode dede done thorough prayire
Is folde and bought to dere i-wis
To hert that of grete valure is;
For hert fulfilled of gentilnesse
Can evill demene his distresse;
— And man that worthy is of name
To askin oftin hath grete shame.
— A gode man brennith in his thought
For shame whan that he askith ought,
He hath grete thought, and dredith aie;
For his disese whan he shal praie
His frende, lest that he warnid be,
Till he preve his stabilitè;
But whan that he hath foundin one,
That trusty is and trewe as stone,
And hath assayid him at all,
And founde him stedfast as a wall,
And of his frendshippe be certaine,
He shal him shewe bothe joie and paine,
And all that he dare thinke or saie,
Withoutin shame, as he well maie;
For how should he ashamid be
Of such an one as I tolde The?
For whan he wot his secret thought,
The third shall know therof right nought,
For twey in nombre 'is bet than thre
In every counsaile and secrete;
Repreve he dredith nevre' a dele,
Who that beset his wordis wele;
For every wise man out of drede
Can kepe his tong till he se nede.
And folis can not holde ther tonge;
A fol'is belle is sone yronge;
Yet shall a trewe frende doin more,
To helpe his felowe of his fore,
And socour him whan he hath nede,
In all that he may done in dede,
And gladdir that he him plesith
Than his felowe that he esith;
And if he do nat his request,
He shal as mochil him moleit
As his felowe, bicause that he Maie not fulfill his voluntè
All fully, as he hath required;
If both the hertis love hath fired,
Bothe joye and wo thei shall departe,
And take evinly eche his parte,
Halfe his anoye he shal have aie,
And comforte him what that he maie,
And of his blisse parte shal he,
If Love wollin departid be.
AND whilom of this unite
Spake Tullius in a dire;
A man should makin his request
Unto his frende, that is honest,
And he godely should it fulfill,
But it the more were out of skill;
And othirwise not graunt therto,
Except only in causis two.
Yf men his frende to derhe would drive,
Let him be besy to save his live.

Also

Also if men wollen him assaile
Of his worship to make him faile,
And hindran him of his renoun,
Let him with ful entencioun
His devir done in eche degré,
That his frendè ne shamid be.

In these two casis with his might,
Taking no kepe to skill nor right,
As ferre as Love may him excuse,
This ought no man for to refuse.

This Love, that I have tolde to The,
Is nothing contrarie to me;
This wol I that thou folowe wele,
And leve the t'othir every dele;
This Love to vertue al entendeth,
The t'othir folis blent and shendeth.

An othir Love also there is,
That is contrary unto this;
Which desire is so constrainid,
That it ne is but will fainid;
Away fro trowth it doth so varie,
That to gode Love it is contraries;
For it maymith, in many wise,
Sike hertis with covetise;
All in winning and in profite
Suche love ysettith his delite;
This love so hangith in balaunce,
That if it lese his hope parchaunce
Of lucre, that he' is set upon,
It wol failin, and quenche anon;
For no man maie be amorous,
Ne in his living vertuous,
But if he lovin more in mode,
Men for 'hem selfe, than for ther gode;

For love that profite doth abide
Is false, and bidith not no tide,
Soche Love comith of dame Fortune,
That litil while wolle contune,
For it shal chaungin wondir sone,
And take Eclips as doth the Mone,
Whan that she is from us ylet
Through erth, that betwixtin is set
The Sonne and her, as it may fall,
Be it in partie, or in all,
The shadowe makith her bemes merke,
And her hornis to shewin derke
That part, where she hath lost her light
Of Phebus fully, and the light,
Till whan the shadowe' is ovirpasse
She' is enlumined agein as faste
Through the brightnes of the Sonne bemes,
That yevith to' her againe her lemes;
That Love is right of suche nature,
Now is it faire, and now obscure,
Now bright, now Cliply of manere,
And whilom dimme, and whilom clere;
As sone as poverte ginnith take,
With mantil and with wedis blake
Hidith of Love the light away,
That into night it tournith day,
It may not sein richesse shine;
Till that the blacke shadowis fine;
For whan that richesse shinith bright
Love recovereth ayen his light,
And whan it failith, he wol slit,
And as she greveth, so grevith it.

Of this Love herith what I saie,
The riche men are ylovid aie,
And namely tho that sparande bene,
That wol not washe ther hertis clene
Of the filthè nor of the vice
Of gredy brenning Avarice.

The riche man ful sonde is i-wis

That wenith that he lovid is,
If that his hert it underfode,
It is not he, it is his gode;
He may wel wetin in his thought
His gode is loved, and he right nought;
For if he be a nigarde eke,
Men wol not set by him a leke,
But hatin him, this is the sothe;
Lo what profite his catil dorthe!
Of every man that may him se
It getteth him nought but enmitè;
But he amende him of that vice,
And know himselfe, he is not wise.

Certis he should aie frendly be,
To get him love, also ben fre,
Or els he is not wise ne sage,
No more than is a gote ramage;
That he not lovith his dede proveth,
Whan he his richesse so well loveth,
That he wol hide it aie and spare,
His porè frendis sene forfare,
To kepin aie his ill purpose;

Till that for dyede his eyin close,
And til a wickid deth him take,
Him had levir a sondre shake,
And let sal? his limmes a sondre rive,
Than leve his richesse in his live;
He thinketh to part it with no man,
Certain no love is in him than;
For how should love within him be Whan in his hert is no pitè?

That he trespassith well I wate,
For eche man knowith his estate;
For wel him ought to be reproved,
That lovith nought, ne is not loved.

But sithe we ame to fortune comen,
And hath our sermon of her nomen,

A wondir will I tell The now,
Thou herdift nre' suche one I trow,
I n'ot where thou me levin shall,
Although sothfastnesse it be all,
As it is writtin, and is sothe,

That unto men more profite dothe
The frowarde fortune and contraire,
Than doth the sothe and debonaire;
And if The thinke it is doutable,

It is through argument provable,
For fortune debonaire and softe
Yfalsith and begilith ofte;

Forliche a mothir she can cherisse,
And milkin as dothe a norice,
And of her gode to him ydeles,
And yeveth 'hem parte of her joweles,

With grete richis and dignite,
And 'hem she hoteth stabilitè
In a state that is' nothing stable,
But chaunging aie and variable,

And fedith 'hem with glory veine,
And worldely blisse nothing certeine;
Whan she 'hem settith on her whele,
Than wenin thei to be right wele,

And in so stable state withall,
That 'nevir 'thei wene for to fall;
And whan thei sette so high to be,
Thei wene to have in certainte

Of hertly frendis to grete nombre,
That nothing might ther state encombre,
Thei trust 'hem so on every side,
Wening with 'hem thei would abide

In every perill and mischaunce,
Withoutin chaunce or variaunce,
Bothè of catil and of gode,
And also for to spende ther blode,

And

5388. This prime frondes he seeth forlure.
To kepe it aye is his purpose.

And al ther membris for to spill,
Onfly to fulfill ther will;
Thei maken it whole in many wise,
And hotin hem ther ful service,
How fore so that it do hem smerte
Into ther very nakid sherre, Herte and hande also whole thei give,
For all the time that thei may live,
So that with this ther flatiry,
Thei makin folis glorifie
Onely of ther wordis speking,
And han chere of a rejoyng,
And trow hem as the Evangile,
And it is al falshe and gile, flatiry fr.
As thei shal afterwardis se,
Whan thei arne fal in poverté,
And ben of gode and catil bate,
Than should thei sene who frendis ware;
For of an hundrid certainly,
Nor of a thousande ful scarsly,
Ne shall thei finde unnethis one,
Whan poverté is comen upon. fr.
For thus Fortune that I of tell,
With men whan that her lust to dwell,
Maketh hem to lese ther conisaunce,
And norisaeth hem in ignoraunce.

But frowarde Fortune and perverse,
Whan high estates she doth reverse,
And makith hem to touble doune
Of her whele with a sodaine tourne,
And from ther richesse dothe hem fle,
And plongith hem in poverté;
As a stepmothir envious,
And laieth a plaistir dolorous
Unto ther hertis woundid egre,
Whiche is not tempered with vinegre,
But with poverté and indigence;
For to shewe by experience
That she is Fortune verilie,
In whom no man ne should affie,
Nor in her yestis have siaunce,
She is so ful of variaunce.

Thus can she makin hie and lowe,
Whan thei from richesse arne throwe, fr.
Fully to knowin without were Frende of affeste, and frende of chere,
And whiche in love weren trew and stable,
And whiche also weren variable,
Aftir Fortune ther goddesse,
In poverté, eithir in richesse; fr.
For all that yeveth here out of drede
Unhappe yberith it in dede,
For Infortuné lette not one
Of frendis, whan fortune is gone,
I mene tho frendis that woll fle
Anone, as entrich poverté;
And yet thei wol not leve hem so,
But in eche place where that thei go,
Thei callin hem wretche, scorne, and blame,
And of ther mishappe hem diffame,
And namely suche as in richesse
Pretendith mozte of stablenece, fr.
Whan that they sawe hem set on losse,
And werin of hem sucoured ofte,
And mozte iholpe in all ther nede;
But now thei take no manir hede,
But seine in voice of flatirie
That now apperith ther folie,
Ovir al wher so that thei fare,
And singe, go farewel Feldefare.

Allé suche frendis I beshrewe;
For of trewe frendes there be to fewe,
But forthfast frendes, what so betide,

In every fortune wollen abide;
Thei han ther hertes in suche noblesse, fr. full of nob. fr.
That thei n'il love for no richesse,
Nor for that fortune may hem fende,
Thei wollen hem socour and defende,
And chaungin for softe ne for sore, fr.
For who his frende loveth evirmore, 5520
Though men drawe swerdis him to flo,
Thei may not hewe ther love a-two,
But if in case that I shall say fr. But in that case fr.
For pride and ire lese it he may,
And for reprove by niceté, fr.
And discovering of privité
With tonge wounding, as felon, fr.
Through venemous detraction.

Frende in this case wol gon his way,
For nothing greve him more ne may; 5530
And for nought ellis wol he fle,
If he love in stabilité;
And certaine he is well begone
Among a thousande that findeth one, fr.
For there ne may be no richesse
Aynst frendship of worthinesse;
For it ne may so high attaine
As may the valoure, sothe to saine,
Of him that lovith trewe and well,
Frendship is more than is catell, 5540
For frende in courte aie bettir is Than peny is in purse certis,
And than is fortune mishaping, fr.

Whan upon men she is falling,
Thorough misturning of her chaunce,
And castith hem out of balaunce.
She maketh through her adversite
Men ful and clerly for to se
Him that is frende in existence
From him that is by apparence; 5550
For infortune makith anone
To know thy frendis fro thy sone,
By experience right as it is,

The whiche is more to prýse i-wis,
Than in muche richesse and tresour, fr.
For more depe profite and valour fr.
Poverté, and suche adversite
Before, than doeth prosperité;
For that one yevith conisaunce,
And othir gjevith ignoraunce. 5560
And thus in poverté is in dede
Trowthé declarid fro falshece;
For faint frendis it wol declare,
And trewe also, what way they fare;

For whan he was in his richesse,
These frendis ful of doublenesse
Offrid him in many wise
Ther herte and body, and service, fr.
What would he then have you to have bought fr. you to have bought
To knowin opinly ther thought, 5570
That he now hath so clerly sene?
The lasse begiled he should have bene,
And he had than percevid it,

But Richesse n'olde not let him wit;
Wel more avauntage doeth him than (Sithe that it maketh him a wise man)
The great mischete, that he perceveth,
Than doeth Richesse that him deceveth;
Richesse riche ne makith nought
Him, that on tresour sette his thought, 5580
For richesse stonte in suffisaunce,
And nothing stonte in haboundaunce,
For suffisaunce all onily

Makith menne to live richily. 5590

If I forswere, than am I lorne,
But I woll nevir be forsworne,
Sithe Richesse hath me failid here,
She shall abie that trespas dere;
At lest waie but I her harme she h. arme.
With swerde, or sparth, or with gifarme.
For certis sithe she loveth not me, 5980
Fro thilke time that she maie se
The castill and the toure to shake,
In forie time she shall awake,
If I maie gripe a richè man, 5990
I shall so pulle him, if I can,
That he shall in a fewe stoundis
Lese all his markes, and his poundis.
I shall him make his pens out fling,
But that thei in his garnir spring;
Our maidins shall eke plucke him so,
That him shall nedin fethirs mo, 5990
And make him sell his londe to spende,
But he the bet conne him defende.

POre men han made ther Lorde of me;
Although thei nat so mightie be,
That thei maie fede me in delite,
I woll not have hem in dispite;
No gode man hateth hem, as I gesse;
For chinche and feloun is Richesse,
That so can chafe hem, and dispise,
And hem defoule in sondrie wise; 6000
Thei loven full bette, so God me spede,
Than doith the riche chinchy grede,
And ben (in gode faith) more stable,
And truir, and more serviable;
And therefore it suffisith me
Ther gode hertis, and ther beaute; deute, or loute.
Thei han on me set all ther thought,
And therefore I foryete hem nought.
I woll hem bring in grete nobleite, withde. 6010
If that I were God of Richesse;
As I am God of Love forthely,
Soche ruthe upon ther plaint have I,
Therefore I must his succour be,
That painith him to servin me;
For if he deied for love of this,
Than semeth in me no love there is.

Sir,

5882. 1. When that her will me to see. 2.
3. And my nede to achieve. 588.

Between 5855 & 5959 there is some scribbling and touching the Birth of Love, etc.

Sir, saied thei, sothe is every dele
That ye reherce, and we wote wele
Thilke othe to holde is resonable,
For it is gode and covenable,
That ye on riche men han ysworne;
For, sir, this wote we well beforne,
If riche men doin you homage,
That is as folis doen outrage;
But ye shull not forsworne ybe,
Ne let therefore to drinke clarye,
Or piment makid freshe and newe,
Ladies shull 'hem soche pepir brewe,
If that thei fall into ther laas,
That thei for wo mowe saine, alas!
Ladies shullen ere so curteis be
That thei shall quite your othe all fre;
Ne seketh nevir othir vicaire,
For thei shall speke with 'hem so faire
That ye shall holde you paid full wele,
Though ye you medle nere a dele;
Let Ladies worchin with ther thinges,
Thei shall 'hem tell so fele tidinges,
And move so many requestis,
By flatterie, that not honest is,
And thereto yeve 'hem soche thankinges,
What with kissing, and with talkinges,
That certis if thei trowid be Shall nevir leve 'hem longe ne se,
That it n'ill as the moeble fare,
Of whiche thei first delivered are.
Now maie you tell us all your will,
And we your hestis shall fulfill.

BUT false Semblant dare not for drede
Of you sir, medle' him of this dede;
For he saith that ye ben his so
He n'ot, if ye woll worche him wo;
Wherefore we praie you all, beau sire,
That ye foryeve him now your ire,
And that he maie dwell, as your man,
With Abstinence his dere lemman;
This our accorde and our will now.
Parfei saied Love, I graunt it you,
I woll well holde him for my man;
Now let him come; and he forthe ran.
False Semblant (qð Love) in this wise
I take The here to my service,
That thou our frendis helpe alwaie,
And hindre' hem neithir night ne daie,
But doe thy might 'hem to releve,
And eke our en'emies that thou greve;
Thine be this might, I graunt it The,
My king of harlotes shalt thou be;
We woll that thou have soche honour;
Certain thou art a false traitour,
And eke a thief, sihe thou were borne,
A thousande times thou art forsworne,
But nathelless in our hering,
To put our folke out of doubting,
I bidde The teche 'hem, wost thou how?
By some generall signe now,
In what place thou shalt foundin be,
If that men had mistir of The,
And how men shall The best espie,
For The to knowe is grete maistrise;
Tell in what place is thine haunting.
Sir, I have fully divers wonning,
That I kepe not rehersed be,
So that ye would respitin me,
For if that I tell you the sothe,
I maie have harme and shame bothes;
If that my felowes wist in it,
My talis shouldin me be quit;

For certaine thei would hate me,
If er I knewe ther cruelte,
For thei would ore all hold 'hem still
Of trothe, that is again ther will;
Soche talis kep in thei not here;
I might eftsoone buie it full dere,
If I saied of 'hem any thing,
That displeith to ther hering;
For what worde that 'hem pricketh or biteth,
In that worde none of 'hem deliteth,
All were it Gospel the' Evangile,
That would reprove 'hem of ther gile;
For thei are cruill and hautain,
And this thing wote I well certain,
If I speke ought to 'paire or loos,
Your courte shall not so well be cloos,
That thei ne shall wite it at last;
Of gode men am I nought agast,
For thei woll taken on 'hem nothing,
Whan that thei knowe all my mening,
But he that woll it on him take,
He woll himself suspicious make,
That he his life let covirtly
In gile and in Ypocrisie,
That me' engendrid and yave fostring.
Thei made a full gode engendring (Qð Love) for 'who so outhly tell,
Thei engendrid the divell of hell.

But nedely, howsoere it be,
(Qð Love) I will and charge The
To tell anon thy wonning placis, Hering eche wight that in this place is;
And what life thou livist also,
Hide it no lengir now, whereto?
Thou must discovre' all thy worching,
How thou servist, and of what thing,
Though that thou shouldest for thy soth-saw
Ben all to-betin and to-drawe,
And yet art thou not wont, parde;
But nathelless, though thou betin be,
Thou shalt not be the first, that so
Hath for sothfawe yfuffrid wo.

Sir, sihe that it maie likin you,
Though that I should be slain right now,
I shall doyn your commaundement,
For thereto have I grete talent.

Withoutin wordis mo, right than False Semblant his sermon began,
And saied 'hem thus in audience.
Barons, take hede of my sentence,
That wight that list to have knowing
Of false Semblant, full of flatterring,
He must in worldly folke him seke,
And certis in the Cloistirs eke,
I won no where, but in 'hem twaie,
But not like evin, sothe to saie;
Shortly, I woll herberowe me
There I hope best to hullstrid be;
And certainly, sikereft hiding
Is undimeth humblist clothing.
Religious folke ben full covert,
Seculer folke ben more appert;
But nathelless, I woll not blame
Religious folke, ne 'hem diffame;
In what habite that er thei go,
Religion humble, and true also Woll I not biamin, ne dispise;
But I n'ill love it in no wise,
I mene of false religious;
That stout ben, and malicious,
U u u

That wollin in an habite go,
And settin not ther herte therto.

Religious folke ben all pitous,
Thou shalt not sene one dispitous,
Thei lovin no pride, ne no strife,
But humbly thei woll lede ther life,
With whiche folke woll I nevir be;
And if I dwell, I faine me,
I maie well in ther habite go,
But me were lever my necke a two,
Than let a purpose that I take,
What covenant that er I make.

I dwell with 'hem that proude ybe,
And full of wiles and subtilte,
That worship' of this worlde coveiten,
And grete' nede connis' expleiten,
And gon and gadrin grete pitaunces,
And purchase 'hem the acquintaunces
Of men that mightie life maie leden,
And faine 'hem pore, and 'hem self feden
With gode morcils delicious,
And drinkin gode wine precious,
And preche us povert and distresse,
And lishin 'hem self grete richesse
With wily nettis, that thei cast;
It woll come foule out at the last.

Thei ben fro clene religion went,
Thei make the worlde an argument,
That hath a foule conclusion;
I have a robe of religion,
Than am I all religious;
This argument is all roignous,
It is not worth a crokid Brere,
Habite ne makith Monke, ne Frere,
But clene life, and devocion,
Makith gode men of religion.

Nathelesse, there can none answere,
How high that er his hedde he there,
With rasour whettid nere so kene,
That gile in braunchis cutte thurtene,
There can no wight distinct it so,
That he dare saie a worde thereto.

But what herb'row that ere I take,
Or what semblaunt that er I make,
I mene but gile, and solowe that,
For right no more than Gibbe our cat,
(That awaiteth Mice and Rattes to killen)
Ne entende I, but to begilen;
Ne no wight maie, by my clothing,
Wete with what folke is my dwelling;
Ne by my wordis yet parde,
So soft and so plesaunt thei be.

Beholde the dedis that I doe,
But thou be blinde thou oughtist so,
For 'varie' ther 'wordes fro ther dede;
Thei thinke on gile withoutin drede,
What manir clothing that thei were,
Or what estate that er thei bere,
Lerid or leude, Lorde, or Ladie,
Knight, Squier, Burgeis, or Bailie.

Right thus while false Semblant sermoneth,
Est sonis Love him aresoneth,
And brake his tale in his speking,
As though he had him tolde lesing,
And saied, what devill is that I here?
What folke hast thou us nempnid here?
Maie men findin religion
In worldly habitacioun?

Ye, sir, it foloweth nat that thei
Should lede a wickid life parfei,
Ne not therefore ther foulis lese,
That 'hem to worldly clothis chese,

6160 For certis it were grete pite;
Men maie in 'seculer clothes se
Florishin holy religioun;
Full many' a saint in felde and toun,
With many' a virgine glorious,
Devoute, and full religious,
Han died, that commin clothe' aie beren,
Yet saintis nerthelesse thei weren;
I could reckon you many a ten,
Ye welnigh all these holy women,

6170 That men in churchis 'hefty' and seke,
Bothe maidins, and these wivis eke,
That bare ful many' a faire childe here,
Wered alway clothis seculere,
And in the same clothes didin they,
That saintis weren, and ben alway.

The ix. thousande maidinis dere;
That beren in heven ther ciergis clere,
Of whiche men rede in church and sing,
Were take in seculer clothing,
Whan thei recevid marridome,
And wonnin heven unto ther home;
6180 Gode hert ymakith the gode thought;
The clothing yeveth ne revith nought,
The gode thought and the gode worching;
That maketh the religion flouring;
There lieth the gode religioun,
Aftir the righte entencion.

Who so ytoke a wethir's skinne,
And wrapped a gredy woyle therinne, 6190 For he should go with lambis white,
Wenist thou not he would 'hem bite?
Yes: Nerthelesse, as he were wode,
He would 'hem wirry', and drinke the blode,
And wel the rathir 'hem disceve;
For sithin thei coude nat perceve
His tregette, and his cruilte,
Thei would him folow, tho he fye.

IF there be wolvis of fuche hewe
Amongis these Apostlis newe,
6200 Thou, holy church, thou maiste be wailed,
Sith that thy cite is assailed
Through knightis of thine ownè table;
God wor thy lordship is doutable,
If thei enforcin it to win,
That should defend it fro within;
Who might defence ayenst 'hem make?
Withoutin stroke it mote be take
Of trepetet or manganell,

6210 Without displaying of pensell;
And if God n'il done it socour,
But let rennin in this colour,
Thou must thy hestis lettin be,
Than is there nought, but yeldè The,
Or yeve 'hem tribute doutilefs,
And holde it of 'hem to have pees;
But gretir harme betidith The,
That thei all maistir of it be,
Wel con thei scornin The withall,
By day ystuffin thei the wall,
And al the night thei minin there; 6220 Nay, thou plantin must ellis where Thine impis, if thou 'wolt' frute have;
Abide not there thy selfe to save.

BUT now pece, here I turne againe,
I wol no more of this thing saine,
Yf I may passin me hereby,
For I might makin you wery;
But I wol hetin you alway
To helpe your frendis what I may,

But let hem rennin in this colour

So thei wollin my company;
For thei be shent all utterly,
But if so fallin, that I be, f. fall it
Oftin with hem, and thei with me;
And eke my lemman mote thei serve,
Or thei shul not my love deserve;
Forsoth I am a false traitour,
God judged me for a thefe trechour,
Forsworne I am; but wel nigh none
Wore of my gile, til it be done.

6310

Through me hath many' one deth receved;
That my treget ner aperceved,
And yet receverth, and shal receive,
That my falsnesse shal nere perceive;

Now Frere Minor, now Jacobin;
And with me foloweth my loreby,
To done me solace and comp'any,
That hight dame Abstinence and raigned
In many a queint arraie fained,
Right as it cometh to her liking,
I fulfill all her desiring.
— Somtime a woman's clothe take I,
Now am I a Maide, now Lady,
— Somtime I am religious,
Now like an Ankir in an hous,
— Somtime am I a Prioresse,
And now a Nonne, and now Abbess,
And go thorough all regiounes,
Asking all religiounes.

He would his might done at the lest,
Than nothing spare for Godd's hest;
And God so wisly be my socour;
But thou yeve me my saviour
At Estir, whan it likith me,
Withoutin presing more on The,
I wol forth, and to him ygone,

And he shal housil me anone,
For I am out of thy grutching, chastin

I am full redy him to accuse,
And him punish and hampir so,
That he his church shal forgo.

If that there ben no resonables,
He maie begge, as I tell you here,
And ellis not, in no manere;
As William saint Amour would preche,
And oftin would dispute and teche
Of this matir all opinly,
At Paris fully and solemply;
And all so God my soule blesse,
As he had in this stedfastnesse soluf. Fr.
The acorde of the universite,
And of the peple, as semith me.

No gode man ought it to refuse,
Ne ought him thereof to excuse,
Be wrothe or blithe, who so thou be,
For I wol speke, and tell it The,
Al should I die, and be put down,
As was saint Poule, in derke prisoun,
Or be exilid in this caas,
With wrong, as maistr William was,
That my mothir Hypocrisie
Banishid for her gret envie.

My mothir flemed him saint Amour,
This noble man did suche labour
To susteine er the loialte,
That he to muche agilt me; he
He made a boke, and let it write,
Wherin his life he did all dite,
And would that sche renied begging,
And livin by my travailing,
If I ne had rent ne othir gode;
What? wenith he that I were wode?
For labour might me nevir plese,
I have more will to ben at ese,
And have well levir, sothe to saie,
Before the peple pasture and praie, f. paten pr.

Make I not wel tomble mine apes?
To winne is alwaie mine entent,
My purchace is bettir than my rent;
For though that I should betin be,
Ovir al I entremet me, 6840

Withoutin me maie no wight dure, 6770 I walkin foulis for to cure,
Of all the world the cure have I,
In brede and eke in length; boldly,
I wol bothe preche, and eke counsaillen,
With hondis wol I not travailen,
For of the Pope I have the bull;
I ne holde not my witris dull;
I wol not stintin in my live
These Emperouris for to thrive 6850
Of Kingis, Dukes, and Lordis grete;
But povir folke al quite I lete;
6780 I love no suche thriving, pardè,
But it for othir cause ybe;
I recke not of these povir men,
Ther estate is not worthe an hen.

And thei wollen also tellin me,
Thei hele fro me no privite;
And for to make you them perceiven,
That usin folke thus to deceiven,
I wol you saine withoutin drede
What men maie in the Gospell rede
Of saint Mathewe the Gospellere,
That saith, as I shall you saie here.

UPon the chairè of Moyses, (Thus it is glosid doutlefs,
That is the oldè Testament;
For thereby is the chairè ment)
Sittin Scribis and Pharisen, (That is to saine, the cursid men, Whiche that we Ipocritis call)
Doeth that thei preche I rede you all,
But doeth not as thei doen a dele;
That ben not werie to saie wele,
But to doe well no will have thei,
And thei would binde on folke alwaie,
That ben to be begilid able,
Burdons, that ben importable,
On folkis shouldirs thinges thei couchen,
That thei n'ill with ther fingirs touchen,
And why woll thei not touch it? why? [F. S.]
For them ne liste nat sikirly;
For the sadde burdons, that men taken,
Ymakin folkis shouldirs aken.
And if thei doe ought that gode be,
That is for folke it shouldin fe,
Ther burdons largir makin thei,
And makin ther hemmes wide alwaie, - id
And lovin setis at the table
The first, and the moste honourable,
And for to han the first chairis
In Sinagogges, to hem full dere is,
And willen that folke hem loue and grete,
Whan that thei passin through the strete;
And wollen be cleped maistris also;
But thei ne should not willin so,
The Gospell is there ayenst I gesse;
That shewith well ther wickidnesse.

AN othir custome usin we,
Of hem that woll ayenst us be,
We hate him dedly everychone,
And we woll werrey him, as one,
Him that one hatith, hate we all,
And conjeete how to doen him fall,
And if we sene him winne honour,
Richesse or preise, through his valour,
Provende, or rent, or dignite,
Full faste iwis compassin we
By what laddre he is clombin so, e
And for to make him doune to go,
With traizon we woll him defame,
And doen him lesin his gode name.
Thus from his laddir we him take,
And thus his frendis foes we make;
But worde ne wetin shall he none,
Till al his frendis ben his fones;
For if we did it opinly
We mightin have blame redily;
For had he wiste of our malice,
He had him kept, but he were nice.

An othir is this, that if so fall
That there be one emong us all
That doeth a gode tounne, out of drede

6880 We saine it is our aldir dede;
Ye sikirly, though he it fained,
Or that him liste, or that him dained,
A man through him avauncid be,
Thercof all partineres be we,
And tellin folke, where so we go,
That man through us is sprongin so.
And for to have of men praisin,
We purchace, through our flattering,
Of richè men of grete postè
Lettirs, to witness our bountè;
So that man weneth, that maie us se,
That alle vertue in us be.

6950

6890 And alwaie povir we us fain;
But how so that we begge, or plain,
We ben the folke, without lesing,
That all thing have without having.
[Thus be dradde of the peple iwis,
And gladly my purpose is this.

6960

I delin with no wight, but he
Have golde and tresour grete plente,
Ther acquaintaunce well lovin I,
This moche is my desire shortly;
I entremete me of brocages,
I makin pece, and mariages,
I am gladly executour,
And many times a procuratour;
I am sometime a meslagere,
That fallith not to my mistere.

6970

6900 And many timis I make enquest,
For me that office is nat honest;
To dele with othir mennis thing
That is to me a grete liking;
And if that ye have ought to doe
In place that I repairin to,
I shall it spedin through my witte
As sone as ye have tolde me it;
So that ye servin me to paie,
My service shall be yours alwaie.

6980

6910 But who so woll chastise me,
Anone my love ylosse hath he;
For I love no man in no gise
That woll me reprove or chastise;
But I woll all folke undirtake,
And of no wight no teching take;
For I that othir folke chastie
Woll not be taught fro my folie.

6990

6920 I(Ne)love none Hermitage more;
Al desertis, and holtis hore,
And grete wodis everichone
I let hem to the Baptiste John;
I queth him quite and him relese
Of Egypt all the wildirnesse;
To terre were all my mansiouns
Fro alle citees and gode touns.

6930 My palcis and mine house make I
There men maie renne in opinly,
And saie that I the worlde forsake;
But all anidee I builde, and make My house, and swimme and plaie therein,
Bette than a fishe doth with his finne.

6940 OF Antichrist's men am I,
Of whiche that Christ saith opinly
Thei have habite of holinesse,
And livin in soche wickidnesse;
To the copie, if him talent toke

The Sunne surmountith the Mone,
That troublis is, and chaungith sone,
And the nutte-kerneill dothe the shell;

(I skorne nat that I you it tell)
Right so withoutin any gile
Surmountith this noble' Evangile
The worde of any' Evangelist,
And to ther title thei toke Christ;
And many soche comparisoun,
Of whiche I make no mencion,
Mightin men in that bokè finde,
Who so could of 'nem havin minde.

The uni'versite, that was a slepe,
Can for to brai'de and takin kepe,
And at the noise the hedde up cast,
Ne nevir sithin slept it fast;
But up it stert, and armis toke,
Ayent this false horrible boke
All redy battaile for to make,
And to the Judge the boke thei take.

But thei, that broughtin the boke there,
Hent it anone awaie for fere;
Thei n'old shewe it no more a dele;
But than it kept, and kepin wele
Till soche a time that thei maie se,
That thei so strong ywoxin be,
That no wight maie 'hem well withstonde;
For by that boke thei durst not stonde,
Awaie thei gonne it for to bere,
For thei ne durstin not answer
By exposicion ne glose,
To that that clerkis woll appose,
Ayent the cursidnesse (iwis)
That in that boke ywritin is.

Now wotte I nat, ne can nat se
What manir ende that there shall be
Of all this whiche that thei shide;
But yet algate thei shall abide;
Till that thei maie it bette defende;
This trowe I best woll be ther ende.

Thus Antichrist abidin we,
For we ben all of his meine,
And what man that woll not be so,
Right sone he shall his life forgo.
All outward Lambin semin we,
Full of godenesse and of pite,
And inwarde we withoutin fable
Ben gredy Wolvis ravisable.
We enviroun bothe londe and se,
With all the worlde werryin we;
We woll ordain of allè thing,
Of folkis gode, and ther living.

If there be castill or cite
Within that any bougerons be,
Although that thei of Millaine were,
(For thereof ben thei blamid there)

Or of a wight out of mesure
Would lene there gold, and take usure,
For that he is so covetous,
Or if he be to Lechirous,
Or thefe that hauntin Simonie,
Or Provost full of trechirie,
Or Prelate living jolilie,
Or Priest that hake his quein him by,
Or oldè whoris hostilers,
Or othir baudes or bordillers,
Or ellis blamed of any vice,
Of whiche men shouldin doyn justice,

By all the sainctis that we preie,
But thei defende them with lampreie,
With luce, with elis, with samons,

7020 With tendir gees, and with capons,
With tartis, or with cheffis fat,
With deinte flaunis, brode and flat,
With caleweys, or with pullaile,
With coninges, or with fine vitaile,
That we undir our clothis wide
Ymakin through our golet glide,
Or but he woll doe come in haste
Rae venison ybake in paste,
Whethir so that he loure or groine,

7030 He shall have of a corde a loigne,
With whiche men shall him binde and lede
To brenne him for his sinfull dede,
That men shall here him crie and rore,
A mil's waie about and more;

Or els he shall in prison die,
But if he woll his frendship buie,
Or smertin that, that he hath doc,
More than his gilt amountith to:

But and he couthe, thorough his sleight,
Doe makin up a toure of height,
Nought rought I, wher of stone or tre,
Or yerth, or turvis though it be,
Though it were of no youndè stone
Ywrought with square and scantilone,
So that the toure were stuffid well
With allè richis temporell.

And than that he would him up dresse
Enginis, bothè more and lesse,
To caste at us by every side,
To berin his gode namè wide,

7040 Soche sleightis I shullin you yeven, Barellis of wine, by sixe or seven,
Or golde in sackis grete plente,
He should tho sone delivered be;
And if he have no such pitences,
Let him studie in equipolences,
And lerin lies and fallaces,
If that he would deserve our graces;
Or we shall bere him soche witnesse
Of sinne, and of his wretchednesse,
And doyn his lose so widè renne,
That all quicke we shouldin him brenne,
Or ellis yeve him soche penaunce,
That is well worse than the pitaunce.

For thou shalt nevir for nothing
Con knowen aright by ther clothing
The traitours full of trecherie,
But thou ther werkis can espie.

And ne had the gode keping be Whilom of the uni'versite,
That kepeth the kei of christendome,
We had ben tourmentid all and some.

7070 Soche ben the stinking Prophetis, Nis none of 'hem, that gode Prophete is;
For thei through wickid entencion
The yere of the incarnation
A thousande, and two hundrid yere,
Five and fife, ferthir ne nere,
Broughtin a boke with sorie grace,
To yeven ensample in common place,

7080 That sayid thus, though it were fable,
This is the Gospell pardurable,
That fro the holie Ghost is sent,
Well were it worthe to be ybrent,
Entitlid was in soche manere
This bokè, of whiche I tell here,
There n'as no wight in all Paris
Before our Ladie at parvis,

That thei ne might the bokè by;
The sentence plesed 'hem well truely.
But I woll stint of this matere,
For it is wondir long to here;

But

7022. l. 6. To knowe you I do not it tell. Fr.

But had that ilkè boke endured;
Of better estate I were ensured,
And frendis have I yet pardè,
That han me set in grete degre.

OF all this worlde is Emperour
Gile my fathir, the false trechour,
And Emperesse my mothir is,
Maugre the Holie Ghoste iwis;
Our mightie linage, and our rout
Reignith in every reigne about,
And well is worthy we ministers be, - ai. Fr.
For all this worlde governe we,
And can the folke so well deceve
That none our gilis can perceve,
And though thei doen, thei dare not saie;
The sothe; dare no wight bewraie,

But he in Christ's wrathe him ledeth,
That more than Christ my brethrin dredeth; 7180
He n'is no full gode champion,
That dredeth soche similacion, 10
Nor that for pain woll refusin
Us to correcte and accusin.
He woll not entremete by right,
Ne havin God in his eyen; sight
And therefore God shall him punice;
But me ne reckith of no vice,
Sithen men us loven communable,
And holdin us for so worthie,
That we maie folke repreve echone,
And we n'ill have repreve of none;
Whom sholdin folke worshipin so
But us that stintin nevir mo
To patrin, while that folke [maie] us se, 8
Though it not so behinde hem be?

AND where is there more wode solie
Than to enhauncin chivalrie,
And lovin noble men and gaie,
That jolic clothis weren alwaie?
If thei be soche folke as thei semen,
So clene, as men ther clothis deimen,
And that ther wordes solowe ther dede;
It is grete pite out of drede,
For thei woll be none Hypocritis;
Of hem me thinkith grete spite is, f. disp-
I can not love hem on no side.

But beggars with these hodie wide,
With sleigh and pale facis lene,
And with graie clothis nat full clene,
But fetrid full of tatar waggis,
And high shewis knoppid with dagges;
That frouncin like a qualè pipe,
Or botis riving, as a gipe,

To soche folke, as I you devise,
Should princis and these lordis wise
Take all ther landis and ther thinges,
Bothe warre and pece in govninges;
To soche folke should a prince him yve,
That would his life in honour live. 7220

And if thei be nat as thei seme,
That servin thus the worlde to queme,
There would I dwellin to deceive
The folke, for thei shall nat perceve.

But I ne speke in no soche wise
That men should humble habite dispise, a
So that no pride there undir be;
No man should hate, as thinkith me,
The povir man in soche clothing;
But God ne presith him nothing,
That saith he hath the worlde forsake,
And hath to worldly glory him take,
And woll of soche delicis use,

Who maie that beggier well excuse? 11
That papelarde, that him yeldith so,
And woll to worldly ese ygo,
And saith that he the worlde hath lett;
And greedily it gripith eft,
He is the hounde, shame is to sain,
That to his casting godth again. 7240

BUT unto you dare I not lie,
But might I felin or elpie,
That ye percevid it nothing,
Ye sholdin have a starke lesing
Right in your honde thus to beginne,
I ne wolde it let for no sinne.

The God lough at the wondir tho,
And every wight gan laugh also,
And sayid: lo here a man right
For to be trusty to every wight! 7250

False Semblant (qð Love) saie to me,
Sith I thus have avauncid The,
That in my court is thy dwelling,
And of ribaudes shalt be my king,
Wolt thou well holdin my forwardes?

Ye sir, qð he, from hens forwardes, Here follows V. 305, &c. to 7062.
We woll a peple on him arise, 7062.
And through our gile doin him ceise; 5

And him on thatpe speris rive, 7260
Or othir waies bring him fro live,
But if that he well folowe iwis
That in our boke ywritin is.

THus moche woll our boke signifie,
That while Peter had maultirie e/
Maie nevir John shewe well his might.
Now have I you declarid right
The mening of the barke and rinde, f. inde.
That makith the entencions blinde.

But now at erst I woll begin
To expoune you the pithe within, 7270
And the seculers comprehende,
That Christ's lawe wollin defende,
And shoud it kepin and maintene

Ayenst them that all sustenen, And so the lawe is impetuous.
And falsly to the peple techen, And so the lawe is impetuous.
That John betokeneth hem to prechen, That, &c.
That there n'is lawe covenable, Fr. tenable.

But thilke Gospell pardurable,
That fro the Holy Ghost was sent,
To tournin folke that ben miswent. 7280

The strenght of John thei undirtonde,
The grace, in whiche thei saie thei stonde,
That doth the sinfull folke convert,
And hem to Jesu Christ reverty;

Full many an othre horriblete

That ben commaundid doutlefs Fr. in Joy de H.
Ayenst the lawe of Rome expresse,
And all with Antichrist thei holden,
As men maie in the boke beholden. 7290

And than commaundin thei to seen
All tho that with Peter yben,
But thei shall nevir have that might,
And God to sorne, for strief to fight,
That thei ne shall ynough yfinde,
That Peter's lawe shall have in minde,
And evir holde, and so maintene,
That at the last it shall be sene
That thei shall all comin thereto,

For aught that thei can speke or do. 7300
And thilke lawe ne shall not stonde,
That thei by John have undirtonde,

 Sir, put you in that avinture;
 For though ye borowes take of me,
 The siker shall ye nevir be
 For hostagis, ne sikirnesse,
 Or chartris, for to bere witnessse;
 I take your self to recorde here,
 That men ne maie, in no manere,
 Terin the wolfe out of his hide,
 Till he be flain, bothe backe and side,
 Though men him bete and all defile;
 What wene ye that I wold begile?
 For I am clothid mekily,
 There undre is all my trechuy;
 Mine herte chaungith nevir the mo
 For none habire, in which I go;
 Though I have chere of simplenesse,
 I am not werie of shreudnesse;
 My lemman, strainid Abstinence,
 Hath mistir of my purveiaunce;
 She had full long ago be dede,
 Nere for my counsaile and my redde;
 Let her alone, and you, and me.
 And Love answerid, I trust The Without borowe, for I wold none.
 And false Semblant the thefe anone
 Right in that ilke same place,
 That had of trefon all his face
 Right blacke within, and white without,
 Thanking him, gan on his knees lout.

Than was there nought, but every man,
 Now to assaite, that sailin can (Of Love) and that full hardily.
 Than armid thei hem cominly
 Of soche armour, as to hem sell.
 Whan thei were armid, fiers and fell
 Thei wene hem forthe all in a rout,
 And set the castill all about;
 Thei will not awaie for no drede,
 Till it so be that thei ben dede,
 Or till thei have the castill take.
 And four battellis gan thei make,
 And partid hem in foure anone,
 And toke ther waie, and forthe thei gone,
 The foure gatis for to assaile,
 Of whiche the kepirs wold not faile,
 For thei ben neithir sicke ne dede,
 But hardie folke, and strong in dede.

Now wold I faine the countenance
 Of false Semblant, and Abstinence,
 That ben to wickid tong ywent;
 But first thei helde ther parliment, Whethir it to be doin were,
 To makin hem be knowin there,
 Or ellis walkin forthe disgised;
 But at the laste thei devised
 That thei would gone in tapinage,
 As it were in a pilgrimage,
 Like gode and holie folke unfeined;
 And Janon dame Abstinence streined
 Toke on a robe of Cameline,
 And gan her grache as a bigine.
 A large coverchief of threde
 She wrappid all about her hede;
 But she forgate not her Psaltere;
 A paire of bedis eke she bere
 Upon a lace all of white threde,
 On whiche that she her bedis bede;

But she ne bought hem nevre a dele,
 For thei were given her, I wote wele, f. yove.
 God wote of a full holie Frere,
 That saide thei was her fathir dere, A she. Fr. 1 S
 To whom she had oftiner went Than any Frere of his covent;
 — And he visitid her also, 7380

7310 And many a sermon saide her to;
 He n'olde let for no man on live
 That he ne would her oftin thrive,
 And with so grete devocion
 Thei madin her confession, f.
 That thei had oftin for the nones
 Two heddis in one hode at ones.

* Of faire shape I devised her The,
 But pale of face sometime was she,
 That false traitouressse untrewed, 7390

7320 Was like that salowe horse of hewe,
 That in the Apocalyps is shewed,
 That signifieth tho folke beshrewed,
 That ben all full of trecherie,
 And pale, thorough hypocritie;
 For on that horse no colour is,
 But onely dedde and pale iwis;
 Of soche a colour enlangoured
 Was Abstinence iwis coloured; 7400

7330 Of her estate she her repented,
 Right as her visage represented.

She had a burdoun all of theft,
 That Gile had yeve her of his yest,
 And a skipp of faint distresse, sharpe. Fr. Escharpe.
 That full was of elengenesse; See the glass. in Plengasse Me.
 And forthe she walkid sobirlye.

Yet false was he, but his falsnesse
Ne coud he nat espie, nor gesse;
For Semblant was so flie ywrought,
That Falsnesse he ne espied nought;
But haddest thou knowin him beforne,
Thou woldist on a boke have sworne,
Whan thou him sawe in thilke araie,
That he, that whilom was so gaie,
And of the daunce Jolie Robin,
Was tho become a Jacobin;
But sothly what so men 'hem call,
Frere Prechour's ben gode men all;
Ther ordir wickidly thei beren,
Soche minstrellis if that thei weren.

So ben Augustins, and Cordileres,
And Carmis, and eke sackid Freres,
And all the Freris shod and bare,
(Though some of 'hem ben grete and square)
Full holy men, as I 'hem deme,
Everiche of 'hem wold gode man seme;
But shalt thou never of apparence
Scin conclude gode consequence

In any argument iwis,
If existens all failid is;
For men maie finde alwaie sopheme,
The consequence to enveneme,
Who so hath had the subtilte
The double sentence for to se.

Whan the pilgrimis comin were
To wickid Tong, that dwellid there,
Ther harneis nigh 'hem was algate;
By wickid Tong adoune thei fate,
That badde 'hem nere him for to come,
And of riddingis tell him some;
And said 'hem, what case makith you
To comin into this place now?

SIR, sayid Strainid Abstinence,
We for to dryin our penaunce
With hertis pitous and devout
Are compex, as pilgrimes gon about;
Well nigh on fote alwaie we go;
Full doughtie ben our helis two;
And thus bothe we ben ysent
Throughout the worlde, that is miswent,
To yeve ensample, and preche also;
To fishin sinfull men we go;
For othir fishing ne fishe we;
And, leve sir, for that charite,
As we be wont, erbo'rowe we crave,
Your life to amenge (Christ it save)
And so it should you not displese,
We woldin, if it were your ese,
A short sermon unto you sain.
And wickid Tong answered again,
The house (q' he) soche as ye se,
Shall nat be warnid you for me,
Saie what you list, and I woll here.
Graunt mercie tho swete sir dere,

Q' aldirfirst dame Abstinence,
And thus began she her sentence;
Sir, the first vertue for certaine,
The gretist, and moste soveraine,
That maie be founde in any man,
For having, or for wit he can,
That is his tong for to refrain;
Therto ought every wight him pain;
For it is bettir still to be,
Than for to spekin harme parde;
And he that harkeneth it gladly,
He is no gode man sikirly.
And, sir, above all othir sinne,

In that art thou most gilty inae;
Thou spake a jape, not long ago,
(And sir, that was right evill doe)

Of a yong man, that here repaired,
And never yet this place apaired,
Thou saidest he awaitid nothing,
But to disceve Faire Welcoming,
Ye saidin nothing sothe of that,
But sir, ye lie, I tel you plat,
He cometh no more, ne goeth paid;
I trowe ye shal him never se;
Faire Welcoming in prison is,
That ofte hath plaied with you er this
The fairist gamis that He coude,
Withoutin filth; or fil or loude
Now dare he not himselfe solace;
Ye han also the man do chace,
That he dare neithir come ne go.
What mevith you to hate him so,
But propirly your wickid thought,
That many a false lesing hath thought,
That mevith your soule eloquence,
That janglich cre' in audience,
And on the folke arisith blame,
And doth 'hem dishonour and shame,
For thing that maie have no preving,
But likelnesse and contriving?

For I dare saie, that Reson demeth,
It is no al soth thing that semeth,
And it is sinne for to controve
Any thing that is to reprove;
This wote ye wele, and sir, therefore Ye arne to blame mochil the more;
And nathelless, he reckith lite,
He yeveth not now therof a mite;
For if he thoughtin harme, parfaie,
He wold ycome and gone all daie;
He ne coude nor himselfe abstene,
Now cometh he not, and that is sene;
For he ne taketh of it no cure,
But if it be through avjture,
And laste than othir soule algate;
And thou here watchist at the gate,
With spere in thine arest alwaie;
There muse, musarde, all the longe daie;
Thou wakist night and daie for thought;
Iwis thy traveile is for nought;
And Jalousie withoutin faile
Shall never quite The thy traveile;
And skathe is, that Faire Welcoming,
Withoutin any trespassing,
Shal wrongfully in prison be,
There wepith and languishith he;
And though thou never yet iwis
Agiltist man no more but this,

(Take not a grese) it were worthy
To put The out of this Bailly,
And astirwarde in Prison lie,
And fettrid The till that thou die;
For thou shalt for this sinne dwelle,
Right in the Devil's arse of Helle,
But if that thou repente The.
[Maffaie, thou liest falsely (q' he)
What? welcome with mischaunce now;
Have I therefore herberid you
To saie me shame, and eke reprove,
With sorie happe to your behove?
Am I to day your herbegere?
Go herbir you els where than here,
That han a lier callid me.
Two tregetours arte thou and he,
That in mine hous do me this shame,
And for my sothesawe ye me blame;

7470. Tr. Se default existence efface.

7532. Sans nulle pence vilaine.

Is this the sermon that ye make?
 To all the divils I me take,
 Or ellis, God, thou me confounde,
 But er men didden this castill founde,
 It passith not ten daies or twelve,
 But it was tolde right to my selve,
 And as thei saide, right so tolde I,
 He kiste the Rose privily;
 Thus saide I now, and have said yore,
 I n'ot where he did any more;
 Why should men saie me suche a thing,
 If that it had yben gabbing? f. but Right so saide I, and woll saie yet;
 I trowe I lyid not of it;
 And with my bemis I woll blowe
 To alle neighbouris arowe,
 How he hath bothe comin and gone.
 Tho spake false Semblant right anone,
 All is nat gospel out of dourc,
 That men saie in the tounc aboute:
 Lay no dese ere to my speking,
 I swere you sir, it is gabbing,
 I trow ye wote well certainly,
 That no man loveth him tendirly,
 That saith him harme, if he wote it,
 All be he ner so pore of wit;
 And sothe is also sikirly,
 This know ye sir, as well as I,
 That lovirs gladly wol visiten
 The placis there ther loves habitein;
 This man you loveth, and eke honoureth,
 This man to servin you laboureth,
 And clepith you his frende so dere,
 And this man makith you gode chere;
 And every where that he you meteth,
 He you saleweth, and he you geteth;
 He presith nat so ofte, that ye Oughte off his coming encombrid be;
 There presin othir folke on you
 Ful oftir than he doth now, encom
 And if his hert him strainid so
 Unto the Rose for to go,
 Ye should him sene so oftin nede,
 That ye should take him with the dede;
 He coude his comming not forbere,
 Though ye him thrillid with a spere;
 In're not than, as it is now;
 But trustith well, I swere it you,
 That it is clene out of his thought;
 Sir, certis he ne thinketh it nought,
 No more ne doth Faire Welcoming,
 That sore abyith all this thing;
 And if thei were of one assent,
 Full sone ywere the Rose ysent,
 Tho the malgre yourls would ybe. it

And sir, of o thing herkeneth me,
 Sithe ye this man, that lovith you,
 Han saide such harme, and shame now,
 Witith well, if he gessid it,
 Ye maie well demin in your wit,
 He ne wolde nothing love you so,
 Ne callin you his frende also;
 But night and daie he wollia wake, - de
 The castill to distroie and rake,
 Yf it were sothe, as ye devise,
 Or some man in some manir wise
 Might it warnin him every dele,
 Or by himselfe percevin wele;
 For sithe he might not come and gone,
 As he was whilom wonte to done,
 He might it sone wite and se,
 But now all othirwise wote he.
 Than have we, sir, all uttirly ye
 Deservid Hell, and jolily
 The deth of Helle doutilese, ei
 That thrallin folke so giltilese. c

False Semblant so provith this thing,
 That he ne can none answering,
 And seeth alwaie soche apparaunce,
 That nigh he fel in repentaunce,
 And saide him, sir; it maie well be; c. f. leur dit
 Semblant, a gode man semin ye,
 And Abstinence, ful wise ye seme;
 Of o'talent you bothe I demc; f. courage, mind.
 What counsaile wol ye to me yeven?
 Right here anon thou shalt be shriven,
 And say thy sinne, withoutin more,
 Of this shalt thou repent The fore;
 For I am Priest, and have postè
 To shrive folke of most dignite;
 That ben as wide as world maie dre,
 Of al this world I have the cure,
 And that had nevir yet persoun a/
 Ne vicarie of no manir toun. vicarie

And God it wor I have of The
 A thousande timis more pitè
 Than hath thy Priest parochiall,
 Though he thy frende be speciall.
 I have advantage in o wife,
 That your Prelates ben not so wise,
 Ne halfe so lettrid as am I;
 I am licensid boldily
 In divinite for to rede,
 And to confessin out of drede.
 Yf that ye wol you now confesse,
 And leve your sinnis more and lesse,
 Without abode knele doune anon,
 [And] you shal have absolucion.

Here endeth the Romaunt of the Rose.

 or the matter it may, your w. be.*

Here

Here foloweth the Boke of TROILUS and CRESEIDE.

In this excellent Boke is shewed the fervent Love of TROILUS to CRESEIDE, whom he enjoyed for a time, and her grete untruthe to him againe in giving her self to DIOMEDES, who in the end did so cast her off, that she came to grete misery. In whiche discourse CHAUCER liberally treteth of the Divine Purveiaunce.

THE double sorow of Troilus to telle,
That was the king Priamus sonne of Troy,
In loving, how his aventuris felle
From wo to wele, and astir out of joy;
My purpose is, er that I partè fro'ye,
Thou Thesiphone, thou helpe me t'endite
This woful verse, that wepin as I write.

To The I clepe, thou goddesse of tourment
Thou cruil wight, sorowing ay in paine,
Helpe me, that am the wofull instrument, thy 10
That helpith lovirs, as I can, complaine;
Helpe, For wel sit it, the sothè for to faine,
A woful wight to have a dreary fere,
And to a so'rowfull tale a fory chere.

For I that God of Lov's servauntes serve,
Ne dare to love, for mine unlikeliness, not Prayn for spede, al should I therfore sterve,
So ferre am I fro his helpe in derkenesse;
But nathelless, if this may done gladnesse
To any lovir, and his cause aveile, 20
Have he the thanke, and mine be the travcile.

But ye lovirs, that bathin in gladnesse,
Yf any drope of pite in you be,
Remembrith you of passid hevinesses,
That ye have felte, and on the' adversite of
Of othir folke, and thinkith how that ye
Han felte, that love durst you to displese,
Or ye han won him with to gret an ese.

And prayith for 'hem that ben in the cace
Of Troilus, as ye may astir here, 30
That love 'hem bring in hevin to solace.
And eke for me prayith to God so dere,
That I have might to shew in some manere
Suche paine and wo, as lov's folke endure,
In Troilus unsely avinture.

And biddith eke for them that ben dispeired
In love, that nevir will recovered be,
And eke for them that falsely ben apeired
Through wickid tongis, be it he or she;
And biddith God for his beniguite 40
So graunt 'hem sone out of this world to pace,
That ben dispairid out of lov's grace.

And biddith eke for them that ben at ese,
That God 'hem graunt in love perseveraunce,
And sende 'hem grace ther lov's for to plesse, 50
That it to love be worship and plesaunce;
For so hope I my selfe best to avaunce
To pray for them, that lov's servauntes be,
And write ther wo, and live in charite.

And for to have of them compassioun,
As though I were ther owne brothir dere. 50
Now herkenith with a gode entencioun,

For now wol I go streight to my matere:
In whiche ye may the double sorowes here
Of Troilus, in loving of Creseide,
And how she forsoke him er that she deide. 60

IT is wel wist, how that the Grekis strong
In armis with a thousand shippis went
To Troie wardis, and the cite long
Besiegedin nigh ten yeres ere thei stent, 60
And how in divers wise, and one entent,
The ravishing to wreke of queine Helene
By Paris don, thei wroughtin all their peine.

Now fell it so, that in the toun there was Dwelling a Lord of gret authorite,
A gret divine, that clepid was Calcas,
That in that science so' experte was, that he Knew wel, that Troie should distroyid be,
By answe're of his God, that hight was thus Dan Phebus, or Apollo Delphicus. 70

So whan this Calcas knew by calculing,
And eke by the answe're of this God Apollo, h
That Grekis shouldin suche a peple bring,
Thorow the whiche that Troy must be fordo,
He caste anone out of the toun to go,
For wel he wist by sorte, that Troie sholde
Distroyid be, ye'would who' so or n'olde.

Wherfore for to departin softly
Toke purpose ful this wight forknowing, wise, 80
And to the Grekis host ful privily
He stalle anone, and thei in curteis wise,
Didin to him both worship and service,
In trust that he hath conning 'hem to rede
In every peril, which that was to drede.

Grete rumour rose, whan it was first espied,
In al the toun, and opynly was spoken,
That Calcas traitour fled was, and alied
To them of Grece, and caste was to be wroken with
On him, that falsly hath his faith to broken, 90
And said; that he and al his kinne atones
Were worthy to be brent both fell and bones.
at ones

Now had this Calcas lefte in this mischaunce,
Unknowing of this false and wickid dede,
A doughtir, whiche that was in grete penaunce;
And of her life she was ful fore in drede, for
And ne wist nevir what best was to rede, at the time that right was to be
And as a widowe was she, and alone, for both
And n'ist to whom she might ymake her mone.
Of any friend to whom she durst have gone.

Creseide ywas this ladies name aright, at the time of her birth
As to my dome, in al Troy's cite 100
Most fairist lady, passing every wight; Was more so faire for pass. of the surpass.
So angelike shone her natife beaute,
That like a thing immortal semid she;
And therwith was she so parfite a creature,
As she had be made in scorning of nature.

Dan Troilus, as he was wont to gide
 His yongè knightis, ladde hem up and doune
 In thilke large temple on every side,
 Beholding aie the ladies of the tounne,
 Now here now there; for no devocioun
 Had he to none, to revin him his rest,
 But gan to praise and lackin whom he left.

And in his walke ful faste he gan to waiten, 190
 If knight or squyr of his company
 Gan for to sike, or let his eyin baiteñ

O blinde worlde! o blinde entencioun!
 How oftin fallith al th' effecte contraire

That this be sothe, hath previd and doth yet,
For this (trowe I) ye knowin al and some, 240
Men redin nat that folke han gretir wit
Than thei, that han ben most with love inome,
And strengist folke ben therwith ovircome,
The worthyist and gretist of degre;
This was, and is, and yet man shal it se. c.

On this lady, and now on that loking,
Wherefo she were of toun, or of without; 270
And upon case besil, that through a rout
His eye ypercid, and so depe it went,
Til on Creseide it smote, and there it stent;

And sodainly for wondir wext astoned,
And gan her bet beholde in thrifty wise; by
O mercy God! thought he, where hast thou wonned,
That arte so faire, and godely to devise?
Therwith his hert began to sprede and rise,
And softe he sighid, lest men might him here,
And caught ayen his formir playing chere. 280

She n'as nat with the leste of her stature,
But al her limmis so wel answering Werin to womanhode, that creature
Was never lasse mannish in seming;
And eke the pure wise of her meying v
She shewid wel, that men might in her gessie
Honour, estate, and womanly noblesse.

Tho Troilus right wondir wel withall
Gan for to like her meying and her chere, v
Whiche somdele deignous was, for she let fal 290
Her loke alite a side, in suche manere
Ascauncis, what may I nat stonidin here?
And aftir that her loking gan she light,
That never thought him sene so gode a sight. have

And of her loke in him there gan to quicken
So grete desire, and suche affectioun,
That in his hert's bottom gan to sticken at
Of her his fixe, and depe impressioun;
And though he erst had porid up and down,

Than was he glad his hornis in to shrinken, 300
Unnethis wist he how to loke or winke.

Lo! he that lete him selvin so conning,
And scornid hem that lov'is painis drien,
Was ful unware that love had his dwelling
Within the subtil stremis of her eyen,
That sodainly him thought that he felte dien
Right with her loke the spirite in his herte:
Blessid be love, that thus can folke converte.

She thus in blake loking to Troilus
Ovir al thing he stode for to beholde, 310
But his desire, ne wherefore he stode thus,
He neithir chere made, ne worde thereof tolde;
But from aserre, his manir for to holde,
On othir thing somtime his loke he call,
And este on her, while that the service last.

And aftir this, not fully all awshaped,
Out of the temple, esliche he wente, all
Repenting him that evir he had japed
Of lov'is folke, lest fully the discente 320
Of scorne fil on him self; but what he mente
Leste it were wiste on any manir side,
His wo he gan dissimulin and hide.

Whan he was fro this temple thus departed,
He streight anone unto his palais turneth,
Right with her loke thorough shottin and darterd,
Al framith he in luste that he sojourneth, sayn. th.
And all his chere and speche also he abnormeth, at. bourneth.
And aie of lov'is servauntes every while Himselfe to wrie, at hem he gan to smile, 330

And sayd, ah Lord! so ye live all in lust,
Ye lovirs, for the conningist of you,
That servith most ententifliche and best,
Him tye as oftin harme therof as prowes;
Your hire is quite ayen, ye God wote howe,
Not welcor welc but skorne for gode service,
In faithe your ordir is ruled in gode wise. -/y

In no certaine ben your observaunces,
But it in a few sely pointis be, at
Ne nothing asketh so gret attendaunces 340
As doeth your laie, and that knowin al ye;
But that is not the worst, as mote I The,
But tolde I which were the worst point, I leve,
Al saide I sothe, ye woldin at me greve.

But take this; that ye lovirs ofte eschewe,
Or ellis done of gode entencion,
Ful ofte thy lady wol it missecontrewe,
And deme it harme in her opinion,
And yet if she for othir encheison
Be wroth, then shat thou have a groin anone, 350
Lorde! wel is him that may bene of you one.

But for al this, whan that he seeth his time,
He held his pees, non othir bore him gained,
For love began his fithirs so to lime,
That wel unneth unto his folke he fained
That othir besy nedis him distained,
So wo was him, that what to done he n'ist,
But bad his folke to gone where as hem list.

And whan that he in chambre was alone,
He doune upon his bedd'is fete him sette, 360
And first he gan to like, and este to grone,
And thought aie on her so withoutin lete,
That as he satte and woke, his spirite mette
That he her saugh, and tempie, and all the wise in to. in all Right of her loke, and gan it newe avise.
at. in. de. in. Thus

Thus gan he make a mirroure of his minde,
In whiche he saugh all wholly her figure,
And that he wel coude in his herte fynde
It was to him a right gode avinture
To love suche one; and if he did his cure,
To servin her, yet might he fal in grace,
Or els for one of her servauntis pace 370

Imagining, that ne travaile nor grame
Ne might for so godely an one be lorne;
As she, ne him for his desire no shame,
Al were it wiste, but in prife and upborne
Of allè lovirs, wel more than beforne,
Thus argumentid he, in his ginning,
Ful unavisid of his wo comming.

Thus toke he purpose lov'is crafte to sewe,
And thought that he would workin privily,
First for to hide all his desire in mewé,
From every wight iborne, all uttirly;
But he might ought recovered ben therby,
Remembring him, that love to wide iblowe
Yelt bittir frute, although swete fede be sowe.

And ore al this, ful mokil more he thought
What for to speke, and what to holdin inne;
And what to artin her to love he fought,
And on a songe anone right to beginne;
And gan loude on his sorowe for to winne;
For with gode hope he gan fully assente
Creseida for to love, and nought repente.

And of his songe not onely his sentence,
(As writ mine auctour callid Lolius)
But plainely save our tong'is difference,
I dare wel say, in al that Troilus
Said in his songe (lo!) every word right thus,
As I shal saine; and who so list it here,
(Lo!) next this verse, he may it findin here. 400

[The songe of Troilus out of Petrarche.]
If no love is, o God what fele I so?
And if love is, what thing and whiche is he?
If love be gode, from whence comith my wo?
If it be wicke, a wondir thinkith me,
Whan every turment and adversite
That cometh of him, may to me savery thinke;
For aye more thurst I, the more that I drinke.

And if that at mine ownè lust I brenne,
From whence comith my wailing and my pleinte?
If harme agre me, wherto plaine I thenne?
I n'ot nere why unwery that I feinte;
O quickè deth, o swete harme so queinte,
'How may I fe in me soche quantite,
But if that I consente that it so be?

And if that I consente, I wrongfully
Complaine iwis; thus possid to and fro
As sterclefs wight is in a bore, am I,
Amiddè the fe, atwixin windis two,
That in contrarie stondin evirmo?
Alas! what is this wondir maladie?
For hete of colde, for colde of hete I die.

[Here endeth the song.]
And to the God of love thus sayid he With pitous voice, O Lorde, now your'is is My spirite, whiche that oughtin your'is be;
You thonke I, Lord, that han me brought to this,
But whethir goddesse or woman iwis
She be, I n'ot whiche, that ye do me serve,
But as her man I wol aie live and serve.

Ye stondin in her eyin mightily,
As in a place unto your vertue digne;
Wherfore O Lord, if my service or I
May likin you, so bethe me to benigne;
For mine estate royal here I resigne
Into her honde, and with ful humble chere
Become her man, as to my lady dere.
Endeth the Songe.

In him ne deigned to sparin blode royal
The fire of love, (wherefro may God me blesse)
Ne him forbare in no degre, for all
His vertue, or his excellent prowesse;
But helde him as his thrall lowe in distresse,
And brende him so in sondrie wise aie newe,
That sixty times a day he losse his hewe.

So muchill daie fro daie his ownè thought
For luste to her gan quickin and encrese,
That everiche othir charge he sette at nought;
Forthy ful oftin, his hottè fire to cese,
To sene her godely lōke he gan to prese;
For therby to ben esid wel he wende,
And aie the nere he was, the more he brende.

For aie the nere the fire the hottir is;
This (trowe I) knowith al this company;
But were he ferre or nere, I dare saie this,
By night or daie, (for wisedome or folie)
His herte, whiche that is his brest'is eye,
Was aie on her, that fairir was to sene
Than evir was Helein, or Polyxene.

Eke of the daie there passid nat an houre,
But to himself a thoufande times he saide,
God godely, to whom I serve and laboure
As best I can, now would to God, Creseide,
Ye wouldin on me rue, er that I deide;
My dere herte (alas!) mine hele and my hewe
And life is losse, but ye woll on me rewte.

All othir dredis werin from him fledde,
Bothe of th' assiege, and his salvacion,
Ne' in his desire none othir fancy bredde,
But argumentes to this conclusion,
That she on him would han compassion,
And he to ben her man, while he maie dure,
Lo here his life, and from his death his cure! 470

The sharpè shouris fell of armis preve
That Hector or his othir brethrin didden,
Ne made him onely therefore onis meve;
And yet was he, wher so men went or ridden,
Found one the best, and lengist time abiden
There peril was, and eke did suche travail
In armis, that to thinke it was mervaille.

But for none hate he to the Grekis had,
Ne also for the rescous of the toun,
Ne made him thus in armis for to mad;
But onely (lo!) for this conclusioun,
To likin her the bet for his renoun;
Fro daie to daie in armis so he spedde,
That all the Grekis as the deth him dredde.

And fro this forthe tho rest him love his slepe,
And made his mete his foe, and eke his sorow
Gan multiplie, that who so tokè kepe,
It shewid in his hewe both even' and morow;
Therefore a tite he gan him to borowe
Of othir sickenesse, lest men of him wende,
That the hottè fire of cruill love him brende;

And saied he by a fevir, fared amis;
But how it was certain I cannot say,
If that his Ladie understode nat this,
Or fainid her she n'ist, one of the tweie;
But well rede I, that by no manir weie
Ne semid it as if she on him rought,
Or of his paine, what so evir he thought.

But than yfelt this Troilus soche wo, so much
That he was wel nigh wode; for aie his drede 500
Was this, that she some wight had lovid so,
That ner of him she would haf takin hede,
For whiche him thought he felte his herte blede,
Ne of his wo ne durst he nought begin
To tellin her, for all this worlde to win.

But whan he had a space left from his care,
Thus to himself full oft he gan to plaine;
He saied, O sole, now art thou in the snare,
That whilom japedist at lov's pain,
Now art thou hent, now gnaw thin ownè chain; 510
Thou wert aie woned eche lovir reprehende
Of thing, fro which thou canst nat The defende.

What woll now every lovir saie of The
If this be wist? But er in thine absence Laughin in scorne, and saie lo! There goth he;
That is the man of so grete sapience,
That helde us lovirs leste in reverence;
Now thanked be God, he maie go on the daunce
Of hem, that love liste feebly to avaunce.

But O thou wofull Troilus, God would, 520
(Sith thou must lovin, through thy destine)
That thou beset wer of soche one, that should Know all thy wo, all lackid her pitè!
But all so colde in love towards The Thy ladie is, as frost in wintir Mone,
And thou fordon, as Snowe in fire is sone.

God would I were arivid in the port
Of deth, to whiche my sorowe woll me lede!
Ah Lordè! to me it were a grete comfort,
Than were I quit of languishing in drede; 530
For by my hidde sorowe iblowe in brede
I shall bejapid ben a thousande time,
More than that sole, of whose foly men rime.

But now helpe God, and ye my swete, for whom I plaine, icought ye nevir wight so fast;
O mercie my dere herte, and helpe me from The deth, for I, while that my life maie last,
More than my life woll love you to my last,
And with some frendly loke gladith me, swete,
Though nevir nothing more ye me behete. 540

These wordis, and full many' an-othir mo
He spake, and callid evir in his pleinte
Her name, to tellin unto her his wo,
Till nigh that he in false teris was dreinte;
All was for nought, she herd nat his compleinte;
And whan that he bethought on that folie,
A thousand folde his wo gan multiplic.

Bewailing in his chambir thus alone,
A frende of his, that callid was Pandare, 550
Came onis in unware, and herd him grone,
And sawe his frend in soche distresse and care,
Alas (qð he) who causith all this fare?
O mercie God! what unhap maie this mene?
Han now thus sone the Grekis made you lene?

Or hast thou some remorse of conscience?

And art now fall in some devocioun,
And waitist for thy sinne and thine offence,
And hast for ferde ycougth contricioun?
God save hem, that besiegid han our toun,
That so can laie our jolite on presse. 560
And bring our lustie folke to holinesse.

These wordis saied he for the nonis all,
That with soche thing he might him angry maken;
And with his angre doen his sorowe fall
As for a time, and his corage awaken; He But well wist he, as ferre as tongis speken, at
There n'as a man of gretir hardinesse
Than he, ne more desirid worthinesse.

What cas (qð Troilus) or what avinture
Hath gidid The to sene me languishing, at my. 570
That am refuse of every creature?
But for the love of God, at my praying,
Go hence awaie, for certis my dying
Woll The disese, and I mote nedis deie;
Therefore go waie, there n'is no more to seie. in me.

But if thou wene I be thus sicke for drede,
It is nat so, and therefore scorne me nought;
There is an othir thing I take of hede,
Wel more than ought the Grekis han yet wrought,
Which cause is of my deth for sorow and thought;
But though that I now tell it The ne leste,
Be thou nat wrothe, I hide it for the beste.

This Pandare, that nigh malt for wo and routh,
Full oft saied alas! what maie this be?
Now frende (qð he) if evir love or trowth
Hath ben er this betwixin The and me,
Ne doe thou nevir soche a cruilte,
To hidist fro thy frende so grete a care, at me.
Wost thou not well that it am I Pandare?

I woll partake with The of all thy paine, S 590
If it so be I doe The no comfort,
As it is frend's right, sothe for to saine,
To enterpartin wo, as glad disport;
I have and shall, for true or false report,
In wrong and right, iloved The all my live;
Hide not thy wo from me, but tell it blive.

Than gan this sorowfull Troilus to like,
And saied him thus, God leve it be my best
To tellin The, for sith it maie The like, at it.
Yet woll I tell it The, though my herte brest, 600
And well wote I, thou maiest do me no rest,
But lest thou deme that I trust nat to The,
Now herkin frende, for thus it stant with me.

Love, ayenst the whiche who so defen'isth
Him selvin moste, him aldirlest ava'leth,
With dispeire so sorely me offendith
That streight unto the deth mir'le hert yfaileth; saileth
Thereto desire, so brenningly me' assaileth,
That to ben slain it were: a gretir joie
To me, than king of Grece to be and Troie. 610

Suffisith this, my fully frer de Pandare, I fully
That I have saied, so now wotest thou my wo; at it.
And for the love of God my coldè care
So hide it well, I tolde it ner to mo;
For harmis might in solowen mo than two,
If it were wi' it, but be thou in gladnesse,
And let me sterve unknowe of my distresse.

How hast thou thus unkindely and long
Hid this fro me, thou sole? (qð Pandarus) Paraventur e thou maiest for soche one long, 620
A a a a That

That mine avise anone maie helpin us.
This were a wondir thing (q^d Troilus)
Thou couldist ner in love thy selfin wisse,
How (devill) maicst thou bringin me to blisse?

Ye Troilus, now herkin (q^d Pandare)
Though I be nice, it happith oftin so,
That one, that of axis doeth full ill fare;
By gode counsaile can kepe his frend therfro;
I have my self yseine a blinde man go
Thereas he fell, which that could lokin wide; 630
A sole maie eke a wise man oftin gide.

A whetstone is no kerving instrument,
But yet it makith sharpe kerving tolis,
And if thou wost that I have aught miswent, Eschue thou that, for soche thing to schole is;
Thus oftin wise men ben warin by folis;
If thou so do, thy wit is well bewared;
By his contrary is every thing declared.

For how might evir swetnesse have be know
To him, that nevir tastid bittirnesse? 640
No man ne wot what gladnesse is I trowe,
That nevir was in sorowe, or some distresse;
Eke white by black, by shame eke worthines,
Eche set by othir, more for othir semeth,
As men maie sene; and so the wise it demeth.

Sithe thus of two contraries is o love,
I, that in love so oftin have assayed
Grevaucis, ought to connin well the more
Counsailein The, of that thou art dismaied;
And eke The ne ought not ben ill apaied, 650
Though I desirin with The for to bere
Thine hevie charge, it shall the lasse The dere.

I wote well that it farid thus by me,
As to thy brothir Paris, an hierdesse,
Whiche that yclepid was Oenone,
Wrote in a complaint of her hevinesse,
Ye sawe the lettir that she wrote, I gesse:
Naie nevir yet iwis (q^d Troilus)
Now (q^d Pandare) herkinith, it was thus.

Phœbus, that first found art of medicine,
(Q^d she) and coud in every wight's care
Remedy and rede, by herbis he knewe fine,
Yet to himself his conning was full bare,
For love had him so boundin in a snare,
All for the doughter of the king Admete,
That all his craft ne coud his sorowe bete.

Right so fare I, unhappily for me,
I love one best, and that me smertith fore;
And yet paravinture I can rede The, -yn.
And nat my self; reprove thou me no more, 670
I have no cause I wote well for to fore,
As doeth an hauke, that listith for to plaie;
But to thine helpe yet somwhat can I saie.

And of o thing right fikir maicst thou be,
That certain, for to dyin in the pain,
That I shall nevir mo diszovir The;
Ne, by my trowth, I kepe nat to restraine
The fro thy love, although it were Helcine;
That is thy brothir's wife, if I it wist;
Be what she be, and love her as The list. 680

Therefore, as frendfulliche in me assure,
And tell me platte, what is thine encheson,
And finall cause of wo, that ye endure;
For doubtrith nothing, mine entencion
N'as nat to you of reprehension

To speke as now, for no wight maie bireve
A man to love, till that him list to leve.

And therefore wetith wel, that both ben vicis;
Mistrustin all, or ellis all beleve; beleve Mistrustin
But well I wote, the mene of it no vice is, 690
As for to trustin some wight is a preve
Of trowth; and forthy would I fain remeve
Thy wrong conceipt, and do The some wight trust
Thy wo to tell; and tell me if The lust.

The wise saith, wo is him that is alone,
For and he fall, he hath none helpe to rise,
And sihe thou hast a felowe, tell thy mone;
For this ne is neught certain the next wife
To winnin love, as techin us the wise,
To waile and wepe, as Niobe the quene, 700
Whose teris yet in marble ben isene.

Let be thy weping, and thy drerinesse,
And let us lessin wo, with othir speche, lessen
So maie thy wofull time semin the lesse;
Delitith nought in wo, thy wo to seche;
As doen these folis, that ther sorowes eche
With sorowe, whan thei han misavinture,
And lustin nought to sechin othir cure.

Men saine, to wretche is consolation,
To have an othir felowe in his paines, 710
That ought well to ben our opinion,
For we bothe thou and I of love do plain;
So full of sorowe am I, sothe to saie, the
That certainly, as now no more hard grace
Maie sit on me, for why? there is no space.

Yf God wol, thou art nought agast of me,
Lest I would of thy lady The begile;
Thou wost thy self, whom that I love (parde)
As I best can, gon sithin longe while;
And sihe thou wost, I do it for no wile, 720
And sihe I am he, that thou trustith most, scyth
Tel me somwhat, sene al my wo thou woste.

Yet Troilus, for al this, no worde faide,
But long he laie as still, as he ded were;
And aftir this, with siking he abraide,
And to Pandarus voice he lent his ere,
And up his eien cast he, and thap in fere
Was Pandarus, lest that in a frenseye
He should yfal, or ellis sonè deye;

And said awake, full wondirliche and sharpe, 730
What sloumbrist thou, as in a lethargy?
Or art thou like an Asse unto the harpe,
That herith soun, whan men the stringis ply,
But in his mind of that no melodie
Maie sinkin him to gladin, for that he So dull is, in his bestialite? al. of.

And with this Pandare of his wordis stent;
But Troilus to him no thing answerde; yet
For why, to tellin was nought his entent
Ner to no man, for whom that he so ferde; 740
For it is said, men makin ofte a yerde,
With which the makir is himselfe ibeten,
In sondrie manir, as these wise men tecten. techen

And namèliche in his counsaile telling
That touchith love, that ought to ben secrete,
For of himselfe it woll inough out spring,
But if that it the bet governfd be; der
Eke somtime it is crafte to seme to fle
Fro thing, which in effecte men huntin faste.

Al this gan Troilus in his herte caste. 750

But nathèlesse, whan he had herde him crie
Awake, he gan to sike wondir fore,
And sayd, my frende, although that still I lie,
In'am not defc, now pece, and crie no more,
For I have herde thy wordis, and thy lore,
But suffir me my fortune to bewailen,
For thy proverbis may nought me availen;

Nor othir cure ne canst thou none for me,
Eke I n'll not ben curid, I woll die;
What knowin I of the quene Niobe? 760
Let be thine olde ensamplis, I The prey.
No, frende, (qð Pandarus) therfore I sey
Suche is delite of folis to bewepe
Ther wo, but to-sekin bote thei ne kepe.

Now know I that there reson in The faileth,
But tellith me, if I wiste what she were, which e.
For whome that The al misaventure aileth, a this Durst thou trust that I tolde it in her ere her
Thy wo, sith thou darst not thy selfe for fere,
And her besought on The to han some routhen? 770
Why nay (qð he) by God and by my trouthe.

What, not as befily (qð Pandarus)
As though mine ownè life lay in this nede?
Why no, parde, sir (qð this Troilus)
And why? for that thou shouldist nevir spede:
Wost thou that wel? ye, that is out of drede, (Qð Troilus) for al that er ye conne,
She wol to no suche wretche as I be wonne.

(Qð Pandarus) alas! what may this be,
That thou dispairid art thus causilese? 780
What, liveth nat thy lady, benedicite!
How wost thou so, that thou art gracilese? thus Suche evil is not alwaie botèlesse;
Why put not thus impossible thy cure,
Sithe thing to come is ofte in avinture.

I grauntin well that thou endurist wo,
As sharpe as doth he Tityus in hell,
Whose stomake foulis tirin evir mo, f. l. cryn.
That hightin vulturis, as bokis tell;
But I may not endurin that thou dwell 790
In so unskilful an opinion,
That of thy wo n'is no curacion,

But onis n'ilt thou, for thy cowarde herte,
And for thine ire, and folish wilfulness,
For wantrust tellin of thy sorowe's smerte, wounds
Ne to thine ownè helpe do besinesse, f. l. cryn.
As moche as speke a worde, yelmore or lesse;
But liest as he that of life nothing retche;
What woman living coude love suche a wretche?

What may she demin othir of thy dethe, 800
Yf thou thus die, and she n'ot why it is,
But that for fere is yoldin up thy brethe,
For Grekis han besiegid us iwis? f. l. cryn.
Lord! which a thanke shalt thou have than of this?
Thus wol she faine, and al the tounne atones,
"The wretch is ded, the divel have his bones."

Thou maiste alone here wepe, and crie, and knele;
And love a woman that she wote it nought,
And she wol quite it that thou shalt not fele, the Unknow unkist, and lost that is unfought; 810
What? many a man hath love ful dere abought,
Twenty wintir, that his lady/ne/wiste, f. l. cryn.
That never yet his ladie's mouthe he kiste.

What? should he therfore fallin in dispaire?
Or be recreaunte for his ownè tene?
Or slain himself, all be his ladie faire? f. l. cryn.
Naie-naie: but et in one be fresli and grene,
To serve and love ay his dere hert's quene,
And think it is a guerdone her to servē,
A thousande folde more, than he can deservē. 820

And of that wordè toke hede Troilus,
And thought anone, what folie he was in,
And how that sothe him sayid Pandarus,
That for to slay himself might he not win, f. l. cryn.
But bothe to doen unmanhode and a sinne, f. l. cryn.
And of his deth his ladie nought to wite,
For of his wo, God wor, she knewe full lite.

And with that thought he gan ful fore to sike,
And saied, alas! what is me best to doe?
To whom Pandare answerid, if The like, 830
The best is, that thou tell me all thy wo,
And have my trouthe, but if thou find it so
I be thy bote, or that it ber full long
To peeis doe me drawe, and sithin hong.

Ye, so saiest thou (qð Troilus) alas?
But God wor it is naught the rathir so,
Full harde it were to helpin in this caas,
For well finde I, that fortune is my fo; f. l. cryn.
Ne all the men that ridin con or go,
Maie of her cruill whele the harme withstond,
For as her list, she plaieth with fre and bond.

(Qð Pandarus) than blamist thou Fortune?
For thou art wroth ye now at erst I se;
Wost thou not wel that fortune is commune
To every manir wight, in some degre?
And yet thou hast this comfort, lo! parde, f. l. cryn.
That as her joyis motin ovirgōne,
So mote her sorowes passin everichone.

For if her whele stint any thing to tourne,
Than cessith she fortune anone to be; 850
Now sith her whele by no waie maie sojourn;
What wost thou of her mutabilitè f. l. cryn.
Right as thy self lust/she woll done by The, f. l. cryn.
Or that she be nought ferre fro thine helping?
Paravinture thou hast cause for to sing.

And therfore wost thou what I The beseeche?
Let be thy wo, and tourning to the grounde;
For who so list have heling of his leche,
To him bihovith first unwrie his wounde;
To Cerberus in hell aie be I bound, 860
Were it eke for my sustir all thy sorowe,
By my gode will she should be thine to morowe.

Loke up I saie, and tell me what she is Anone, that I maie gone about thy nede;
Know I her aught, for my love tell me this,
Than would I hope the rathir for to spede;
Tho gan the veine of Troilus to blede,
For he was hit, and woxe all redde for shame.
Aha (qð Pandare) here beginnith game. the.

And with that worde he gan him for to shake, 870
And saied him thus, thefe, thou shalt her name tell:
But tho gan sely Troilus for to quake,
As though men should han had him into hel, have sely at liddyn hym to be.
And saied alas! of all my wo the well
Than is my swetè foe callid Creside;
And well nigh with that word for fere he deide. the.

And whan that Pandare herd her namè nevyn, him Lorde!

Lorde! he was glad, and sayid, frend so dere,
Now fare a right, for Jov's name in heven,
Love hath beset The well, be of gode chere; 880
For of gode name, and wisdom, and manere
She hath inough, and eke of gentillnesse;
If she be faire, thou wost thy self I gesse.

Ne nevyr seig I ^{an} more bounteous
Of her estate, ne gladdir; ne of speche
A frendlier, ne none more gracious
For to doe well, ne lasse had nede to seche
What for to doyn; and all this bet to eche
In honour, to as ferre as she may stretche,
A king's herte semith by her's a wretche. 890

And forthy loke of gode comforte thou be;
For certainly the firste pointe is this
Of noble corage, and wele ordaine The,
A man to have pece with himselfe iwis,
So oughtist thou, for nought but gode it is To lovin wel, and in a worthy place,
The ought not to clepin it happe, but grace.

And also thinke, and therewith gladdin The,
That sith thy lady vertuous is all, ⁱⁿ
So foloweth it, that there is some pite 900
Amongis all these othir in generall,
And for thei'se that thou in speciall,
Requirist nought, that is ayen her name;
For verue stretchith not himselfe to shame.

But wel is me, that evir I was borie,
That thou beset art in so gode a place,
For by my trouth in love I durst have sworne
The should nevyr have tidde so faire a grace;
And wost you why? for thou were wont to chace
At love in scorne, and for dispite him call 910
Saint Idiote, lorde of these folis all.

How oftin hast thou madin thy nice japes,
And saied, that lov's servauntes everichone
Of nicete ben very Godd's Apes, ^{bride}
And some of them would monche ther mete alone
Ligging a bedde, and make 'hem for to grone,
And some thou saidist had a blaunche fevere,
And praidist God, thei should nevyr kevere.

And some of 'hem toke on 'hem for the cold,
More than inough, so saidist thou full oft, 920
And some han fainid oftin time and tolde,
How that thei wakin, whan thei slepin soft;
And thus thei would have set 'hem self aloft,
And nathelless were undir at the laste:
Thus saidist thou, and japidist full faste.

Yet saidist thou, that for the more part
These lovirs wouldin speke in generall,
And thoughtin that it was a sikir art
For failing, for to' assayin ovir all:
Now maie I jape of The, if that I shall, 930
But nathelless, although that I should deie,
Thou inestart none of tho, I dare well seie.

Now hete thy brest, and saie to God of love,
Thy grace, O Lord, for now I me repent
If I mistpake, for now my self I love;
Thus saie with all thine hert in gode entent;
(Qd Troilus) ah Lorde! I me consent, And praie to The, my japis thou foryeve, ^{to}
And I no more will jape, while that I live.

Thou saiest well (qd Pandare) and now I hope 940
That thou the Godd's wrath hast al apesed,
And sithin thou hast weptin many a drope,

And said soch thing, wherewith thy God is plesed;
Now would God nevyr, but that thou were esed;
And thinke well she, of whom rest all thy wo,
Hereaftir maie thy comfort ben also.

For thilke ground, that berith the wedis wicke;
Bereth eke these wholsome herbis, as full oft, ⁸
And nexte to the foule nettle, rough and thicke,
The Rose ywexith sote, and smothe, and soft, 950
And next the valey is the hill aloft,
And next the derke night is the glad morowe,
And also joie is next the fine of sorowe.

Now loke that well attempre be thy bridell,
And for the best aie suffre to the tide,
Or ellis all our labour is on idell,
He bastith well, that wisely can abide;
Be diligent and true, and aie well hide,
Be lustie, fre, persever in servise, ^{thy}
And all is well, if thou werke in this wise. 960

But he that partid is in every place,
Is no where whole, as writin clerkis wise,
What wondir is, if soche one have no grace?
Eke wost thou how it farcth of some servise? ^{al. love}
As plant a tre or herbe, in sondrie wise,
And on the morowe pull it up as blive,
No wondir is, though it maie nevyr thrive.

And sith the God of love hath The bestowed
In place digne unto thy worthinesse,
Stonde fast, for to a gode port hast thou rowed, 970
And of thy self, for any hevinesse,
Hope alwaie well; for but if dretinesse,
Or ovirhast (doe) our borthe labour shende, ^{by bothis}
I hope of this to makin a gode ende. ^{right}

And wost thou why? I am the lasse afered
Of this matter with my nece for to trete,
For this have I herd saie of wife and lered,
Was nevyr man or woman yet beyete,
That was unapt to suffre lov's hete
Celestiall, or ellis love of kinde; 980
Forthy some grace I hope in her to finde.

And for to speke of her in speciall,
Her beaute to bethinkin, and her youthe,
It sit her nought to ben Celestiall
As yet, though that her bothè list and kouthe,
And truly it sit her well right nouthe ^{al. Troilus}
A worthie knight to lovin and cherice,
And but she doe, I holde it for a vice.

Wherefore I am, and woll be aie redy
To painin me to do you this service, 990
For bothe of you to plesin, this hope I - ^{us}
Hereaftirwardis, for ye ben bothe wise,
And connin counsaile kepe in soche a wise, ^{it}
That no man shall the wisir of it be, ^{therof}
And so we maie ben gladdid allè thre.

And by my trouth I have right now of The
A gode conceit, in my wit as I gesse,
And what it is, I woll now that thou se,
I think that sithin Love of his godenesse
Hath The convertid out of wickidnesse, 1000
That thou shalt ben the bestè post I leve,
Of all his laie, and moste his foin greve.

Ensamplè why, se now these gretè clerkes,
That errin aldirmoste ayen all lawe, ^{al. are. arne.}
And ben convertid from ther wickid werkes
Through grace of God, that lèst 'hem to him drawe,
Than arnethi folk that han most God in awe,
These are the so. And

And strengist faithid ben I undirfonde,
And con an errour aldirbest withfonde.

Whan Troilus had herde Pandare assented 1010
To ben his helpe, in loving of Cresseide,
He wext of wo, as who saith, unturmented,
But hortir wext his love, and than he faide
With sobre chere, as though his herte yplaided, had y.
Now blisfull Venus helpe, er that I sterve,
Of The, Pandare, I now some thanke deserve.

But derè frende, how shal my wo be lesse
Till this be done? and gode now tell me this,
How wolt thou saine of me and my distresse,
Left she be wroth? this drede I most iwis; 1020
Or wol not herin al, how that it is?
Al this drede I, and eke for the manere,
Of The her Eme she n'il no fuche thing here.

(Q^d Pandarus) thou hast a ful grete care
Left that the chorle may fal out of the mone,
Why lorde! I hate of The the nice fare,
Why, entrement of that thou hast to done; ought For Godd's love, I bidde The a bone,
So let me' alone, and it shal be thy best.
Why frende (q^d he) than do's right as The left:

But herke, Pandare, o worde, for I ne wolde
That thou in me wendist so grete folie,
That to my lady I desirin sholde
That touchith harme, or any vilanie;
For dredilese me were levir to die
Than she of me aught ellis understode
But that, that might yfownin into gode. all "

Tho lough this Pandare, and anon answerde,
And I thy borow', fie no wight doth but so,
I ne raught not although she stode and herde 1050
How that thou saiest, but farewell, I wol go,
Adieu, be glad, God spede us bothè two,
Yeve me this labour, and this businesse,
And of my spede be thine al the sweynesse. c/

Tho Troilus on knees gan doune to fall,
(And Pandare in his armis hente him fast)
And saide, now fie upon the Grekis all,
Yet pardes God shal helpist at the last; us
And dredilese, if that my life may last,
And God toforn, (to!) some of 'hem shal smerte;
And yet me' athinketh that this avaunt m'asterte.

And now Pandare, I can no more say,
But thou wise, thou wost, thou maist, thou art al,
My life, my deth, hole in thine honde I lay,
Helpe me (q^d he) yes by my trouth I shal;
God yelde The frende, and this in special,
(Q^d Troilus) that thou me recommaunde
To her, that may me' to the deth commaunde.

This Pandarus tho, desirous to serve
His ful frende, tho saide in this manere, 1060
Farewel, and 'thinke I wol thy thanke deserve,
Have here my trouth, and that thou shalt well here;
And went his way, thinking on this matere,
And how he best might her besече of grace,
And find a lēsure therto, and a place.

For every wight that hath a house to found,
He' rennith nat the werke for to beginne
With rakel honde, but he wol bide a ffound,
And iende his hert's line out fro within,
Thus aldirfirst his purpose for to winne; 1070
As this Pandarus in his hert's thought hert's
Did cast his werke full wisely, er he wrought.

But Troilus lay tho no lengir down,
But up anon gat upon his stede baic,
And in the felde he playid the lioun;
Wo was that Greke, that with him met that daie; the
And in the tounne his manir tho forthe aie
So godely was, and gat him so in grace,
That eche him loved, that lokid in his face. al. on.

For he becamir the most frendly wight, 1080
The gentilist, and eke the moste fre,
The trustyist, and one the bestè knight, thriftye. 1.
That in his time was, or ellis might be;
Dedewere his japis, and his cruilte,
Ded his high porte, and all his manir straunge;
And eche of 'hem gan for a vertue change. to

Now let us stint of Troilus a ffounde,
That farith like a man, that hurt is fore,
And is somdele of aking of his wounde
Ylssid wel, but helid no dele more; y
And as an esy pacient the loie
Abite of him that goth about his cure; t
And thus he drivith forth his avinture. al. dryeth
Explicit liber primus.

OUT of these blackè wawis let us saile,
O winde, O winde; the we' dir gunnath clere;
For in the se the bote hath fuche trawale, this
Of my conning that unneth I it stere;
This se clepe I the tempestous matere
Of depe dispaire, that Troilus was in;
But now of hope the kalendis begin.

O lady mine that callid art Clio, clepide.
Thou be my spede fro this forthe, and my musc
To rimè wel this boke til I have do, all 10
Me nedith here none othir art to use;
For why? to every lovir I me' excuse,
That of no sentiment I this endite,
But out of latin in my tonge it write.

Wherefore I n'il have neithir thanke ne blame
Of all this worke, but praisè you mekily this Disblamith me if any worde be lame, al. blam.
For as mine auctour sayid, so say I:
Eke though I speke of love unlesmely
No wondir is, for it nothings of newe is, 20
A blinde man can not judgin wel in hewis.

I know eke that in forme of speche is change,
Within a thousande yeres; and wordis tho;
That haddin prife, now wondir nice and straunge
Us thinkith 'hem; and yet thei spake 'hem so,
And spedde as wel in love, as men now do;
Eke for to winnin love, in sondry ages,
In sondry londis, sondry ben usages.

And forthy, if it happe in any wise
That here be any lovir in this place, 30
That herkeneth, as the story wol devise,
How Troilus came to his ladie's grace,
And thinkith, so n'olde I not love purchase,
Or wo: drith on his speche or his doying,
I n'ot, but it is to me no wondring.

For every wight, whiche that to Rome ywent
Halt nat o pathe, ne alway o manere;
Eke in some londe were al the game yshent,
Yf that men farde in love, as men don here,
As thus, in opin doying, or in chere, 40
In visiting, in forme, or said our sawes; al. sayin
For thus men saine, eche countre hath his lawes.

 Eke fearfely ben there in this place thre,
 That have in love said like, and done in al,
 For to this purpose this maie likin The,
 And The right nought, yet al is done or shal;
 Eke some men grave in tre, some in stone wal,
 As it betide; but sith I have begonne,
 Mine authour shall I folow, as I konne.

 IN May, that mothir is of monethis glade,
 That the freshe flouris ail, blew, white, and rede,
 Ben quicke ayen, that wintir ded had made,
 And full of baume is stering every mede,
 Whan that Phœbus doth his bright bemis spred e
 Right in the white Boie; right so it betidde
 As I shal singe, on May's day the thridde

That Pandarus, for all his wisē speche,
 Felte eke his parte of lov's shottis kene,
 That coude he ner so well of loving preche,
 It made his hewe al daie ful oftin grene,
 So shope it that him fill that day a tene
 In love, for whiche in wo to bedde he went,
 And made er it were day full many' a went.

 The swalow Progne with a so'rowfull lay,
 Whan morow come, gan make her waimenting,
 Why she forshapin was; and ever lay
 Pandare abed, halfe in a slombering,
 Til she so nigh him made her waimenting,
 How Tereus gan forth her sustir take,
 That with the noise of her he gan awake,

 And to call, and dressin him up to rise,
 Remembring him his grande was to done
 From Troilus, and eke his grete emprise,
 And cast, and knev in gode plite was the mone
 To done vñage, and toke his way full sone Unto his nee's paleis, there beside;
 Now Janus, God of entrē, thou him gide!

Whan he was come unto his nee's place,
 Where is my lady, to her folke (qð he)
 And thei him tolde, and he forthe in gan pace,
 And founde two othir ladies sit and she Within a pavid parlour; and thei thre
 Herdin a maidin hem redin the geste
 Of the siege of Thebis, whilis hem leste.

 Madame, qð Pandare, God you save and se,
 Withal your boke, and al the companie.
 Eighe, uncle mine, welcome iwis (qð she)
 And up she rose, and by the honde in hie,
 She toke him fast, and layid, this night thrye,
 (To gode mote it turne) of you I mette,
 And with that word she down on benche him set.

al
 Ye nece, ye shullin farin wel the bet,
 If God wol, al this yere (qð Pandarus)
 But I am fory that I have you let
 To herkin of your boke ye praisin thus;
 For Godd's love what saith it? tel it us,
 Is it of love? some gode ye may me lere.
 Uncle (qð she) your maistresse is nat here.

With that thei gonnin laugh, and tho she seide,
 This romaunce is of Thebis, that we rede,
 And we have herd how that king Laius deide,
 Through Oedipus his sonne, and all the dede;
 And here we stintin at these letters rede,
 How the bishop, as the boke can ytell,

Amphiorax fill through the grounde to hell.

(Qð Pandarus) all this know I my selve,
 And alth' assiege of Thebis, and the care;
 For herof ben there makid bokis twelve:
 But let be this, and tell me how ye fare;
 Do' way your barbe, and shew your face bare;
 Do' way your boke, rise up and let us daunce,
 And let us done to May some observaunce.

Eighe, God forbid (qð she) what be ye mad?
 Is that a Widowe's life, so God you save?
 Parde you makin me right sore adrad,
 Ye bene so wilde, it semith as ye rave;
 It fat me wel bettir aie in a cave
 To bide, and rede on holy saintis lives;
 Let maidins gon to daunce, and yongē wives.

As evir thrive I (qð this Pandarus)
 Yet coude I tel a thing, to don you play:
 Now uncle dere (qð she) tellith it us
 For Godd's love, is than th' assiege aweie?
 I'am of Grekis ferde, so that I deie:
 Nay nay (qð he) as evir mote I thrive,
 It is a thing wel bettir than suche five.

Ye holy God (qð she) what thing is that?
 What? bettir than suche five? eighe, nay iwis,
 For al this world ne can I redin what It should yben; some jape I trowe it is;
 And but your selvin tel us what it is,
 My wit is for to arede it al to lene;
 As helpe me God, I n'ot what that ye mene.

And I your borow, ne ner shal (qð he)
 This thing be tolde to you, as mote I thrive:
 And why so? uncle mine, why so? (qð she)
 By God (qð he) that wol I tel as blive;
 For proudir woman is there none on live,
 And ye it wiste, in al the toun of Troie;
 I ne jape nat, so evir have I joie.

al. for man.
 Tho gan she to wondrin more than before
 A thousande folde, and donne her eyin cast;
 For never sithe the time that she was bore
 To knowiþ thing desirid she so fast;
 And with a like she said him at the last,
 Now uncle mine, I n'il you not displesse,
 Nor askin that, that may do you disese.

al. like you more. sh. m.
 So astir this, with many wordis glade
 And frendly talis, and with mery chere,
 Of this and that thei speke, and gonnin wade
 In many an unkouth, glad, and depe matere,
 As frendis done, whan thei ben met ifere,
 Til she gan askin him how Hector ferde,
 That was the toun's wall, and Grekis yerde.

Ful wel I thanke it God, saide Pandarus,
 Save in his arme he hath a litle wounde;
 And eke his freshe brothir Troilus,
 To the wise worthy Hector the secounde,
 In whom that every vertue liste habounde;
 As allē trouthe, and allē gentilnesse
 Wisedome, honour, fredome, and worthinesse.

In gode faith eme (qð she) that likith me
 Thei farin wel, God save hem bothē two;
 For trewliche I holde it a grete deintē,
 A king's sonne in armis wel to do,
 And be of gode condicions therto;
 For grete powir and moral vertue here
 Is feldē lene in one persone ifere,

In gode faith that is sothe (qð Pandarus)
 But by my trowth the king hath sonnis twey, 170
 (That is to mene, Hector and Troilus)
 That certainly (though that I should fdey)
 Thei ben as voide of viciis, dare I sey,
 As any men that livin undir sonnes, the Ther might is wide iknow, and what thei conne.

Of Hector nedith nothing for to tel,
 In all this worlde there n'is a bettir knight
 Than he, that is of worthinesse the wel,
 And he wel more of vertue hath than might;
 This knowith many a wise and worthy knight: 180
 And the same prife of Troilus I sey;
 God helpe me so, I know not suche twey.

Pardè (qð she) of Hector that is sothe,
 And of Troilus the same thing trowe I;
 For dredileffe, men tellith that he dothe - an
 In armis day by day so worthily,
 And bereth him here at home so gently
 To every wight, that al prife hath he the
 Of them that me were levisit praisid be.

Ye say right sothe, iwis (qð Pandarus) 190
 For yesterday who so had with him ben,
 Mightin have wondrid upon Troilus;
 For nevir yet so thicke a swarme of been Ne flewe, as Grekis from him gannun fleen;
 And through the felde in every wight's ere
 There was no crie, but Troilus is there.

Now here, now there, he huntid hem so fast,
 There n'as but Grekis blode, and Troilus, Nowe him he hurt, and him al down he cast, an Aye where he went it was arrayid thus; 200
 He was ther deth, and shelde and life for us,
 That as that day ther durst him none withstonde,
 While that he helde his bloody swerde in honde:

Therto he is the frendlyist man
 Of gret estate, that er I sawe my live:
 And where him list the best felowship can
 To suche as him thinkith able to thrive. for
 And with that word tho Pandarus as blive
 He toke his leve, and said I wol gon hence.
 Nay, blame have I myne uncle (qð she) then to

What cilith you to be thus wery sone,
 And namiliche of women, wol ye so?
 Naie sittith doune, parde I have to done
 With you, to speke of wisdomer ye go;
 And every wight that was about hem tho
 That herde that, gan ferre awaie to stonde,
 While thei two had al that hem list in honde.

Whan that her tale al brought was to an ende
 Of her estate, and of her governaunce,
 (Qð Pandarus) now time is that I wende; 220
 But yet I say, arisith, let us daunce,
 And caste your widowe's habite to mischaunce;
 What listeth you thus your selfe to disfigure,
 Sithe you is tidde so glad an avinture?

al!
 But wel bethought; for love of God (qð she)
 Shal I nat wetin what ye mene of this?
 No, this thing askith lesith (tho qð he)
 And eke it me would full muche greve iwis,
 If I tolde, and yet it toke amis; ye
 Yet were it bette my tonge to holdin stil, 230
 Than say a sothe, that were ayenst your wil.

For necè myne, by the goddesse Minerve,

And Jupiter, that makith the thonde'ring, al thonder ring
 And by the blisful Venus, that I serve,
 Ye ben the woman in this world living,
 Withoutin paramours, to my weting;
 That I best love, and lothist am to greve;
 And that ye wetin wel your selfe I leve.

Iwis mine uncle (qð she) graunt mercy,
 Your frendship have I foundin evir yet; 240
 I am to no man beholdin trewly
 So muche as you, and have so l'il quit;
 And with the grace of God, emforth my wit,
 As in my gilte, I shal you ner offende;
 And if I have er this, I wol amende.

But for the love of God, I you beseeche,
 As ye be he, that I love most and triste,
 Let be to me your frendly manir speche,
 And saie to me your nece, what so you list.
 And with that worde her uncle anon her kist, 250
 And sayid, gladly my leve nece so dere,
 Take it for gode, that I shal say you here.

With that she gan her eyin doune to caste;
 And Pandarus to coughe began alite,
 And sayid; Nece, alway (to!) to the laste,
 How so it be, that some men hem delite
 With subtil art ther talis for to endite; an Yet for al that in ther entencion
 Ther tale is all for some conclusion.

And sithe the end is every tal's strength, 260
 And this matir is so behovily,
 What should I paint or drawin it on length
 To you that ben my frende so faithfully?
 And with that worde he gan right inwardly
 Beholdin her, and lokin in her face,
 And saide, on suche a mirrour muche gode grace:

Than thought he thus, if I my tale endite Ought harde, or make a procelle any while,
 She shal no favour have therin but lite,
 And trowe I would her in my wil begile;
 For tendir wittis wenin al be wile
 Wher as thei con nat plainliche undirstond;
 Forthy her wit to sounin wol I fonde; al wittes

And lokid on her in a besy wise,
 And she was ware that he behelde her so,
 Ah lorde! (qð she) so faste ye me avise,
 Sawe ye me ner er now? what say ye, no?
 Yes, yes (qð he) and bet wol er I go;
 But by my trowth I thoughtin nowe, if ye
 Be fortunate, for now men shal it se:

For every wight some godely avinture al gode al
 Somtime is shap, if he it can receive;
 But if that he n'il take of it no cure,
 When that it cometh, but wilfully it weive,
 Lo! neither case, nor fortune him deceive,
 But right his owne slouth and wretchednesse;
 And suche a wight is for to blame I gesse.

Gode avinture, O belle nece have ye
 Ful lightly foundin, and ye conne it take; 290
 And for the love of God, and eke of me,
 Catche it anone, lest avinture flake;
 What should I lengir procelle of it make?
 Yeve me your hond, for in this world is none,
 If that you list, a wight so wel begon.

And sithe I speke of gode entencion,
 As I to you have tolde wel here beforne,
 And love as wel your honour and renoun

As

As any crēture in the worlde iborne,
By al the othis that I have you sworne,
And ye be wrothe therfore, or wene I lie, 300
Ne shal I never sene you este with eie,

Beth nat agaste, ne quakith nat, wherto?
Ne chaungith nat for ferē so your hewe,
For hardily the worst of this is do;
And though my tale as now be to you newe,
Yet trust alwaie ye shal me findin trewe;
And were it thing that me thought unfitting,
To you ne would I no such talis bring.

Nowe, my gode eme, for Godd'is love I pray,
(Qd she) come of and tel me what it is; 310
For bothe I am agast what ye wol say,
And eke me longith it to wit iwis;
For whethir it be wel, or be amis,
Say on, let me not in this fere ydwele;
So wol I dohe, now herkenith, I shal tel.

Now, neccē mine, the king'is owne dere sonne,
The gode, the wise, the worthy, fresh and fre,
Whiche alway for to done wel is his wonne,
The noble Troilus so lovith The,
That but ye helpe, it wol his bane ybe: 320
Lo! here is al, what shoulde I more sey?
Doth what you list, to make him live or dey.

But if ye let him dye, I wol stervin,
Have here my trouthe, nece, I n'il not lict, you
Al should I with this knife my throte kervin;
With that the teris burst out of his eyen,
And saide, if that ye done us both to dien
Thus giltlesse, than have ye fishid faire, pe
What mendeth it you, though that we both apaire?

Alas! he whiche that is my lorde so dere, 330
That trewe man, that noble, gentle knight,
That naught desirith, but your frendly chere, al. lovely
I se him dyin, there he goth upright,
And hastith him, with al his fullē might
For to ben slaine, if his fortune assente,
Alas that God you suche a beauté sente!

If it be so that ye so cruil be,
That of his derh you listith nought to retch,
That is so trewe and worthy, as we se,
No more than of a japor or a wretch, 340
If ye be suche, your beauté may nat stretch
To make amendes of so cruill a dede;
Avis. ment is gode before the nede.

Wo worthe the faire Gemme that is vertulesse,
Wo worthe that herbe also that doth no bote;
Wo worth the beautye that is routhlesse;
Wo worth that wight that trede eche undir fote;
And ye that ben of beauté croppe and rote,
If therwithal in you ne be no route,
Than is it harme ye livin by my trouthe. 350

And also thinke wel, that this is no gaude;
For me were levir, thou, and I, and he Were hongid, than that I should ben his baude,
As high as men might on us al ife;
I am thine Eme, the shame were unto me
As wel as The, if that I should assent
Through mine abet that he thine honour shent.

Now undirsonde, for I you nought require
To binde you to him thorough no behest,
Save one that ye makin him bettir chere 360
Than ye han don er this, and more feste,
So that his life be favid at the leste.

This al and some is plainly our entente;
God helpe me so, I nevir othir mente.

Lo! this request is nought but skil iwis,
Ne doute of reson(pardē) is there none;
I set the worst that ye dredin this'is,
Men would wondir to sene him come and gone;
Ther aynist answere I thus anone,
That every wight, but he be sole of kinde, 370
Wol deme it love of frendship in his minde.

What? who wol demin, though he se a man
To temple gon, that he th' imagis eteth, the. the image
Thinke eke, howe wel and wisely that he can Governe himselfe, that he nothing foryeteh; t
That wher he cometh, he priſe and thonk him geteth;
And eke therto he shal come here so selde,
What force were it, though all the toun behelde?

Suche love of frendes reignith in al this toun;
And wrie you in that mantil evirmo; 380
And God so wis be my salvacioun,
As I have saide, your best is to do' so;
But gode nece, alway for to stint his wo,
So let your daungir, sugrid ben alite,
That of his deth ye be not al to wite.

Creseide, which that herde him in this wise,
Thought, I shal fele what he menith iwis; and men
Now Eme (qd she) what wouldin ye devise?
What is your rede, that I should done of this?
That is wel said, qd he, certaine best is 390
That ye him love aien for his loving,
As love for love is skilful guerdoning.

Thinke eke how elde wastith every hour
In eche of you a part of (your) beauté; partie!
And therfore, er that age doth The devour, you Go love, for olde there woll no wight love The;
Let this proverbe a lore unto you be,
To lute iware, qd beauté, whan it passe,
And elde sdaunith daungir at the laste.

The king'is sole is wont to crie aloud, 400
Whan that he thinketh a woman bereth her hie, him
So longē mote ye livin, and all proude,
Til Crow'is fete growin undir your eie, ben. wax.
And sende you than a mirrour in to prie, al. God.
In which that ye may se your face a morrowe;
Nece, I bid him within you no more sorowe.

With this he stinte, and cast adoune the hed;
And she began to brest and wepe anone,
And saide, alas! for wo, why n'ere I ded?
For of this world, the faith is al agone; 410
Alas! what shuldin strange unto me done,
When he, that for my beste frende I wende,
Redith me love, who shulde it me defende?

Alas! I would have trustid doutiles,
That if that I, through my disavinture,
Had lovid eithir him, or Achilles, other
Hector, or any (othir) manir crēture, in al. manir
Ye n'old have had no mercy ne mesure
On me, but alwaie had me in repreve;
This false worde (alas!) who may it leve? 420

What? is this al the joy, and al the fest?
Is this your rede? is this my blisful caas?
Is this the very mede of your behest?
Is this al paintid processe said (alas!)
Right for this fine? O lady mine Pallas,
Thou in this dredeful case for me purvey;
For so astonied am I, that I dey.

With that she gan ful so'rowfully to fike,
 Ah! may it be no bet? (qð Pandarus)
 By God I shall no more come here this weke, i/ 430
 And God to some that am mistrustid thus; sw-
 I se wel now, ye settin' lite of us, that
 Or of our deth (alas!) I woful wretche, -
 Might he yet live, of me were nought to retche.

O cruil God of Deth, dispitous Marte,
 O furies thre of hel, on you I crie,
 So let me nér out of this house departe, al. parte.
 Yf that I ment or harme or vilanie;
 But sithe I se my Lorde mote nedis die,
 And I with him, here I me thrive and sey, 440
 That wickidly ye done us bothe to dey.

But sithe it likith you, that I be ded;
 By Neptunus, that God is of the se,
 Fro this forthe shal I nevér etin bred;
 Til that I mine own hert'is blode maie se; hert-ll.
 For certaine I wol die, as sone as he;
 And up he sterte, and on his way he raught,
 Til she againe him by the lappe ycaught.

Creseide, with which that wel nigh starfe for fere,
 So as she was aye the most ferefull wight 450
 That mightin be, and herde eke with her ere,
 And sawe the so'rowful ernest of the knight,
 And in his prayir sawe eke non unright,
 And for the harme eke that might fallin more
 She gan to rewe, and dredde her wondir sore,
al. dread.

And thus she thought, unhappis fallin thicke
 Al day for Love, and in suche manir caas
 As men ben cruill in hem selfe and wicke;
 And if this man sle here himselfe, (alas!)
 In my presence, it n'il be no solas; 460
 What men would of it deme, I can nat say;
 It nedith me full slightly for to play. slightly

And with a sorowful sighe she saide thrie, al. on high.
 Ah lorde! me is betidde a sory chaunce,
 For mine estate lieth in a jeopardie;
 And eke mine Em'is life lieth in balaunce;
 But nathelless, with Godd'is govinaunce gode.
 I shal so done, mine honour shal I kepe, se to
 And eke his life; and stintid for to wepe.

Of harmis two the lesse is for to chese, 470
 Yet had I levir makin him gode chere al. to make.
 In honour, than mine Em'is life to lese;
 Ye saine, ye nothing ellis me requere.
 No wis (qð he) mine ownè nece so dere:
 Now wel (qð she) and I wol don my paine,
 I shal mine herte ayen my lust constraine. al. will.

But that I n'il nat holdin him in honde,
 Ne love a man that can I naught ne may Ayenst my wil, but ellis wol I fonde,
 (Mine honour save) plese him fro day to day; 480
 Therto n'olde I nor onis have saide nay,
 But that I dredde, as in my fantasie;
 But ceffe cause, (and) ai ceffith maladie. Jr al.

But here I make a protestacion,
 That in this processe, if ye depir go,
 That certainly, for no salvacion
 Of you, though that ye stervin bothè two, Though al the worlde on o day be my fo, in Ne shal I nér on him have othir routhe.
 I graunt it wel (qð Pandare) by my trouthe. 490

But maie I trustin well to you (qð he)

That of this thing that ye han hight me here
 Ye woll it holdin truely unto me?
 Ye, dourilefs, qð she, myne uncle dere;
 Ne that I shall have cause in this matere Yet (Qð he) to plain, or astir you to preche?
 Why no (parde) what nedith more speche?

Tho fellin thei in othir talis glade,
 Till at the last, o gode Eme (qð she tho)
 For love of God whiche that us bothe ymade, 500
 Telle me how first ye willin of his wo,
 Wot non of it but ye? he sayid no:
 Can he well speke of love (qð she) I preie?
 Tell me, for I the bet shall me purveie.

Tho Pandarus a litil gan to smile,
 And sayid: By my trouth I shall now tell: you
 This othir daie, nat gon full longè while,
 Within the paleis gardin by a well
 Gan he and I well halfe a daie to dwell,
 Right for to spekin of an ordinaunce, 510
 How we the Grekis mightin disavaunce:

Sone after that begone we for to lepe,
 And castin with our dartis to and fro,
 Till at the last, he sayid, he would sepe,
 And on the grasse adoune he laied him the
 And I astir gan romin to and fro,
 Till that I herd, as I wold, al. as that further al.
 How he began full wofully to grieve

Tho gan I stalke him full softly behindè,
 And sikirly the sothè for to saine, al. gan.
 As I gan clepe ayen now to my minde, al. gan.
 Right thus to love he gan him for to plain; L
 He sayid; lorde, have routh upon my pain,
 All have I ben rebell in mine entent,
 Now (Mea culpa) Lorde, I me repent.

O God, that at thy disposicion
 Ledist forth the fine, by just purveiaunce,
 Of every wight, my lowe confession
 Accept in gre, and sende me soche penaunce
 As likith The; put from me disperaunce, 530 al. but from death. al. app.
 That maie my ghost departe alwaie fro The, away
 Thou be my shilde, for thy benigneitè.

For certis, Lorde, so sore hath she me wounded,
 That stode in blacke, with loking of her eyen,
 That to mine hert'is borome it is founded, in / al. grounded.
 Through which I wot, that I must nedis djen; ay.
 This is the worst, I dare me nought bewrien; ay.
 And well the hotir ben the gledes rede,
 That men hem wrien with ashim pale and dedè.

With that he smote his heylde adoune anone, 540
 And gan to muttre, I nat wh. t truely, not, true
 And I with that gan still awaie to gone,
 And lete thereof, as nothing wist had I,
 And come again anon, and stode him by,
 And saied, awake, ye slepin all to long,
 It semith me nought that love doth you wrong, al. to long

That slepin so, that no man maie you wake;
 Who seie evir er this so dull a man? or Ye frende (qð he) doe ye your hedd'is ake
 For love, and let me livin as I can; 550
 But though that he for wo was pale and wan,
 Yet made he tho as freshe a countenance,
 As though he should have led the newe daunce.

This passid forth till now this othir daie
 It fell that I come roming all alone roming
 Into his chambre, and founde how that he laie
 C c c c Upon

but.
Upon his bedde: but man so fore grone
Ne herd I nevir, and what was his mone
Ne wist I nought; for as I was comming
All sodainly he left his complaining.

id. As never yet of thing had I no more.
Of whiche I toke somewhat suspicion,
And nere I come, and founde him wepe fore;
And God so wylf be my salvacion
As I had nevir routhe of nothing more;
For neithir with engine, ne with no lore
Unnethis might I fro the deth him kepe,
That yet fele I mine herte for him wepe.

now
And God wot nevir sith that I was borne
Was I so busie no man for to preche,
Ne nevir was to wight so depe yfworne,
Er he me told who might yben his leche;
But not to you reherfin al his speche,
Or all his wofull wordis for to fowne,
Ne bid me nought, but ye woll se me swone,

But for to save his life, and ellis nought,
And to non harm of you, thus am I driven,
And for the love of God that us hath wrought
Soche chere him doth, that he and I maie liven:
Now have I plat to you mine herte yshriven;
And sith ye wote that mine entent is clene, 580
Take hede thereof, for none evill I mene.

at. 78.
And right gode thrift I pray to God have ye,
That han soche one icaught withoutin ner,
And be ye wise, as ye be faire to se,
Well in the ring than is the Rubie set;
There werin nevir two so well imet,
Whan ye ben his all whole, as he is your;
The mighty God us graunt to se that hour!

Naie thereof spake I nat: A ha (qð she)
As helpe me God, ye shendin every dele. 590
A mercie derè nece, anon (qð he)
What so I spake, I ment it nought but wele,
By Mars the God, that helmid is of stele, with Now beth not wroth, my blode, my nece dere.
Now well (qð she) foryevin be it here.

at. 110.
With this he toke his leve, and home he went,
Ye Lorde how he was glad, and well bigon!
Creseide arose, no lengir she ney silent, walde!
But streight into her closet went anon, chamber.
And set her doune, as still as any stone, 600
And every worde gan up and doune to winde,
That he had saied, as it came her to minde.

s.
And woxe somedeles astonied in her thought,
Right for the newè case, but whan that she Was full avisid, tho found she right nought
Of perill, why that she oughte aferde be; 610
For man mai love of possibilitè
A woman so, that his herte maie to brest,
And she nat love ayen, but if her lest.

the.
But as she sat alone, and thoughtè thus, 610
In field arose a skirmish all without;
And men cried in the strete, se Troilus
Hath right now put to flight the Grekis rout,
With that gonne all her meine for to shout, the.
Al go we se, cast up the gatis wide,
For through this strete he mote to paleis ride,

id. 11.
For othir waie is fro the yatis none
Of Dardanus, there opin is the cheine,
With that come he, and all his folke anon
An esie pace riding, in routis tweine, 620
Right as his happie daie was (sothe to seine).

sayn. More nought
For whiche men faith maie not distourbid be
That shall betidin of necessite.

560 This Troilus sat on his baie stede
All armid, save his hedde, full richly;
And woundid was his horse, and gan to blede,
On whiche he rode a pace full softly;
But soche a knightly fight (lo!) truily
As was on him, was nat withoutin faile
To loke on Mars, that God is of battaile. 630

So like a man of armis, and a knight
He was to sene, fulfilled of high prowesse,
For bothe he had a bodie, and a might
To doen that thing, as well as hardinesse, id.
And eke to sene him in his gerè dresse, a here
So freshe, so yong, so weldy semid he, at. worthy
It was an hevyn on him for to se. a up-

His helme to hewin was in twentic places,
That by a tisseu hongy his backe behind, at. tassel.
His shelde to dashed with swerdis and with maces, 640 id.
In whiche men might many an arowe finde,
That thirid had both horne, and nerfe, and rinde;
And aie the peple cried, here cometh our joie,
And, next his brothir, holdir up of Troie.

For which he wext a little redde for shame,
When he so herd the peple on him crien,
That to beholde it was a noble game
How sobirliche he cast adoun his eyen:
Creseide anone gan all his chere espien,
And let it in her herte so softly sinke, 650
That to her self she sayed; ho! give me drinke.

at. who giveth me dr.
For of her ownè thought she woxe al redde, Remembring her right thus, (lo!) this is he,
Whiche that mine uncle swereth he mote be dedde
But I on him have mercie and pitè;
And with that thought for pure shame she Gan in her hedde to pull, and that as fast,
While he and all the peple forth by past:

And gan to cast, and rollin up and down
Within her thought his excellent prowesse, 660
And his estate, and also his renoun,
His witte, his shape, and eke his gentillesse;
But moste her favour was, for his distresse
Was all for her, and thought it were a routh
To slap soche one, if that he mentè trowth. at.

Now might some envious wight janglin thus, - 96.
This was a sodain love, how might it be
That she so lightly lovid Troilus?
Right at the first sight of him? yea pardè;
Now who so saied so, mote he nevir the; 670
For every thing a ginning hath it nede
Er all be wrought, withoutin any drede. at. it

For I saie nat that she so sodainly
Yafe him her love, but that she gan encline
To like him tho, and I have told you why; first
And afir that, his manhode and his pine
Made love within her herte for to mine;
For whiche by procelle and by gode service
He wanne her love, and in no sodain wise. at. not in.

And also blisful Venus wele arayed 680
Satte in her setinth house of hevyn tho
Disposid wele, and with aspectis payed,
To helpin sely Troilus of his wo;
And sothe to sayne, she n'as nat all a foe
To Troilus, in hys natyvyte;
God wote, that wele the sonir sped in he.

Now

Now let us stinte of Troilus a throwe,
That ridith forth, and let us tournè fast
Unto Creseide, that heng her hedde full lowe, i
There as she satte alone, and gan to cast 690
Wheron she would apoint her at the last,
If it so were, her Eme ne would cessle not
For Troilus upon her for to presse. 51

And lorde! so she gan in her thought argue herte
In this matter, of whiche I have you told,
And what to doyn best were, and what eschue, t
That plitid she ful oft in many fold; 12
Now was her herte warme, now was it cold;
And what she thought of, somewhat shal I write,
As mine aucthour listith to me t'endite. 700

She thought wele first, that Troilus person
She knewe by sight, and eke his gentilnesse,
And thus she said, all were it nought to doyn
To graunt him love, yet for his worthinesse
It wer honor with plaie, and with gladnesse,
In honeste with suche a Lorde to dele,
For mine estate, and also for his hele.

Eke well wore I, my king's sonne is he;
And sith he hath to se me soche delite,
If I would uttirliche his sight ysle, 710
Par'aventure he might have me in dispite;
Thorough whiche I might stondin in worse plite;
Now were I not wise, me hate to purchase
Withoutin nede, there I maie stand in grace.

In every thing, I wot, there lieth mesure;
For though a man forbiddith dronkinesse,
He nought forbiddith that every creature
Be drinkilesse for alwaie, as I gesse:
Eke sith I wot for me is his distresse,
I ne ought not for that thing him dispise, 720
Sith it is so, he menith in gode wise. it

And eke I knowe of longè time agone
His thewis gode, and that he is not nice,
No vantour (saine men) certain he is none,
To wise is he so doen so grete a vice;
Ne als I nill him nevir so cherice
That he shall make avaunt by justè cause;
He shall me nevir binde in soche a clause.

Now set a case; the hardist is iwis
Men mightist demin that he lovith me, 730
What dishonour were it unto me this?
Maie I him let of that? why naie, pardè;
I knowe al'o, and alwaie here and se, d
Men lovyn women al this toun about,
Be thei the wers? Why naie, withoutin doubte.

I thinke eke how he worthy is to have
Of all this noble toun the thriftyist
That woman is, if she her honour lave,
For out and out he is the worthyist, 740
Save only Hector, whiche that is the best;
And yet his life lieth all now in my cure;
But soche is love, and eke mine avinture.

Ne me to love a wondir is it nought,
For well wore I my self, so God me spede,
All woll I that no man wist of this thought,
I am one of the fairist out of drede
And godelyist, who so that rakith hede,
And so men saine, in all the toun of Troie,
What wondir is though he of me have joie?

I am mine ownè woman well at ese 750

I thanke it God, as affir mine estate,
Right yong, and stond untied in lustie lese,
Withoutin jelousie, and soche debate;
Shall no husbonde saine unto me checke mate;
For githir thei ben full of jelousie, alder
Or maistifull, or lovin noveltrie. re-

What shall I doyn? to what fine live I thus?
Shall I not love, in case if that me left?
What? pardieux I am not religious; not a rebel
And though that I mine herte set at rest 760
Upon this knight, this is the worthiest, that
And kepe alwaie mine honor, and my name,
By all right it maie doe to me no shame.

But right as when the sunne shinith bright
In March, that chaungith oftintime his face,
And that a cloud is put with winde to flight,
Whiche oversprat the Sunne, as for a space; d
A cloudy thought gan through her soule pace, al. herte
That overspradde her brightè thoughtis all,
So that for fere almoste she gan to fall. 770

That thought was this; alas! sith I am fre,
Should I now love, and put in jeopardie
My sikirnesse, and thrallin libertè?
Alas! how durst I thinkin that solie?
Maie I not well in othir folke aspie
Ther dredful joie, ther consireint, and ther paine,
Ther lovith non, that ne hath why to plame.

For love is yet the mostè stormie life
Right of himself, that evir was begonne;
For ever some mistrust, or some nice lise 780
There is in love, some cloud ovr the Sunne;
Thereto we wretchid women nothing come,
Whan us is wo, but wepe, and fir, and thinke,
Our wrefche is this, our ownè wo to drinke. wrefche or wrefche

Also these wickid tonguis ben so prest
To speke us harme; eke men ben so untrne,
That right anon as cessid is ther lest, s/
So cessith love, and forth to love anewe; s
But harme idoe is doen, who so it me;
For though these men for love hem first torende, al. self
Full sharpe beginninge brekith oft at ende.

How oft in time hath it yknowin ben,
The treson, that to women hath be doe!
To what fine is soche love, I can not senç,
Or where becomith it, whan it is go;
There is no wight that wote, I trowe so, al. I know that wote some.
Wher it becometh (lo) no wight on it sporneth;
That erst was nothing, into nothing turneth.

How busie (if I love) eke must I be
To pluckin hym that jangle of love, and deme, 800 hew
And coyn hem, that thei saie no harm of me! al. by
For though there be no cause, yet hem may seme
Al befor harme, thit folke ther frenais queme;
And who maie stoppin every wickid tonge,
Or sounne of bellis, while that thei ben rong? y

And after that her thought gan forto clere,
And said, be whiche that nothing undertaketh,
Nothing achesith, be him loth or dere;
And with an othir thought her hert yquaketh,
Than slepith hope, and d' affir drede awaketh, 810

And shadowed wel with bloumy bowis grene,
And benchid newe, and sonndid all the weyes,
In which she walkith arme in arme betwene;
Till at the last Antigone the shene
Gan on a Trojan song to singin clere, lay
That it an hevin was her voice to here.

She said; O love, to whom I have, and shal
Ben humble subject, true in mine entent,
As I best can; to you, Lordg, yeve I all
For evinmore mine hert's love to rent; last 830
For nevir yet thy grace to no wight sent
So blisfull cause as me, my life to lede
In alle joie and suretie, out of drede.

Whom should I thankin but you, God of love
Of all this blisse, in whiche to bathe I ginne?
And thankid be ye, Lorde, for that I love, 850
This is the righte life that I am inne,
To flemin all manir of vice and sinne,
This doeth me so to vertue for to entende,
That daie by daie I in my will amende.

What is the Sunne worse of his kinde right,
Though that a man, for feblese of his eyen,
Maie not endure on it to se for bright?
Or love the worse, that wretchis on it crien?
No wele is worth, that maie no sorowe drien;
And iorthy, who that hath an bedde of verre,
Pro cast of stonis ware him in the verre.

But I with al mine herte, and al my might,
As I have saied, woll love unto my last 870
My owne dere herte, and all mine owne knight,
In whiche mine herte ygrowin is so fast,
And his in me, that it shal evir last:
All did I dred at first to love begin,
Now wore I well there is no pain therein.

And of her song right with that worde she stent,
And therewithall, now nece (qð Creseide)
Who made this song now with so gode entent?
Antigone answerde anon, and saide,
Madame, iwis it was the godelyist maide 880

Of grete estate in all the toun of Troie,
Who led her life in moste honour and joie.

Forsothe so it ysemith by her song,
Quoð tho Creseide, and gan therwith to fike,
Ana sayid; Lordg! is there soche blisse emong
These lovirs, as thei can so faire endite?
Ye wisse, qð freshe Antigone the white;
For all the folke that have or ben on live
Ne couldin well the blisse of love discrive. not

But wenin ye that evry wretche wote 890
The parfite blisse of love? why naie iwis;
Thei wenin all be love, if one be hote;
Do' waie do' waie, thei wote nothing of this;
Men mot askin of saintis, if it is Ought faire in heven; and why? for thei can tell;
And askin fendes, if it be foule in hell. of

Creseide unto the purpose naught answerde,
But saied, iwis it woll be night as faste,
But every worde, whiche that she of her herde,
She gan to printin in her herte faste; 900
And aie gan love her lassie for to agaste
Than it did erst, and sinkin in her herte,
That she wax somewhat able to convert.

The day's honour, and the heven's eye
The night's foe, (all this clepe I the Sonne)
Gan westrin fast, and downward for to wrie,
As he that had his day's course ironne,
And white thingis woxin all dimme and donne, gan to
For lacke of light, and sterris (for) to apere, 87
That she and all her folke in went ifere. 910

So whan it likid her to gon to reste,
And voidid werin thei that voidin ought,
She sayid, that to slepin well her leste,
Her women sone unto her bedde her brought;
Whan al was hush't, than laie she stil and thought,
Of all this thing the manir and the wise
Reherce it nedith not, for ye ben wise. al. vthing twice.

And out her herte he rent, and that anon,
And did his herte into her brest to gon;
Of which she nought agrose, ne nothing smert,
And forthe he flyith, with herte left for hert. flygh, fley

Now let her slepe, and we our talis holde
Of Troilus, that is to Paleis ridden, 930
Fro the scarmishe of the whiche I have tolde,
And in his chambir sate, and hath abidden, e
Til two or thre of his messaygers yeden,
For Pandarus, and soughtin him full fast,
Til thei him found, and brought him at the last.

This Pandarus came leping in at ones,
And sayid thus, who hath ben well ibete 940
To daie with swerdis, and with stongè stones' al. stonges & st.
But Troilus, that hath caught him an here;
And gan to jape, and saied, Lorde, how ye swete!
But rise and let us soupe, and go to reste;
And he answerde him, doc we as The leste.

With

. 874 Al. dred I first to love him to begin.

With all the hast godely as thei might Thei sped 'hem fro the foupir, and to bedde,
And every wight out at the dore him dight,
And wher' him list upon his waie he sped; him
But Troilus thought that his herte bledde 950
For wo, til that he herde some tiding,
And sayid frende, shall I now wepe or sing?

(Q^x Pandarus) be still and let me slepe,
And doe' on thy hode, thine nedis spedde ybe,
And chese if thou wolt sing, or daunce, or lepe,
At short wordis thou shalt trowe all by me; it. h. l. p. m. e.
For fir, my nece woll doin well by The,
And love The best, by God and by my trothe;
But lacke of pursute marre it in thy slothe.

For thus ferforth I have thy werke begon 960
Fro daie to daie, till this daie by the morowe;
Her love of frendship have I to The won,
And therto hath she laid her faith to borow;
Algate o fote is hameled of thy sorowe; l. p. d. a. l.
What should I lengir sermon of it holde; her. l. d.
As ye have herd before, all he him tolde.

But right as flouris through the cold of night Iclosid stoupin in ther stalkis lowe, on Redressin 'hem ayen the Sunne bright
And spredin in ther kinde course by rowe, 970
Right so gan tho his eyin up to throwe
This Troilus, and saied: O Venus dere,
Thy might, thy grace, iheried be it here.

And to Pandare he held up both his hondes,
And sayid, Lorde, all thine be that I have,
For I am whole, and brostin ben my bondes; al
A thousande Troyis, who so that me yave
Eche astir othir, God so wis me save,
Ne might not me so gladin, (lo!) mine herte,
It spredith so for joie it woll to sterre. out-- 980

But, lorde! how shall I doen? how shall I liven?
Whan shall I next my own dere herte yse?
How shall this longe time awaie be driven,
Till that thou be 'ayen'at 'her fro me?
Thou maiest answer, abide abide; but be
That hangith by the necke, the sothe to saine,
In grete difese abidith for the paine.

All esily now, for the love of Marte,
(Q^x Pandarus) for every thing hath time;
So long abide, till that the night departe; 990
For all so sikir as thou liest here by' me,
And God toforne, I woll be there at prime;
And for thy werke somewhat as I shall saie,
Or on some othir wight this charge laie.

For parde! God wot, I have evir yet
Ben redy The to serve, and to this night
Have I nor fainid, but emiorthe my wit Doen all thy lust, and shal with al my might;
Doe now as I shall saine, and fare aright;
And if thou n'ilt, wite all thy selfe the care; 1000
On me is nought, along thine evill fare.

I wote well that thou wisir art than I
A thousande folde; but if I were as thou,
God helpe me so, as I would uttirly right, u. d.
Right of mine owne honde write to her how A lettir, in whiche I would telle her how I fardre amisse, and her beseche of routh;
Now helpe thy self, and leve it for no slouth:

And I my self shall therwith to her gon,

*And spredin out her colouris kindly by rowe.
See the Glos. in course.*

And whan thou wolt that I am with her there, 1010 Worthe thou up on a courfir right anon, al. l. p. m. e.
Ye hardily, and that in thy best gere,
And ride forth by the place, as naught ne were;
And thou shalt finde us (if I maie) sitting
At some windowe, into the strete loking. on.

And if The list, than maiest thou us save,
And upon me make thou thy countenance,
But by thy life beware, and fast eschue
To tarien ought, (God shild us fro mischaunce)
Ride forth thy waie, and hold thy govirnaunce; 1020
And we shall speke of The somewhat I trow,
Whan thou art gon, to doe thine cris glow.

Touching thy lettir, thou are wise inough,
I wot thou n'ilt it deignliche endite, al. cl. l. p. m. e.
As make it with these argumentis tough, u. r.
Ne scriven-like, or craftily it write;
Beblotte it with thy teris eke alite;
And if thou write a godely worde all soft,
Though it be gode, reherce it not to oft.

For though that the best Harpour upon live 1030
Would on the beste founid jolly Harpe, - d. m. g.
That evir was, with all his fingirs five Touche aie o string, or aie o warble Harpe, h.
Were his nailis pointid nevir so sharpe,
It shulde makin every wight to dull,
To here his gle, and of his strokis full.

Ne jombre no discordaunt thing ifere;
As thus, to usin termis of Phitike;
In lov'is termis holde of thy matere
The forme alwaie, and doe that it be like; 1040
For if a paintir would ypainte a pike
With Als'is fete, and heddid as an Ape,
It cordith not; so were it but a jape. "

This counsaile likid well to Troilus,
But as a dredfull lovir, he saied this,
Alas! my derer brothir Pandarus,
I am ashamid for to write iwis,
Lest of mine ignorance I saied amis,
Or that she n'olde it for dispite receve;
Than wer I ded, there might it nothing weve. 1050

To that Pandare answerid, if The list
Doe that I saie, and let me therewith gon;
For by that Lorde that formid Est and West,
I hope of it to bring answer anon
Right of her hond; and if that thou n'ilt non,
Let be, and forie mote he ben his live,
Ayenst thy lust that helpith The to thrive.

(Q^x Troilus) depardieux I assent,
Sithe that The liste, I woll arise and write;
And blifull God praie I with gode entent 1060
The viage and lettir I shall endite, the.
So spede it; and thou Minerva the white,
Yeve thou me witte, my lettir to devise;
And set him down, and wrote right in this wise.

First he gan her his right Ladie to call,
His hert'is life, his lust, his sorowe's leche;
His blisse, and eche these othir termis all, k.
That in soche case ye'lovirs'alle seche; the. u.
And in full humble wise, as in his speche,
He gan him recommaunde unto her grace; 1070
To tell all how, it askith mokill space.

And astir this full lowly he her praied
To be nought wrothe, though he of his folie
So hardie was to her to write, and saied

That

That love it made, or ellis must he die,
And pitouly gan mercie for to crie;
And aftir that he said (and lied full loude)
Himself was little worthe, and lasse he coude.

And that she would have his conning excused,
That litil was, and eke he dradde her so, 1080
And his unworthinesse aie he accused;
And aftir that than gan he tel hi's wo;
But that was endelesse withoutin ho;
And said, he would in trouth alway him holde,
And redde it ovre, and gan the lettre folde:

And with his saltè teris gan he bathe
The ruby in his signet, and it sette
Upon the wexe delivirliche and rathe;
Therwith a thousande timis, er he lette, 1090
He kiste the lettre, whan he had it shette,
And saide, lettre, a blisful destinè
The shapin is, my lady shal The fe.

This Pandare toke the lettre, and betime
A morowe to his nec's paleis sterre,
And fast he swore, that it was passid prime,
And gan to jape, and saide iwis mine herte
So freshe it is (although it fore smerte)
I maie nat slepe nevir a May's morowe;
I have a joly wo, a lusty sorowe.

Creseide, whan that she her uncle herde, 1100
With dredeful herte, and desirous to here
The cause of his comming, right thus answerde;
Now by your faith mine uncle (qð she) dere,
What manir windis gidith you now here?
Tell us your joly wo, and your penaunce,
How ferforth be ye put in lov's daunce?

By God (qð he) I hop alwaie behinde,
And she to laugh as though her herte to breste;
(Qð Pandarus) loke alwaie that ye finde
Game in mine hode, but herkeneth if you lest; 1110
Ther's right now comè to the toun a gëst,
A Greke espie, and tellith newe thinges,
For whiche I come to tell you newe tidinges:

Into the gardin go we', and ye shal here
Al privily of this a long fermoun.
With that thei wentin arme in arme isere
Into the gardin fro the chambre down;
And whan that he so ferre was, that the soun
Of that which he spake no man herin might,
He said her thus, and out the lettir plight: 1120

Lo! he that is al wholly your's fre,
Him recommaundith lowly to your grace,
And sent to you this letter here by me,
Avilith you on it, whan ye han space,
And of some godely answere you purchace;
Or helpe me God so, plainly for to faine,
He maie not longè livin for his paine.

Ful dredefully tho gan she stondin stil,
And toke it not, but all her humble chere
Gan for to chaungin, and said scripè nor bil, 1130
For love of God, that touchith such matere,
Ne bring me none; and also, uncle dere,
To mine estate have more regarde I pray
Than to his lust; what shouldst I more say?

And lokith now if this be reso'nable,
And lettith not for favour ne for slouth
To faine a sothe, now is it covenable
To mine estate, by God and by my trouthe, 1140
To take it, or to havin of him routh

In harming of my selfe, or in repreve? 1140
Beate it ayen for him that ye on leve.

This Pandarus gan on her for to stare,
And sayid, now is this the gretist wonder,
That evir I sawe, let be this nice fare,
To dethè mote I smittin be with thonder,
Yf for the citè, whiche that stondith yonder,
Would I a lettir to you bring or take
To harme of you: what list you this it make? 1150

But thus ye farin well nigh all and some,
That he that most desirith you to serve, 1150
Of him ye retchin lest, where he become,
And whethir that he live, or ellis sterve;
But for al that, that er I maie deserve,
Refuse it not (qð he) and hente her fast,
And in her bosome doune the lettir thrust,

And said her, now cast it awaie anon,
That folke maie sene, and gaurin on us twey:
(Qð she) I can abide till thei be gon,
And gan to smile, and said him, Eme, I pray,
Suche answere as you list your selfe purvey, 1160
For truely I wol no lettir write.
No, than wol I (qð he) so ye endite.

Therwith she lough, and sayid go we dine,
And he gan at himselfe to japiñ faste, 1170
And sayid, Nece, I have so gret a pine
For love, that everiche othir daie I faste;
And gan his bestè japis forth to caste,
And made her so to laugh at his folie,
That she for laughtir wenid for to die.

And whan [that] she was comen into the hall, 1170
Now Eme (qð she) we wol go dine anon;
And gan some of her women to her call,
And streight into her chambre gan she gone;
But of her besineffis this was one,
Amongis othir thingis, out of drede,
Ful privily this lettir for to rede. 1180

Avifid word by word in every line,
And founde no lacke, she thought he coude his gode,
And put it up, and went her in to dine,
And Pandarus, that in a studie stode, 1180
Er he was ware, she toke him by the hode
And sayid, ye were caught er that ye wiste,
I vouchsafe (qð he) do whatere you liste.

Tho with in thei, and set hem doune and etc, 1190
And aftir none ful slyghly Pandarus
Can draw him to the windowe nig the strete, 1190
And sayid, Nece, who hath arayid thus
The yondir house, that stante aforyene us?
Which house? (qð she) and gan for to beholde, 1200
And kneve it wel, and whose it was him tolde;

And fellin forth in speche of thingis smale,
And sat in the windowe bothè twey;
Whan Pandarus sawe time unto his tale,
And sawe well that her folke wer al away,
Now, Nece mine, tel on (qð he) I prey,
How likith you the lettre that ye wor,
Can he theron? for by my trouth I n'or.

Therwith al rosy hewid tho woxe she,
And gan to hum, and sayid, so I trowe;
Aquite him wel for Godd's love (qð he) 1200
My selfe tomedis woll the lettre lowe,
And helde his hondis up, and fell on knowe,
Nowe godè Nece, be it nevir so lite,
Yeve me the labour it to sowe and plite.

Ye,

So feely can I write

* Ye, for I can so writin (qð she) tho,
And eke I n'ot what I should to him say.
Naie Nece, qð Pandarus, saie you not so;
Yet at the lest þthonkith him, I pray, you
Of his gode will, O, doth him not to dey, qð
Now for the love of me, my Nèce dere; 1210
Refusith not at this time my praieere.

* Depardieux (qð she) God leve al be wele,
God helpe me so, this is the first lettre
That er I wrote, ye al or any dele;
And into' a closet for to' avise her bettre
She went alone, and gan her herte unfetere
Out of disdain'is prison, but a lite,
And set her down, and gan a lettre write. her

Of whiche to tel in shorte is mine entent
Th' effeete, as ferre as I can undirstonde; 1220
She thonkid him of al that he wel ment
Towardis her, but holdin him in honde
She n'olde not, ne makin her selvin bonde
In love, but as his sustir him to plesse,
She would aie faine to done his hert an ese.

She shette it, and to Pandare in gan gon
There as he sat, and lokid into a strete, the
And doune she fet her by him on a stone
Of jaspere, upon a quishen of golde ibere,
And said, as wisely helpe me God the grete, 1230
I nevir did a thing with more paine
Than writē this, to [the] which ye me constraine,

And toke it him; He thonkid her, and feide,
God wot of thing ful oftin lothe begonne
Comith' ende' gode: and Nèce mine Creseide,
That ye to him of harde now ben iwonne
Ought he be glad, by God and yondir sonne;
For why, men faine Impressionis light
Full lightly ben aie redy to the flight.

But ye han plaid the tiraunt al to longe, al. ny. 1240
And harde was it your herte for to grave,
Now stinte, that ye no lengir on it honge,
Al woldin ye the forme of daungir save,
But hastith you to done him joye to have;
For trustith wel, to long idone hardnesse
Causith dispite ful oftin for distresse.

And right as thei declarid this matere
Lo! Troilus right at the stret'is ende
Came riding with his tenthē somme ifere See Somme
Al softily, and thiðirwarde gan bende in the 1245
There as they sate, as was his waie to wende
To paleis warde, and Pandare him aspide,
And said, nece ife who comith here ride,

Heith

O sic not in, he sethe us, I suppose,
Lest he may thinkin that ye him eschue. al. we.
Nay nay (qð she) and woxe as redde as rose;
With that he gan her humbly to salue
With dredful chere, and ofte his hewis muc;
And up his loke debonairly he cast,
And beekid on Pandare, and forth by past. 1260

God wot if he sat on his horse aright,
Or godely was befene that ilke day;
God wot where he were like a manly knight,
What should I dretche, or tel of his aray?
Creseide, which that al these thingis sey, a
To tell in shorte, her likid al ifere,
His person, his aray, his loke, his chere,

His godely manir, and his gentilnesse,

So well, that never sithe that she was borne
Ne haddin she fuche routh of his distresse; 1270
And howe so she hath hard ben here before,
To God hope. I, she hath now caught a thorne;
She shal nat pul it out this nexte wike,
God sende her mo such thornis on to pike!

Pandarus, whiche that stede her faste by,
Felte iron hotte, and he began to smite; the
And feide, nece, I praye you hertilie,
Tel me that I shal askin you alite;
A woman that were of his deth to wite
Withoute' his gilt, but for her lacke of routh,
Were it wel done? (qð she) naie, by my trowth.

God helpe me so (qð he) ye say me sothe,
Ye felin wel your selfe that I nought lie.
Lo, yonde he rideth (qð she) ye, so he dothe; ye
Wel, qð Pandare, as I have tolde you thre; al. type.
Let be your nicete, and your folie, al. to shame.
And speke with him, in cting of his herte, Let nicete nat do you bothe, finerte. to

But theron was to hevin and to done,
Considiring al thing it maie nat be, 1290
And why? for shame; and it were eke to sone
To grauntin him so gret a liberte; ye
For plainly, her entent, (as sayid she) al
Was for to love him unwilt, if she might,
And guerdon him with nothing but with fight.

But Pandarus thought, it shal nat be so;
If that I maie, this nice opinion
Shal nat ben holdin fully yeris two;
What should I make of this a longe sermon?
He must assent on that conclusion 1300
As for the time; and whan that it was eve,
And al was wel, he rose and toke his leve:

And on his way full fast homewarde he spedde, lye
And right for joy he felte his hert to daunce,
And Troilus he founde alone abedde,
That laie, as done these lovirs in a traunce,
Betwixin hope and derke desperaunce;
But Pandarus, right at his in comming,
He song, as who saith, lo! somewhat I bring;

And saide, who is in his bedde so sone 1310
Yburied thus? it am I frende (qð he)
Who Troilus? naie, helpe me so the mone, (Qð Pandarus) thou shalt up rise and se. al. arise.
A charme, that was ysent right now to The,
The whiche can helin The of thine axelle,
If thou do forthwith all thy belinelle. al. forthwith. & all.

Ye, through the might of God (qð Troilus)
And Pandarus gan him the lettir take,
And saide, pardel God hath yholpin us,
Have here a light, and loke on all these blake; 1320 al. in these letters bl.
But oftin gan the hert to glad and quake
Of Troilus, while he it gan to rede,
So as the wordis yave him hope or drede. qð

But finally he toke al for the beste
That she him wrote; for somewhat he behelde,
On which he thought he might his herte rest,
Al covired she the wordis undir shelde;
Thus to the more worthy part he him helde;
That what for hope, and Pandarus beheste,
His grete wo foryede he at the leste. 1330

But as we maie al daie our selvin fe Through more wode or cole kindlith the more fire; the Right so encrese of hope, of what it be, encrese to what so Therwith

Therewith ful oft encrefith eke desire;
Or as an oke cometh of a litil spire,
So through this lettir, which that she him sent,
Encrefin gan desire, of whiche he brent. with

Wherefore I say alway, that day and night
This Troilus gan to desirin more
Then he did erst through hope, and did his might 1340
To presin on, as by Pandarus' lore,
And writin to her of his sorowes fore
Fro day to day; he let it nought refreide,
That by Pandare he somwhat wrof or seide:

And did also his othir observaunces,
That till a lovir longith in this caas; - at
And aftir that his dice turnid on chaunces
So was he eithir glad, or saide, alas! un-
And held aftir his gestis aie his paas,
And aftir suche answeris, as he hadde, 1350
So werin his daies fory othir gladde.

But to Pandare alway was his recours,
And pitoussly gan aie to him to plaine, alwey is
And him besought of rede, and some socours;
And Pandarus, that sawe his wode paine, woody
Wext wel nigh ded for routh, sothe for to saine,
And besely with al his hert gan caste
Some of his wo to fleen, and that as faste:

And saide, Lordé, and frende, and brothir dere,
God wot that thy disese ydothe me wo; 1360
But wolt thou stintin al this woful chere,
And by my trouth, gr it be dayis two, or
And God toforne, yet shal I shape it so,
That thou shalt come into a certaine place,
There as thou maist thy selfe praie her of grace.

And certainly I n'ot if thou it woltse,
But thei that ben experte in love, it say,
It is one of these thingis fortherith most, that A man to have a leisir for to praie,
And liker place, his wo for to bewraie; 1370
For in gode hert it mote some routh impresse,
To here and se the gittlesse in distresse.

Par'aventure thinkist thou, though it be so,
That kinde would her ydone for to beginne
To have a manir routh upon my wo,
Saith daungir, nay, thou shalt me nevir win; un-
So rulith she her hert is goste within,
That though she bendis, yet she stonte on rote;
What in effect is this unto my bote? at thy

Thinke here ayen, whan that the sturdy oke, 1380
On whiche men hackith oftin for the nones,
Recevid hath the happy falling stroke,
The grete sweight makith it fall all at ones,
As done these grete rockis, or these milnestones;
For swiftir course cometh thing that is of wight,
Whan it discendith, than done thingis light.

But rede, that bowith doune for every blast,
Ful lightly cessith winde, it wol arise; up-
But so n'il nor an oke, whan it is cast;
It nedith me nought longe The for to rise; 1390
Men shal rejoyfin of a grete emprise,
Atchevid wel, and stont withoutin dout,
Al have men ben thelengir there about.

But Troilus, now tel me if The lest
A thing, whiche that I shal askin of The,
Whiche is thy brothir, that thou lovist best, at
As in thy very hert is privite?
Iwis my brothir Deiphobus (qð he)

Now (qð Pandare) ^{er} hour is twice twelve,
He shal The ese, unwist of it himselve. 1400

Now let me alone, and workin as I may, (Qð he) and to Deiphobus went he tho, is
Which had his lord, and grete frend ben aie,
Save Troilus no man he lovid so;
To tel in shorte withoutin wordis mo (Qð Pandarus) I pray you that ye be Frende to a cause, whiche that touchith me.

Yes, pardé (qð Deiphobus) wel thou wost
Al that evir I may, and God tofore,
Al n'ere it but for the man I love most 1410
My brothir Troilus; but say wherefore
It is, for sithe the day that I was bore In'as, ne nevir more to ben (I thinke) shall Aycnst a thing that mightin The forthinke.

Pandarus gan him thanke, and to him seide,
Lo! sir, I have a lady in this touné,
That is my Nee, and callid is Creseide,
To whiche some men would done oppressioun,
And wrongfully have her possessioun;
Wherefore I of your lordship you besече 1420
To ben our frende, withoutin more speche.

Deiphobus him answerde: O, is nat this,
That thou spekest of to me thus straungely,
Creseide my frende? Pandarus said him, yes.
Than nedith (qð Deiphobus) hardily
No more of this; for trustith wel that I
Wol be her Champion with spere and yerde; un-
I ne rought nat, though all her foes it herde.

But telle me thou that wost all this matere,
How might I best availin now, let se; 1430
(Qð Pandarus) if ye my lorde so dere
Woldist as now do this honour to me, un-
To prayin her to morowe, lo! that she Came unto you, her plaintis to devise,
Her adversaries would of it agrise. thereof

And if I more durst prayin you as now,
And chargin you to have so grete travaille;
To have some of your brethrin here with you, un-
That mightin to her cause bettir availe; at the
Than wote I wel she mightin nevir faile 1440
For to ben holpin, what at your instaunce,
What with her othir frendis govinaunce. susten-

Deiphobus, whiche that comist was of kinde
To al honour and bounté to consente,
Answerde, it shal be done: and I can finde,
Yet greater helpe to this in mine entente;
What woldest thou saine, if for Helen I sent,
To speke of this, I trowe it be the best;
For she may ledin Paris as her lest. at-

Of Hector, which that is my Lord my brother, 1450
It nedith nat to praie him frende to be;
For I have herde him, o time and eke other,
Spekin of Creseide suche honour, that he Maie saine no bet, such hap to him hath she,
It nedith nat his helpis more to crave;
He shal be suche, right as we wol him have.

Speke thou thy selfe also to Troilus
On my behalfe, and praie him with us dine.
Sir, al this shal be done (qð Pandarus)
And toke his leve, and nevir gan to fine, 1460
But to his Nee's house as streight as line
He came, and founde her fro the mere arise,
And set him down, and spake right in this wise:
He

He saide, O very God, so have I ronne
Lo! nece mine, se ye nat how I swete?
I n'ot whethir ye the more thanke me conne;
Be ye not ware how that false Poliphete
Is now about estsonis, for to plete, you
And bringin on you advocacies newe?
I? no (q^d she) and chaungid al her hewe?

What is he more about me for to dretche,
And done me wrong? what shal I don, alas!
Yet of him selfin nothing would I retche,
N'ere it for Antenor and Aeneas,
That ben his frendis in suche manir caas;
But for the love of God, mine uncle dere,
No force of that, let him have al ifere,

Withoutin that, I have inough for us.
Nay (q^d Pandare) it shal nothing be so;
For I have ben right now at Deiphobus, 1480
At Hector, and mine othir lordis mo,
And shortly makid eche of hem his so;
That by my thrifte he shal it nevir winne
For aught he can, whan so that he beginne.

And as thei castin what was best to done,
Deiphobus, of his owne curtisie,
Came her to praye, in his propir persone, all. surr.
To holde him on the morowe companie
At dinir, whiche she (ne) wolde not denie, q^d hym
But godely gan to his prayer obeye, til 1490
He thonkid her, and went upon his wey.

Whan this was don, this Pandarus anone,
(To tellin in shorte) forth he gan to wende &
To Troilus, as stil as any stone,
And al this thing he tolde him orde and ende,
And how that he Deiphobus gan to blende;
And saide him, now is time of that ye conne
To bere the belle to morow, and all is wonne.
al. The wyl.

Now speke, now pray, now pitously complaine,
Let nat for nicc shame, for drede or slouth; 1500
Somtime a man mote tel his owne paine,
Beleve it, and she wol have on The routh,
Thou shalt ben sauid by thy faith and trouth;
But wel wor I thou now art in a drede, &
And what it is, I lay I can arde: al. it rede.

Thou thinkist now, how should I don al this,
For by my cheris mostin folke espie,
That for her love is, that I fare amis,
Yet had I levre unwist for sorow die;
Nowe thinkenat so, for thou dost gretfolie; 1510
For I right now have foundin a manere
Of sleight, for to coverin al thy chere.

Thou shalt gon overnigh, and that as blive
Unto Deiphobus house, as The to plaie, Thy malady awaie the bette to drive;
For why? thou semist like, the sothe to saie;
Sone after that, doune in thy bedde The laie, al. m.
And saie thou maist no lengir up endure,
And lie right there, and bide thine avinture.

Say that the fevir is wont The to take, 1520
The same time, and lastin til a morowe;
And let se now how well thou canst it make,
For (pade)like is he that is in sorowe;
Go now, farwel, and Venus here to borowe,
I hope and thou this purpose holden ferme,
Thy grace she shal The fully there conferme.

(Q^d Troilus) iwis thou alle nedelesse

Counsaillist me, that sikelihe I me faine;
For I am like in earnest doutlesse,
So that wel nigh I stervin for the paine. 1530
(Q^d Pandarus) thou shalt the bettir plaine,
And hast the lesse nede for to counterfete,
For him men demin hate, that men se swete.

Lo! holde The at thy trist close, and I
Shal wel the decre unto thy bowe ydrive:
Therwith he toke his leve all softly,
And Troilus to his paleis went, blive; al.
So glad ne was he ner in al his live,
And to Pandarus rede gan al assent,
And to Deiphobus house at night he went. 1540

What nedith it to tellin al the chere,
That Deiphobus unto his brothir made,
Or his axis, or his sikelihe manere, al. m.
How men gon him with clothis for to lade a
When he was laid, and how men would him glade?
But all for nought, he helde forth aie the wise, al.
That ye han herde Pandare er this devise. al.

But certaine is, er Troilus him leide,
Deiphobus had praied him overnigh
To ben a frende, and helping to Creseide; al. m. 1550
God wot that he that grauntid anon right,
To ben her full frend with al his might;
But such a nede was it to praen him thenne,
As for to biddin a wode man to renne. al.

The morow came, and nighin gan the time
Of mealtide, whan that the faire quene Helen Shope her to ben an hour astir the prime
With Deiphobus, to whom she n'olden faine, al. m.
But as his sustir homely, sothe to faine, al. m.
She came to dinir, in her plaine entent; 1560
But God and Pandare wist al what this ment. al. m.

Came eke Creseide all innocent of this,
Antigone her nece, and Tarbe also;
But sic we now prolixite best is, al.
For love of God, and let us fast ygo
Right to the effete, withoutin talis mo,
Why al this folke assemblid in this place, al.
And let us of ther saluingis pace.

Gret honour did hem Deiphobus certaine,
And fedde hem wel, with al that might hem like;
But evirmo, alas! was his refraine,
My gode brothir Troilus, the like
Lithe yet, and therwithal he gan to fike;
And astir that he painid him to glade
Hem as he might, and chere gode he made.

Complainid eke Helen of his sikenesse
So faithfully, that pity was to here;
And every wight gan wexin for axes al.
A leche anon, and saide, in this manere
Men curin folke, this charme I wol The here; 1580 al.
But there fate one, al list her nat to teche,
That thought, yet best couldin I ben his leche.

Astir complaint him gonnin thei to preise,
As folke don yet whan some wight hath begon
To preise a man, and up with preise him reise
A thousande folde yet highir than the son;
He is, he can, that fewe othir Lordes kon;
And Pandarus of that thei would afferme
He nought forgate ther praing to conferme.

Herde al this thing feire Creseide wel inough, 1590
And every worde gan for to notifie,
For whiche with sobre chere her herte lough
E c c c For

For who is ^{he} that ^{not} he would her glorifie
To movin suche a knight done live or die?
But al passe I, lest ye to longe ydwell, I
But for o fine is al that er I tell.

The time came fro dinir for to rise,
And as 'hem ought arisin everichone, thei risyn
And gon a while of this and that devise;
But Pandarus brake al this speche anon, 1600
And said to Deiphobus, wol ye gon,
If it your will be, as I crist you prayde,
To spekin of the nedis of Creseide?

Helen, which that by the hondè her helde,
Toke first the tale, and saide, go we blive;
And godely on Creseide she behelde,
And sayid, Jovis let him nevir thrive,
That doth you harm, and reve him sone of live;
And yeve me sorowe, but he shal it rue
If that I may, and alle folk be true. 1610

Tel thou thy nec'is case (qð Deiphobus
To Pandarus) for thou canst best it tell.
My Lordis and my Ladies, it stant thus,
What should I lengir (qð he) do you dwell?
He ronge 'hem out a proces like a bell
Upon her foc, that hight was Polyphete,
So heinous, that men mightin on it spete.

Answerde of this eche worse of 'hem than other,
And Poliphete thei gonnin thus to warien,
An hongid be suche one, were he my brother, 1620
And so he shal, for it ne maie nought varien;
What should I lengir in this talè tarien?
Plainliche al at onis thei her highten be-
To ben her frende, in all that er thei mighten.

Spake than Helen, and said to Pandarus,
Wot aught my lord my brothir of this matere,
I mene Hector, or wote it Troilus?
He said her, ye, but wol ye me now here?
Me thinketh thus, with that Troilus is here, I
It were gode, if that ye wouldir assent 1630
She tolde him her selfe al this er she went.

For he wol have the more her grete at herte:
Bicause (to) she a worthie Lady is,
And by your wil, I wol but in right sterte,
And do you wete, and that anon iwis,
If that he slepe, or wol aught here of this;
And in he lept, and said him in his ere,
God have thy soule, for brought have I thy bere.

To smilin of this gan tho Troilus,
And Pandarus withoutin rekining 1640
Out went to Helen and Deiphobus,
And said 'hem, so there be no tarying,
Ne more prese, he wol well that ye bring Creseide my Lady, that is now here,
And as he maie endure, he wol her here.

But wel ye wote, the chambre is but lite,
And fewe folke may lightly make it warme;
Now lokith ye, for I wol have no wite
To bring in prese, that might ydon him harme,
Or him disefin, for my bettir arme, 1650
Wher' it be bet she abide, till estonis,
Now lokith ye, that knowin what to don is.

I say for me best is, as I can knowe,
That no wight in ne wendè, but ye twey, now
But it were I, for I can in a throwe
Reherse her case, unlike that she can sey,
And aftir this she may onis him prey

To ben gode Lorde in short, and take her leve,
This may not mokill of his ese him reve.

And eke for she is straunge, he woll forbere 1660
His ese, whiche that him darin nat for you;
Eke othir thing, that touchith nat to her, here
He wol it tel, (I wote it wel right now) you
That secrete is, and for the town's prow;
And thei that knew nothing of his entente,
Without more to Troilus in thei wente.

Helcine in all her godely softly wise
Gan him saluc, and womanly to plaie,
And said iwis ye mote algate arise,
Now faire brothir be all whole I praie; 1670
And gan her arme right ovre' his shuldir laie, on h. r. d. l.
And with him all her wit to recomfort, him with
As she best could, she gan him to disport.

So after this (qð she) we you beseke,
My dere brothir, Deiphobus and I,
For love of God, and so doeth Pandare eke,
To ben gode Lord and frende right hertily Unto Creseide, whiche that certainly Recevid wrong, as wot well here Pandare, the
That can her case well bet than I declare. 1680

This Pandarus gan newe his tong affile,
And all her case reherce, and that anone;
Whan it was said, sone aftir in a while (Qð Troilus) as sone as I maie gone,
I woll right fain with all my might ben one,
Have God my trowth, her cause for to susteine;
Now good thrift have ye (qð Helen the quene).

(Qð Pandarus) and it your will ybe
That she maie take her leve, er that she go,
O, ellis God forbid it (tho qð he) or 1690
If that she vouchsafin for to doe so; vouchith safe.
And with that worde (qð Troilus) ye two,
Deiphobus, and my sustir lese and dere,
To you have I to speke of a matere,

To ben avisid by your rede the better;
And found (as hap was) at his bedd'is hedde
The copie of a tretise, and a letter,
That Hector had him sent, to askin redde,
If soche a man was worthy to ben dedde,
Wote I naught who, but in a grisly wise 1700
He prayid 'hem anone, on it avise. both

Deiphobus gan this letter for to unfold 1710
In earnest grete, so did Helen the Quene,
And roming outwarde fast it gonne beholde, trouwing d.
Dounward a steire, into an herber grene the st. v. m. an h. g.
This ilke thing thei reddin 'hem betwene;
And largely the mountenaunce of an houre
Thei gonne on it to redin and to poure. a. u.

Now let 'hem redde, and tournè we anone
To Pandarus, that gan full faste prie 1720
That all was well, and out he gan to gone,
Into the grete chambir, and that in hie,
And sayid, God save all this companie,
Come, necè mine, my ladie Quene Helen, now my r.
Abidith you, and eke my Lordis twene.

Rise, take with you your nece Antigone,
Or whom you list, or no force hardily,
The lasse presse the bettir, come forth with me, bet
And lokith that ye thonkin humbily
Them all thre, and whan ye maie godily 1730
Your time ifee, takith of 'hem your leve, Lest we to long his restis him bireve. write 2 of

And hym with al her heart [wit] she gan disport
As she best coude, of sorowe hym to comfort.

All innocent of Pandarus entent
 Q^d tho Creseide, go we, uncle dere;
 And arme in arme inward with him she went,
 Avising well her wordis and her chere;
 And Pandarus in earnestfull manere al. earnest.
 Sayid, all folke for Godd's love I praie
 Stintith right here, and softly you plaie.

Avisth you what folke ben here within, 1730
 And in what plite one is, God him amende,
 And inward thus full softly begin; al. 1/4.
 Nece, I conjure, and highly you defende
 On his behalfe, whiche that soule us all sende,
 And in the vertue of corounis twaine,
 Sle^x nat this man, that hath for you this paine:

al. 1/2 on lord's sole.
 Fic on the devill, thinke whiche one he is,
 And in what plite he lieth, come of anone, Thinke all soche taried tide but lost it is,
 That woll ye bothe saie, when ye ben one; 1740
 And secondly, there yet devinith none
 Upon you two, come of now if ye conne,
 While folke is blent (lo!) all the time is wonne. 1750

In titirng and pursure, and delaies
 The folke devine, at w^egging of a stre;
 And though ye would han astir merie daies,
 Than dare ye nat, and why? For she and she Spake soche a worde; thus lokid he and he:
 Lest time be losse, I dare nat with you dele;
 Come of therfore, and bringith him to hele. 1750

But now to you, ye lovirs that ben here,
 Was Troilus nat in a cankedort,
 That laie, and might the whispring of 'hem here,
 And thought, o lorde, right now rennith my fort
 Fully to die, or have anone comfort,
 And was the first time that he should her praie
 Of love, O mightie God, what shall he saie!

Incipit liber tertius.

L Aie all this mene while this sad Troilus
 Recording his lesion in this manere;
 Maieie thought he, thus woll I saie and thus,
 Thus woll I plain unto my Ladie dere, at how is

 In chaungid voice, right for his very drede,
 Whiche voice eke quoke, and therto his manere
 Godelic abash't, and now his hewis rede,
 Now pale, unto Creseide his ladie dere,
 With loke doune cast, and humble yoldin chere,
 Lo, the aldirfirst worde that him asterte,
 Was twyis, mercie, mercie, my dere herte! it worke

that for forthly
 And stint a while, and whan he might out bring
 The nexte word was, God wote^r for I have 100
 As faithfully as I have had konning
 Ben your's all, God so my soule save,
 And shall, till that I wofull wight be grave,
 And though I dare ne can unto you plain,
 Iwis I suffir not the lasse pain.

at. Myre
 Thus moche as now, ah womanliche wife,
 I maie out bring, and if this you displese,
 That shall I wreke upon mine owne life;
 Right sone I trowe, and doe your herte an ese,
 If with my deth your hert I maie apese; wrath 110
 But sens that ye han herd me somewhat sey,
 Now retche I nevir how sone that I deie.

at. Myre
 Therwith his manly sorowe to beholde
 It might have made an herte of stone to rew,
 And Pandare wept as he to watir would,^e
 And pokid evir his nece newe and newe,
 And sayid, wo begon ben hertis true;
 For love of God make of this thing an ende,
 Or sle^x us both at ones, er that ye wende. at. Myre

at. Myre
 I, what? (q^d she) by God and by my trouth 120
 I n'ot nevir what ye wilne that I seie; wrath
 Eie, what? (q^d he) that ye have on him routh
 For Godd's love, and doeth him nat to deie.
 Now than thus (q^d she) I wollin him preie - at. Myre
 To tellin me the fine of his entente;
 Yet wist I nevir well what that he mente.

at. Myre
 What that I mene, O my swete herte dere
 (Q^d Troilus) O godely freshe and fre,
 That with the stemis of your eyin clere
 Ye wouldin somtime frendly on me se, 130
 And than agrein that I maie ben he Withoutin braunche of vice, on any wise,
 In trouthe alwaie to do you my servise,

at. Myre
 As to my ladie right, and chefe resort,
 With all my witte and all my diligence,
 And I to have right as you list comfort,
 Under your yerde egall to mine offence,
 As deth, if that I brekin your defence;
 And that ye digne me so mochil honour
 Me to commaundin aught in any hour, 140

at. Myre
 And I to ben your very humble, true,
 Secrete, and in my painis pacient,
 And evir to desirin freshly newe
 To servin, and ben aie like diligent, at. Myre

And with gode herte all wholly your talent
 Recevin in gre, how sore that me smerte;
 Lo! this mene I, O mine owne swete herte.

(Q^d Pandarus) lo! here an hard request,
 And reso'nable a Ladie for to werne;
 Now nece mine, by Natall Jov's fest, 150
 Were I a God, ye shouldin sterve as yerne,
 That herin well this man wol nothing yerne
 But your honor, and sene him almoste sterve,
 And ben so lothe to suffre him you to serve.

With that she gan her eyin on him cast
 Full esily, and full debonairly,
 Avising her, and hied her not to fast
 With ner a worde, but saied him softly, at. Myre
 Mine honour safe, I woll well truily
 And in soche forme, as ye can now devise, 160
 Recevin him fully to my servise;

Beseching him for Godd's love, that he Would in honour of trouth and gentillnesse,
 As I well mene, eke menin well to me,
 And mine honour with wir and businesse at. Myre
 Aie kepe, and if I maie doen him gladnesse
 From hennisforthe; iwis I n'll not faine:
 Now bethc all whole, no lengir ye ne plain.

But nathelasse, this warne I you (q^d she)
 A king's sonne although ye be iwis, 180
 Yet ye shall no more have soveraintie
 Of me in love, than right in that case is; - at. Myre
 Ne n'll I forbere, if ye doen amis,
 To wrathin you; and while that ye me serve,
 Cherishe you, right astir that ye deserve.

And shortly, dere herte, and all my knight,
 Beth glad, and drawith you to lustinesse,
 And I shall truely, with all my full might,
 Your bittir tournin all to swetinesse, at. Myre
 If I be she, that maie do you gladnesse, 180
 For every wo ye shall recovir blisse; at. Myre
 And him in armis toke, and gan him kisse.

Fill Pandarus on knces, and up his eyen
 To hevin threwe, and helde his hondis hie,
 Immortal God (q^d he) that maieft not dien,
 Cupide, of this thou maist The glorifie;
 And Venus, thou maist makin melodie,
 Withoutin honde me semith that in toune
 For this miracle I here eche bell soune.

at. Myre
 But ho, no more now of this [ilke] matere, 190
 For why? This folke woll comin up anone,
 That have the lettir redde, lo I hem here!
 But I conjure The, Creseide, anone, at. Myre
 And thou to, Troilus, whan thou maist gone, at. Myre
 That at mine house ye ben at my warning,
 For I full well shall shapin your comming. at. Myre

And esith there your hertis right inough,
 And let se whiche of you shall bere the bell
 To speke of love, and right therwith he lough) 200
 For there have ye a leisir for to tell:
 (Q^d Troilus) how long shall I here dwell
 Er this be doen? q^d he, whan thou maieft rise, at. Myre
 This thing shall be right as you list devise.

With that Helen, and also Deiphobus at. Myre
 Tho comin upward, right at the staire's ende, at. Myre
 And Lorde! so tho gan gronin Troilus,
 His brothir and his sultir for to blende.
 (Q^d Pandarus) it time is that we wende,

Take

133 at. Myre for to serve by the. and ye wyl devise. at. Myre

Take, necè mine, your leve at them all thre, 210
And let 'hem speke, and comith forth with me.

She toke her leve at 'hem full thriftily
As she well could, and thei her reverence
Unto the full ydiddin hertily
And wondir well spekin in her absence a
Of her, in praising of her excellence,
Her govirnaunce, her wit, and her manere
Commendidin, that it joic' was to here.

Now let her wende unto her ownè place,
And tournin we to Troilus againe, 220
That gan full lightly of the lettir pace,
That Deiphobus had in the gardine saine,
And of Helen and of him he would feine
Delivirid ben, and saied that him left
To slepe, and astir talis have a rest.

Helen him kist, and toke her leve as blive,
Deiphobus eke, and home went every wight,
And Pandarus as faste as he maie drive might
To Troilus tho came, as line right, al anon 230
And on a paillet all that gladè night
By Troilus he laic, with merie chere, al blisfull
* And well was them that thei werin yfere.

Whan every wight was voidid, but thei two,
And all the doris werin fast ishet,
To tell in short withoutin wordis mo,
This Pandarus, withoutin any let Up rose, and on his bedd'is side him set,
And gan to spekin in a sobir wise
To Troilus, as I shall you devise.

Mine aldilevist Lorde; and brothir dere, 240
God wot and thou, that it fate me so fore,
Whan I The sawe so languishing to yere
For love, of whiche thy wo woxe alwaie more,
That I with all my might, and all my lore
Have ever sithin doen my businesse
To bringin The to joie out of distresse;

And have it brought to soche plite as thou wost,
So that through me thou stondist now in waie
To farin well, I saie it for no boft,
And wost thou why? but shame it is to saie, 250
For The have I begon a game to plaie, Whiche that I never doen shall est for other,
Altho he were a thousande fold my brother;

That is to saie, for The am I become Betwixin game and earnest soche a mene,
As makin women unto men to come
All saie I nat, thou wost well what I mene;
For The have I my nece, of vicis clene,
So fully made thy gentillnesse to trist,
That all shall ben right as thy selfin list. 260

But God, that all wotteth take I to witnesse,
That never this for covetise I wrought,
But onely (for) to abredgè that distresse, y
For whiche well nie thou deydist, as me thought;
But gode brothir, doith now as The ought,
For Godd'is love, and kepe her out of blame,
Sins thou art wise, and save alwaie her name.

For wel thou woste, the name as yet of her Emonges the peple, as (who saith) halowèd is,
For that man is unbore, I dare well swere, 270
That evir wist that she yet did amis;
But wo is me, that I that cause all this Maie thinkin that she is my nece dere,
And I her Eme, and traitour eke ifere. both

And wer it wist; that I through mine engine
Had in my nece put this fantasie, such a f. y
To doyn thy lust, and wholly to be thine, y
Why? all the worlde wouldin upon it crie, al on that gaurd. 280
And sayin, that I the worst trecherie
Did in this case, that evir was begon,
And she'fardon, and thou right nought iwoult al er lost.

Wherefore er I woult ferthir gone or paas; a
Yet este I The besече, and fully saie,
That privitè go with us in this caas,
That is to saie, that thou us never wraie; sh' be wraie.
And be not wrothe, though I The oftin praid
To holdin secre soche an high matter; al a greke.
For skilfull is (thou woste well) my praiera. al this

And thinke, what wo there hath betid er this
For making of avauntis, as men rede, 290
And what mischaunce in this worlde yet there is - chep.
Fro daie to daie, right for that wickid dede;
For whiche these wise clerkis that ben dede
* Have evir this proverbid to us young,
That the first vertue is to kepe the young.

And n'ere it that I wilne as now abredgè
Diffusion of speche, I could almoſte
A thousande oldè stories The aledge
Of women losse through false and fol'is bolte;
Proverbis canst thy self inow, and woste 300
Ayenist that vice for to ben a blabbe
* All saied men sothe, as oftin as thei gabbe.

O tongue (alas!) so oftin here before
Halt thou made many a ladie bright of hewe
Saied, Welawaie the daie that I was bore!
And many a maidins sorowe for to newe;
And for the more parte all is but untrue
That men of yelpe, and it wer brought to preve;
Of kinde none avauntour is to leve. 310

Avauntour and a lier all is one,
As thus: [I] suppose a woman graunt me - it's a 310
Her love, and saith that othir woult she none,
And I am sworne to holdin it secre,
And astir I goe tell it two or thre,
Twis I am a vauantour at the lest,
* And lier eke, for I breke my behest.

Now lokith than, if thei be not to blame
Soche manir folk, what shal I clepe 'hem, what?
That 'hem avaunt of women, and by name,
That yet be light 'hem never this ne that, 320
Ne knowin 'hem no more than mine olde hat;
No wondir is, so God me sendist hele,
Though women dredin with us men to dele.

I saie nat this for no mistrust of you,
Ne for no wise men, but for folis nice,
And for the harme that in the worlde is now,
As well for folie oft, as for malice;
For well wote I, that in wise folke that vice
No woman drat, if she be well avised,
For wise men ben by folis harme chastised. 330

But now to purpose, leve brothir dere,
Have all this thing, that I have saied, in minde,
And kepe The close, and be now of gode chere,
For all thy daies thou shalt me true yfinde; al at thy pray
I shall thy processe set in soche a kinde,
And God toforne, that it shall The suffice;
For it shall be right as thou woult devise.

For well I wote thou menist well parde.
F f f f

Therefore

232 To talke, & well was them they were in fere. al tale

294 Have wost of this & yet men take us young.
316 And a lier in breaking of my behest.

Therefore I dare this fully undirtake,
Thou wost eke what thy ladie grauntid The, 340
And daie is set the charteris to make;
Have now gode night, I maie no lengir wake,
And bid for me, sith thou art now in blisse,
That God me sende deth, or sone liffe.

Who might ytellin haife the joie or feste, the Whiche that the souie of Troilus tho felte!
Hering the effect of Pandarus behestes,
His olde wo, that made his herte to swelt,
Gan tho for joie to wastin, and to melt,
And all the rehetynge of his sikkes fore 350
At onis fled, he felt of hem no more.

But right so as these holtes, and these hayis,
That han in Wintir dedde yben and drie, Revestin hem in grene, whan that Maie is,
Whan every lustie beste listith to pleie;
Right in that felin wise, sothe for to seie
Woxe sodainly his herte full of joie,
That gladdir was there nevir man in Troie:

And gan his loke on Pandarus up cast
Full sobirly, and frendly on to se, 360
And sayid, frende, in Aprilis the last,
As well thou wost, if it remembir The,
How nigh the deth for wo thou founde me, ist
And how thou diddist all thy businelle
To knowe of me the cause of my distresse:

Thou wost how long I it forbare to saie
To The, that art the man that I best trist,
*And perill none was to The to bewraie,
That wist I well: but tell me if The list,
Sith I so lothe was, that thy self it wist, 370
How durst I mo tellin of this matere,
That quake now, tho no wight maie us here?

But nathelless, by that God I The swere,
That as him list maie all this world governe,
And if I lie, Achilles with his spere
Mine herte cleve, all were my life eterne,
As I am mortall, if I late or yerne that Would it bewraie, or durst, or should, or conne,
For all the gode that God made undir sonne:

That rathir die I would, and determine, 380
As thinkith me now, flockid in prisoun,
In wretchidnesse, in filthe, and in vermine,
Captife to cruill king Agamemnoun;
And this in all the templis of this toun,
Upon the Goddis all, I woll The swere
To morowe daie, if that The likith here.

And that thou hast so moche idoen for me,
That I ne maie it nevirmore deserve,
This knowe I well, all might I now for The
A thousande timis on a morowe serve, in 390
I can no more, but that I woll The serve
Right as thine own slave, whithir so thou wende,
For evirmore, unto my liv'is ende.

But here with al mine herte I The beseeche,
That nevir in me thou deme soche folie,
As I shall faine, me thought by thy speche,
That this whiche thou me doest for companie,
I should wenin it were a bauderie;
I am not wode, all if I leude the
It is nat so, that wote I well parde. at. bound 400

But he that goeth for gold, or for richesse
On soche meslagis, call him what ye list, the
And this that thou doest, call it gentilnesse,

Compassion, and felowship, and trist;
Departin it so, for widewhere is wist,
How that there is diversite requered
Betwixin thingis like, as I have lered.

And that thou knowe I ne thinke not ne wene
That this service a shame be or a jape;
I have my faire sustir Polyxene 410 Castandra, Helen, or any of the frape, at
Be she nevir so faire, or well ishape, at Tell me whiche thou wilt of everichone
To have for thine, and let me than alone.

But sith that thou hast doen me this service
My life to save, and for non hope of mede,
So for the love of God this grete emprise
Performe it out, for now is the moste nede;
For high and lowe withoutin any drede
I woll alwaie thine hestis alle kepe; wholly 420
Have now gode night, and let us bothe slepe.

Thus helde hem eche of othir well apaied,
That all the worlde ne might it bet amende,
And on the morowe, whan thei were araied, Eche to his owne nedis gan entende; at
But Troilus, though as the fire he brende
For sharpe desire of hope, and of plesaunce,
He not forgate his gode wise govirnaunce:

But in himself with manhode gan restrain
Eche rakill dede, and eche unbridlid chere, 430
That all tho that livin sothe for to faine
Ne should have wiste by worde or by manere
What that he ment, as touching this matere;
From every wight, as ferre as is the cloud,
He was so wise, and wel diffimu'len coud.

And all the while whiche that I now devise
This was his life, with all his fullè might;
By daie he was in Mart's high service,
That is to sain, in armis as a knight;
And for the more part all the longè night 440
He lay and thought how that he might yserve
His ladie beste, her thanke for to deserve.

N'll I not swerin, although he laie soft,
That in his thought he n'as somewhat disefed,
Ne that he tournid on his pillowes oft,
And would of that him missid have ben esed; at. said
But in soche case men be nat alwaie plesed
For aught I wote, no more than was he,
That can I deme of possibilitè.

But certain is, to purpose for to go, 450
That in this while, as writtin is in geste,
He save his ladie somtime, and also
She with him spake, whan that she durst and leste,
And by ther both avise, as was the beste,
Appointidin full warely in this nede,
So as thei durst, how thei wouldin procede. that

But it was spokin in so short a wise,
In soche awaite alwaie, and in soche fere
Left any wight devinin or devise
Would of hem two, or to it laie an ere, 460
That all this worlde so lefe to hem ne were
As that Cupido would hem his grace sende
To makin of ther purpose right an ende. at. said

But thilkè little that thei spake or wrought
His wise ghoſte toke aie of ail soche hede, to. alway so. just
It semid her he wiste what she thought
Withoutin worde, so that it was no nede
To bid him aught to doen, or aught forbede;

For

at. bound
368. And perill was it none to the to wraye
at. bound

For which she thought that love, al come it late,
Of allè joie, had openid her the yate. 470

And shortly to this proceffe for to pace,
So well his werke and wordis he beset,
That he so full stode in his ladie's grace,
That twentie thousande timis er she let
She thonkid God she evir with him met;
So could he him governe in soche service,
That all the worlde ne might it bet devise.

For why? she founde him so discrete in all,
So secrete, and eke of soche obeisaunce; al. observa.
That well she felt he was to her a wall
Of Steele, and shelde from every displeaunce;
That to yben in his gode govirnaunce,
(So wise he was) she was no more aferd,
I mene as ferre as it ought ben requered.

And Pandarus to quickē alwaie the fire
Was evir ilike prest and diligent,
To ese his frende was set al his desire,
He shove aie on, he to and fro was sent,
He lettis bare whan Troilus was absent;
That nevir man as in his frend's nede 490
Ne bare him bet than he withoutin drede.

But now para^{ynt}pre some man waitin wold, e
That every worde or sonde, or loke or chere
Of Troilus that I rehercin shold,
In al this while, unto his lady dere;
I trowe it were a long thing for to here,
Or of what wight that stonte in suche disfointe,
His wordis al, or every loke to pointe. -f-

Forsothe I have not herde it done er this
In storie none, ne no man here, I wene, 500
And though I would, yet I could not iwis;
For there was some epistel hem betwene,
That would (as faith min auctor) wel contene
Nie halfe this boke, of which him list not write;
How should I than a line of it endite?

But to the gret effecte than saie I thus,
That stondin in concorde and in quiete
This ilke two, Creseide and Troilus,
As I have tolde, and in this timē swete; al. ly.
Save onely, of in mightin thei not mete, of hym 510
Ne leisir have ther spechis to fulfell,
That it befil, right as I shal you tell;

That Pandarus, that evir did his might Right for the fine that I shal speke of here,
As for to bringin to his house some night
His faire nece, and Troilus isere;
Where as at leisir al this high matere
Touching her love were at the ful up bounde,
Had out of doute a time to it yfounde.

For he with grete deliberacion 520
Had every thing that therto might availe
Forne-cast, and put in execution,
And neithir leste for coste ne for travaile;
Come if hem liste, hem shoulde nothing faile,
And for to ben in aught espyid there,
That wiste he wel an impossible were. it

And dredelasse it clere was in the winde
Of every pie, and every letgame,
Now al is wel, for al the world is blinde
In this matir, bothè fremid and tame, 530
This timbir is al redy up to frame;
Us lackith naught, but that we wetin wolde
A certaine houre, in whiche she comin shold.

And Troilus, that al this purveiaunce
Knew at the ful, and waitid on it aie,
And hereupon eke made gret ordinaunce, Had
And founde his cause, and therewith his aray, al. founde: sherto all thar.
Yf that he were ymissid, night or day,
There while he was aboutin this service,
That he was gon to don his sacrifice, 540

And muste at suche a temple alone wake,
Answerid of Apollo for to be,
And first to sene the holy laurir quake, ere.
Er that Apollo spake out of the tre, al. the god might.
To tellin him whan Grekis next should fle; die.
And forthy let him no man, God forbede!
But praie Apollo helpin in this nede. helpe him.

Now is there litill more for to be done,
But Pandare up, and shortly for to faine, 550
Right sone upon the chaunging of the Mone,
Whan lightlesse is the world a night or twaine,
And that the welkin shope him for to raine,
He streight amorowe unto his nece went;
Ye have wel herde the fine of his entente.

Whan he was comen, he gan anon to plaie,
As he was wont, and of himselfe to jape, at
And finally he swore, and gan her saie
By this and that, she should him nor escape,
No lengir done him aftir her to cape; gape.
But certainly that she must by her leve 560
Come soupin in his house with him at eve.

At which she lough, and gan her first excuse, last
And said: it rainith: (lo!) how should I gone!
Let be (q'd he) ne stonde not thus to muse,
This mote be don, ye shal come there anone:
So at the last herof thei fel at one,
Or ellis soft he swore her in her ere,
He n'olde nevir comin there she were.

Sone aftir this, she unto him gan rowne,
And askid him if Troilus were there; 570
He swore her nay, for he was out of towne,
And said, what? nece: I pose that he were there; al. suppose he were.
You durst nevir thereof have the more fere;
For rathir than men might him there aspie
Me levir were a thousande folde to die.

Naught list mine Auctour fully to declare
What that she thought, whan that he said her so,
That Troilus was out of toune ifare,
And if he saide therof soth or no; 580
But that without awaite with him to go
She grauntid him, sithe he her that besought,
And as his nece obeyid as her ought. die.

But nathelasse, yet gan she him beseeche,
Although with him to gone it was no fere,
For to beware of gosishe peplis speche,
That dremin thingis, which that nevir were,
And well avisin him whom he brought there;
And said him, Eme, sens I must on you trist, Loke al be wel, I do now as you list. al. qd.

He swore her this, by stockis and by stones, 590
And by the Goddis that in hevin dwell,
Or ellis were him levir soule and bones
With Pluto King as depè ben in Hell
As Tantalus; what shouldin I more tell?
Whan al was wel, he rose and toke his leve,
And she to soupir came whan it was eve,

With a certaine nombre of her owne men,

And

And with her fayir nece Antigone,
And othir of her women nine or ten;
But who was glad nowe, who as trowyn ye? 600
But Troilus, that stode and might it se
Throughout a litil window in a stewe,
Ther he beset till midnight was in mewe,

Unwilt of every wight, but of Pandare.
But to the point; now whan that she was come,
With al joie, and al her frendis in fare, 610
Her Emc anone in armis hath her nome,
And astir to the soupir al and some,
Whan as time was, ful softe thei hem yfer;
God wot there was no deinté ferre to fet. 610

And astir soupir gonin thei to rise,
At ese wel, with hertis full fresh and glade,
And wel was him that coude best devise
To likin her, or that her laughin made;
He songe, she plaide, he tolde a tale of Wade;
But at the last, as every thing hath ende,
She toke her leve, and nedis would thens wende. 620

But o fortune, executrice of wierdes!
O influencis of these hevins hie!
Soth is, that undir God ye ben our hierdes, 620
Though to us bestis ben the causis wrie;
This mene I now, for she gan homward hie;
But execute was al beside her leve
The Goddis wil, for whiche she must bileve.

The benté Monc with her hornis fall pale,
Saturn and Jove, in Cancro joynid were,
That suche a raine from hevin gan availe,
That every manir woman that was there
Had of that smoky raine a very fere:
At the which Pandare tho lough, and said thenne,
Now were it time a Lady to gone henne;

But, gode nece, if that I might evir plese
You any thing, than pray I you (qð he)
To don mine hert as now so gret an ese
As for to dwell here al this night with me;
For why? this is your owné house pardé;
For by my trouthe, I say it nat in game,
To wende as now, it were to me a shame.

Creseide, which that could as mokil gode
As halfe a world, toke hede of his prayere; 640
And fens it rained, and al was in a stode,
She thought, as gode chepe may I dwellin here,
And graunt it gladly with a frendis chere,
And have a thonke, as grutche, and than abide;
For home to gon it may nat well betide.

I wol (qð she) mine uncle lese and dere,
Sens that you list, it skil is to be so,
I am right glad with you to dwellin here,
I seide, but in game, that I wolde goe;
I wis graunt mercy nece (qð he) tho, 650
Were it agame or nō, the sothe to tell,
Now am I glad, fens that you list to dwell.

Thus al is wel, but tho began a right
The newé joy, and al the fest againe;
But Pandarus, if godely had he might,
He would have hyid her to bedde full faine,
And said, O lord, this is an hugé raine,
This were a wethir for to slepin in,
And that I rede us soné to begin, for

And nece, wote ye where I wol you laie? 660
For that ye shul nat liggin ferre asonder,
And for ye neithir shullin, dare I saie,

Herin the noise of rainis, ne of thonder;
By God, right in my litil clofet yonder,
And I wol in that uttir house alone, al. litle.
Ben wardain of your women everichone;

And in this middle chambre that ye se,
Shal all your women slepin, wel and softe, sayre.
And there I sayid, shal your selvin be;
And if ye liggin wel to night, come ofte, 670
And carith not what wethir is alofte:
Goth in anone, and whan so that ye lest,
Go we to slepe, I trowe it be the best. 670

There n'is no more, but here astir sone
Thei drank, voidid, and curtins drew anone, 680
Gan evry wight that hadde nought to done
More in the place, out of the chambre gone;
And evir more so sterneliche it rone,
And blewe therwith so wonderliche loude, 680
That wel nigh no man herin othir coude. 680

Tho Pandarus her Emc, right as him ought,
With women, suche as were her most aboute, 690
Ful glad unto her bedd'is side her brought,
And toke his leve, and gan ful lowe to loute,
And said, here at this clofet dore withoute,
Right ovrthwart your women liggin all,
That whom ye list of hem ye maie sone call. her

So whan that she was in the clofet laide,
And al her women forth by ordinaunce
A bedde werin, there as I have saide, 690
There n'as no more to skippin nor to prounce
But bodin go to bedde with mischaunce,
If any wight stering were any where,
And let hem slepin that abedde ywere.

But Pandarus, that wel couthe, eche, adele 700
The olde daunce, and every point therin,
Whan that he wiste that all thing was wele,
He thought he wolde upon his werke begin,
And gan the stewe dore all soft unpin;
As stil as stone, withoutin lengir lette, 700
By Troilus adoun right he him sette.

And shortly to the pointe right for to gone,
Of al this werke he told him orde and ende,
And sayid, make The redy right anone,
For thou shalt into hevin blisse ywende.
Now blisful Venus, thou me grace ysende,
(Qð Troilus) for nevir yet no nede
Had I er now, ne halfindele the drede. 710

(Qð Pandarus) ne drede The ner a dele,
For it shal be right as thou wolt desire; 710
So thrive I, this night shal I make it wele,
Or castin all the gruil in the fire; 710
Yet blisful Venus this night thou me enspire, 710
(Qð Troilus) as wis as I The serve, 710
And evir bet and bet shal til I sterre,

And if I had, O Venus ful of mirthe,
Aspectis badde of Mars, or of Saturne,
Or thou combuste, or let were in my birth;
Thy father pray that thilke harme disturne 720
Of grace, and that I glad aien maie turne, 720
For love of him thou lovdest in the shawe; 720
I mene Adon, that with the bore was slawe;

O Jove eke, for the love of faire Europe.
The which in form of bulle awaie thou fet;
Now helpe, o Mars, that with thy bloody cope, 730
For love of Cypria, thou me naught ne let;
O Phæbus, think when Daphne her selve shet
Undir

600: When he was that till midn. as in m.

at. 542 night was.

620: That made such mine from her to avail.

Undir the barke, and Laurir woxe for drede;
Yet for her love, o helpe me at this nede:

O Mercurie, for the love of her eke, 730
For which Pallas was with Aglauros wrothe, Now helpe; and eke Diane I The beseke,
That this viage ne be nat to The lothe;
O fatall fustrin, whiche, or any clothe
Me shapin was, my destinè me sponne,
So helpith to this werke that is begonne.

(Q^d Pandarus) thou wretchid mouthe is hert, Art thou agast so that she wol The bite? let
Why, do on this furred cloke upon thy sherte,
And folowe me, for I wol have the wite; 740
But bide, and let me gon before alite;
And with that worde he gan undone a trappe,
And Troilus he brought in by the lappe.

The sternè winde so loude began to route,
That no wight other's noise might yhere,
And thei that layin at the dore without Full sikirly thei sleptin all ifere;
And Pandarus, with a ful sobre chere
Goth to the dore anon withoutin lette
There as thei lay, and softly it shette: ec. 750

And as he came aycnwarde privily
His nece awoke, and askith, who goeth there?
Mine ownè dere nece (q^d he) it am I; Pandarus.
Ne wondrith not, ne have of it no fere,
And here he came, and said her in her ere,
No worde for love of God I you besече,
Let no wight rise, and herin of our speche.

What, whiche waie bē ye comen? benedicite,
(Q^d she) and how thus unwise of hem all?
Here at this secret trappè dore (q^d he) 760
(Q^d the Creseide) let me some wight call;
Eigh, God forbide that it should so befall, (Q^d Pandarus) that ye suche foly wrought!
Thei might demin thing that thei nevir thought,

no It is nat gode a sleeping hounde to wake,
Ne yeve a wight a cause for to devine;
Your women slepin al, I undirtake
So that for them the house men mightin mine,
And slepin wollin till the sunnè shine;
And when my tale ybrought is to an ende, 770
Unwist right as I came, so wol I wende.

Now need mine, ye shul well undirstonde,
(Q^d he) so as ye women demin all,
That for to holde in love a man in honde,
And him her lese and her dere hert to call,
And makin him an how above a call;
I mene, as love an othir in mine while, this
She doth her selfe a shame, and him a gile.

Now wherby that I tellin you al this,
Ye wote your selfe, as wel as any wight, 780
How that your love al fully grauntid is To Troilus, that is the worthiest wight knight
One of the world, and therto trouth iplight, at ye pl.
That, but it were on him alonge, ye n'olde Him nevir falsin, while ye livin sholde. that

Now stonthe it thus, that sith I fro you went,
This Troilus, right platly for to seine,
Is through a guttir by a privy went Into my chambre come in al this reine,
Unwist of every manir wight certaine, 790
Save of my selfe, as wisely have I joie,
And by the faith I owe Priam of Troie;
that

And he is come in suche paine and distresse,
That but he be all fully wode by this,
He sodainly mote fall into wodenesse,
But if God helpe: and the cause why is this;
He saith him told is of a frende of his,
How that he should love one, that hight Horast, ye.
For sorow of which this night shal be his last. will

Creseide, whiche that al this wondir herde 800
Gan sodainly aboute her hert to colde,
And with a sigh she sorowfully answerd;
Alas! I wende whofoere talis tolde,
My dere hert, certis, Eme, would me nat holde
So lightly false; (alas!) conceitis wrong A
What harme thei done, for now live I to long;

Horast, alas! and falsin Troilus!
I knowe him not, God helpe me so, (q^d she).
Alas, what wickid spirite tolde him thus! 810
Now certis Eme, to morow' and I him se,
I shal therof as full excusin me
As evir did woman, if that him like,
And with that worde she gan full fore to fike. at. for

O God (q^d she) so worldly felinesse,
Whiche clerkis callin false Felicite,
Ymedlid is with many' a bitternesse
Ful anguishous; that is God wote (q^d she) 820
Condicion of veine prosperite;
For eithir joyis comin nat ifere, at. love.
Or ellis no wight hath hem alwaie here.

O brotil wele of mann's joie unstable,
With what wight so thou be, or how thou playe,
Eithir he wote, that thou joie art mutable,
Or wote it nat, it mote ben one of twaie;
Now if he wote it nat, how maie he saie 830
That he hath very joie and sinesse,
That is of ignoraunce aie in derkenesse?

Now if he wote that joy is transitory,
(As every joie of worldly thing mote slye) 830
Than every time he that hath in memory,
The drede of lesing makith him, that he May in no parsite likeressie ybe, at. soly.
And if to lese his joie he set a mite,
Than semith it, that joy is worth ful lite. but

Wherfore I wol define in this matere,
That truly for aught I can espie
There is no very wele in this world here;
But o thou wickid serpent Jelousie, 840
Thou misbelevid, envious folie,
Why hast thou Troilus made me to untriste, Anna. Tr. to me untr.
That nevir yet agilte him, that I wiste.

(Q^d Pandarus) thus fallin is this caas. e.
Why uncle mine (q^d she) who tolde him this?
And why doth my dere hert thus, alas!
Ye wote, ye nece min (q^d he) what it is, love, at. best.
I hope al shal be wel, that is amis;
For ye maie quenche al this, if that you lest,
And doeth right so, I holde it for the best.

So shal I do to morow', iwis (q^d she) 850
And God toforne, so that it shal suffice. s.
To morow alas! that were faire (q^d he) at. best.
Nay nay, it maie nat stondin in this wise,
For nece mine, thus writin clerkis wise
That peril is with breching in ydrawe, d.
Nay, suche abodis ben nat worthe an hawe: at. best.

Nece, allè thing hath time I dare avowe,
For whan a chambre' a fire is, or an hall,
G g g g Wel

x myghtes is sad.

Wel more nede is it sodainly rescowe,
Than to dispute and aske amongis all,
How is this candil in the strawe yfall?
Ah bened cite! for al among that fare
The harne is done, and farwel feldfare.

And necè mine, ne take it nat agrese,
If that ye suffre' him al night in this wo,
God helpe me so, ye had him nevir lese;
What dare I sain, now there is but we two;
But wel I wote that ye wol nat so do,
Ye ben to wise to don so gret folie,
To put his life al night in jeopardie.

Had I him nevir lese? By God I wene
Ye ne had nevir thing so lese, (qð she)
Now by my thrifte (qð he) that shall be sene;
For sicke ye make this ensample of me,
If I al night would in him sorowe se
For al the tresour in the tounce of Troie,
I bidde God that I nevir mote have joie.

Now lokè than, if ye that ben his love
Should put his life all night in jeopardy
For thing of nought, now by that God above,
Nat onely this delaie cometh of folie,
But of malice, if that I should nat lie;
What? platly and ye suffre' him in distresse,
Ye neithir bountè done ne gentilnesse. l. bote.

(Qð tho Creseide) wol ye done o thing,
And ye therewith shal flinte al his disce
Have here and berith him this blewè ring;
For there is nothing might him bettir plesse,
Save I my selfe, ne more his hert apese,
And saie my derè herte, that his sorowe
Is causelesse, that shal he sene to morowe. 890

A ringe (qð he) ye hasilwodis shaken!
Ye necè mine, that ring must have a stone,
A stone which that might ded men alive maken,
And suche a ring trowe I that ye have none;
Discrecion out of your hed is gone,
That fele I now (qð he) and that is routhe;
O time ilost, wel maist thou cursin slouth!

Wote ye not wel that noble and his corage
Ne soroweth nat, ne flintich eke for lite;
But if a sole were in a jelous rage,
I n'olde settin' at his sorowe a mite,
But seste him with a fewè wordis white
An othir daie, whan that I might him finde;
But this thing stant al in anothir kinde;

This is so gentle and so tendir of herte,
That with his deth he wol his sorowes wreke,
For trust it wel, how fore so that him smerte,
He wol to you no jelous wordis speke,
And forthy nece, er that his hert to breke, 910
So speke your selfe to him of this matere,
For with a wordè ye maie his hertè sterc.

Now have I tolde what peril he is in,
And his coming unwist to every wight, of Ne parde harme maie there be none, ne fin,
I wol my self be with you al this night;
Ye knowe ke how it is your ownè knight, he.
And by that right ye must upon him trisle,
And I al prest to fetch him when you list.

This accident so pitous was to here,
And eke so like a sothe, at primè face,
And Troilus her knight, to her so dere,
His prive comming, and the sikir place,

860

That though, she thought, she did him than a grace,
Confidrid al thingis as thei stode,
No wondir is, sens he did al for gode. al. she.
for she.

Creseide answerde, as wisely God at rest
My soule bring, as me is for him wo;
And Eme iwis, faine would I don the best,
If that I a grace had for to do so; 930
But whethir that ye dwel, or for him go,
I am, til God me bettir mindè sende, al. wit.
At Dulcarnon, right at my witt's ende.

870

(Qð Pandarus) ye necè, wol ye here?
Dulcarnon clepid is fleming of wretches;
It semith hard, for wretchis wol nought lere
For very slouth, or othir wilfull terches;
This said is by them that ben't worth two fetches;
But ye ben wise, and that ye han on honde we
It is neithir harde, ne skilful to withstonde. 940

Than Eme (qð she) doeth hereof as you list,
But er he come, I wol up first arise;
And for the love of God, sens al my trist
Is on you two, and ye beth bothè wise,
So werkith now, in so discrete a wise,
That I honour maie have, and he plesaunce;
For I am here al in your govirnaunce. al. 2d, al. now.

That is wel said (qð he) my necè dere,
There gode thrifte on that wise gentill herte; That
But liggith still, and takith him right here, 950
It nedith nat no ferthir for him sterre,
And eche of you ese othir sorowes smert,
For love of God, and Venus I The herie;
For sone hope I, that we shullin be merie. al

This Troilus full sone on knees him sette
Ful sobrelly, right by her bedd'is hed;
And in his bestè wise his Lady grette;
But lord! so she woxe sodainliche all red;
And thought anone how that she shulde be dede,
She couldè nat o worde aright out bringe; 960
So sodainly, for his sodaine cominge.

But Pandarus, that so wel couldè fele
In every thing, to plaie anon began,
And sayid, Nece, se how this Lord gan knele; al. how well (lord!)
Now for your trouthe se this gentil man; can he kn.
And with that worde, he for a quishin ran,
And said, knelith now whilis that thou leste;
There God your herti's bring sonè to reste.

Can I naught sain, for she bad him nat rise,
If sorowe it put out of her remembraunce, 970
Or ellis that she toke it in the wise
Of duetic, as for his observaunce;
But well finde I, she did him this plesaunce, al. red.
That she him kist, although she sikid sore,
And bad him sit adoun withoutin more.

(Qð Pandarus) now wol ye well begin,
Now doth him sittin doune gode necè dere,
Upon your bedd'is side, al there within,
That eche of you the bet maie othir here;
And with that worde he drew him to the fere, 980
And toke a light, and found his countinaunce, al. fayne first
As for to loke upon an old romaunce.

Creseide, that was Troilus lady right,
And clere stode in a grounde of sikirnesse, on All thought she that her servaunt and her knight Ne shulde of trouthe none unright of her gette; of right none with Yet nathelèsse, confidrid his distresse,
And

961. She so wondrid of his sad. com.

And that love is in cause of suche folie,
Thus to him spake she of his jelousie.

Lo hertè mine,¹ as would the excellence 990
Of love, aientst the whiche that no man maie,
Ne ought eke godely makin resistance,
And eke bicause I feltè wel and saie
Your grete trouth, and service evèry daie,
And that your hert al mine was, soth to saine,
This droye me for to rewe upon your paine;

And your godenes have I founden² alway yet,
Of whiche, my derè hert, and al my knight,
I thanke it you, as ferre as I have wit,
Al can I nat as much as it were right; 1000
And I emforth my conning and my might Have, and aie shal, how sore so that me smert,
Ben to you trewe and whole with all mine hert;

And dredlesse that shal be founde at preve;
But, hertè mine, what al this is to saine,
Shal well be told, so that ye nought you greve,
Though I to you right on your self complaine;
For therewith mene I finally the paine,
That halt your hert and mine in hevinesse,
Fully to saine, and every wrong redresse. 1010

My gode hert mine, n'ot I, for why, ne how,
That jelously alas! that wicked wivere,
Thus causelesse is cropin into you,
The harme of whiche I would fain deliver,
Alas! that he all whole or of him slivere
Should have his refute in so digne a place!
Than Jove him sone out of your herte grace. 1020

But, o thou Jove, o Auctour of nature,
Is this an honour to thy dignité, 1 dede
That folke ungilty suffer here injure, 1020
And who that gilty is, al quit goeth he salanquit
O were it lesfull for to plaine of The, on That undeservid sufferst jelousie,
Of that I would upon The plaine and crie.

Eke al my wo is this, that folke now usen
To saine right thus; ye, jelousie is love, that
And would a bushil of venim excusen,
For that a grane of love is on it shove;
But that wote high Jove that sittir above,
If it be likir love, or hate, or grame, 1030
And astir that it ought to bere his name.

But certaine is, some manir jelousie
Is excusable, more than some iwis,
As whan cause is, and some suche fantasie, with
With pite that so wel expresse is, repr
That it unnethis doeth or saith amis,
But godely drinkith up al his distresse;
And that excuse I for the gentilnesse.

And some so ful of fury is, and dispite,
That it surmountith his represson; 1040
But hertè mine, ye be nat in that plite,
That thonke I God, for whiche your passion
I wol nat cal it, but illusion, elope
Of haboundaunce of love, and besy cure,
That doth your hertè this disese endure;

Of which I am right fory, but nat wrothe;
But for my devoir and your hert is reste,
Where so you list, by ordal or by othe,
By sorte, or in what wise so that you leste,
For love of God, let preve it for the beste, 1050
And if that I be gilty, do me die;
Alas, what might I more or done or seie!

And tho with that a fewe bright teris newe
Out of her eyin fel, and thus she seide,
Now God thou wost, in thought ne dede untrewe
To Troilus was never yet Crescide;
With that her hed down in the bed she leide,
And with the shete it wrie, and sighid sore, -1
And held her pece, nat a word spake she more. 0/

But now helpe God, to quench al this sorow; 1060
So hope I that he shal, for he beste may,
For I have sene of a ful misty morow
Folowen ful oft a mery somir's day,
And astir wintir folowen grene May,
Men sene all day, and redin eke in stories,
That astir sharpe flouwis ben victories.

This Troilus, when he her wordis herde,
Have ye no care, him listè nat to slepe, for
For it thought him no strokis of a yerde the
To here or se Crescide his lady wepe; 1070
But wel he felte about his hertè crepe,
For every tere whiche that Crescide asterte,
The crampe of deth, to straine him by the herte.

And in his minde he gan the time accurse
That he came there, and that he was yborne;
For now is wicke ytourmid into worse, 1080
And all that labour he hath doen beforne,
He wende it lost, he thought it n'as but lorne; at. was forlorn.
O Pandarus, thought he, alas! thy wile
Servith of nought, so welawaie the while! oh!

And therewithall he hing adoun his hedde,
And fell on knees, and sorowfully fight, he What might he sain? he felt he n'as but dedde;
For wroth was she that should his sorowes light;
But nathelless, whan that he spekin might,
Than said he thus, God wote that of this game grame
Whan all is wist, than am I nat to blame.

Therwith the sorowe in his hert so shet,
That from his eyin fell there nat a tere,
And every spirite his vigour in knet, cho. anho-
So thei astonied and oppressed were, cho
The feling of his sorowe, or his fere,
Or of aught ellis, fledde were out of toun;
Adoun he fell all sodainly in swoun.

This was no little sorowe for to se;
But all was hush't, and Pandare up as fast, 1100
O Necè, pece, or we be lost (qð he) pece.
Bethè nat agast, but certain at the last
For this or that, he into bedde him cast,
And saied, O thefe, is this a mann's herte?
And of he rent all to his bare sherte,

And sayid, nece, but and ye helpe us now,
Alas! your ownè Troilus is lorne; Iwis so would I, and I wistè how Full fain (qð she) alas that I was borne! 1110
Ye Necè, woll ye pullin out the thorne,
That stickith in his hertè (qð Pandare)
Saie all foryève, and stint is all this fare.

Ye that to me (qð she) full levir were Than all the gode the Sunne about gooth;
And therewithall she swore him in his ere,
Iwis my derè herte I am not wrothe,
Have here my trouth, and many an othir othe,
Now speke to me, for it am I Crescide;
But all for naught, yet might he not abride.

Therwith his poulce, and paumis of his bondes, 1120 at. face.
Thei gan to frote, and wete his templis twain, at. chafe. And

And to delivir him fro bittir bondes
 She oft him kist, and shortly for to fain
 Him to rewakin she did all her pain;
 And at the last he gan his breth to drawe,
 And of his swough sone aftir that adawe,

And gan bet minde, and reson to him take,
 But wondir fore he was abashed iwis,
 And with a sigh whan he gan bet awake
 He said, O mercie God, what thing is this? 1130
 Why doe ye with your selvin thus amis?
 (Q^d tho Creseide) is this a mann's game?
 What Troilus, woll ye doe thus for shame?

And therewithall her arme ovre him she laiid,
 And all foryave, and oftin time him kest.
 He thonkid her, and to her spake and said
 As fill to purpose, for his hert's rest;
 And she to that answerde him as her lest,
 And with her godelic wordis him disport
 She gan, and oft his sorowes to comfort. 1140

(Q^d Pandarus) for aught I can aspien
 This light nor I ne servin here of naught,
 Light is nat gode for like folkis eyen;
 But for the love of God, sens ye ben brought
 In this gode plite, let now non hevvy thought
 Ben hangid in the hertis of you twey;
 And bare the candle towards the chimney.

Sone after this, though it no nede ywere,
 Whan she soche othis as her list devise
 Had of him takin, her thought tho no fere 1150
 Ne cause eke none, to bid him thennis rise;
 Yet lesse thing than othis maie suffice
 In many a case; for every wight I gesse,
 That lovith well, menith but gentilnesse.

But in effect she would ywete anon
 Of what man, and eke where, and also why
 He jelous was, sens there was cause non;
 And eke the signe whiche that he toke it by,
 She bade him that to tell her busily;
 Or ellis certain she bare him on honde 1160
 That this was doen of malice her to fonde.

Withoutin more, shortly for to fain,
 He must obeie unto his ladie's hest
 And for the lasse harme he must somwhat fain;
 He said her, whan she was at soche a fest
 She might on him have lokid at the lest;
 N^ot I nat what (all dere inough a rishe)
 As he that nedis must a cause out fishe.

And she answerde, swete hert, all were it so,
 What harme was that, since Inon evill mene? 1170
 For by that God that wrought us both two,
 In all manir thing is mine entent clene,
 Soche argumentes ne be nat worthe a bene,
 Woll ye the childish jelous counterfete?
 Now were it worthy that ye were ibete.

Tho Troilus gan sorowfully sike,
 Lest she be wrothe, him thought his herte deide,
 And said, alas! upon my sorow's sike
 Have mercie, o swete herte mine Creseide;
 And if that in tho wordis that I seide, 1180
 Be any wrong, I woll no more trespase,
 Doeth what you list, I am all in your grace.

And she answerde, of gilt misericorde,
 That is to faine, that I foryeve all this,
 And evirmore on this night you recorde,
 And beth well ware ye doe no more amis;

Naie dere hert mine no more (q^d he) iwis.
 And now (q^d she) that I have you doe smerte
 Foryeve it to me, mine owne swete herte.

This Troilus with blisse of that supprised 1190
 Put all in Godd's hande, as he that ment
 Nothing but well, and sodainly avised
 He her in his armis fast to him hent;
 And Pandarus, with a full gode entent
 Laiid him to slepe, and said, if ye be wise,
 Sownith not now, lest more folke arise.

What might or maie the sely Larkè saie
 Whan that the sparhauke hath him in his fote?
 I can no more, but of these ilkè twaie,
 (To whom this tale sugre be or sote) 1200
 Though I tary a yere, sometime I mote
 After mine Authour tellin ther gladnesse,
 As well as I have tolde ther heviness.

Creseide, whiche that felt her thus itake, when she (As writin clerkis in ther bokis old)
 Right as an aspin lese she gan to quake,
 Whan she him felt her in his armis fold;
 But Troilus all whole of caris cold
 Gan thankin tho the blisfull Goddis seven;
 Thus sondry painis bringin folk to heven. 1210

This Troilus in armis gan her straine,
 And said swete, as evir mote I gone, O
 Now be ye caught, now here is but we twaine,
 Now yeldith you, for othir bote is none.
 To that Creseide answerid thus anone,
 Ne had I er now, my swete herte dere,
 Ben yoldin, iwis, I were now not here.

O soth is said, that helid for to be
 Of a fevir, or othir grete siknesse,
 Men must drinkin, as we may oftin se, 1220
 Full bittir drinke; and for to have gladnesse
 Men drinkin oft in pain, and in distresse:
 I mene it here, as for this avinture,
 That through a pain hath foundin al his cure.

And now swetnesse yfemith ferre more swete,
 That bittirnesse assayid was biforne,
 For out of wo in blisse now thei flete,
 Non soche thei feltin sithins thei were borne, that Now is this bettir than bothe two be lorne;
 For love of God, take every woman hede 1230
 To werkin thus, if it come to the nede.

Creseide all quire from every drede and tene, al. or.
 As she that just cause had him to trist,
 Made him soche fest, it joie was for to sene,
 Whan she his trouth and clene entent ywist;
 And as about a tre with many a twist
 Bitrent and writhin is the swete Wodbinde,
 Gan eche of hem in armis othir winde.

And as the newe abashid Nightingale, or she begin to sing,
 That stintith first, whan she beginnith sing, 1240
 Whan that she herith any herd's tale,
 Or in the hedgis any wight stering,
 And aftir sikir doeth her voice out ring,
 Right so Creseide, whan that her drede stent,
 Opened her hert, and told him her entent.

And right as he that seeth his deth ishapen,
 And dyin more, in aught that he maie gesse,
 And sodainly rescous doeth him escapen, that
 And from his deth is brought in sikirnesse,
 For al this worlde in soche present gladnesse 1250
 Was

1172. al. In all thing all mine ent. is done.

Was Troilus, and hath his lady swete:
With no worse hap God let us nevir mete!

Her armis small, her back both streight and soft,
Her sidis long, and fleshy, smothe, and white,
He gan to stroke, and gode thrift bad full oft,
Her snow-white throte, her brestis round and lite;
Thus in this heven^e he gan him to delite;
And therwithall a thousande times her kist,
That what to doen for joie unneth he wist.

Than saied he thus, O Love, O Charite, 1260
Thy mothir eke, Citherea the swete, Astir thy self, next heryid be she,
Venus I mene, the wellwilly planete,
And next that Hymenæus I The grete,
For nevir man was to you, Goddis hold
As I, whiche ye have brought fro caris cold.

Benigne Love, thou holy bond of thinges,
Who so woll grace, and list The not honourē,
Lo! his desire woll fle withoutin winges;
For noldist thou of bountē hem socoure 1270
That servin best, and moſte alwaie labourē;
Yet were all lost, that dare I well ſain certes,
But if thy grace ypaſſid our deſertes.

And for thou me, that leſt thonke coud deſerve
Of them that nombred ben unto thy grace,
Haſt holpin, there I likeli was to ſterve,
And me beſtowid in ſo high a place,
That thilkē boundis maie no bliſſe ſurpace,
I can no more, but laude and reverence 1280
Be to thy bountē and thine excellence.

And therwithall Creſeide anon he kiſt,
Of whiche certain ſhe ne felt no diſeſe,
And thus ſaied he, now would to God I wiſt,
Mine hertē ſwete, how I you beſt might pleaſe;
What man (q̄d he) was evir thus at eſe 1290
As I, on whiche the fairiſt, and the beſt—
That er I ſeie, deinith her hert to reſt!

Here maie ye ſene that mercie paſſith right,
The experience of that is felt in me,
That am unworthy to ſo ſwete a wight; 1290
But hartē mine, of your benigne
So thinkith, that though I unworthy be,
Yet mote I nede amēdin in ſome wiſe,
Right through the vertue of your hie ſerviſe;

And for the love of God, my lady dere,
Sith he hath wrought me for I ſhal you ſerve,
As thus I mene: that ye woll be my fere 1300
To doe me live, if that you liſt, or ſterve;
So techith me, how that I maie deſerve
Your thonke, ſo that I through miſ ignoraunce
Ne doe nothing that you be diſpleaunce.

For certis, freſhe and womanliche wiſe,
This dare I ſaie, that trouth and diligence,
That ſhall ye findin in me all my life,
Ne I woll not certain breke your defence;
And if I doe, preſent, or in abſence,
For love of God, let ſleſt me with the dede,
If that it like unto your womanhede.

I wiſ (q̄d ſhe) mine ownē hert is luſt,
My ground of eſe, and al mine hertē dere, 1310
Graunt mercie, for on that is all my truſt;
But let us fall awaie fro this matter,
For it ſuffiſith, this that ſaied is here,
And at o worde, withoutin repentaunce,
Welcome my knight, my pece, my ſuffiſaunce.

Of ther delite or joies one of the leſt
Were impoſſible to my wit to ſaie,
But judgith ye, that have ben at the feſt
Of ſoche gladneſſe, if that him liſt to plaie;
I can no more, but thus theſe ilke twaie 1320
That night, betwixin drede and ſkirneſſe,
Feltin in love the gretteſt worthineſſe.

O bliſfull night, of them ſo long iſought,
How bliſhe unto hem bothē two thou were! 1330
Why ne had I ſoche feſt with my ſoule ibought,
Ye, or but the leſt joie which that was there?
Awaie thou ſoulē daungir and thou fere,
And let hem in this hevin bliſſe ydwell,
That is ſo high, that all he can I tell.

But ſothe is, though I can not tellin all, 1330
As can mine Authour of his excellence,
Yet have I ſaied, and God toſornē ſhall
In every thing all wholly his ſentence; 1340
And if that I at lov is reverence,
Have any worde in echid for the beſt,
Doeth therwithall right as your ſelvin leſt.

For all my wordis here, and every part, 1340
I ſpeke hem all undir correccion
Of you that feling have in lov is art
And put it all in your diſcrecion, 1350
To encreſe or make diminicion
Of my langage, and that I you beſeche;
But now to purpoſe of my rathir ſpeche.

Theſe ilke two, that ben in armis laſt,
So lothe to hem aſondir gon it were,
That eche from othir wending, ben biraſt; 1360
Or ellis lo! this was ther moſte fere,
That all this thing but nicē dremis were;
For whiche full oft eche of hem ſaied, o ſwete,
Clippe I you thus, or els doe I ſtyme! 1370

And Lorde! ſo he gan godelic on her ſe,
That nevir his loke ne blent from her face,
And ſaied, O my dere hertē maie it be
That it be ſothe, that ye ben in this place? 1380
Ye hertē mine, God thanke I of his grace, (Q̄d tho Creſeide) and therwithall him kiſt,
That where here ſpirite was, for joie ſhe n'liſt.

This Troilus full oft her eyin two Gan ſor to kiſſe, and ſaied: O eyin clere,
It werin ye that wrought me ſoche wo, 1390
Ye humble nettis of my lady dere,
Though there be mercie writtin in your chere;
God wore the text full harde is ſor to finde,
How couldin ye withoutin bonde me binde?

Therwith he gan her faſt in armis take, 1400
And well an hundrid timis gan he ſike,
Not ſoche ſorowfull ſighis as men make
For wo, or ellis whan that ſolke be ſike;
But eſie ſighis, ſoche as ben to like,
That ſhewid his affection within; 1410
Of ſoche manir ſighis could he not blin.

Sone aſtir this thei ſpake of ſondrie thinges,
As fill to purpoſe of this avinture, 1420
And playing enterchaungidin ther ringes,
Of whiche I can not tellin no ſcripture;
But well wor, a broche of gold and azure, 1430
In whiche a Rubie ſet was like an hert, Creſeide him yave, and ſlacke it on his ſherte.

That alirid his spiritis so within.

In time of truce on hauking would he ride,
Or ellis hunt the Bore, Beare, or Lioun;
The smale bestis let he gon beside;
And whan that he come riding into the toun, 1790
Ful oft his lady from her window doun,
As fresh as faucon, comin out of mure,

And in dispite had he al wretchidnesse;
And doutlesse no nede was him to beseeche
To honourin them, that had worthinesse; 1800
And esin 'hem, that werin in distresse;
And glad was he, if any wight wel ferde;
That lovir was, whan he it wist or herde.

For sothe to saine, he lost helde every wight,
But if he were in lov's high service, 1800
I mene folke that aught it ben of right;
And ore al this, so wel coude he devise
Of sentiment, and in so uncouth wife
Al his array, that every lovir thought,
That al was well, what so he said or wrought.

And though that he be come of blode royal,
Him list of pride at no wight for to chace;
Benigne he was to eche in general,
For which he gate him thanke in every place; 1810
Thus would love, iheried be his grace,
That Pride and Ire, Envie, and Avarice
He gan to fle, and every othir vice.

This Troilus was present in the place,
Whan askid was for Antenor Creseide;
For whiche ful sone to chaungin gan his face, 150
As he that with tho wordis wel nigh deide,
But nathēlesse he no worde to it seide,
Lest men should his affection espie, a that
With mann'is hert he gan his sorowes drie.

And ful of anguish and of gressly drede,
Abode, what othir lordes would to it sey;
And if that thei would graunt, (as God forbede!)
Th' eschaunge of her, then thought he thingis twey;
First, how to save her honor, and what wey
He mightē best th' eschaunge of her withstonde; 160
Ful fast he cast how allē this might stonde. a thing.

Love him made allē prest to done her bide,
And rathir dyin, than that she should go;
But Reason said him on that othir side,
Withoutin assent of her, do nat so, th' / + ne
Lest for thy werkē she would be thy foe, than
And sain, that through thy medling is iblowe
Your bothē love, ther it was erst not knowe. unhappi

For whiche he gan deliberen for the beste; devisyn
And though the lordis wouldin that she went, 170 That He wouldē suffir them graunt what 'hem lest,
And tel his lady first what that thei ment;
And when that she had said him her entent,
Theraftir would he werkin all so blive,
Tho al the world ayen it would strive.

Hector, with that full wel the Grekis herde; whiche
For Antenor, how thei would have Creseide,
Gan it withstonde, and sobirly answerde;
Sirs, she ne is no prisoner (he seide)
I n'ot on you who that this chargē leide, a. 18.
But on my parte, ye maie estones 'hem tell, for
We unū here no women for to sell. a.

The noise of people upstert then atones,
As brimme as blase of strawe iset on fire;
For infortune it woulde for the nones
Thei shouldist ther confusion desire; as above.
Hector (q^d thei) what gost may you enspire
This woman thus to shilde, and done us lese
Dan Antenor? a wrong waie now ye chese;

That is so wise, and so bolde baroun, 190
And we have nede of folke, as men may se,
He is one of thei thei gretest of this toun;
O Hector lette suche thy fantasies be;
O king Priam (q^d thei) thus segge we,
That all our voice is to forgone Creseide,
And to delivir Antenor thei preide.

O Juvenal, lorde! the trewe is thy sentence,
That litil wenin folke what is to yerne,
That thei ne findin' in ther desire offence;
For cloude of errour lette hem discern, at. 10. d. 200
What best is, and lo, here ensample as yerne!
These folke desirin now deliviraunce
Of Antenor, that brought hem to mischaunce.

For he was aftir traitour to the toun
Of Troy; alas! thei quitte him out to rathe;
O nice world, lo thy discrecion!
Creseide, which that nevir did hem scathe,
Shal nowe no lengir in her blisc bathes;
But Antenor, he shal come home to toun,
And she shal out, thus said both heere and houn. 210

For which delibered was by parliament,
For Antenor to yeldin out Creseide,
And it pronouncid by the President,
Although that Hector nay ful offe praide,
And finally, what wight that it withsaide,
It was for naught, it must yben, and should,
For substaunce of the Parliment it woulde.

Departid out o^r th^e Parliament echone,
This Troilus, withoutin wordis mo,
Unto his chambre spedde him fast alone, 220
But if it were a man of his or two,
The whiche he bad out faste for to go,
Bicause that he woulde slepin, as he saide;
And hastily upon his bedde him laide.

And as in wintir levis ben birafte
Eche aftir othir til the trees be bare,
So that there n^{is} but barke and braunche ilafte;
Lithe Troilus, birafte of eche welfare, Iboundin in the blacke barke of care, at. with Disposid wode out of his witte to breide; 230
So fore him fate the chaunging of Creseide.

He rist him up, and every dore he shette,
And window eke; and tho this wofull man
Upon his bedd^e is side adoune him sette,
Ful like a ded image, both pale and wan,
And in his brest the hepid wo began
Out brist, and he to workin in this wise, on
In his wodenesse, as I shal you devise.

Right as the wildè Bulle beginnith spring
Now here now there, idartid to the herre, 240
And of his deth rorith, in complaining;
Right so gan he about the chambre sterre,
Smiting his brest, aie with his fistis smerte;
His hed to the wall, his body to the grounde
Ful ofte he swapte, him selvin to confounde.

His eyin two for pite of his herte
Out stremidin as swifte as wellis twey,

The highè fobbis of his sorowes smerte
His speche him refte, unnethis might he sey
O deth alas! why n^{ist} thou do me dey? 250
Acurtid be that day which that nature
Yshope me to ben a livis creture.

But aftir whan the fury, and al the rage,
Whiche that his herte twist, and false threst,
By length of tìme somewhat gan aswage,
Upon his bedde he laide him down to rest;
But tho begon his teres more out to brest,
That wondir is the body maie suffise well with the - might.
To halfe this wo, whiche that I you devise.

Than saide he thus; Fortune, alas the while! 260
What have I done? what have I The agilt?
How mightist thou for routhe thus me begile?
Is there no grace? and shal I thus be spilt?
Shal thus Creseide away for that thou wilt?
Alas! how mightist thou in thine hert finde
To ben to me thus cruil and unkinde? at. 10

Have I The nat honourid al my live,
As thou well wotest, above the Goddis all? not Why wilt thou then of this joie me deprive?
O Troilus, what may men now The call, 270
But wretche of wretchis, out of honour fal
Into mise'ry, in whiche I wol bewaile
Creseide (alas!) til that the brethe me faile.

Alas! Fortune! if that my life in joie
Displeid had unto thy soule Envie,
Why ne' haddist thou my fathir king of Troy
Biraft the life? or done my brethrin die?
Or slaine my selfe, that thus complaine and crie?
I combre world, that maie of nothing serve, at. the
But evir die, and nevir fully sterve. 280

If that Creseide alone werin me laste,
Naught raught I whid^r thou woldist me sterve, at. 10. d. 200
And her (alas!) than hast thou me birafte;
But evirmore (lo!) this is thy manere,
To reve a wight that moste is to him dere,
To preve in that thy gierfull violence; at. 10. d. 200
Thus am I lost, there helpith no defence.

O very Lorde, O Love, O God, (alas!) God of love
That knowist best min hert, and al my thought,
What shal my so'rogfull life done in this caas 290
If I forgo that I so dere have bought?
Sens ye Creseide and me have fully brought Into your grace, and both our hertis seled, at. 10. d. 200
How maie ye suffre (alas!) it be repeled? at. that.

What I may done I shal, while I may dure
On live, in turment and in cruill paine,
This infortune, and this disavinture, at. 10. d. 200
Alone as I was borne I wol complaine;
Ne nevir wol I sene it shine or raine,
But ende I wol as Edippe in derknesse 300
My wofull life, and dyin in distresse.

O wery gost, that errist to and fro,
Why n^{ist} thou slien out of the wofullest at. 10. d. 200
Body, that evir might on grounde ygo?
O soule, lurking in this woful neste,
Flee forth anon, and do mine herte to breste,
And folowe Creseide thy lady dere; at. 10. d. 200
Thy right place is no lengir (to ben) here. at. 10. d. 200

O woful eyin two, sens your disporte
Was al to sene Creseide's eyin bright, 310
What shal ye done, but for my discomforte
Stondin for naught, and wepin out your sight,
Sens

295 What shall I do? I shall not.

Sens she is queint, that wont was you to light?
In veine from this forth have I eyin twey
Ifornid, sens your vertue is away.

O my Creseide, O lady soveraine
Of this sorowfull soule that thus crieth,
Who shal now yevin comfort to thy paine? al. my.
Alas! no wight; but whan mine hert ydieth,
My spirit, whiche that so unto you bieth, 320
Receve in gre, for that shall aie you serve;
Forthy no force is, though the body sterue.

O ye lovirs, that high upon the whele Ben sette of Fortune, in gode avinture, by God lene that ye aie findin love of stele,
And longe mote your life in joy endure; aye.
But when ye comin by my sepulture,
Remembrith that your felowe restith there, here,
For I loved eke, though I unworthy were.

O olde, unwholsome and misliuid man, e/ 330 Calchas I mene, alas! what cildid The
To ben a Greke, sens thou art borne Trojan?
O Calchas, whiche that wolt my banè be,
In cildid timè was thou borne for me; phorus.
As wouldè blisfull Jovè for his joye
That I The had where that I would in Troie!

A thousande sighis hottir than the glede
Out of his brest eche aftir othir wente,
Medlid with plaintis newe, his wo to fede,
For whiche his woful teris nevir stente; 340
And shortly so his sorowes him to rente,
He woxe so mate, that ne joy nor penaunce
He felith none, but lyith in a traunce.

Pandarus, whiche that in the Parliment
Had herde what every lord and burgeis seid,
And how ful grauntid was by one assent
For Antenor to yeldin out Creseide,
Gan wel nigh wode out of his wit to breide;
So that for wo he ne wist what he mente,
But in a rage to Troilus he wente. fast. 350

A certaine knight, that for the timè kepte
The chambre dore, undid it him anone,
And Pandarus that ful tendirly wepte,
Into the derke chambre as stil as stone
Towarde the bedde gan softly for to gone,
So confuse, that he ne wist what to say;
For very wo his witte was nigh away. al.

And with his chere and loking al to torne
For wo of this, and with his armis folden,
He stode this woful Troilus beforen, 360
And on his pitous face he gan beholden;
But Lord! so oftin gan his hert to colden,
Seyng his frende in wo, whose hevinessle
His hertè slough, as thought him for distresse.

This woful wight, this Troilus, that felte
His frende Pandare icomin him to se,
Gan as the snow ayenst the sunne to melte;
For whiche this woful Pandare, of pitè
Gan for to wepe, as tendirly as he;
And spechelesse thus ben these ilkè twey, 370
That neithir might for sorow o worde sey.

But at the last, this wofull Troilus,
Nigh ded for smert, gan brestin out to rore, e/
And with a sorowful noise he said thus Amonges his sobbis, and his sighis sore,
Lo! Pandare, I am ded; withoutin more,
Hast thou nat herde at parliment, he seide,

For Antenor how losse is my Creseide?

This Pandarus ful ded and pale of hewe,
Ful pitously answerid, and saide yes, 380
As wisely were it false, as it is trewe,
That I have herde, and wote al how it is!
O mercy God! who would have trowid this?
Who would have wende that in so lite a throw Fortune our joye would havin ovirthrow? al. thus

For O! in this world there is no censure,
As to my dome, that evir sawe ruine Straungir then this, through case or avinture; al. Stronger
But who may al eschue or al devine?
Suche is this world. Forthy I thus define; 390
Ne trustith no wight to finde in Fortune
Aie propertie; her yestis ben commune.

But tel me this, why thou art now so mad;
To sorowen thus why list thou in this wife; by the way
Sens thy desire al wholly hast thou had,
So that by right it ought inough suffice;
But I that nevir felte in my service
A frendly chere, or loking of an eye, easylyng
Let me thus wepe and wailix til I dye. that

And ore al this, as thou wel wost thy selve, 400
This toune is ful of ladies al aboute,
And to my dome, fairir than suchè twelve
As er she was, shall I finde in a route,
Ye one or twey, withoutin any doute;
Forthy be glade, mine ownè derè brother,
If she be lost, we shal recovre an other. al. al. by the way

What? God forbid, alway that eche plesaunce al. such
In o thing were, and in non othir wight;
If one can singe, anothir can wel daunce;
If this be godely, she is glad and light; al. that. 410
And this is faire, and that can gode aright; than Eche for his vertue holdin is full dere, for Bothe heroner and faucon for riverse. the.

And eke as writ Zanis, that was full wise,
The newè love out chasith oft the old,
And upon newe case lyith newe avise;
Thinke eke thy self to savin thou art hold; al. by the way.
Soche fire by processe shall of kindè cold; al. make.
For sens it is but casuèl plesaunce,
Some case shal put it out of remembraunce. 420

For all so sure as daie cometh aftir night,
The newè love, labour, or othir wo,
Or ellis seldè seing of a wight,
Doen old affections all ovir go;
And for thy part, thou shalt have one of tho;
To abredge with thy bittir painis smerte; al. by the way
Absence of her shall drive her out of herte. al.

These wordis saied he for the nonis all
To helpe his frende, lest he for sorowe deide;
For doubtelesse to doen his wo to fall 430
He ne raught nat what unthrift that he seide;
But Troilus, that nigh for sorowe deide,
Toke little hede, of all that ere he ment;
One ere it herd, at the othir out it went.

But at the last he answerde, and saide frend,
This lechcraft, or yhelid thus to be,
Were well sitting, if that I were a fend;
To traifin her, that true is unto me; al. by the way
I praie God let this counsaile nevir the,
But doe me rathir sterue anon right here, 440
Er I thus doen, as thou me wouldist lere.

She that I serve iwis, what so thou seie,
To whom mine herte enhabite is by right,
Shall have me wholly her's till that I deie;
For, Pandarus, sens I have trowth her hight,
I woll nat ben untrue for any wight,
But as her man I woll aie live and sterue,
And nevir wolle non forhir creature serve.

And there thou saiest thou shalt as faire find
As she, let be; make no comparison
To a creature iformid her by kinde; like
O leve, Pandarus, thy conclusion,
I woll nat ben of thine opinion,
Touching all this; for whiche I The beseeche,
So holde thy pece, thou shalt me with thy speche.

Thou biddist me that I should love another
All freshly newe, and let Creseide go,
It lithe nat in my powir leve brother,
And though I might, yet would I nat doe so;
But canst thou playin raket to and fro, 460
Nettle in docke out, now this, now that, Pandarus;
Now soule fall her for thy wo that care.

Thou farist eke by me, thou Pandarus,
As he, that whan a wight is wo bigon,
He cometh to him apace, and saith right thus;
Thinke not on smert, and thou shalt fele none;
Thou maigest me first transnew in a stone 470
And reve me of my passionis all,
Or thou so lightly do my wo to fall.

The deeth maie well out of my brest depart 470
The life, so long maie last this sorowe mine;
But fro my soule shall Creseide's dart
Out nevirmore; but doune with Proserpine, Whan I am dedde, I woll go won in pine;
And there I woll eternally complain
My wo, and how that twinnid be we twain.

Thou hast here made an argument full fine,
How that it shoulde in lase pain ybe
Creseide to forgon, for she was mine,
And lived in ese and in felicity; 480
Why gabbist thou, that saidist erst to me;
That him is wors that is fro wele ithrowe,
Than he had erst none of that wele iknowe?

But tel me now, sens that The thinketh so light
To chaungin so in love aie to and fro,
Why hast thou nat doen busily thy might,
To chaungin her, that doeth The al thy wo?
Why n'ilt thou let her fro thine herte go?
Why n'ilt thou love anothir lady swete,
That maie thine herte settin in quiete? 490

If thou hast had in love aie yet mischaunce,
And canst it hot out of thine herte drive,
I that have lived in lust and in plesaunce
With her, as moche as any wight on live,
How should I that foryet, and that so blive?
O where hast thou ben hid so long in mewe,
That canst so well and formeliche argewe?

Naie, Pandarus, naught worth is all thy rede; at this
But douteless, for ought that may befall, Withoutin wordis mo, I woll best dede: 500
O deeth, that endir art of sorowes all,
Come now, sens I so oft astir The call;
For sely is that deeth, soth for to fain,
That oft iclepid cometh and endith pain.

Well wote I, while my life was in quiete,
Er thou me slug, I would have yevin hire;

But now thy comming is to me so swete,
That in this worlde I nothing so desire;
O deeth, sens with this sorowe I am afire, at fire
Thou eithir doe me anon in teris drenche, 510
Or with thy cold stroke mine herte quenche.

Sens that thou shalt so fele in sondry wise
Ayenst ther will, unprayed, daie and night;
Doe me at my requeste this service,
Deliver now the worlde, so doest thou right;
Of me, that am the sorowfullist wight
That evir was, for time is that I sterue,
Sens in this world of right naught do I serve.

This Troilus in teris gan distill,
As licour out of a limbeck full fast; 520
And Pandarus gan hold his tonge still, holden
And to the ground his eyin doune he cast;
But nathelesse thus thought he at the last,
What parde, rather than my felowe deie,
Yet shall I somewhat more unto him seie.

And sayid frend, sens thou hast soche distresse,
And sens The list mine argumentis blame, 530
Why n'ilt thou thy selvin helpe doen redresse,
And with thy manhode lettin all this game;
Go ravishe her; ne canst thou not for shame?
And eithir let her out of toun fare, 540
Or hold her still, and leve thy nice fare.

Art thou in Troie, and hast non hardiment
To take a woman, whiche that lovith The,
And would her selvin ben of thine assent?
Now is nat this a nice vanite?
Rise up anon, and let this weping be, at this
And kith thou art a man, for in this hour
I woll ben dedde, or she shall bein our.

To this answerde him Troilus full soft, 540
And saied, iwis, my leve brothir dere,
All this have I my self yet thought full oft,
And more thingis than thou devistill here;
But why this thing is last, thou shalt well here;
And whan thou hast me yevin audience,
Therastir maigest thou tell all thy sentence.

First, sin thou wost this toun hath al this werre
For ravishing of women so by might,
It should not ben yustfrid me to erre,
As it stont now, ne doen so grete unright; 550
I should have also blame of every wight,
My fathir's graunt if that I so withstode,
Sens she is chaungid for the toun's gode.

I have eke thought, so it were her assent,
To aske her of my fathir of his grace;
Than thinke I, this were her accusement,
Sens well I wot I maie her, not purchase;
For sens my fathir in so high a place
As Parliement, hath her eschaunge enfeled,
He n'ill for me his lettir be repeled. 560

Yet drede I moste her herte to perturbe,
With violence, if I doe soche a game; at this
For if I would it opinly disturbe,
It must be disclaundre unto her name;
And me were levir die than her diffame;
As n'olde God, but if that I should have Her honour, levir than my life to save.

Thus am I lost, for aught that I can fe,
For certain is that sith I am her knight,
I must her honour levir have than me shame; 570
In every case, as lovir ought of right;
K k k k

Thus

It is, al. Thou he that never had of wele yknowe.

f. Thou he that erst had never in wele yknowe.

550. Than Pandarus, thus, it were accusation at this the if he, it is her acc.

Thus am I with desire and refon twight,
Desire for to distourbin her me redeth,
And refon n'll not; so mine hertè dredeth.

Thus weping, that he ne could nevir cese,
He saied alas, how shall I wretchè fare!
For well sele I alwaie my love encrese,
And hope is lasse and lasse alway Pandare,
Encrefin eke the causis of my care,
So welawaie, why n'll mine hertè brest? 580
For why? in love there is but little rest.

Pandare answerid, frend, thou maiest for me
Doen as The list, but had I it so hote,
And thine estate, she should go with me,
Tho all this toun cried on this thing by Note,
I n'oldè set all that noise at a grote;
For whan men have well cried than woll thei roun;
Eke wondir last but ix daies in toun. 585

Devinith not in refon aie so depe,
Ne curtisly, but helpe thy self anon; 590
Bet is that othir than thy selvin wepe;
And namily fens ye two ben fallone, bothe
Rise up, for by mine heide she shall not gone,
And rathir be in blame a little found,
Than sterue here as a gnat withoutin wound.

* It is no shame unto you ne no vice
Her to withholdin, that The lovith moste;
Paravintre she might holdè The for nice — dyn.
To lette her go thus to the Grekis hoste,
Thinke eke Fortune, as well thy selvin wofte, 600
Helpith the hardie man to his emprise,
And weivith wretchis, for ther cowardise.

And though thy lady would alite her greve,
Thou shalt thy self thy pece hereafter make;
But as to me certain I can not leve
That she would it as now for evill take;
Why shouldè than for fere thine hertè quake?
* Thinke how that Paris hath, that is thy brother,
* A love, and why shal thou not have another?

And Troilus, o thing I dare The swere, 610
That if Creseide, whiche that is thy life,
Now lovith The, as well as thou doest here,
God helpe me so, she n'll not take agrese,
Though thou do bore anon in this mischese;
And if she wilnith fro The for to passe,
Than is she false, so love her well the lasse.

Forthy take hert, and thinke right as a knight,
Through love is brokin aldaie every lawe, Kith now somewhat thy corage and thy might,
Have mercie on thy self, for any awe 620
Let not this wretchid wo thine hert ygnawe,
But manly set the worlde on fixe and seven, at
And if thou die a martyr, go to heaven.

I woll my self ben with The at this dede,
Though I and all my kin upon a stound
Should in a strete, as doggis, liggin dede, the Through-girt with many a wide blodie wound, 625
In every case I woll a frend be found;
And if The liste here steruin as a wretche,
Adieu, the devill spedè him that fetcche. 630

This Troilus gan with tho wordis quickè,
And sayid, frend, graunt mercie, I assent;
But certainly thou maiest nat so me prickè,
Ne painè none ne maie me so tourment,
That for no case, it is not mine entent,
At short wordis, though that I dyin should,

To ravish her, but if her self it would. solym. w.

Why, so mene I (qð Pandare) al this day,
But tell me than, hast thou her well assaied, al. will
That sorowest thus? and he answerde him naie; 640
Whereof art thou (qð Pandare) than dismaied, al. dismayed
That n'oste not that she wol ben il apaied if
To ravishè her; fens thou hast not ben there,
But if that Jove The tolde it in thine ere?

Forthy rise up, as naught ne were, anon,
And washe thy face, and to the king thou wend,
Or he maie wondrin whidir thou art gon;
Thou must with wisdome him and othir blend,
Or upon case he maie astir The send,
Or thou be ware; and shortly, brothir dere, 650
Be glad, and let me werke in this mattere.

For I shall shape it so, that sikirly
Thou shalt this night sometime in some manere
Come spekin with thy Ladie privily,
And by her wordis eke, as by her chere, 655
Thou shalt full sone aperceve and well here
Of her entent, and in this case the best; of
And fare now well, for in this point I rest.

The swiftè fame, whiche that fals thingis
Equall reportith (like) the thingis true, 660
Was throughout Troie isled, with prest wingis,
Fro man to man, and made his tale all newe;
How Calchas doughtir with her brightè hewe
At Parliement withoutin wordis more Igrauntid was, in chaunge of Antenore. for

The whiche tale anon right as Creseide
Had herd, she whiche that of her fathir rought
(As in this case) right naught, ne whan he deide, Full busily to Jupiter besought
Yeve him mischaunce, that this treis brought; 670
But shortly lest these talis sothe were
She durst at no wight askin it for fere.

As she that had her hert and all her minde
On Troilus iset so wondir fast,
That all this world ne might her love unbind,
Ne Troilus out of her hertè cast;
She would ben his, while that her life maie last;
And she thus brennith bothe in love and drede,
So that she ne wist what was best to rede.

But as men fene in toun, and all about, 680
That women use ther frendis to visite;
So to Creseide of women came a rout
For pitous joie, and wendin her delite;
And with ther talis, dere inough a mite,
These women, whiche that in the cite dwell,
Thei set hem doune, and saied as I shall tell.

(Qð first that one) I am glad truely
Bicause of you, that shall your fathir se;
Anothir saied, iwis so am not I,
For all to little hath she with us be; 690 (Qð tho the thirde) I hope iwis that she Shall bringin us the pece on every side;
That whan she goth, almightie God her gide.

Tho wordis and tho womannishe thingis
She herd hem right as though she thennis were,
For God it wote, her herte on othir thing is,
Although the body sat among hem there,
Her advertence is alwaie ellis where,
For Troilus full fast her soulè sought,
Withoutin worde on him alwaie she thought. 700

These

608 Thinke how that Paris, which that is thy brother,
I love hath wonne, and why not thou another?
696 It was no rape in my dome ne; &c. al.

These women that thus wendin her to plesse,
Aboutin naught gon all ther talis spende;
Soche vanite ne can doen her none ese,
As she that all this menè while brende
Of othir passion than thei ywende, that
So that she felte almoste her hertè die
For wo, and werie of that companie. their

For whichè might she no lengir restrain
Her teris, thei ganin so up to well,
That gavin signis of her bittir pain, the 710
In whiche her spirite was, and must ydwell; Remembring her from heaven unto which hel i/
She fallin was, sens she forgo, the fight -th.
Of Troilus; and so'rowfully she fight.

that taken
And thilkè folis sittin^g her about
Wendin that she had wept and sighid fore Bicause that she shouldin out of the rout -st
Departin, and nevir plaie with hem more;
And thei that haddin knowin her of yore
Se her so wepe, and thought it was kindnesse; 720
And eche of hem wept eke for her distresse.

of And busilie thei gonin her comforte
On thing God wor, on which she little thought,
And with ther talis wendin her disporte,
And to be glad thei oftin her befought,
But soche an ese therwith thei in her wrought, Right as a man is esid for to fele, the
For ache of hedde to clawest him on his helc.

But after all this nicè vanite
Thei toke ther leve, and home thei wentin all, 730
Creseide full of sorowfull pitè
Into her chambrest up went out of the hall, h
And on her bedde she gan for dedde to fall,
In purpose nevir thennis for to rise;
And thus she wrought, as I shall you devise.

so Her owndid heer, that sonnyshe was of hewe,
She rent, and eke her fingirs long and smale
She wrong ful oft, and bade God on her rue,
And with the deth to doe bore on her bale;
Her hewè whilom bright, that tho was pale, 740
Bare witnesse of her wo, and her constreint;
And thus she spake, sobbing in her compleint.

Alas (q^d she) out of this region
I wofull wretche and infortunid wight,
And borne in cursid constellacioun,
Mote gon; and thus departin fro my knight!
Wo worthe alas, that ilke day is light,
On which I sawe him first with eyin twain,
That causith me, and I him, all this pain!

Therwith the teris from her eyin two 750
Doun fell, as shouris full in Aprill swithe;
Her whitè brest she bet, and for the wo
Aftir the deth she cried a thousande sithes;
Sens he that wont her wo was for to lithe
She mote forgon; for whiche disavinture
She helde her felfin a forlost creature. -lorn

She saied, how shall he doen and I also!
How should I live, if that I from him twin!
O derè herte eke that I lovè so,
Who shall that sorowe s^{ten}, that ye ben in! 760
O Calchas fathir, thine be all this sin;
O mothir mine, thar clepid wer Argive, art
Wo-worthi that daie, that thou me bare on live!

To what fine should I live and sorowen thus?
How should a fische withoutin watir dure?

*And could be the day which that Argive
Me of his bodie bare to ben on live.*

What is Creseide worth from Troilus?
How should a plant or any othir creature h
Livin withoute his kindly noriture;
For whiche full oft, a byword here I seie,
That ertheless mote grene medis sone deye. 770 ertheless

I shall doest thus; sens neither swerd ne dart
Dare I none handle, for the cruilte;
That ilke daie that I fro you depart, mete, what
If sorowe of that nill nat my bane be,
Than shall no mete ne drinke ycome in me, -ene
Till I my soule out of my brest unsheth; -br-
And thus my selvin woll I doen to deth.

And Troilus, my clothis everichone
Shull blackè ben, in tokining, herte swete,
That I am as out of this worlde agone, 780
That wont ywas you to set in quiete; holden
And of mine ordit aie, till deth me mete,
The observaunce evir in your absence
Shall sorowe ben, complaint, and abstinence.

Mine herte, and eke the wofull ghost therein,
Biquethst I with your spiritè to complain
Eternally, for thei shall nevir twin;
For though in yerth ytwinnid be we twain,
Yet in the felde of pitè, out of pain,
That hight Elysium, we shall ben yfere 790
As Orpheus and Eurydice his fere.

Thus hertè mine, for Antenor, alas!
I sone shall be ychaungid, as I wene;
But how shall ye doen in this wofull caas?
How shall your tendir hertè thus sustest? i/
But hertè mine, foryet this sorowe and tene,
And me also, for sothly for to seie,
So ye well fare, I reche not for to deie.

How might it evir redde ben or ifong
The plaintis that she made in her distresse, 800
In'or; but as for me, my little tong,
If I discrivin would her hevinessè,
It should ymake her sorowe semè lesse
Than that it was, and childishly deface
Her hic complaint, and therfore I it pace. h, etc.

Pandarus, whiche that sent from Troilus
Was to Creseide, as ye have herd devise,
That for the best it was accordid thus,
And he full glad to doen him that service,
Unto Creseide in a full secrete wise, 810
There as she laie, in tourment and in rage,
Came her to tell all wholly his messlage.

And fonde that she her selvin gan to trete
Full pitously; for with her saltè teres
Her brest and face ibathid was full wete, her
Her mightie tressis of her sonnyshe heres
Unbroidin hangin all about her cres; l.
Whiche yavin him very signall matire
Of deth, whiche that her hertè gan desire.

Whan she him sawe, she gan for sorowe anon 820
Her tery face atwixt her armis hide; at hande
For whiche this Pandare is so wo bigon,
That in the hous he might unneth abide,
As he that felt sorowe on every side; 1 side
For if Creseide had erst complainid fore,
Tho gan she plain a thousande timis more.

And in her aspre plaintè thus she seide,
Pandare my Ème of joyis mo than two
Was causè, causing first to me Creseide,
That now transmud bin in cruil wo, in 830
Wher?

829. May first cause causing unto me co.

Wher' shall I faie to you welcome or no?
That aldirfirst me brought unto servise,
Of love, alas! that endith in soche wise?

Endith than love in wo? Ye or men lieth,
And every worldly blisse, as thinkith me,
The ende of blisse aie sorowe occupieth;
And who so trowith not that it so be,
Let him upon me wofull wretchè se,
That my self hate, and aie my birthè curse,
Feling alwaie fro wicke I go to worse. 840

Whoso me seeth, seeth sorowe all atonis,
Paine, turment, wo, and plaint, and eke distress,
Out of my wofull bodie harme there none is,
As langour, anguise, cruill bittirnesse,
Annoie, smarte, drede, furie, and eke siknesse;
I trowe iwis from hevin teris rain
For pitè of my aspre and cruill pain.

O thou my sustir, full of discomfort,
(Qd Pandarus) what thinkist thou to doe?
Why ne' hast thou to thy selvin some resport? 850
Why wilt thou thus thy self alas! sordo?
Leve all this werke, and take now hedè to
That I shall sain, and herken of gode entent
This, that by me thy Troilus The sent.

Tournid her tho Creseide, a wo-making
So grete, that it a deth was for to se;
Alas! (qd she) what wordis maie ye bring,
What woll my dere herte sendin unto me,
Whiche that I dredè nevir more to se?
Woll he have plaint or teris or I wende? 860
I have inough, if he tleraftir sende.

She was right soche to sene in her visage,
As is that wight that men on bere ybinde,
Her face like of Paradis the Image
Was all ichaungid in anothir kinde;
The plaie, the laughtir, men wer wont to find
In her, and eke her joyis everichone
Ben fledde, and thus lieth Creseide alone.

About her eyin two a purple ring
Bitrent, in sothfast tokening of her pain,
That to behold it was a dedly thing;
For whiche Pandarus ne might nat restrain
The teris from his eyin for to rain;
But nathèlesse, as he best might, he seide
From Troilus these wordis to Creseide.

Lo! nece, I trowe well ye han herd all how
The king with othir Lordis for the best
Hath made eschaunge of Antenor and you,
That cause is of this sorowe and unrest,
But how this case doth Troilus molest 880
This maie none yerthly mann'is tong ysäie,
For very wo his wit is all awaie.

For whiche we have so sorowed, he and I,
That into little it had bothe us slawe;
But through my counsaile this daie finally
He somewhat hath fro weping him withdrawe,
And semith me that he desirith fawe
With you to ben all night of to devise Remedie of this, if there were any wise.

This short and plain, th' effect of my meslage, 890
As ferforthe as my wit can comprehend,
For ye that ben of tourment in soche rage
Maie to no long prologue as now entende;
And hereupon ye maie answer him sende,
And for the love of God, my nece dere,

So leve this wo or Troilus be here. come.

Grete is my wo (qd she) and sighid sore,
As she that felith dedly sharpe distress,
But yet to me his sorowe is mokill more,
That love him bet than he himself I gesse; 900
Alas! for me hath he soche hevinesse?
Can he for me so pitously complain?
Iwis this sorowe doublith all my pain.

Grevous to me God wot it is to twin,
(Qd she) but yet it hardir is to me
To sene that sorowe which that he is in;
For well wot I, it woll my banè be,
And die I woll in certain tho (qd she)
But bid him come, er deth that thus me thretereth
Drive out that ghost, which in min hert ybeteth. 910

These wordis saied, she on her armis two Fill gruffe, and gan to wepin pitously;
(Qd Pandarus) alas! why doe ye so Sens ye well wote the time is faste by
That he shall come? arise up hastily,
That he you nat biwopin thus yfinde,
But ye wol have him wode out of his minde.

For wist he, that ye fardè in this manere,
He would himselfin fle: and if I wende
To have this fare, he should not comin here 920
For all the gode that Priam maie dispense;
For to what fine he would anon pretende,
That know I well; and forthy yet I seie
So leve this sorowe, or plainly he woll deie; 930

And shapith you his sorowe for to abredge,
And nat encrese, lefe nece swete;
Berthe rathir to him cause of plat than edge,
And with some wisedom ye his sorowes bete;
What helpith it to wepin full a strete,
Or though ye bothe in saltè teris dreint? 940
Bet is a time of cure than of pleint.

I menè thus, whan I am hithir bring,
Sens ye be wise, and bothe of one assent,
So shapith how to distourbe your going,
Or come ayen sone aftir ye be went;
Women ben wise in short avisement;
And let sene how your wit shall now availe;
And what that I maie help, it shall nat faile.

Go (qd Creseide) and, uncle, truly
I shall doen all my might me to restrain 940
From weping in his sight, and busily
Him for to glad I shall doen all my pain,
And in my herte sekin every vain;
If to this fore there maie ben foundin salve,
It shall not lacke certain on mine behalve.

Goth Pandarus, and Troilus he sought,
Till in a temple he found him all alone,
As he that of his life no lengir rought;
But to the pitous Goddis everichone
Full tendirly he praied, and made his mone, 950
To doen him sone out of this worlde to pace;
For wel he thought there was non othir grace.

And shortly all the sothè for to seie,
He was so fallin in dispaire that daie,
That uttirly he shope him for to deie;
For right thus was his argument alwaie,
He saied he n'as but lorne welawaie!
For all that cometh, cometh by necessite,
Thus to ben lorne it is my destine.

For certainly this wote I well, he saide,
That foresight of the divine purveiaunce
Had sene alwaie me to forgon Creseide,
Sens God seeth every thing out of doutaunce,
And them disposith through his ordinaunce.
In his meritis sothly for to be,
As thei shull comin by predestine.

But nathèlesse alas! whom shall I leve!
For there ben gretè clerkis many one,
That destinè through argumentis preve,
And some ysain that nedely there is none,
But that fre choice is yeven us everichone.
O welawaie! so slich arne clerkis old,
That I n'ot whose opinion I maie hold. whiche

For some men sain, that God seeth al biforne,
Ne God maie nat decevid ben parde,
Than mote it fallin, though men had it sworne,
That purveiaunce hath sene before to be;
Wherefore I saie, that from eterne if he Hath wist befor our thought eke as our dede,
We have no fre choice, as these clerkis rede. 980

For othir thought, nor othir dede also Might nevir ben, but soche as purveiaunce,
Whiche maie not ben discevid nevir mo,
Hath feled biforne, withoutin ignoraunce;
For if there might yben a variaunce
To writhin out fro Godd's purveying,
There n'ere no prescience of thing comming;

But it were rathir an opinion
Uncertain, and no stedfast foreseing; al. certeyn
And certis that were an abusion, 990
That God should have no perfect clere wetting
More than we men, that have doutous wening;
But soche an errour upon God to gesse
Were false and foule, and wickid cursidnesse.

Eke this is an opinion of some,
That have ther top ful high and-smoth isore,
Thei sain right thus, that thing is nat to come,
For that (the) prescience hath sene before it
That it shal come; but thei sain that therfore
That it shal come, therfore the purveiaunce 1000
Wote it before withoutin ignoraunce.

And in this manir this necessite
Retournith in his place contrary againe;
For nedefully behovith it nat be to
That thilke thingis fallin in certaine
That ben purveyed, but nedefully, as thei saine, Behovith it that thingis, which that fall,
That thei in certaine ben purveyid all.

I mene as though I laboured me in this,
To enquire which thing cause of which thing be;
As whethir that the prescience of God is The certaine cause of the necessite
Of thingis that to comin be, parde;
Or if necessite of thing coming
Be the cause certaine of the purveying.

But nowe ne' enforce I me not in shewing
How (the) ord^r of (the) causis stant, but wot I
That it behovith, that the befalling
Of thingis wiste before certainly Be necessarie, al seme it not therby 1020
That prescience put falling necessarye
To thing to come, al fal it foule or faire.

For if there sit a man yonde on a se,
Than by necessite behovith it

960 That certis thing opinion sothe be, al. this
That wenist or conjectist that he sit;
And furthirovir now ayenwarde hit,
Lo! right so is it on the part contrarie,
As thus, now herkin, for I wol nat tarie;

I say that if the opinion of The 1030
Be sothe for that he sit, than say I this,
That he mote sittin by necessite;
And thus necessite in eithir is;
For in him nede of sitting is iwis,
And in The nede of sothe; and thus forsothe
There mote necessite ben in you bothe.

But thou maist saine, the man sit nat therfore,
That thine opinion of his sitting soth is;
But rathir for the man sate there before,
Therfore is thine opinion sothe iwis; 1040
And I say, though the cause of sothe is this Cometh of his sitting, yet necessite
Is enterchaungid, bothe in him and The.

Thus in the same wise out of doutaunce
I maie wel makin, as it semith me,
My resoning of Godd's purveiaunce,
And of the thingis that to comin be,
By whichè reson men maie wel ise
That thilke thingis, that in erthe befall,
That by necessite thei comin all. 1050

For although that this thing shal come iwis, Therfore is it purveyid certainly,
Nat that it cometh for it purveyid is,
Yet nathèlesse behoveth it nedefully
That thing to come be purveyid trewely,
Or ellis thingis that purveyid be
That thei betidin by necessite.

And thus suffisith right inough certaine 1060
For to distroie our fre choise everydell,
But now is this abusion to saine
That falling of the thingis temporell
Is cause of Godd's prescience eternell.
Now trewely that is a false sentence;
That thing to come should cause his prescience.

What might I wene and I had suche a thought?
But that God purveieth thing that is to come
For that it is to come, and ellis nought?
So might I wene that thingis all and some,
That whilom ben bifall and ovircome,
Ben cause of thilke soveraine purveiaunce,
That forwote al, withoutin ignoraunce.

And ore al this yet say I more therto,
That right as whan I wote there is a thing,
Iwis that thing mote nedefully be so;
Eke right so, whan I wote a thing coming,
So mote it come, and thus the befalling by
Of thingis, that ben wiste before the tide,
Thei mote not ben eschewid on no fide.

Than said he thus; almighty Jove in trone
That woteft of all this thing the sothfastnesse, 1080 wrote.
Rewe on my sorowe, and do me dien sone,
Or bring Creseide and me fro this distresse.
And while he was in all this hevinesse,
Disputing with himselfe in this matere,
Came Pandare in, and saide as ye maie here. shul

O mighty God (q^d Pandarus) in trone,
Eigh, who saw er a wise man farin so?
Why, Troilus, what thinkist thou to done?
Hast thou such lust to ben thine owne foe?

What? parde, yet is not Creseide ago; 1090
Why list The so thy selfe fardon for drede,
That in thine hed thine eyin semin dede.

Hast thou nat livid many a yere beforne
Withoutin her, and fardē ful wel at ese?
Art thou for her, and for none othir borne?
Hath kinde The wrought al only her to plesē?
Let be, and thinke right thus in thy disese;
That in the dice right as there fallin chaunces,
Right so in love there come and gon plesaunces.

And yet this is a wondir most of al, 1100
Why thou thus sorowest, seth thou wost nat yit
Touching her goyng how that it shal fal,
Ne if she can her selfe distourbin it,
Thou hast nat yet assayid al her wit,
A man maie al bet me his necke bede
Whan it shal ot, and sorowen at the nede.

Forthy take hede of al that I shal say;
I have with her spoke and longe ibe,
So as accordid was betwixe us twey,
And evirmore me thinkith thus, that she 1110
Hath somwhat in her hert is privitē,
Wherwith she can, if I shal aright rede,
Disturbe al this, of whiche thou art in drede.

For which my counsel is, whan it is night
Thou to her go, and make of this an ende;
And blisful Juno, through her gretē might Shal (as I hope) her grace unto us sende;
Mine hert seith certaine that she shal nat wende;
And forthy put thine hert a while in rest,
And holde thy purpose, for it is the best. 1120

This Troilus answerde, and sighid fore,
Thou saist right wel, and I wil do right so;
And what him list, he said unto him more,
And whan that it was timē for to go,
Ful privily him selfe withoutin mo
Unto her came, as he was wont to done;
And how thei wrought, I shal you tellin sone.

Soth is, that when thei gonnin first to mete,
So gan the paine ther hertis for to twiste,
That neithir of hem othir mightē grete, 1130
But hem in armis toke, and astir kiste;
The lasse wofull of hem bothe ne wiste
Wher that he was, ne might o word out bring,
As I said erst, for wo and for sobbing.

The woful teris, that thei letin fal,
As bittir wer'n out of teris kinde,
For paine, as is ligne aloes, or gal;
So bittir teris wept nat, as I finde;
The wofull Myrrha, through the barke and rinde;
That in this world thern is so hard an hert 1140
That n'old have rewid on her painis smert.

But whan ther wofull wery gostis twaine
Returnid ben, there as hem ought to dwell,
And that somwhat to wekin gan the paine
By length of plainte, and ebbin gan the wel
Of ther salt teris, and the hert unswel,
With brokin voice, all horse for shright, Creseide
To Troilus these ilke wordis seide:

O Jove, I die, and mercy The besече,
Helpe, Troilus: and therwithal her face 1150
Upon his brest she laid, and lost her speche,
Her wofull spirite from his propir place
Right with the worde away in point to pace,
And thus she lich, with hewis pale and grene,

That whilom fresh and fairist was to sene.

This Troilus, that on her gan beholde,
Cleping her name, and she lay as for dede;
Withoutin answe, and felte her limmes colde,
Her eyin throwin upwarde to her hed;
This so'rouful man can now non othir rede; 1160
But oftin time her coldē mouthe he kiste;
Where him was wo, God and himself it wiste.

He risith up, and long straite he her leide;
For signe of life, for aught he can or may,
Can he none finde, in nothing of Creseide,
For whiche his songe ful oft is welaway!
But whan he sawe that spechēlesse she lay,
With so'rouful voice, and hert of blisse al bare
He said, how she was fro this world ifare!

So astir that he long had her complained, 1170
His hondis wronge, and said that was to sey,
And with his teris salt her brest berained,
He gan tho teris wipin of full drey,
And pitously gan for the soule prey,
And said, O Lord, that set art in thy trone,
Rewe eke on me, for I shal folow her sone.

She colde was, and withoutin sentēment,
For aught he wote, for brethe yet felte he none;
And this was him a preignant argument
That she was forth out of this worlde agone; 1180
And when he saw there was non othir wonne,
He gan her limmis dresse in suche manere,
As men don them that shal bew laide on bere

And astir this, with sterne and cruill herte,
His swerd anon out of his sheeth he twight,
Himselfe to fleen, how fore so that him smerte,
So that his soule her soule folowin might,
There as the dome of Minos would it dight, Sith love and cruil fortune it ne would
That in this world he lengir livin should. 1190

Than said he thus, fulfild of high disdaine,
O cruil Jove, and thou fortune adverse;
This al and some is, falsely have ye slaine
Creseide, and sith ye may do me no werse,
Fie on your might and werkis so diverse;
Thus cowardely ye shul me nevir winne;
There shal no deth me fro my lady twinne.

For I this world, sith ye have slain her thus,
Wol let, and folow her spirit lowe or hie;
Shal nevir lovir saine that Troilus 1200
Dare nat for fere with his lady die;
For certaine I wol bere her companie;
But sith ye wol nat suffre us livin here,
Yet suffrith that our soulis ben ifere.

And thou, Citē, in whiche I live in wo,
And thou Priam, and brethrin al ifere,
And thou my mothir, farwel, for I go,
And Atropos make redy thou my bere,
And thou Creseide, o swete hertē dere,
Receve thou now my spiritē, would he sey 1210
With swerde at hert, al redy for to dey.

But as God would of swough she tho abraide,
And gan to fighe, and Troilus she cride;
And he answerid, lady mine Creseide,
Livin ye yet? and let his swerde doune glide;
Ye hertē mine, that thankid be Cupide, (Qd she) and therwithal she forē sight;
And he began to glade her as he might: 1220

Toke her in armis two, and kiste her ofte,
And her to glad he did al his entent,
For whiche her gost, that flickered aie alofte,
Into her wofull hert aien it went;
But at the laste, as that her eyin glent she.
Aside, anon she gan his swerde aspie,
As it lay bare, and gan for fere to crie, ferde.

And askid him, why he had it but drawe?
And Troilus anon the cause her tolde,
And how himself therwith he would have slawe:
For whiche Creseide upon him gan beholde,
And gan him in her armis fast to folde, 1230
And saide, o mercy God, lo whiche a dede!
Alas, how nigh we werin bothè dede!

Than if I ne hadde spokin, as grace was,
Ye would have slaine your selfe anon, q^d she;
Ye doutlesse: and she answerde alas!
For by that ilke Lorde that made me
I n'olde a forlong waie on live have be Aftir your deth, to have ben crounid Quene
Of al the londe the sunne on shinith shene.

But with this selve swerde, which that here is, 1240
My selfin I would have slaine (q^d she) tho. al. 120.
But ho! for we have right inough of this,
And let us rise and straite to bedde go,
And there let us yspekin of our wo;
For by that morder, whiche that I se brenne,
Know I ful well, that day is nat far henne.

Whan thei wer in ther bedde in armis foldè,
Naught was it like tho nightis here before;
For petously eche othir gan beholdè,
As thei that haddin al ther blisse ilorne, 1250
Bewailing al the daie that thei were borne;
Till at the last this wofull wight Creseide
To Troilus these ilke wordis seide.

Lohertè mine, wel wote ye this (q^d she)
That if a wight alwaie his wo complaine,
And sekith nat how holpin for to be,
It n'is but folie, and encrece of paine;
And sene that here assemblid be we twaine
To findin bote of wo that we ben in,
It were all time right sohe for to begin. 1260

but
I am a woman, as ful wel ye wote;
And as I am avisid sodainly,
So wol I tellyou, while it is hoite; that Me thinkith thus, that neithir ye nor I Ought halfe this wo to makin skilfully;
For there is art inough for to redresse
That yet is misse, and sene this hevinesse.

that
Soth is, the wofthe/whiche that we ben inne,
For aught I wote, for nothing ellis is, 1270
But for the cause that we should ytwine;
Considrid al, there n'is no more amis; al. ytwine
And what is than a remedy unto this,
But that we shape us sonè for to mete?
This al and some is, my dere hertè swete.

Now that I shal wel bringin it aboute
To comen ayen, sone aftir that I go, al. I am
Therof am I no manir thing in doute;
For dredlesse within a weke or two
I shal ben here, and that it may be so,
By allè right, and that in wordis few, 1280
I shal you wel an hepe of wayis shewe. al. wayis

For whiche I woll nat makin longe sermon,
For time iloste may not recovered be,

But I wol go to my conclusion,
And to the beste, in aught that I can se; for
And for the love of God forgeve it me forgeve me.
If I speke aught ainst your hert's rest;
For trewily I speke it for the beste: al. mende

Making alway a prouestacion,
That in effect this thing that I shall say, 1290
N'is but to shewin you my mocion
To find unto our helpe the beste way;
And takith it none othirwise I pray;
For finally, what so ye me commaunde, al. in effect.
That wol I done; for that is no demaunde.

Now herkenith this, ye have well understond
My goyng grauntid is by parliment, al. mende
So ferforth that it may not ben withstond
For al this world, as by my jugement;
And sith there helpith none avisement, 1300
To lettin it, lette it passe out of mind,
And let us shape a bettir waie to finde.

The sothe is this, the twinning of us twaine
Wol us disese, and cruilly anoie;
But him behovith somtime havin paine al. to have a p.
That servith love; if that he wol have joie; al. do.
And sith I shal no farthir out of Troie
Than I maie ride aien on halfe a morowe, 1310
It ought the lasse causin us for to sorowe; al. do

So as I shal nat now ben hid in mewe, 1310
That day by day, min ownè hertè dere,
Sens wel ye wote that it is now a trewe,
Ye shal ful wel al mine estate yhere;
And er that truce is done, I shal ben here;
And thus have ye both Antenor iwonne,
And me also, bethe glad now, if ye conne;

And thinke right thus; Creseide is now agon,
But what? she shal come hastily ayen;
And whan alas! by God, lo right anon,
Er dayis ten, this dare I safely faine, 1320
And than as erle shall we be bothè faine;
So as we shall togethers evir dwell,
That al this worlde ne might our blisse tell.

I se that oft time, there as we ben nowè,
That for the beste, our counsaile for to hide,
Ye speke nat with me, nor I with you, al.
In fourtenight; ne se you go ne ride;
And may ye nat ten dayis than abide
For mine honour, in suche an avinture?
Iwis ye mowe, forjellis lite endure. 1330

Ye knowe eke howe that all my kin is here,
But if that onely it my fathir be,
And eke mine othir thingis al isere,
And namily my derè hertè ye,
Whom that I n'olde levin for to se
For al this worlde, as wide as it hath space,
Or ellis se I never Jov's face.

Why trowin ye my fathir in this wise on.
Coverith so to se me, but for drede,
Leste in this tounne that folkis me dispise 1340
Bicause of him, for his unhappy dede?
What wote my fathir what life that I lede?
For if he wist in Troie how wel I fare,
Us nedid for my wending nat to care.

Ye sene that every day eke more and more Men tete of pece; and it supposid is That men the Quene Helena shal restore,
And Grekis us restore that is amis; al. restore.
So

* 1310 Soth that I shal nat so be hid in mewe.

1 That he.

2 Considered now that it is time of leave.

3 He may not fail of mine estate so here.

1331 *Ye know wel eke how that my kin is here -
All wholly but of my father be.*

And ore al this your fathir shal dispise Us al, and saine this cite is but lorne, his
And that th' assiege nevir shal arise, 1480
(For why the Grekis have it alle, sworne) y-
Til we ben slaine, and doun our wallis toine;
And thus he shal you with his wordis fere,
That aie drede I, that ye wol blevin there.:

Ye shall eke sene so many' a lusty knight
Among the Grekis, ful of worthinesse,
And eche of hem, with herte, wit, and might, 9
To plessh' you, done al his businesse; will
That ye shull dullin of the rudinesse cal
Of us the sely Trojans, but if routhe 1490
Remordin you, or vertue of your trouthe.

And this to me so grevous is to thinke,
That fro my brest it wol my soule rende; the Ne dredlesse in me there may nat sinke
Of gode opinion, if that ye wende; A
For why? your fathir's sleightis wol us shende;
And if ye gone, as I have tolde you yore,
So thinke I n'am but dede withoutin more:

For which with humble, true and pitous hert
A thousande timis mercie I you praie, 1500
So rewit on mine aspre painis smert; al. yore upon.
And doth somewhat, as that I shal you faie,
And let us stele away betwixt us twaie;
And thinke that foly' is, whan a man maie chese,
For accident his substaunce for to lese: ay.

I mene thus, that sene we mowe or daie
Well stele awaie, and ben together so,
What wit were it to puttin in assaie, it
(In case ye shouldin to your fathir go)
If that ye mightin come aien or no? 1510
Thus mene I, that it were a grete folie
To put that sikirnesse in jeopardie. our

And vulgarly to spekin of substaunce,
Of tresour may we bothe with us lede
Ynough to live in honour and plesaunce,
Untill the time, that we shall ben dede;
And thus we may eschewin all this drede;
For every othir waie ye can recorde,
Mine hert iwis maie therwith nat acorde.

And hardily ne dredith no povertie, 1520
For I have kin and frendis ellis where,
That though we comin in our bare sherte
Us shoulde nevir lacke ne Golde ne gere;
But ben honourid while we dweltin there; that
And go we anone, for as in mine entent after
This is the best, if that ye wol assent.

Creseide with a sighe, right in this wise
Answerid him, iwis my dere hert trewe,
We maie well stele away, as ye devise,
And findin suche unthrifty wayis newe; 1530
But afterwarde ful sore it wol us rewe;
And helpe me God so at my moste nede, al. lade.
As causelesse ye suffrin al this drede.

For thilke day that I for cherishing
Or drede of fathir, or for othir wight, al. f
Or for estate, delite, or for weding, d.
Be false to you, my Troilus, my knight,
Saturnus' doughtir Juno, through her might As wode as Atalanta do me dwell
Eternally in Stryx the pit of Hell. 1540

And this, on every God celestiall
I swere it you, and eke on eche Goddesse,

On every Nymph, and deite infernall,
On Satyrys and Faunys more and lesse;
That halve Goddis ben of wildirnesse;
And Atropos my thred of life to brest,
If I be false; now trowe me if you lest. c

And thou Simois, that as an arowe clere
Through Troie rennist aie downward to the Se,
Be witnesse of this worde, that said is here; 1550
That thilke day that I untrewed be
To Troilus, mine owne herte fre,
That thou returne backwarde unto thy well,
And I with bddy and soule sinke to hell. into

But that ye speke awaie thus for to go,
And lettin al your frendis, God forbede
For any woman that ye shouldin so! do
And namy sens Troy hath row such nede
Of helpe; and eke of o thing takith hede,
If this were wiste, my life laie in balaunce, 1560
And your honoz; God shilde us fro mischaunce.

And if so be that pece hereafter take,
As al daie happith astir angre game,
Why, lorde, the sorow' and wo ye woldin make,
That ye ne durst comin ayen for shame!
And er that ye jeopardin so your name
Beth nat to hally in this hotte fare;
For hasty man ne wantith never care.

What trowe ye the peple eke al aboute
Would of it say? it is ful light to arede; 1570
Thei woldin say, and swere it out of doute,
That love ne drave you nat to don this dede, -v.
But luste voluptuous, and cowarde drede;
Thus were al losse iwis, mine herte dere,
Your honour, whiche that now so shinith clere.

And also thinkith on mine honeste,
That flourish yet, how soule I should it shende,
And with what filth it spottid shoulde be, y. p. 11
If in this forme I shoulde with you wende; 1580
Ne though I lived unto the world's ende
My name shoulde i never ayenward winne;
Thus were I lost, and that were routh and sinne.

And forthy, she with reson al this hete;
Men saine, the suffraunt overcometh, pardes; s
Eke who so wol have lese, he lese mote lere; al. lye. leaf
Thus makith vertue of necessite
By pacience, and thinke that lorde is he
Of fortune aie, that naught woll of her retch;
And she ne dauntith no wight but a wretch.

And trustith this, that certis, herte swete, 1590
Or Phæbus sustir Lucina the shene
The Lion passeth, out of this Arite, al. ay
I woll ben here, withoutin any wene;
I mene, as helpe me Juno hevin's Quene, al. wene
The tenth daie, but if that deth me assaile, al. wene
I woll you sene, withoutin any faile.

And now so this be sothe (qð Troilus)
I shall well suffre unto the tenth daie, al. by ad.
Sens that I se that nede it more ben thus; s'
But for the love of God, if it be maie, 1600
So let us stelin privily awaie,
For evre' in one as for to live in rest,
Mine herte saith that it woll be the best.

O mercie God, what life is this (qð she)
Alas! ye slez me thus for very tene,
I se well now that ye mistrustin me,
For by your wordis it is well isene:
M m m m

Now

Now for the love of Cynthia the shene
Mistrust me nat thus causelesse for routh,
Sens to be true I have you plight my trowth. 1610

And thinkith wel, that somtime it is wit
To spendin a time, a time for to win,
Ne parde lorne am I nat fro you yet,
Though that we ben a daie or two atwin,
Drive out tho fantasies you have within,
And trustith me, and levith eke your sorow,
Or here my trowth, I wol nat live til morow.

For if ye wist, how fore it doeth me smerte,
Ye wouldè ceste of this; for, God, thou wost
The pure spirite ywepith in mine herte. 1620
To sene you wepin, whiche that I love most,
And that I mote gon to the Grekis hoste;
Ye, n'ere it that I wist a remedie
To come ayen, right here I wouldè die.

But certis I am not so nice a wight,
That I ne can imaginis awaie
To come ayen that daie that I have hight;
For who maie holden a thing that wol awaie?
My fathir naught, for all his queintè plaie;
And by my thrift, my wending out of Troie, 1630
Anothir daie shall tourne us all to joie.

Forthy with all mine herte I you beseke,
If that you list doen aught for my praie,
And for the love, whiche that I love you eke,
That er that I departin fro you here,
That of so gode a comfort and a chere
I maie you sene, that ye maie bring at rest
Mine hertè, whiche is at the point to brest.

And ore al this I praie you (qð she tho)
Mine ownè hert'is sothfast suffisaunce, 1640
Sith I am thine all whole withoutin mo,
That while that I am absent no plesaunce
Of othir doe me fro your remembrance,
For I am et agast, for why? men rede,
That love is thing aie full of busie drede.

For in this worlde there livith ladie none,
If that ye were untrue (as God defende!)
That so betrayid were, or wo begon
As I, that allè trouthe in you entende; 1650
And douteles, if that I othir wende,
I n'ere but dedde; and er ye cause yfinde,
For Godd'is love, so beth me naught unkinde.

To this answerid Troilus, and seide,
Now God, to whom there n'is no cause iwrie,
Ne glad, as wis I nevir to Creseide,
Siche thilkè daie I sawe her first with eye,
Was false, ne nevir shall till that I die;
At short wordis well ye maie me bileve,
I can no more, it shall be founde at preve.

Graunt mercy, gode hert mine, iwis (qð she) 1660
And, blisful Venus, let me nevir sterve,
Er I maie stonde of plesaunce in degre
To quite him well, that so well can deserve;
And while that God my wit will me conserve,
I shall so doen, so true I have you found,
That aie honour to me ward shall rebounde.

For trustith well, that your estate roiall,
Ne veine delite, nor onely worthinesse
Of you in werre, or turnaie marciall,
Ne pompe, arraie, nobley, or eke richesse, 1670
Ne madip me to rue on your distresse;
But morall vertue, groundid upon trowth,

That was the cause I first had on you routh.

Eke gentle hert, and manhode that ye had,
And that ye had (as me thought) in dispite
Every thing that sownid into bad,
As rudenesse, and peplishe appetite, al. peplishe
And that your reson bridlid your delite;
This made abovyn evèry crèture me
That I was yours, and shall while I maie dure.

And this may length of yeris nat fordoo,
Ne remuable fortunè deface;
But Jupiter, that of his might maie doe
The sorowfull be glade, so yeve us grace, to Er nightis tenne, to metin in this place,
So that it maie your herte and mine suffise;
And fare now well, for time is that ye rise.

And astir that thei long iplainid had,
And oft ikist, and straite in armis folde,
The daie gan rise, and Troilus him clad, 1690
And rufully his Ladie gan behold al. rufully
As he that felt of deth'is caris cold;
And to her grace he gan him recommaunde,
Where he was wo, this hold I no demaunde:

For mann'is heðde imaginin ne can,
Ne entendement considir, ne tongue tell,
The cruill painis of this wofull man,
That passin every tourment doune in hell;
For whan he sawe that she ne might ydwell, not Whiche that his soule out of his body rent, 1700
Withoutin more out of the chambre he went.

Explicit liber quartus.

Incipit liber quintus.

Prochin gan the fatall destine,
That Jovis hath in disposicioun,
And to you angrie Parca sustrin thre, cas. al.
Committith to doen execucioun;
For whiche Creseide must out of the toun,
And Troilus shall dwellin forth in pine,
Till Lachesis his threde no lengir twine.

The goldin-tressid Phæbus high on loft
Thryis had allè with his bemis clere re. al. shene
The Snowis molte, and Zephirus as oft to Ibrought ayen the tendir levis grene,
Sens that the sonne of Hecuba the Quene
Began to love her first, for whom his sorowe
Was all, that she departin should amorowe.

Full redy was at primè Diomede
Creseide unto the Grekis hoste to lede,
For sorowe of whiche she felt her hertè blede,
As she that ne wist what was best to rede:
And truly, as men in bokis rede, to more
Men wistè nevir woman have the care,
Ne was so lothe out of a toun to fare.

This Troilus withoutin rede or lore,
As man that hath his joyis eke forlore,
Was waiting on his ladie evirmore,
As she that was the sothfast crosse and more al. note
Of all his lust or joyis heretofore; be
But Troilus, now farwell all thy joie,
For shalt thou nevir sene her eft in Troie.

Soth

Soth is, [that] while he bode in this manere
He gan his wo full manly for to hide,
That well unneth it sene, was in his chere;
But at the yate there she should out-ride
With certain folke he hovid her to abide,
So wo bigon, all would he not him plain,
That on his hors unneth he fate for pain.

For ire he quoke, so gan his herte gnawe
Whan Diomedè on hors gan him to dight,
And saied unto himself this ilke sawe;
Alas! (quod he) thus foule a wretchidnesse
Why suffre I it? Why nill I it redresse?
Were it nat bet at onis for to die
Than evirmore in langour thus to drie?

Why nill I make at onis riche and pore
To have inough to doen er that she go?
Why nill I bring all Troie upon a rore?
Why nill I sizen this Diomedè also?
Why nill I rather with a man or two Stele her awaie? Why woll I this endure?
Why nill I helpin to mine owne cure?

But why he n'oldè doen so fell a dede,
That shall I sain, and why him list it spare;
He had in herte alwaie a manir drede
Left that Creseide, in rumour of this fare,
Should have ben slain; lo! this was al his care,
And ellis certain, as I sayid yore,
He had it doen, withoutin wordis more.

Creseide, whan she redy was to ride,
Full sorowfully sighed, and saied alas!
But forthe she more, for aught that maie betide;
And forthe she ritte a full sobirly pase,
There is none othir remedy in this case;
What wondir is, though that her fore smert,
Whan she forgoith her owne swete herte.

This Troilus in gife of curtisie
With hauke on hond, and with an hugè rout
Of knightis, rode and did her companie, Ypassing all the valey, ferre without,
And ferthir would have riddin out of doubte
Full faine, and wo was him to gone so sone,
But tourne he must, and it was eke so doen.

And right with that was Antenor icome
Out of the Grekis hoste, and every wight
Was of him glad, and saied he was welcome,
And Troilus, all n'ere his herte light,
He painid him with all his fullè might
Him to withholde of weping at the left;
And Antenor he kist, and made grete fest.

And therewithall he must his leve ytake,
And cast his eye upon her pitously,
And nere he rode, his cause for to make,
To take her by the hondè all sobirly,
And Lorde! so she gan wepin tendirly,
And he full soft and slyghly gan her seie,
Now holde your daie, and doe me not to deie.

With that his coursir tournid he about
With face full pale, and unto Diomedè
No worde he spake, ne none of all his rout;
Of whiche the sonne of Tydeus toke hede,
As he that kouthè more than the crede
In soche a craft, and by the rain her hent;
And Troilus to Troie homwardis went.

This Diomedè, that lad her by the bridell,
Whan that he sawe the folke of Troie awaie,

Thought, all my labor shall not ben on idell,
If that I maie, for somwhat shall I saie,
For at the worst, it shortin maie our waie,
I have herd saie eke timis twise twelve,
He is a fole that woll foryete him selve.

But nathelèsse, this thought he well inough,
That certainly I am aboutin naught
If that I speke of love, or make it tought;
For doutilefs if she have in her thought
Him that I gesse, he maie not ben ibrought
So sone awaie; but I shall finde a mene
That she nat yet wete shall what that I mene.

This Diomedè, as he that could his gode,
Whan this was doen, gan fallin forth in speche
Of this and that, and askin why she stode
In soche difese, and gan her eke besече,
That if that he encrefin might or eche
With any thing herese, that she should Commaunde it him, and said he doen it would.

For truily he swore her as a knight
That ther n'as thing, with which he might her plesse,
That he n'olde doen his pain, and al his might,
To doen it, for to doen her herte an ese;
And prayid her she would her sorowe apese,
And saied, iwis we Grekis can have joie
To honour you, as well as folke of Troie.

He said eke thus, I wot you thinkith straunge,
(No wondir is, for it is to you newe)
Th' acquaintance of these Trojans for to chaunge
For folke of Grece, which that ye nevir knewe;
But wouldè nevir God, but if as true
A Greke ye should among us all yfinde
As any Trojan is, and eke as kinde.

And by the cause I swore you, lo! right now,
To ben your frende, and help you to my might;
And for that more acquaintance eke of you
Have I had, than anothir straungir wight,
So fro this forth I praie you daie and night
Commaundith me, how fore so that me smerte,
To doen all that maie like unto your herte.

And that ye me wold, as your brothir trete,
And takith not my frendship in dispite;
And though your sorowes ben for thingis grete,
N'ot I nat why, but out of more respite,
Mine hert hath for to amende it grete delite;
And if I maie your harmis nat redresse,
I am right forie for your heviness.

For though ye Trojans with us Grekis wroth
Have many a daie ben; alwaie yet parde,
O God of love, in sothe we servin bothe;
And for the love of God, my Ladie fre,
Whom so ye hate, as beth not wroth with me;
For truily there can no wight you serve,
That halfe so loth your wrathè would deserve.

And n'ere it that we ben so nere the tent
Of Calchas, whiche that sene us bothè maie,
I would of this you tell all mine entent;
But this enfeld, till anothir daie;
Yeve me your honde, I am and shall be aie,
God help me so, while that my life maie dure,
Your owne, abovin every cature.

Thus said I n'ere er now to woman borne;
For God mine herte as wisly glade so,
I lovid nevir woman here beforne
As paramour, ne nevir shall no mo;

And

And for the love of God be not my fo,
All can I not to you, my Ladie dere,
Complain aright, for I am yet to lere.

160

And wondrith nought mine ownè lady bright,
Though that I speke of love to you thus blive;
For I have herd or this of many' a wight,
That lovid thing he nere saw in his live;
Eke I am not of powir for to strive Ayenst the God of Love, but him obaie
I woll alwaie, and mercie I you praie.

There beth so worthy knightis in this place,
And ye so faire, that everiche of 'hem all
Woll painin him to stondin in your grace;
But might to me so faire a grace befall
That ye me for your servaunt wouldè call,
So lowly, ne so truily you serve
N'll none of 'hem, as I shall till I sterve.

170

Creseide unto that purpose lite answerde,
As she that was with sorowe' oppressid so,
That in effect she naught his talis herde,
But here and there, now here a worde or two;
Her thought her sorowfull herte braft atwo,
For whan she gan her fathir ferre espie,
Well nigh doune of her hors she gan to sie.

But nathèlesse she thonkith Diomede
Of all his travaile and his godè chere,
And that him list his frendship to 'her bede,
And she acceptith it in gode manere,
And woll do fain that is him lefe and dere,
And trustin him she would, and well she might,
As sayid she, and from her hors she' alight.

Her fathir hath her in his armis, none,
And twentie times he kist his doughtir swete,
And saied: o derè doughtir mine welcome;
She saide eke, she was fain with him to mete,
And stode forth still, mild, muet, and manfucte;
But here I leve her with her fathir dwell,
And forthe I woll of Troilus you tell.

190

To Troie is come this wofull Troilus,
In sorowe abovin all sorowes smert,
With felon loke, and with face dispitous,
Tho sodainly doune from his hors he stert,
And through his paleyse with a swollin hert,
To chambir went, of noth'ing toke he hede,
Ne none to him dare speke o worde for drede.

200

And there his sorowes that he sparid had
He yave an issue large, and deth he cride,
And in his throwis, frenetike and mad,
He cursith Jove, Apollo, and Cupide,
He cursith Bachus, Ceres, and Cypride,
His birthe, himself, his fate, and eke nature,
And fave his Ladie, evèry creature.

210

To bed he goth, and weilith there and turneth
In furie, as doth Ixion in hell;
And in this wise he nigh till daie sojourneth;
But tho began his herte alite unswell
Through teris, which that gonin up to wel;
And pitously he cried upon Creseide,
And to himself right thus he spake and seide;

Where is mine ownè ladie lefe and dere?
Where is her whitè brest? where is it? where?
Where ben her armis, and her eyin clere
That yesterdaie this timè with me were?
Now maie I wepe alone many a tere,
And graspe about I maie, but in this place,

220

Save a pilowe, I find naught to embrace.

How shall I doen? whan shall she come again?
I n'ot alas! why let I her so go?
As wouldè God I had as tho be slain!
O herte mine Creseide! O swete so!
O Ladie mine, that I love and no mo,
To whom for evirmore mine herte I yowe,
Se how I die, ye n'll me not rescowe!

Who seith you now, my right lodèsterre?
Who sittith now or stant in your presence?
Who can comfortin now your hert'is werre?
Now I am gon, whom ye've audience?
Who spekith for me now in my absence?
Alas! no wight, and that is all my care,
For well wote'l, as ill as I ye fare.

How should I thus ten dayis full endure,
Whan I the first night havin all this tene?
And how shall she eke sorowfull creature
For tendrinesse, how shall she this sustene?
Soche wo for me! o pitous, pale, and grene
Shall woxin ben her freshe womanly face,
For langour, er she tourne unto this place!

240

And whan he fill in any slombringis,
Anon begin he shouldè for to grone,
And dremin of the dredfullist thingis
That might yben; as mete he were alone
In place horrible, making aie his mone;
Or metin that he was emongis all
His enemies, and in their hondis fall.

250

And therewithall his bodie shouldè sterte,
And with the starte all sodainly awake,
And soche a'tremour'fele about his herte,
That of the fere his bodie shouldè quake;
And therewithall he should a noise ymake;
And semin as though he should fallin depe,
From high aloft, and than he wouldè wepe,

And rewin on himself so pitously
That wondir was to here his fantasie;
Anothir time he shouldè mightily
Comfort himself, and fain it was folie,
So causèlesse soche drede and wo to drie;
And eft begin his aspre sorowes newe,
That every man might on his painis rewe.

260

Who could tell all aright, or full discrive
His wo, his plaint, his langour, and his pine?
Nat all the men that han or ben on live;
Thou, redir, maieft thy self full well devine
That soche a wo my wit can not define;
On idell for to write it should I swinke,
Whan that my wit is werie it to thinke.

270

On hevyn yet the steris werin sene,
Although full pale iwoxin was the Mone,
And whitin began the Horizon shene
All Estwardis, as it is wont to doen,
And Phœbus with his rosic cartè sone
Gan afir that to dresse him up to fare,
Whan Troilus hath sent afir Pandare.

280

This Pandare, that of all the daie beforne
Ne might have comin Troilus to se,
Although that he on his headde it had sworne,
For with the King Priam, al daie was he,
So that it laie nat in his libertè
No where to gon; but on the morowe' he went To Troilus, whan that he for him sent.

For

For in his herte he couldè well devine
That Troilus all night for sorowe woke,
And that he wouldè tell him of his pine, 290
This knewe he well inough withoutin boke;
For which to chambir streight the way he toke,
And Troilus tho sobirly he grette,
And on the bedde full sone he gan him sette.

My Pandarus (quod Troilus) the sorowe,
Whiche that I drie, I maie not long endure;
I trowe I shall not livin till to morowe;
For whiche I would alwaies on avinture
To The devisin of my sepulture
The forme; and of my movble thou dispoñe, 300
Right as The semith best is for to doyn.

But of the fire and flambe funèrall, at flames
In whiche my body brennin shall to glide,
And of the fest and playis palestrall at
At my vigile, I praie The take gode hede - at
That that be well; and offir Mars my stede,
My swerde, mine helme; and levè brothir dere,
My shelde to Pallas yeve, that shinith clere.

The poudre, in which min hert ibrend shal turn,
That praie I The thou take, and it conserve 310
In a vessell that men clepith an urne, in
Of golde, and to my lady that I serve,
For love of whom thus pitously I sterve,
So yeve it her; and doe me this plesauce
To praie her kepe it for a remembraunce.

For well I felin by my maladie,
And by my dremis, now, and yore ago,
All certainly, that I mote nedis die;
The oule eke, whiche that hight Ascalapho,
Hath astir me shright all these nightis two; 320
And, God Merc'urie, now of me woful wretch
The soule guide, and whan The list it fetche.

Pandare answerid, and saied, Troilus,
My derè frende, as I have told The yore,
That it is folie for to sorowen thus,
And causelesse, for whiche I can no more,
But who so woll not trowin rede ne lore,
I can not sene in him no remedie,
But let him worchin with his fantasie.

But Troilus, I praie The tell me now, 330
If that thou trowe er this that any wight
Hath lovid paramours as well as thou;
Ye God wor, and fro many' a worthie knight
Hath his Ladie forgon a fourtenight,
And he nat yet made halvindele the fare;
What nede is The to makin all this care?

Sens daie by daie thou maicst thy selvin se,
That from his love, or ellis from his wife
A man mote twinnin of necessite, 340
Ye, though he love her as his ownè life;
Yet n'ill he with himself thus makin strife;
For well thou wost, my levè brothir dere,
That alwaie frendis maie not ben ifere.

How doen this folke, that sene ther lovis wedded
By frendis might, as it betideth oft,
And sene hem in ther sponsis bedde ibedded?
God wote thei take it wisely faire and soft;
For why? gode hope halt up ther herte aloft;
And for thei can a time of sorowe endure,
As time hem hurtith, a time doeth hem cure. 350
So shouldist thou endure, and lettin slide
The time, and fondè to ben glad and light;

Tenne dayis n'is not so long to abide;
And sens she to comin The hath behight she has come upon the night, at last.
She n'ill her hest brekin for any wight;
For drede The nat, that she n'ill finde a waie but she will.
To come ayen, my life that durst I laie.

Thy swevines eke, and all soche fantasie
Drive out, and let hem farin to mischaunce;
For thei procede of thy melancolie, 360
That doeth The fele in slepe all this penaunce;
A strawe for all swevenis signifaunce;
God helpe me so, I coumpt hem not a Bene;
There wot no man aright what dremis mene.

For prestis of the temple te'llin this
That dremis ben the revelacions
Of Goddis, and als well thei tell iwis at last.
That thei ben infernalles illusions;
And Lechis saine, that of complections
Procedin thei, of fast, or glotomie; 370
Who wot in soche thus what thei signifie?

Eke othir sain, that through impressiõs,
As if a wight hath tast a thing in minde,
That thereof comith soche avisiõs;
And othir sam, as thei in bokis finde,
That astir timis of the yere by kinde
Men dreme, and that th' effect goth by the mone;
But leve no dreme, for it is nat to doyn, at last.

Well worth of dremis aie these oldè wives,
And truly eke augurie of these foulis, 380
For fere of which men wens, lese ther lives;
As ravin's qualm, or schriching of these oulis,
To trowin on it, bothè false and foule is;
Alas! alas! that so noble a creature
As is a man, should dredin soche ordure.

For whiche with all mine hert I The beseeche
Unto tui self that all this thou foryeve,
And rise now up, withoutin morè speche,
And let us cast how forth maie best be drive,
The time, and eke how fleshly we maie live, 390
Whan she comith, the which shall be right sone;
God helpe me so, the best is thus to doyn.

Rise, let us speke of lustie life in Troie
That we have lid, and forth the timè drive,
And eke of timè coming us rejoice,
That bringin shall our blisc, now so blive,
And langour of these twise dayis five
We shall therwith so so, or oppresse, at last.
That well unnethe it doeu shall us duresse.

This tounne is full of lordis all about, 400
And truis lastith all this menè while,
Go we play n us in so ne lustie rout,
To Sarpèdon, not hannis but a mile; at last.
And thus thou shalt the timè well begile,
And drive it forth unto that blisfull morowe,
That thou her se, that cause is of thy sorowe.

Now rise my derè brothir Troilus;
For certis it non honour is to The
To wepe, and in thy bedde to roukin thus;
For truly of o thing trust to me, 410
If thou thus ligge, a daie, or two or thre,
The folke wol wene, that thou for cowardise
The fainist sick, and that thou darst not rise.

This Troilus answerde; o brothir dere,
This knowin tolke that have isfraid pain, at last.
That though he wepe, and make sorowfull chere, at last.
That felith harme and smerte in every vain,
N n n n No

No wondir is; and though I evir plain,
Or alwaie wepe, I am nothing to blame,
Sens I have lost the cause of al my game.

But sithins of fine force I mote arise,
I shall arise, as sone as er I maie,
And God, to whom mine herte I sacrifice,
So sende us hastily the tennith daie,
For was there nevir foule so faine of Maie,
As I shall ben, whan she comith in Troie,
That cause is of my tourment and my joie.

But whiſir is thy rede (qð Troilus)
That we maie plaie us best in all this toun?
By God, my counsaile is (qð Pandarus)
To ride and plaie us with King Sarpedoun.
So long of this thei spekin up and down,
Till Troilus gan at the last assent
To rise, and forth to Sarpedon thei went.

This Sarpedon, as he that honourable
Was all his live, and full of hie prowesse,
With all that might iservid ben on table,
That deinte was, all coste it grete richesse,
He fedde hem daie by daie, that soche noblesse,
As saidin bothe the moste and eke the lest,
Was nere er that daie wiste at any fest.

Nor in this worlde there is none instrument
Delicious, through winde, or touch on corde,
As ferre as any wight hath er iwent,
That tonge tell, or herte maie recorde,
But at that fest, it was well herd acorde;
Ne of Ladies eke so faire a companie
On daunce, er tho was never sene with eye.

But what availith this to Troilus
That for his sorowe nothing of it rought;
But evir in one his herte pitous
Full busily Creseide his Ladie sought;
On her was evir all that his herte thought;
Now this, now that so fast imagining,
That gladin iwis can him no festing.

These Ladies eke, that at this feste bene,
Sens that he sawe his Ladie was awaie,
It was his sorowe on hem for to sene,
Or for to here on instrumentis plaie;
For she that of his hert berith the kaie
Was absent; lo! this was his fantasie,
That no wight shoulde makin melodie.

Nor there n'as hour in all the daie or night,
Whan he was there as no man might him here,
That he ne saied, o lovesome Ladie bright,
How have ye farin sins that ye were there?
Welcome iwis, mine owne ladie dere;
But welawaie! all this n'as but a mafe,
Fortune his love entendid but to glafe.

The lettirs eke, that she of oldè time
Had him isent, he would alone fiede
An hundrid sithe atwixtin none and prime;
Refiguring her shape, and womanhede
Within his hert; and every worde and dede,
That passid was; and thus he drove to an ende
The ferthè day, and thennis wolde he wende.

And saidè, levè brothir Pandarus,
Intendist thou that we shall here byleve
Til Sarpedon wol forth conveyin us?
Yet were it fairir that we toke our leve;
For Godd's love, let us now sone at eve
Our levè take, and homwarde let us tourne;

For trewely I n'il nat thus sojourne.

Pandare answerid, be we comin hither
To fetchin fire, and rennin home again?
God helpe me so, I can nat tellin whither
We mightin gone, if I shal sothly faine,
There any wight is of us more faine
Than Sarpedon, and if we hennis hie
Thus sodainly, I holde it vilanie;

Sith that we seydin we wouldin byleve
With him a weke, and now thus sodainly
The ferthè day to take of him our leve,
He wouldè wondrin on it trewely;
Let us holde forth our purpose fermely;
And sens that ye behightin him to abide,
Holde forward now, and aftir let us ride.

This Pandarus with mochil pine and wo
Made him to dwel; and at the wek's ende
Of Sarpedon thei toke ther leve to go;
And on ther way they sped in hem to wende:
(Qð Troilus) now lorde me grace sende
That I maie findin at mine home-comming
Creseide comin, and therwith gan he sing:

Ye halif wode; thought ywis Pandare,
And to him selfe ful softly he seide,
God wote refroidin may this hottè fare
Er Calcas sendè Troilus Creseide;
But nathelèsse he japid thus, and seide,
And swore iwis, his hert him wel behight
She wouldin come, as sone as er she might.

Whan thei unto the paleis were icomen
Of Troilus, thei doun of horse alight,
And to the chambre ther waie have thei nommen,
And unto time that it gan to night
Thei spekin of Creseide the lady bright;
And aftir this, whan that hem bothe leste,
Thei sped hem fro the suppir unto rest.

On morow as sone as day began to clere
This Troilus gan of his slepe to abreide,
And to Pandarus his owne brothir dere,
For love of God ful pitously he seide,
As go we sene the paleis of Creseide,
For sens we yet maie have none othir fest,
So let us sene her paleis at the lest!

And therwithall his meinè for to blende
A cause he fonde into the toun to go;
And to Creseid's paleis thei gon wende;
But lorde! this fely Troilus was wo,
Him thought his sorouful hert braft atwo,
For when he saw her doris sperrid all,
Wel nigh for sorow adoun he gan to fall.

Therwith when he was ware, and gan behold
How shet was every window of the place,
As frost him thought his hert began to cold;
For whiche with chaungid dedly palè face
Withoutin worde he forth by gan to pace;
And as God would, he gan so fast to ride,
That no wight of his countinaunce aspide.

Thau saide he thus: O paleis desolate,
O house of housis whilom best ydight,
O paleis empty and disconsolate,
O thou lanterne, of which queint is the light,
O paleis whilom day, that now art night,
Wel oughtrist thou to fal, and I to die,
Sens she is went, that wont was us to gie.

O paleis

O paleis whilom croune of housis al,
Enluminid with sunne of allè blisse;
O ring, of whiche the rubie is out fall, al. yf-
O cause of wo, that cause hast ben of blisse; 550
Yet sens I may no bet, faine would I kilte Thy coldè doris, durst I for this route, al. if I d.
And farwel shrine, of whiche the faint is out.

Therwith he cast on Pandarus his eie
With chaungid face, and pitous to beholde;
And whan he might his time aright aspice,
Aie as he rode, to Pandarus he tolde
His newe sorow, and eke his joyis olde,
So petously, and with so ded^e aye hewe
That every wight might on his sorow rewe. 560

Fro thennis forth he ridith up and doune,
And every thing came him to remembrance,
As he rode forth by placis of the toun
In whiche he whilom had all his plesaunce;
Lo! yondir saw I mine owne lady daunce;
And in that temple with her eyin clere
Me captive caught first my right lady dere.

And yondir have I herde ful lustily
My dere hert Crescide laugh; and yondir plaie
Sawe I her onis eke ful blisfully, al. blisfully 570
And yondir onis to me gan she saie,
Now gode swete, lovith me wel I you praye;
And yonde so godely gan she me beholde,
That to the deth mine hert is to her holde:

And at the cornir in the yondir house
Herde I mine aldirlevist lady dere
So womanly with voice melodious
Singin so wel, so godely and so clere,
That in my soule yet me thinkith I here
The blisful sowne; and in that yondir place 580
My lady first me toke unto her grace.

Than thought he thus; o blisful lorde Cupide,
Whan I the processe have in memorie
How thou me hast weried on every side,
Men might a boke make of it like a storie;
What nede is the to seke on me victorie,
Sens I am thine, and wholly at thy will, all.
What joy hast thou thine owne folke to spill?

Wel hast thou, lorde, iwroke on me thine ire,
Thou mighty God, and dredful for to greve, 590
Now mercy, lorde, thou wost wel I desire
Thy grace moste, of allè lustis leve,
And live and die I wol in thy beleve; al. if I d.
For whiche I ne aske in guerdon but a bone,
That thou Crescide aien me sende sone.

Distrainin her hert as fast to returne,
As thou doest mine to longin her to se,
Than wote I wel that she n'il nat sojourne; long
Now blisful lorde, so cruil thou ne be Unto the blode of Troie, I praie the, al. to 600
As Juno was unto the blode Thebane,
For whiche the folke of Thebis caught ther bane.

And aftir this he to the yatis wente,
Ther as Crescide out rode, a full gode paas;
And up and down there made he many a wente,
And to him selfe ful oft he said alas!
Fro hennis rode my blisse and my solas;
As wouldè blisful God now for his joie
I might her sene ayen comin to Troie.

And to the yondir hil I gan her gide,
Alas! and there I toke of her my leve,

And yonde I sawe her to her fathir ride,
For sorow of whiche mine hert shal to cleve, al. to
And hithir home I came whan it was eve,
And here I dwel, out cast from allè joie,
And shal, til I maie sene her este in Troie.

And of him selfe imaginid he, ofte
To ben defaite^d pale, and woxin less
Than he was wonte, and that men saidin softe
What may it be? who can the sothè geile 620
Why Troilus hath al this heviness?
And al this n'as but his melancolie,
That he had of him selfe suche fantasie.

Anothir time imaginin he would
That every wight that went by the wey
Had of him routhe, and that thei saine should,
I am right sory, Troilus wol dey:
And thus he drove a daie yet forth or twey,
As ye have herde; suche life gan he to lede
As he that stode betwixin hope and drede. 630

For which him likid in his songis shewe
Th' enchefon of his wo, as he best might;
And made a songe, of wordis but a fewe,
Somwhat his wofull herte for to light;
And whan he was from every mann's sight,
With softe voice he of his lady dere,
That absent was, gan sing, as ye maie here.

O sterre, of whiche I lost have all the light,
With herte fore wel ought I to bewaile
That evir derke in turment, night by night, 640
Towarde my deth with winde I stere and saile; al. to the deth with winde
For whiche the rennith night, if that I faile
The giding of thy bemis bright an houre, al. to the deth with winde
My ship and me Carybdis woll devoure.

This songè when he thus songin had, sone al. had the songin had
He fil aien into his sighis olde,
And every night, as was his wont to done, al. he was
He stode the bright monè to beholde,
And al his sorowe he to the mone tolde; al. to the mone he tolde
And said, iwis whan thou art hornid newe, 650
I shal be glad, if al the world be trewe.

I saw thine hornis olde eke by that morow al.
Whan hennis rode my bright lady dere, al. that from h.
That cause is of my turment and my sorow;
For whiche, o bright Lucina the clere,
For love of God ren fast about thy sphere;
For whan thine hornis newe ginnin to spring al. begin
Than shal she come that maie my blisse bring.

The daie is more, and lengir every night
Than thei ben wont to be, him thoughtè tho; 660
And that the sunnè went his course unright al. to
By lengir waie than it was wonte to go;
And said, iwis I drede me evir mo al. me drede
The sunnè's sonne Phaeton be on live, al. yet
And that his fathir's carre amisse he drive.

Upon the wallis fast eke would he walke,
And on the Grekis host he would yse,
And to him selfe right thus he would ytalke:
Lo! yondir is mine owne lady fre; al. my lady 670
Or ellis yondir, there the tentis be;
And thence comith this ayre that is so sore,
That in my soule I fele it doth me bore.

And hardily this winde, that more and more
Thus stoundemele encrefith in my face,
Is of my ladies depè sighis fore; al. lady the deth
I preve it thus, for in none othir space

Of al this toun, save onely in this place,
Fele I no winde, that sounith so like paine;
It saith, alas! why twiñid be we twaine?

This longè time he drivith forth right thus, 680
Til fully passid was the ninthè night;
And aie beside him was this Pandarus,
That besily did allè his full might
Him to comfort, and make his hertè light;
Yeving him hope alway the tenthè morow - nd
That she shal comen, and stintin al his sorow.

Upon that othir side eke was Creseide
With women fewe, among the Grekis strong;
For whiche ful oft a day, alas! she seide,
That I was borne, wel maie mine hertè long 690
Aftir my deth; for now live I to long,
Alas! and I ne may it hot amende;
For now is worse than evir yet I wende.

My father n'il for nothing do me grace
To gone ayen, for aught I can him quemes;
And it so be, that I my termè pace,
My Troilus [alas!] shal in his hertè deme
That I am false, and so it maie wel seme;
Thus shal I have unthonke on every side;
That I was borne so welaway the tide! 700

And if that I me put in jeopardie
To stele awaie by night, and it befall
That I be caught, I shal be holde a spie;
Or ellis lo! this drede I most of al,
If in the hondis of some wretche I fall
I n'am but lost, al be mine hertè trewe;
Now mighty God, thou on my sorow rewe.

Ful pale iwoxin was her brightè face,
Her limmis lene, as she that al the daie
Stode whan she durst, and lokid on the place 710
There she was borne, and she had dwellid aye, nd
And al the night weping alas! she laie;
And thus dispeirid out of allè cure
She lad her life, this foroufull creature. al. wofull

Ful oft a daie she sighed eke for distresse;
And in her selfe she went aie purtraying
Of Troilus the grete worthinesse,
And al his godely wordis recording, al. al.
Sens first that daie her love began to spring,
And thus she sette her wofull hert afire 720
Through remembraunce of that she gan desire.

In all this world there n'is so cruil hert
That her had herd complainin in her sorow,
That n'old have wepin for her painis smert;
So tenderly she wept, both eve and morow,
Her nedid not no teris for to borow;
And this was yet the worst of all her paine,
Ther was no wight, to whom she durst complaine.

Ful rewfully she lokid upon Troie,
Behelde the Touris high, and eke the Hallis; 730
Alas! (q's she) the plesaunce and the joie,
The whiche that now al turnid into gal is,
Have I had oft in within yondir wallis; the O Troilus, what doest thou now, she seide?
Lord, whethir thou yet think upon Creseide!

Alas! that I ne had trowid on your lore,
And went with you, as ye me redde er this,
Than had I now not sighid halfe so sore,
Who might have said, that I had don amis
To stele awaie with suche one as he is? 740
But al to late comith the lectuarie,

Whan men the corse unto the grave carie:

To late is now to speke of that matere;
Prudence, alas! one of rhine eyin thre
Me lackid alway, er that I came here;
For on time passid wel remembrid me, past J. 20.
And present time eke coude I wel yse;
But future time, er I was in the snare,
Could I not sene, that causith now my care.

But nathèlessè, betide what may betide, 750
I shal to morow' at night, by est or west,
Out of this hoste stele, on some manir side, al. by
And gon with Troilus, where as him left;
This purpose wol I holde, and this is best;
No force of wickid tongis jonglerie, al.
For er on love have wretchis had Envie:

For who so wol of every worde take hede,
Or rul' him by every wight's wit, self
Ne shal he nevir thrivin out of drede;
For that that some men blamin ever yet, 760
Lo! othir manir folke commendin it;
And as for me, for al suche variaunce,
Felicite clepe I my suffisaunce.

For whiche, withoutin any wordis mo,
To Troie I wol, as for conclusioun;
But God it wote, er fully monthis two,
She was ful ferre fro that entencioun;
For bothè Troilus and Troie toun
Shall knotèlessè thorought her hertè slide; through out
For she wol take a purpose (for) to abide. al. to bide, to bide. 770

This Diomede, of whom I you tel gan,
Goth now within himselfe aie arguing,
With al the sleight and al that er he can,
How he maie best, with shortist tarying,
Into his nette Creseid's herte bring;
To this entent he couthe nevir fine, al.
To fishin her, he laide out hoke and line.

But nathèlessè, wel in his hert he thought
That she n'as nat without a love in a roie;
For nevir sithin he her thennis brought 780
Ne couthe he sene her laugh, or makin joie;
He n'ist how best her hert for to acore;
But for t'assey, he said nought it ne greveth; al. me.
For he that naught assayith, naught atcheve:h. he cheu.

Yet said he to him selfe upon a night,
Now am I nat a sole, that wote wel howe
Her wo'is, for love of anothir wight, al. knight
And herupon to gon assaie her now?
I maie well were it n'il nat ben my prowè;
For wise folke in bokis it expresse; thate. 790
Men shal nat wowe a wight in hevinesse.

But who so might ywinnin suche a flour
Fro him, for whom she mournith night and daie,
He might wel saine he were a conqueroure;
And right anone, as he that bold was aie,
Thought in his hert, happin what happin may, happin may
Al should I die, I wol her hertè seche;
I shal no more lesin but my speche. own.

This Diomede, as bokis us declare,
Was in his nedis prest and coragous, 800
With sternè voice, and mighty limmis square,
Hardy and testife, strong, and chévaious,
Of dedis like his fathir Tydeus;
And some men saine, he was of tongè large,
And heire he was of Calydon and Aige.
al. lord.

Creseide

Creseide^{ment} mene ywas of her stature;
Therto of shape, of face, and eke of chere
There ne mightis ben no fairir creature;
And ofin timis this was her manere
To gone itressid with her heris clere 810
Doun by her colere, at her backe behinde,
Which with a threde of gold she wouldè binde.

And save^{that} her browis joynedin isere,
There n'as no lacke, in aught I can espie;
But for to spekin of her eyin clere,
Lo! truly thei writtin that her seien, ^{at the}
That paradis stode formid in her cien;
And with her richè beautè evirmore
Strove love in her, aie which of hem was more.

She sobre was, simple, and wise withall,
The best inorishid eke that might be;
And godely of her speche in generall,
Charitable, chastely, lusty, and fre;
Ne nevirmore ne lackid her pitè
Tendreherid, and sliding of corage;
But truly I can nat tel her age.

And Troilus wel woxin was in hight,
And complete, formid by proporcioun
So wel, that kinde it naught amedin might,
Yong, fresh, and strong, and hardy as Lioun, 830
And trewe as stele, in eche condicioun,
One of the best enterchid creature
That is or shal, while that the world maie dure.

And certainly in story it is fonde
That Troilus was nevir to no wight,
As in his time, in no degre seconde,
In daring do, that longith to a knight;
Al might a Giaunt passin him of might,
His hert aie with the first and with the best
Stode peregall to dare done what him left. 840

But for to tellin forth of Diomede,
It shal that astir on the th tennith daie
Sens that Creseide out of the cite yede,
This Diomede, as fresh as braunche in Maie,
Came to the tentè there as Calchas laie,
And fainid him with Calchas have to done;
But what he mente, I shal you tellin sone.

Creseide, at shorte wordis for to tel,
Welcomid him, and doun him by her sette;
And he was ethe inough to makin dwel; 850
And afir this, withoutin longe lette,
The spicis and the wine men iorth hem sette;
And forthe thei speke of this and that isere,
As frendis done, of whiche some shal ye here.

He gan first fallin of the warre in speche
Betwixin them and the folke of Troie toun,
And of th' assiege he gan tke her beleche
To tellin him what was her opinioun;
Fro that demaunde he so descendith doun
To askin her, if that her straungè thought 860
The Grekis gife, and werkis that thei wrought:

And why her fathir taryith so long - ^{at}
To weddin her unto some worthy wight;
Creseide, that was in her painis strong
For love of Troilus her ownè knight,
So ferforth as she conning had or might, ^{at the} Answerde him tho; but as of his entente
It semid that she ne wist what he mente.

But nathèlesse this ilkè Diomede
Gan on him selfe assure, and thus he seide; 870

If I aright have takin on you hede,
Me thinkith thus, o lady mine Creseide,
That sens I first hond on your bridil leide, ^{with that}
When I out came of Troie by the morow, ^{ye ca-out of Tr.}
Ne might I nevir sene you but in sorow. ^{at the end}

I can nat saine what maie the causè be,
But if for love of some Trojan it were,
The whiche right sore wouldin athinkin me, ^{for-}
That ye for any wight that dwellith there
Shuldin yspil a quartir of a tere, ^{at} 880
Or pitously your selvin so begile;
For dreddelesse it is nat worthe the while.

The folke of Troie, as who saith al and some,
In prison ben, as ye your selvin se,
Fro thennis shal nat one on live come, ^{never}
For al the Golde atwixin sunne and se;
Trustith wel this, and understondith me, ^{at the right well be-}
There shal nat one to mercy gone on live,
Al were he Lord of worldis twis five. ^{ye-}

Such wrech on them for fetchin of Helene 890
There shal be take, er that we hennis wende,
That Manes, whiche that Goddis ben of peine,
Shal ben agast that Grekis wol hem shende;
And men shal drede unto the world's ende
Fro hennis forthe to ravishe any Quene;
So cruel shal our wreche on them be tene. ^A

And but if Calchas led us with ambages,
That is to saine, with double wordis slic,
Suche as men clepen a word with two visages, 900
Ye shal wel knowin that I do nat lie,
And al this thing right sene it with your eie,
And that anon ye n'il nat trowe how sone;
Now takith hede, for it is for to done.

What wenin ye that your wise fathir would Have yevin Antenor for you anon,
If he ne wist that the cite should ^{be not} Distroyid ben? why may? so mote I gone,
He knew ful wel there shal nat scapin one;
That Trojan is; and for the gretè fere
He durst nat that ye dwellid lengir there. 910

What wol ye more, o lovesome lady dere?
Let Troie and Trojans fro your herte passe, Drive out the bittir hope, and make gode chere, - ^{at, at your}
And clepe ayen the beautè of your face,
That ye with saltè teris so deface;
For Troie is brought in suche a jeopardie
That it to save is now no remedie.

And thinkith wel, ye shal in Grekis finde
A love more parfite, er that it be night,
Than any Trojan is, and more kinde, ^{at the} 920
And bet to servin you wol don his might;
And if that ye vouchsafe my lady bright,
I wol ben he, to servin you my selve,
Ye, levir than be lorde of Grekis twelve. ^{at the king}

And with that word he gan to waxin red;
And in his speche a litil while he quoke,
And cast aside a litil with his hed,
And stente a while, and afirwarde he woke,
And sobrelly on her he threwe his loke; ^{at the made}
And said, I am, al be it to you no joie, 930
As gentle a man, as any wight in Troie.

For if my fathir Tydeus, he seide,
Ilivid had, tho I had ben er this ^{at the b. lony or th.}
Of Calidony and Arge a king, Creseide, ^{at the}
And so hope I that I shal yet iwis; ^{at the} O o o o ^ But

But he was slaine (alas!) the more harm is,
Unhappily at Thebis al to rathes;
Polynices, and many' a man to scathe.

But hertè mine, fithè that I am your man,
And ye ben the first, of whom I seeke grace, 940
To servin you as hertely as I can,
And evir shal while I to live have space,
So that, 'er I depart out of this place,
Ye wol me grauntin that I maie to morow
At bettir laisir tel you of my sorow.

What should I tell his wordis that he seide?
He spake inough for o daie at the mest;
It previth wel he spake so, that Creseide
Graunted on the morow at his request
Forthy to spekin with him at the leste; 950
So that he n'olde spekin of suche matere;
And thus she to him said, as ye mowe here.

As she that had her hert on Troilus
So fast yset, that none might it arace;
And straungely she spake, and seide thus:
O Diomede, I love that ilkè place
There I was borne; and Jovis of thy grace
Delivre' it sone of al that doth it care;
God for thy might so leye it wel to fare;

That Grekis wold ther wrath on Troyè wreke, 960
If that thei might, I know it wel iwis;
But it shal naught befallin as ye speke,
And God toforne; and farthir ovir this,
I wote my fathir wife and redy is,
And that he me hath bought, as ye me tolde,
So dere; I am to him the more yholde.

That Grekis ben of high condicioun
I wote eke wel; but certaine men shall finde
As worthy folkè within Troie toun,
As conning, as parlite, and eke as kinde, 970
As ben betwixtin Orcades and Inde;
And that ye couldin wel your lady serve
I trowe eke wel, her thonke for to deserve.

But as to speke of love, iwis she seide,
I had a lorde, to whom I weddid was,
The whose mine hert was al til that he deide; until
And othir love, as helpe me now Pallas,
There in mine hert ne is, ne nevir was;
And that ye ben of noble' and high kinrede
I have wel herde it tellin out of drede. 980

And that doth me to have so gret a wonder
That ye wol scornin any woman so;
Eke God wote, love and I ben fer asonder,
I am disposid bet, so mote I go,
Unto my deth to plaine and makin wo;
What I shal astir done, I can nat saie,
But truly as yet me liste nat plaie. th. 1/2

Mine hert is now in tribulacioun,
And ye in armis, besy daie by daie; ben
Hereastir when ye wonnin have the toun, 990
Paravintur than so it happin maie That whan I se that I nevir ere saie; yet never is Than wol I werke that I nevir ere wrought;
This word to you inough sustisin ought.

To morow eke wol I speke with you faine,
So that ye touchin nought of this matere;
And whan you list, ye maie come here againe;
And er ye gon thus muche I saie you here,
As helpe me Pallas with her heris clere,
Yf that I should of any Greke have routh, 1000

It should geve your selvin by my trouthe.

I saie nat therfore that I wol you love,
Ne saie nat naie, but in conclusioun,
I menè wel by God that sit above;
And therwithal she cast her eyin down,
And gan to sigh, and saide O Troyè toun,
Yet bidde I God, in quiet and in rest
I maie The fene or do mine hertè brest.

But in effeete, and shortely for to saie;
This Diomede al freshly newe againe 1010
Gan pressin on, and fast her mercy praie;
And astir this, the sothè for to saie,
Her glove he toke, of which he was ful faine;
And finally, whan it was woxin eve,
And al was wel, he rose and toke his leve.

The bright Venus solowid and aie taught
The waie there brode Phœbus doune alight,
And Cytherea her chare-horse o'r raught
To whirle into the Lioun, if she might,
And Signifer his candils shewith bright, 1020
Whan that Creseide unto her bed wente, al. rest.
Within her fathir's faire brightè tente,

Retourning in her soule aie up and down
The wordis of this sodaine Diomede,
His gret estate, and peril of the toun,
And that she was alone, and haddè nede brede
Of frendis helpe; and thus began to drede al. cause.
The causis why, the sothè for to tell,
That she toke fully purpòse for to dwell.

The morow came, and gostly for to speke 1030
This Diomede is come unto Creseide,
And shortly, lest that ye my talè breke,
So wel he for himselfin spake and seide,
That al her sighis sore adoun he leide,
And finally, the sothè for to saie,
He rest her of the grete of alle her pain.

And astir this, the story tellith us
That she unto him yave the faire baie stede,
The whiche she onis wan of Troilus, al. had
And eke a broche (and that was litil nede) 1040
That Troilus was, she yave this Diomede;
And eke the bet from sorowe him to releve
She made him were a pence of her fleve.

I finde eke in the story ellis where,
Whan through the body hurt was Diomede
Of Troilus, tho wepte she many' a tere,
Whan that she saw his widè woundis blede,
And that she toke to kepin him gode hede;
And for to helpe him of his woundes smerte,
Men faine, I n'ot, that she yave him her herte.

But truly the story tellith us, therewithal.
There madin nevir woman more wo
Than she, whan that she falsid Troilus;
She saide, alas! for now is clene ago
My name in trouthe of love for evirmo;
For I have falsid one the gentillest
That ever was, and one the worthiest. al. other.

Alas! of me unto the world's ende
Shall neithir ben iwritin or ifong al. never 1060
No gode wordes; for these bokis woll me shende;
Irollid shall I ben on many' a tong; al. it
Throughout the world my bell shall be yrong;
And women moste woll hatin me of all;
Alas, that soche a caas me should befall!

Thei woll fain, in as moche as in me is,
I have 'hem doen dishonour, welawaie!
All be I not the first that did amis,
What helpith that, to doen my blame awaie?
But sens I se there is no bettir waie,
And that to late is now for me to rue,
To Diomed I woll algate be true. 1070

But, Troilus, sens I no bettir maie,
And sens that thus departin ye and I,
Yet praie I God so yeve you right gode daie,
As for the gentillist knight, truely
That er I sawe, to servin faithfully,
And best can aie his ladie's honour kepe,
(And with that worde she braist anon to wepe)

And certis you ne hatin shall I never,
And frend's love that shall ye have of me, 1080
And my gode worde, all shoud I livin ever,
And truely I would right forie be
For to sein you in adversite, al. To se y. in any adv.
And gittilese I wot well I you leve;
And all shall passe, and thus take I my leve.

But truely how long it was bitwene
That she forsoke him for this Diomed,
There is none auethour tellith it, I wene;
Take every man now to his bokis hede,
He shall no termē findin, out of drede; 1090
For though that he began to wowe her sone,
Er he her wan yet was there more to done.

Ne me ne list this felie woman chide,
Ferthir than that the storie woll devise;
Her name alas is publishid so wide,
That for her gilt it ought inough suffise;
And if I might excuse her in some wise,
For she so forie was for her untrouthe,
Iwis I would excuse her yet for routhie.

This Troilus, as I before have told, 1100
Thus drivith forth, as wel as he, hath might;
But oftin was his herte hore and cold,
And namily that ilke ninithe night,
Whiche on the morowe she had him behight,
To come ayen, God wote full little rest
Had he that night; nothing to slepe him left.

The laurir-crownid Phoebus with his herte
Gan in his course, aie upward as he went,
To warmē of the Est se the wavis were,
And Circe's doughtir song, with freshe entent, 1110
Whan Troilus his Pandare aftir sent;
And on the wallis of the tounne thei pleide,
To loke if thei can sene aught of Creseide,

Till it was none thei stodin for to se
Who that there came; and every manir wight;
That came fro ferre, thei saidin it was she,
Till that thei couldin knowin him aright; 1120
Now was his herte dull, now was it light;
And thus bejapid stodin for to stare
About naught, this Troilus and Pandare.

To Pandarus this Troilus tho seide,
For aught I wot, before none skirly
Into this tounne ne comith nor Creseide;
She hath inough to doin, hardily there
To twinnin from her fathir, so trowe I;
Her oldē fathir woll yet make her dine
Er that she go, God yeve his herte pine.

Pandare answerd, it maie well ben certain,
And forthy let us dine, I The beseeche;

And aftir none than maist thou come again; 1130
And home thei go, withoutin more speche;
And comin ayen; but long maie thei seche
Er that thei findin that thei aftir gape;
Fortune 'hem bothe ythinkith for to jape.

(Q^d Troilus) I se well now that she Is taryid with her old fathir so,
That er she come it woll nigh evin be,
Come forthe, I woll unto the yate go,
These portirs ben unkonning evirmo,
And I woll doen 'hem' holdin up the yate, 1140 al. holde open & holden ope.
As naught ne were, although she comin late.

The daie goth fast, and aftir that came eve,
And yet came nat to Troilus Creseide;
He lokith forth by hedge, by tre, by greve,
And ferre his hekke ovir the wall he leide; al. out of
And at the last he tournid him, and seide,
By God I wote her mening now, Pandare;
Almoste iwis all newe was all my care.

Now doutilef; this Ladie can her gode;
I wote she comith riding privily; 1150 al. meneth riding, al. hidden
I commendin her wisdome by mine hode,
She woll nat makin, peple nicily al. the Gaurē on her whan she cometh; but softly - 1150
By night into the tounne she thinkith ride;
And dere brothir, thinke nat long to abide;
al. ne th.

We have naught elis for to doen iwis,
And Pandarus, now wilt thou trowin me,
Have here my trouth, I se her, yond she is,
Heve up thine eyin, man, maist thou nat se?
Pandare answerid, naie so mote I The; 1160 t
All wrong by God, what saist thou man? wher art?
That I se yonde asfarre n'is but a carte.

Alas! thou saiest right sothe (q^d Troilus)
But hardly it is not all for nought
That in mine herte I now rejoice thus,
It is ayenst some gode; I have a thought,
N'ot I nat how, but sens that I was wrought
Ne felt I soche a comfort dare I saie;
She cometh to night, my life that durst I lay.

Pandare answerde, it maie be well inough, 1170
And helde with him of all that er he saied,
But in his herte he thought, and soft he lough,
And to himself full sobirly he saied,
From hasilwodde, there joly Robin plaied,
Shall come all that that thou abidist here,
Ye, farwell all the snowe of fernē yere. al. farryere.

The Wardein of the yatis gan to call
The folke, which that without the yatis were,
And badde 'hem drivin in ther bestis all,
Or all the night thei must bylevin there;
And ferre within the night, with many' a tere, 1180
This Troilus gan homward for to ride,
For well he seeth it helpith nat to abide. - 1180

But nathielese he gladdid him in this, al. th.
He thought he misaccomptid had his daie;
And saied, I underlande have all amis;
For thiike night I last Creseide saie, al. th.
She saied I shall ben here, if that I maie,
Er that the Mone, O my dere herte swete,
The Lion passe out of this Ariete.

For whiche she maie yet ho'drall her behest; 1190
And on the morowe to the yate he went,
And up and doune, by West and eke by Est,
Upon the wallis made he many' a went;

But

1162. al. That the yonder n'is but a fare cart.
al. . . . yonde n'is but a sorry cart.

for so in d.
But al for naught, his hope alway him blent;
For which at night in forow and sighes fore
He went him home, withoutin any more.

his
This hope all clene out of his herte fledde,
He ne' hath wheron now lengir for to hong;
But for the pain him thought his herte bledd;
So wer his throwis sharp, and wondir strong; 1200
For whan he sawe that she abode so long,
He ne wist what he judgin of it might,
Sens she hath brokin that she him behight.

rid.
The thirde, the fourth, the fift, and the sixt daie
Aftir tho dayis tenne, of whiche I told,
Betwixin hope and drede his herte laie,
Yet somewhat trusting on her hestis old;
But whan he sawe she n'olde her termis hold,
He can now sene none othir remedie
But for to shapin him sone for to die. 1210

there
Therewith the wickid spirit, God us blesse!
Whiche that men clepin The wode Jalousie,
Can in him crepe, in all this hevynesse, al. his.
For whiche, bicause he wouldin sone die,
He ne' etc ne dronke for his melancolie;
And eke from every companie he fledde;
This was the life that all this time he ledde.

He so defaite was, that no manir man
Unnerhis him might knowin there he went,
So was he lene, and therto pale and wan, 1220
And sebie, that he walkith by potent; - d
And with his ire he thus himselfin shent;
But whoso askid him wherof him smerte,
He saied, his harme was all-about his herte.

Priam full oft, and eke his mothir dere,
His bretherne, and his susterin gan him frain,
Why he so wofull was in all his chere,
And what thing was the cause of al his pain;
But all for naught, he n'olde his cause plain;
But saied, he felt a grevous maladie 1230
About his herte, and fain he wouldè die.

ayde.
So on a daie he laie him doune to slepe;
And to bisellit that in slepe him thought, his
That in a forest fast he walked to wepe
For love of her, that him these painis wrought;
And up and doune as he that forest sought
He met he sawe a Bore, with tuskis grete,
That slept ayenist the bright Sunn's hete:

And by this Bore, fast in the Jarmis fold,
Laie kissing aie his ladie bright Creseide; 1240
For sorowe of whiche, whan he it gan behold,
And for dispite, out of his slepe he breide,
And loude he cried on Pandarus, and seide,
O Pandarus, now knowe I crop and rote,
I n'am but dedde, there n'is none othir bore;

My lady bright Creseide hath me betraide,
In whom I trustid moste of any wight,
She elliswhere hath now her hert apaied,
The blisfull Goddis, thorough ther grete might Have in my dreame isshew'd it full right, me 1250
Thus in my dreame Creseide have I beholde
And all this thing to Pandarus he tolde.

O my Creseide, alas! what subtilte,
What newe lust, what beaute, what science?
What wrathe of juste cause have ye unto me?
What gilt of me, what fell experience
Hath fro me rafte alas! thine advertence?
O trust! O faith! (q's he) O depe assuraunce!

Who hath me rafte Creseide, all my plesaunce?

Alas! why let I her from hennis go? al. you. 1260
For whiche well nigh out of my wit I breide;
Who shall now trowe on any othis mo?
God wote, I wende, O Ladie bright Creseide,
That every worde was Gospell that ye seide;
But who maie bet begile, if that him list,
Than he on whom men wenin best to trift?

What shall I doen, my Pandarus? alas!
I felin now so sharpe a newe pain, &
Sens that there is no remedy in this caas, e. / lyth.
That bet were it I with mine hondis twain 1270
My selvin flowe, than alwaie thus to plain; al. the m. page
For through the deth my wo shuld have an ende,
There every daie with life my self I shende.

Pandare answerde and saied, alas the while
That I was borne! have I nat saied er this
That dremis many a manir man begile?
And why? For folke expoundin hem amis;
How darst thou fain that false thy ladie is, u!
For any dreame, right for thine owne drede?
Let be this thought, thou canst no dremis rede. not

Paravintre there thou dremest of this bore,
It maie so be that it maie signifie
Her fathir, whiche that old is and eke hore,
Aye the sunne lyith on point to die,
And she for sorowe ginnith wepe and crie,
And kissith him, there he lieth on the ground;
Thus shuldift thou thy dreame aright expound.

How might I than doin (q's Troilus)
To knowe of this, yea were never so lite?
Now saiest thou wisely (q's this Pandarus) 1290 al. the My rede is this, sens thou canst well endite,
That hastily a lettir thou her write,
Thorough which thou shalt wel bringin about, it
To knowe a soth of that thou art in dout. which

And se now why: for this I dare well fain,
That if so is, that she untrue ybe,
I can not trowe that she woll write again;
And if she write, thou shalt full sone ise,
As whethir she hath any libertè
To come ayin, or ellis in some clause; 1300
If she be let, she wol assigne a cause.

Thou hast not writtin to her sens she went,
Nor she to The; and this I durst wele laie,
There maie soche causè ben in her entent,
That hardily thou wolt thy selvin saie
That her abode the best is for you twaie;
Now write her than, and thou shalt felle sone al. the
A soth of all, there is no more to done.

Acordid ben to this conclusioun,
And that anon, these ilke lordis two; 1310
And hastily sat Troilus adoun, sille
And rollith in his herte to and fro,
How he maie best discrivin her his wo;
And to Creseide his owne ladie dere
He wrote right thus, and saied as ye maie here. al.

I shall thus withdraw your herte & love from me!

As oft as mattir occupyth place,
Me recommaunde unto your noble grace.

Likith it you to wetin, swetè herte,
As ye well knowin, how long time agon
That ye me left in aspre painis smerte, Whan that ye wentin, of whiche yet bore non Have I now had, but evir worse bigon
Fro daie to daie am I, and so mote dwell,
While it you list, of wele and wo my well.

For whiche to you, with dredefull hertè true 1330
I write, as he that sorowe driveth to write,
My wo, that every houre encrefith newe,
Complaining as I dare, or can endite,
And that defacid is, that maie ye wite
The teris, which that from mine eyin rain,
That wuldin speke, if that thei durst, and plain.

You first besече I, ^{with} that your eyin clere
To loke on this defoulid ye nat hold; ^{I coude complaine.} al. Unfold.
And ore all this, that ye, my ladie dere, Woll vouchsafin this lettir to behold; 1340
And by the cause eke of my caris cold,
That flæth my wit, if aught amis me sterre,
Foryevith it me, mine owne swetè herte.

If any servaunt durst or ought of right
Upon his ladie pitously complain,
Than wene I that I ought to be that wight,
Confidrid this, that ye these monthis twain

But tenne dayis ye n'olde in hoste sojourn;
But in two monethis yet ye not retourne. 1350

But for as moche, as me mote nedis like
All that you list, I dare nat plainin more;
But humbly with sorowfull sighis like,
You write I mine unrestie sorowes fore;
Fro daie to daie desiring evirmore
To knowin fully, if your will it were,
How ye have fared and don, while ye be there.

The whose welfare and hele eke God encrese
In honour soche, that upward in degré
It growe alwaie, so that it nevir cese, 1360
Right as your herte aie can, my ladie fre, Devise, I praie to God so mote it be;
And graunt it, that ye' sone upon me rewe,
As wisely as in all I' am to you true.

And if you likith knowin of the fare
Of me, whose wo there maie no wight discrive;
I can no more, but chest of every care, -e./
At writing of this lettir I' am on live; was
All redy out my wofull ghost to drive,
Whiche I delaie, and holde him yetin honde 1370
Upon the sight of mattir of your sonde.

Mine eyin two, in vain with whiche I se,
Of sorowfull teres salt am woxin wellis,
My song in plaint of mine adversitè,
My gode in harme, mine ese eke woxin hel is,
My joie in wo, I can sey now nought ellis, al. you.
But tournid is, for whiche my life I warie,
Evèry joie or ese in his contrarie.

Which with your coming home ayen to Troy
Ye maie redresse, and more a thousande sithe, 1380
Than er I had, encreffin in me joie,
For was there nevir hertè yet so blithe
To have his life, as I shall ben as swithe
As I you se, and though no manir routh
Can mevin you, yet thinkith on your trouthe.

And if so be my gilt hath deth deserved,
Or if you list no more upon me se,
In guerdon yet of that I have you served,
Besече I you, mine owne ladie fre, hertis
That hereupon ye wuldin write to me, 1390
For love of Jovis, my right lodè sterre, al. sterre.
That deth maie make an ende of al my werre. werre.

If othir cause aught doeth you for to dwel,
That with your lettir ye me recomfort;
For though to me your absence is an hell, the
With pacience I woll my wo comfort, al. comfort, support.
And with your lettir of hope I woll disport;
Now writith, swete, and let me thus nat plain;
With hope or deth deliverith me fro pain.

Iwis mine owne derè hertè true 1400
I wote that whan ye next upon me se,
So lost have I mine hele, and eke mine hewe,
Creseide shall not conne tho knowin me;
Iwis, mine hert'is daie, my ladie fre,
So thurstith aie mine hertè to behold
Your beauté, that unneth my life I hold.

I saie no more, all have I for to sey
To you well more than that I tellin maie,
But whethir that ye doe me live or dey,
Yet praie I God, so yeve you right gode daie, 1410
And farith well, thou godely faire freshe Maie,
As ye that life or deth me maie commaunde,
And to your trouthe aie I me recommaunde,

With helè soche, that but ye yevin me
The samin hele, I shall non hele yhave;
In you lieth, whan you list that it so be,
The daie, in whiche me clothin shall my grave;
And in you my life, in you might to save
Me fro difese of all my painis smerte;
And farith now wele, myne own derè swetè herte. 1420
[Le vostre T.]

This lettir forth was sent unto Creseide,
Of whiche her answeere in effect was this;
Full pitously she wrote ayen, and seide,
That all so sone as she might iwis al. as she might.
She would come, and amende that was amis;
And finally she wrote and sayd then, al. then.
She would ycome; ye, but she n'ist not when. al.

But in her lettir madin she soche festes,
That wondir was, and swore she loved him best;
Of whiche he found but botomles bielles; 1430
But, Troilus, thou maiest now Est and West al. or Pipe in an Ivie lese, if that The lest;
Thus goth the world, God shild us fro mischaunce,
And every wight that menith trouthe avaunce.

Encreffin gan the wo fro daie to night
Of Troilus, for taryng of Creseide,
And lessin gan his hope and eke his might,
For whiche al down he in his bedde him leide,
He ne'ete, dronke, ne slept, ne worde seide; al. no
Imagining aie that she was unkinde; 1440
For which well nigh he wext out of his mind.

This dreame, of which I told have eke beforne, al. beforne.
Maie nevir come out of his remembraunce;
He thought aie well he had his ladie lorn,
And that Jovis, of his hie purveiaunce,
Him shewed had in slepe the signifaunce
Of her untrouth, and his disavinture,
And that the bore was shewed him in figure.

For whiche he for Sibylle his listir sent

That

That callid was Cassandre' eke all about, 1450
And all his dreame he told her er he stent,
And her besought assoilin him the doubt
Of the strong Bore, with all his tuskis stout,
And finally, within a litil stounde,
'Cassandra him gan thus his dreame expound.

She gan first smile, and said, O brothir dere,
If thou a sothe of this desirest to knowe,
Thou must a fewe of oldè stories here;
To purpose, how that fortune ovirthrowe 1460
Hath lordis old, through which within a throwe
Thou shalt this Bore well know, and of what kinde
He comin is, as men in bokis finde.

Diana, whiche that wrothe was and in ire,
For Grekis n'olde doin her Sacrifice,
Ne encens on her Altar set on fire,
She, for that Grekis gon her so dispise,
Ywrake her in a wondir cruill wise;
For with a Bore as grete as oxe in stall
She made up-frete ther corne and vinis all.

To sea the Bore was all the countrie reised, 1470
Emongis whiche there came this Bore to se,
A maid, one of this worlde the best ipraised;
And Melcager, lorde of that countrè,
He lovid so this freshe maidin fre,
That with his manhode, er he wouldè stent
This Bore he slough, and her the hed he sent.

Of whiche, as oldè bokis tellin us,
There rose a conteke and a grete envie;
And of this Lorde descendid Tydeus 1480
By ligne, or ellis oldè bokis lie;
But how this Melcager gan to die
Thorough his mothir, woll I you not tell,
For all to long it werin for to dwell.

She tolde eke how Tydeus, er she stent,
Unto the strongè citè of Thebes
(To claimin kingdome of the citè) went,
For his felawè dan Polynices;
Of whiche the brothir dan Eteocles
Full wrongfully of Thebis held the strength;
This tolde she by processe all by length. 1490

She tolde eke how Hemonides astarte,
Whan Tydeus slough fiftie knightis stoute;
She tolde eke all the Prophecies by herte,
And how that seven kingis with ther rout
Besiegedin the citè all aboute;
And of the holie Serpent, and the well,
And of the furies, all she gan him tell.

*Associat profugus Tydeus primo Polynicem, Tydea legatum docet, insidiasque secundus,
Tertius Harmoniden canit, & vatem latitantem,
Quartus habet Reges ineuntes praxia septem,
Lemniadum Furia quinto narrantur, & angues,
Archemori bustum sexto, ludique leguntur,
Dat Thebis vatem Graiorum septimus umbris,
Ostavo cecidit Tydeus, spes, vita Pelasgum,
Hippomedon nono moritur cum Parthenopao,
Fulmine percussus decimo Capaneus superatur,
Undecimo sese perimunt per vulnera fratres,
Argivum fletum narrat duodenus, & ignem.*

Of Archinorie's burying, and the plaies;
And how Amphiaras fill through the grounde;
How Tydeus was slain, lorde of Argeies; 1500
And how Hipome'don in a litil stounde
Was dreint; and dedde Parthenope of wound;
And also how Capaneus the proude

With thonder-dint was slain, that cryid loude.

She gan eke tell him, how that eithir brother;
Eteocles and Polynice also,
At a scarmishe eche of 'hem slough the other;
And of Argivis weping and 'ther mo; 1510
And how the toun was brent, she told eke tho;
And tho descendid doune from jettis old
To Diomedè, and thus she spake and told:

This ilkè Bore betokenith Diomedè
Tydeus sonne, that doune descendid is Fro Mele'ager, that made the Bore to blede;
And thy Ladie, where so she be iwis,
This Diomedè her herte hath, and she his;
Wepe if thou wolt, or leve, for out of dout
This Diomedè is in, and thou art out.

Thou faiest nat sothe (qð he) thou forcereffe,
With all thy falsè ghost of Prophecie; 1520
Thou wenist ben a grete devincreffe,
Now seest thou nat this sole of fantasie
Painin her upon ladies for to lie;
Awaie (qð he) there Jovis yeve The sorowe,
Thou shalt be fals para'vntyre er to morow.

As well thou mightist lien on gode Alceste,
That was of all creaturis (but men lie)
That evir weris, kindist and the beste; 1530
For whan her husbonde was in jeopardie
To die himself, but if she wouldè die,
She chese for him to die, and gon to hell,
And starfe anon, as us the bokis tell.

Cassandre goeth, and he with cruill herte
Foryate his wo, for angre of her speche;
And fro his bedde all sodainly he sterte,
As though all whole him had imade a leche;
And daie by daie he gan enquire and seche
A sothe of this, with all his besy cure,
And thus he drivith forth the his avinture.

Fortune, whiche that the permutacion 1540
Of all thinges hath, as it is her committed
Through purveiaunce and disposicion
Of high Jove, as reignis shall ben yfitted
Fro folk to folk, or whan thei shal ben smitted,
Gan pull awaie the fethirs bright of Troie
Fro daie to daie, till thei ben bare of joie.

Emong all this, the fine of the' jeopardie 1550
Of Hector gan approchin wondir blive;
The fatis would his soule should unbodie,
And shapin had a mene it out to drive;
Aycnst whiche fate him helpith not to strive;
But on a daie to fightin gan he wende,
At whiche alas! he caught his liv'is ende.

For whiche me thinkith every manir wight,
That hauntith armis, oughtin to bewaile
The deth of him that was so noble' a knight;
For as he drough a king by th' aventail
Unware of this, Achilles through the maile
And through the bodie gan him for to rive;
And thus the worthy knight was rest of live. 1560

For whom, as oldè bokis tellin us,
Was made soch wo, that tong it maie nat tel,
And namily the sorowe' of Troilus,
That next him was of worthinesse the well,
And in this wo gan Troilus to dwell,
That what for sorowe, love, and for unrest,
Full oft a daie he had his herte brest.

But

But nathèlesse, though he gon him dispaire,
And drede aie that his ladie was untrue;
Yet aie on her his herte gan repaire, 1570
And as these lovirs doen, he fought aie newe
To get ayen Creseide bright of hewe;
And in his herte he went her excusing,
That Calchas causid all her tarying.

And oftin time he was in purpose grete
Him selvin like a pilgrim to disgise,
To sene her; but he maie not counterfete,
To ben unknownen of folke that werin wise,
Ne finde excuse aight that maie suffice,
If he among the Grækis knowin were; 1580
For which he wept full oft many a tere.

To her he wrote yet oftin time all newe
Full pitoufly, (he left it nat for slouth)
Beseching her, fithins that he was true
That she would come ayen and hold her trouth:
For which Creseide upon a daie for routh,
(I take it so) touching all this mattere
Wrote him ayen, and saied as ye maie here.

Cupid's sonne, ensample of godelihede,
O swerde of knighthode, fours of gentilnesse, 1590
How might a wight in turment and in drede
And helelesse you sendin, as yet gladnesse?
I hertlesse, I sicke, I in distresse,
Sens ye with me, nor I with you maie dele,
You neithir sende I maie ne herte ne hele.

Your lettirs full the papir all iplainted
Commevid havin myne hert's pite;
I have eke senie with teris all depainted
Your lettir, and how ye requirist me 1600
To come ayen, which yet ne maie not be:
But why, lest that this lettir foundin were,
No mencion ne make I now for fere.

Grevous to me (God wote) is your unrest,
Your hast, and that the Goddis ordinaunce
It semith nat ye take it for the best;
Nor othir thing n'is in your remembraunce,
As thinkith me, but onely your plesaunce;
But beth nat wroth, and that I you beseech;
For that I tarie' is all for wickid speche.

For I have herd well more than I wend 1610
Touching us two, how thingis have istond,
Whiche I shall with dissimuling amende;
And beth nor wroth; I have eke undirstond
How ye ne doe but holdin me in honde;
But now no force, I can nat in you gesse
But allè trouthe and allè gentilnesse.

Comin I woll, but yet in soche disjointe
I stond as now, that what yere, or what daie
That this shall be, that can I nat appointe;
But in effect I praie you as I maie 1620
Of your gode worde, and of your frendship aie;
For truly while that my life maie dure,
As for a frende ye maie in me assure.

Yet praie I you no evill ye ne take
That it is short, which that I to you write;
I dare nat there I am well lettirs make,
Ne nevir yet ne could I well endite;
Eke grete effect men writin in place lite;
Th'entent is all, and nat the lettirs space,
And farith well, God have you in his grace. 1630
[Le vostre C.]

This Troilus thought this lettir al straunge

Whan he it sawe, and so'roufully he sight,
Him thought it like a kalendes of eschaunge; 1640
But finally he ful ne trowin might
That she ne would him holdin that she high;
For with ful evill wil liste him to leve,
That lovith wel, in such case, though him greve.

But nathèlesse, men sain that at the last
For any thing men shal the sothe se;
And such a case betide, and that as fast, 1649
That Troilus wel understode that she N'as nat so kinde, as that her ought to be;
And finally he wote now out of dout
That al is lost, that he hath ben about.

Stode on a daie in his melancolie
This Troilus, and in suspectioun
Of her, for whom he wenid for to die,
And so besil, that throughout Troie town
As was the gife, iborne was up and down
A manir cote armoure, as saithe the storie, 1650
Before Deiphobe, in signe of his victorie.

The which cote, as tellith Lollus,
Deiphobe it had yrente fro Diomede 1655
The same daie, and when this Troilus
It sawe, he gan to takin of it hede,
Avising of the length and of the brede,
And al the werke; but as he gan beholde,
Ful sodainly his herte began to colde;

As he that on the coler sonde within
A broche, that he Creseide yave at morow 1660
That she from Troie toun must nedis twin,
In remembraunce of him, and of his sorow;
And she him laide ayen her faith to borow
To kepe it aie; but now ful wel he wist
His lady n'as no longir on to trift.

He gofth him home, and gan ful sonde sende
For Pandarus; and al this newe chaunce
And of this broch he tolde him orde and ende;
Complaining of her hert's variaunce,
His longè love, his trouth, and his penaunce; 1670
And aftir deth withoutin wordis more
Ful fast he cried, his rest him to restore.

Than spake he thus, O lady mine Creseide,
Where is your faith, and where is your behest?
Where is your love? where is your trouth? he seide,
O Diomede, have ye now al this fest?
Alas! I would have trowid at the lest,
That sens ye n'olde in trouthe to me stonde,
That ye thus n'olde have holdin me in honde.

Who shal now trowen on any othis mo? 1680
Alas! I never would have wende er this
That ye, Creseide, coulde have chaungid so;
Ne but I had agilte, and done amis,
So cruel wende I nat your herte iwis
To flee me thus; alas! your name of trouthe
Is now fordone, and that is al my routhe.

Was there none othir broche you list to lere
To fesse with your newe love? (q' he)
But thilke broche that I with teris wete
You yave, as for a remembraunce of me? 1690
None other cause (alas!) ne haddin ye
But for dispite; and eke for that ye mente
All uttirly to shewin your entente;

Through which I se, that clene out of your minde
Ye have me cast, and I ne can nor maie
For al this world within mine herte finde

To'

To uniovin^e you a quartir of a daie;
In curful time I bo. ne was, welawaie!
That you that done me all this wo endure;
Yet love I the best of any creature. 1700

Now God (q^x he) ^{me} sendi^g yet the grace
That I maie metin with this Diomedes;
And truly, if I have might and space,
Yet shai I make I hope his tidis blde;
Now God (q^x he) that aughtist takin hede
To forhrin trouth, and wrongis to punice,
Why n^t it thou don a vengeance of this vice?

O Pandarus, that in drem^s for to triste
Me blam d hast, and wonte ait oft upbreide; ^{to} Now maist thou sene thy selfe, if that The list, 1710
How trewe is now thy nece bright Creseide;
In fondry formis (God it wote) he seide,
The Goddis shevin bothe joie and tene
In slepe, and by my dreame it is now sene. ^{al. ys-}

And certainly, withoutin more speche
From hennis forthe, as ferforthe as I maie,
Mine owne deth in armis wol I seche,
I ne reche nat how sonè be the daie;
But trewily Creseide, swete Maie,
Whom I have ay with al my might iserved, 1720
That ye thus done, I have it nat deserved.

This Pandarus, that at these thingis herde,
And wiste wel that he said a sothe of this,
He nat a worde ayen to him answerde,
For fory of his trena^s sorow^s he is,
And shamid for his nece hath done amis;
And stante astonied of these causis twaie
As stil as stone; o worde ne coude he saie.

But at the last thus he yspake, and seide,
My brothir dere, I may do The no more; 1730
What should I saie? I hate iwis Creseide,
And God (it) wote I wol hate her ex-more; ^{ever-}
And that thou me besoughtist don of yore, ^{to} Having unto mine honour ne my reste
Right no regarde, I did al that The leste.

Yf I did aught, which that might likin The,
It is me lefe, and of this trelon now
God wote that it a sorow is to me;
And dredelisse, for hertis ese of you,
Right faine I would amende it, with I how; 1740
And fro this world almighty God I praie, Delivir her sene, I can no more saie.

Great was the woe and plaint of Troilus,
But forthe her course fortune aie gan to holde,
Creseide lovith the sonne of Tydeus,
And Troilus mote wepe in caris colde;
Such is this worlde, who so it can beholde,
In eche estate is litill hertis reste,
God lere us to takin it for the beste. ^{al.}

In many cruil bataile out of drede 1750
Of Troilus this ilke noble knight,
(As men maie in these oldè bokis rede)
Was sene his knighthod, and his grete might;
And dredelisse his ire daie and night
Ful cruilly the Grekis aie abought;
And alwaie most this Diomedes he fought.

And oftin timis I finde that thei mette
With bloody strokis, and with wordis grete,
Assaying how ther speris werin whette, ^{y-}
And God it wote, with many a cruil hete 1760
Gan Troilus upon his helme to bete,

But nathè'esse, fortune it naught ne would
Of eithir's honde that eithir dyin should.

And if I had itakin for to write
The armis of this ilke worthy man,
Than would I of his battailis endite;
But for that I to writin first began
Of his love, I have saidin as I can:
His worthy dedis, who so liste 'hem here,
Rede Dares; he can tel 'hem al ifere. 1770

Beseching every lady bright of hewe,
And every gentil woman, what she be,
Al be it that Creseide was untrewes,
That for that gilt ye be nat wroth with me;
Ye maie her gilde in othir bokis se;
And glad^{er} I would writin if you leste, ^{gladly}
Of Penelope's trouth, and gode Alceste.

Ne saie I nat this ^{the} only for men;
But most for women that betrayid be ^{is} Through fals folke, God yeve 'hem sorow, Amen, 1780
That with ther grete witte and subtilte Betrayin you; and this comevith me, ^{is}
To speke, and in effeete you al I praie,
Beth ware of men, and herkenith what I saie.

Go litil boke, go litill tragedie;
There God my makir yet er that I die
So sende me might to make some comedie;
But litill boke, make thou The none envie;
But subject ben unto al poesie;
And kisse the steppes, wher as thou seist pace 1790

With sownis ful of hevins melodie. - ^{by}

And down from thennis fast he gan avise ^{first}
This litil spotte of erth, that with the se
Enbracid is, and fully gan dispise
This wretchid world, and helde al vanite
In respecte of the plaine felicitè ^{-sync-}
That is in heven above; and at the last
There he was slaine his loking down he cast.

And in him selfe he lough right at the wo 1820
Of them that weptin for his dethe so fast;
And dampnid all our werkes, that foloweth so
The blindè lust, which that he may nat last, ^{al. 1820}
And shuldin al our herte on hevin cast; ^{that, to}
And forthe he went, shortly for to tell,
There as Mercury sortid him to dwel.

Suche fine hath lo! this Troilus for love,
Suche fine hath all his grete worthinesse,
Suche fine hath his estate royal above,
Suche fine his lust, such fine hath his noblesse, 1830
Suche fine hath this false world's brotilnesse,
And thus began his loving of Creseide,
As I have tolde, and in this wise he deide.

O yonge and freshe folkis, he or she,
In whiche that love up growith with your age,
Repairith home from worldely vanite,
And of your hertes up castith the visage
To thilke God, that aftir his image
You made, and thinkith al n'is but a faire,
This world that passith sone, as flouris faire: 1840

And lovith him, the whiche that right for love
Upon a crosse, our soulis for to bey,
First starfe and rose, and sit in heaven above,
For he n'il fallin no wight, dare I sey,
That wol his hert al wholly on him ley,
And sens he best to love is, and most meke,
What nedith fainid lov'is for to seke? 1850

Lo! here of painims cursid oldè rites!
Lo! here what al ther goddis maie availe!
Lo! here this wretchid world's appetites! 1850
Lo! here the fine and guerdon for travaile
Of Jove, Apollo, Mars, and such raskaille!
Lo! here the forme of oldè clerkis speche.
In poetrie, if ye ther bokis seche!

O moral Gower, this boke I directe
To The, and to the Philosophicall Strode,
To vouchsafe there nede is for to correcte
Of your benignities and zelis gode;
And to the sothfast Christ, that starfe on rode,
With al mine hert of mercy er I praie, 1860
And to the sorde right thus I speke and saie,

Thou one and two, and thre, eterne on live,
That raignist aie in thre, and two, and one,
Uncircumscript, and all maist circumscribe,
From visible and invisible sone
Defende us in thy mercy everichone;
So make us, Jesus, to thy mercy digne,
For love of maide and mothir thine benigne.

Thus endeth the fift boke, and last of TROILUS.

Here foloweth the piteful and dolorous Testament of faire CRESEIDE.

The Author of the Testament of CRESEIDE, which might pass for the sixth Book of this Story, I have been informed by Sir James Eriskin, late Earl of Kelly, and diverse aged Scholars of the Scottish Nation, was one Mr. Robert Henderson, chief Schoolmaster of Dumferlin, a little time before Chaucer was first printed, and dedicated to King Henry VIII, by Mr. Thynne, which was near the end of his Reign. Mr. Henderson wittily observing that Chaucer in his fifth Book had related the Death of Troilus, but made no mention what became of Creseide; he learnedly takes upon him in a fine Poetical way to expresse the Punishment and End due to a false unconstant Whore, which commonly terminates in extream Misery.

 Doly seson till a carefull dite
Should coresponde, and be equivalent,
Right so it was, whan I began to writè
This tragedy, the we'ir right fervent,
Whan Aries in middis of the lent
Showris of haile gan fro the North discende,
That scantly fro the cold I might me defende.

Yet nerthelesse within mine orature
I stode, whan Titan had his bemis bright
Withdrawin down, and scylid undir cure, 10
And faire Venus, the beaute of the night,
Upraise, and sette unto the Weste ful right
Her goldin face, in oppositioun
Of God Phœbus directe descending down.

Throughout the glasse her bemis brast so faire,
That I might se on every side me by,
The northrin winde hath purified the aire,
And shedde his misty cloudis fro the skie,
The froste fresid, the blastis bittirly
Fro pole Artike came whisking loud and still, 20
And causid me remove ayenst my will.

For I trustid that Venus, lov'is quene,
To whom somtime I hight obedience,

My fadid hert of love she would make grene,
And therupon with humble reverence
I thought to praie her lie magnificence,
But for grete colde as than I lettid was,
And in my chambre to the fire gan pas.

Though love be hore, yet in a man of age
It kindliith nat so sone as in youthed, 30
Of whom the blode is flowing in a rage,
And in the olde the corage dul and ded,
Of whiche the fire outwarde is best remed,
To helpe by pynlike wher that nature failed
I am experte, for bothe I have assailed.

I made the fire and bekid me aboute,
Than toke I drinke my spirites to comforte,
And armid me wel fro the colde theroute,
To cutte the wintir night and make it shorte
I roke a quere, and leste al othir sporte, 40
Writin by worthy Chaucer glorious,
Of faire Creseide, and lusty Troilus.

And there I founde aftir that Diomedè
Recevid had that lady bright of hewe,
How Troilus nere out of his witte abrede,
And wept full sore, with visage pale of hewe,
Q q q q For

For which wanhope his teris gan renewe
 While Esperus rejoyfid him againe,
 Thus while in joie he lived, and while in paine.

Of her behest he had grete comforting,
 Trusting to Troie that she wold make retour,
 Whiche he desired most of al erthly thing,
 For why? she was his onely paramour;
 But whan he sawe passid both day and hour
 Of her gaincome, in sorowe gan oppresse
 His woful herte, in care and hevinesse.

Of his distresse me nedith nat reherse,
 For worthy Chaucer in that samè boke
 In godely termis, and in joly verse
 Compilid hath his caris, who will loke;
 To breke my slepe anothir quere I toke,
 In which I founde the fatal destiny
 Of faire Creseide, which endid wretchidly.

Who wote if all that Chaucer wrote was trewe?
 Nor I wote nat if this narracion
 Be authorisid, or forgid of the newe,
 Of some Poete by his invencion
 Made to reporte the lamentacion
 And wofull ende of this lusty Creseide,
 And what distresse she was in, or she deide. 70

Whan Diomedes had al his appetite
 And more fulfillid of this faire lady
 Upon anothir sette was his delite,
 And sende to her a libel repudy,
 And her excludid fro his company,
 Than desolate she walkid up and down,
 As some men faine, in the courte as commune.

O faire Creseide, the flour and a per fe,
 Of Troie and Grece, how were thou fortunate,
 To chaunge in filthe al thy feminite, 80
 And be with fleschly lust so maculate,
 And go among the Grekes erly and late
 So gyltlike, taking thy foule plesaunce!
 I have pite The should fall suche mischaunce.

Yet nerthelasse, what er men deme or say
 In scornfull langage of thy brutillnesse,
 I shall excuse, as ferforth as I may,
 Thy womanhed, thy wisdom, and fairnesse,
 The which fortune hath put to suche distresse
 As her plesid, and nothing through the gylte 90
 Of The, through wickid langage to be spilt.

This faire lady on this wise destitute
 Of al comforte and consolacioun,
 Right prively without felowship or refute
 Dishevelid, passid out of the toun
 A mile or two unto a mansioun
 Bildid ful gaie, wher her fathir Calchas,
 Which than among the Grekis dwelling was.

Whan her he saw, the cause he gan enquire
 Of her comming, she said sighing ful fore, 100
 For Diomedes had gottin his desire
 He woxe wery, and would of me no more.
 Qd Calchas, doughtir, wepe thou nat therfore, Paraventure al comith for the best,
 Welcome, to me thou art ful dere a gest.

This olde Calchas, astir the lawe was tho,
 Was kepir of the temple as a preste,
 In whiche Venus and her sonne Cupido
 Were honourid, and his chambre was nest,
 To which Creseide with bale enewed in brest 100
 Ufid to passe, her prayirs for to saie,

While at the last upon a solempne daie
 As custome was, the peple ferre and nere,
 Before the none, unto the temple went,
 With sacrifice devout in ther manere,
 But stil Creseide, hevy in her entent,
 Into the Church would nat her self present,
 For giving of the peple any deming
 Of her expulse fro Diomedes the King,

But passid into a secrete oratore, 120
 Where she might wepe her wofull destiny,
 Behinde her backe she closid fast the dore,
 And on her kneis bare fel down in hie,
 Upon Venus and Cupide angirly
 She cryid out, and sayid in this wise,
 Alas that er I made you sacrifice!

Ye gave me ones a divine responsaile,
 That I should be the flour of love in Troie,
 Now am I made an unworthy outwaile,
 And al in care translatid is my joie, 130
 Who shal me gide? who shal me now convoie,
 Sith I fro Diomedes, and noble Troilus
 Am clene excluded, abject, odious?

O false Cupide, none is to wite but thou,
 And the mothir of love, that blinde goddace,
 Ye caused me undirstande alwaie and trow
 The fede of love was sowin on my face,
 And aie grewe grene thorough your sople grace,
 But now alas! that fede with frost is flaine,
 And I fro lovirs lefte, and all forlaine. 104

Whan this was said, down in an extasy
 Ravished in spirite in a dreame she fel,
 And by apparaunce herde where she did lie
 Cupide the King tinging a sivil bel,
 Which men might here fro hevyn into hel,
 At whose sounde before Cupido aperes
 The seven planets descending fro the spheres,

Whiche hath powir of al thing gene'able,
 To rule and sture by their gret influence
 Weðir and winde, and course variable, 150
 And first of al Saturne gave his sentence,
 Whiche gave to Cupide litil reverence,
 But as a boistous chorde in his manere
 Came crabbidly with austrine loke and chere.

His face frounsid, his lere was like the lede,
 His tethe chatterid, and shivered with the chin,
 His eyin drouped whole sonkin in his hede,
 Out at his nose the mildrop fast gan rin,
 With lippis blew, and chekis lene and thin,
 The lseickils, that fro his heer doune honge, 160
 Was wondir grete, and as a spere as longe.

Attour his belte his liart lockis laie
 Feltrid unfaire, or fret with frostis hore,
 His garment and his gite ful gay of graie,
 His wiðrid wede fro him the winde out wore,
 A boustous bowe within his honde he bore,
 Undir his girdle a fashe of felone flains
 Feðrid with ife, and hedid with holstains.

Than Jupiter right faire and amiable,
 God of the steris in the firmament, 170
 And norice to al thing generable,
 Fro his fathir Saturne farre different,
 With burly face, and browis bright and brent,
 Upon his hed a garlonde wondirs gaie
 Of flouris faire, as it had ben in Maie,

His

His voice was clere, as cristal was his eien,
As goldin wier so glittering was his here,
His garment and his gite ful gaie of grene,
With goldin listis gilte on every gere,
A burly brande about his middle he bere, 180
And in his right hand he had a groundin spere,
Of his fathir the wrothe fro us to bere.

Next aftir him came Mars the God of ire,
Of strife, debate, and all discencioun,
To chide and fight, as fierse as any fire,
In harde harnesse hewmonde and habergiouni,
And on his haunch a rousty fel fauchoun,
And in his hande he had a rousty sworde,
Writhing his face, with many angry worde,

Shaking his brande before Cupide he come, 190
With red visage, and grisly glowing eien,
And at his mouth a blubbir stode of fume,
Like to a bore, whetting his tuskis kene,
Right tulfurlike, but temperaunce in tene,
An horne he blewe with many boustous bragge, Whiche al this world with warre hath made to wagge.

Than faire Phœbus, lanterne and lampe of light,
Of man and best, both frute and florishing
Tendir norice, and banishir of night,
And of the worlde causing by his moving 200
And influence life in al erthly thing,
Without comforte of whom of force to nought
Must go dyin, all that this world hath wrought.

As king royall he rode upon a chare,
The whiche Phæton somtime gidid unright,
The brightnesse of his face, whan it was bare,
Non might beholde, for persing of his sight,
This goldin carte with fry bemis bright
Foure yokid stedes ful different of hewe
But baite or tiring through the spheris drew. 210

The first was forde, with mane as red as rose,
Callid Eoye in the orient,
The seconde stede to name hight Ethiose,
Whitely and pale, and somdele ascendent,
The third Pyrois, right hote, and fervent,
The fourth was blak, and callid Phlegone,
Which rollith Phœbus down into the se.

Venus was there present, that goddes gay,
Her sonn's quarrel to defende, and make
Her owne complaint, cladde in a nice aray, 220
The one halfe grene, th' othir halfe fable blake,
White heer as Gold, kembit and shede abake,
But in her face semid grete variaunce,
Whiles parfite Truth, and whilis Inconstaunce.

Undir smiling she was dissimulate,
Provocative with blinkis amorous,
And sodainly chaungid and alterate,
Angry, as any serpent venomous,
Right pungitive with wordis odious,
Thus variaunt she was, who list take kepe, 230
With one eye laugh, and with the othir wepe.

In tokening that al fleshely paramour,
Which Venus hath in rule and govirnaunce,
Is somtime swete, somtime bittir and sour,
Right unstable, and ful of variaunce,
Mingid with careful joye, and false plefaunce,
Now horte, now colde, now blith, now ful of wo,
Now grene as lefe, now wiðrid and ago.

With boke in hand, than come Mercurious,

Right eloquent and ful of rethoric, 240
With polite termis, and delicious,
With penne end inke to reporte al redie,
Setting longis, and singing merily,
His hode was red heclid attour his croun.
Like til a Poete of the olde fasioun.

Boxis he bare with fine clestuares,
And sugrid siropes for digestion,
Spicis belonging to the potiquares,
With many whollome swete confectioun,
Doctur in phisike cledde in scarlet gown, 250
And furrid wel, as such one ought to be,
Honest and gode, and nat a worde counth lie.

Next after him come lady Cynthia,
The lasse of al, and swiftist in her sphere,
Of colour blake, buskid with hornis twa,
And in the night she listith best t' apere,
Hawe as the leed, of colour nothing clere,
For al the light she boroweth at her brother
Titan, for of her selfe she hath non other.

Her gite was gray and ful of spottis blake, 260
And on her brest a chorle paintid ful even,
Bering a bushe of thornis on his bake,
Whiche for his theft might clime no ner the heven.
Thus when thei gaðrid were the goddis seven,
Mercurius thei chosed with one assent
To be fore-spekir in the parliment.

Who had ben there and liking for to here
His faconde tonge, and termis exquisite,
Of rethorike the practike he might lere,
In brefe sermon a preignant sentence write; 270
Before Cupide valing his cappe a lite
Speris the cause of that vocacioun,
And he anon shewde his entencioun.

Lo, qð Cupide, who wol blasfeme the name
Of his owne God, either in worde or dede,
To al goddis he doeth bothe losse and shame,
And should have battir painis to his mede,
I saie this by yondir wretche Creseide,
The whiche through me was somtime flour of love
Me' and my mothir she stately can reprove, 280

Saying of her gret infelicite
I was the cause, and my mothir Venus
She called a blinde goddes and might nat se,
With sleaundir and defame injurious,
Thus her living unclene and lechirous
She would retorte on me and my mother
To whom I shewde my grace above al other.

And sithe ye are al sevin deficate
Participant of divine sapience,
This gret injury done to our hie estate 290
Me thinke with paine we shuld make recompence,
Was ner to goddis done suche violence,
As wel for you as for my selfe I saie,
Therefore go help to revenge, I you praie.

Mercurius to Cupide gave answere,
And said, sir king, my counsaile is that ye
Referre you to the hyist planet here,
And take to him the lowist of degre,
The paine of Creseide for to modifie,
As God Saturne with him take Cynthia! 300
I am content (qð he) to take thei twa.

Than thus procedid Saturne and the Mone,
Whan thei the matir ripely had digest,
For the dispite to Cupide that she had done,

And

And to Venus opin and manifest,
In al her life with pain to be oprest,
And turment fore, with sikenesse incurable,
And to al lovirs be abhominable.

This doleful sentence Saturne toke in hande,
And passid down where carefull Creseide laie, 310
And on her hed he laide a frosty wande,
Than lausfully on this wise gan he saie,
Thy grete fairenesse, and al thy beauty gaie,
Thy wanton blode, and eke thy goldin here,
Here I exclude fro The for evirmere;

I chaunge thy mirthe into melancoly,
Whiche is the mothir of al penivenesse,
Thy moistir and thy herte to colde and dry,
Thine insolence, thy plaie and wantonnesse
To grete disese, thy pompe and thy richesse 320
Into mortal nede and grete penurie,
Thou suffre shalt, and as a beggir die.

O cruil Saturne, froward and angrie, Harde is thy dome, and to malicious,
Of faire Creseide why hast thou no mercie
Whiche was so swete, gentill, and amorous?
Withdrawe thy sentence, and be gracious,
As you were ner, so shewith through thy dede,
A wrekeful sentence givin on Creseide.

Than Cynthia, whan Saturne past awaie, 330
Out of her sete descendid downe blive,
And red a bill on Creseide where she laie,
Containing this sentence definitive,
Fro hele of body here I The deprive,
And to thy sikenesse shal be no recure,
But in dolour thy dayis to endure.

Thy cristal eyen mengid with blode I make,
Thy voice so clere unplefant here and hace,
Thy lustie lere orspred with spottis blake,
And lumpis have appering in thy face, 340
Where thou comist eche man shal flie the place,
Thus shalt thou go begging fro hous to hous
With cuppe and clappir like a Lazarous.

This dolie dreame, this ugly visoun
Brought till an ende, Creseide fro it awoke,
And all that courte and convocacioun
Vanished awaie, than rose she up and toke
A polished glaile, and her shadowe couth loke,
And whan she sawe her visage so deformate,
If she in herte were wo, I n'ote, God wate. 350

Weping ful fore, lo! what it is (q's she)
With froward langage for to move and sterc
Our crabbid Goddes! and so' is sene on me,
My blaspheming now have I bought ful dere,
All yerthly joie and mirthe I set arere
Alas! this daie! alas! this wofull tide,
Whan I began with my Goddis to chide!

By this was saied, a childe came fro the hal,
To warne Creseide the suppir was redie,
First knockid at the dore, and eft couth call, 360
Madame, your fathir biddeth you cum in hic,
He hath marveile so long on grose ye lie,
And saith your bedis beth to long somdele,
The Goddis wote all your entent full wele.

Q's she, faire child, go to my fathir dere,
And praie him come to speke with me anon;
And so he did, and saied, doughtir, what chere?
Alas! (q's she) fathir, my mirthe is gone.
How so? (q's he) and she gan all expone,

As I have told, the vengeaunce, and the wrake,
For her trespas Cupide on her couth take.

He lokid on her ugly Lepir's face,
The whiche before was white as Lily flour,
Wringing his handes oftimis saied alace
That he had lived to se that wofull hour!
For he knewe well, that there was no socour
To her siknesse, and that doublid his pain;
Thus was there care inow betwixt hem twain.

Whan thei togidir mournid had full lang,
Q's Creseide, fathir, I would nat be kende, 380
Therefore in secrete wise ye let me gange
To yon Hospitall at the roun's ende,
And thi'ir some mete for charite me sende
To live upon, for all mirth in this yerth
Is fro me gone, soche is my wickid werth.

Whan in a mant'll, and a Bevir hat,
With cuppe and clappir, wondir privily
He' opened a secrete gate, and out therat
Conveyid her, that no man should espie,
There to a village halfe a mile therebie, 390
Delivered her in at the Spittill hous,
And daily sente her part of his almous.

Sum knew her well, and sum had no knowlege
Of her, bicause she was so deformate,
With bilis blake orspred in her visage,
And her faire colour fadid and alt'erate;
Yet thei presumid for her hie regrate,
And still mourning, she was of noble kin,
With bittir will there thei tokin her in.

The daie passid, and Phœbus went to rest, 400
The cloudis blake orwhelid all the Skie,
God wote if Creseide were a so'rowfull gest,
Seing that uncouth fare and herborie,
But mere or drinke she dressid her to lie
In a darke cornir of the hous alone,
And on this wise weping she made her mone.

Here foloweth the Complaint of Creseide.

O Soppe of sorowe sonkin into care.
O caitife Creseide now and evirmere,
Gon is thy joie and al thy mirthe in yerth,
Of all blithnesse now art thou blake and bare,
There is no salve that helpin maie thy fare,
Fell is thy fortune, wickid is thy werthe,
Thy blisse is banished, and thy bale unberde,
Undir the grete God if I gravin ware
Wher men of Grece ne yet of Troie might herd!

Where is thy chambir wantonly besene, 410
With burly bed, and blankits broudid bene,
Spicis and wine to thy colatioun,
The cuppis all of gold and silvir shene,
Thy swete meris servid in platis clene,
With faverie sauce of a gode fashioun,
Thy gaie garmentes with many godely gown,
Thy plesant laune pinnid with goldin pene!
All is arere thy grete roiall renoun.

Where is thy gardein with thy grecis gaie,
And freshe flouris, which the quene Floraie 420
Had paintid plesantly in every paine,
Where thou were wont full merily in Maie
To walke, and take the dewe by it was daie,

And

And here the Merle and Mavis many one,
With ladies faire in carolling to gone,
And se ther roiall renkis in ther raie!

This lepir loge take for thy godely boure,
And for thy bed take now a bounche of stro,
For wailid wine and metis thou had tho
Take mouldid bred, pirates and fidir soure,
But cuppe and clappir is all now ago.

My clere voice and my courtly carolling
Is ranke as roke, full hidous, here and hace,
Deformid is the figure of my face,
To loke on it no peple hath liking,
So sped in sight, I saie with fore sighing
Lying emong the lepir folke, alas!

O ladies faire of Troie and Grece, attende
My freile fortune, mine infelicite,
My grete mischefe which no man can amend,
And in your minde a mirrour make of me,
As I am now paravinture that ye,
For al your might, may come to the same ende,
Or ellis worse, if any worse maie be,
Beware therefore, approachith nere your ende.

Nought is your fairnesse but a fading floure,
Nought is your famous laude and hie honour
But winde inflate in othir mennis eres,
Your rosing redde to roting shall retoure,
Exemple make of me in your memoure,
Which of soche thingis wofull witnes beres,
Al welth in yerth as wind awaie it weres,
Beware therefore, approachith nere your hour.

Thus chiding with her drerie destine,
Weping she woke the night fro ende to ende,
But all in vain, her dole, her carefull crie,
Might not remede, ne yet her mourning mend,
A lepir ladie rose, and to her wende,
And saied, why spurnist thou again the wall
To fle thy self, and mende nothing at all?

Sith that thy weping but doublith thy wo,
I counsaile The make vertue of a nede,
Go lerne to clappe thy clappir to and fro,
And lerne aftir the lawe of lepirs lede.
There was no bote but forwith than she yede
Fro place to place, while cold and hungir fore
Compellid her to be a ranke beggore.

That same time of Troie the garnifoun,
Whiche had the chieftain worthy Troilus
Through jeopardy of warre had strikin doun
Knightis of Grece in nombir marveilous,
With grete triumphe, and laude victorious
Again to Troie right roially thei rode,
The waie wher Creseide with the lepir stode.

Seing that companie come with o steven,
Thei gave a crie, and shoke cuppis, gode spede,
Worthie lordis, for Godd's love of heaven
To us lepirs, part of your almofe dede.
Than to her crie noble Troilus toke hede,
Having pite, nere by the place gan pas
Wher Creseide sat, nat weting what she was.

Than upon him she kest up bothe her eyen,
And with a blinke it come intill his thought,
That he somtime her face before had sein,
But she was in soche plight he knew her nought,
Yet than her loke into his minde he brought,
The swete visage, and amorous blenking
Of faire Creseide, somtime his own derling.

No wondir was, suppose in mind that he Toke her figure so fone, and lo! now why
The' Idea of a thing in case maie be
So depe enprintid in the fantasie
That it deludith the wittes outwardly,
And so appereth in forme and like estate
Within the minde, as it was figurate.

A sparke of love than til his hert couth spring,
And kindilid his bodie in a fire
With hore fevir, in swette, and trembling
Him toke, while he was redie to expire,
To bere his shilde his brest begon to tirc,
Within a while he chaungid many' a hewe,
And nerthcles nat one anothir knewe.

For knightly pite and memoriell
Of faire Creseide, a girdill gan he take,
A purse of golde, and many' a gaie jewell,
And in the skirte of Creseide doun gan shake,
Than rode awaie, and nat a worde he spake,
Pensife in herte, while he came to the tounce,
And for grete care oft sith almofe fell dounce.

The lepre folke to Creseide then couth draw,
To se the equall distribucioun
Of the almofe, but whan the golde they sawe
Eche one to othir privily gan roun,
And saied, yon lorde hath more affectioun
Hower it be, unto yon Lazarous,
Than to us all, we knewe by his almous.

What lorde is yon (qð she) have ye no fele?
That doeth to us so grete humanite.
Yes, qð a lepre man, I knowe him wele,
Troilus it is, a knight gentle and fre.
Whan Creseide undirstode that it was he,
Stisir than stele there sterte a bittir stound
Throughout her hert, and fill dounce to the ground.

Whan she, orcome with sighing fore and sad,
With many' a carefull crie and cold atone,
Now is my brest with stormie stoundis stad,
Wrappid in wo, oh wretchfull will of one!
Than fell in swoun ful oft, or she would fone,
And evir in her swouning cried she thus,
O false Creseide, and true knight Troilus!

Thy love, thy laude, and all thy gentinesse
I comptid small in my prosperite,
So efflatid I was in wantonnesse,
And clambe upon the fickle whele so hie,
All faithe and love I promittid to The
Was in thy self sikill and furious,
O false Creseide, and true knight Troilus!

For love of me thou kept thy countinaunce
Honest and chast in conversacion,
Of all women protectour and defence
Thou were, and helpid ther opinion,
My minde on fleshy foule affection
Was enclinid to lustis lecherous,
Fie false Creseide! o true knight Troilus!

Lovirs, beware, and take gode hede about Whom that ye love, for whan ye suffre pain,
I let you wit there is right fewe throughout,
Whom ye maie trust to have true love again,
Prove whan you woll, your labour is in vain,
Therefore I rede ye take them as ye finde,
For thei are sad as Weðircocke in winde.

Bicause I knowe the grete unstablenesse
Brittle as glasse, unto my selfe I saie,
R r r r

Trusting

Trusting in othir as grete brutilnesse,
As inconstaunt, and as untrue of faie;
Though some be true, I wot right few ar thei;
Who findith truthe, let him his lady ruse,
None but my self as now I woll accuse.

Whan this was said, with papir she sat doun,
And in this manir made her testament; 160
Here I bequeth my corse and carioun
With wormis and with todis to be rent,
My cuppe, my clappir, and mine ornament,
And all my gold, these lepre folke shall have,
Whan I am dedde to burie me in grave.

This roiall ring, set with this Rubie redde,
Whiche Troilus in dowrie to me sende,
To him again I leve it whan I' am dedde,
To make my carefull deth unto him kende;
Thus I conclude shortly and make an ende, 170
My sp'rit I leve to Diane, where she dwelles,
To walke with her in wast wodis and welles.

O Diomedes, thou hast bothe broche and belte,
Whiche Troilus gave me in tokining
Of his true love; and with that worde she swelt.
And sone a lepirman toke off the ring,
Than buried her withoutin tarying;

To Troilus forthwith the ring he bare,
And of Creseide the deth he gan declare.

Whan he had herd her grete infirmite, 180
Her legacie, and lamentacioun,
And how she endid in soche poverté,
He swelt for wo, and fell doun in a swoun,
For sorowe his hertè to braft was boun,
Sighing full sadly saied I can no more,
She was untrue, and wo is me therfore.

Some faith he made a tombe of marble graie,
And wrote her name and superscripcioun,
And laid it on her grave whereas she laie, 190
In golden lettirs, conteining this resoun,
Lo! faire ladies, Creseide of Troie toun,
Somtime comprid the floure of womanhed,
Under this stone, late lepir, lyith dedde!

Now worthy women, in this balade short,
Made for your worship and instruction,
Of charite I monishe and exhorte,
Minge nat your love with false discepcion,
Bere in your minde this fore conclusion
Of faire Creseide, as I have saied before, 200
Sith she is dedde, I speke of her no more.

Thus endeth the pitfull and dolorous Testamente of faire CRESEIDE.

The Legende of good Women.

Some Ladies in the Court took offence at Chaucer's large Speeches against the untruth of Women; therefore the Queen enjoin'd him to compile this Book in the commendation of sundry Maidens and Wives, who shew'd themselves faithful to faithless Men. This seems to have been written after the Flower and the Leaf.

Thousande timis I have herd men tell
That there is joie in heven and pain in hell,
And I acord it wele that it is so,
But nathelless yet wot I wele also,
That there n'is non dwelling in this cowntre,
That eithir hath in heven or hell ibe,
Ne maie of it none othir waies wittin
But as he herd saied, or found it writtin,
For by assaie there maie no man it preve.

But God forbode but that men shuldin leve 10
Well more thing than thei han seen with eye,
Men shall nat wenin every thing a lie
But if himself it seeth, or els it doeth,
For God wote thing is nevyr the lessè soth,
Though every wight ne maie it not ife.

Bernarde the Monke ne saugh not all parde,
Than motè we to bokis that we finde,
(Through which the oldè thingis ben in minde)
And to the doctrine of these oldè wise
Yeve credence, in every skilfull wise, 20
That tellin of these old apprevyd stories
Of holines, of reignis, of victories,
Of love, of hate, and othir sondrie thinges,
Of whiche I maie not makin reherfinges:
And if that oldè bokis were awaie,
Ilorne were of all remembraunce the kaie.

Well ought us than honourin and beleve
These bokis, there we han none othir preve.

And as for me, though that I can but lite, 30
On bokis for to rede I me delite,
And to 'hem yeve I faithe and full credence,
And in mine herte have 'hem in revèrence
So hertily, that there is gamè none
That fro my bokis makith me to gone,
But it be seldome, on the holie daie,
Save certainly whan that the month of Maie
Is comin, and I here the foulis sing,
And that the flouris ginnin for to spring,
Farwell my boke, and my devocion.

Now have I than eke this condicion, 40
That above all the flouris in the mede
Than love I moste these flouris white and rede, Soche that men callin Daiesies in our toun,
To them have I so grete affectioun
As I saied erst, whan comin is the Maie,
That in my bedde there dawith me no daie,
That I n'am up, and walking in the Mede,
To sene this floure ayenst the Sunnè sprede, 50
Whan it uprisith erly by the morowe,
That blisfull sight softinith all my sorowe,
So glad am I, whan that I have presence
Of it, to doin it all revèrence,
As she that is of all flouris the floure,
Fulfillid of all vertue and honoure,
And evir ilike faire, and freshe of hewe,
As wel in wintir, as in summir newe,

This

This love I evre', and shall until I die,
All swere I not of this, I woll nat lie.

There lovid no wight hottir in his life,
And whan that it is eve I renne blithe,
As sone as evir the Sunne ginnith West,
To sene this flour, how it woll go to rest,
For fere of night, so hatith she derknesse,
Her chere is plainly spred in the brightnesse
Of the Sunne, for there it woll unclofe:
Alas that I ne' had Englishe, rime, or prose,
Suffisaunt this flour to praise aright!
But helpith ye, that han conning and might,
Ye lovirs, that can make of sentiment,
In this case ought ye to be diligent
To forthrin me somewhat in my labour,
Whether ye ben with the lese or the flour,
For well I wote, that ye han here beforne
Of making ropen, and lad awaie the corne,
And I come astir, glening here and there,
And am full glad, if I maie finde an ere
Of any godely worde that ye han leste;
And though it happe me to reherfin est
That ye han in your freshe songis saied,
Forberith me, and beth not ill apaied,
Sith that ye se I doe it in the' honour
Of love, and eke in service of the flour,
Whom that I serve, as I have wit or might,
She is the clerenesse and the very light,
That in this derke world me windith and ledeth,
The hert within my wofull brest you dredeth,
And loveth so fore, that ye ben verily
The maistris of my wit, and nothing I,
My worde, my workes, is knit so in your bonde,
That as an harpe obeyith to the honde,
And makith soun astir his fingirng,
Right so mowe ye out of mine herte bring Soch voice, right as you list, to laugh or pain,
Be ye my guide, and ladie soverain,
As to mine yerthly God, to you I call,
Bothe in this werke, and my sorowis all.
But wherfore that I spake to yeve credence
To old stories, and doen 'hem reverence,
And that men mustin more thing bileve,
Than men may sene at eye, or ellis preve,
That shall I sein, whan that I se my time,
I maie not all at onis speke in rime,
My busie ghost, that thurstith alwaie newe
To sene this flour so yong, so freshe of hewe, Constrainid me with so gredie desire,
That in mine herte I felin yet the fire,
That made me to rise or it were daie,
And this was now the first morowe of Maie,
With dredfull herte, and glad devocion
For to ben at the resurrection
Of this flour, whan that it should unclofe
Again the Sunne, that rose as redde as rose,
That in the brest was of the best that daie
That Agenor's doughtir ladde awaie,
And doune on knees anon right I me sette,
And as I could this freshe flour I grette, Knelling alwaie, till it unclosid was,
Upon the small, and soft, and swete gras,
That was with flouris swete embroudid al,
Of soche swetnesse, and soche odour oer all,
That for to spekin of gomme, herbe, or tre,
Comparison maie none imakid be,
For it surmountith plainly all odoures,
And of riche beaute the most gaye of floures,
Forgottin had the yerth his pore estate
Of Wintir, that him nakid made and mate,
And with his sworde of colde so fore greved,
Now hath the' atempre sonne al that releved
That nakid was, and clad it newe again,
The small foulis, of the seson fain,

That of the panter and the net ben scaped,
Upon the foulir, that 'hem made awhaped
In Wintir, and distroyid had ther brode,
60 In his dispite them thought it did 'hem gode
To sing of him, and in ther song dispise
The foulle chorle, that for his covitise
Had 'hem betrayid with his Sophistrie;
This was ther song: The foulir we desie,
And all his crafte; and some yfongin clere
Lays of Love, that joie it was to here, 140
In worshipping and praising of her make,
And for the newe blisfull Somir's sake,
Upon the braunchis full of blofms soft 70 In ther delite thei tournid 'hem full oft,
And songin, Blisid be saint Valentine,
For on his daie I chese you to be mine,
Withoutin repenting, mine herte swete,
And therwithall their beakis gonin mete,
Yelding honour, and humble obeisaunce
To love, and didden ther othir obsevaunce, 150
That longith unto love, and to nature,
Constrewe that as you list, I doe no cure,
And tho that had doin unkindnesse,
80 As doeth the Tidife for newefangelnesse, Befoughtin mercie of ther trespassing,
And humilly songin ther repenting,
And sworin on the blofms to be true,
So that ther makis would upon 'hem rue,
And at the last thei madin ther acorde,
All found thei Daungir for the time a lorde, 160
Yet Pite, thorough his strong gentill might,
Foryave, and made mercie passin right
Through Innocence, and rudid Curtisie,
90 But I ne clepe nat Innocence folie,
Ne false pite, for vertue is the mene,
As Ethicke saith, in soche manir I mene.
And thus these foulis, voide of all malice, Accordidin to Love, and lastin vice
Of hate, and songin all of one acorde,
Welcome Sommir, our govirnour and lorde: 170
And Zephyrus, and Flora gentilly
Yave to the flouris soft and tendirly
Ther sote breth, and made 'hem for to sprede, 100 As God and Goddesse of the flourie Mede,
In whiche me thought I mighte daie by daie
Dwellin alwaie, the joly monthe of Maie,
Withoutin slepe, withoutin mete or drinke,
Adoune full softly I gan to sinke,
And lene on my elbowe and my side,
The longe daie I shope me for to abide 180
For nothing ellis, and I shall nat lie,
But for to lokin upon the Daisie
That well by reson men it calle maie
110 The Daisie, or els the eye of the daie,
The emprise, and the flour of flouris all,
I praie to God that faire mote she fall,
And all that lovin flouris, for her sake!
But nathelcse, ne wene nat that I make
In praising of the flour again the lese,
No more than of the corne again the shefe, 190
For as to me n'is levir none ne lother,
I n'am withholdin yet with neithir nother,
Ne' I n'ot who servith lese, ne who the flour;
120 Well broukin thei ther service or laboure;
For this thing is all of anothir tonne,
Of old storie, er soche thing was begonne.
Whan that the Sunne out of the South gan West,
And that this flour gan clofe, and gon to rest,
For derknes of the night, the which she drede,
Home to mine house full swiftly I me sped, 200
To gone to rest, and erly for to rise,
To sene this flour to sprede, as I devise;
And in a little herbir that I have,
130 That benchid was of turvis freshe igrave,

I bad

I bad men shouldin me my couchè make,
 For deinte of the newè Sommir's sake
 I had 'hem strawin flouris on my bedde;
 Whan I was laied, and had mine eyin hedde,
 I fell aslepe, and slept an houre or two;
 Me met how I laie in the Medowe tho
 To sene this floure, that I love so and drede,
 And from aserre came walking in the Mede
 The God of Love, and in his hande a Quene,
 And she was clad in roiall habite grene,
 A fret of goldè she had next her here,
 And upon that a white coroune she bere
 With flourounis small, and I shall nat lie,
 For all the worldè right as a Daisie
 Icrounid is, with whitè levis lite,
 So were the florouns of her crounè white,
 For of o perlè fine orientall
 Her white coroune was imakid all,
 For which the white coroune above the grene,
 Ymade her like a Daisie for to sene,
 Contidrid eke her fret of gold above:
 Icouthid was this mightie God of Love
 In like embroidid, full of grenè greves,
 In whiche there was a fret of red rose leves,
 The freshist sene the worldè was first begon;
 His gilt here was yecrounid with a son
 In stede of gold, for hevinessè and weight,
 Therwith me thought his facè shone so bright,
 That well unnethis might I him behold,
 And in his hand methought I sawe him hold
 Two frie dartis, as the gledis rede,
 And Angelike his wingis sawe I sprede,
 And all be that men sain, that blinde is he,
 Algatis me thought that he might wele se,
 For sternly on me he gan behold,
 So that his loking doeth min' hertè cold,
 And by the hande he helde this noble Quene,
 Crounid with white, and clothid al in grene,
 So womanly, so benigne, and so meke,
 That in this worldè, though that men woldin seke,
 Halfe her beaute ne shouldin thei nat finde
 In cature that yformid is by kinde,
 And therefore maie I sain, as thinkith me,
 This song in praising of this Ladie fre.

Hide Absolon thy giltè tressis clere,
 Hester laie thou thy mekenesse all adoun,
 Hide Jonathas all thy frendly manere,
 Penelope, and Marcia Catoun,
 Make of your wifeshode no comparisoun,
 Hide ye your beauties, Ifoude and Helcin,
 My ladie cometh, that all this maie distain.

Thy faire bodie ne let it not appere
 Lavine, and thou Lucrece of Romè toun,
 And Polyxene, that boughtin love so dere,
 And Cleopatra, with all thy passoun,
 Hide ye your trouthe of love, and your renoun, 260
 And thou Thisbe, that hast of love soche pain,
 My Ladie cometh, that all this maie distain.

Hero, Dido, Laodomia', ifere,
 And Phyllis, hanging for Demophoon,
 And Canace, espyid by thy chere,
 Hyptipyle betrayid by Jason,
 Makith of your trouthe neithir boste ne soun,
 Nor Hypermnestra', or Ariadne, ye twaine,
 My Ladie cometh, that all this maie distain.

This balade maie full well isongin be,
 As I have said erst, by my ladie fre,
 For certainly, all these mowe not suffice
 To' apperin with my Ladie in no wise,

For as the Sunnè woll the fire distain,
 So passith all my Ladie soverain,
 That is so gode, so faire, so debonaire,
 I praic to God that evir fall her faire!
 For ne had comfort ben of her presence
 I had ben dedde, without any defence, 210
 For drede of Lov's wordis, and his chere,
 As, whan time is, hereaftir ye shall here. 380
 Behinde this God of Love upon the grene
 I sawe coming of Ladyis ninetene,
 In roiall habit, a full esie pace,
 And aftir them of women soche a trace,
 That sene that God Adam had made of yerth
 The thirdè part of mankinde, or the ferth,
 Ne wende I nat by possibilite 220
 Had evir in this wide worldè ibe;
 And true of love these women were echon, 290
 Now whether was that a wondir thing or non,
 That right anon, as that thei gonne espie
 This floure, whiche that I clepe the Daisie,
 Full sodainly thei stintin all at ones,
 And knelid doune, as it were for the nones,
 And songin with o voice, hele and honour
To trouthe of womanbede, and to this flour,
That berith our aldir prife in figuring,
 Her white coroune berith the witnessing; 230
 And with that worde, a compas environ 300
 Thei sittin 'hem full softly adoun.
 First sat the God of Love, and sith his quene,
 With the white coroune, yclad all in grene,
 And sithin all the remnaunt by and by,
 As thei were of estate, full curtisly,
 Ne nat a worde was spokin in the place,
 The mountenance of a furlong waie of space.
 I kneling by this floure, in gode entent,
 Abode to knowin what this peple ment, 240
 As still as any stone, till at the last 310
 This God of Love on me his eyin cast,
 And said, who knelith there? and I answerd
 Unto his asking, whan that I it herde,
 And said, sir it am I, and come him nere,
 And salued him (qð he) what doest thou here,
 So nigh mine owne floure, so boldily?
 It werin bettir worthy truily
 A worme to nighin nere my flour than thou.
 And why sir (qð I) and it likith you?
 For thou (qð he) art therto nothing able; 250
 It is my relike, digne and delitable, 320
 And thou my fo, and all my folke werriest,
 And of mine old servauntis thou misfaiest,
 And hindrist 'hem, with thy translacon,
 And lettist folke from ther devocion
 To servin me, and holdist it folie
 To servin Love, thou maiest it nat denie,
 For in plain text, withoutin nede of glose,
 Thou' hast translatid the Romaunt of the Rose,
 That is an heresie ayenst my lawe, 330
 And makist wif folke fro me to withdrawe,
 And of Creseide thou hast saide as The list,
 That makith men to women lesse to trife,
 That ben as trewe as er was any stele.
 Of thine answere avisin The right wele,
 For though that thou renyid hast my laie,
 As othir wretchis have done many' a daie,
 By seint Venus, which that my mothir is,
 If that thou live, thou shalt repent in this
 So cruilly, that it shal wel be sene. 340
 Tho spake this lady, clothid all in grene,
 And sayid, God, right of your curtisie
 Ye mote herkin if that he can replie
 Ayenst al this, that ye have to him meved,
 A God ne shouldè nat be thus agreved,
 But of his deite he shal be stable,
 And therto gracious and merciabile,

And

And if ye n'ere a God, that knowin all,
Than might it be, as I you tellin shall,
This man to you maie falsely ben accused,
That as by right him oughtin ben excused,
For in your court is many' a losingeour,
And many a queint totoler accusour
That tabouren in your eris many' a soun,
Right astir ther imaginacioun,
To have your daliaunce, and for envy,
These ben the causis, and I shal nat lie;
Envie is lave'ndir of the court alwaie,
For she ne partith neithir night ne daie
Out of the house of Cæsar, thus saith Dant, Whò so that goeth, algate she wol nat want.

And eke peraunder for this man is nice
He mightin done it, gessing no malice,
But for he usith thingis for to make,
Him reckith nought of what matir he take,
Or him was bodin makin thilkè twey
Of some persone, and durst it nat withsey,
Or him repentith uttirly of this,
He ne' hath nat done so grevoussly amis
To translatin that oldè clerkis writen,
As though that he of malice would enditen
Dispite of love, and had himselfe it wrought;
This should a rightwise lorde have in his thought,
And nat be like tirauntes of Lombardie,
That han no rewarde but at tirannie;
For he that king or lorde is naturel,
Him ought not be a tiraunt ne cruel
As a fermour, to done the harme he can,
He must thinkin it is his liegè man,
As is his tresour, and his golde in cofer,
This is the sentence of the Philosopher;
A kinge to kepe his liegis in justice,
Withoutin doute that is his office,
Al wol he kepe his lordes in ther degre,
As it is right and skil, that thei shulde be,
Enhaunsid and honourid, and most dere,
For thei ben halfegoddis in this world here,
Yet mote he done both right to pore and riche,
Al be that ther estate be nath bothliche,
And have of povir folke compassion;
For lo the gentil kinde of the lion!
For whan a flie offendith him or biteth,
He with his taile awaie the flie yfmiteth
Al esily, for of his genterie
Him deinit nat to wreke him on a flie,
As doeth a curre, or els anothir best,
In noble corage ought to ben arest,
And wayin every thing by equite,
And have regarde unto his owne degre,
For sir, it is no maistrise for a lorde
To dampne a man, without answere of word,
And for a lorde that is ful foule to use;
And it so be, he maie him nat excuse,
But askith mercy with a dredful herte,
And profirith him, right in his bare sherte,
To ben right at your owne jugement,
Than ought a God by short avisement
Considre' his owne honour, and his trespas;
For sith no cause of deth lieth in this case,
You ought to ben the lightlier merciabie;
Lettith your ire, and beth somewhat tretabie;
The man hath servid you of his conninges,
And forthrid well your law in his makinges,
Al be it that he can nat wel endite,
Yet hath he madin leudè folke delite
To servin you, in preising of your name,
He made the boke, that hight the House of Fame,
And eke the deth of Blanchè the Duchesse,
And the' Parliment of Foullis, as I gesse,
And al the love of Palamon and Arcite
Of Thebis, though the storie is knowen lite,

And many an hymne, for your holy daies,
That hightin balades, rondils, virèlaies;
And for to speke of othir holiness,
He hath in prosè translatid Bocce,
And made the life also of saint Cecile,
He madin also, gon is a grete while,
Origines upon the Maudelaine,
Him oughtin now to have the lessè paine,
He hath made many' a ley, and many' a thing. 430

Now as ye be a God, and eke a King,
I your Alceste, whilom quene of Thrace,
I askè you this man right of your grace,
That ye him nevir hurte in al his live,
And he shal swerin to you, and that blive,
He shal ner more agiltin in this wise,
But shal makin as ye wol him devise
Of women trewe in loving al their life,
Where so ye wol, of maidin or of wife,
And forthrin you, as muche as he misseide, 440
Or in the Rose, or ellis in Cresseide.

The God of Love answerde her thus anon,
Madame (q'ð he) it is so longe agon
That I you knew, so charitable' and trewe,
That nevir yet, sithin the worlde was newe,
To me ne founde I bettir none than ye;
If that I wol yfavin my degre,

I may nor wol nat wernè your request,
Al lieth in you, doth with him as you left:
I al foryeve withoutin lengir space, 450
For who so yeveth a yeste or doth a grace,
Do it betime, his thanke shal be the more,
And demith ye what he shal do therefore:

Go, thankir now my lady here (q'ð he)
I rose, and down I set me on my kne,
And sayid thus: Madame, the God above
For yeldè you that ye the God of Love
Have makid me his wrathè to foryeve,
And give me grace so longè for to live,
That I maie know sothily what ye be, 460
That have me holpen, and put in this degre!
But trewily I wende as in this caas
Nought have agilte, ne done to love trespas;
For why? a trewe man withoutin drede 390
Hath nat to partin with a thev'is dede:

Ne a trewe lovir ought me not to blame,
Though that I speke a false lovir some shame,
Thei ought'n rather with me for to holde,
For that I of Cresseide wrote or tolde,
Or of the Rose, what so mine author ment, 470
Algatis God wote it was mine entent
To forthrin trouth in love, and it cherice,
And to ben ware fro falseness and fro vice
By whiche ensample, this was my mening.

And she answerde, let be thine arguing,
For love ne wol not countirpletid be
In right ne wrong, and lerne that of me,
Thou hast thy grace, and holde The right therto;
Now woll I saine what penaunce thou shalt do
For thy trespas, understandith it here, 480
Thou shalt while that thou livist yere by yere
The molle partie of thy time spende
In making of a glorious legende

Of gode women, both maidinis, and wives,
That werin trewe in loving all ther lives,
And tellin of false men that hem betraien,
That al ther life ne do nat but assaien
How many women thei maie done a shame;
For in your world that is now holde a game,
And though that The like nat a lov' be, 490
Speke wel of love, this penaunce yeve I The,
And to the God of love I shal so praie,
That he shal charge his servantes by' any waie
To forthrin The, and wel thy labour quite;
Go now thy waie, this penaunce is but lite;

S f f f

And

And when th's boke is made, yeve it the quene
 On my behalfe, at Eltham, or at Shene.
 The God of love gan smile, and than he saide,
 Wolt thou (q^{ue}ne) wher this be wife or maide,
 Or quene, or countesse, or of what degre,
 That hath so litill penaunce yevin The,
 That hath deservid forely for to smerte?
 But pite rennith sone in gentle herte,
 That maist thou sene, she kithith what she is.
 And I answerde, naie sir so have I blis
 No more, but that I se wel she is gode.
 That is a trewe tale by mine hode
 (Q^{ue}ne Love) and that thou knowist wel, parde,
 If it be so that thou avise The;
 Hast thou nat in a bokè in thy chesse
 The grete godenesse of the quene Alceste,
 That turnid was into a daiesie,
 She that for her husbonde chese to die,
 And eke to gone to hell, rathir than he
 And Hercules rescud her, parde,
 And brought her out of hel againe to blis?
 And I answerde againe, and sayid yes,
 Now know I her, and is this gode Alceste
 The daiesie, and mine owne hert's ruste?
 Now se I wel the godenesse of this wife,
 That both astir her deth, and in her life
 Her grete bounte doublith her renoun,
 Wel hath she quit me mine affectioun,
 That I have to her floure the daiesie,
 No wondir is though Jove her stellisfe,
 As tellith Agaton, for her godenesse,
 Her white corowne berith of it witnesse,
 For all so many virtuis had she
 As smal florounis in her corowne be,
 In remembraunce of her, and in honour,
 Cybilla made the daiesie, and the flour,
 Icrownid al with white, as men maie se,
 And Mars yave her a corown red, parde,
 In stede of Rubies set among the white.
 Therwith this quene woxe red for shame alite,
 Whan she was praisid so in her prefence.
 Than sayid Love, a ful grete negligence

Was it to The, that ilkè time thou made (Hide Absolon thy tressis) in balade,
 That thou forgette her in thy songe to sette,
 Sith that thou art so gretly in her dette,
 And wotist wel that kalender is she
 To any woman, that wol lovir be,
 For she taught all the crafte of trewe loving,
 And namily of wisehode the living,
 And all the bondis that she ought to kepe;
 Thy litil witte was thilkè time aslepe;
 But now I chargè The upon thy life
 That in thy legende thou make of this wife,
 Whan thou hast othir smale imade before;
 And fare now wel I chargè The no more,
 But er I go, thus muche I wol The tel,
 Ne shal no trewe lovir come in hel.
 These othir ladies sitting here arowe
 Ben in my balade, if thou const 'hem knowe,
 And in thy bokis al thou shalt 'hem finde,
 Have 'hem now in thy legende al in minde,
 I mene of them that ben in thy knowing,
 For here ben twenty thousande mo sitting
 Than that thou knowist, and gode women al,
 And trewe of love, for ought that maie befall;
 Makith the metris of 'hem as The leste,
 I mote gone home, the sunnè drawith weste,
 To paradis, with al this companie
 And servin alwaie the fresh daiesie;
 At Cleopatra' I wol that thou beginne,
 And so forthe, and my love so shalt thou winne;
 For let se now what man that lovir be Wol done so strong a paine for love as she;
 I wote wel that thou maiest not al it rime,
 That suche loviris diddin in ther time,
 It were to longe to redin and to here,
 Suffisith me thou make in this manere,
 That thou reherce 'of al ther life the grete,
 Astir these olde authors liste for to trete;
 For who so shal so many' a storie tel,
 Sey shortly, or he shal to longe dwell.
 And with that worde my bokis gan I take,
 And right thus on my legende gan I make.

Thus endeth the Prologue.

Here beginneth the Legende of CLEOPATRA Quene of Egypte.

After the dethe of Ptolemy the king,
 That all Egypt had in his governing,
 Reignid his suster Quene Cleopatras;
 Til on a time bifel there suche caas,
 That out of Rome was sent a Senatour
 To conquerin relmis, and bring honour
 Unto the toun of Rome, as was usaunce,
 To have the worlde at her obisaunce;
 And sothe to saie, Antonius was his name;
 So fil it, as fortune him ought a shame,
 Whan he was fallin in prosperite,
 Rebel unto the toun of Rome is he,
 And or al this, the suster of Cæsare
 He left her falsly, er that she was ware,
 And would algatis han anothir wife,
 For whiche he toke with Rome, and Cæsar strife.
 Nathelesse, for sothe this ilkè Senatour
 Was a ful worthy gentil verriour,
 And of his deth it was ful grete damage,
 But love had brought this man in such a rage,
 And him so narow boundin in his laas,
 And al for the love of Cleopatras,

That al the world he set at no value,
 Him thought there was nothing to him so due
 As Cleopatras for to love and serve,
 Him roughtè nat in armis for to sterve
 In the defence of her, and of her right.

This noble quene eke lovid so this knight,
 Through his deserte, and for his chivalrie,
 As certainlie, but if that bokis lie,
 He was of person, and of gentilnesse,
 And of discretion, and of hardinesse,
 Worthy to any wight that livin maie,
 And she was faire, as is the rose in Maie,
 And, for to makin shortè is the best,
 She woxe his wife, and had him as her lest.
 The wedding and the festè to devise,
 To me, that have itakin suche emprise
 Of so many a storie for to make,
 It were to longe, lest that I shouldè flake
 Of thing that berith more effecte and charge;
 For men maie overlade a shippe or barge,
 And forthy to effecte than wol I skippe,
 And al the remnaunt I wol let it slippe.

Octavian,

Ostavian, that wode was of this dede,
Shope him an hoste on Antony to lede,
Al uttirly for his distruction,
With stoute Romainis, cruil as Lion,
To ship thei went, and thus I let 'hem faile.

Antonius was ware, and wol not faile
To metin with these Romaines, if he maie,
Toke eke his rede, and both upon a daie
His wife and he, and al his host forth went
To ship anone, no lengir thei ne stent,
And in the se it happid 'hem to mete,
Up goeth the trumpe, and for to shoute and shere,
And painin 'hem to set on with the sunne,
With grisly sounce out goith the grete gonne,
And hertily thei hurtlin al at ones,
And fro the top doane comith the grete stones, 60
In gorth the grapinel so ful of crokes,
Among the ropis ran the shering hokes,
In with the polaxe presith he and he,
Behinde the maste beginnith he to fle,
And out againe, and drivith him or borde,
He stickith him upon his sper's orde,
He rent the saile with hokis like a sith,
He bringeth the cuppe, and biddith 'hem be blith,
He pourith pesen upon the hatchis slider,
With pottis ful of lime, thei gon togither, 70
And thus the longè daie in fight thei spende,
Til at the last, as every thing hath ende,
Antonius is sient, and put to flight,
And al his folke to go, that best go might,
Fleeth eke the Quene, with al her purple saile,
For strokis, whiche that went as thicke as haile,
No wondir was, she might it nat endure;
And whan Antony sawe that avinture,
Alas (q'ð he) the daie that I was borne!
My worship in this daie thus have I lorne, 80
And for dispaire out of his witte he sterre,
And rose himselfe anon throughout the herte,
Er that he ferthir went out of the place;
His wife, that could of Caesar have no grace,
To Egypt fled, for drede and for distresse;

But herkenith ye that spekin of kindenesse.
Ye men that falsely swerin many' an othe
That ye wol die, if that your love be wröthe;
Here maie ye sene of women such a trouth, 90
This woful Cleopatre' had made suche routh
That there n'is tonge none that maie it tel,
But on the' morowe she wol no lengir dwel,
But made her subtil werkmen make a shrine
Of al the rubies and the stonis fine
In al Egypt, which that she coude espie,
And she put ful the shrine of spicèrie,
And lette the corse enbaume, and forth she fette
This ded corse, and she in the shrine it shette,
And next the shrine a pit than doth she grave, 100
And al the serpentis that she might have
She put 'hem in that grave, and thus she seide,
Now love, to whom my so'rowful hert obeide
So ferforthly, that fro that blisful hour
That I you swore to ben al frely your,
I menè you, Antonius my knight,
That nevir waking in the daie or night
Ye n'ere out of mine hert's remembraunce,
For wele or wo, for carole, or for daunce,
And in my selfe this covenant made i tho, 110
That right suche as ye felin, wele or wo,
As ferforth as it in my powir laie,
Unreprovable' unto my wifchode aie,
The same would I felin, in life or dethe,
And thiike covenant, while me lastith brethe,
I wol fulfil, and that shal wel be sene,
Was ner unto her love a trewir Quene,
And with that word, nakid, with ful gode hert,
Among the serpentis in the pitte she stert,
And there she chese to have her burying,
Anone the nedirs gonne her for to sting; 120
And she her deth receivith with gode chere,
For love of Antony that was her dere.
And this is storial sothe, it is no fable.
Now er I finde a man thus trewe and stable,
And wol for love his deth so frely take,
I praie God let our hedis nevir ake.

Here endeth the Legende of CLEOPATRA.

Here foloweth the Legende of THISBE of Babylone.

AT Babylone whilom fil it thus,
The which toun the Quene Simiramus
Let dichin al about, and wallis make Full hie, of hardè tilis wel ibake,
There werin dwelling in this noble toun
Two lordis, which that were of grete renoun,
And wonidin so nigh upon a grene,
That there n'as but a stone wal 'hem bitwene,
As oft in grete tounis is the wonne,
And sothe to saine, that one man had a sonne,
Of al that londe one of the lustyist,
That othir had a doughtir, the fairist
That estward in the world was tho dwelling;
The name of everiche gan to othir spring,
By women that were neighbouris aboute,
For in that countre yet withoutin doute
Maidinis ben ikepte for jelousie
Ful straitely, lest thei diddin some folie.

This yongè man was clepid Pyramus,
And Thisbe hight the maide (Naso saith thus)
And thus by reporte was ther name ishowe,
That as thei woxe in age, so woxe ther love,
And certaine, as by reson of ther age,

Ther might have ben betwixt 'hem mariage,
But that ther fathirs n'olde it nat assent;
And thei in love ylike fore bothè brent,
That none of al ther frendis might it lette,
But privily somtimis yet thei mette
By sight, and spakin some of ther desire,
As wrie the glede, and hottir is the fire; 30
Forbid a love, and it' is ten times so wode.

This wal, which that betwixt 'hem both yflood,
Was cloven atwo, right fro the top adoun,
Of olde time, of his foundacioun,
But yet this clifte was so narow and lite,
It was nat sene (dare inough a mite)
But what is that, that love can not espie?
Ye lovirs two, if that I shal nat lie,
Ye foundin first this litle narowe clifte,
And with a sounde, as softe as any shrifte, 40
Thei toldin ther wordis through the clifte pace,
And lettin, while that thei stoden in the place,
Al ther complaint of love, and al ther wo,
At every time whan thei durstin so.

Upon that one side of the wal stode he,
And on that other side stode Thisbe,

The

The swete soun of othir to receve,
 And thus ther wardeins wouldin thei disceve,
 And every daie this wal thei wouldin threte,
 And wish to God, that it were down ibete,
 Thus would thei saine; alas! thou wickid wal,
 Thorough thine envie thou us lettist al,
 Why n'ilt thou cleve, or fallin al atwo,
 Or at the lestè, but thou wouldist so,
 Yet wouldist thou but onis let us mete,
 Or onis that we mightin kissin swete,
 Than were we curid of our caris colde;
 But nathellessè, yet be we to The holde,
 In as muche as thou suffrist for to gone
 Our wordis through thy lime and eke thy stone, 60
 Yet oughtin we with The ben wel apaide.

And whan these idil wordis werin saide,
 The colde wal thei woldin kisse of stone,
 And take ther leve, and forth thei woldin gone:
 And this was gladly in the evintide,
 Or wondir erly, lest men it espide.
 And longe time thei wrought in this manere,
 Til on a daie, whan Phœbus gan to clere,
 Aurora with the stremis of her herte
 Had dryid up the dewe of herbis wete,
 Unto this chste, as it was wonte to be,
 Come Pyramus, and astir come Thisbe,
 And plighten trouth, right fully in ther faie,
 That ilke same night to stele awaie,
 And to begile ther wardeins everichone,
 And forth out of the Cite for to gone;
 And for the feldis ben so brode and wide,
 For to metin in o place at o tide
 Thei settin markes ther metingis should be
 There king Ninus was graven, undir a tre,
 For olde painims, that idollis heried,
 Usidin tho in feldis to ben beried,
 And faste by his grave was a wel,
 And shortly of this tale for to tel,
 This covenant was affirmid wondir fast,
 And longe hem thoughtin that the sonnè last,
 That it n'ere gone undir the se adoun.

This Thisbe hath so grete affectionn,
 And so grete liking Pyramus to se,
 That whan she sawe her timè might ybe,
 At night she stalle awaie ful privily,
 With her face iwimplid full subtilly,
 For al her frendis (for to save her trouthe)
 She hath forsake alas! and that is rounthe,
 That evir woman would ybe so trewe
 To trustin man, but she the bet him knewe;
 And to the tre she goeth a ful gode pace,
 For love made her so hardy in this case,
 And by the welle adoun she gan her dresse.
 Alas! than comith a wilde Lionesse
 Out of the wode, withoutin more arest,
 With bloody mouthe, of strangling of a best,
 To drinkin of the wel there as she sat.
 And whan that Thisbe had espyid that,
 She rist her up, with a ful drery herte,
 And in a cave with dredful fore she sterte.
 For by the mone she sawe it wel withall,
 And as she ran, her wimple let she fall,
 And toke none hede, so fore she was awhaped,
 And eke so glad for that she was escaped:
 And thus she sat, and lurkith wondir still.
 Whan that his Lionesse hath dronke her fill,
 Aboutin the well gan she for to winde,
 And right anon the wimple gan she finde,
 And with her bloody mouthe it al to rente,
 Whan this was done, no lengir she ne stente,
 But to the wode her way than hath she nome.

And at the last this Pyramus is come,
 But al to longe alas! at home was he
 The mone shone, men mightin wel ise,

And in his waie, as that he come ful fast,
 His eyin to the grounde adoun he cast,
 And in the sonde, as he behelde adoun,
 He saw the steppis brode of a Lioun,
 And in his hert he sodainly agrofe,
 And pale he wexte, therwith his hert arofe,
 And nere he came, and founde the wimple torne:
 Alas (qð he) the daie that I was borne!
 This o night wol both us loviris fle,
 How should I askin mercy of Thisbe, 130
 Whan I am he that have you slaine? alas!
 My biding hath you slainè in this caas.
 Alas! to bidde a woman gone by night
 In placè there as perill fallin might,
 And I so slowe, alas! I ne had be Here in this place, a furlonge waie er ye.
 Now what Lioun that is in this forest
 My body mote he rentin, or what best
 That wilde is, gnawin mote he now mine herte.
 And with that worde, he to the wimple sterte, 140
 And kiste it ofte, and wepte on it ful sore,
 And said, wimple, alas! there n'is no more,
 But thou shalt fele as wel the blode of me,
 As thou hast felte the bleding of Thisbe,
 And with that worde he smote him to the herte,
 The blode out of the wounde as brode alsterte
 As watir, whan the conduite brokin is.

Now Thisbe, which that ne wist not of this,
 But sitting in her drede, she thoughtè thus,
 Yf it so fallin that my Pyramus 150
 Be comen hithir, and may me nat ifinde,
 He maie me holdin false, and eke unkinde,
 And out she cometh, and astir him gan spien
 Both with her hertè, and eke with her eien,
 And thought, I wol him tellin of my drede,
 Both of the lionesse and of my dede;
 And at the last her love than hath she founde
 Ybeting with his helis on the grounde
 Al bloody, and therwithal abacke she sterte,
 And like the wawis quappe began her herte, 160
 And pale as boxe she woxe, and in a throwe
 Avisid her, and gan him wel to knowe,
 That it was Pyramus her hertè dere.
 O! who could writin whiche a dedly chere
 Hath Thisbe now, and how her here she rent,
 And how she gan her selfin to turment,
 And how she lieth and swounith on the ground,
 And how she wept of teris ful his wounde,
 How medlith she his blode with her complaint,
 How with her blod her selvin gan she paint, 170
 How clippith she the red ded corse, alas!
 How doth this woful Thisbe in this caas!
 How kissith she his frosty mouthe so colde!
 Who hath don this? and who hath ben so bolde
 To seen my lefe? o speke my Pyramus,
 I am thy Thisbe, that The callith thus;
 And therwithal she listith up his hed.

This wofull man, that was nat fully ded,
 Whan that he herde the name of Thisbe crien,
 On her he cast his hevy dedly eyen, 180
 And doun againe, and yeldith up the goft.
 Thisbe rist up, withoutin noise or boft,
 And saw her wimple and his empty sheth,
 And eke his sverde, that him hath don to deth,
 Than tpake she thus, my woful hande (qð she)
 's stronge inough in suche a werke to me,
 For love shal yeve me strength and hardinesse,
 To make my wounde large inough I gesse,
 I wol The folowen ded, and I wol be Felawe, and cause eke of thy deth (qð she) 190
 And though that nothing save the deth only
 Might The fro me departin trewly,
 Thou shalt no more departin now fro me
 Than fro the deth, for I wol go with The.

And

And now ye wretchid jelouse fathirs our,
We that ywerin whilom childrin your,
We prayin you, withoutin more envie
That in o grave we both motin lie,
Sens love hath brought us to this pitous ende;
And rightwif God to every lovir sende,
That lovith trewly, more prosperite,
Than evir had Pyramus and Thisbe;
And let no gentil woman her assure
To puttin her in suche an avinture
But God forbid but that a woman can Ben as true and as loving as a man,

And for my part, I shal anon it kith,
And with that word, his swerd she tokè swith,
That warme was of her lov'is blode, and hote,
And to the herte she her selvin smote.
And thus are Thisbe' and Pyramus agd.
200 Of trewe men I findin but fewe mo
In al my bokis, save this Pyramus,
And therfore have I spokin of him thus,
For it is deinte to us men to finde
A man that can in love be trewe and kinde.
Here maie ye fene, what lovir so he be,
A woman dare, and can as wel as he.

Here endeth the Legende of THISBE of Babylone.

Here foloweth the Legende of Dido Quene of Carthage.

Glorie and honour, Virgile Mantuan,
Be to thy name, and I shal as I can Folowe thy lanterne, as thou goest bisorne,
How Æneas to Dido was forsworne
In thine Æneide, and Naso wol I take The tenour and the gret effectis make.
Whan Troie ybrought was to distruction
By Grekis sleight, and namely by Sinon
Faining the horse offrid unto Minerve,
Through which that many a Trojan must sterve, 10
And Hector had afir his deth apered,
And fire so wode, that it might nat ben stered,
In al the noble toure of Ilion,
That of the cite was the chiefe dongcon,
And al the countre was so lowe ibrought,
And Priamus the king fordone and nought,
And Æneas was chargid by Venus
To flien awaie, he toke Ascanius,
That was his son, in his right hande, and fledde,
And on his backe he bare, and with him ledde 20
His oldè fathir, clepid Anchises,
And by the waie his wife Crensa he lese,
And mokil sorow had he in his minde;
Er that he could his felawship yfinde,
But at the last, whan he had 'hem yfounded,
He made 'hem redy in a certaine stounde,
And to the se ful fast he gan him hie,
And sailith forth, with al his companie,
Towards Itailè, as wold destine.
But of his aventuris in the se
N'is nat to purpose for to speke of here;
For it accordith nat to my matere,
But as I said, of him and of Dido
Shal be my talè, til that I have do.
So longe he sailid in the saltè se,
Til in Libye unneeth arrivid he,
With shippis sevin, and no more navie,
And glad he was to londè for to hie,
So was he with the tempest al to shake;
And whan that he the havin had itake,
He had a knight was callid Achates;
And him of all his felowship he chese
To gone with him, the countre for t' espie,
He ne toke with him no more companie,
But forthe thei gon, and left his shippis ride,
His fere and he, withoutin any guide.
So long he walkith in this wildirnesse,
Till at the last he met an huntirese,
A bowe in honde, and arowis had she,
Her clothis cuttid were unto the kne,
But she was yet the fairist creature,
That evir was iformid by nature,

And Æneas and Achates she grette,
And thus she to 'hem spake, whan she 'hem met.
Sawe ye (qð she) as ye han walkid wide,
Any of my sultrin walke you beside,
With any wildè Bore, or othir best,
That thei have huntid to in this forest,
Ituckid up; with arowes in ther caas?
Naie sothly Ladie (qð this Æneas)
But by thy beaute, as it thinkith me, 60
Thou mightist nevir yerthly woman be,
But Phœbus sustir art thou, as I gesse,
And if so be, that thou be a Goddesse,
Have mercie on our labour and our wo.
I n'am no Goddesse sothly qð she tho,
For maidins walkin in this countre here
With arowes and with bow, in this manere,
This is the relme of Libye, there ye ben,
Of whiche that Dido ladie is and quene,
And shortly tolde all the occasion, 70
Why Dido came into that region,
Of whiche as now me listith nat to rhyme,
It nedith nat, it n'ere but losse of time,
For this is all and some, it was Venus,
His owne methir, that spake with him thus,
And to Carthage she bade he should him dight,
And vanishid anon out of his sight.
I could folowin worde for worde Virgile,
But it would lastin all to longè while.
This noble Quene, that clepid was Dido, 80
That whilom was the wife of Sichæo,
That fairir was by ferr than the bright sonne,
This noble rounne of Carthage hath begonne,
In whiche she reignith in so grete honour,
That she was holdin of all Quenis flour,
Of gentillese, of fredome, and beaute,
That well was him, that might her omis se,
Of Kingis and of Lordis so desired,
That all the worlde her beaute had isired,
She stode so well in every wight's grace.
Whan Æneas was come unto the place, 90
Unto the maistir temple of all the toun,
There Dido was in her devocioun,
Full privily his waie than hath he nome,
Whan he was into the large temple come,
I can not faine, if that it be possible,
But Venus had him makid invisible
Thus faith the boke, withoutin any lese.
And whan this Æneas and Achates
Haddin in this temple ben ovir all,
Than foundin thei depaintid on a wall 100
How Troie and all the lande distroyid was,
Alas that I was borne! (qð Æneas)

Thorough

Thorough the world our shame is kid so wide,
Now it is paintid upon every side:
All we that werin in prosperite
Ben now disclaundrid, and in soche degre,
No lengir for to livin I ne kepe;
And with that word he brast out for to wepe
So tenderly, that routh it was to sene.

This freshe ladie, of the cite Quene,
Stode in the temple, in her estate roiall,
So richily, and eke so faire withall,
So yong, so lustie, with her eyin glade,
That if that God, that hevin and yerth made,
Would have a love, for beaute and godenesse,
And womanhede, and trouth, and semelinese,
Whom should he lovin, but this ladie swete?
There n'is no woman to him half so mete.
Fortune, that hath the world in govinaunce,
Hath sodainly brought in so newe a chaunce,
That never was there yet so frened a caas;
For all the companie of Æneas,
Which that we wend had lorne in the se,
Arivid is nought ferre fro that cite,
For whiche the gretist of his lordis, some
By avinture ben to the cite come,
Unto that same temple for to seke
The Quene, and of her socour her beseke,
Soche renome was ther sprong of her godenes.

And whan that thei had roide all ther distres, 130
And all ther tempest, and all ther hard case,
Unto the Quene apperid Æneas
And opiny beknewe that it was he;
Who haddin joie than, but his meine
That haddin sound ther lorde, ther govinnour?

The Quene saw that thei did him soche honour,
And had herd oft of Æneas, er tho,
And in her herte she had rounthe and wo,
That evir seche a noble man as he Shall ben disheritid in soche degre,
And save the man, that he was like a knight,
And sustiaunt of persone and of might,
And like to ben a very gentilman,
And well his wordis he besettin can,
And had a noble visage for the nones,
And formid well of brawne and eke of bones,
And astir Venus had soche fairnese,
That no man might be halfe so faire I-gesse,
And well a lorde him semid for to be;
And for he was a straungir, somwhat she Ylikid him the bet, as God doe bote,
To some folke ofin newe thing is fote;
Anon her herte hath pite of his wo,
And with that pite Love ycame also,
And thus for pite and for gentilnesse
Refreshid must he ben of his distresse.

She sayid certis, that she sorie was,
That he hath had soche perill and soche caas,
And in her frendly speche in this manere
She to him spake, and saied as ye maie here.

Be ye nat Venus sonne and Anchises?
In gode faith all the worship and encrese
That I maie godely doen you, ye shall have,
Your shippis and your meine shall I save;
And many a gentill worde she spake him to,
And commaundid her messangirs to go
The same daie withoutin any faile,
His shippis for to seke, and hem vitale,
Full many a best she to the shippis sent,
And with the wine she gan hem to present,
And to her roiall paleis she her spedde,
And Æneas alwaie with her she ledde.

What nedith you the festis to discrive?
He never bet at ese was in his live,
Full was the fest of deinties and richesse,
Of instrumentes, of song, and of gladnesse,

And many an amo'rous loking and devise.

This Æneas is come to Paradise
Out of the swolowe of hell, and thus in joie
Remembrith him of his estate in Troie, 180
To daunsing chambris, full of paramentes,
Of riche beddis, and of ornamentes,
This Æneas is ledde afir the mete,
110 And with the Quene whan that he had ysere,
And spicis partid, and the wine agon,
Unto his chambir was he lad anon,
To take his ese, and for to have his rest,
With all his folke, to doen what so hem left.

There ne was coursir well ibridlid none,
Ne stedè for the Justing well to gone, 190
Ne large paulfrey, ese for the nones,
Ne jewill yfret full of riche stones,
Ne sackis full of gold, of large wight,
120 Ne Rubie none that shinith bright by night,
Ne gentill hautin faukon heronere,
Ne hounde for Harte, or wildè Bore, or Derc,
Ne cuppe of gold, with floreins newe ibette,
That in the londe of Libye maie ben gette,
That Dido ne hath Æneas it isent,
And all is payid, what that he hath spent, 200
Thus can this worthy Quene her gestis call,
As she that can in fredome passin all.

Æneas sothely eke, withoutin lese
Hath sent to his shippis by Achates
Aftir his sonne, and aftir riche thinges,
Both sceptre, clothis, brochis, and eke ringes,
Some for to were, and some for to present,
To her, that all these noble thinges him sent,
And bad his sonne how that he should ymake,
The presentig, and to the Quene it take. 210

Repairid is this Achates again,
And Æneas full blisfull is and fain
To sein his yonge sonne Ascanius, 140 For unto him it was reportid thus,
That Cupido, that is the God of Love,
At prayir of his mothir hie above,
Yhad the likeness of the childe itake,
This noble Quene enamoured for to make
On Æneas, but as to that scripture
Be as be maie, I make of it no cure, 220
But soth is this, the Quene hath made soch chere
Unto this childe, that wondir was to here,
And of the present that his fathir sent 150 She thankid him full oft in gode entent.
Thus is this Quene in plesauce and in joie
With all these newe lustie folke of Troie,
And of the dedis hath she more enquired
Of Æneas, and all the storie lered
Of Troie, and all the longè daie thei twaie
Entendidin for to speke and to plaie, 230
Of whiche there gan to bredin soche a fire,
That felie Dido hath now soche desire
With Æneas her newe gest to dele, 160 That she hath lost her hewe and eke her hele.

Now to the effect, now to the fruite of all,
Why I have told this storie, and tellin shall.

Thus I beginne, it fell upon a night,
Whan that the Mone upreisid had her light,
This noble Quene unto her rest ywent,
She sighid sore, and gon her self tourment, 240
She walkith, waloweth, and made many braied,
As doen these lovirs, as I have herd saied,
And at the laste, unto her sustir Anne 170 She made her mone, and right thus spake she than.

Now derè sustir mine, what maie it be,
That me agastith in my dreame? (q's she)
This ilke newe Trojan is so in my thought,
For that me thinketh he is so we'll iwrought,
And eke so likly for to ben a man,
And therwithall so mikil gode he can,

250
That

That all my love and life lieth in his cure,
Have ye nat herd him tell his avinture?

Now certis, Anne, if that ye redè me,
I woldin fain to him iweddid be;
This is the effect, what should I more seine,
In him lieth all, to doe me live or deine.

Her sustir Anne, as she that coud her gode,
Said as her thought, and somdele it withlode;
But hereof was so long a sermoning,
It were to long to makin reherfing,
But finally, it maie not be withlode,
Love woll ylove, for no wight woll it woude;
The dawning uprist out of the false se;
This amorous Quene chargith her meinè
The nettis dresse, and speris brode and kene,
An hunting woll this lustie frische Quene,
So prickith her this newè jolie wo,
To horse is all her lustie folke igo,
Unto the court the houndis ben ibrought,
And upon coursir swift as any thought,
Her yongè knightis hevin all about,
And of her women eke an huge rout;
Upon a thicke palfraie, papirwhite,
With sadill redde, enbroudid with delite,
Of golde the barris, up enbossid high,
Sate Dido, all in golde and perreywrich,
And she is faire, as is the brightè morowe,
That helith sick folkis of night's sorowe,
Upon a coursir, startling as the fire,
Men mightin tourne him with a little wire.

But Æneas, like Phœbus to devise,
So was he fresh arayid in his wife,
The fomie bridill, with the bitte of gold,
Govirnith he right as himself hath would;
And forthe this noble Quene, this ladie ride
On hunting, with this Trojan by her side.
The herde of Hartis foundin is anon,
With hey go bet, pricke thou, let gon, let gon,
Why n'il the Lion comin or the Bere,
That I might him ones metin with this spere,
Thus fain this yongè folke, and up thei kill
The wilde Hartis, and have 'hem at ther will.

Among all this to romblin gan the heven,
The Thondir rorid with a grisly steven,
Doun come the rain, with haile and slet so fast,
With hevin's fire, that made so sore agast
This noble Quene, and also her meinè,
That eche of 'hem was glad awaie to fle,
And shortly fro the tempest her to save,
She fled her self into a little cave,
And with her went this Æneas also,
I n'ot with 'hem if ther went any mo,
The auctour makith of it no mencion,
And here began the depe affection
Bitwixt 'hem two, this was the firstè morowe
Of her gladnesse, and ginning of her sorowe,
For there hath Æneas iknelid so,
And tolde her all his hert, and all his wo,
And sworne so depè to her to be true,
For well or wo, and chaungin for no newe,
And as a false lovir so well can plain,
That felie Dido rewid on his pain,
Toke him for husband, and became his wife
For evirmore, while that 'hem last shulde life:
And afir this, whan that the tempest stente,
With mirth out as thei came, homeward thei went,
The wickid fame uprofe, and that anon,
How Æneas hath with the Quene igon
Into the cave, and demid as 'hem list.
And whan the king (that Yarbassight) it wist, 320
As he that had her loved evir his life
And wowid her to havin to his wife,
Soche sorow' as he hath makid, and soche chere,
It is a routhe and pite for to here;

But as in love all daie it happith so,
That one shall laughin at an othir's wo,
Now laughith Æneas, and is in joie,
And more richesse, than evir was in Troie.

O felie woman, full of innocence,
Full of pite, of truthe, and continence, 330
What makid you to men to trustin so?
Have ye soche routhe upon ther fainid wo,
And have soche old ensamplis you besorne?
Se ye nat all how that thei ben forsworne?
Where se ye one, that he ne' hath lasse his lese,
Or ben unkinde, or doen her some mischete,
Or pillid her, or hostid of his dede?

Ye maie as well it sene as ye maie rede.
Takith hede now of this grete gentilman,
This Trojan, that so well her pefin can, 340
That fainith him so true and obeifing,
So gentill, and so privie' of his doing,
And can so well doen all his obeifance,
And waitith her at festis and at danee,
And whan she goeth to temple, and home again,
And fastin till he hath his ladie sein,
And beren in his devisis for her sake,
N'ot I nat what, and longis would he make,
Juslin, and doen of armis many thinges,
Sende her lettis, tokins, brochis, and ringes. 350

Now herkenith how he shal his lady serve;
There as he was in perill for to sterve
For hungir and for mischete in the se,
And desolate, and fledde fro his countre,
And all his folke with tempest all to driven,
She hath her body and eke her relme yeven
Into his honde, there as she might have ben
Of othir lande than of Carthage a Quene,
And lived in joy inough, what would ye more?

This Æneas, that hath thus depe iswore, 360
Is werie of his craft within a throwe,
And the hote ernest is all overblowe,
And privily he doeth his shippis dight,
And shapith him to flele awaie by night.

This Dido hath suspèction of this,
And thoughtin well that it was all amis;
For in his bedde he lieth anight and siketh,
She askith him anon, what The misliketh,
My dere herre, whiche that I lovin mosse?

Certis (q'ð he) this night my lathir's ghosle 370
Hath in my slepe me so forely tourmented,
And eke Mercurie' his meslage hath presented,
That nedis to the conquest of Itale
My destime is sone for to faile,

For which me thinkith, brostin is mine hert,
Therwith his false teris out thei stert,
And takith her within his armis two.

Is that in ernest (q'ð she) woll ye so?
Have ye not sworne to wife me for to take?
Alas! what woman woll ye of me make? 380
I am a gentill woman, and a Quene,
Ye woll not sio your wife thus foul yllene,
That I was borne alas! what shall I do?

To telle in short, this noble Quene Dido,
She sekith halowes, and doeth Sacrifice,
She knelth, crieth, that routh is to devise,
Conjurith him, and prof'rich him to be
His thrall, his sereant, in the best degre,
She fallith him to tote, and sownith there
Dischevilid with her bright gildid here, 390
And saieth, have mercy, let me with you ride,
These lordis, whiche that wonnin me beside,
Woll me distroyin onely for your sake;
And if ye wolle me now to wife ytake,
As ye have sworne, than woll I yve you leve,
To slaen me with your swerde, now sone at eve,
For than yet shall I dyin as your wife;
I am with childe, and yve my childe his life,

O mercie

O mercie lorde, have pite in your thought,
But al this thing availith her right nought,
For on a night he sleping let her lie,
And stole awaye into his cumpany,
And as a traitour forthe he gan to faile
Towardis the large countre of Itaile,
And thus hath he laft Dido' in wo and pine,
And weddid there a ladie hight Lavine;
A clothe he laft, and eke his sworde standing,
Whan he fro Dido stale in her sleping,
Right at her bedd'is hedde, so gan he hie,
Whan that he stale awaie to his navie.

Which cloth, whan felie Dido gan awake,
She hath it kille ful oftin for his sake,
And said, swete cloth, while Jupiter it lef,
Take my soule, unbinde me of this unrest,
I have fulfilled of fortune all the course,
And thus alas, withoutin his focourse,
Twentie timis ifwounid hath she than,
And whan that she unto her sustir Anne Complainid had, of which I maie not write,
So grete routh I have it for to endite,

400 And bad her norice and her sustir gon
To fetchin fire, and othir thinges anon,
And sayid that she wouldè Sacrifice,
And whan she might her timè well aspie,
Upon the fire of Sacrifice she sterte,
And with his sworde she rofe her to the herte.
But as mine auctour saith, yet this she seide,
Or she was hurtin, beforne or she deide,
She wrote a lettre' anon, and thus began.

Right so (qð she) as the milkwhite Swan 430
Ayenst his deth beginnith for to sing,
410 Right so to you I make my complaining,
Not that I trowe to gettin you again,
For well I wote that it is al in vain,
Sens that the goddes ben contrarious to me,
But sin my name is lost through you (qð she)
I maie well lese a worde on you or letter,
All be it I shall be nevir the better,
For thilkè wind, that blewe your ship awaie;
The samè winde hath blowe awaie your faie; 440
But who so wol al this lettre' have in minde, 420 Rede Ovide, and in him he shall it finde.

Thus endeth the Legende of DIDO Quene of Carthage.

Here foloweth the Legende of HYPsipyle and MEDEA.

THou rote of false loviris Duke Jason,
Thou seer, devourir, and confusion
Of gentill women, gentil creatures,
Thou mad:st thy reclaiming and thy lures
To Ladies, of thy scathliche aparaunce,
And of thy wordis falsid with plesaunce,
And of thy fainid trouth, and thy manere,
With thine obeisaunce and humble chere,
And with thine counterfeitid pain and wo,
There othir fallin one, thou falsid two
O oftin swore thou, that thou wouldist die
For love, whan thou ne feltist maladie,
Save soule delite, whiche that thou callist love,
If that I live, thy name shall be yshove
In Englishe, that thy deceit shall be knowe,
Have at The Jason, now thin horn is blow.
But certis, it is bothè routh and wo,
That Love with false lovirs werkith so,
For thei shal have well bettir love and chere
Than he that hath aboughtin love full dere,
Or had in armis many' a blodie boxe,
For ay as tendre' a Capon creth the Fox,
Though he be fals, and hath the foule betraied,
As shall the gode man that therefore hath paied,
Although he have to the' capon skill and right,
The false Foxe woll have his part at night.
On Jason this ensample' is well isene
By Hypsipyle', and Medea the Quene.

In Thessalie, as Ovide tellith us,
There was a knight that hightin Peleus,
That had a brothir, whiche that hight Æson,
And whan for age he might unnethis gon,
He yave to Peleus the govirning
Of all his reigne, and made him lorde and king,
Of whiche Æson, this Jason gettin was,
That in his time, in all that land there n'as
Nat soche a famous knight of gentillesse,
Of fredome, of strengthe, and of lustinelle,
Aftir his fathir's deth, he bare him so,
That there n'as none that list to ben his foe,
But did him all honour and companie;
Of whiche this Peleus hath grete envie,
Imagining that Jason might ybe

Enhaunsid so, and put in soche degre,
With love of lordis of his regioun,
That from his reigne he maie be put adoun;
And in his wit anight compassid he How this Jason might best distroyid be Withoutin sclaunder of his compasment:
And at the last he toke avisement, 50
That to sende him into some ferre countre, Theras this Jason maie distroyid be,
10 This was his wit, all made he to Jason
Grete chere of loke, and of affection,
For drede lest that his lordis it espide.
And so bifell it, as fame ronnyth wide,
There was soche tiding or all, and soche loos;
That in an Isle, that callid was Colchos,
That stonte beyonde Troie Estward in the Se,
There was a Ram, which that men mightin se, 60
That had a Flees of golde, that shone so bright,
That no where was there soche an othir sight;
20 But it was kept alwaie with a Dragoun,
And many othir marvailles up and down,
And with two Bullis, makid all of bras,
That spittin fire, and mochil thing ther was;
But this was eke the talè nathèles,
That who so would ywinnin thilkè Flees,
He must bothe, or that he it winnin might,
With the Bullis and with the Dragon fight. 70
And king Oëtus lorde was of that Ile.
This Peleus bethought upon this while,
30 That he his nevewe Jason would exhort
To sailin to that londe, him to disport,
And sayid, nevewe if it might ybe
That soche a worship might befallin The,
That thou this famous trefure mightist win,
And bringin it my region within,
It were to me grete plesaunce and honour,
Than were I holdin to quite thy labour, 80
And all thy costis I woll my self make,
And chesith what folke thou wolt with The take;
40 Let se now, darste thou takin this voiage.
Jason was young, and lustie of corage,
And undirtoke to doen this ilke emprise;
Anon Argus his shippis gan devise.

With

With Jason went the strong stout Hercules,
And many' an othir, that he with him ches,
But who so askith, who is with him gon,
Let him rede the boke Argonauticon,
For he woll tel a talè long inough.
Philocrates anon thei saild up drough,
Whan that the winde was gode, and gan him hie
Out of his countre, callid Thessalie.
So long thei sailid in the saltè se,
Till in the Ile of Lemnos arived he;
All be this nat rehersed of Guido,
Yet saith Ovide in his Epistlis so;
And of this Ileland ladie was and Quene,
The faire and yonge Hypsipyle the shene,
That whilom Thoas doughtir was the king.

Hypsipyle was gon in her playing,
And roming on the clevis by the se;
Undir a banke anone espyd she Where laie the shippe, that Jason gon arive;
Of her godenesse adoune she sendith blive
To wetin, if that any straungè wight
With tempest thiðir were iblowe anight,
To doen hem socour, as was her usaunce
To furthrin every wight, and don plesaunce,
Of very bounte, and of curtilie.

This messangir adoune him gan to hie,
And founde Jason and Hercules also,
That in a cogge to londe werin igo
Hem to refreschin, and to take the aire;
The morowning attempre was and faire,
And in ther waie this messangir hem mette,
Full conningly these lordis two he grette,
And did his meslage, asking hem anon
If thei wer brokin, or ought wo begon,
Or had nede of lodesmen, or of vitaile,
For of succour they shouldin nothing faile,
For it was uttirly the Quen's will.

Jason answerid mekily and still,
My ladie (qð he) thanke I hertily
Of her godenesse, us nedith truely
Nothing as now, but that we werie be,
And comin for to plaie out of the se,
Till that the winde be bettir in our waie.

This ladie romith by the cliffe to plaie
With her meinè, endlong upon the stronde,
And findith Jason, and this othir, stonde
In speking of this thing, as I you told.

This Hercules and Jason gan behold,
How that the Quene it was, and faire her grete,
Anon right as thei with this ladie mete,
And she toke hede, and knewe by ther manere,
By ther araie, by wordis, and by chere,
That it were gentillmen of grete degre,
And to the castle with her ledith she
These straungè folke, and doith hem gret honor,
And askith hem of travaile and of labor,
That thei have suffrid in the saltè se,
So that within a daie, or two or thre
She knewe by the folke that in his shippis be
That it was Jason full of renomè,
And Hercules, that had the gretè loos,
That soughtin the adventures of Colchos,
And did hem honour, more than before,
And with hem deled evir longir the more,
For thei ben worthy folke withoutin lese,
And namely moste she spake with Hercules,
To him her herte she bare, an he should be Sadde, wise, and true, of wordis avisè,
Withoutin any othir affection
Of love, or othir imaginacion.

This Hercules hath this Jason so preised,
That to the Sunnè he hath him up reised,
That halfe so true a man there n'as of love
Undir the cope of heven that is above,

And he was wise, hardie, secrete, and riche,
Of these iii. pointis, there n'as non him liche,
Of fredome passid he, and lustichedde
90 All tho that livin, and all tho ben dedde, Thereto so grete a gentillman was he,
And of Thessalie likely king to be,
There n'as no lacke, but that he was agast
To love, and for to spekin shamèfast,
Him had levir himself murdir and die,
Than that men should a lovir him espie,
As woldè God above that I had give My blode and fleshe, so that I might live
With the bones, that he had aught where a Wife 100 For his estate, for soche a lustie life

She shouldin ledin, with this lustie knight;
And all this was compassid on the night
Betwixin Jason, and this Hercules,
Of both these two here was a shreudè lese
To come to house upon an innocent,
For to bedote this Quene was ther entent;
180 And Jason is as coie as is a maide,
He lokith pitouly, but naught he saied,
But frely yave he to her counsaillers

Yestis full grete, and to her oslicers;
As would God that I lesir had and time,
By proccesse all his woeing for to rime,
But in this house if a false lovir be,
Right as himself now doeth, right so did he,
With faining, and with every subtil dede;
Ye get no more of me, but ye woll rede
190 Thi' originall, that tellith all the caas.

The sothe is this, that Jason weddid was Unto this Quene, and toke of her substaunce, 120 What so him list, unto his purveiaunce,
And upon her begate he childrin two,
And drough his saile, and sawe her nevir mo.
A lettir sent she unto him certain,
Which were to long to writin and to sain,
And him reprovith of his grete untrouth,
And prayith him on her to have some routh, 200 And on his childrin two, she saied him this That thei be like of allè thing iwis

To Jason, save that thei couth nat begile, 130 And prayid God, or it were longè while,
That she, that had his herte ireft her fro,
Mote findin him untrue, and false also.
And that she mustè both her childrin spill,
And allè tho that suffrith him his will;
And true to Jason was she all her life,
And evir kept her chaste, as for his wife,
210 Ne nevir had she joie at her herte,
But dyid for his love of sorowes smerte.

To Colchis comin is this Duke Jason, 140 That is of love devourir and dragon,
As Matire appetitith forme alwaie,
And from forme into forme it passin maie;
Or as a wellè that were botomles,
Right so can false Jason have no pces,
For to desirin through his appetite
To doen with gentilwoman his delite, 220 This is his luste, and his felicite.

Jason is romid forthe to the cite,
That whilom clepid was Jasonicos,
150 That was the maistirtoun of all Colchos,
And hath itolde the cause of his coming
Unto Ææta, of that countre king,
Praying him that he must doen his assaie,
To gette the Fiese of golde, if that he maie,
Of whiche the king assentith to his bone,
And doth him honour, as it is to done,
230 So ferforth, that his doughtir and his heire
Medea, whiche that was so wise and sure,
That fairir sawe there nevir man with eye,
160 He made her doen to Jason companie

At mete, and sittin by him in the hall.

Now was Jason a femely man withall,
And like a Lorde, and had a grete renoun,
And of his loke roiall as a Lioun,
And godelie of his speche, and familiere,
And coud of love the craft and art plene
Withoutin boke, with everiche observaunce,
And as fortune her ought a foule mischaunce,
She woxe enamorid upon this man.

Jason (qð she) for ought I se or can
As of this thing, the whiche ye ben about,
Ye and your self ye put in mochil doubt,
For who so woll this avinture archeve,
He maie nat wele astertin, as I leve, Withoutin deth, but I his helpè be;
But nathèles it is my will (qð she)
To forthrin you, so that ye shall nat die,
But turnin founde home to your Thessalie.

My right fair lady (qð this Jason tho)
That ye have of my deth or of my wo
Any regarde, and doen me this honour,
I wot wel that my might, ne my labour
May nat deservin it my liv'is daie,
God thankè you, there I ne can ne maie,
Your man am I, and lowely you besече
To ben my helpe, withoutin more speche,
But certis for my deth shal I not spare.

Tho gan this Medea to him declare
The peril of this case, fro point to point,
Of his batayle, and eke in what disjoyn
He motè stonidin, of whiche no cecture
Save onely she, ne might his lyfe assure;
And shortly, right to the poynt for to go,
They ben accordid full betwyxe 'hem two,
That Jason shal her wedde, as her true knight,
And terme yset to comin sone at night
Unto her chambre, and make there his othe
Upon the goddes, that he for lefe or lothe
Ne shulde her nevir falsin nyght ne daye,

To ben her husbonde whyle he lyvin maye,
As she that from his deth him savid here.
And hereupon at night they mette yfere,
And doth his othe, and goth with her to bedde,
And on the morowe upwarde he him spedde,
240 For she hath taught him how he shal nat fayle
The flees to wyne, and stintin his bataile, 280
And savid hym his life, and his honour,
And gate him a name, as a Conquerour,
Right through the sleight of her enchantement.
Now hath Jason the flese, and home is went
With Medea, and tresours full grete wonne.
But unwylste of her fathir she is gonne
To Thessalye, with duke Jason her lefe,
That aftirwarde hath brought her to mischefe.
250 For as a traytour he is from her go,
And with her leste yonge childrin two, 290
And falsely hath berrayid her, alas!
And er in love a chefe traytour he was,
And weddid yet the thirde wyfe anon,
That was the doughtir of the kyng Creon.
This is the mede of lovyng and guerdon,
That Medea receved of duke Jason
Right for her trouthe, and for her kyndinesse,
That loved him bettir than her self, I gesse, 260 And leste her fathir, and her herytage;
And of Jason this is the vassalage, 300
That in his dayes n'as nevir non yfounde
So false a lovir goyng on the grounde;
And therefore in her lettir thus she sayd,
First when she of his falsnesse him upbrayd,
Why lykid me thy yelowè here to se
More than the boundis of myn honeste?
Why lykid me thy youth and thy fayrnesse
And of thy tonge the' infynite gracynesse?
270 O! haddest thou in thy conquest ded ybe,
Ful mikil untrouth had there dyed with The. 310
Wel can Ovide her lettre' in verse endyte, Whiche were as now to longè for to write.

Here endeth the Legende of HYPsipyle and MEDEA.

Here foloweth the Legende of Lucrece of Rome.

Owe mote I sain th'exilyng of kyngis
Of Rome, for ther horrible doyngis,
Of the laste kyng Sextus Tarquinius,
As faith Ovid, and Titus Lyvius;
But for that cause tel I nat this storye,
But for to prayse, and drawe in memorye
The very wyfe, the very true Lucrese,
That for her wifchode, and her stedfastnesse,
Nat onely that these panymes her commende,
But that yclepid is in our legende,
The gret Austyn, that hath compassioun
Of this Lucrece, that starfe in Romè toun,
And in what wise, I woll but shortly trete,
And of this thing I touch not but the grete.

Whan Ardea besiegid was aboute
With Romainys, that ful sterne werin and stout,
Ful longè lay the siege and litil wroughten,
So that they wer halfe ydil, as 'hem thoughten,
And in his play Tarquinius the yonge
Gan for to jape, for he was lyght of tonge,
And sayid, that it was an ydle lyfe,
No man dyd there no more than did his wife,
And let us speke of wivis, that is best,
Praise everie man his own, as him leste,
And with our spechis let us ese our herte.

A knight (yclepid Colatin) up sterte,
And sayid thus, nay, sir, it is no nede
To trowin on the worde, but on the dede,
I have a wife (qð he) that as I trowe
Is holdin gode of al that er her knowe, 30
Go we to Rome to nyght, and we shul se.
Tarquinius answerde, that lykith me;
To Rome they be comin, and fast 'hem dighte
To Colatyn's house, and downe they light, 10 Tarquinius, and eke this Colatine;
The husbonde knewe the eftirs wel and fyne,
And ful prively into the house thei gone;
Nor at the gate ne portir was there none,
And at the chambre dorè they abyde;
This noble wife sate by her bedd'is fyde 40
Discheveled, for no malyce she ne thought,
And soft wol, faith Livy, that she wrought
To kepin her from slouth and ydilnesse,
And bad her servauntes done ther besinesse,
20 And askith 'hem, What tidinges herin ye?
How faith men of the siege, howe shal it be?
God wolde the wallis were fallin adowne,
Myn husbond is to long out of this towne,
For whichè drede doth me sorely to smerte,
Right as a sworde it styngith to mine hert, 50
Whan

When I thinkin on this or of that place,
 God save my lorde, I pray him for his grace;
 And therewithal so tendirly gan wepe,
 And of her werke she toke no more kepe,
 But mekily she let her eyin fal,
 And thilkè semblant fate her wel withal,
 And eke her teris ful of honestè
 Embelissid her wifely chastitè,
 Her countinaunce is to her hertè digne,
 For thei accordidin in dede and signe.
 And with that worde her husbonde Colatin,
 Or she of him was ware, came sterling in,
 And sayid, drede The nat, for I am here;
 And she anone up rose, with blisful chere,
 And kyssed him, as of wivis is the wonne.
 Tarquinius, this proude king's sonne,
 Concevid hath her beautie and her chere,
 Her yelowè here, her bountie, and her manere,
 Her hewe, her wordis, that she hath complained,
 And by no craft her beautie was nat fained,
 And caught unto this lady soche desire,
 That in his hert he brent as any fire
 So wodely, that his witte was all forgotten,
 For wel thought he she shuldè nat be gotten,
 And aye the more that he was in dispaire,
 The more he covetith, and thought her faire,
 His blindè luste was al his coveting.
 On morowe, whan the birde began to syng,
 Unto the sieg he cometh ful privily,
 And by himselve he walkith sobirly,
 The ymage of her recording alway newe,
 Thus lay her here, and thus fresh was her hew,
 Thus fate she, thus she spake, this was her chere,
 Thus faire she was, and this was her manere;
 Al this conceite his herte hath newe ytake,
 And as the se, with tempest al to shake,
 That astir whan the storme is al ago,
 Yet wolle the watir quappe a daie or two,
 Right so, though that her formè were absent,
 The plesaunce of her formè was present,
 But nathellessè nat plesaunce, but delite,
 Or an unrightful talent with dispite,
 For maugre her, she shal my lemman be,
Hap helpith hardy man alway (q's he)
 What endè that I make, it shal be so.
 And gyrtè him with his sworde, and gan to go,
 And he forth ritt til he to Rome is come,
 And al alone his way that he hath nome
 Unto the house of Colatin ful right;
 Down was the sunne, and day hath lost his lyght,
 And in he come, unto a privie halke,
 And in the night ful thefely gan he stalke,
 Whan every wight was to his rest ybrought,
 Ne no wight had of treson soche a thought,
 Whethir by windowe, or by othir gin,
 With swerde ydrawe shortly he comith in
 There as she lay, this noble wife Lucrece,
 And as she woke, her bedde she feltin presse;
 What best is that (q's she) that wayith thus?
 I am the king's sonne Tarquinius, (Q's he) but and thou crie, or noise ymake,
 Or if thou any creature awake,
 By thilkè God, that formid man of lyve,
 This swerdè through thyne hertè shal I ryve,
 And therewithal unto her throte he sterre,
 And set the swerde al sharpe upon her herte.
 No word she spake, she hath no might therto,
 What shal she saine, her witte is al ago,
 As when a wolfe findith a lambe alone,
 To whom shal she complaine or make her mone?
 What, shal she fightin with an hardie knight?
 Wel wotte men that a woman hath no might;
 What shal she crie, or how shal she asterte?
 That hath her by the throte with swerde at herte;

She askith grace, and said al that she can.
 No, wolt thou nat tho (q's this cruil man)
 As wisely Jupiter my soule save
 As I shal in thy stable sle thy knave,
 And lay him in thy bedde and loudè crie
 That I The fyrdin in soche avoutrie; 130
 And thus thou shalt be ded, and also lese
 Thy name, for that thou shalt none othir chese.
 This Romains wives lovidin so ther name
 At thilke tyme and dredidin so the shame,
 That what for fere of flaundre, and dred of deth,
 She lost at onis both her wit and breth,
 And in a swough she lay, and woxe so ded,
 Men mightin smitin of her arme or hed,
 She felith nothing, neithir foule ne feyre.
 Tarquinius, that art a king's heyre, 140
 And shuldist, as by linage and by right,
 Done as a lorde, and as a very knight,
 Why hast thou done dispite to chivalrye?
 Why hast thou done thy lady vilanie?
 Alas, of The this was a vila'inous dede!
 But nowe to the purpose, in the story I rede.
 Whan he was gonne, and this mischaunce is fal,
 This lady sent astir her frendis al,
 Fathir, mothir, and husbonde, al yfere,
 And dischevilid with her herè clere, 150
 In habyt soche as women usid tho
 Unto the buryeng of ther frendis go
 She fate in hal, with a sorowful syght,
 Her frendis askin what her aylin myght,
 And who was ded? and she fate aye wepyng,
 A worde for shame ne may she forth out bring,
 Ne upon them she durstè nat behold;
 But at the lasse of Tarquin she hem tolde
 This ruful case, and al this thyng horrible,
 The wo to tellin were impossible, 160
 That she and al her frendis make at ones,
 Al haddin folkis hertis ben of stoncs,
 It might have makid hem upon her rewe,
 Her hert ywas so wisely and so trewe,
 She said, that for her gylte ne for her blame
 Her husbonde shulde nat have the soule name,
 That woldè she nat sutrin by no waye.
 And they answerid al unto her faye
 That they foryave it her, for it was right,
 It was no gylte, it lay nat in her myght, 170
 And saydin her ensamplis many one,
 But al for naught, for thus she said anone,
 Be as be may (q's she) of forgivyng,
 I will nat have no forgifte for nothing,
 But privily she coughtin forth a knife,
 And therewithal she rafte her selfe her life,
 And as she fel adowne she cast her loke,
 And of her clothis yet gode hede she toke,
 For in her fallyng yet she had a care
 Leste that her fete, or soche thingis lay bare; 180
 So wel she lovid clennesse, and eke trouthe.
 Of her had all the towne of Rome routhe,
 And Brutus hath by her chaste blode yswore
 That Tarquin shulde ybanished be therfore,
 And al his kinne, and let the peple cal,
 And opinly the tale he tolde hem al,
 And opinly let cary her on a bere
 Through al the towne, that men may se and here
 The horrible dede of her oppressioun.
 Ne nevir was there kyng in Rome toun 190
 Sens thylke day, and she was holdin there
 A saynt, and evre her day yhalowed dere,
 As in ther lawe: and thus endith Lucrese,
 The noble wyfe, Titus berith witnesse.
 I tel it for she was of love so trewe,
 Ne in her wil she chaungid for no newe,
 And in her stable herte, sadde and kinde,
 That in these women men may al day finde,

There

There as they cast ther hert, there it dwellith;
For wel I wote, that Christ himselfe tellith,
That in Israel, as wide as is the londe,
He so grete faith in al the londe ne fonde,

200 As in a woman, and this is no lie;
And as for men, loke ye, soche tyrannie
Thei done al daie, assay 'hem who so list,
The trewist is ful brotil for to triste.

Here endeth the Legende of LUCRECE of Rome.

Here foloweth the Legende of ARIADNE of Athens.

Inos infernal judge of Crete the kyng,
Now cometh thy lotte, thou comist on the ryng;
Nat for thy sake alone writen is this storye,
But for to clepe ayen unto memorie
Of Theseus the gret untrouthe of love,
For whiche the goddis of hevin above,
Ben wroth, and wrath have takin for thy synne,
Be red for shame, nowe I thy lyfe beginne.
Minos that was the mighty king of Crete,
That had an hundrid cities strong and grete,
To schole hath sent his sonne Androgeus
To Athenes, of the whiche it happid thus
That he was slayne, lerning philosophie,
Right in that cyte, nat but for envie.
The grete Minos, of the whiche that I speke,
His sonnis deth is comin for to wreke.
Alcathoe' he besiegid harde and longe,
But natheles the wallis be so stronge,
And Nisus, that was kyng of that cite,
So chivalrous, that litil dredith he,
Of Minos or his hoste toke he no cure,
Tyl on a daie befil an'avinture,
That Nisus doughtir stode upon the wal,
And of the siege behelde the manir al,
So happid it, that at a scarmishing,
She caste her hert upon Minos the king,
For his beaute, and for his chivalrye,
So sorely that she wenid for to die.
And shortly of this processe for to pace,
She made Minos to winnin thilke place,
So that the cite was al at his wyl,
To savein whom him liste, or ellis spill.
But wickidly he quit her kyndenesse,
And let her drenche in sorowe and distresse,
Nere that the goddis had of her pite,
But that tale were to longe as nowe for me.
Athenis was this king Minos also,
As Alcathoe', and othir townis mo,
And this th' effect, that Minos hath so driven
Them of Athenis, that thei mote him yeven
Fro yere to yere ther ownè childrin dere
For to be slaine, as ye shal aftir here.
This Minos hath a monstre', a wickid best,
That was so cruil, that without arest
Whan that a man was brought into' his presence
He wolde him ete, there helpith no defence;
And every thirde yere withoutin doute
Thei castidin lotte, as it came aboute,
On riche and pore, he must his sonnè take,
And of his childe he must a presente make
To Minos, for to save him or to spill,
Or let his best devour him at his will.
And this hath Minos don right in dispite,
To wreke his sonne was set al his delyte,
And makin 'hem of Athenis hys thral,
Fro yere to yere, while that he livin shal,
And hom he sailith whan this toun is won.
This wickid custome is so long yron,
Till that the king of Athenes Egeus

Mote sendin his owne sonnè Theseus, 60
Sens that the lotte is fallin him upon,
To ben devourid, for grace is there non.
And forth is ladde this woful yongè knight Unto the countre' of Minos ful of might,
And in a prison fettrid fast is he,
Tyl that ilke time he shulde yfretin be.
Wel maist thou wepe, o woful Theseus,
That art a king's sonne, and damnid thus,
Me thinkith this, that thou art depe yholde, 70
To whom that savid The fro caris colde,
And nowe yf any woman helpè The,
Wel oughtist thou her servaunt for be,
And ben her trewè lovir yere by yere.
But nowe to come aien to my matere.
The tourè, there this Theseus is throwe,
Downe in the bottom derke, and wondir lowe,
Was joyning to the wal of a foreine
That longing was unto the doughtrin tweine.
Of Minos, whiche that in ther chambris grete 80
Dweltin above toward the maistirstrete
Of thilke towne, in joy and in solas,
N'ot I nat howe, it happinid per caas
As Theseus complainid him by night,
The king's doughtir, that Ariadne hight,
And eke her sustir Phœdra, herdin al
His complainte, as thei stodin on the wall,
And lokid up upon the brightè mone,
'Hem listin nat to go to bedde so sone,
And of his wo thei had compassion, 90
A king's sonne to be in soche prison,
And ben devourid, thought 'hem grete pite,
Than Ariadne spake to' her sustir fre,
And sayid, Phœdra, my lefe sustir dere,
This woful lord's sonne maie ye nat here
Howe pitously he complainith his kinne,
And eke his pore estate that he is inne,
And giltlesse? certis nowe it is routhe,
And if ye wol assentin by my trouthe
He shal ben holpin, howe so that we do.
40 Phœdra answerde, ywis me is as wo 100
For him, as er I was for any man,
And to his helpe the best rede that I can
Is, that we done the gailir privily
To come and spekin with us hastily,
And done this woful man with him to come,
For if he maie this monstir ovrcome,
Than were he quite, there is none othir bote;
Let us wel taste him at his hert's rote,
That if so be that he a wepon have,
50 Where that he dare, his life to kepe and save, 110
Fightin with this fende, and himself defende;
For in the prison, there he shal discende,
Ye wote wel, that the best is in a place
That is nor derke, and hath roume and eke space
To welde an axe, or swerde, a staffe, or knife,
So that me thinkith he shulde save his life,
If that he be a man, he shal do so.
And we shal make him ballis eke also

Of

Of wexe and towe, that whan he gapith fast
 Into the best's throte he shal 'hem caste,
 To fleke his hongir, and encombre' his tethe,
 And right anon whan that Theseus fethe
 The best achekid, he shal on him lepe,
 To fleen him, or they comin more to hepe.
 This wepon shal the gailir or that tyde
 Ful privily within the prison hyde;
 And for the house is crenclid to and fro,
 And hath so queintè wayis for to go,
 For it is shapin as the mase is wrought,
 Therto have I a remedy' in my thought,
 That by a clewe of twyne, as he hath gon,
 The samè way he may returne anon,
 Folo'wing alway the threde, as he hath come
 And whan that he this best hath ovrcome,
 Than may he flien away out of this stede,
 And eke the gailir may he with him lede,
 And him avaunce at home in his countre,
 Sens that so gret a lord's sonne is he.
 This is my rede, if that ye dare it take,
 What shulde I lengir sermon of it make?
 The gailir cometh, and with him Theseus;
 And whan these thingis ben accordid thus,
 Adowne fate Theseus upon his kne,
 O the right lady of my life (qð he)
 I so'rowfull man, ydamnid to the dethe,
 Fro you, whilis that me ylastith brethe,
 I wol nat twinne, aftir this avinture,
 But in your service thus I wol endure,
 That as a wretche unknow, I wol you serve
 For evirmore, tyl that min hertè sterve,
 Forsake I wol at home min heritage,
 And as I said, ben of your courte a page,
 If that ye vouchsafin that in this place
 Ye grauntin me to havin soche a grace
 That I may have nat but my mete and drinke,
 And for my sustinaunce yet wol I swinke,
 Right as you list, that Minos, ne no wight
 Sens that he saw me nevir with eyensight,
 Ne no man ellis shal me nat espye,
 So sily, and so wel I shal me gye,
 And me so wel disfigure, and so lowe,
 That in this world there shal no man me knowe,
 To have my lyfe, and to have the presence
 Of you, that done to me this excellence;
 And to my fathir shal I sendin here
 This worthy man, which that is your gaylere,
 And him so guerdon, that he shal wel be
 One of the gretist men of my countre,
 And if I durste sayne, my lady bright,
 I am a kyng's sonne and eke a knight,
 As woldè God, if that it might ybe
 Ye werin in my countre alle thre,
 And I with you, to bere you companye,
 Than shuld ye sene if that I therof lye,
 And if I profir you in lowe manere
 To ben your page, and servin you right here,
 But I you serve as lowly in that place,
 I pray to Mars to yeve me soche grace,
 That sham's deth on me there motè fall,
 And deth and povertè to my frendis all,
 And that my spritè by night mote go
 Aftir my deth, and walkin to and fro,
 That I mote of foule traitour have a name,
 For whiche my sprit mote go, to do me shame,
 And if I clayme evir othir degre
 But ye vouchsafin to grauntin it me,
 As I have said, of sham's deth I dey,
 And mercy lady, I can naught els sey.
 A felly knight was this Theseus to se,
 And yongè, but of twenty yere and thre,
 But who so had yfene his countinaunce,
 He would have wept, for routh of his penaunce,

For which this Ariadne' in this manere
 Answerde to his profre and to his chere.
 A kyng's sonne, and eke a knight (qð she)
 To ben my servaunt in so low degre
 God shild it, for the shame of women al,
 And lene me nevir soche a case befall,
 And sende you grace, and sleight of hert also
 You to defende, and knightly fleen your foe, 200
 And lene here aftir that I may you finde
 To me, and to my sustir here so kynde,
 That I ne repent nat to yeve you lyfe;
 Yet were it bettir that I were your wife,
 Sithe that ye ben as gentil borne as I,
 And have a relme nat ferre but faste by,
 Than I suffrid your gentillesse to sterve,
 Or that I let you as a page to serve,
 It is no profite unto your kinrede,
 But what is that, that men n'll do for dred. 210
 And to my sustir, syth that it is so
 That she mote gone with me, if that I go,
 Or ellis suffre deth as wel as I,
 That ye unto your sonne as trewily
 Done her be weddid at your homecomming;
 This is the synal ende of al this thing,
 Ye swere it here on all that may be sworne.
 Ye, lady myn (qð he) or els to torne
 Mote I be with the Minotaure to morowe,
 And havith here of min hertblod to borowe, 220
 If that ye wol, if I had knife or spere,
 I wolde it lettin out, and thereon swere,
 For than at erste I wot ye would me leve,
 By Mars, that is the chiefe of my beleve,
 So that I mightin lyvin, and nat faile,
 To morowe for to takin my bataile,
 I ne wolde nevir fro this place fflye
 Tyl that ye shulde the very profre yse,
 For now, if that the loth I shal you say,
 I have lovid you ful many a daie, 230
 Though ye ne wist it nat, in my countre,
 And aldirmoste desyrid you to se
 Of any erthly living creature,
 Upon my trouthe I swere, and you asure,
 This sevin yere I have your servaunt be,
 Nowe have I you, and also have ye me,
 My derè hert, of Athenis Duchesse.
 This lady smilith at his stedfastnesse,
 And at his hertely wordes, and at his chere,
 And to her sustir sayd in this manere. 240
 And sothely leve all sustir myn (qð she) Nowe be we Duchessis both I and ye,
 And sikerde to the regals of Athenes,
 And bothe hereaftir likely to be Quenes,
 And favid fro his deth a kyng's sonne,
 As er of gentilwomen is the wonne
 To save a gentilman, enforth ther might,
 In honest cause, and namely in his right,
 Me thinkith no wight ought us hereof blame,
 Ne berin us therfore an evil name; 250
 And shortly of this matir for to make,
 This Theseus of her hath leve ytake,
 And every point was performid in dede,
 As ye have in this covenaut herde me rede;
 His wepen, his clewe, his thing that I have said,
 Was by the gailir in the house ylaid,
 There as the Mynotaure hath his dwellyng,
 Right faste by the dore, at his entring,
 And Theseus is lad unto his dethe,
 And forth unto this Minotaure he gethe, 260
 And by the teching of this Adriane,
 He ovrcome this best, and was his bane,
 And out he comith by the clewe againe
 Ful privily, whan he this best hath slaine,
 And by the gailir gottin hath a barge,
 And of his wiv's trefure gan it charge,
 X x x x

And

And toke his wife, and eke her sustir fre,
 And eke the gailir, and with 'hem al thre
 Is stole away out of the londe by night,
 And to the countre' of Enupie him dight,
 Thereas he had a frende of his knowing.
 There festin thei, there daunsin thei and sing,
 And in his armis hath this Adriane,
 That of the best hath kept him fro his bane,
 And get him there a noble barge anone,
 And of his countre folke a ful gret wone,
 And taketh his leve, and homwarde sailith he,
 And in an yle, amiddis the wilde se,
 Thereas there dwellid nevir cature none,
 Save wild bestis, and that ful many one,
 He made his shippe alondè for to sette,
 And in that yle halfe a daie he lette,
 And sayd, that on the londe he must him reste,
 His mariners have done right as him leste;
 And for to tellin shortly in this case,
 Whan Ariadne his wife aslepe was,
 For that her sustir faytir was than she,
 He taketh her in his honde, and forth goth he
 To shyppe, and as a traitour stole away,
 While that this Ariadne aslepe lay,
 And to his countre warde he sailith blive,
 A twenty dyvil way the winde him drive,
 And found his fathir drenchid in the se.
 Me lyste no more to speke of him, parde,
 These false lovirs, poison be ther bane.
 But I wol turne againe to Adriane,
 That is with slepe for werinelle ytake
 Ful sorowfully her hert may awake.
 Alas! for The myne herte hath grete pite;
 Right in the dawining awakith she,
 And gropith in the bed, and fond right nought.
 Alas (qð she) that evir I was wrought!
 I am betrayid, and her here to rente,
 And to the stonde all barefore fast she wente,

And cryid: Theseus myn hertè swete,
 Where be ye, that I may nat with you mete,
 And might thus with the bestis ben yllaine?
 270 The halowe rockis answerde her againe,
 No man she sawe, and yet yshone the mone,
 And hye upon 2 rocke she wentin sone, 310
 And sawe his barge ysailing in the se,
 Colde woxe her hert, and right thus sayid she;
 Mekir than ye finde I the bestis wylde.
 Hath he nat synne, that he her thus begylde?
 She cried, o turne againe for routhe and sinne,
 Thy barge ne hath nat al his meine inne;
 Her couverchefe on a pole styckid she 280 Ascaunce that he shulde it wele yse,
 And him remembre that she was behinde,
 And turne againe, and on the stonde her finde. 320
 But all for naught, his way he is ygone,
 And downe she fel a swowne upon a stone,
 And up she riste, and kyssed in all her care
 The steppis of his fete, there he hath fare,
 And to her bed right thus she spekith tho:
 Thou bed (qð she) that hast recevid two,
 Thou shalt answe're of two, and not of one,
 290 Where is the gretir partè? away gone.
 Alas! wher shal I wretchid wight become?
 For though so be that botè none here come, 330
 Home to my countre dare I nat for drede,
 I can my selfin in this case nat rede.
 What should I tellin more here complaining?
 It is so long it were an hevy thing;
 In her epistle Naso tellith all.
 But shortly to the ende tellin I shall,
 The Goddis have her holpin for pyte,
 300 And in the sygne of Taurus men may se
 The stonis of her corowne shynè clere.
 I will no more spekin of this matere, 340
 But thus this false lovir can begile
 His trew love, the Devil quit him his while.

Here endeth the Legende of ARIADNE.

Here foloweth the Legende of PHILOMELA.

Hou yevir of the formis that hast wrought
 The fayrè world, and bare it in thy thought
 Eternally, er thou thy werke began,
 Why madist thou to the flaundir of man,
 Or allbe that it was not thy doying,
 As for that ende, to makin soche a thing,
 Why suffredest thou that Tereus was bore,
 That is in love so false and so forswore,
 That fro this world up to the first hevin
 Corruptith, whan that folke his name nevin? 10
 And as to me so grisly was his dede,
 That whan that I this foulè storie rede,
 Myne eyin wexin foule, and fore also,
 Yet lasteth the venyme of so long ago,
 That it enfectith him, that wolde beholde
 The storie of Tereus, of which I tolde.
 Of Thrace was he the lorde, and kyn to Marte
 The cruil God, that stante with bloody darte,
 And weddid had he with full blisfull chere
 King Pandion's faire doughtir dere,
 That hight Progne, the floure of her countre,
 Though Juno liste not at the fest to be,
 Ne Hymen, that the God of Weddyng is,
 But at the festè redy ben iwis
 The furis three, with all ther mortall bronde,
 The Oule all night above the balkis wonde,

That Prophete is of wo, and of mischaunce;
 This revill, full of song and full of daunce,
 Lastid a fourtènight, or little lasse;
 But shortlie of this storie for to passe, 30
 (For I am werie of hym for to tell)
 Five yere his wife and he togithir dwell,
 Till on a daie she gan so fore to long
 To sene her sustir, that she sawe not long,
 That for desire she ne wist what to saie,
 But to her husbonde gan she for to praie
 For Godd's love, that she mote onis gone
 To sene her sustre', and come ayen anon,
 Or ellis but she mote to her wende,
 She praied him that he would astir her sende; 40
 And this was daie by daie all her praier,
 With all humbleste of wifeshode, worde and chere.
 This Tereus let make his shippis yare,
 And into Grece hymself is forthe ifare,
 Unto his fathir in lawe gan he praie
 20 To vouchesafin, that for a moneth or twaie,
 That Philomela his wife's sustir might
 On Progne' his wife but onis have a sight,
 And she shall come to you again anon,
 My self with her I will bothe come and gon, 50
 And as my hert's life I will her kepe.
 This olde Pandion, this kyng gan to wepe,

For tendirnesse of herte for to leve
 His doughtir gon, and for to yeve her leve;
 Of all this worlde he lovid nothyng so;
 But at the laste leve hath she to go,
 For Philomela with salt teris eke
 Gan of her fathir his grace to beseke
 To sene her sustir, that her longith so,
 And hym enbracith with her armis two,
 And therewithal so yonge and faire was she,
 That when that Tereus sawe her beaute,
 And of arraie that there was none her liche,
 And yet of beaute was she to so riche,
 He cast his fierie herte upon her so
 That he woll have her, how so that it go,
 And with his wilis knelid, and so praied,
 Till at the last Pandion thus ysaied.
 Now sonne (qð he) that art to me so dere,
 I The betake my yonge doughtir here
 That bereth the keie of all myne hert's life,
 And grete me well my doughtir, and thy wife,
 And yeve her levè somtyme for to pleie,
 That she maie se me onis or I deie.
 And sothly he hath made hym richè fest,
 And to his folke, the moste and eke the lest,
 That with him came, and yave him yestris grete,
 And him conveyith through the mastirstrete
 Af Athenis, and to the se hym brought,
 And tournith home, no malice he ne thought.
 The oris pullith forth the vessil fast,
 And into Thrace arrivith at the last,
 And up into a Forest he her led,
 And to a cave full privily hym sped,
 And in this darkè cave, if that her lest
 Or ne list nought, he bad her for to rest,
 Of whiche her herte agrose, and sayid thus.
 Where is my sustir, brothir Tereus?
 And there withall she wept full tendirlye,
 And quoke for fere all pale and pituousslye,
 Right as the lambe, that of the Wolfe is bitten,
 Or as the Culver, that of the'Egle is smitten,
 And is out of his clawis forthe escaped,
 Yet it is still aferde, and fore awhaped,
 Lest it be hent cistonis; so fate she:
 But uttirlye it maie none othir be,
 By force hath this traitour ydoen a dede,
 That he hath rest her of her maidinhede, Maugre her hed, by strength and by his might.
 Lo here a dede of men, and that aright!
 She cryith sustir with full loudè steven,
 And fathir dere, O helpe me God in heven;
 All helpith not, and yet this false these Hath doen his Ladie yet a more mischese,
 For fere, lest that she should his shame crie,
 And doen him opinlie a villanie,
 And with his swerd her tong of kerfith he,
 And in a Castill made her for to be Full privily in prisone evirmore,
 And kept her to his usage and his store,

So that she ne might nevir more asterte.
 O sely Philomela, wo' is thine herte,
 Huge ben thy sorowis, and wondir smerte,
 God wreke The, and sende The thy bone.
 Now it is time I make an ende sone.
 This Tereus is to his wife icome,
 And in his armis hath his wife inome,
 And pitoussly he wept, and shoke his healde,
 And swore her, that he found her sustir dedde,
 For whiche this sely Progne hath soche wo, 120
 That nigh her sorowfull herte brake atwo;
 And thus in teris let I Progne dwell,
 And of her sustir forthe I woll you tel.
 This wofull Ladie lernid had in youth
 So that she workin and enbraudin couth,
 And wevin in her stole the radèrore,
 And it of women hath be wovid yore.
 And sothly for to saie, she hath her fill 70
 Of mete and drinke, of clothing at her will,
 And couth eke rede well inough and endite, 130
 But with a pennè she ne could not write,
 But lettirs can she wevin to and fro,
 So that by that the yere was all ago
 She had ywovin in a stamen large
 How she was brought fro Athens in a barge,
 And in a cave how that she was ybrought,
 And all the thyng that Tereus ywrought,
 She wove it wel, and wrote the storie' above 80
 How she was servid for her sustir's love
 And to a knave a ring she yave anon, 840
 And prayid him by signis for to gon
 Unto the quene, and berin her that clothe;
 And by signis swore him many an othe
 She should him yevin what she gettin might.
 This knave anon unto the Quene him dight,
 And toke it her, and all the manir tolde.
 And when that Progne hath this thing behold,
 No worde she spake, for sorowe and for rage,
 But fainid her to gon on pilgrimage 150
 To Bacchus temple, and in a little stounde
 Her dombe sustir ysittyng hath she founde, 150
 Weping in the castill her self alone;
 Alas the wo, the constraint, and the mone
 That Progne upon her dombe sustir maketh!
 In armis everiche of 'hem othir taketh.
 And thus I let 'hem in ther sorowe dwell,
 The remenaunt is no charge for to tell,
 For this is all and some, thus was she served,
 That nevir ought agiltid ne deserved 160
 Unto this cruill man, that she of wiste.
 Ye maie beware of men, if that you liste,
 For all be that he woll not for his shame
 Doin as Tereus, to lese his name,
 Ne serve you as a murderer or a knave,
 Full little while shullin ye trewe him have,
 That woll I saie, al wer he now my brother,
 But it so be that he maie have none other.

Here endeth the Legende of PHILOMELA.

Here

Here foloweth the Legende of PHYLLIS.

BY prove, as well as by aucthorite,
That wickid fruiſte commeth of a wickid tre,
That maie ye find, if that it likith you;
But for this ende I ſpeke this as now,
To tellin you of falſe Demophoon,
In love a falſir herd I nevir non,
But it werin his fathir Theſeus,
God for his grace fro ſoche one kepin us,
Thus theſe women yprayin, that it here.
Now to the' effeſte tourne I of my matere.
Deſtroiſid is of Troie the Cite;
This Demophon came ſailiſg in the ſe
Toward Athenis, to his paleis large;
With him came many' a ſhip, and many' a barge,
All full of folke, of whiche full many one
Is woundid fore, and ſike, and wo begone,
And thei have at the ſiege long ilaine;
Behinde him came a winde, and eke a raine,
That ſhoſe ſo fore, his ſaile ne might not ſtonde;
Hym were levir then all the worlde a londe,
So huntith hym the tempeſt to and fro,
So darke it was, he could no where ygo
And with a wave to bruſtin was his ſtere,
His ſhip was rent ſo lowe, in ſoche manere,
That Carpenter ne could it not amende,
The ſe by night as any Torchè brende
For wode, and poſſith him up and down,
Till Neptune hath of hym compaſſioun,
And Thetis, Chorus, Triton, and thei all,
And madin him upon a londe to fall
Whereof that Phyllis Lady was and Quene,
Lycurgus doughtir, fairir unto ſene
Then is the ſloure again the brightè Sonne.
Unneth is Demophon to londe ivonne,
Weke and eke werie, and his folke forpined
Of werineſſe, and alſo enſamined,
And to the deth he was almoſte idriven,
His wiſe folke counſaile have him yyeven
To ſekin helpe and ſuccour of the Quene,
And lokin what his grace mightin bene,
And makin in that lande ſome cheveſaunce,
And kepin him fro wo, and fro miſchaunce:
For ſike he was, and almoſte at the deth,
Unnethis might he ſpeke, or drawin breth,
And lieth in Rhodopeia hym to reſte;
When he may walkin, him thought it was beſte
Unto the Courte to ſekin for ſuccour;
Men knewe him welc, and diddin hym honour,
For at Athenis Duke and Lorde was he,
As Theſeus his fathir hath ibe,
That in his tymè was of grete renoun,
No man ſo grete in all his regioun,
And like his fathre' of face and of ſtature,
And falſe of love, it came hym of nature,
As doeth the Foxe Renarde, the Fox'is ſonne,
Of kinde he could his oldè fathir wonne
Withoutin lore, as can a Drake ſwimme,
When it is caught, and caried to the brimme.
This honorable Phyllis doth him chere,
Her likith well his porte and his manere;
But I am all agrotid here beforne
To write of 'hem that in love ben forſworne,
And eke to haſtin me in my Legende,
Whiche to performè, God me grace yfende,
Therefore I paſſin ſhortly in this wiſe;
Ye have well herd of Theſeus the giſe,
In the betraying of faire Adriane,
That of her pite kept him fro his bane;

At ſhort wordis, right ſo Demophoon
The ſamè waie, and the ſame pathe hath gon, 70
That did his falſe fathir Theſeus,
For unto Phyllis hath he ſwornè thus
To weddin her, and her his trouth yplight,
And pikid of her all the gode he might,
Whan he was whole and ſounde, and had his reſte,
And doeth with Phyllis what ſo that him leſt,
As well I could, if that me liſtè ſo,
Tellin of all his doying to and fro.
He ſaied that to his countre mote hym ſaile,
For there he would her weddyng appaile, 80
As fill to her honour, and his alſo,
And opinly he toke his levè tho,
And to her ſwore that he would not ſojourne,
But in a moneth again he would retourne,
And in that londe let make his ordinaunce
As very Lorde, and toke the obeifaunce
Well and humbly, and his Shippis ydight,
And home he goith the next waie he might;
But unto Phyllis again came he nought, 90
And that hath ſhe ſo harde and ſore ibought,
Alas! as the ſtorie doeth us recorde,
That ſhe was her owne deth right with a corde,
When that ſhe ſaw that Demophon her traied.
But firſt wrote ſhe to him, and faſt him praied
He would come, and delivir her of pain,
As I reherſin ſhall a worde or twain,
Me liſte not to vouchſafe on him to ſwinke,
Diſpendin on him a penne full of ynke,
For falſe in love was he, right as his fire, 100
The Devill ſet ther ſoulis both on fire,
But of the lettre' of Phyllis woll I write
A worde or twain, although it be but lite.
Thine hoſteſſe (qð ſhe) O Demophoon,
Thy Phyllis, whiche that is ſo wo begon,
Of Rhodopeie upon you mote complain,
Ovir the terme yſet betwixt us twain
That ye ne holdin forwarde, as ye ſaied;
Your ancre, whiche ye in our havin laied,
40 Hight us, that ye would comin out of doubtr,
Or that the Monè onis went about, 110
But timis fower the Mone hath hid her face,
Sens thilkè daie ye wentin fro this place,
And fowir timis light the worlde again;
But for all that, yet ſhall I ſothly ſain
Yet hath the ſtreame of Scython not ybrought
From Athenis the ſhip, yet came it nought;
And if that ye the termè rekin would,
As I or othir true lovirs doe ſhould,
50 I plainin not (God wot) before my daie.
But all her lettir writin I ne maie 120
By ordir, for it were to me a charge,
Her lettir was right long, and thereto large,
But here and there in rhyme I have it laied;
There as me thought that ſhe hath wel yſaied.
She ſaied, the ſailis comith not again,
Ne to the worde there n'is no fey certain,
But I wot why ye comin not (qð ſhe)
For I was of my love to you ſo fre,
60 And of the Goddis that ye have yſwore
If that ther vengeance fall on you therefore, 130
Ye be not ſuffiſaunt to bere the pain;
To mochil truſtid I, well maie I ſain,
Upon your linage, and your faire tong,
And on your teris, falſly out ywrong,
How coud ye wepin ſo by craft? (qð ſhe)
Maie there ſoche teris evir ſainid be?

Now

Now certis, if ye would have in memorie,
It oughtin be to you but little glorie
To have a felie maidin thus betraied;
To God (qð she) praie I, and oft have praied, 140
That it be now the gretist price of all
And moste honour, that er you shall befall;
And when thine old auncetirs paintid be,
In whiche men maie ther worthinesse yse
Then praie I God thou paintid be also,
That folke maie redin, fortheby as thei go:
Lo this is he, that with his flattiry
Betrayid hath, and doen her villany,
That was his true love, in thought and dede!
But sothly of o point yet maie thei rede; 150
That ye ben like your fathir, as in this,
For he begilid Ariadne' iwis

With soche an arte, and soche a subtilte
As thou thy selvin hast begilid me;
As in that point, although it be not feire;
Thou folowist certain, and art his heire.
But sens thus sinfully ye me begile,
My bodie mote ye kene, within a while,
Right in the haven of Athenis steryng
Withoutin Sepulture and burying, 160
Though ye ben hardir then is any stone.
And when this lettir was forth sent anone,
And knewe how brotill and how fals he was,
She for dispaire fordid her self, alas!
Soche sorowe' hath she, for she beset her so.
Beware ye women of your subtil to,
Sens yet this daie men maie ensample se;
And trustith now in love no man but me.

Here endeth the Legende of PHYLLIS.

Here foloweth the Legende of HYPERMNESTRA.

IN Grece whilom were dwelling bretherne two,
Of whiche that one was callid Danao,
That many' a sonne hath of his bodie wonne,
As soche false loviris oftimis conne;
Emongis his sonnys all there was one,
That aldirmoste he loved of everychone;
And when this child was borne, this Danao
Shope him a name, and callid hym Lino;
That othir brothir callid was Egiste,
That was of love as false as er him lisse, 10
And many' a daughtir gate he in his lisse,
Of whiche he gate upon his righte wife
A doughtir dere, and did her for to call
Hypermnestira, the yongist of 'hem all;
The whichè childe of her nativite
To alle gode thewis yborne was she,
As likid to the Goddess or she was borne,
That of the shefe she should be the corne,
The werdis, that we clepin destine,
Hath shapin her, that she must nedis be Pitrous, and sad, and wise, and true as stele,
And to this woman it accordith wele,
For though that Venus yave her grete beute,
With Jupiter compownid so was she,
That conscience, and trouthe, and drede of shame,
And of her wifehode for to kepe her name,
This thought her was felicity as here,
And red Mars was at that tyme of the yere
So feble, that his malice is him rafte,
Repressid hath Venus his cruill crafte, 30
And what with Venus, and othir oppression
Of housis, Mars his Venime is adon,
That Hypermnestira dare not handle' a knife
In malice, though she shouldin lese her life;
But nathelasse, as hevin gan tho turne,
Two bad aspectis hath she of Saturne,
That made her for to dyin in prison;
And I shall astir makin mencion
Of Danao and Egistis also,
And though so be that thei were brethrin two, 40
For thilke tyme n'as sparid no linage,
It likid 'hem to makin mariage
Betwixt Hypermnestira, and him Lino,
And castin soche a daie it shall be so,
And full accordid was it uttirly,
The' araie is wrought, the tyme is faste by:

And thus Lino hath of his fathir's brother
The doughtir wedded, and ech of 'hem hath other.
The torchis brennin, and the lampis bright,
The Sacrificis ben full redy dight, 50
Th' ensence out of the fire out rekith sore,
The floure, the lese, is rent up by the rore,
To makin garlandis and crounis he;
Full is the place of found of Minstralcie,
Of songis amorous of mariage,
As thilke tyme was the plain usage;
And this was in the paleis of Egiste,
That in his hous was lord, right as him lisse;
And thus that daie thei drivin to an ende,
The frendis takin leve, and home thei wend; 60
The night is come, the bride shall go to bed,
Egistis to his chamber fast him sped,
And privily he let his doughtir call,
When that the hous voidid was of 'hem all,
He lokith on his doughtir with glad chere,
And to her spake, as ye shall astir here.
My right doughtir, the tresour of mine herte,
Sens list that daie, that shapin was my sherte,
Or by the fatal fuslir had my dome, 70
So nye myne herte nevir thing ne come
As thou my Hypermnestira, doughtir dere,
Take hede what thy fathir sayith The here,
And werke astir thy wisir evirmo,
For aldirfirst doughtir, I love The so,
That all the wolde to me n'is halfe so lese,
Ne I n'olde rede The to thy mischefe
For all the gode undir the coldè Mone,
And what I mene, it shal be said right sone,
With protestacion, as saine these wile, 80
That but thou doe, as I shall The devise,
Thou shalt be ded, by him that al hath wrought,
At shortè wordis thou ne scapist nought
Out of my paleis, or that thou be dede,
But thou consent, and werke astir my rede,
Take this to The for full conclusoun.
This Hypermnestira call her eyin down,
And quoke, as dooth the lese of Aps grene,
Ded wext her hew, and like ashin to kene,
And sayid: Lorde and fathir, all your will,
Astir my might, God wote I shall fulfill, 90
So it be to me no confusion.

I n'ill (qð he) have non excepcion;
And out he caught a knife, as rasour kene,
Hide this (qð he) that it be nat isene,

Y y y y

And

And when thine housbonde is to bed ygo,
While that he slepith, cut his throte atwo,
For in my dreame it is ywarnid me
How that my nevewe shall my bane ybe,
But whiche I n'ot, wherefore I woll be fiker, 100
If thou saie naie, we two shall have a biker,
As I have faied, by him that I have sworne.
This Hypermnestra' hath nigh her wit forlorn,
And for to passe harmelesse out of that place
She grauntid him, there was non othir grace;
And therewithall a costrill takith he,
And faied, hereof a draught or two or thre,
Yeve him to drinke, when he goith to reste,
As he shall slepe as long as er The leste,
The narcotikes and apies ben so strong;
And go thy waie, lest that him thinke to long. 110
Out cometh the bride, and with full sobre chere,
As is of maidins oft in the manere
To chambir brought, with revil and with song;
And shortlie, leste this tale be to long,
This Lino and she beth bin brought to bed,
And every wight out at the dore him sped.
The night is wastid, and he fell aslepe,
Full tendirly beginnith she to wepe,
She rist her up, and dredefully she quaketh,
As doeth the braunch, that Zephyrus yshaketh, 120
And husht were all in Aragone that cite,
As coide as any Froste now wexith she,
For pite by the herte strainid her so,
And drede of deth doith her so moche wo,
That thryis doune she fill, in soche a were,
She rist her up, and stakereth here and there,
And on her handis faste lokith she,
Alas, q'ð she, shall myne handes blodie be!

I am a maidin, and by my nature,
And by my semblaunt, and by my vesture, 130
Myne handis ben not shapin for a knife,
As for to revin no man fro his life,
What Devill have I with the knife to do?
And shall I have my throte ycorve atwo?
Then shall I blede alas! and be yshende
And nedis of this thing mote have an ende,
Or he or I mote nedis lese our life;
Now certis (q'ð she) sens I am his wife,
And hath my faithe, yet is it bette for me 140
For to be dedde in wifely honeste,
Then be a traitour, living in my shame;
Be as be maie, for ernest or for game
He shall awake, and rise and go his waie
Out at this guttir, er that it be daie;
And wept full tendirly upon his face,
And in her armis gan him to embrace,
And him she roggith, and awakith soft,
And at the windowe lepe he fro the loft,
When she hath warnid him, and doen him bote.
This Lino swift ywas, and light of fore, 150
And from his wife he ran a full gode pace.
This felie woman is so weke, alas!
And helplesse, so that er she ferrè went
Her cruill fathir did her for to hent.
Alas! Lino, why art thou so unkinde?
Why ne hast thou remembrid in thy minde
And takin her, and led her forthe with The?
For when she sawe that gone awaie was he,
And that she ne might not so fast ygo,
Ne folowin him, she fate doune right tho, 160
Til she was caught, and fettrid in prison,
This tale is faied for this conclusion.

Thus endeth the Legende of gode Women.

Here foloweth a godely Balade of CHAUCER.

Othir of norture, best beloved of all,
And freshe flour, to whom gode thrift
God sende,

Your childe, if it luste you me so to call,
All be' I' unable my self so to pretende,
To your discrecion I recomende
Mine herte and all, with every circumstaunce,
All wholly to be' undir your govirnaunce.

Moste desire I, and have, and evir shall 170
Thing, which that might your hert'is ese amende,
Have me excused, my powir is but small,
Nathelesse of right ye ought for to commende
My gode will, whichè faine would entende
To doe you service for my suffisaunce
Is wholly to be' undir your govirnaunce.

Mens un in herte, whiche never shall apall,
Aie freshe and new, and right glad to dispende
My time in your service, what so befall,
Besechyng your excellence to defende 180
My simplenesse, if ignoraunce offende
In any wise, sith that myne affiaunce
Is whollie to be' undir your govirnaunce.

Daisie of light, very ground of comfort,
The Sunn'is doughtir ye hight as I rede,
For when he westrith, farwell your disport,
By your nature anone right for pure drede
Of the rude night, that with his boistous wede

Of derkenesse shadowith our Hemisphere,
Then closin ye, my liv'is Ladie dere. 190

Daunying the daie unto his kinde resort,
And Phœbus your fathir with his stremes rede
Adorneth the morowe, consuming the sort
Of mistie cloudes, that wouldin ovirlede
True humble hertis with ther mistie hede,
Nere comfort adaies when your eyin clere
Disclose and sprede, my liv'is Ladie dere.

Je wouldray: but the grete God disposeth,
And makith casuell by his providence
Soche thing, as mann'is frele wit purposeth, 200
All for the best, if that your consience
Not grutche it, but in humble pacience
It receive, for God saieth withoutin fable
A faithfull herte evir is acceptable.

Cautelis, whofo usith gladlie gloseth,
To eschewe soche it is right high prudence,
What ye saied onis, mine herte opposeth,
That my writyng Japis in your absence
Plesid you moche bettir than my presence, 210
Yet can I more, ye be not excusable,
A faithfull herte evir is acceptable.

Quakith my penne, my spirite supposeth
That in my writing ye find woll offence,
Min hert welknith thus sone, anon it riseth,

Now

Now hotte, now colde, and eft in grete fervence,
That mille is, is caufid of negligence,
And not of malice, therefore beth merciabe,
A faithfull herte evir is acceptable.

L'envoye.

Forthe complaint, forthe thou lacking eloquence,

Forthe litil lettir of enditing lame, 220
I have befought my ladie's Sapience
Of thy behalfe, for to accept in game
Thine inabilite, doe thou the fame:
Abide, have more yet: Je serve Joveffe;
Now forth, I close The' in holy Venus name,
The shall unclofe my hert's govirneffe.

Thus endeth this Ballade.

Here foloweth the Boke of

BOETHIUS

CONSOLATIONE PHILOSOPHIÆ.

In this Book are handled high and hard obscure Points, viz. The Purveyance of God, the Force of Destiny, the Freedom of our Wills, and the infallible Prescience of the Almighty; and that the Contemplation of God himself is our Summum Bonum.

Metrum primum.

Carmina qui quondam studio florente peregi, Flebilis, heu, mæstos cogor inire modos. &c.

A Las! I wepyng am constrained to begin verse of sorowfull matter, that whilom in florishyng studie made delitable dities.
For lo! rendyng muses of Poetes enditen to me thinges to be writen, and drierie teres. At laste no drede ne might overcame tho muses, that thei ne werren fellowes, and foloweden my waie, that is to saie, when I was exiled, thei that weren of my youth whilom welfull and grene, comforten now sorowfull wierdes of me olde man: for elde is comen unware-ly upon me, hasted by the harmes that I have, and sorowe hath commaunded his age to be in me. Heres hore aren shad overtimeliche upon my hed: and the slacke skinne trembleth of mine emptied bodie. Thilke deth of men is welcfull, that ne cometh not in yeres that be swete, but cometh to wretches often icleped:
Alas, alas! with how dese an ere deth cruell turneth awaie fro wretches, and naierh for to close wepyng eyen. While fortune unfaithfull favoured me with light godes, that sorowfull houre, that is to saie, the deth, had almoste drete myne hedde: but now for fortune cloudie hath chaunged her decevable chere to mewarde, myne unpitous life draweth along ungre-able dwellynges. O ye my frendes, what, or where-to avanted ye me to ben welfull? For he that hath fallin, stode in no stedfast degre.

Prefa prima.

Hæc dum mecum tacitus ipse reputarem, querimoniamque lacrymabilem styli officio designarem, astitisse mihi supra verticem visa est mulier reverendi admodum vultus, oculis ardentibus, & ultra communem, &c.

IN the mene while, that I stil recorded these thynges with my self, and marked my wepelie complainte with office of pointell: I saugh stond-yng aboven the hight of myn hed a woman of full grete reverence, by semblaunt. Her eyen brennyng, and clere, seyng over the common might of menne, with a lively colour, and with soche vigour and strength that it ne might not be nempned, all were it so, that she were full of so grete age, that menne woulden not trowen in no manere, that she were of our elde.

The stature of her was of doutous Judgemente, for sometyme she constrained and shronke her selven, like to the common mesure of menne: And some-tyme it semed, that she touched the heaven with the hight of her hedde. And when she hove her hedde higher, she perced the self heaven, so that the sight of menne lokyng was in ydell: her clothes wer maked of right delie thredes, and subtel craft of perdurable matter. The whiche clothes she had woven with her owne handes, as I knewe well after by her self declaryng, and shewyng to me the beaurie: The whiche

whiche clothes a darkenesse of a forleten and dispifed elde had dusked and darked, as it is wonte to darke by smoked Images.

In the netherest hemme or border of these clothes menne redde i woven therein a Grekishe A. that sig-nifieth the life active, and above that letter, in the hi-est bordure, a Grekishe C. that signifieth the life contemplative. And betwene these two letters there were seen degrees nobly wrought, in maner of ladders, by whiche degrees menne might climben from the netherest letter to the upperest: nathelsse handes of some men hadden kerve that clothe, by violence or by strength, and everiche manne of hem had borne awaie soche peces, as he might getten. And for-sothe this foresaied woman bare smale bokes in her right hande, and in her left hand she bare a scepter.
And when she sawe these Poeticall muses approchyng about my bed, and endityng wordes to my wepynges, she was a litle amoved, and glowd with cruell eyen. Who (q^d she) hath suffered approchen to this like manne these commen strompettes, of which is the place that menne callen Theatre, the whiche onely ne asswage not his sorowes with remedies, but thei would feden and norishe hym with swete venime? Forsothe, that ben tho that with thornes, and prickynges of talentes of affections, whiche that ben nothyng fructuous nor profitable, di-stroyen the Corne, plentuous of fructes of reson. For thei holden hertes of men in usage, but thei ne deliver no folke fro maladie. But if ye muses had with-drawen fro me with your flatteries any unconnyng and unprofitable manne, as ben wont to finde commenly among the peple, I would well suffre the lasse grevoutly. For why, in soche an unprofitable man myne ententes were nothyng endamaged. But ye withdrawen fro me this man, that hath ben nourished in my studies or scoles of Eleaticis, and of Academiceis in Greece. But goeth now rather awaie ye Mermaidens, whiche that ben swete, till it be at the last, and suffreth this man to be cured and heled by my muses, that is to say, by my notefull sciences.
And thus this companie of muses iblamed casten wrothly the chere downward to the yerth, and shew-yng by rednesse ther shame, thei passeden sorowfully the threshold. And I of whom the sight plounged in teres was darked, so that I ne might not know what that woman was, of so Imperial authoritie, I woxe all abashed and stoned, and cast my sight doun to the yerth, and began still for to abide what she would doen afterward. Then came she nere, and set her doun upon the utterest corner of my bed, and she beholdyng my chere, that was cast to the yerth, hevie and grevous of wepyng, complained with these wordes (that I shall saine) the perturbacion of my thought.

Metrum secundum.

*Heu! quàm præcipiti mersa profundo
Mens hebet, & propria luce relicta
Tendit in externas ire tenebras,
Terrenis quoties flatibus æta
Crescit in immensum noxia cura!
Hic quondam Cælo liber aperto, &c.*

ALas! howe the thought of this man, dreinte in overthrowyng depenesse, dulleth and forleteth his proper clerenesse, mintyng to gone into forain darkenesse, as oft as his anoious besines wexeth without mesure, that is driven with worldlie Windes.
This man that whilome was fre, to whom the heven was open and knowen, and was wont to gone in he-venly pathes, and sawe the lightnesse of the redde Sunne, and behelde the Sterres of the colde Mone, and whiche Sterre in heven useth wanderyng recourses islitte by divers spheres. This manne overcomer had comprehended all this thyng, by number of accompting in Astronomie. And over this, he was wont to seken the causes, whens the sownyng windes moven, and besien the smothe water of the Se. And what spirite tourneth the stable heven. And why the sterre riseth out of the red Est, to fallen in the Western waves. And what attempreth the lustie houres of the firste Sommer seson, and dighteth and apparailleth the yerth with rosie floures. And who maketh the pluntuous Autumpne in full yeres steten with hevie Grapes. And eke this manne was wonte to tell the divers causes of nature that were hidde.

Alas! how lightlie is empted the light of his thought, and his necke is pressed with hevie chaines, and be-reth his chere enclined adowne for the grete weight, and is constrained to loken on the sole yerth.

Sed Medicina, inquit, potius tempus est, quàm Querela. Tum verò totis in me intentis luminibus. Tu ne ille es (ait) qui nostro quondam lacte nutritus, nostris educatus alimentis, in virilis animi robur evaseras, &c.

BUT tyme is now of Medicine (q^d she) more then complainte. Forsothe then she entendyng to me warde, with all the lokyng of her eyen saied, Art not thou he (q^d she) that whilome ynourished with my Milke, and fostred with my metes, were escaped and commen to the courage of a parfaite manne? Certes, I yave The soche armoures, that if thou thy self ne haddest firste caste hem awaie, thei shoulde have defended The in sikernesse, that maie not be overcomen. Knowest thou not me? Why art thou still? Is it for shame, or for astonyng? It were me lever it were for shame, but it semeth me that astonyng hath oppressed The. And when she sawe me not onely stil, but rather without office of tongue, and all dombe, she laied her hande soletie upon my brest, and saied: Here is no perill (q^d she) he is fallen into a Lethargie, whiche that is a common sikenesse to hertes that ben deceived. He hath a little foryeten hymself. But certes he shall lightlie remembren hymself, if so be that he hath knowen me er now. And that he maie doen so, I will wipe his eyen a litle, that be darked by the cloude of mortall thynges. These wordes saied she, and with the lappe of her garmente, iplied in a frounce she dried myne eyen, that weren full of the waves of my wepynges.

*Tunc me discussâ liquerunt nocte tenebræ,
Luminibusque prior rediit vigor;
Ut cum præcipiti glomerantur sidera Coro,
Nimbosque polus stetit imbris,
Sol latet, ac nondum Cælo venientibus astris, &c.*

THUS when that Nighte was discussed awaie, Derkenesse forlete me, and to my eyen repaired againe ther first strength. And right as by ensample, as the Sunne is hidde when the Sterres ben co-verde with Cloudes, by a swifte winde that hight Chorus, and the Firmament stante derked by wete plungie

plungie Cloudes, and that the Sterres not apperen upon the heven, so that the Night semed sprad upon the yerth, if then the wind that hight Boreas, isent out of the Cave of the Countre of Thrace, bereth this night, that is to saine, chaserh it awaie, and discovereth the closed daie, than shineth Phœbus, ishaken with sodaine light, and smiteth with his beemes in marveilyng eyen.

Prosa tertia

Right so and none otherwise, the Cloudes of sorrowe dissolved, and doen awaie, I toke heven, and received mynde to knowen the face of my Philicien: so that I sette myne eyen upon her, and fastened my lokyng. I beheld my Norice Philosophie, in whose house I had conversed fro my youthe, and I saied thus. O thou Maistresse of all vertues, descended from the soverain fete, why art thou comen into this solitarie place of myne exile? Art thou comen, for thou art made culpable with me of false blames? O (qð she) my nourice, should I forsake The now, and should I not parten with The by comen travaile the charge that thou haste suffered for envie of my name? Certes, it were not lesfull ne sitting to Philosophie, to leten without companie the waie of him that is innocente: Should I then redout my blame, and agrife as though there wer befallen a newe tuing? For trowest thou that Philosophie be now aldirfirst assailed in perilles by folke of wicked maner? Have I not striven with full grete strief, in olde tyme, before the age of my Plato, ayenst the folehardinesse of toly? And eke the same Plato living, his Maister Socrates deserved victorie or unrightfull deth in my presence. The heritage of the whiche Socrates, the heritage is to saine the Doctrine of the whiche Socrates, in his opinion of felicity, that I clepe welesfulness, when that the people of Epicuriens and Stoiciens, and many other, enforced them to go ravish, every man for his parte, that is to saine, that everich of hem would drawn to the defence of his opinion the wordes of Socrates, thei as in partie of their praie, to droune me crying and debatyng there ayenst, and corven and renten my clothes, that I had woven with myne own handes, and with tho clothes that thei had araced out of my clothes thei wentin awaie, wenyng that I had gone with hem every dele. In whiche Epicuriens and Stoiciens for as moche as there semed some traces and steppes of my habite, the folie of wenyng tho Epicuriens and Stoiciens my familiers perverted some, through the errour of the wicked multitude of hem: This is to sain, for thei semed Philosophers, thei weren pursued to the deth and flaine. So if thou hast not knowen the exilyng of Anaxagoras, ne the enpoisoning of Socrates, ne the tourmentes of Zeno, for thei weren straungers, yet mightest thou have knowen the Senecas, the Canios, and the Soranos: Of whiche folke the renome is neither over olde ne unsolempne. The whiche menne nothyng els ne brought to the deth, but onely for thei were enformed of my maners, and semeden moste unlike to the studies of wicked folke. And forthy thou oughtest not to wondren, though that I in the bitter Se be driven with tempestes blowing about. In the whiche this is my moste purpose, that is to sain, to disple-sen wicked men. Of whiche shrewes, all be the hoste never so giete, it is to dispise, for it is not governed with no leder of reton, but it is ravished onely by tietyng errour, folhie and lightlie. And if thei sometyme make an hoste ayenst us, assaile us as stranger, our leder draweth together his richesses into his Toure, and thei ben ententise about sarplis or fachelles, unprofitable for to taken. But we then ben high aboven, liker from all tumulte and wode noise, warenestored and enclosed in soche a Paleis, whither as the clateryng or anoying folie, maie not attaine, we scorne soche raveners, and henters of foulest thynges.

Whereto then wretches drede ye Tirauntes, that ben wode, and feloous without any strength? Hope after nothyng, ne drede thou not: and so shalt thou disarmen the ire of thine unmightie Tiraunte. But who that quakyng dredeth, or desireth thyng that is not stable of his right, that manne, that so doeth, hath caste awaie his shilde, and is removed fro his place, and enlatheth hym in the chaine, with the whiche he maie be drawn.

Is this the librarie that thou haddest chosen for a right certain liege to The in mine Loue, there as thou disputest oft with me, of the science of thynges, touchyng divinite, and touchyng mankynde? Was then myne habite soche as it is now, was my face or chere soch as is now, when I sought with The the secretes of nature, when thou enformedest my maners and the reson of all my life, to the ensample of th' order of heven? Is not this the querdone that I referre to The, to whom I have be obdisaunt?

Z z z z

Certes,

Certes, thou enformedest by the mouthe of Plato this sentence, that is to saie, that comen thynges or communalities weren blisfull, if thei that had studied all fully to wisedome, governeden thilke thynges: or els if it so befall, that the governours of communalities studien to gette wisedome. Thou saidist eke by the mouthe of the saied Plato, that it was a necessarie cause, wise menne to taken and desiren the governaunce of comen thynges, for that the governaunce of citees, ileft in the handes of felonous tourmentors, citzeins ne shoulde not bringen in pestilence and destruccion to gode folke. And therefore I following thilke aucthous, desired to put forth in execucion and in acte of comen administracion thilke thynges, that I had lerned of The, among my secreete resting whiles; thou and God, that put in the thoughtes of wise folke, ben known with me, that nothyng ne brought me to mastreie or dignitie, but the comen studie of all godenesse. And therefore cometh it, that betwene wicked folk and me have ben grevous discordes, that ne mighten not be relefed by praiers: for this libertie hath the fredome of conscience, that the wrathe of more mightie folke hath alwaie ben dispised of me, for savacion of right. How oft have I resisted and withstande, that man that hight Conigast, that made alwaie th'assaut ayenst the prosper fortunes of pore feble folke? How oft eke have I put of or cast out hym Triguill, Provoste of the Kyng's hous, bothe of the wronges that he had begonne to doen, and eke fully performed? How often have I covered and defended by the aucthoritie of me, put ayenst perilles, that is to saie, put myne aucthoritie in perill, for the wretched pore folke, that the covetise of straungers unpunished turmenteden alwaie with miseses; and grevaunces out of nomber? Never manne yet drowe me fro right to wrong. When I sawe the Fortunes and the richesses of the peple of the Provinces ben harmed and amenused, either by privie ravines, or by comen tributes or cariages, as fory was I as thei that suffred the harme. Glosa. When Theodorike kyng of Gothes in a dedde yere had his garners full of corne, and commaunded that no man should buye no corn, till his corne wer sold, and at a grevous dere prife: Boece withstode that ordinaunce, and overcame it, knowyng all this the kyng Theodorike himself. Coempcion is to saie, comen achate or buying together, that were established upon the peple, by soche a manner imposicion, as who so bought a bushell of Corne, he must yeven the kyng the fiveth parte. Textus. When it was in the fore hongrie tyme, there was established grevous and unprofitable coempcion, that men seen well, it should gretlie tourmente and endomagen all the Province of Campaine. I toke strife ayenst the Provost of the Pretorie, for the common profite. And the King knowyng of it, I overcame it, so that the coempcion was not asked, ne toke effecte.

Pauline a Counsaillour of Rome, the richesses of the whiche Pauline the houndes of the Paleis, that is to saie, the officers woulde have devoured by hope and covetise, yet drowe I out of the jawes of hem that gapeden. And for as moche as the paine of the accusacion adjudged before ne should not sodainly henten, ne punishen wrongfully Albine a Counsaillour of Rome, I putte me ayenst the hates, and indignacions of the accusour Cyprian. Is it not then inough, sens that I have purchafed grete discordes ayenst my self? But I ought be more assured ayenst other folke, that for the love of rightwisnesse I never reserved nothyng to my self, to themwarde of the kyng's halle, by whiche I were the more siker. But through the same accusours accusyng, I am condemned. Of the number of whiche accusours, one Basilus that whilom was chased out of the Kyng's service, is now compelled in accusyng of my name, for nede of foraine money.

Also, Opilion and Gaudentius, have accused me: All be it so that the Justice Regall had whilome demed them bothe to gone into exile, for ther trecheries and fraudes without nomber. To whiche judgement thei n'olden not obeye, but defended hem by the sikernes of holic houses, that is to saie, fledden into Seintewarie: And then when this was apperceived by the Kyng, he commaunded, but if thei avoided the Cite of Ravenne, by certayne daye assigned, that menne should marken hem on the foreheade, with an hotte yron, and chasen hem out of the toun. Now what thyng semeth might be likened to this crueltie, for certes this same daie was received the accusyng of my name, by thilke same accusours? What maie be saied hereto? Hath my studie and my connyng deserved thus, or els the foresaied dampnacion of me, made them rightfull accusours or no? Was not fortune ashamed of this? Certes, all had not fortune ben ashamed, that innocence was accused, yet ought she have had shame of the filthe of myne accusours. But askest thou in summe of what gylte I am accused? Men saie that I would save the companie of the Senatours. And desirest thou to heren in what maner I am accused? that I should have distourbed the accusour to beren Letters, by whiche he should have made the Senatours giltye, ayenst the Kyng's roiall Majestie. O Maistresse, what demest thou of this? Shall I forsake this blame, that I be no shame to The? Certes, I have would it (that is to saie) the savacion of the Senate, ne I shall never let to wilne it, and that I confesse and am aknowe, but the entente of the accusour to ben distourbed shall cese. Shall I clepe that a felonie or a synne, that I have desired the savacion of the order of the Senate? And certes had thilke same Senate doen through ther decretes and ther judgements, as though it were a sinne and a felonie, that is to wilne the savacion of them. But folie, that lieth alwaie to hymself, maie not chaunge the merite of thynges; ne I trowe not by the judgemente of Socrates, that it were lesfull to me, to hide the sothe, ne assente to lesynges: but certes, how so ever it be of this, I putte it to gessen or prisen, of the judgement of The, and of wise folke, of whiche thyng all the ordinaunce and the sothe (for as moche as folke that ben to comen after our daies, shal knowen it) I have putte it in Scripture, and in remembraunce. For touchyng the Letters falsely made, by whiche Letters I am accused, to have hoped the fredome of Rome, what appertaineth me to speken thereof? Of whiche Letters the fraude had ben shewed apertlie, if I had had libertie for to have used, and ben at confession of mine accusours, the whiche thyng in all nedes hath grete strength. For what other fredome maie menne hopen? Certes, I would that some other fredome might be hoped, I would then have answered, by the wordes of a man, that hight Canius: For when he was accused of Canius, Caesar Germane's sonne, that he was knowyng and consentyng of a conjuration made ayenst hym. This Canius answered thus: if I had wiste it, thou haddest not wiste it. In whiche thyng, sorow hath not so dulled my witte, that I plain onely, that shreude folke apparailen Felonies againste vertue, but I wonder gretly, how that thei maie performe thynges that thei have hoped for to doen; for why? to wilne shreudnesse, that cometh paraventure of our defeaute: But it is like a Monster and a marveile, how that in the presente sight of GOD maie ben achieved and performed soche thynges, as every felonous manne hath conceived in his thought against innocentes.

For

For whiche thyng, one of thy familiers not unskilfull asked thus, If GOD is, whens comen wicked thynges? But all had it ben lesfull that felonous folk, that now desiren the blode, and the deth of all gode menne, and eke of the Senate, have wilned to gone distroyen me, whom thei have seen alwaie bataillen and defenden gode men and eke all the Senate, that had not deserved of the fathers (that is to saie of the Senatours) that thei shoulde will my destruction. Thou remembreth well as I gesse, that when I would doen or saie any thyng, thou thy self alwaie presente ruledest me.

At the cite of Verone, when that the king gredie of comen slaughter, caste hym to transporten upon al th' order of the senate the gilte of his roiall Majestie, of the whiche gilte that Albin was accused, with how grete sikernesse of perill to me defended I all the Senate? Thou woteest well that I saie sothe, ne I ne avaunted me never in praisyng of my self: For alwaie, when any wight receiveth precious renowne, in avaunting of hymself, or his werkes, he amenuseth the seere of his conscience.

But now thou maiest well seen, to what ende I am comen for myne innocencie, I receive paine of false Felonie, for guerdone of verie vertue. And what open confession of felonie had ever Judges, so accordaunte in cruelte, that is to saie, as myne accusyng hath, that either errour of manne's witte, or els condicion of Fortune, that is uncertaine to all mortall folke, ne submitted some of hem, that is to saie, that it ne enclined some Judge to have pite or compassion? For although I had ben accused, that I would brenne holie houses, and strangle Priestes with wicked swerde, or that I had greithed deth to all gode menne, algates the sentence should have punished me presente confessed and convicted.

But now I am removed from the Cite of Rome, almoste five hundred thousand paas, I am without defence dampned to proscriptioun and to deth, for the studies and bounties that I have doen to the Senate. But o well ben thei worthie of merite, as who saierh: naie, there might yet never none of hem be convict of soche a blame as mine is. Of whiche trespase mine accusours seen full wel the dignitie, for thei would darken it with meddling of some felonie. Thei baren me on hond and saied, that I had poluted and defouled my conscience with Sacrilege, for covetise of dignitie: and certes, thou thy self that art planted in me, chacedest out of the siege of my corage all covetise of mortall thynges, ne Sacrilege ne had no leve to have a place in me before thine eyes. For thou droppedest every daie in mine eres, and in my thought, thilke commaundemente of Pythagoras, that is to saie: Menne shall serven to God, and not to Goddes. Ne it was not conveniente ne none nede, to taken help of the foulest spirites, I that thou hast ordeined, and set in soche excellence, that thou madest me like to God: And over this, the right clene secrete chamber of myne hous, that is to saie, my wife, and the companie of mine honest frendes, and my wife's father, as well holie as worthy to be reverensd for his dedes, defenden me from all soche suspeccion of soche blame. But oh malice! For thei that accusen me, taken of The, Philosophie, faith of so grete blame, for thei trowen that I have had affinite to malifise or enchauntment, bicause that I am replenished, and fulfilled with thy techynges, and enformed of thy manners. And thus it suffiseth not onely, that thy reverence ne availe me naught, but if thou of thy frewill rather be blemished with mine offencion. But certes, to the harmes that I have there betideth yet this encrese of harme, that the gessyng and the judgemente of moche folke ne loken nothyng to the desertes of thynges, but onely to the aventure of fortune, and judgen that only soche thynges ben purveied of God, which that temporalle wilfulness commaundeth. Glosa. As thus, that if a wight have prosperite, he is a gode manne, and worthie to have that prosperite, and who so hath adversitie, he is a wicked manne, and God hath forsake hym, and he is worthie to have that adversitie. This is the opinion of some folke, and therof cometh the gode-gessing first of all thing forsaketh wretches. Certes, it greveth me to thinke right now on divers sentences that the peple saith of me: and thus moche I saie, that the last charge of contrarious Fortune is this, that when any blame is laied upon a caitive, men wenen that he hath deserved that he suffereth. And I that am put awaie from gode men, and dispoiled of dignities, and defouled of my name by gessyng, have suffred turmentes for my gode dedes. Certes, me semeth that I se the felonous covines of wicked men habounden in joie and in gladnesse, and I se that every lorell shapeth hym to finde newe fraudes, for to accuse gode folk, and I se that gode folke be overthrowen, for drede of my perill, and every luxurious turmentour dare doen all felonie unpunished, and be excited thereto by yefies, and innocentes be not onely dispoiled of sikernesse, but of defence, and therto me list to crien to God in this maner.

And if thou hast lever for to wene that thou be put out of thy countrey, than haste thou put out thy selfe, rather than any other wight hath, for no wight (but thou thy self) ne might never have done that to The: For yf thou remembre The of what countrey thou art borne, it n'is nat governed by emperours ne by government of multitude, as weren the countreis of 'hem of Athenes, but one lorde and one kyng, and that is God, that is lord of thy countrey, which that rejoyseth him of the dwelling of his cytezens and not for to put 'hem in exile. FIRSTE woldest thou suffre me to touche and assaye the estare of thy thought by a fewe demaundes, so that I may understand the maner of thy curacion? Aske me (q<sup>d</sup> I) at thy will, that thou wilt, and I shal shal answer. Tho saide she thus: Whether wenest thou (q<sup>d</sup> she) that this world be governed folishly by happes and fortunes, or els wenest thou that there be in it any governement of reson? B. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) I ne trowe nat in no maner that so certaine thinges shulde be moved by fortounous fortune, but I wote wel that God, maker and maister, is governor of his werke, ne was never yet day that might put me out of the sothnesse of that sentence. P. So is it (q<sup>d</sup> she) for the same thinge fange thou a litel here beforne, and bewailedest and weptest, that onely men were put out of the cure of God, for of all other thinges thou ne douteest nat, that they n're governed by reson. But oughe! I wonder certes gretly why that thou art sike, sens that thou arte put in so wholsome a sentence: But let us seken deper. I conjecte that there lacketh I n'ot what. But say me this. Sens that thou ne douteest not that this worlde be governed by God, with whiche governayle takest thou hede that it is governed? Unneth (q<sup>d</sup> I) know I the sentence of thy question, so that I ne maie not yet answeren to thy demaundes. I was not disceved (q<sup>d</sup> she) that there ne failed somewhat by whiche the malady of perturbacion is crepte into thy thought, so as the strength of thy paleys shynge is open: but saye me this. Remembrest thou what is th'ende of thynges? and whi<sup>cher</sup> th' entencion of al kinde tendeth? I have herde tolde it some tyme (q<sup>d</sup> I) but drerinesse hath dulled my memory. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) thou wotest well whence all thinges be comen and proceden. I wote wel (q<sup>d</sup> I) and answerde, that God is beginninge of al. And howe may this be (q<sup>d</sup> she) that sens thou knowest the beginninge of thinges, that thou knowest nat what is the ende of thinges? but soche ben the customes of perturbacion, and this power thei han that they may move a man from his place, that is to say, from the stablenesse and perfection of his knowinge, but certes thei may nat al arace him, ne alien him in all: but I wold that thou woldest answer to this. Remembrest thou that thou arte a man? B. Why shulde I not remembre that (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Mayst thou not tel me than (q<sup>d</sup> she) what thing is a man? Askest thou not me (q<sup>d</sup> I) whether that I be a resonable mortall best? I wote well and confesse that I am it. Wiste thou never yet that thou were anye other thinge (q<sup>d</sup> she). No (q<sup>d</sup> I). Nowe wel knowe I (q<sup>d</sup> she) other cause of thy maladye, and that righte grete! Thou haste lese for to knowen thy selfe what thou art, through whiche I have plainly founden the cause of thy maladie, or els the entre of recovering of thy hele. For why? For thou art confounded with foryetyng of thy selfe: Thou sorowdeste that thou art exiled of thy propre godes. And for thou ne wylte what is th'ende of thinges, forthy demest thou that felonous and wikid men be mighty and welful: and for thou hast forieten by which governementes the world is governed, forthy wenest thou that these mutacions of fortune fleten without governor. These ben the causes not onely to malady, but certes gret causes to deth: But I thanke the actour, and the maker of hele, that nature hath not al forieten The. I have grete nourishyng of thin hele, and that is the sothe sentence of governaunce of the world, that thou bilevest that the governing of it is not subiecte ne underput to the folie of these happes aventurous, but to the reson of God; and therefore doute The nothing, for of this litel spark thine here of lyfe shall shyne. But for as moch as it is not time yet of faster remedies, and the nature is of thoughtes thus disceved, that as ofte as thei caste awaye sothe opinions, they clothen 'hem in false opinions, of the which false opinions the derkenesse of perturbation wexeth up, that confoundeth the very insight, that derkenesse shal I somewhat assaye to maken thinne and weke, by lyght and meaneliche remedies, so that after that the derkenesse of discerynge thinges be doen awaie, thou maye knowe the shyning of very lyght.

Prosa prima.

Post hæc paulisper obtulit, atque ubi atten- tionem meam modicâ taciturnitate collegit, sic exorsa est: si penitus aegritudinis tuæ causas habitumque, &c.

AFTER this she stinte a little, and after that she had gaxered by atemper stylnesse myne atten- cion, as who so might sayn thus. After these thynges she stynte a lytell, and whan she apperceved by a- temper stilnesse, that I was ententive to heren her, she began to speke in this wise. If I (q<sup>d</sup> she) have underflonden and knowen utterly the causes and the habite of thy maladye, thou languishest and art de- fected for desire and talent of thy rather fortune. She that ylke Fortune onelye that is chaunged as thou fainest to The warde, hath perverted the clerenesse and the estate of thy courage. I underflond the felle or manyfolde colours and discetes of thilke mervail- lous monstre fortune, and how she useth ful flatteryng familiarite with 'hem that she enforceth to begile, so long, til that she confound with unsufferable so- row 'hem that she hath lese in dispaire unpurveied. And if thou remembrest well the kinde, the maneres, and the deserte of thilke fortune, thou shalt wel knowe that as in her thou never ne hadest, ne haste yloste anye faire thinge: But (as I trowe) I shal not gretly travailen travailen to done The remembren on these thynges. For thou were wont to hurtelen and dispisen her with many wordes, whan she was blandishyng and presente, and persudest her with sentences that weren drawn oute of * myne entre, that is to saye, of mine enformacion: but no sodaine mutacion ne betideth not without a maner chaunging of corages. And so it is befall, that thou arte a lytel departed fro the pece of thy thoughte, but now is tyme that thou drinke and ataste some softc and delitable thynges, so that whan they be entred within The, it mowen make way for strengre drinckes of medecyns. Come now forthe therfore the suasion of swetnes rhetorien, which that goeth onely the right waie, while she forsaketh not myne estatutes. And with Rhetorike come forthe musyke a damosell of oure house, that singeth now lighter modes or prolacions and now hevier. What cileth the man? What is it that hath caste The into mourning and into weping? I trowe that thou hast sene some new thing and uncouth? Thou wenest that fortune be chaunged ayen The, but thou wenest wrong, if that thou wene, alway the ben her maners. She hath rather kept as to The warde her propre stableness in the chaunging of her selfe: right soch was she whan she flattered The and disceved The, with unlesful likinges and false wilfulness. Thou haste now known and atteinte the doubtrous or double visage of thilk blinde goddesse Fortune. She that yet covereth and wympleth her to other folke, hath shewed her self everydele to The: Yf thou approvest her and thinkest that she is gode, use her maners and plaine The nat; and yf thou agrifest her false trecherye, dispise and caste away her that playeth so harmefully, for she that is now cause of so moch sorowe to The, shulde be to The cause of pece and of joye. She hath forsaken The forsoth, the which that never man maie be syker, that she ne shal forsaken him. Glosa. But nathelesse some bokes have the texte thus. Forsothe she hath forsaken The, ne ther n'ys no man liker that she ne hath not forsaken. Holdest thou than thylke welfulness precious to The that shal passen, and is present fortune dereworth to The, which that n'ys not faithfull for to dwel, and whan she goth awaye, that she bringeth a wight in sorowe? Forfens she may not be withholden at a manne's wyll, she maketh him a wretche whan she departeth fro hym. What other thinge is flyttinge fortune, but a maner shewing of wretchidnesse that is to come? Ne it suffiseth not onely to loken on thing that is presente before the eyen of a man, but wysedom loketh and mesureth th' ende of thynges, and the same chaungyng from one to another, that is to saye, from adversite into prosperite, maketh that the manaces of fortune ne ben not for to dreden, ne the flateringe to be desired. Thus at laste it beloveth The to suffren with even wil in pacience, all that is done within the flore of fortune, that is to saye, in this worlde, sithe thou hast ones put thy necke under the yoke of her. For if thou wolt writen a lawe of wending and of dwelling to fortune, which that thou hast chosen frely to ben thy lady; arte thou not wrongful in that, and makest Fortune wroth and asper by thine impacience, and yet thou mayst nat chaungen her?

Yf thou committest and betakest thy sayles to the wynde, thou shalt be shoven, nat thider that thou woldest, but whider that the wind shoveth The. Yf thou castest thy sedes in the feldes, thou shuldest have in minde that the yeres bene amonges other-while plentuous, and other while barein. Thou hast betaken thy selfe to the governaunce of fortune, and forthy it behoveth The to ben obeisant to the ma-ners of thy lady. Enforcest thou The to aresten or withholden the swyffnesse and the sweygh of her turning whele? O thou sole of all mortal soles, if Fortune began to dwel stable, she cessed then to ben Fortune.

Thou haste no right to playne The, as though thou haddest utterly forlorne al thy thynges. Why plainest thou thanne? I have done to The no wronge. Rychesles, honours, and soche other thynges ben of my tryght. My servauntes knowen me for ther lady: they come with me and departen whan I wende. I dare well afferme hardely, that if thou chinges, of whiche thou playnest that thou hast forlorn, had ben thin, thou ne haddest not forlorn 'hem. Shal I than be defended only to use my right? Certes it is lesul to the heven to make clere daies, and after that to overcome the same daies with derke nightes. The yere hathe eke leve to appaile the visage of the erthe, now with floures, and now with fruite, and to confounde 'hem somtime with raines and with colde.

The se hath eke his right, to ben somtime cauhne and blandishinge, with smothe water, and sometime to be horrible with waves and with tempestes. But covetise of men, that may not be staunched, shall it binde me to be stedfaste, sythen that stedfastnesse is uncouth to my maners? Soche is my strength, and soche play I play comenly. I turne the whirlinge whele with the turning cerkle, I am glad to chaungen the lowest to the hiest, and the hiest to the lowest. Worth up if thou wolte, so it be by this lawe, that thou ne hold nat that I do The wrong, though thou discende adown, whan the reson of my play asketh it. Wiste thou not howe Cræsus kyng of Lydiens, of whiche king Cyrus was full fore agaste a lytel before, that this Cræsus was caughte of Cyrus, and ledde to the fyre to be brende, but that a rayne discended from heven that rescowed him? And is it out of mynde howe that Paulus counsul of Rome, whan he had taken the king of Perciens, weped piously for the captivite of the selfe kyng? What o-ther thing bewaylen the crienges of tragedies, but onely the dedes of fortune, that with an aukwarde stroke overturneth the relmes of grete nobleye. Glosa. Tragedie is to saine, a dite of a prosperite for a tyme, that endeth in wretchednesse. Leredest not thou in Grece whan thou wer yonge, that in the entre or in the seler of Jupiter, there ben couched two tonnes, that one is ful of gode, that other is ful of harme? What right hast thou to plain, if thou haste taken more plentiously of the gode syde, that is to sayne of richesse and prosperite? And what eke if I be not all departed fro The? What eke if my mutabylite yeveth The rightfull cause of hope to have yet better thinges? His igitur si pro se tecum verbis fortunæ loqueretur, quid profectò contra hisceres, non haberes. At si quid est, quo querelam tuam jure tuearis, proferas oportet, &c.

THerfore if that fortune speke with The for her selfe in this maner, forsothe thou ne haddest nat what thou mightest answere. And yf thou hast any thinge, wherwith thou mayst rightfully defenden thy complainte, it beheveth The to shewen, and I woll yeven to The space to tellen it. Bee. Certainli (qð I) than, these ben faire thinges, and appointed with honyswetnesse of rhetorike and musike, and onely while they ben herde and sowne in eres, they ben delicious. But to wretches it is a deper felynge of harme, this is to sain, that wretches selen the harmes that they suffre more grevously, than the remedies or the delites of these wordes may gladden or conforten 'hem. So that whan these thinges flinten for to sown in eres, that sorow that is inset greveth the thought. P. Right so it dothe (qð she). For these ne ben yet no remedies of the malady, but they ben a maner norishinge of thy sorowes, that rebel ayenst thy curacion. For whan tyme is, I shal move and ajult soch thinges, that percen 'hem ful depe. But nathlesse, that thou shalt not wilne to letten thy selfe a wretche. Halle thou forieten the numbre and the maner of thy wclefulness? I speke not how that the soveraigne men of the cite toke The in cure and keping, whan thou were orphelyn of father and of mother, and were chosen in allynite of princes of the cite: And thou beganne rather to be lese and dere than for to be a neighbour, the which thing is the moste precious kinde of any propinquite or alliance that maye ben. Who is it that ne sayde tho that thou ne were righte wcleful, with so grete nobley as thy fathers in lawe, and with the chastite of thy wyfe, and with th'opportunitie and noblesse of thy masculine children, that is to sayn, thy sonnes? And over all thys (me lyste to passen of common thinges) how thou haddest in thy youth dignities, that were warned to old men, but it deliteth me now to comen to the singuler unhepinge of thy wclefulness. If any frute of mortal thinges may have any wighte, or price of wclefulness, inyghtest thou ever foryeten for any charge of harme that mighte befall, the remembraunce of thilke daye, that thou saw thy two sonnes made counsailours, and ladde togyther from thy house, under so gret assemble of senatours, and under the blithnesse of the peple? and whan thou saw 'hem sette in the court in hye chaires of dignities, thou rhetorien or pronouncer of kinges prailinges, deservedest glory of witte and of eloquence, whan thou sittinge bitwene thy two sonnes counsailours, in the place that hight Circo, fulfilledest the bydding of the multitude of peple that was sprade about The with so large praysynge and laude, as men synge in victories. Tho yave thou to fortune as I towne, that is to say, tho seoffedest thou fortune with with glorious wordes, and decevedest her, whan she acoyed and norished The as her own delices. Thou bare away of fortune a yeste, that is to say, soche guardon that she never yave to private man. Wilt thou therefore laye a rekeninge with fortune? She hath nowe first twynclid upon The with a wicked eye. If thou consider the nombre and the maner of thy blisses and of thy sorowes, thou maist nat forsaken that thou n'art yet blisfull. For if therefore thou wenest thy selfe not welesful for tho thynges that semeden joyful ben passed, ther n'is not why thou shuldell seme to thy selfe a wretch, for thynges that seme now sory, passen also. Art thou now comen a sodayne gest into the shadow or tabernacle of this life? or trovest thou that any stedfastnesse be in manne's thynges? Whan oft a swifte houre dissolveth the same man, that is to saie, whan the soule departeth from the body. For although that felde is there any faithe that fortunous thynges would dwell in, yet nathelless the last daye of a manne's lyfe is a maner dethe to fortune, and also to thilke that hath dwelt. And therefore what wenest thou dare recke, if thou forlet her in dyinge, or els that she fortune forsake The in fleyng awaye?

WHan Phœbus the sonne beginneth to sprede his clerenesse with rosen Chariottes, than the sterre dymmed paleth her white cheres by the flambes of the sonne that overcommeth the sterre light, that is to sayne, whan the sonne is rysen, the dayesterre wexeth pale and leseth her light. Oft the se is clere and caulme with movinge flodes, and ofte the horrible wind Aquilon moveth boiling tempeste and overwhelyeth the se. If the forme of this worlde is so feld stable, and if it turneth by so many enterchaunges: wilt thou than trusten in the tomblyng fortunes of men: Wylt thou trowen on flyttinge godes? It is certain and establisshed by lawe perdurable, that nothing that is engendred is stedfast ne stable.

THEN said I thus: O nourice of all vertues, thou saiest ful soth, ne I may not forsake the right swifte counse of my prosperitie, that is to saie, that the prosperitie ne be comen to me wonder swiftilie and sone. But this is a thyng that gretlie smarteth me, when it remembreth me. For in all adversities of Fortune, the moſte unſelie kynde of contrarious Fortune is to have ben welesfull. Phi. But that thou abiest thus (qð she) the tourmente of thy false opinion, that maieſt thou not lightfullie blamen, ne aretten to to thynges, as who saith, that thou hast yet many haboundances of thynges. Textus. For all be it so, that the idell name of aventurous welesfulnesse, moveth The now, it is lesfull that thou reken with me, of howe many thynges thou haste yet plentie. And therefore, if that thilke thing that thou haddest for more precious, in al thy richesſe of Fortune, be kept to The, yet by the grace of GOD, unwemmed and undisouled, maieſt thou then plaine rightfully upon the mischief of Fortune, sithen thou hast yet thy best thynges? Certes, yet liveth in gode point thilke precious honour of mankind, Symachus thy wive's father, whiche that is a man made of al Sapience and Vertue, the whiche manne thou wouldest buye, with the price of thine owne life; he bewaileth the wronges, that menne doen to The, and not for himselfe. For he liveth in sickerneſſe, of any Sentence put ayenſt hym. And yet liveth thy wife, that is attempre of witte, and passyng other women, in clenness of chastitie. And for I would closen shortlie her bounties, she is like her father: I tell The, that she liveth lothe of this life, and kepeth to The onelie her ghoſte, and is all mate, and of overcome by wepyng and sorowe, for desire of The. In the whiche thyng onelie I more graunten The, that thy wilfulnesse is amenuſed. What shall I saie eke of thy two sonnes cornſailours, of which as of children of ther age, there shineth the likenesse of the witte of ther father, and of ther eld father? And sithen the soveraine cure of all mortall folke is to saven ther owne lives, if thou knowe thy self, thy godes make The more welesfull. For yet ben there thynges dwelled to The ward, that no man doubteth, that thei ne ben more dereworthe to The, then thine owne life. And forthy drie teres, for yet is not every Fortune hatefull to The ward: ne over grete tempest ne hath not yet fallen upon The, when thine ankers cleven faste, that neither woll suffren the counfort of this tyme presente, ne the hope of tyme comyng to passen ne to failen. Bo. And I praie (qð I) that faste mote thei holden: for the whiles that thei holden, how so ever that thynges ben, I shall well steten forthe and escapen. But thou maieſt well seen, how grete apparailes and araie, that me lacked, that be passed awaie from me. P. I have somewhat avaunced and furthered The (qð she) if that thou annoie not, or forthinke not of all thy Fortune, as who saith, I have somewhat comforted The, so that thou tempest not The thus, with all thy fortune, sithen thou hast yet thy beste thynges. But I maie not suffren thy delices, that plainest so wepyng and anguiſhous, for that ther lacketh somewhat to thy welesfulnes. For what man is he that is so sad, or of grete parſite welesfulnesse, that he ne striveth and plaineth on some halfe ayen the qualitie of his estate? For why? full anguiſhous thing is the condicion of manne's godes. For either it cometh not altogether to a wight, or els it ne lasteth not perpetuell. For some man hath grete richesſe, but he is ashamed of his ungentill linage. And some man is renowned of noblesse of kinnde, but he is enclosed in so grete anguiſhe of nede of thynges, that hym were lever that he wer unknowe. And some man haboundeth bothe in richesſe and noblesse, but yet he bewaileth his chaste life, for he ne hath no wife. And some man is, and felily married, but he hath no children, and nourisheth his richesſes to straunge folk. And some man is gladed with children, but he wepeth full sore, for the trespase of his sonne, or of his daughter. And for this there ne accordeth no wight lightly to that condicion of his fortune. For alwaie to every man there is in somewhat that unſaied he ne wotte noughte, or els he dredeth that he hath aſſaied. And adde this also, that every welesfull man man hath a full delicate feling: so that but if all chinges befallen at his own will, he is impacient, or is not used to have none aduersitie, anon he is throwen adoune for every little thing. And full little things ben tho, that withdrawen the somme or the perfeccion of blisfulnesse fro 'hem that ben moſte fortunate. Howe many men trowest thou, would demen 'hem ſelf to ben almoſt in heven, if thei mighten attain to the leſt partie of the remnaunte of thy fortune? This ſame place that thou clepeſte exile, is countre to them that enhabiten here. And forthy nothyng is wretched, but when thou wenest it; as who ſaith, thou thy ſelf, ne no wight els n'is a wretch, but when he weneth himſelf he is a wretch, by reputacion of his courage. And ayenward: al fortune is blisful to a man, by the agreabilitie, or by the egalitie of hym that ſuffreth it. What man is that, that is ſo weleful, that n'olde chaungen his eſtate when he hath loſte his pacience? The ſwete-nesse of manne's welefulnesse is ſprant with many bitterneſſes. The which welefulnesse, although it ſeme ſwete and joiful to him that uſeth it, yet maie it not ben withholden, that it ne goeth awaie when it wol. Then it is well ſene, how wretched is the blisfulnesse of mortall things that neither it dureth perpetuell with 'hem, that every fortune receven agreable or egally, ne it deliteth not in all to 'hem that ben anguiſhous. O ye mortall folke, what ſeke ye then blisfulnesse out of your owne ſelfe, whiche is put in your ſelf? Errour and folie confoundeth you. I ſhall ſhewe The ſhortlie the poincte of ſoveraine blisfulnesse.

Is there any thyng to The more precious then thy life? Thou wilt aunſwere naie. Then, if it ſo be that thou art mightie over thy ſelf, that is to ſaine, by tranquillitie of thy ſoule, then haſte thou thyng in thy power, that thou n'oldest never leſen: Ne Fortune maie not bynemme it The. And that thou maieſt knowe that blisfulnesse ne maie not ſtande in thynges, that ben fortunous and temporell, now underſtande, and gather it together thus. If blisfulnesse be the ſoveraine gode of nature, that liveth by reſon: ne thilke thing is not ſoveraine gode, that maie be taken awaie in any wiſe.

For more worthie thing is, and more digne thilke thing, that maie not be taken awaie. Then ſheweth it well, that the unſtablenesse of Fortune maie not attaine to receve very blisfulnesse. And yet more over, what manne that this tomblyng welefulnesse ledeth, either he wote that it is chaungeable, or els he wote it not. And if he wote it not, what blisful fortune maie there ben in the blindnes of ignorance? And if he wot, that it is chaungeable, he mote alwaie ben adradde, that he ne leſe that thing, that he ne douteth not, but that he maie leſen it. As who ſaith, he mote alwaie be agaſt, leſt he leſe that, that he woteth right well he maie leſe. For whiche the continuell drede that he hath, ne ſuffereth hym not to be welefull. Or els if he leſe it, he weneth to be diſpiſed and forleten. Certes, eke that is a ful litle gode, that is borne with even herte, when it is loſte, that is to ſaine, that men doe no more force of the loſſe, then of the havying. And for as moche as thou thy ſelf arte he, to whom it hath be ſhewed, and preved by full many demonſtracions, as I wotte well, that the ſoules of menne ne mowen not dien in no wiſe. And eke ſens it is clere and certaine, that fortunous welefulnesse endeth by the deth of the bodie: it maie not be doubted, that if deth maie take awaie blisfulnesse, that all the kind of mortal thing ne diſcendeth into wretchednesse, by the ende of deth. And ſithen we know well, that many a manne hath ſought the fruit of blisfulnesse, not onely with ſufferyng of deth, but eke with ſuf-feryng of paines and tourmentes: howe might then this preſente life make men blisfull, ſens that thilke ſelf life ended, it ne maketh folke no wretches?

BUT for as moch as the nourishynges of my reſon diſcenden now into The, I trowe it wer tyme to uſen a littell ſtrenger Medicins. Nowe underſtande here, all were it ſo that the yeſtes of Fortune ne were not brittle ne tranſitorie, what is there in 'hem, that maie be thin in any tyme? Or els that it ne is ſoule, if that it be loked, and conſidered perſitie? Richesſes, ben thei precious by the nature of them ſelf, or els by the nature of The? What is moſt worthe of richesſe? Is it not gold, or might of money aſſembled? Certes, that gold and that money ſhineth, and yeveth better renome to them that diſpenden it, than to thilke folke that muckeren it: for avarice maketh alwaie muckerers to ben hated, and largesſe maketh folke clere of renome. For ſithe that ſoch thinges as ben tranſfered from one man to another, ne maie not dwell with no manne; certes, then is that money precious, when it is tranſlated into other folke, and ſtinten to be had by uſage of large yevyng of hym that hath yeven it. And alſo if all the money that is over all, in al the worlde, were gaðered toward one man, it ſhould make all other men to be nedie as of that. And certes, a voice all whole, that is to ſaine, without amcuſyng, fulſilleth together the hering of moch folk. And when thei ben apaffed, nedes thei maken 'hem poore, that forgone tho richesſes.

O, straite and nedy clepe I these riches, sens that many folke ne maie not have it all, ne al ne maie it not comen to one man, without povertie of all other folke. And the shining of gemmes, that I call precious stones, draweth it not the eyen of folke to 'hem ward, that is to faine, for the beautie. But certes, if there were beautie, or bountie in shynyng of stones, thilke clerenesse is of the stones 'hem self, and not of menne. For whiche I wonder gretlie, that men marveilen on soche thynges. For why? what thyng is it, that if it wanteth movyng, and joincture of soule and bodie, that by right might seemen a faire creature to hym that hath a soule of reson? For al be it so, that gemmes drawen to 'hem self a little of the last beautie of the world, through the entent of ther creatour, and the distinccon of 'hem self, yet for as mikell as thei ben put under your excellence, thei ne have not deserved by no waie, that ye should marveilen on 'hem. And the beautie of feldes, deliteth it not mikell unto you?

B. Why should it not deliten us, si the that it is a right faire porcion of the right faire werke, that is to faine, of this worlde? And right so ben we gladd somtime of the face of the Se, when it is clere: And also marveilen we on the Heven, and on the Starres, and on the Sunne, and on the Mone. Phi. Appertaineth (q<sup>d</sup> she) any of thilke thynges to The? Why darest thou glorifie The, in the shynyng of any soche thynges? Arte thou dislingued and embelised by the springyng floures of the first Sommer seson? Or swelleth thy plentie in fruietes of Sommer? Why art thou ravished with idle joies? Why embracest thou straunge Goddes, as thei wer thine? Fortune ne shall never make, that soche thynges ben thyne, that nature of thynges hath maked foraine fro The? So the it is, that withouten doubte the fruietes of the yerth owen to be to the norishyng of bestes. And if thou wolt fulfill thy nede, after that it suffiseth to nature, then is it no nede that thou seke after the superfluite of Fortune. For with full fewe thynges, and with full little thynges, nature hath her apaied. And if thou wolte achoken the fulfillyng of nature with superfluities: certes, thilke thynges that thou wolt thresten or pouren into nature, shullen ben unjoyful to The, or els anoious. Wenest thou eke, that it be a faire thing to shine with divers clothinges? Of whiche clothing if the beaute be agreable to loken upon, I woll marveilen on the nature of the matter of thilke clothes, or els on the workman that wrought 'hem. Doeth also a long route of meine make The a blisfull man? The whiche servauntes if thei ben vicious of condicions, it is a grette charge, and distruccon to the hous, and a gret enemy to the lorde himself. And if thei ben gode men, how shal straunge and forain godenesse, be put in the number of thy riches? So that by all these foresaied thynges it is clerelie shewed, that never one of thilke thynges, that thou accomptedest for thy godes, n'as not thy gode. In whiche thynges if there be no beautie to be desired, why shouldest thou be sorie to lese them? Or why shouldest thou rejoyce The to hold 'hem? For if thei ben faire of ther own kind, what appertaineth that to The? For al so well shouldest thou have ben faire by thyself, though thei wer departed from al the riches. For why? faire ne precious wer thei not, for that thei comen emong the riches. But for thei semed faire and precious, therefore thou haddest lever reken 'hem emonges thy riches. But what desirest thou of fortune, with so grette afare? I trow thou sekest to drive awaie nede, with habundaunce of thynges, but certes, it tourneth you all into the contrarie. For why? certes it nedeth of full many helpinges, to kepen the diversite of precious hostilementes. And so the it is, that of many thynges thei have nede, that many thynges have. And ayenwarde, of little thyng nedeth hym, that mesureth his fill after the nede of kind, and not after outrage of covetise. It is so then, that ye menne have no propre gode set in you, for soche ye moten seke outwarde, in forain and subject thynges. So is then the condicion of thynges tourned up so down, that a man that is a divine best, by merite of his reson, thinketh that hymself n'is neither faire ne noble, but if it be through possession of hostilementes, that ne han no souls; and certes, al other thynges ben apaied of ther owne beauties; but ye men, that be semblable to God, by your resonable thought, desiren to aparailen your excellent kinde of the lowest thynges. Ne ye understanden not how grette a wrong is doen to your creatour. For he would that mankinde were moste worthie, and noble of any yerthly thing: and ye thresten down your dignities binethen the lowest thynges. For if that all the gode of every thing be more precious, than is thilke thing, whose that the gode is, sith ye demen that the foulest thynges ben your godes, then submitten ye, and put your selven under the foulest thynges, by your estimacion. And certes, this betideth not, without your desert. For certes, soche is the condicion of all mankinde, that onely when he hath knowing of it self, then passeth it in noblesse al other thynges. And when it forletteth the knowyng of it self, then it is brought benethen all bestes. For why? all other living bestes han of kind to knowen not 'hemself. But when that men letten the knowyng of 'hemself, it cometh 'hem of vice. But how brode sheweth the errour, and the folie of you men, that wenen that any thyng maie ben appareled with straunge apparelmentes? But forsothe that maie not be doen. For if a wight shineth with thynges that ben put to hym: as thus, if thilke thynges shinen with which a man is appareled: Certes, thilke thynges ben commended and praised, with whiche he is appareled: but nathelless, thyng that is covered, and wrapped under that, dwelleth in his filthe. And I deny that thilke thing be gode, that annoieth hym that hath it. Gabbe I of this? Thou wolte saie naie. Certes, riches have anoied full ofte 'hem, that han had the riches. Si the that every wicked shrew is for his wickednesse the more gredie after other folkes riches, where so ever it be in any place, be it golde or precious stones, and weneth hym onely moste worthie that hath 'hem. Thou then that so busie dredest now the swerd and the spere, if thou haddest entred in the pathe of this life, a pore wai-faring man; then wouldest thou sing before the thefe, as who saith, a pore man that bereth no riches on hym by the waie, maie boldly sing before Theves, for he hath not wherof to be robbed. O precious and right clere is the blisfulnes of mortall riches, that when thou hast gotten it, then hast thou lorne thy sikernes!

Thei slepen wholsome slepes upon the grasse, and dronken of the rennyng waters, and lien under the shadowes of the hie Pine trees. Ne no geste or straunger ne carfe yet the hie Se, with ores or with shippes, ne thei ne hadden sein yet no newe strondes, to leden Marchandise into divers Countreis. Prosa sexta.

Quid autem de dignitatibus potentiâque differam, quas vos, veræ dignitatis ac potestatis inscii, cælo exæquatis? Quasi in improbißimum quemque ceciderint, &c.

BUT what shall I saie of dignities and powers, the whiche ye men that neither knowen verie dignitie, ne verie power, areisen hem as high as the heven? The which dignities and powers, if thei comen to any wicked manne, thei doen as grete damages and destruccions, as doeth the flambe of the mountaigne Aetna, when the flambe waloweth up, ne no deluvy ne doeth so cruell harmes. Certes, ye remember well (as I trow) that thilke dignitie, that men clepe the Imperie of counsaillours, the whiche whilome was beginnyng of fredome, your elders coveted to have doen awaie that dignitie, for the pride of the counsaillours. And right for that same, your elders before that tyme had doen awaie out of the Cite of Rome the Kynge's name, that is to saine, thei n'olde have no lenger no king. But now, if so be that dignities and powers ben yeven to gode men, the whiche thyng is full selde, what agreable thynges is there in tho dignities and powers, but onely the godenes of folke that usen hem? And therefore is it thus, that honour cometh not to vertue, bicause of dignitie: and ayenward, honour cometh of dignitie, for cause of vertue. But whiche is thilke your dere-worth power, that is so clere, and so requirable? O ye yerthly bestes, consider ye not over whiche thyng that it semeth that ye have power? Nowe, if thou sawe a Mousse among other Mice, that challenged to hym selfwarde right and power over all other Mice, how grete scorne wouldest thou have of it? Glosa. So fareth it by men, the bodie hath power over the bodie: for if thou loke well upon the bodie of a wight, what thyng shalt thou find more fraile, then is mankinde? The whiche menne full ofte be slaine, by bityng of Flies, or els with entring or creping wormes, into the privities of manne's bodie. But where shall men finden any man, that maie exercisen or hanten any right upon an other man, but onely on his body, or els uppon thynges, that ben lower then the bodie, the whiche I clepe Fortune's possessions? Maicst thou have ever any commandment over a fre corage? Maicst thou remove fro th' estate of his propre rest a thought that is clevyng together in hymself by stedfaste reson? As whilome a tiraunt wened to confounde a freman of courage, and wend to constrain hym by tourmentes, to maken him discoveren and accusen folke, that wisten of a conjuracion, whiche I clepe a confederacie, that was caste ayenst this tiraunte: but this freman bore of his owne tongue, and caste it in the visage of thilke wode Tiraunte. So that the tourmentes, that this wode tiraunt wende to have made a matter of crueltie, this wise man made it matter of vertue. But what thyng is it, that a man maie doc to an other man, that he ne may receven the same thing of other folke in himself? Or thus: what may a man doen to folke, that folke ne maie doen to hym the same? I have herd tolde of Busirides, that was wont to sleen his gastes, that herbroden in his hous: and he was slain hymself, by Hercules that was his geste.

Regulus had taken in battaile many men of Afrike, and cast hem into fetters: but sone after, he must yeven his handes to be bound, with the cheins of hem, that he had whilom overcomen. Weneþe thou then, that he be mightie, that ne hath power to doen a thyng, that other ne maie doen in hym, that he hath in other? And yet moreover, if so were, that these dignitees of powers hadden any proper or naturell godencesse in hem, never n'old thei comen to shrewes. For contrarious thynges ne ben wonte to ben ifelowshipped togethers. Nature refuseth that contrarious thynges ben joyned. And so as I am in certaine, that wicked folke have dignitees ofte tyme, then sheweth it wel that dignitees and powers ne ben not gode of ther owne kinde, sens that thei sufferen hemself to cleven, or joynen hemself to shrewes. And certaine the same thing maie I moſte dignely judgen, and saine of all the yestes of Fortune, that moſte plentecouslie comen to shrewes, of whiche yestes, I trowe, it ought to be considered, that no man doubteth that he is strong, in whom he seeth strength: and in whom swiftnesse is, sothe it is that he is swifte.

Also Musike maketh Musiciens, and Phisike maketh Phisiciens, and Rhetorike eke Rhetoriciens. For why? the nature of every thing maketh his proper tie, ne it is not entremedled with the effecte of contrarious thynges. But certes, richesþes maie not restraine avarice unstanchid. Ne power ne maketh not a man mightie over hymself, whiche that vicious lustes holden destrained with chaines, that ne mowen not be unbounden. And dignitees, that be yeven to shreude folke, not onely ne maketh hem not digne, but sheweth rather all openly, that thei ben unworthy and indigne. And it is thus. For certes, ye have joye to clepe thynges with false names, that be ren hem all the contraire, the whiche names ben full oft reproved by the effecte of the same thynges. So that these ilke richesþes ne oughten not by right to be cleped richesþes, ne soche power ne ought not to be cleped power, ne soche dignite ne ought not to be cleped dignite. And at lasþe I maie conclude the same thyng of all the yestes of Fortune: In whiche there n'is nothyng to be desired, ne that hath in hymself naturell bountie, as it is well ifeen, for neither thei joinen hem not alwaie to gode men, ne maken hem alwaie gode, to whom thei ben joyned.

WE have well knowen how many grete harmes and destrucciounes were doen by the Emperour Nero. He let brennen the Cite of Rome, and made sle the Senatours, and he cruell whilome sloughe his brother. And he was made moiste with the blode of his mother, that is to saie, he lettefleen and slitten the wombe of his mother, to seen where he was conceived, and he loked on every halve of her dedde colde body, ne no tere wette his face, but he was so hardeherted, that he might be domcfmanne, or Judge of her dedde beantie. And nathelesse, yet governed this Nero by sceptre al the peple that Phoebus maie seen comyng from his utterest arisyng, till he hide his bemes under the waves, that is to saie, he governed all the peples by sceptre Imperiall, that the Sunne goeth about fro Est to West. And eke this Nero governed by sceptre, all the peples that be under the colde sterres, that highten the Septentrions, that is to saie, he governed all the peples, that be under the partie of the North. And eke Nero governed all the peples, that the violent wind Notus skorclith, and baketh the brennyng sandes, by his drie hete, that is to saie, al the peples in the Southe. But yet ne might not all his power tourne the wodenesse of this wicked Nero. THen said I thus. Thou worst well thy self, that the covetise of mortall thinges ne hadden never lordshippe in me. But I have well desired matter of thinges to doen, as who saith, I desire to have matter of governaunces over cominalties, for vertue still should not elden: that is to saie, that lest er that he wexte old, his vertue that laie now stil, ne shuld not perissh unexercised in governaunce of comune: for whiche men might speken or writen of his gode governement. Phi. Forsothe (quod she) and that is a thyng that maie drawen to governaunce soche herts as ben worthie and noble of ther nature: but nathelesse it maie not drawen soche hertes, as ben ybrought to the full perfeccion of vertue, that is to saie, covetise of glorie and renome to have well administred the common thinges, or doen gode desertes, to profite of the common. For se now and consider, how little and how voide of all price is thilke glorie; certain thing is as thou hast lerned by the demonstracion of Astronomic, that all the environing of the yerth about ne halt but the reson of a pricke, at the regard of the gretnesse of the heven, that is to saie, that if ther wer maked comparison of the yerth, to the gretnes of heven, men would judgen in al that ne held no space. Of the whiche little region of this world, the iiii. part of the yerth is inhabited with living bestes that we knowen, as thou hast thy self ilerned by Ptoleme that proveth it. And if thou haddest withdrawen and abated in thy thoughte fro thilke fourthe partye, as moche space as the se and the mareis conteynen and overgone as moche space as the region of drought overstretcheth, that is to saie sandes and desertes, well unneth shuld there dwellen a right straite place to the habitacion of men. And ye that be environned and closed with the leste pricke of thilke pricke, thinken ye manifesten or publishen your renome and done your name for to ben borne forth. But your glory that is so narrowe and so straye, throgen into so litel boundes, howe mykell containeth it in larges and in grete doyng? And also sette therto, that many a nacion dyvers of tonge and of maners, and eke of reson of ther lyvinge, inhabite in the close of thilk habitacle, to the which nacyons whatfor difficulte of wayes, and whatfor diversyte of langage, and whatfor defaulte of unusage, and entrecomynge of marchandysse, not onely the names of singuler men ne may not stretchen, but eke the fame of cities maie not stretchen. At the last, certes in the time of Marcus Tullius, as him selfe wrytte in hys boke, the renom of the commonwelth of Rome ne had not yet passed ne clomben over the mountaine that hight Caucasus, and yet was Rome well waxen and redoubted of the Parthes, and eke of other folke cnhabytng aboute. Seest thou not than howe straite and howe compressed is thilke glorie that ye travailen aboute to shewen and to moultelye? Maye than the glory of a synguler Romaine stretchen thiðer as the fame of the name of Rome maye not clymben ne passen? And eke seest thou not that the maners of divers folke and ther lawes ben discordant amonges hemself, so that thilke thing that some men judge worthy of prayfing, othel folke judgen that that is worthy of tourment. And herof cometh it that though a man deliteth him in prayfing of his renome, he may not in no wise bringen forth ne spreden his name to manye maner peples, and therefore every man ought to be apaide of his glory, that is published among his owne neyghbours, and thylke noble renome shal be restrained within the boundes of tho maner folke. But howe manye a man that was ful noble in his tyme, hath that wretches and nedy forietinge of writers put oute of minde and don away, al be it so that certes thilke thinges profiten litel, the which thinges and wrytinges long and derke elde do away both them and eke ther autours. But ye menne semen to gotten you a perdurabilitie, whan ye thinken in time comen your fame shal lasten. But nathelesse if thou wilt make comparison to the endlesse spaces of eternite, what thing haste thou, by which thou maist rejoycen The of longe lastinge of thy name? For if there were made comparison of the abyding of a momente to ten thousande winter, for as moche as bothe tho spaces ben ended, yet hath the momente some porcion of it, although it be litel. But nathelesse thilke selfe nombre of yeres, and eke as many yeres as therto may be multiplied, ne may not certes be comparisoned to the perdurabilite that is endeleffe. For of thinges whiche that have ende maye be made comparison, but of thinges which that ben withouten ende, to thinges that have ende, may be maked no comparison. And forthy is it that although renome of as long tyme, as ever The liste to thinken, wer thought, to the regard of the eternite, that is unfaunchunstaunched and infinite, it ne shoulde not onelie seme litle, but plainlie right nought. But ye semen certes ye can do nothing aright but if it be for the audience of the peple, and for ydle rumours. And ye forsaken the gret worthinesse of conscience and of vertue, and ye seken your guerdons of the smale wordes of straunge folke. Have nowe here and understande in the lightnesse of soche pride and veine glory, howe a man skorned festynally and meryly soche vanite. Whilom there was a man that had assayed with stryvinge wordes an other man, the which not for usage of very vertue, but for proude vaine glorye, had taken upon him falsely the name of a philosophre. This rather man that I speke of, thought he wold assay, whether he thilke wer a philosophre or no, that is to saye, yf that he woulde have suffred lightly, in pacience, the wronges that were done to him. This fained philosophre toke pacience a litell while: and whan he had receved wordes of outrage, he as in stryvinge ayen and rejoycing of himself, sayde at last thus. Understandest thou not, that I am a philosophre? That other man answerde again biringly and said: I had well understande it, if thou haddest holden thy tong stil. But what is it to these noble worthy men, for certes of soch folk speke I that seken glorie with vertue? What is it (qđ she) what atteyneth fame to soch folke, whan the body is resolved by the deth at the last? for if so be that men dien in al, that is to say body and soule, the which thing our reson defendeth us to byleve: than is there no glory in no wise. For what shulde thilke glory be, whan he, of whom thilke glorie is saide to be, n'ys ryght naught in no wyse? And yf the soule whiche that hath in it selfe science of gode werkes, unbounden from the prison of the yerth, wendeth frely to the heven, dispiseth it not than al erthly occupacion, and beinge in heven rejoyseth that it is exempte from al erthly thynges? as who saith, that recketh the soule never of no glory of renome of this world.

WHoso that wyth overthrowinge thoughte onely seketh glori of fame, and weneth that it be soveraine gode, let him loken upon the brodeshewing countreis of the heven, and upon the straite sete of this erthe, and he shal be ashamed of th' encrese of his name, that maye not fulfil the litel compas of the erthe. O what coveyten proude folke to listen up ther neckes in ydle, in the dedly yoke of thys worlde! For although that renome ysprad passyng toforn peples, goth by divers tonges, and although grete houses of kinredes shynen by clere tytles of honours, yet nathelesse deth dispiseth al high glory of fame, and deth wrappeth togethers the high hedes and the lowe, and maketh equal and even the hiest with the lowest.

Where wonnen now the bones of trew Fabricius? What is nowe Brutus, or sterne Caton? The thynne fame yet lastyng of ther ydle names, is marked with a few letters. But although that we have knowen the faire wordes of the fame of 'hem, it is not yeven to know 'hem that be ded and consumpt. Ye liggeth than styl al utterlye unknowable, ne fame ne maketh

BUT for as moch as thou shalt not wenen (qđ she) that I bere an unretable batayle ayenst fortune, yet somtims it befaleth that she (discevable) desereth to have ryght gode thanke of men: and that is whan she her self openeth, and whan she discovereth her front, and sheweth her maners. Peraventure yet understandest thou not that I shall say. It is a wondre that I desire to tell, and therefore unnethe may I unplitch my sentence with wordes. For I deme that contrarious fortune profiteth more to men than fortune debonayre. For alway whan fortune semeth debonayre, than she lieth falsely, biheating the hope of wefulnesse. But forsothe contrarious fortune is alwaye sothfaste, whan she sheweth her selfe unstable throughe her chaungyng. The amiable fortune discereth folke: the contrary fortune techeth. The amiable fortune blindeth with the beautie of her false godes the hertes of folkes that usen 'hem. The contrarie fortune unbindeth 'hem with the knowyng of frele wefulnesse. Th' amiable fortune maiste thou sene alway wyndy and flowyng, and ever misknowyng of her self. The contrary fortune is attempre and restrayned and wyse, thowwe exercise of her adversyte. At the laste amiable fortune with her flateringes draweth myswandryng men fro the soveraine gode: the contrarious fortune ledeth ofte folke ayen to sothefaste godes, and haltereth 'hem ayen as with an hoke. Wenest thou than that thou oughtest to leten this a lytel thing, that this aspre and horrible fortune hath discovered to The the thoughts of thy trew frendes? For why, this ilke fortune hath departed and uncovered to The both the certaine visages, and the doutous visages of thy felawes. Whan she departed away fro The, she toke away her frendes and left The thy frendes. Now whan thou were riche and weful, as The semed, with howe mykel woldst thou have bought the full knowyng of this, that is to sayne, the knowyng of thy very frendes? Nowe plaine The not than of richesse lorne, siche thou haste found the moste precious kynd of richesse, that is to sayne, thy very frendes.

BY this she had ended her songe: whan the sweetelle of her dyte had throughperced me, that was desyrous of herkenynge. And I astonyed had yet streyght mine eres, that is to saie, to herken the bet what she shuld say, so that a litel after I sayd thus. O thou that art soverain comfort of corages anguissous, so thou hast remounted and nourished me with the weight of thy sentences, and with delite of singyng, so that I trowe not that I be unperegall to the strokes of fortune: as who saith, I dare wel now suffren al th' assautes of fortune, and well defende me from her. And tho remedies, which that thou saidest here before, that weren right sharpe, not onelye that I am not agrisen of 'hem now, but I desyrous of heryng aske gretly to heren the remedies. Than said she thus. That feled I well (qð she) whan that thou ententise and styl ravyshest my wordes: and I abode tyll thou haddest soche habyte of thy thought, as thou hast now, or els tyll that I my selfe had maked it to the same habite, whiche that is a more very thyng. And certes the remenaunt of things that ben yet to say ben soch, that first whan men take 'hem, they ben byting: But whan they ben receved within a wight, than ben they swere. But for thou saist that thou art so desyrous to herken 'hem, with how grete brennyng woldest thou glowen, if thou wilstes whidre I wolde leden The? B. Whidre is that (qð I). P. Doe (qð I) and shewe me what thilke very welcfulnes is, I pray The, without taryng. P. That wol I gladly done (qð she) for cause of The. But I wol first marken by wordes, and I wil enforcen me to enforme The thilke false cause of blisfulnesse, whiche that thou more knowest: so that whan thou hast beholden thilke false godes, and turned thin eyen so to that other syde, thou maie knowen the clerenesse of very blysfulnesse.

Prosa secunda.

THO fastened she a litel the syght of her eien, and she withdrew her, right as it were into the straye sete of her thought, and began to speke right thus. Al the cures (qð she) of mortal folk, which that travailen 'hem in many maner studies, gon certes by divers waies: but natheles they enfor-<sup>les</sup> cen 'hem all to comen onely to th' ende of blisfulnes. and blisfulnes is soche a gode, that who so hath gotten it, he ne maye over that thing more desire. And thys thyng forsoth is so soveraine gode, that it conteineth in himself al maner of godes, to the which gode if there failed any thing, it myghte not ben soverain gode, for than were some gode out of this soveraine gode, that might be desyred. Now is it clere and certaine, that blisfulnesse is a parlyte state, by the congregacion of al godes, the whiche blisfulnesse (as I have sayd) al mortal folke enforcen 'hem to gette by divers waies. For why? the covetise of every gode is naturelli planted in the hertes of men: but the miswandryng errour misledeth 'hem into false godes. Of the whiche men, some of 'hem wenen that soverain gode be to liven without nede of any thinge. And other men demen, that soveraine gode be right digne of reverence, and enforce 'hem to be reverenced among ther neighbours, by the honours that they have gotten. And some folke there ben that holden that right hye power be soverain gode, and enforcen 'hem for to reignen, or els to joynen 'hem to them that reignen. And it semeth to other folke, that noblesse of renome be the soverain gode, and hasten 'hem to gotten 'hem glorious name by the artes of werre or of pece. And many folke mesuren and gessen, that soverayne gode be joye and gladnesse, and wenen that it be right blisful thing to plongen in voluptuous delites. And there ben some folke, that entrechaungen the causes and the endes of these forsaide godes: As they that desyren riches chelles to have power and delites, or elles they desyre power for to have money, or for cause of renome. In these thynges and soche other is turned all the entencion of desyrynges and werkes of men, as thus: Noblesse and favour of peple, which that yeveth to all menne, as it semeth hem, a maner clerenesse of renome, and wife and children, that men desyren, for cause of delyte and merynesse. But forsoth frendes ne shullen not be rekened amonge the godes of fortune, but of vertue, for it is a ful holy maner thing. All these other thynges forsoth be taken for cause of power, or elles for cause of delite. Certes now am I redy to referren the godes of the body to these forsayd thynges aboven: For it semeth that strength and gretynesse of body yeven power and worthynesse, and that beaute and swiftnesse yeven glorie and renome: and helth of body semeth to yeven delite. In al these thynges it semeth only that blisfulnesse is desyred: for why? thylke thyng that every man desireth moste over al thynges, he demeth that it be soverain gode. But I have defined, that blisfulnesse is soverain gode, for whiche every wight demeth that thilke estate that he desireth over al thynges that it be blisfulnesse. Nowe hast thou than before thin eyen almoſte al that purposed forme of the welesfulnesse of mankynde, that is to saine, richesse, honours, power, glorie and delites, the which delite only confidred he Epicurus, and judged and established that delyte is the soverain gode: for as moche as all other thynges, as him thought, byrest away joy and mirthe from the hert. But I returne againe to the studies of men, of whiche men the corage alway reherfeth and seketh the soverain gode, al be it so that it be with a dyrked memorie, but he n'ote by whiche pathe, right as a drunken man n'ote nought by whiche pathe he may returne home to his house. Semeth it than that folke forleyen and erren to enforcen hem to have nede of nothing. Certes there is none other thing, that may so moche performen blisfulnesse, as an estate plenteous of al godes, that ne hath nede of none other thing, but that is suffisaunt of himselfe unto himself. And folien soch folke than that wenen, that thilke thing that is right gode, that it is eke right worthy of honor and of reverence? certes nay. For that thing n'ys neither foul ne worthy to be dispised, that wel nigh al the entencion of mortal folke travailen to get it. And power eke ought it not to be rekened amonges godes? What els? for it n'is not to wene, that thilke thing that is moste worthy of all thynges, be feble and without strength. And clerenesse of renome, ought that to ben dispised? Certes ther may no man forsake, that al thinge that is right excellent and noble, that it ne semeth be right clere and renowned. For certes it nedeth not to sai, that blisfulnesse be anguishous ne drerye, ne subject to grevaunces ne sorowes, sens that in right lytel thynges folke seken to have and to usen that may delyten hem. Certes these ben the thynges that men willen and desyren to getten: and for this cause desyren thei richesles, dignities, reignes, glorie, and delites. For therby wenen they to have suffisaunce, honoure, power, renome, and gladnesse. Than is it gode, that men seken thus by so many divers studies, in whyche desire, it may not lightly be shewed, howe gret is the strength of nature. For howe so men have divers sentences and discordinges, algates men accorden all in lovinge the ende of gode.

Consider now if that by thilke thynges, by which a man weneth to get him blisfulnesse, if that he may comen to thilke ende that he weneth to come to by nature. For if that money, honours, or these other forsayd thynges, bringen men to soch a thing that no gode ne faile them ne semeth to faile: Certes than would I graunt that they be makid blisful by thinges that they have gotten. But if so be that thilke thinges ne mowen not performe that thei byheten, and that there be default of many godes, sheweth it not than clereli that false beaute of blisfulnesse is knowen and atteynt in thilke thinges? First and forward thou thy self, that haddest haboundaunce of richesles not long ago, I aske The that in th'aboundance of al thilk riches, if thou were never anguished or forie in thy courage of any wrong or grevaunce that betyd The in any syde? B. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) it ne remembreth me not, that ever I was so fre of my thought, that I ne was alway in anguise of somewhat. P. And was that not (q<sup>d</sup> she) for that The lacked somewhat that thou n'oldest not have lacked? Or els thou haddest that thou n'oldest have had? B. Right so is it (q<sup>d</sup> I). P. Than desirest thou the presence of the one, and th'absence of that other? B. I graunte well (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phil. Forsothe (q<sup>d</sup> she) than nedeth there somewhat that every man desireth. B. Ye there nedeth (q<sup>d</sup> I). P. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) and he that hath lacke or nede of aught, n'is not in every way suffisaunt to himself. B. No (q<sup>d</sup> I). P. And thou (q<sup>d</sup> she) in all the plente of thy richesle haddest thilke lacke of suffisaunce? What els (q<sup>d</sup> I). P. Than may not riches maken that a man n'is nedi, ne that he be sufficient to himselfe: and yet that was it that they beheten as it semed. And eke certes I trowe that this be gretille to consider, that money hath not in his owne kynde, that it ne maie ben binomed of 'hem, that have it, maugre 'hem. Boecius. I knowe it well (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phil. Why shouldest thou not bekowen it (q<sup>d</sup> she) when every daie the stronger folke benomen it from the febler, maugre 'hem? From whens come els all these foraine complaintes, quarels, or pledynges, but for that menne asken ther money, that hath ben binomed 'hem, by strength or by gile, and alwaie maugre 'hem? Boecius. Right so it is (q<sup>d</sup> I). Philosophie. Then hath a man nede (q<sup>d</sup> she) to seken hym foraine helpe, by whiche he maie defende his money. Boecius. Who maie saie naie? (q<sup>d</sup> I). Philosophie. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) and hym neded none helpe, if he ne had no money, that he might lese. Boecius. That is doubtles (q<sup>d</sup> I). Philosophie. Then is this tourned into the contrary (q<sup>d</sup> she) for richesle, that menne wenen should maken suffisaunce, thei maken a man rather have nede of forain helpe. Whiche is the maner or the gife (q<sup>d</sup> she) that richesle maie driven awaie nede? Riche folke maie thei neither have hunger ne thurst? These riche menne, maie thei sele no colde on their limes in Winter? But thou wilte aunswere, that riche menne have enough, wherwith thei maie staunchen ther hunger, and slaken ther thirst, and doen awaie colde.

In this wise, maie nede ben counforted by richesle, but certes nede ne maie not all utterlie be doen awaie. For if this nede, that alwaie is gaping and gredy, be fulfilled with richesle, and any other thyng, yet dwelleth then a nede, that mote be fulfilled; I hold me still, and tell not how that little thyng suffiseth to nature: but certes, to avarice suffiseth not inough of nothyng. For sin that riches ne maie not all doen awaie nede, and thei maken ther own nede: what maie it then be, that ye wenen that richesles mowen yeven you suffisaunce?

Sed dignitates honorabilem reverendumque, cui provenerint, reddunt? Num vis ea est magistratibus, ut utentium mentibus virtutes inferant, vitia depellant, &c.

BUT dignities, to whome they be comen, maken they him honorable and reverent? Have they so grete strength, that thei maie putten vertue in heretes of folkes that usen the lordshippe of 'hem, or els may they don away the vices? Certes they be not wont to don away wickednes, but they be wont rather to shew wickednesse. And therof cometh it that I have right grete disdain, that dignities ben yeven to wicked men. For whiche thing Catullus cleped a consul of Rome (that hight Nonius) postome of boche, as who saith, he cleped him a congregacion of vices in his brest, as a postome is full of corrupcion: All were Nonius set in a chaire of dignite. Secst thou not than, how grete vilonies dignities done to wiked men? certes unworthinesse of wicked men shulde be the lasse sene, if they n'ere renowned with non honour. Certes thou thy self ne mightest not be brought with as many perils as thou myghtest suffre, that thou woldest bere the magistrate with decorate, that is to saine, that for peril that myght befall The by offence of the king Theodorike, thou n'oldest not be felawe in governaunce with decorate, whan thou sawe that he had wiked corage of a lycorous shrew and of an accusour. Ne I may not for soche honours judgen 'hem worthy of reverence, that I deme and hold unworthy to have thylke same honours. Now if thou sawe a manne, that wer fulfild of wisdom, certes, thou ne mightest not deme, that he wer unworthie to that honour, or els to the wisdom of whiche, he is fulfilled. Boecius. No (q<sup>d</sup> I). Philosophie. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) dignities appertainen properlie to vertue, and vertue transporteth dignitie anon to thilke man, to whiche she her self is conjoynd. And for as moche as honours of peple ne maie not make folke digne of honour, it is well sene clerely, that thei ne have no propre beantie of dignitie. And yet menne oughten take more hede in this: for if a wight be in so moche the more outcast, that he is dispised of moste folke, so as dignite ne maye not maken shrewes worthy of no reverence, than maketh dignite shrewes rather dispised than praised, the which shrewes dignite sheweth to moch folke. And forsothe not unpunished, that is to sayn, that shrewes revengen 'hem ayenward upon dignities. For they yelden ayen to dignities as grete guerdons, whan they despotten and defoulen dignities ties with ther vilonic. And for as moche as thou now knowest, that thilke very reverence ne maye nat comen by these shadowy transitorye dignities, understonde now thus: that if a man had used and had many maner dignities of consuls and were paraventure comen amonge straunge naciens, shulde thilke honour maken him wurshipfull and redoubted of straunge folke? Certes if that honour of peple were a naturel yeste to dignities, it ne might never cessen no where amonge no maner folke to done his office. Right as a fyre in every countre ne stinteth not to enchaufen and maken hore. But for as moche as for to ben honorable or reverent, ne cometh not to folke of ther proper strength of nature, but onely of the false opinion of folke, that is to saie, that wenen that dignities maken folke digne of honours: anone therfore whan they comen ther as folke ne knowe not thilke dignities, ther honours vanisshen awaye and that anon. But that is amonge straunge folke maist thou sain. Ne aminges hem ther they were borne ne dured not thilke dignities alwaye. Certes the dignite of the provostrie of Rome was whilome a gret power: nowe is it nothyng but an ydle name, and the rente of the senatorie a grete charge. And if a wight whilom had th' office to taken hede to the vitailles of the peple, as of corne and of other thinges, he was holden aminges hem grete. But what thing is more now outcaste than thilke provostrie? As I have said a lytel here before, that thilke thing that hath no proper beaute of it self, receiveth sometime price and shining, and sometim leseth it by th' opinion of usaunces; now if that dignities than ne mowe not make folke digne of reverence, and if that dignities wexe foule of ther wyll, by the fylthe of shrewes, and if dignities lesen ther shininge by chaunging of tymes, and if they wexen foule by estimation of peple, what is it that they han in hemselfe of beaute, that ought to be desired? as who saithe none: than ne mowen they yeven no beaute of dignitie to none other.

Unworshipfull fetes he clepeth here, for that Nero that was so wicked yafe the dignities.

Who woulde than resonablye wenen, that blisfulnesse were in soche honours, as ben yeven by vicious shrewes?

Prosa quinta.

An vero regna, regumque familiaritas efficere potentem valent? Quidni, &c.

BUT reignes and familiarities of kynges, maie thei maken a man to ben mighty? How els? when his blisfulnesse dureth perpetuallie. But certes, the old age of time passed, and eke of present time nowe, is ful of ensamples, how that kinges have chaunged into wretchednesse, out of ther welfulnes.

O! a noble thing and a clere thinge is power, that n'is not founden mighty to kepe it self. And if that power of relmes be authour and maket of blisfulnesse, if thilke power lackethe on any syde, ameniseth it nat thilke blisfulnesse, and bringeth in wretchednes? But yet al be it so, that the relmes of mankinde stretchen brode, yet mote ther nede ben moche folke, over whiche that every king ne hath no lordship ne commaundement. And certes upon thilk side that power falleth, which that maketh folke blisful, right on that same side no power entreth underneth, that maketh hem wretches. In this maner than moien kinges have mote porcion of wretchednesse than of welfulnesse.

A tiraunt that was kinge of Sicile, that had assayed the perill of his estate, shewed by similitude the dredes of relmes by gallenette of a swerde, that hong over the hed of his familier. What thinge is than this power, that maye not done awaye the bitynges of besinesse, ne eschewe the prickes of drede?

And certes yet wolden they lyven in sykernesse, but they maye nat. And yet they glorifyen hem in ther power. Holdest thou than that thilke man be mighty, that thou seest that he wolde done that he maye not done? And holdest thou than him a mighty man, that hath environed his sydes with men of armes or sergeautes, and daderth more them that he maketh agast, than they dreden hym, and that is putte in the handes of his servants for he shulde seme mightye? But of famylyeres or servants of kinges, why shulde I tell The any thyng, sihe that I my selfe have shewed The that relmes hem selte ben ful of grete feblese? The whiche famylyers certes the royall power of kinges in whole estate, and in estate abated, full ofte throwethe adowne.

Nero constrained Senecke hys famylyer and his mayster, to chesen on what dethe he wolde dye. Antonius commaunded that knightes slown wyth ther swerdes Papinian his famylyer, whiche Papinian hadde ben longe tyme ful mighty aminges hem of the courte. And yet certes they wolden both have renounced ther power. Of whiche two Senecke enforced him to yeven to Nero his richesse, and also to have gone into solytary exile. But whan the grete weight, that is to saie, of lorde's power, or of Fortune, draweth hem that shullen fall, neither of hem ne might do that he wolde. What thinge is than thilke power, that thoughe men have it, yet they ben agast, and whan thou woldest have it, thou n'arte not syker? And yf thou woldest forleten it, thou maist nat eschewen it. But whether soch men ben frendes at nede as ben counsaied by fortune, and nat by vertue? Certes soch folke as welful fortune maketh frendes, contrarious fortune maketh hem enemyes. And what pestilence is more mightye for to anoye a wight, than a familier enemye?

Prosa sexta.

Gloria verò quàm fallax sàpe, quàm turpis est! unde non injurià tragicus exclamat. O gloria, gloria, millibus mortalium nihil aliud facta, nisi aurium inflatio magna, &c.

BUT glorie, how decevable and howe foull is it oft! For whiche thing, not unskillfully a tragedien, that is to sayne maker of dities that highten Tragedyes, cried and sayde. O glory glory (q<sup>d</sup> he) thou n'art nothing els to thousandes of folke but a sweller of eres. For many have full grete renome by the false opinion of the peple.

And what thinge may ben thought fouler then soche praysynge? For thilke folke that ben praised fallse, they moten nedes have shame of ther praisynge. And yf that folke have gotten 'hem thanke or praisynge by ther desertes: What thing hath thilke prife eched or encrefed to the conscience of wyse folke, that mesuren ther gode, nat by the rumoure of the peple, but by the sothefastnesse of conscience? And if it seme a faire thinge, a man to have encrefed and sprad his name, than soloweth it, that it is demed to ben a foule thing, if it ne be yspradde and encrefed. But as I said a litel here before, that sihe there more nedes ben many folkes, to whiche folke the renome of a man ne maye nat comen, it befallith, that he that thou wenest be glorious and renowned, semeth in the next part of the yerthe to ben without glorie and without renome. And certes amonges these thinges I ne trow nat that the prife and the grace of the peple n'ys neither worthy to ben remembered, ne cometh of wise judgement, ne is ferme perdurably. But now of this name of gentilnesse: what man is it that ne may wel sene howe vaine and how flityng it is? For if the name of gentilnesse be referred to renome and clerenesse of lynage, than is gentil name but a forain thing, that is to say, to 'hem that glorifyen 'hem of ther linage. For it semeth that gentilesse be a maner praying that cometh of the desertes of auncesters. And if praising maketh gentilesse, than moren they nedes ben gentil, that ben prayfed. For whiche thinge it foloweth, that if thou ne have no gentylnesse of thy selfe, that is to sayne, prife, that cometh of thy desert, forain gentilnesse ne maketh The nat gentil. But certes if there be any gode in gentilnesse, I trowe it be al onely this: that it semeth as that a maner necessite be imposed to gentilmen, for that they ne shulde nat outragen or forleven fro the vertues of ther noble kynred.

How grete siknesles and how grete sorowes unsufrible, right as a maner fruite of wickednes, ben thilke delices wonte to bringen to the bodies of folke that usen 'hem? of which delices I n'ot what joye may ben had of ther movinge. But this wote I wel, that whosoever wol remembre him of his luxures he shal well understande, that the issues of delices ben sorowful and sory. And yf thilke delices now make folke blisful, than by that same cause moten these bests ben cleped blisful. Of whiche bestes al the entencion hasteth to fulfil ther bodily jolyte. NOwe it is no dout than, that these wayes ne ben a maner mistidinges to blisfulnes: ne that they ne mowen not leden folke thider, as they be heten to leden 'hem. But with how gret harmes these forsaide wayes ben enlaced, I shal shew you shortly. For why? if thou enforcest The to assemble money, money, thou must byreven him his money that hath it. And if thou wolt shinen with dignities, thou muste beseechen and supplien 'hem, that yeven the dignities. And yf thou covetest by honour to gone before other folkes, thou shalt defoule thy self thorough humbleesse of asking. If thou desirest power thou shalt by aways of thy subjectes anoiously be cast under by many perils. Askest thou glorie? thou shalt ben so distrahte by aspre thinges, that thou shalt forgone sikernes. And if thou woldest leden thy lyfe in delites, every wight shal dispisen The and forleten The, as thou that arte thral to thing, that is right foule and britel, that is to saine, servaunt to thy bodye. Nowe is it wel ysene, howe lytel and how britel possession they coveten, that putten the godes of the bodi above ther own reson. For maist thou surmounten these elifauntes in gretnesse or in weight of body? or mayste thou ben stronger than the bul? mayst thou be swifter than the Tigre? Beholde the spaces and the stablenesse, and the swyft course of heaven, and stinte somtyme to wondren on foule thinges. The whiche heaven certes nys nat rather for these thinges to be wondred upon, than for the reson by whiche it is governed. But the shininge of thy forme, that is to sayne, the beaute of thy body, how swiftly passing is it, and howe transitorie! certes it is more siting than the mutabilite of floures of the sommer seson. For so as Aristotell telleth, that yf the men had eyen of a beste that hight Lynx, so that the lokyng of folke might percen throughe the thynges that withstonde it, whoso loked than in the antrailes of the body of Alcibiades, that was full faire in the superfycie without, it shulde seme right foule. And forthy, yf thou semest faire, thy nature ne maketh nat that, but the discevaunce of feblenesse of the eien that loken. But praise the godes of the body as moche as ever The lyst, so that thou know algates that what so it be, that is to saine, of the godes of the body, which that thou wondrest upon, maye ben destroyed or els dissolved by the hete of a fever of thre daies. Of which forsayd thinges I maie reducen this shortly in a somme, that these wordly godes, which that ne mowen yeven that they behyghten, ne ben not parfite by the congregacion of al godes, that they ne ben not wayes ne parthes, that bringen men to blisfulnesse, ne maken men to be blisful.

IT suffiseth that I have saide hyderto the forme of false welfulnesse: so that yf thou loke now clerely, the order of mine entencion requireth fro henceforth to shewen the very welfulnes. B. Forsoth (q<sup>d</sup> I) I se wel now, the suffisaunce may nat comen by rychesse, ne power by relmes, ne reverence by dignities, ne gentilnesse by glory, ne joye by delices. P. And hast thou wel knowen the causes (q<sup>d</sup> she) why it is? B. Certes me semeth (q<sup>d</sup> I) that I se 'hem, right as though it were through a litel clyfte: But me were lever knowen 'hem more openly of The. Phi. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) the reson is al redy. For thilke thinge that simply is one thinge without any division, the errour and folye of mankinde divideth and departeth it and misledeth it, and transporteth from very and parfite gode, to godes that be false and unparfit. But say me this: weneft thou that he that hath the nede of power that him ne lacketh nothinge? Boecius. nay (q<sup>d</sup> I). Philosophie. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) thou sayest arighte: for yf so be that there is a thing that in any partie be febler of power, certes as in that it mote nedes be nedy of forain help. Boecius. Right so it is (q<sup>d</sup> I). Philosophie. Suffisaunce and power ben of one kinde. Boecius. So semeth (q<sup>d</sup> I). Philosophie. And demest thou (q<sup>d</sup> she) that a thinge that is of this maner, that is to say, suffisaunt and mighty, oughte ben dispised, or els that it be righte digne of reverence above al thinges? Boecius. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) it is no doute that it is right worthy to be revered. Philosop. Let us adden (q<sup>d</sup> she) reverence to suffisaunce and to power, so that we demen that these thre thinges be al one thing. Boecius. Certes let (q<sup>d</sup> I) us adden it if we wil graunt the sothe. P. What demest thou (q<sup>d</sup> she) than, is that a derke thing and not noble, that is suffisaunt, reverent, and mighty? or els that it is right noble and right clere by celebritey of renome? Consider than (q<sup>d</sup> she) as we have graunted here byforne, that he that ne hath no nede of nothing, and is most mighty and moste digne of honoure, yf hym nedeth any clerenesse of renome, whiche clerenesse he mighte not graunten of himselfe, so for lacke of thilke clerenesse he might semen the febler on any syde, or the more outcaste. Glosa. That is to say, naye: For who so that is suffisaunt, mighty, and reverent, clerenesse of renome foloweth of the forsaide thinges: he hath it all redy of his suffisaunce. Boecius. I maye not (q<sup>d</sup> I) denye it, but I mote graunten as it is, that this thinge is right celebrable by clerenesse of renome and noblesse. P. Than foloweth (q<sup>d</sup> she) that we adden clerenesse of renome to the foresaide thinges, so that there be amonges 'hem no difference. B. This is a consequence (q<sup>d</sup> I). Philosop. This thinge than (q<sup>d</sup> she) that ne hath nede of no foraine thyng, and that maye do all thyng by his strengthes, and that is noble and honourable, is it not a mery thinge and joyful?

joyful? Boecius. But whence (q<sup>d</sup> I) that any sorowe might come to this thyng that is soche, certes I maye not thinke. Philosophie. Than more we graunte (q<sup>d</sup> she) that this thyng be full of gladnesse, yf the foresayde thynges be sothe. And certes, also mote we graunte, that suffisaunce, power, noblesse, reverence, and gladnesse be onelye divers by names, but ther substaunce hath no diversite. Boecius. It mote nedelye be so (q<sup>d</sup> I). Philosophie. Thilke thyng than (q<sup>d</sup> she) that is one and simple in his nature, the wickednesse of men departeth and divideth it: And whan they enforcen hem to gotten partye of a thyng, that he hath no parte, they ne gotten hem neythir thilke partye that n'ys none, ne the thyng al whole that they desyre. Boecius. In whiche manere (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Thilke man (q<sup>d</sup> she) that secheth riches to flyen povertie, he ne travaileth hym not for to get power, for he hath lever be derke and vyle, and eke withdraweth from hymself many naturell delytes, for he n'olde lese the money that he hath assembled. But certes in thys maner he ne getteth him no suffisaunce that power forleteth, and that molestie priketh, and that fylthe maketh outcaste, and that derkenesse hydeth. And certes he that desireth only power, wasteth and scattereth rychesse, and dissipeth delices and eke honour that is without power, ne he ne prayleth glory nothing. Certes this seest thou well that many thynges faylen to him: For he hath sometye defaute of many necessities, and many angnyshes byten hym. And when he maye not don tho defautes away, he forletteth to be myghty, and that is the thyng that he moste desyareth. And right thus may I make semblable resons of honour, of glory, and of delyces. For so every of these forsaide thynges is the same that these other thynges ben, that is to saine, al one thing. Whosoever seketh to gotten that one of these and not that other, he ne getteth not that he desireth. Boecius. What sayest thou than, if that a man covete to gotten al these thynges togidre? Philosophie. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) I wold say that he woulde get him soverain blisfulnes, but that shall he not: for in tho thynges that I have shewed, that mowe not yeve that they beheten. Boecius. Certes no (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Than (q<sup>d</sup> she) ne shullen men not by no way seken blisfulnesse in soch thynges, as men wenen that they ne mowe gyven but one thyng synglerly of al that men seken. Boecius. I graunt well (q<sup>d</sup> I) ne non sother thing maye be sayde. Philosophy. Now hast thou than (q<sup>d</sup> she) the forme and the cause of false wellfulnesse: Now turne and flytte agayn to thy thought, for there shal thou sene anon thylke very blisfulnesse, that I have behight The. Boecius. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) it is clere and open, though it were to a blynde man: And that shewdest thou me a lytel here before, whan thou enforcedest The to shewe me the causes of the false wellfulnesse. For (but if I be begiled) than is that thilke very blisfulnesse and parlite, that parlitelye maketh a man suffisaunt, myghtye, honourable, noble, and ful of gladnes. And for thou shalte wel knowe, that I have well understanden these thynges within my herte: I knowe well that thylke blisfulnesse that men verely yeven one of the forsaide thynges, sene they ben all one, I knowe doutlesse that thilke thyng is ful of blisfulnesse. Philosophy. O my norice (q<sup>d</sup> she) by this opinion I say that thou arte blisful, yf thou put this therto that I shall sayne. Boecius. What is that? (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Trowest thou that ther be any thing in these erthly mortal tomblinge thynges, that may bringen this estate? Bo. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) I trow it not: and thou hast shewed me wel, that over thilk gode ther n'is nothyng more to ben desired. P. These thynges than (q<sup>d</sup> she) that is to saine, erthly suffisaunce and power, and soch thynges erthely, they semen likenesse of very gode; or els it semeth that they yeven to mortali folke a maner of godenesse, that ne be not partite, but thilke gode that is very and parfite, that may they not yeven. Boe. I accorde me well (q<sup>d</sup> I). Pb. Than (q<sup>d</sup> she) for as moche as thou hast knowen, which is thilke very blisfulnes, and eke which thilke thynges ben, that lien falsely blisfulnesse, that is to say, that they by discrete semen very godes: Nowe behoveth The to knowe whence and wher thou mow seke thilke very blisfulnesse. B. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) that desyre I gretly, and have abyden longe time to herken it. P. But for as moch (q<sup>d</sup> she) as it liketh to my disciple Plato in his boke of Timæo, that in ryght lytel thynges men shulden beseeche the help of God: What judgest thou that be nowe to done, so that we may deserve to finde that sete of thilke soverain gode? B. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) I deme that we shullen clepe to the father of all godes, for withouten him n'ys there nothing founded aright. P. Thou saiest aright (q<sup>d</sup> she) and began anon to singen right thus.

Prosa decima.

Quoniam igitur, quæ sit imperfecti, quæ etiam perfecti boni forma vidisti, nunc demonstrandum reor, &c.

FOrasmoeche than, as thou hast sene which is the forme of gode, that n'ys not parfite, and the forme of gode, whiche that is parfite, nowe trowe I that it were gode to shewe in what this perfeccion of blisfulnes is set. And in this thing I trowe that we shal firste enquire for to weten, if that any soch maner gode, as thilke gode as thou hast diffynished a litell here before, that is to saie, soveraine gode, maye be found in the nature of thynges. For that vayne imaginacion of thought ne descree us not, and put us out of the sothefastnesse of thylke thyng that is submytted to us. But it maye not be denied that thylke ne is, and that is right as a wel of al godes. For al thyng that is cleped imparfite is proved imparfite, by the amehusyng of perfeccion of thyng that is parfite. And hercof cometh it that in every thyng generall, if that men sene any thinge that is imparfite, certes in thilke thyng generall, there mote be some thyng that is parfite. For if so be that perfeccion is don away, men may not thinke ne saye from whence thilke thyng is, that is cleped imparfite. For the nature ne toke not her beginninge of thinges amehused and imparfite, but it procedeth of thynges that ben al whole and absolute, and descendeth so down into the uttrest thynges, and into thynges empty and without frute. But as I have shewed a litell here before, that if that there be a blisfulnesse that be frele and vaine, and imparfite, there maye no man doute that ther n'ys some blisfulnesse, that is sadde, stedfaste, and parfite. Bo. This is concluded (q<sup>d</sup> I) fermelye and sothfastelye. P. But consider also (q<sup>d</sup> she) in whome this blisfulnes inhabyteth. The comune accorde and concerte of the corage of men proveth and graunteth, that GOD prince of all thynges is gode. For so as nothyng may be thought better than God, it may not be doubted than that he that nothyng n'is better than he n'is gode. Certes, reson sheweth that GOD is so gode, that it proveth by very force, that parfite gode is in him. For if God n'is soche, he ne maie not ben prince of al thing. For certes, some thing possesying in it self parfite gode, should be more worthie then God: and it should semen that thilk thing wer first and older than God. For we have shewed appertlie, that all thynges that ben parfite, ben firste or thinges that ben imparfite. And forthy, for as moche as that my reson, or my processe, ne go not awaie without an ende, we owen to graunt, that the soveraine God is right full of soveraine parfite gode. And we have establisshed, that the soveraine gode is very blisfulnesse: then mote it nedes be, that verie blisfulnesse is set in soverain gode. Bo. This take I wel (q<sup>d</sup> I) ne this ne maie not be withsaid in no maner. P. But I praie The (q<sup>d</sup> she) se now how thou maiest proven holily, and withouten corrupcion, this that we have saied, that the soveraine God is full of right soveraine gode. Bo. In whiche maner? (q<sup>d</sup> I). P. Wenest thou aught (q<sup>d</sup> she) that the father of all thinges hath taken thilke soverain gode any where out of hymself, of whiche soveraine gode menne proveth that he is ful? Right as thou mightest thinke, that God, that hath blisfulnesse in hymself, and thilke blisfulnes that is in him, wer divers in substance. For if thou wene, that God hath received thilke gode out of hymself, thou maiest wene, that he that yave thilke gode to God be more worthie then God. But I am beknowe and confesse, and that right dignely, that God is right worthie above all thynges: And if so be that this gode be in him by nature, but that is diverse from hym by wenyng reson, sens we speken of God, prince of all thynges, saie, who so saie maie, who was he that conjoynd these thynges together? And eke at the last se well, that a thyng that is divers fro any thing, that thilk thing n'is not that same thing, for whiche it is understanden to ben divers. Then foloweth it well, that the ilke thyng that by his nature is diverse from soverain gode, that thing is not soverain gode. But certes, it were a felonous cursednesse, to thinke that of hym, that nothyng n'is more worthie. For alwaie of all thinges the name of hem ne maie not ben better then ther beginner. For whiche I maie concluden by right verie reson, that thilke that is beginning of all thynges, thilke same thyng is soverain gode in his substance. Bo. Thou hast saied rightfully (q<sup>d</sup> I). P. But we have graunted (q<sup>d</sup> she) that the soveraine gode is blisfulnesse. Bo. That is sothe (q<sup>d</sup> I). P. Then (q<sup>d</sup> she) we moten nedes graunt and confesse, that the ilke same soverain gode be God. Bo. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) I ne maie not denie, ne withstande the reasons proposed, and I se well that it foloweth by strength of the premises. P. Loke now (q<sup>d</sup> she) if this be proved yet more firmelie thus, that there ne mowen not ben two soveraine godes that ben divers emong hem self. For certes, the godes that ben divers emong hem self, that one is not that the other is. Then ne mowen neither of hem be parfite, so as either of hem lacketh to other, but that that n'is not parfite, menne maie sene apertlie, that it n'is not soveraine. The thynges then that be soverainlie gode, ne mowen by no waie be divers. But I have well concluded, that blisfulnesse and GOD, ben the soveraine gode, for whiche it mote nedes ben that soveraine blisfulnesse is soveraine dignite. Bo. Nothyng (q<sup>d</sup> I) is more sothefaste then this, ne more ferme by reson, ne a more worthie thyng then God maie not be concluded.

P. Upon these thynges then (q<sup>d</sup> she) right as these Geometriciens, when thei have shewed ther propolitions, ben wonte to bringen in thynges, that thei clepen aphorismes or declaracions of foresaied thynges, right so woll I yeve The here, as a Corallary or a mede of crowne. For why? forasmoech as by the gettyng of blisfulnesse menne ben maked blisful, and blisfulnesse is dignite; then it is manifeste and open, that by the gettyng of dignite menne ben maked blisful, right as by the getting of justice, they ben maked just, and by the gettyng of Sapience thei be maked wise, right so nedes by the semblable reson, when thei have gotten divinite, thei be made goddes. Then is every blisfull man a God. But certes, by nature there n'is but one God, but by the participation of the Divinite, there ne letteth ne dislourbeth nothyng, that there ne be many Goddes. Bo. This is (q<sup>d</sup> I) a faire thyng and a precious, clepe it as thou wilt, be it Corallarie, or Porisme, or mede of Crowne, or declaryng. P. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) nothyng n'is fairer, then is the thing, that by reson should be added to these foresaied thynges. Bo. What thyng (q<sup>d</sup> I). P. So (q<sup>d</sup> she) as it semeth that blisfulnesse containeth many thynges, it were for to weten, whether that al these thinges maken or conjoynen, as a maner bodie of blisfulnesse, by the divinitie of parties of members, or els if any of all these thinges be soche that it accomplishe by hymself the substance of blisfulnesse. So all these other things ben referred, and brought to blisfulnes, that is to saie, as to the chief of hem. Bo. I would (q<sup>d</sup> I) that thou maiest me clerely to understande what Thou saiest, and what thou recordest me the foresaid thynges. Phi. Have I not judged (q<sup>d</sup> she) that blisfulnesse is gode? Bo. Yes forsothe (q<sup>d</sup> I) and that soveraine gode. Phi. Adde then (q<sup>d</sup> she) thilke gode that is made blisfulnesse, to all the foresaid thynges. For thilke same blisfulnesse, that is demed to be soverain suffisaunce, thilk self is soverain power, soveraine reverence, soveraine clerenesse or noblesse, and soveraine delite.

What saiest thou then of al these thynges, that is to saie, suffisaunce, power, and these other thynges? Ben thei then as members of blisfulnesse, or ben thei referred and brought to soveraine gode, right as all thynges that ben brought to the chief of hem? Bo. I understonde well (q<sup>d</sup> I) what thou purpolest to seke: But I desire for to herken, that thou shewe it to me. Phi. Take now thus the discrecion of this question (q<sup>d</sup> she). If all these thynges (q<sup>d</sup> she) weren members to felicitie, then weren thei divers that one from that other: and soche is the nature of parties or of members, that divers members compounen a bodie. Bo. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) it hath well ben shewed here besorne, that all these thynges ben al one thing. Phi. Than ben thei no members (q<sup>d</sup> she). For els it shuld seme that blisfulnesse were conjoynded all of o member alohe, but that is a thyng that maie not be doen. Bo. This thyng (q<sup>d</sup> I) then, n<sup>is</sup> not doubroun, but I abide to herken the remnaunt of thy question. Phi. This is open and clere (q<sup>d</sup> she) that al other thynges ben referred and brought to gode: For therfore is suffisaunce required, for it is demed to be gode; and forthy is power required, for men trowen also that it be gode. And this same thyng mowen we thinken, and conjecten of reverence, of noblesse, and of delite. Then is soverain gode the somme and the cause, of al that ought to ben desired. For why? thilke thyng that withholdeth no gode in it self, ne semblaunce of gode, it ne maie not well in no maner be desired ne required. And the contrary: for though that thynges by ther nature ne ben not gode, algates if men wenen that thei ben gode, yet ben thei desired, as though thei were verely gode. And therefore it is said that men ought to wene by right, that bountie be the soveraine fine, and the cause of all the things that ben to requiren. But certes, thilke that is cause for whiche men requiren any thyng, it semeth that thilke same thyng be moeste desired, as thus: if that a wight would riden for cause of hele, he ne desireth not so moche the movyng to riden, as the effecte of his hele. Now then sens that al thynges ben required for the grace of gode, thei ne ben not desired of all folke, more than the same gode. But we have graunted that blisfulnes is that same thyng, for whiche that all these other thynges ben desired. Then is it thus, that certes onely blisfulnesse is required and desired. By whiche thing it sheweth clerelic, that of gode and blisfulnes is all one and the same substantie. Bo. I se not (q<sup>d</sup> I) wherefore that men might discorden in this. Phi. And we have shewed, that God and verie blisfulnesse is all one thyng. Bo. That is sothe (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Then mow we conclude sickerly, that the substantie of God is set in thilke same gode, and in none other place.

COmeth all together nowe ye that ben icaught and bounde with wicked chaines, by the decevable delite of yerthly thynges, inhabityng in your thoughte. Here shall be the reste of your labour: here is the haven stable, in quiete pesible. This alone is the open refute to wretches, that is to sain, that ye that be combred and deceived with worldly affeccions, cometh now to this soverain gode, that is God, that is refute to hem that willen comen to him. All the thynges that the river Tagus yeveth you, with his golden gravels: or els al the thynges that the river Hermus, yeveth with his red brinke: or that Indus yeveth, that is next the hote partie of the world, that medleth the grene stones with the white: ne shoud not cleren the lokyng of your thought, but hidch rather your blind corage within her derknes; al that liketh you here, and exciteth and moveth your thoughtes, the yerth hath nourished it within his lowe caves. But the shining, by which the heven is governed, and whence that his strengthe cometh, that escheweth the derke overthrowng of the soule; and whosoever maie knowen thilke lighte of blisfulnesse, he will saie, that the white bernes of the Sonne ne be not clere.

Assentior, inquam; cuncta enim firmissimis nexa rationibus constant. Tum illa, quan-ti, inquit, aestimabis, si bonum ipsum, quid sit agnoveris, &c.

BO. I assent me (q<sup>d</sup> I) for al thynges ben strong-lic bounden with right ferme resons. Phi. How moch wilt thou praisen it (q<sup>d</sup> she) if that thou knowe what the ilke gode is? Bo. I woll praise it (q<sup>d</sup> I) by price without ende, if it shal betide me to knowe also togither God that is gode. Phi. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) that shall I doe The by very reson, if that tho thynges, that I have concluded a litle here besorne, dwellen onely in ther graunting. Bo. Thei dwellen graunted to The (q<sup>d</sup> I) that is to sain, as who saith, I graunte to thy foresaid conclusions. Phi. I have shewed The (q<sup>d</sup> she) that the things, that ben required of many folke, ne ben not very godes ne perfite. For thei ben divers that one from that other. And so as eche of hem is lackyng to other, thei ne have no power to bring a gode that is full and absolute. But then at erst ben thei very gode, when thei ben gathered togither all into one forme, and into one working: so that thilke thing that is suffisaunt, thilke same is power, and reverence, noblesse, and mirth. And forsothe, but if all these thynges be all one same thinge, thei ne have not whereby that thei move be put in the number of thynges, that ought to be required and desired. Bo. It is shewen (q<sup>d</sup> I) ne hereof maie there no manne doubren. Phi. The thynges then (q<sup>d</sup> she) that ne be no godes, when thei ben divers, and when thei begynnen to be all one thyng, then ben thei godes, ne cometh it not then, by the getting of unitie, unitie, that thei be makid godes? Bo. So semeth it (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. But all thyng that is gode (q<sup>d</sup> she) grauntest thou that it be gode, by the participacion of gode or no? Bo. I graunt it (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Then must thou graunte (q<sup>d</sup> she) by semblable reson, that one and gode be one same thyng. For of thynges, of whiche the effect n<sup>is</sup> not naturelly divers, nedes ther substance must be one same thyng. Bo. I ne maie not demie it (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Hast thou not knowen well (q<sup>d</sup> she) that all thyng that is, hath so long his dwellyng and his substantce, as long as it is one, but when it forletteth to ben one, it must nedes di- en, and corrupen together. Bo. In whiche maner (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Right as in bestes (q<sup>d</sup> she) when the soule and the bodie ben conjoined in one and dwel- lyng together, it is cleped a beste: and when ther unitie is destroyed, by the discveraunce of that one from that other, then sheweth it well, that it is a dedde thyng, and it is no lenger no best.

And the bodie of a wight; while it dwelleth in one forme, by conjunccion of members, it is well seen, that it is a figure of mankind: And if the par- ties of the bodie be divided and discovered that one from that other, that thei destroy the unitie, the bo- die forletteth to be that it was before. And who so would renne in the same maner by al thynges, he should sene that without doubte, every thyng is in his substantce, as long as it is one, and when it forle- teth to be one, it dieth and perissheth.

B. When I consider (q<sup>d</sup> I) many thynges, I se none other. Phi. Is there any thing (q<sup>d</sup> she) that in as moche as it liveth naturelly, that forletteth the talente, or appetite of his beyng, and desireth to come to deth and to corrupcion? Bo. If I consider (q<sup>d</sup> I) the bestes that have any maner nature of wil- lyng, and of n<sup>is</sup>lyng, I ne finde no beste, but if it be constrained fro without forthe, that forletteth or dis- piserh the intencion to liven and to duren, or that will his thanks hasten hym to dien.

For every beste travailleth hym to defende and kepe the salvacion of his life, and escheweth deth and destruccion. But certes I doubt me of herbes and trees, that ne have no felyng soules, ne no natu- rell workynges, ferynge to appetites; as bestes have: whether thei have appetite to dwellen, and to du- ren.

Phi. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) thereof dare The not doubte. Now loke upon the herbes and trees, for thei wexen firste in soche places, as ben convenable to hem: in whiche places thei mowe not dien ne drien, as longe as ther nature maie defende hem. For some of hem wexen in feldes, and some wexen in moun- taignes, and other wexe in Mareis, and other cleven on rockes, and some wexen plenteous in sondes. And if any wighte enforce hym to bere hem into other places, thei wexen drie. For nature yeveth to every thyng that is conveniente to hym, and travail- eth that thei ne die, as long as thei have power, to dwellen and to liven. What wilt thou saie of this, that thei drawen all ther nourishynges by ther rotes, righte as thei hadden ther mouthes iplounged within the yerthes, and sheden by ther maris ther wode ther barke? And what wilt thou saie of this, that the ilke thyng that is right soft, as the Marie is, that is alwaie hidde in the fete all within, and that is de- fended from without, by the stedfastnesse of wode, and that the uttereste barkes is put ayenst the dis- temperaunce of the heven, as a defendour, mighte to suffer harme? And thus certes maie thou wel seen, howe grete is the diligence of nature for all thynges renovelen and publiken hem with fede im- multiplied.

Ne there n<sup>is</sup> no manne, that ne wote well, that thei ne ben right as a foundement, and edifice, for to duren not onelic for a tyme, but right as for to dure perdurable by generacion. And the thynges eke, that men wenen ne have no soules, ne desire thei not by semblable reson, to kepe that is his, that is to saie that is according to ther nature, in con- servacion of ther beyng and enduryng? For where- fore els bereth lightnes the flambes up, and the weight presseth the yerth adoun, but for as moche as thilke places, and thilke movynges be convenable to everiche of hem? And for sothe every thing kepeth thilke, that is accordyng and proper to hym, righte as thynges that ben contrarious, and enemies corrup- pen hem. And yet the hard thynges (as stones) cle- ven and holden ther parties together, right fast and hard, and defenden hem in withstanding, that thei ne departen lightly, and yeven place to hem, that breken or dividen hem: but nathelste, thei retourn ayen sone into the same thynges, from whens thei be araced. But fire fleeth and refuseth all division. Ne I ne trete not now here, of wilfull movynges of the soule that is knowing, but of naturel entencion of thynges, as thus: right as we swallowen the mete that we reteven, and ne thinke not on it, and as we drawe our breth in slepyng, that we were not while we sopen. For certes in the bestes, the love of ther livinges, ne of ther beynges, ne cometh not of the wilnynges of the soule, but of the beginnynges of na- ture. For certes, through constrainyng causes, wille desireth and embraceth ful oft times the deth, that nature dredeth, that is to saie, as thus: That a man maie be constrained so by some cause, that his wille desireth, and taketh the deth, whiche that nature ha- teth and dredeth full fore. And someryme we sene the contrary, as thus: that the wil of a wight dis- turbeth and constraineth that, that nature alwaie de- sireth and requireth, that is to saie, the werkes of generacion, by the whiche generacion onely dwel- leth, and is sustained the long durabilitie of mortall thynges, as thus. This charitie and this love, that every thyng hath to hymself, ne cometh not of the moving of the soule, but of the entencion of nature. For the purveiaunce of God hath yeven to thynges, that ben create of him this, that is a full grete cause to liven and to duren, for which thei desiren natu- rally ther life, as long as ever thei mowen: for which thou maist not dreden by no maner, that al thynges that ben any where, that thei ne requiren naturally the ferme stablenesse of perdurable dwellyng, and ke the eschewyng of destruccion.

Bo. I confesse (q<sup>d</sup> I) that I se wel now, and cer- tainly withouten doubt, the thynges that a while ago semeden uncerteine to me. Phi. But (q<sup>d</sup> she) thilke thing that desireth to be and dwell perdurable, he desireth to ben one: For if that one were destroyed, certes, being should there none dwellen to no wight. Bo. That is sothe (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Then (q<sup>d</sup> she) de- siren all thyngs one. Bo. I assente (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. And I have shewed (q<sup>d</sup> she) that ilke same one is thilke that is gode. Bo. Ye forsothe (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. All thynges then (q<sup>d</sup> she) requiren gode, and thilke maist thou discryven thus: gode is thilke thyng, that every wight desireth. Bo. There ne maie be thought no more verie thyng (q<sup>d</sup> I) for either all thynges be referred and brought to nought, and flotten without gover- nour dispoiled of one, as of ther proper hed, or els if there be any thyng, to which that all thynges ten- den and hien to, that thyng must be the soverain gode of all godes. Phi. Then said she thus: O my nourice (q<sup>d</sup> she) I have grete gladnes of The, for thou hast fixed in thy herte the middle forthfastnesse, that is to saie the pricke, but this thing hath be dis- covered to The, in that thou saidest, that thou wilt- est not a litle here before. Bo. What is that? (q<sup>d</sup> I): Phi. That thou wilst not (q<sup>d</sup> she) whiche was the the ende of thynges, and certes, that is the thyng that every wight desireth. And for as moche as we have gathered and comprehended, that gode is thilke thyng, that is desired of all, then mote we nedes confesse, that gode is the fine of all thynges.

*Quisquis profundâ mente vestigat verum,
Cupitque nullis ille deviis falli,
In se revolvat intimi lucem visûs, &c.*

WHoso seketh sothe by a depe thought, and coveteth to ben disceved by no miswaies, let hym rollen and treten within hymselfe the lighte of his inward sight: and let hym gatheren ayen, enclinyng into a compace, the long movinges of his thoughtes. And let him techen his courage, that he hath enclosed, and hidde in his trefours, all that he hath compassed or sought fro without: and then thilke thing, that the blacke cloudes of errour whilome had covered, shall light more clerely than Phoebus hymself ne shineth. Glosa. Whoso woll seke the depe groundes of sothe in his thought, and woll not be deceived, by false proposicions, that gone amisse from the troth, let hym well examine, and rolle within hymself, the nature and properties of the thyng. And let hym estones examine and rollen his thoughtes, by gode deliberacion, or that he deme. And let hym techen his soule, that it hath by naturell principles, kindliche ihidde within it self, all the trouthe, the which he imagineth to ben in thynges without: and then all the darkenelle of his misknowyng shall seme more evidently to the sight of his understandyng, than the Sonne ne semeth to the sight withoutforthe. For certes, the body bryngyng the weight of foryetyng ne hath not chafed out of your thought all the clerenelle of your knowyng, for certainly, the sede of sothe holdeth and clevech within your corage, and it is awaked and excited by the windes, and by the blastes of doctrine.

For wherefore els demen ye of your owne will the rightes, when ye be asked, but if so were that the nourishyng of reson ne lived iplunged in the depe of your herte, that is to saine, how should men demen, the sothe of any thing that were asked, and if there n'ere a rote of sothfastnesse, that were iplunged and hid in naturell principles, the whiche sothfastnesse lived within the depenesse of the thought? And if so be, that the muse and the doctrine of Plato singeth sothe, all that every wight lerneth, he ne doeth nothyng els then, but recordeth, as menne recorden thynges, that ben foryeten.

Prosa duodecima.

Tum ego, Platoni, inquam, vehementer assentior; nam me horum jam secundò commemoras. Primum quiddam memoriam corporeâ contagione, &c.

THen saied I thus. I accord me gretlie to Plato, for thou recordest and remembreth me these thynges, yet the seconde tyme, that is to saie, first when I left my memorie, by the contrarious conjunc-cion of the bodie with the soule: and estones afterward, when I losse it confounded by the charge, and by the burden of my sorowe, and then saied she thus. If thou loke (q<sup>d</sup> she) first the thynges that thou haste graunted, it ne shall nor ben right ferre, that that thou ne shalt remembren the ilke thing, that thou saidest that thou n'istest not. Bo. What thyng (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. By whiche the governement (q<sup>d</sup> she) that this worlde is governed. Bo. I remember it well (q<sup>d</sup> I) and I confesse well, that I ne wist it naught. But all be it so, that I se now from asarre, what thou purposedste, algates I desire yet to harken it of The more plainly. Phi. Thou ne wendest not (q<sup>d</sup> she) a little here before, that menne should doubte, that this worlde is governed by God. Bo. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) ne yet ne doubte I it not, ne I n'll never wene that it were to dout, as who saith, but I wor wel that God governeth this worlde. And I shall answeren The by what resons I am brought to this. This worlde (q<sup>d</sup> I) of so many divers and contrarious parties ne might never have ben assembled in o forme, but if there were one, that conjoynd so many divers thynges. And the same diversitie of ther natures, that so discorden, that one fro that other must departen, and unjoynen the thynges, that ben conjoynd, if there ne were one that contened, that he hath conjoynd and ibound. Ne the certain order of nature ne shuld not bring forthe so ordeine movynges, by places, by tymes, by doynge, by spaces, by qualities, if there ne were one, that wer aie stedfast dwellyng, that ordained and disposed these diversities of movynges. And thilke thyng, what so ever it be, by whiche that all thynges be imaked and ladde, I clepe hym God, that is a worde that is used to al folkes. Phi. Then saied she: Sirhe thou selest thus these thynges, I trowe that I have little more to doen, that thou mightic of welfulnesse, whole and founde, ne se estones thy contrie. But lette us loken these thynges. that we have purposed here before. Have I not nombred and saied (q<sup>d</sup> she) that suffisaunce is in blisfulnesse. And we have accorded, that God is the ilke same blisfulnesse. Bo. Yes forsothe (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. And that to governe this worlde (q<sup>d</sup> she) ne shall he never have nede of no helpe fro without. For els if he had nede of any help, he ne should not have no full suffisaunce. Bo. Yes thus it mote nedes be (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Then ordeined he by himself alone all thynges (q<sup>d</sup> she). Bo. That maie not be denied (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. And I have shewed that God is the same gode. It remembreth me well (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Then ordeineth he al thynges by thilke gode (q<sup>d</sup> she) sith he which we han accorded to be gode, governeth all thynges by himself. And he is a * key and a steire, by whiche the edifice of this worlde is kept stable, and without corrupyng. Bo. I accord me gretly (q<sup>d</sup> I). And I have apperceved a little here before, that thou wouldest saie thus. All were it so, that it wer by a thynne suspeccion. Phi. I trowe well (q<sup>d</sup> she). For as I trow thou ledest now more ententisly thine eye to loken the very godes. But natheles, the thing that I shall tell The, yet ne sheweth not lasse to token. Bo. What is that (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. So as menne trowe (q<sup>d</sup> she) and that rightfully, that God governeth all thynges, by the † key of his godenes, and all these same thyngs that I have taught The, hasten hem by naturel contencion to come to gode, there maie no man doute, that thei ne ben governed voluntarelic, and that thei ne converten of ther owne gode wille to ther ordeinour, as that thei ben accordyng, and enclinyng to ther governor, and to ther kyng. Bo. It

* This seems to be a mistake. The Latin is, Et hic est veluti quidam Clavus, atque Gubernaculum; not Clavis.

† Here Clavis is again read instead of Clavus.

mote nedes be so (q<sup>d</sup> I) for the relme ne shuld not seme blisfull, if there were a yoke of misdrawynges in divers partes, ne the sayyng of obedient thynges ne should not be then. Phi. Is there nothing (q<sup>d</sup> she) that kepeth his nature, that enforceth hym to gon ayenst God? Bo. No (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. And if that any thyng enforced hym to withstande God, might it availen at last ayen hym, that we have graunted to be almightie, by the right of blisfulnesse? Bo. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) all utterlie it ne might not availe hym. Phi. Then is there nothyng (q<sup>d</sup> she) that either maie, or will withstande to his soveraine gode. Bo. I trowe not (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Then (q<sup>d</sup> she) is thilke the soveraine gode, that all thynges governeth strongly, and ordeineth hem softelye. Bo. Then saied I thus, I delite me (q<sup>d</sup> I) not onelic in th' endes, or in the somme of the resons, that thou haste concluded and proved, but thilke wordes that thou usest, deliten me moche more, so that at laste soles, that sometyme reiden gret thynges, oughten ben ashamed of hem self, that is to sayn, that we soles that reprehenden wickedly the thynges, that touchen Godde's governaunce, we oughten ben ashamed of our self. As I, that saied that God refuseth onely the werkes of men, and ne entermeteth not of it. Phi. Thou haste well herde (q<sup>d</sup> she) the fables of the Poetes, how the Gyautes assaileden heven, with the Goddes: but forsoth the debonaire force of God disposed hem as it was worthie, that is to sayn, destroyed the Gyautes as it was worthie. But wilste thou that we rejoynen together thilke same resons? For peraventure of soche conjuncions maie sterten up some faire sparke of sothe. Bo. Doe (q<sup>d</sup> I) as The list. Phi. Wenest thou (q<sup>d</sup> she) that God ne be almightie? Bo. No man is in doubt of it certes (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. No wight ne doubteth it, if he be in his minde (q<sup>d</sup> she). But he that is almightie, there n'is nothyng that he ne maie. Bo. That is sothe (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Maie God doe evill? (q<sup>d</sup> she). Bo. Naie forsothe (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Than is evill nothyng (q<sup>d</sup> she) sith that he maie doen none evill, that maie doen al thynges. Bo. Scornest thou me (q<sup>d</sup> I) or els plaieest thou, or discevest thou me, that haste so woven with thy reasons the hous of Dædalus so enterlacing, that it is unable to be unlaced, that thou oherwhile entrest there thou ishest, and oherwhile ishest there thou entrest? Ne foldest thou not together by replicacion of wordes a maner wonderfull circle, or environing of the simplicitie divine? For certes, a little here befor, when thou began at blisfulnesse, thou saideest that it is a soverain gode, and that God is the blisfulnesse, for whiche thou yave me as a covenable yeste, that is to sayn, that no wight n'is blisfull, but if he be God also therewith. And saideest eke, that the forme of gode is the substance of God and of blisfulnesse. And saideest that the ilke one is thilke same gode, that is required and desired of al the kinde of thynges. And thou provedest in disputing, that GOD governeth al the thynges of the world, by the governaunce of bountie, and saideest that all thynges wold obein to hym, and saydest that the nature of yvell is nothyng. And these thynges shewdest thou not with no resons taken fro without, but by proves in cercles and homlich knowing. The whiche proves drawn to hem selfe ther faith and ther accorde everiche of hem of other. Phi. Than saied she thus: I ne scorne not, ne plaie, ne disceve The, but I have shewed the thing that is grettest over all thynges, by the yest of God, that we whilom praiden. For this is the forme of divine substance, that is soche, that it ne flydeth not into utterest soveraine thynges, ne receveth not no straunge thynges in him. But right as Parmenides saied in Greke, of thilke divine substance: He saied thus, that thilk divine substance tourneth the world and the movable cercle of thynges, while the ilke divine substance kepeth it self without mowynges, that is to sayne, that he moveth never mo, and yet it moveth al other thynges. But nathelesse, if I have styred reson that be not raken fro without the compasse of the thing, of the whiche we treten, but resons that ben bestowed within compasse: there n'is not why thou shouldest mervaillen, sith thou haste lerned by the sentence of Plato that nedes the wordes mote ben confines to the thynges, of whiche they speken.

Fontem videre lucidum,
Felix, qui potuit gravis, &c.*

BLissed is that man that may sene the clere wel of gode: Blisfull is he that may unbinden him from the boundes of hevy yerth. The Poete of Thrace Orpheus, that whilome had right gret sorowe, for the deth of his wife, after that he had maked and constrained by his wepely songes the wodes movable to renne, and had maked the rivers to stonden still, and had maked the Hartes and Hyndes to joynen dredelesse ther sydes to cruell Lions, to herken his songe, and had maked that the hare was not agast of the hounde, which was plesed by song: So whan the moste ardaund love of hys wife brende the entrals of his breste, ne the songes that hadde overcome all thynges ne myghten not aswage ther lorde Orpheus, he plained hym of the heven goddes, whiche that were cruell to hym, he wente him to the houses of the hell: And he tempered his blandishing songes, by resounding of stringes, and speke and songe in wepinge all that ever he had received and laved out of the noble welles of his mother Caliope the goddesse. And he sang with as moche as he might of wepinge, and with as moche as love, that doubled his sorow, might yeven him and teche him, and commoved the hell, and required and betoughte by swete prayer the lordes of soules in helle of releasing, that is to saye, to yelden him his wife. Cerberus the porter of hell with his thre bedes was caught and all abashed of the newe songe. And the thre goddes, Furies and wengerettes of felonies, that tourmenten and agasten the soules by anoy, woxen sorowful and sory, and teres wepten for pite. Tho was not the hed of Ixion tourmented, by the overthrowinge whele. And Tantalus, that was destroyed by the wodenesse of long thirst, dispised the flodes to drinke. The soule that hight Vultur, that eteth the stomake or the giferne of Tityus is so fullylled of his songe, that it n'ill eten ne tyren no more. At the last the lorde and judge of soules was moved to misericordies, and cried: we ben overcome (q<sup>d</sup> he) yere we to Orpheus his wife to bere hym companie, he hath well ybought her by his songes and his dirces: but we will putten a lawe in thys, and covenant in the yeste, that is to sayn, that till he be out of hel if he loke behinde him, that his wife shall come agayne unto us. But what is he that maye yere a lawe to lovers? love is a greter lawe and stronger to himself than any lawe that men maye yeven. Alas! when Orpheus and his wife were almoste at the termes of the night, that is to sayn, at the laste boundes of hel, Orpheus looked backwarde on Eurydice his wife, and losse her, and was dedde. This fable apertaineth to you all, whosoever desireth or seketh to lode his thought into the soverain daie, daie, that is to saye, to clerenesse of soverain gode. For whosoever be so overcomen, that he fixe his eyen into the pitte of hell, that is to saye, whosoever set his thoughtes in yerthlie thynges, all that ever he hath drawn of the noble gode celestially, he leseth it, when he loketh to the helles, this is to saye, into low thynges of the erthe.

Thus endeth the thirde Boke.

Here foloweth the fourthe Boke.

Prosa prima.

Hæc cum Philosophia, dignitate vultus oris gravitate servatâ, leniter suaviterque cecinisset, tum ego nondum penitus insiti mæroris oblitus, &c.

WHan Philosophie had songen softly and delectably the forsaide things, keping the dignitye of her chere, and the weight of her wordes, I than that ne had al utterlye forieten the wepinge and the mourninge that was sette in min herte, forbrake the entencion of her that entended yet to faine some other thynges.

O (q̄d I) thou that arte gyderesse of very light, the thynges that thou hast saide me hitherto, ben to me so clere and shewing by the divine loking of hem, and by the reasons, that they ne mowen ben overcomen. And thilke thynges, that thou toldest me, all be it so that I had whilom forieten hem, for the sorowe of the wronge that hath be done to me, yet neverthelesse they ne weren not utterly unknownen to me. But this same is namely a right grete cause of my sorowe, so that as the governour of thynges is gode, if that yvels mowen ben by any waies, or elles if that yvels passen without punishinge, the which thyng only how worthy is it to ben wondred upon? Thou confidest it wel thy self certainly. But yet to this thing there is yet another thyng joyned more to be wondred upon. For felonye is Emperesse, and flourereth full of riches, and vertue n'is not al onely without medes, but it is caste downe, and eke fortroden under the fete of felonous folke: and it abieth the turmentes in stede of wicked felons. Of al whiche thynges there is no wight may marvailen y-nough ne complainen, that soch thynges be done in the reigne of God, that all thynges wote, and all thynges maye, and ne will not only but gode thynges. Than saide she thus: Certes (q̄d she) that were a grete marvayle, and an abashing without ende, and well more horrible than all the monsters, if it were as thou wenest, that is to saye, that in the right ordaine house of so moch a father, and an ordainour of meine, that the vesselles that ben foule and vile, shuld ben honoured and heried, and the precious vesselles, that shuld ben honoured and heried, shuld ben defouled and vile. But it is not so, for if the thynges that I have concluded a lytell here before, ben kept whole and unaraced, thou shalt wel know by the auctorite of God, (of the whose reigne I speke) that certes the gode folke be alway mightie, and shrewes ben alway outcaste and feble. Ne the vices be nevermore without pain, ne the vertues ne be not without mede. And that blisfulnes cometh alway to gode folke, and infortune cometh alway to wicked folke.

And thou shalt well knowen many thynges of this kinde, that shulde cese thy playntes, and strengthen The with stedfaste sadnesse. And for thou hast sene the forme of verie blisfulnesse by me, that have whilom shewed it The, and thou hast knowen in whom blisfulnesse is sette; all thing tured, that I trowe be necessary, to put forthe, I shal shewen The the way, that shall bringen The ayen unto thin house, and I shall fyre fethers in thy thought, by which it may arisen in height, so that al tribulacion ydone away thou by my giding and by my pathe, and by my feldes, shalt mowen retourne whole and sounde into thy countrie.

Metrum primum.

Sunt enim pennæ volucres mihi, Quæ celsâ conscendant Poli, Quas sibi cum velox meus induit, &c.

THan for thy swift fethers, that surmounten the height of the heven, whan the swift thought hath clothed it in tho fethers, it dispiseth the hateful erthes, and surmounteth the roundenesse of the gret ayre, and it seeth the clouds behinde his backe, and passeth the heygth of the region of the fire, that enchaufeth by the swift movinge of the firmament, tyl that he aryseth into the houses, that beren the sterres, and joyneth the way with the sonne Phæbus, and felawshipeth the waye of the olde colde Saturnus, and he ymaked a knight of the clere sterre, that is to saye, whan the thought is made Godde's knight, by the seeking of clere trouthe to comen to the very knowledge of God. And thilke soule renneth by the cercle of sterres, in all the places thereas the shynynge nyght is ypainted, that is to saye, the nyght that is cloudlesse. For on nyghtes that be cloudlesse it semeth that the heven were paynted wyth dyvers ymages of sterres. And whan he hath done there y-noughe, he shall forleten the laste heven, and he shal presen and wenden on the backe of the swifte firmamente, and he shall be maked parfite of the wurshipful light of God. There holdeth the lorde of thynges the septre of his might, and attempreth the governementes of the worlde, and the shining judge of thynges stable in hym self governeth the swifte carte or waine, that is to saye, the circular movinge of the sonne. And if thy way ledeth The ayen, so that thou be brought thiðer, than wylt thou saye, that is the countrie that thou requirest, of which thou ne haddest no mynde: But nowe it remembreth me well, here was I borne, here woll I fasten my degre, here woll I dwell. But if The lyketh than to loken on the derknesse of the yerthe, that thou hast forleten, than shalt thou sene, that these felonous tyrantes, that the wretched peple dredeth now, shullen be exiled from thilke faire countrie.

Prosa secunda.

Tum ego papæ! inquam, ut magna promittis! nec dubito, quin possis efficere; tu modò quem excitaveris, ne moreris, &c.

THan saide I thus. O wonder me that thou behest me so grete thynges! Ne I ne doute not that thou ne mayste well perfourme that thou behest: But I pray The this that thou ne tarie not, to tell tell me thylke thynges, that thou haste moved. Phi. First (q<sup>d</sup> she) thou muste nedes knowe, that gode folke ben alwaye stronge and myghtye, and the shrewes ben feble and deserte, and naked of all strengthes. And of these thynges certes everiche of hem is declared and shewed by other. For as gode and yvell ben two contraries, if so be that gode be stedfaste, than sheweth the febleste of yvil al openly. And if thou know clerely the freelnesse of yvell, the stedfastnesse of gode is knowen. But for as moche as the faithe of my sentence shall be the more ferme and haboundant, I wol gone by that one waye and by that other, and I woll confirme the thynges that ben purposed now on this syde, and now on that side. Two thynges ther ben, in whiche the effeete of al the dedes of mankind standeth, that is to sayne, wyll and power: and if that one of these two faileth, there n'is nothyng that maye be done. For if that wil lacketh, there n'is no wight that undertaketh to do that he wol not done: And yf power faileth, the wyll n'ys but ydle, and stante for naught. And there-of cometh it, that if thou se a wight that wolde gotten that he may not gotten, thou mayst not doute that power ne faileth him to haven that he wolde. Bo. This is open and clere (q<sup>d</sup> I) ne it ne may not ben denyed in no maner. Phi. And yf thou se a wight (q<sup>d</sup> she) that hath done that he would done, thou n'ylt not dout, that he ne hath had power to done it. Bo. No (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. And in that that every wight may, in that men holden hem mighty to done a thyng, in so moch as a man is myghty to done a thyng, in so moch men holde him mighty: and in that that he ne may, in that men demen him to be feble. Bo. I confesse it wel (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Remembre The (q<sup>d</sup> she) that I have gathred and shewed by the forsaide refons, that all the entencion of the wyl of mankind, whiche that is ladde by dyvers studies, hasteth to comen to blisfulnesse. Bo. I remembreth me well (q<sup>d</sup> I) that it hath bene shewed. Phi. And recorderth The naughte than (q<sup>d</sup> she) that blisfulnesse is thilke same gode that men requiren, so that whan blisfulnesse is required of al, gode is required of all? Bo. It recorderth menat (q<sup>d</sup> I). For I have it alwaye in my memorie fixyd. Phi. All folke than (q<sup>d</sup> she) gode and eke badde enforcen hem without difference of entencion to comen to gode. Bo. This is very consequence (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. And certaine is (q<sup>d</sup> she) that by getting of gode ben men makid gode. Bo. That is certaine (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Than gotten gode men that they desiren. Bo. So it semeth (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. But wicked folke (q<sup>d</sup> she) if they gotten the gode that they desiren, they ne mowen not be wicked. Bo. So it is (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Than so as that one and that other (q<sup>d</sup> she) desiren the gode, and the gode folke gotten the gode, and not the wicked folke, than it is no doute that the gode folke ne be myghtye, and wicked folke be feble. Bo. Who so that ever douteth of this, he ne may not consider the nature of thynges, ne the consequence of refons. Phi. And over this (q<sup>d</sup> she) if that there ben two thynges that have one same purpose by kynde, and that one of hem pursueth and perfourmeth that same thing by naturel office, and that other ne may not done thilke office naturel, but foloweth by other maner, than is covenable to nature, him that accomplisheth his purpose kindly, and yet he ne accomplisheth not his owne purpose: whether of these two demest thou for more myghty? Bo. If that I conjecete (q<sup>d</sup> I) that thou woldest say, algates I desire yet to herken it more plainly of The. Phi. Thou n'ylt not than denye (q<sup>d</sup> she) that the movement of goynge n'is in men by kynde. Bo. No forsothe (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Ne thou douteft not (q<sup>d</sup> she) that thilke naturel office of goynge ne be the office of fere. Bo. I ne doute it not (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Than (q<sup>d</sup> she) yf that a wyght be mighty to move and gothe upon his fete, and another to whom thilke naturel office of fete lacketh, enforceth hym to go crepyng on his hande, whiche of these two oughte to be holden the more mighty by ryght. Bo. Knytte forthe (q<sup>d</sup> I) the remenaunte. Phi. For no wyght ne douteth, that he that maye gon by naturel office of fete, ne be more myghtye thanne he that ne maye not. But the soverayne gode (q<sup>d</sup> she) that it evenlylke purposed to the gode and to the badde. The gode folke seken it by naturel office of vertues, and shrewes enforcen hem to gotten it by dyverse covetises of erthly thynges, whiche that n'is no naturel office to gotten thilke soverain gode. Trowest thou that it be any other wise? Bo. Nay (q<sup>d</sup> I). For the consequence is open, and shewing of thynges that I have graunted, that nedes gode folke moten ben myghtye, and shrewes moten bene feble and unmyghty. Phi. Thou rennest aryght before me (q<sup>d</sup> she) and this is the judgemente, that is to sayne, I judge of right, as these leches ben wont to hopen of sicke folke, whan they apperceven, that nature is redressed and withstandeth to the maladye. But for I se The nowe al redy to the withstanding, I shal shew The more thilk and continuel refons. For loke how gretly sheweth the feblenesse and infirmyte of wicked folke, that ne mowen not comen to that ther naturel entencion ledeth hem: And yet almost thylke naturel entencion constraineth hem. And what were to demen than of shrewes, yf thilke naturel helpe had forleten hem, the whiche naturel helpe of entencion gothe alway before hem, and is so grete, that unneeth it may be overcomen? Consider than how grete defaute of power, and how grete febleste there is in wicked felonous folke, as who saith, the greter thing that is coveted, and the desire not accomplished, of the lasse might is he that coveteth it, and may not acomplishe. And forthy philosophie saith thus by soverain gode. Ne shrewes ne requiren not light medes ne vaine games, whiche they ne maye not folowen ne holden, but they failen of thilke somme of the height of thyngs, that is to sayne, soverain gode. Ne these wretches ne comen not to th' effeete of soveraine gode, the whiche they enforcen hem onely to gotten by nightes and by dayes, in gettyng of which gode the strength of gode folke is ful wel yfene. For right as thou mightest demen him mighty of going, that goeth on his fete till he myght comen to thylke place, fro the whiche place there ne lay no way further to be gone: right so must thou nedes demen him for right myghty, whiche that getteth and atteineth to the ende of all thynges, whyche that bene to desiren, beyonde the which ende there n'is nothyng to desire. Of the whiche power of gode folke men maye conclude, that wicked men semen to be baraine and naked of al strength. For why forleten they vertues and folowen vices, n'is it not for that they ne knowen not the godes? But what thinge is more feble and more caytife, than is the blindnesse of ignorance? or ellis they knowen wel, whiche thynges they oughten folowen, but lechery and covetise overthroweth hem misturned. And certes so doth distemperaunce to feble men, that mowe not wrafflen ayen these vices. Ne know they not wel that they forleten the gode wilfully, and tournen hem wilfully to vices. And in this wise they ne forleten not only to be myghty, but they forleten all utterly in any wyse for to ben. For they that forleten the comune fine of al thynges that ben, they forleten also therewithall for to bene. And peraventure it shulde semen to some folke, that this were a mervayle to sayne, that shrewes, which that contenen the more partes of men, ne ben not, ne have no being. But natheless

lette it is so, and thus stant this thinge. For they that be shrewes, I deny not, but that thei be shrewes, but I deny simplye and plainly that they ne be not, ne have no beinge. For righte as thou mightest sayne of the caraine of a man, that it were a ded man: so graunt I wel forsothe, that vicious folke ben wicked, but I ne may not absolutely and simply graunt that they ben. For thilke thing that withholdeth ordre, and kepeth nature, thilke thinge is and hath beinge. But what thyng faileth that, that is to saye, he that forleteth naturel ordre, he forleteth thilke beinge that is set in his nature. But thou wolt saine, the shrewes mowen. Certes that ne denie I not: but certes ther power ne discendeth not of strength, but of feblesse, for they mowen done wickednesse, the whiche they ne might not, if they mighten dwellen in the forme, and in the doynge of gode peple. And thilke power sheweth evidently, that they mowen righte naught. For so as I have gathered and proved a litel here before, that yvel is not, and so as shrewes may onely but shrewednes, this conclusion is al clere, that shrewes ne mowen right naught, ne have no power. And for as moche as thou understondest whiche is the strength of this power, I have definished a lytel here before, that no thing n'is so mighty as souveraine gode. Bo. That is sothe (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. And thilke same souveraine gode maye done none yvel. Bo. Certes no (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Is there any wight than (q<sup>d</sup> she) that weneth that men mowen done al thinges. Bo. No man (q<sup>d</sup> I) but if he be out of his wit. Phi. But certes shrewes mowen don yvels (q<sup>d</sup> she). Bo. Ye wolde God (q<sup>d</sup> I) that they ne mighten done none. Phi. Than (q<sup>d</sup> she) so as he that is mightie to done onelye gode thinges, he maie done all thynges, and they that ben mighty to done yvell thinges, ne mowen not all thynges. Than is it open thinge and manifeste, that they that mowen don yvel ben of litle power. And yet to prove this conclusion there helpeth me this, that I have shewed here before, that al power is to be nombred amonge thinges that men oughten require. And I have shewed that all thinges that oughten ben desired be referred to God, right as to a maner height of ther nature: but for to mowen done yvell and felonie, ne may not ben referred to God. Than is not yvell of the nombre of thynges, that oughten to ben desired and required. Than is it open and clere that the power ne the movynge of shrewes n'is no power. And of all these thinges it sheweth wel that the gode folk ben certainly mighty, and the shrewes doutlesse unmighty. And it is clere and open that thilke sentence of Plato is very and sothe, that saithe, that onely wisemen may don that they desiren, and shrewes mowen haunten that hem liketh, but that they desiren, that is to saine, to come to souveraine gode, they ne have no power to accomplishe that. For shrewes done what hem lyst, whan by tho thinges in which they deliten, they wenen to attaine to thilke gode that they desyren, but they ne getten ne attaine not therto, for vices ne comen not to blisfulnesse.

Metrum secundum.

Quos vides sedere celfo Solii culmine reges, Purpurâ claros nitente, &c.

WHoso that the coverture, of ther vaine a-paraylles myght stripen of these proude kynges, that thou seest sitten an high in ther chaires, glittering in shyninge purpure, environned with sorrowfull armures, manaslynge with cruell mouth, blowinge by wodenesse of herte, he shulde sene that thilke lordes beren within ther corages full straite chaines: for lechery tourmenteth hem on that one side with gredy venimes and troublable ire, that arraileth in hem the flode of troublings, tourmenteth on that other side ther thought, or sorow halt hem wery and ycaught, or sliding and disceving hope tourmenteth hem. And therefore sithe thou seest one hed, that is to saine, one tiraunte, beren so manye tirannyes, than ne doth thilke tyraunt not that he desyreth, sythe he is caste downe wyth so manye wycked lordes, that is to saine, so many vices that have so wickedly lordships over him.

Prosa tertia.

SEest thou not than, in howe grete sithe these shrewes ben ywrapped, and with whiche clerenesse these gode folke shinen? In this sheweth it well that to gode folke ne lacketh never mo ther medes, ne shrewes lacken never more tourmentes. For of al thinges that be done, thilke thinge for whiche any thinge is done, it semeth as by right, that thilke thinge be the mede of that, as thus: If a man renneth in the stady or in the forlonge for the crown, than lieth the mede in the crowne for which he renneth. And I have shewed that blisfulnesse is thilke same gode, for whiche that all thynges ben done. Than is thilke same gode purposed to the werkes of mankinde, right as a commune mede, whiche mede ne maye not be discevered from gode folke: For no wight as by right, from thenstorth that him lacketh godenesse, ne shall be cleped gode, for which thing folke of gode maners ther medes ne forsaken hem never mo. For albeit so that shrewes waxen as wode as hem liste against gode folke, yet neverthelesse the crowne of wise men ne shall not fallen ne faden fro foraine shrewdnesse, ne benimmen not fro the courage of gode people ther propre honour. But yf anie wight rejoyced him of godenesse, that he had taken fro without, as who saith, if a man had his godenesse of any other man than of him selfe, certes he that yave hym thylke godenesse, or elles some other wyght might bynome it him. But for as moche as to every wight his propre bounte yeveth him his mede, than at erste shal he failen of mede, whan he forleteth to be gode. And at the laste, so as all medes ben required, for men wenen that they be gode, who is he that n'old deme, that he that is ryght myghtye of gode, were partlesse of mede? And of what mede shall he be reguerdoned? Certes of ryght fayre mede, and right gret, aboven all medes. Remembre The of thilke noble corallarie that I yave The a lytel here before, and gather it together in this maner. So as God him selfe is blisfulnesse, than is it clere and certain, that al gode peple ben maked blisful, for they ben gode, and thilke peple that ben blisful, it accordeth and is convenable to be Goddes. Than is the mede of gode peple soch, that no day ne shal empairen it, ne no wickednesse shall drinken it, ne power of no wight ne shal not amenuse it, that is to saine, that ben maked Goddes. And sithe it is thus, that gode men ne failen nevermore of ther mede, certes no man ne may doute of the undepartable paine paine of shrewes, that is to saie, that the paine of shrewes departeth not from 'hemselfe nevermo. For so as gode and yvel, and paine and medes be contrarie, it mote nedes be, that ryght as we se betiden in guerdone of gode, that also mote the paine of the yvel answer by the contrary partes to shrewes. Nowe than so as bountie and prowesse ben mede to gode folke, also is shrewdnesse it selfe tourmente to shrewes. Than whosoever is entetched and defouled with paine, he ne douteth not, that he is entetched and defouled with yvel. Yf shrewes than wollen praesen 'hemselfe, may it semen to 'hem that they ben wythouten partie of tourment, sithe they ben soch that the uttrest wickednesse, that is to saie, wicked thewes, whiche is the uttrest and worst kinde of shrewdnesse, hede fouleth, ne entetcheth not 'hem only, but enfecteth and envenimeth gretly. And also loke on shrewes, that ben the contrarie partie of gode men, howe grete paine felowshipeth and fouleth 'hem! for thou hast lerned a litel here before, that all thing that is and hath beinge, is one, and thilke same one is gode: than is this the consequence, that it semeth well, that al thing that is and hath beyng, is gode, that is to saie, as who saithe that beinge, unite and godenesse is al one. And in this maner it foloweth than, that all thinge that faileth to be gode, it stinteth for to be and for to have any maner being: wherefore it is that shrewes stinten for to be that they weren. But thilke other forme of mankind, that is to saie, the fourme of the bodye without, sheweth that these shrewes weren whilom men, wherefore whan they bene perverted and touned into malice, certes than they have forlorne the nature of mankind: But so as onelie bountie and prowesse maye enhaunsen everie man over men: than mote it nedes be that shrewes which that shrewdnesse hath caste out of the condicion of mankind, bene put under the merite and deserte of men. Than betideth it, that if thou seeste a wight whiche that is transfourmed into vices, thou maicst not wene that he be a man; for if he be ardaunte in avarice, and that he be a ratenour by violence of forain richesse, thou shalte saie that he is like a wolfe; and if he be felonous and withouten reste, and exercise his tonge to chidinges, thou shalte lyken him to the hound; and if he be a privie awaytour hydde, and rejoyseth him to ravish by wiles, thou shalte saie hym lyke to the foxe whelpes; and if he be distempred and quaked for ire, men shall wenen that he bereth the corage of a lion; and if he be dredful and flying and dredeth thinges, whiche that ne oughten not to be dredde, men shal holde him lyke to the hart; and if he be slowe and astonyed and lache, men shall holde him lyke to an asse; and yf he be lyghte and unstedfaste of corage, and chaungeth aye his studies, men shal holde him like to the birdes; and yf he be plounged in foule and unclene luxuries, he is withholden in the foule delyces of the foule sowe; than foloweth it, that he that forletteth bounte and prowesse, he forletteth to be a man, sithe he ne maye not passen in the condicion of God, he is turned into a beste.

Metrum tertium.

*Vela Neritii ducis, Et vagas pelago rates,
Eurus appulit insulae,
Pulchra quā residens Dea
Solis edita semine, &c.*

Eurus the wind arived the sailes of Ulysses duke of the countre of Narice, and his wandringe shyppes by the Se into the yle there as Circe the faire goddesse, doughter of the sunne dwelleth, that medleth to her newe gesses drinkes that ben touch- ed and maked with enchauntementes. And after that hir hande mighty over the herbes had chaun- ged hir gesses into divers maners, that one of 'hem is covered his face with forme of a Bore, that other is chaunged into a Lion, of the coun- tre of Marmorike, and his nailes and his tethē wexen. That other of 'hem is newlyche chaun- ged into a wolfe, and howlyth whan he wolde wepe, that other goth debonairly in the house as a Tygre of Inde. But al be it so that the god- hed of Mercury, that is cleped that birde of Ar- cadie, hath had mercy of the duke Ulysses, byseged wyth dyverse yvelles, and hath unbounden hym fro the pestilence of hys hostelle, algates the rowers and the mariners hadden by this ydrawen into ther mouthes, and dronken the wicked drinkes. They that weren woxen swine, hadden by this ychaunged ther mete of bred, for to eten akorne of Okes. None ther limmes ne dwelleth with 'hem whole, but they have lost the voyce and the body, only ther thought dwelleth with 'hem stable, that wepeth and bywail- eth the monstrous chaunging that they suffer. O over light hande, as who saith, feble and light is the hand of Circe the enchaunteresse, that chaungeth the bodies of folke into bestes, to regarde and to com- paryson of mutacion, that is maked by vices, ne the herbes of Circe ne be not myghty: for all be it so that they may chaungen the limmes of the body, al- gate yet they may not chaunge the hertes; for wyth- yn is yhyd the strength and the vigoure of men in the secretour of ther hertes, that is to saie, the strength of reson; but thilke venims of vices to drawen a man to 'hem more mightily than the venime of Circe, for vices ben so cruell that they persen and thorowepassen the courage within, and thoughe they ne anoye not the body, yet vices woden to destroyen men by wounde of thought.

Prosa quarta.

Tum ego, fateor, inquam, nec injuriā dici video, vitiosos; tametsi humani corporis spe-ciem servent, &c.

Than saide I thus: I confesse and am aknowe it (q<sup>d</sup> I) ne I ne se not but that men may say, as by right, that shrewes ben chaunged into bestes, by the qualite of ther soules, all be it so that they kepen yet the forme of the bodye of mankynde: but I wolde not of shrewes, of whiche the thought cruel and wode, wodeth alwaye to the distruccion of gode men, that it wer lesul to 'hem to done that.

Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) ne it is not lesul to 'hem, as I shall well shewe The in convenable place: but nathe- lesse if so were that thilke, that men wene bene lesul to shrewes, were bynommed 'hem, so that they ne might not anoyen or don harme to gode men, certes a grete partie of the paine to shrewes shulde bene alleged and releved. For all be it so that it ne seme credible thyng peraventure to some folke, yet it mote nedes be that the shrewes ben more wretches and sely, whan they maye full done and parfourme that they coveten, than yf they might not accomplishe that they coveten. For yf so be that it be wretched- nesse to wilnen to done yvel, than is it more wretch- ednesse to mowen done yvell, without whiche mowynge the wretched wyl shulde languishe without effecte. Than sithe every of these thinges hath his wretchyd- nesse, ness, that is to saine, wil to done yvel, and mowinge to done yvel, it mote nedes be that the shrewes be constrained by ther unselynes, that wolen and mowen, and parformen felonies and shreudnesses. Bo. I accorde me (q<sup>d</sup> I) but I desyre gretly, that shrewes losen sone thylke unselynes, that is to sayne, that shrewes weren dispoiled of mowyng to done yvell.

Phi. So shullen they (q<sup>d</sup> she) soner paraventure than thou woldest, or soner than they hem selfe wene: for there n'ys nothinge so late in so shorte bondes of this life, that is long to abide, namely to a courage immortell. Of whiche shrewes the gret hope and the hye compassinges of shreudness, is oft destroyed by a sodein ende or they be war. And that thing establissheth to shrewes the ende of ther shrewdnes; for yf that shrewdnes maketh wretches, than must he nedes be most wretch, that longest is a shrewe, the whiche wicked shrewes wold I demin aldermoste caritifes and unsely, yf ther shrewdnes ne wer finished at lest waye by utterest deth: for yf I have concluded soth of the unselynes of shrewdnes, than sheweth it plainly, that thilke wretchednes is withouten ende, the which is certaine to be pardurable. Bo. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) this conclusion is harde and wonderful to graunte. But I knowe well that it accordeth moche to thynges that I have graunted here beforne. Phi. Thou hast (q<sup>d</sup> she) right estimation of this. But whosoever wene that it be a harde thing, to accorde him to a conclusion, it is right that he shewe that some of the premisses ben false, or els he mote shewe that the collacion of propositions n'is not spedeful to a necessary conclusion. And yf it ne be not so, but that the premisses ben igraunted, there n'is not why he shulde blame that argument. For this thing that I shal tel The now ne shall not seme lasse wonderfull, but of the things that bene taken also it is necessary, as who saith, it foloweth of that which that is purposed beforne. Bo. What is that (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) that is, that these wicked shrewes be more blisfull, or els lasse wretches that abien the tourmentes, that they have deserved, than if no paine of justice ne chastised hem. Ne this ne say I nor now, for that any man myght thynke that the maners of shrewes bene coriged and chastised by vengeance, and that they be brought to the right way by the drede of tourmente, ne for that they yeven to other folkes ensample to flyen fro vices.

But I understand yet in another maner, that shrewes ben more unsely whan they ne be not punished, all be it so that there ne be had no reson or lawe of correccion, ne none ensample of lokyng. Bo. And what maner shall that ben (q<sup>d</sup> I) other than hath be tolde here beforne? Phi. Have we not graunted than (q<sup>d</sup> she) that gode folke ben blyssfull, and shrewes ben wretches? Bo. Yes (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Than (q<sup>d</sup> she) if that anye gode wer added to the wretchednes of any wight n'ys he not more welful, than he that ne hath no medling of gode in his solitary wretchednes? Bo. So semeth it (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. And what sayest thou than (q<sup>d</sup> she) of thilke wretche that lacketh all godes, so that no gode n'is medled in his wretchednes, and yet over all hys wickednesse, for whiche he is a wretche, that there be yet another yvell anexed and knit to him; shal not men demen him more unsely, than thilke wretche, of whiche the unselynes is releved by the participacion of some gode? Bo. Why should he not (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Than certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) han shrewes whan thei ben punished somewhat of gode annexed to ther shrewdenesse, that is to saine, the same pain that they suffren, which that is gode, by the reson of Justice. And whan thilke same shrewes escapen without tourment, than have they somewhat more of yvell, yet over the wickednesse that they han doen, that is to saine, default of paines, which default of paine thou hast graunted is yvel, for the deserte of felony. Bo. I ne may not denie it (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Moche more than (q<sup>d</sup> she) ben shrewes unsely whan they bene wrongfullye delivered fro paine, than whan they ben punished by rightfull vengeance. But this is open thyng and clere, that it is right that shrewes ben punyshed, and it is wickednesse, and wronge that they escapen unpunished. Bo. Who might denye it (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. But (q<sup>d</sup> she) may any man deny that all that is right ne is gode and also the contrarie, that all that is wrong is wicked? Bo. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) these thynges ben clere ynoughe, and that we have concluded a litell here beforne. But I pray The that thou tell me yf thou accordest to letten no tourmente to the soules, after that the body is ended by the deth, that is to saine, understandest thou aught, that soules have anye tourment after the deth of the body? Phi. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) yea, and that right grete; of whyche soules (q<sup>d</sup> she) I trowe that some ben tourmented by asprenesse of paine, and some soules I trowe ben excrysed by a purgyng mekenesse, but my counsaile n'ys nat to determine of this paine. But I have travailed and tolde yet hi<sup>chert</sup>, for thou shuldest know that the mowyng of shrewes, whiche mowing The semeth to be unworthy, n'is no mowyng, and eke of shrewes, of whyche thou playnedest that they ne weren not punished, that thou woldest se that they ne weren never mo withouten the tourmentes of ther wyckednesse. And of the lycence of the mowing to doen yvell, that thou praidest that it mighte sone be ended, and that thou woldest saine lerne that it ne shulde not longe endure. And that shrewes ben more unsely yf they were of lenger duringe, and moste unsely yf they weren perdurable. And after this I have shewed The that more unsely ben shrewes, whan they escapen without ther ryghtful paine, than whan they ben punished by rightfull vengeance. And of this sentence foloweth it, that than ben shrewes constrained at the last with most grevous tourment, whan men wene that they ne be not punished. Bo. Whan I consider thy resons (q<sup>d</sup> I) I ne trowe nat that men saine any thyng more verely. And yf I tourne ayen to the studies of men, who is he to whome it shulde seme, that he ne should nat onely leven these thynges, but eke gladly herken hem? Phi. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) so it is, but men maye nat, for they have their eyen so wont to the derkenesse of erthely thynges, that they ne may nat lyfte hem up to the lyght of clere sothfastenesse. But they ben lyke to birdes, of whiche the night lyghtneth ther lokynges, and the daye blindeth hem. For whan men loken not the ordre of thynges, but ther lustes and talentes, they wene that either the leve or the mowyng to doen wickednesse, or els the scapyng without payne, be welefull. But consyder the judgement of the perdurable law, for if thou confirme thy courage to the beste thynges, thou ne hast no nede of no judge, to yeven The price or mede, for thou hast joyned thy self to the moste excellent thynges. And if thou have enclined thy studies to the wicked thynges, ne seke no foraine wrckerie out of thy self, for thou thy self hast thrifte thy self into wicked thynges; right as thou mightest loken by divers tymes, the soule yerth and the heven, and that all other thynges flinten fro without, so that thou were in neither, ne se nothyng more, then should it seme to The, as by onely reson of lokyng, that thou were now in the Sterres, and now in the yerth; but the peple loketh not on these thynges: What then? shall we then approche us to hem that I have shewed, that ben like to besles? And what woldest thou

faine of this, if that a manne had all forlorne his sighte, and had foryeten that he ever sawe, and wened that nothyng failed hym of perfeccion of mankind? Now we which mighten seen the same thynges, would we not faine, that he were blinde? ne also ne accordeth not the peple to that I shall faine, the whiche thyng is susteined by as stronge foundementes of reson, that is to faine, that more unsele ben thei, that doen wronges to other folke, then thei that the wronge suffren. Bo. I would heren thilke same resons (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Deniest thou (q<sup>d</sup> she) that all shrewes ne ben worthie to have tourment? Bo. Nay (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. But (q<sup>d</sup> she) I am certain by many resons, that shrewes ben unsele. Bo. It accordeth (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Then ne doubteth thou not (q<sup>d</sup> she) that thilke folke, that ben worthie of tourmente, that thei ne be wretches. Bo. It accordeth well (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. If thou were then set a Judge, or a knower of thynges, whither trowest thou that men should tourmenten him, that hath doen wronge, or els him that suffered the wrong? Bo. I doute not (q<sup>d</sup> I) that I n'olde doe sufficient satisfaccion to hem that have suffred wrong, by the sorowe of hem that have doen wrong. Phi. Then semeth it (q<sup>d</sup> she) that the doer of wronge is more wretch, then he that suffred wrong. Bo. That foloweth wel (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Then (q<sup>d</sup> she) by these causes, and by other causes, that ben enforced by the same rote, hith or synne, by the propre nature of it, maketh men wretches, and it sheweth well, that the wronges that men doen, n'is not the wretchednesse, of him that receveth the wrong, but the wretchednesse of him that doeth the wrong. But certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) these orators or advocates doen al the contrary, for thei enforcen hem to commove the Judges to have pitie of hem, that doen the grevaunces and the wronges, the whiche shrewes, it wer a more convenable thyng, that the accusours or advocates, not wroth, but pitieous and debonaire, ledden tho shrewes that have doen wronges, to the judgement, right as men leden sicke folke to the Leche, for that thei shoulde seken out the maladies of synne by tourment. And by this covenante, either the entent of advocates should cessen in all, or els if th' office of the advocates would better profiten to menne, it should be tourned into the habite of accusacion, that is to faine, thei shoulde accuse shrewes, and not excusen hem. And eke the shrewes hemself, if it were lesfull to hem to seen at any cliste the vertue that thei have forletten, and sawen that thei should putten adoun the filthes of ther vices, by the tourmentes of paines, thei ne oughten not, right for that recompensacion, for to getten hem bountrie and prowesse, whiche that thei have losse, demen and hold that the ilke paines weren tourmentes to hem, and eke thei woulde refuse the attendaunce of ther advocates, and taken hemself to ther Judges, and to ther accusours; for the whiche it betideth, that as to the wise folkes, there n'is no place iletten to hate, that is to faine, that hate ne hath no place emonge wisemen. For no wight n'ill haten gode men, but if he were overmoche a sole, and for to haten shrewes, it n'is no reson; for right as languishyng is maladie of bodie, right so ben vices and sinne malady of courage. And so as we ne deme not that thei, whiche that ben sicke of ther bodie, ben worthie to ben hated, but rather worthie of pitie, well more worthie not to ben hated, but for to ben had in pitie ben thei, of whiche the thoughtes ben constrained by felonous wickednesse, that is more cruell, then any languishyng of bodie.

WHat delicteth you to exciten so grete moving of Hatredes, and to hasten and busien the fatali disposicion of your deth, with your propre handes, that is to faine, by batailles or conteke? For if ye asken the deth, it hasteth hym of his owne wille, ne deth ne tarieth not his swifte horse. And the menne that the Serpentes, and the Lion, and the Tigre, and the Bere, and the Bore, seken to sleen with their rathe, yet thilke same menne seken to sleen everich of hem other with swerde. Lo! for ther maners ben divers and discordaunt, thei moven unrightfull hostes, and cruell batailles, and wilnen to perishe by enterchaungyng of dartes, but the reson of crueltie n'is not inough rightfull. Wilt thou then yelden a convenable guerdon to the desertes of men? Love rightfully gode folkes, and have pitie on shrewes.

Hinc ego video inquam, quæ sit vel felicitas vel miseria in ipsis proborum a:que improfortunâ populari, &c.

THIS I se (q<sup>d</sup> I) either what blisfulnesse, or els what unseleines is establisshed in the desertes of gode menne, and of shrewes.

But in this ilke fortune of the peple I se somewhat of gode, and somewhat of evill. For no wiseman had not lever be exiled, pore, and nedie, and namelesse, then for to dwellen in his Cite, and flouren of richesse, and be redoutable of honoure, and strong of power. For in this wise more clerely and witnessfully is the office of wise menne tractid, when the blisfulnesse of power, and governours, is as it were shad emonges the peple, that be neighbors and subiectes, sith that namely prison, lawe, and these other tourmentes of lawfull paines, be rather owed to felonous Citezeins: for the whiche felonous citezeins the paines be establisshed, more then for gode peple.

Bo. Then I marvaile grete (q<sup>d</sup> I) why that the things be so miscinterchaunged, that tourmentes of felonies pressen and confounden gode peple, and shrewes ravishen medes of vertue, and ben in honours, and grete estates. And I desire eke for to weten of The, what semeth The to be the reson of this so wrongfull a conclusion. For I would wonder wel the lasse, if that I trowed that all thynges wer medled with fortunous hap. But now crepeth and encreseth myne astonyinges, God governour of thyngs, that so as GOD yeveth oft times to gode menne godes and mirthes, and to shrewes, evil and aspre thynges: And yeveth ayen to gode folk hardnesse, and to shrewes he graunteth hem ther wille, and that thei desiren: What difference maie there be betwene that that God doeth, and happe of fortune, if menne knowe not the cause why it is?

Phi.

Phi. Ne it is no marveile (qð she) though that men wenen, that there be somewhat folishe and confuse, when the reson of the order is unknowen: but although that thou ne knowe not the cause of so grete a disposicion, nathelesse, for as moche as God the gode governour attempreth and governeth the worlde, ne doubt The not, but all thynges ben doen aright.

WHoso that knowe not the sterres Arcture, tourned to the soveraine centre or point, that is to faine, tourned nigh to the Sovraigne Pole of the firmamente, and wote not why the sterre Bootes passeth, or gathereth his waines; and drencheth his late flambes in the Sc, and why that Bootes the Sterre unfoldeth his overswifte arisinges, then shall he wondren of the Lawe of the high aire. And eke, if that he ne knowe not why that the hornes of the full Mone waxen pale and infecte by the boundes of the darke night, and how the Mone darke and confuse discovereth the Sterres, that she had covered by her clere visage.

The common erreure moveth folkes, and maketh werie ther basins of Brasse by thilke strokes, that is to saie, that there is a maner peple, that hight Corybantes, that wenen, that when the Mone is in the Eclipse, that it be enchaunted, and therefore for to rescue the Mone, thei beten ther basins with the ilke strokes. Ne no man ne wondreth when the blastes of the winde Corus beten the strondes of the Sc by quakyng flodes. Ne no man ne wondreth, when the weight of the Snowe, harded by the cold, is resolved by the brennyng hete of Phœbus the Sonne, for here seen menne redily the causes. But the causes ihidde, that is to sain in heaven, troublen the brestes of men. The movable peple is astonied of all thynges, that comen felde and sodainlie in our age, but the trouble error of our ignoraunce departeth fro us, so that if thei wisten the cause, why that soche thynges betiden, certes thei shoulde cese to seme wonders.

Ita est inquam. Sed cum tui muneris sit latentium rerum causas evolvere, velatasque caligine explicare rationes: quæso uti hinc decernas, &c.

THus it is (qð I) but so as thou haste yeven or behight me, to unwrappe the hidde causes of thynges, and to discover me the resons covered with darknesse, I praie The, that thou devise and judge me of this matter, and that thou do me to understand it, for this miracle of this wonder, troubleth me right gretly. And then she a little what smiling said. Thou clepest me (qð she) to tell that is grettest of all thynges, that mowen ben asked, and to the which question unneth there is aught inough to laven it, as who saith, unneth is there any thyng to answere perfitlie to thy question; for the matter of it is soche, that when o doubt is determined and cutte awaie, there waxen other doubtres without number, right as the heddes of Hydra the Serpente waxen, the whiche Serpente Hercules slough: ne there ne were no manere, ne none ende, but if a wight constrained the doubtres, by a right lively and quicke fire of thought, that is to faine, by vigour and strength of witte. For in this matter, men wenen wonte to maken questions, of the simplicite of the purveighaunce of GOD, and of the order of Destinie, and of sodaine happe, and of knowing of predestinacion divine, and of the libertie of free-will, the whiche thynges, thou thy self appercevedest wel, of what weight thei ben. But for as moche as the knowynges of these thynges is a maner porcion of medicine to The, all be it so, that I have little tyme to doen it; yet neverthelesse, I would enforcen me to shewen somewhat of it. But although the nourishinges of dite of Musike deliteth The, thou muste sufferen and forberen a little of the ilke delite, while that I weve to The resons knitte by ordre.

Bo. As it liketh to The (qð I) so doe.

Phi. Tho spake she righte as by another beginnyng, and saied right thus. The engendering of all thynges (qð she) and all the progressions of movable Nature, and all that moveth in any maner, taketh his causes, his order, and his formes, of the stablenesse of Divine thought: And the ilke Divine thought, that is sette, and putte in the Toure, that is to faine, in the height of the simplicite of GOD, stablisth many maner gises to the thynges that ben to doen, the whiche maner, when that menne loken it, in the pure clemesse of the Divine intelligence, is cleped purveiaunce.

But when the ilke maner is referred by menne to thynges that it moveth or disponeth, then of olde menne it was cleped Destinie, the whiche thynges, if that any wight loketh well in his thought, the strengthe of that one, and of that other, he shall lightlie mowe fene, that these two thynges ben divers. For purveiaunce is the ilke Divine reson, that is establisshed in the Sovraigne Prince of thynges, the which purveiaunce disponeth all thynges. But certes, Destinie is the disposicion and the ordinaunce, cleaving to movable thynges, by the whiche disposicion the purveiaunce knitteth al thynges in ther order: For purveiaunce embraseth all thynges to hepe, although thei be divers, and although thei be infinite, but destinie certaine departeth and ordeineth all thynges singulerly, and divideth in moving, in places, in formes, and in tymes, as thus: Let the unfolding of temporell ordinaunce, assembled and oned in the lokyng of the Divine thoughte, be cleped purveiaunce, and thilke same assemblyng and oning, devide and unfolden, let that be called Destinie. And all be it so, that these thynges ben divers, yet neverthelesse, hangeth that one on that other, for why? the order destinably procedeth of the simplicite of purveiaunce.

For right as a werkman perceveth in his thoughte the forme of thyng that he wolle make, and moveth the effecte of the werke, and ledeth that he had looked before in his thought simplie and presentlie by corporall ordinaunce: certes, right so GOD in his purveiaunce disponeth singulerly and stably the thynges that be to doen, but he administreth in maners, and in divers tymes by Destinie, the ilke same thynges that he hath disponed; then whether Destinie be exercised, either by some divine spirites, servauntes to the Divine purveiaunce, or elles by some soule, or els by all nature serving GOD, or els by the celestiall movynges of Sterres, or els by the ver-ue of Angelles, or els by divers subteltie of Diuelles, or els by any of 'hem, or elles by 'hem all, the destinable ordinaunce is woven and accomplished. Certes, it is open thyng, that the purveiaunce is an unmovable and simple forme of thynges to doen, and the movable bonde, and the temporalle ordinaunce of thynges, whiche that the Divine simplicitie of purveiaunce hath ordained to doen, that is destinie. For whiche it is that al thinges that ben put under destinie, ben certes subjectes unto purveiaunce, to which purveiaunce destinie it self is subject and under, but some thinges ben put under purveiaunce, that surmounten th' ordinaunce of destinie: and tho ben thilke that stable ben fixed nigh to the first godhed, thei surmounten the order of destinable movabilitie. For right as circles turnen about a same centre, or about a point, thilke circle that is innerest or moſte within he joyneth to the simpleſſe of the middle, and is as it wer a centre or a point to that other circles, that turnen aboute him: and thilke that is utterest, compassed by larger environning, is unfolden by larger spaces, in so moche as it is ferthereste fro the middleſte simplicitie of the pointe: And if there be any thyng that knitteth and fellowshipeth himself to thilke middle pointe, it is constrained into simplicitie, that is to ſaie, into unmovabilitie, and it ceſſeth to ben ſhad, and ſit diverſly; Right ſo by ſemblable reſon, thilke thing that departeth furthereste fro the firſte thought of God, it is unfolden, and alſo ſubmitteth to greter bondes of destinie, and in ſo moche is the thing more fre and loce fro dignitie, as it asketh and holdeth nere to thilke centre of thinges, that is to ſaie, to God. And if the thyng cleaveth to the ſtedfaſtneſſe of the thought of God, and be without movyng, certes it ſurmounteth the neceſſitie of destinie. Then ſoche compariſon as is ſkilling to underſtandyng, and of thinge that was engendred, to thinge that is of time to eternitie, and of the circle to the centre, right ſo is the order of movable destinie, to the ſtable simplicitie of purveiaunce. Thilke ordinaunce moveth the heven and the ſterres, and attempreth the elementes together among 'hemſelf, and transformeth 'hem by enterchaungeable mutacion. And thilk ſame order neweth ayen all things growing and falling adoune, by ſemblable progreſſiones of ſedes and of ſexus, that is to ſaie, male and female: and this ilke order constraineth the fortunes, and the dedes of men, by a bonde of cauſes, not able to be unbounden: the whiche destinable cauſes, when thei paſſen out fro the beginnynges of unmovable purveiaunce, it mote nedes be that thei ne be not mutable, as thus: be the things well governed, if that the ſimplicitie dwellynge in the divine thought ſheweth forth the order of cauſes, unable to be bowed. And this order constraineth by the proper ſtabilitie, the movable thinges, or els thei ſhulden ſete ſolilie. For which it is, that thinges ſemen confuſe, and trouble to us men, for we ne mowen not conſider thilk ordinaunce. Nervertheleſſe, the proper maner of every thing dreſſyng hym to gode diſponeth 'hem all, for there n'is nothyng doen for evill, for thilke thyng that is doen by wicked folke, nis not doen for evill. The whiche ſhrewes, as I have ſhewed full plenteouſly ſeke gode, but wicked errour miſtouneth 'hem, ne the order coming fro the point of ſoveraine gode, ne enclinet not fro his beginnyng. But thou maiest ſaie, what unneceſſary maie ben a worſe confuſion, than that gode men have ſomtyme adverſitie, and ſomtyme proſperitie: and ſhrewes have now alſo thinges that thei deſiren, and now thinges that thei haten. Whether men live nowe in ſoche holineſſe of thought, as who ſaith be men now ſo wiſe, that ſoche folke as thei demen to be gode folke or ſhrewes, that it mote nedes be, that ſolk be ſoche as thei wenen. But in this maner domes of men diſtorden, that thilke men that ſome folke demen worthie of mede, other folke deme 'hem worthy of turment, but let us graunt: I ſuppoſe that ſome man maie well deme or knowe the gode peple, and the bad, maie he then knowe and ſe thilke innerest attemperaunce of courage, as it hath be wont to be ſaid of bodies, as who ſaith, maie a man ſpeken of complexion, and attemperaunce of bodies, ne it ne is not, as who ſaith, but it is like a mervaile or a miracle, to 'hem that ne know it not, why that ſwete thinges be convenable to ſum bodies, that ben whole, and to ſum peple bitter thinges be convenable: and alſo why ſum peple ben holpen with light medicines, and ſome peple ben holpen with bitter medicines: but natheleſſe tho that knowen the maner and the temperaunce of hele and of malady, ne marvelleth it nothing. But what other thing ſemeth helth of corages but bountie, and what other thing ſemeth maladie of courage but vices? Who is els keper of gode, and driver awaie of evill, but God the governor and leder of thoughtes? the whiche God, when he hath beholden from the high toure of his purveiaunce, he knoweth what is convenable to any wight, and leneth 'hem that he wot well that is convenable to 'hem. Lo! herof cometh and herof is doen this miracle of th' order destinable, when God that all knoweth doth ſoche thing, of whiche thyng unknowyng folke ben aſtonied; but ſo to conſtraine, as who ſaith, but ſo to comprehend and tell a fewe thinges of the divine depenſe, the whiche that manne's reſon maie underſtand. Thilke manne that thou weeneſt to ben right juſte, and right keepyng of equitie, the contrarie of that ſemeth to the Divine purveiaunce that all wote. And Lucan my familier telleth, that the victorious cauſe liked to the Goddes, and the cauſes overcome liketh to Caton. Then whatſoever thou maiest ſeen, that is doen in this worlde unhoped, or els unknowen, certes, it is the righte order of thynges, but as to thy wicked opinion, it is a confuſion. But I ſuppoſe that ſome man be ſo welthewed, that the divine judgemente, and the judgemente of mankind, accorden 'hem togither of hym: but he is ſo unſtedfaſt of courage, that if any adverſitie come to hym, he woll ſorieten paraventure to continue innocencie, by the whiche he ne maie not withholden fortune: than the wiſe diſpenſacion of GOD ſpareth hym, the whiche man adverſitie might enpairen, for that God will not hym to travaile, to whom that travaile n'is not convenable. Another manne is paſſite in all vertues, and is an holy manne, and nigh to God, ſo that the purveiaunce of God would deme, that it were a ſilonie, that he wer touchen with any adverſities, ſo that he would not ſuſſire, that ſoche a man be with any bodily maladie moved. But ſo (as ſaied the Philoſopher) the more excellent is by me ſaid in grete, that vertues have edified the bodie of the holic manne. And oft tyme it betideth, that the ſomme of thinges, that ben to doen is taken to governe to gode folke, for that the malice habundant of ſhrewes ſhould ben abated. And God yeveth and departeth to other folke, proſperities and adverſities, medled to hepe, after the qualitie of ther courages, and remordeth ſome folke by adverſities, for thei ne ſhould not waxen proude, by long welſuſneſſe, and other folke he ſuffereth to be travailed with hard thyngs, for that thei ſhould conſerme the vertues of courage, by the exercitacion of uſage of pacience. And other ſolk dreden more then thei oughten, the whiche thei mighten well beren, and ſome diſpiſe, that thei mowe not bere, and thilke folke GOD ledeth into experience of 'hemſelf, by aſprie and ſorowfull thynges. And many other ſolk have bought honourable noutable renome of this worlde, by the price of glorious deth.

And some men that ne mowe not ben overcomen by tourment, have yeven ensample to other folke, that vertue maie not ben overcomen by adversities. And of al these things there n'is no doubt, that thei ne ben doen rightfullie and ordeinly, to the perfit gode of 'hem, to whom we seen these things betiden. For certes, that adversities cometh somtyme to shrewes, and somtyme that thei desiren, it cometh of these foresaied causes. And of sorowfull things that betiden to shrewes, certes, no man ne wondreth, for all menne wene that thei have deserved it, and that thei ben of wicked merite. Of whiche shrewes, the tourmente agasteth somtyme other to doen felonies: And somtyme it amendeth 'hem, that suffereth the tourmentes. And the prosperitie, that is yeven to shrewes, sheweth a grete argument to gode peple, what thing thei should demen of thilk welesfulnesse, whiche prosperitie menne seen ofte serve to shrewes: In whiche thing, I trowe that God dispenseth, for paraventure, the nature of some man is so overthrowng to evill, and so uncomvenable, that the nedy povertie of his housholde might rather agreve hym to doen felonies, and to the maladie of hym God putteth remedie, to yeven hym richesse. And some other manne beholdeth his conscience defouled with synnes, and maketh comparison of his fortune, and of himself: and dredeth paraventure that the blisfulnesse, of whiche the usage is joyfull to hym, that the lesyng of thilk blisfulnesse ne be not sorowfull to hym, and therefore he would chaunge his maners: and for he dredeth to lese his fortune, he forleteth his wickednesse. To other folkes welesfulnes is yeven unworthiliè, the whiche overthroweth 'hem into destruccion, that thei han deserved, and to some other folke, is yeven power to punisshen, for that it shall be cause of continuacion, and exercisynge to gode folkes, and cause of tourmente to shrewes.

For so as there n'is none aliaunce betwene gode folkes, and shrewes, ne shrewes ne mowen not accorden emong 'hemself: and why not? For that shrewes discorden of 'hem self, by ther vices, the which vices, all torenden ther consciences, and doen oft tyme thynges, the whiche thynges, when thei have doen 'hem, thei deme that tho things, ne shuld not have be doen, for which thing the soverain purveiaunce hath made oft tyme miracle: So that shrewes have made shrewes to ben gode men. For when that some shrewes seen, that thei suffre wrongfully felonies of other shrewes, thei waxen eschaufed into hate of 'hem, that anoied 'hem, and retournen to the fruct of vertue. Then thei studien to be unlike to 'hem that thei have hated. Certes onely is this the divine might, to the which might ivels ben then gode, when it useth the ivelles covenantie, and draweth out the effecte of any gode, as who saith, that ivell is gode onely to the might of God, for the might of God ordeineth thilke ivell to gode: for one order embraceth all things, so that what wight departeth from the reson of thilke order, that is assigned to him, algates yet he slideth into an other order, so that nothing is lesfull to folie, in the relme of divine purveiaunce, as who saith, nothing is without ordinaunce, in the relme of divine purveiaunce, sith that the right strong GOD governeth all thynges in this worlde; for it is not lesful for men to comprehend by wit, ne unfolden by worde, all the subtell ordinaunce, and the disposicion of the divine entent; for onely it ought to suffice to have loked that God himself, maker of al natures, ordaineth al thynges to gode, while that he hasteth to withholde the thynges, that he hath made, into his semblaunce, that is to say for to withholden the thynges into gode, for he hymself is gode, he chaseth out all ivelis fro the bonde of his cominalties, by th' order of the necessitie destina- ble: for whiche it followeth, that if thou loke the purveiaunce, ordeinyng the thynges, that men wenen be outrageous, or haboundant in yerthes, thou shalt not seen in no place nothyng of ivell. But I se now that thou art charged with the weight of the question, and werie with lengthe of my reson, and that thou abidest some swetenesse of song, take than this draught, and when thou art wel refreshed and resect, thou shalt be more stedfaste to flie into higher questions or thynges.

IF thou wise wilt demen in thy pure thought, the rightes or the lawes of the hic thonder, that is to sain of God, loke thou and beholde the heightes of the soveraine heven: There kepen the Sterres, by rightfull aliaunce of thyngs, ther old pecc. The Sonne imoved by his roddie fire ne distourbeth not the colde circle of the Mone, ne the sterre icleped the Bere, that enclineth his ravishing courses abouten the soveraine height of this worlde. Ne the same sterre Urfa n'is nevermo washen in the depe Westren Se, ne coveteth not to dien his flambes in the Se of the Ocean, although it se other Sterres iplonged in the Se: And Hesperus the Sterre bodeth, and telleth alwaie the late nightes: And Lucifer the sterre bringeth ayen the clere daie.

And thus maketh love enterchaungeable the perdurable courses, and thus is discordable bataille i-putte out of the countrie of the Sterres. This accordaunce attempreth by evenlike maners the Elementes, that the moiste thynges stryng with the drie thynges yeven place by stoundes: And that the colde thynges joynen 'hem by faithe to the hote thynges, and that the light fire ariseth into height, and the hevie yerthes avaien by ther weightes: by the same causes, the flourie yere yeldeth swete smelles, in the first Sommer seson warnynge, and the hotte Sommer drieth the Cornes, and Autumpne cometh ayen of hevie Apples, and the fetyng Raine bedeweth the Winter; this attempraunce nourisheth, and bryngeth forthe all thynges, that bereth life in this worlde, and the ilke same attempraunce ravishyng, hideth, benimeth, and drencheth under the laste deth all thynges iborne.

Emong these things, sitteth the high maker, Kyng and Lorde, wele and beginnyng, Lawe and wife Judge, to doen equite, and governeth and enclineth the bridels of thynges: And tho thynges that he sterreth, to gone by movynge, he withdraweth and arresteth, and affirmeth the movable or wanderynge thynges. For if that he ne called not ayen the right goyng of thynges, and if that he ne constrained 'hem not este sones, into roundenesse enclined, the thynges that ben now continued by stable ordinaunce, thei should departen from ther wele, that is to saine, from ther beginnyng, and fallen, that is to saine, tournen into nought. This is the common love to all thynges, and all thynges asken to ben holden by the fine of gode, for elles ne mighten thei not fasten, if thei ne come not estsones ayen by love, retourned to the cause, that hath yeven 'hem beyng, that is to saine, God.

Jamne igitur vides quid hæc omnia, quæ diximus, consequatur? Quidnam? inquam. Omnem, inquit, &c.

SEest thou not than, what thyng followeth all the thynges that I have saied. Bo. What thyng (qð I). Phi. Certes (qð she) all utterlie, that all fortune is gode. Bo. And how maie that be (qð I). Phi. Now understande (qð she). So as all fortune, whether so it be joyfull fortune, or aspre fortune, is yeven either bicause of guerdonyng, or elles of exercising of gode folkes, or els bicause to punishen, or els chastisen shrewes: then is al fortune gode, the which fortune is certain, that it be either rightfull, or els profitable.

Bo. Forsothe this is a full verie reson (qð I) and if I consider the purveiaunce and the deslinie that thou taughtest me a litle here befor, this sentence is susteined by stedfaste resons. But if it like unto The, let us nombren hem emonges the ilke thynges, of whiche thou saidest a litle here befor, that thei ne wer not able to ben wened to the peple. Phi. Why so? (qð she). Bo. For that the common word of men (qð I) misuseth this maner speche of fortune, and saie ofte tymes, that the fortune of some wight is wicked. Phi. Wilt thou then (qð she) that I approche a litle to the wordes of the peple, so that it seme not to hem, that I be overmoche departed, as fro the usage of mankind. Bo. As thou wilt (qð I). Phi. Wenest thou not (qð she) that all thyng that profiteth is gode? Bo. Yes (qð I). Phi. Certes all thyng that exerciseth or corrigeth, it profiteth. Bo. I confesse well (qð I). Phi. Then is it gode (qð she). Bo. Why not (qð I). Phi. But this is the fortune (qð she) of hem that either be putte in vertue, and battailen againste aspre thynges, or elles of hem that declinen fro vices, and taken the waie of vertue. Bo. This ne maie I not denie (qð I). Phi. But what saiest thou of the merie fortune, that is yeven to gode peple in guerdon, demeth ofte the peple that it be wicked?

Bo. Naie for soth (qð I), but thei demen as it is sothe, that it is right gode.

Phi. What saiest thou of the other fortune (qð she) that although that it be aspre, and restraineth the shrewes by rightfull turment, weneth aught the peple that it be gode?

Bo. Naie (qð I) but the peple demeth that it is mooste wretched of all thynges, that maie be thought.

Phi. Ware now, and loke well (qð she) lest we in followyng the opinion of the peple have confessed and concluded thing, whiche that is unable to ben wened to the peple. Bo. What is that (qð I)? Phi. Certes (qð she) it followeth or cometh of thynges that ben graunted, that all fortune whatsoever it be, of hem that ben either in possession of vertue, or in th' encrease of vertue, or els in the purchasyng of vertue, that thilke fortune is gode, and that all fortune is right wicked, to hem that dwellen in shreudnesse, as who saith, and thus weneth not the peple. Bo. That is sothe (qð I). Albeit so that no man dare confesse it, ne knowe it. Phi. Why so? (qð she). For right as the strong man ne semeth not to abashen or disdainen, as oft tyme as he hereth the noise of the battail: ne also it semeth not to the wiseman to beren it grevously, as oft as he is ledde into strief of fortune. For bothe to that one man, and eke to that other, the ilke difficultie is the matter, to that one man of encrease of his glorious renome, and to that other man, to conserve his sapience, that is to saie, to the asprenesse of his estate, for therefore is it called vertue, for that it susteineth and enforceth by his strengthes, so that it n'is not overcomen by adversities. Ne certes, thou that art putte in encrease, or in the height of vertue, ne haste not comen to fleten with delices, and for to walken in bodily lust. Thou slowest or plantest a full eigre battaile in thy courage, ayenst every fortune: for that the sorowfull fortune confounde The not, ne that the merie fortune ne corruppe The not, occupie the mene by stedfast strengthes. For all that ever is under the mene, or all that overpasseth the mene, dispiseth welesfulnes, as who saith, it is vicious, and ne hath no mede of his travaile, for it is set in your hand, as who saith, it lieth in your power, what fortune you is leveste, that is to saie, gode or ivell, for all fortune that semeth sharpe or aspre, if it ne exercise not the gode folke, ne chastise the wicked folke, it punisheth.

Prosa prima.

Dixerat, orationisque cursum ad alia quam tractanda atque expedienda vertebat.
B. Tum ego, recta quidem, inquam, &c.

SHE had saied, and turned the course of her reason to some other thynges, to be treted and to be sped. Bo. Then saied I, certes rightful is thine amonesting, and full digne by auctorite. But that thou saidest whilom, that the question of the Divine purveiaunce is enlaced with many other questions, I understande well and prove it, by the same thing. But I aske, if that thou wenest, that hap be any thyng, in any waies, and if thou wenest, that happe be any thyng, what is it? Phi. Then (q^d she) I haste me to yelden and asloilen to the debte of my beheft, and to shewen and open the waie, by which waie thou maiest come ayen to thy countre: but albeit so that the thynges, whiche that thou askest, ben right profitable to knowe, yet ben thei divers somewhat fro the pathe of my purpose, and it is to doubte, that thou ne be maketh werie by misse waies, so that thou ne maiest not suffice to mesure the right waie.

Bo. Ne doubt The thereof nothyng (q^d I). For to knowen thilke thynges togiðer, in the whiche thynges I delite me gretlie, that shall ben to me in stede of rest, sith it n'is not to doubten of the thynges folowing, when every thyng of thy disputaacion shall haven ben stedfast to me by undoubted faithe.

Phi. Then (saied she) that maner woll I doen to The, and beganne to speken right thus. Certes (q^d she) if any wight definishe hap in this maner, that is to sayne, that hap is betidying ibrought forth by solishe moving, and by no knitting of causes, I confirme that hap n'is right naught in no wise, and I deme all utterlie, that happe n'is, ne dwelleth but a voyce, as who saith, but an idell worde, without any significacion of thyng, committed to that voyce. For what place might ben leste, or dwellynge in folie, and to disordenaunce, sith that GOD ledeth and constraineth all thynges by order? for this sentence is very sothe, that nothyng hath his beyng of naughte, to the whiche sentence, none of these old folke ne withsaied never, al be it so, that thei ne understanden it not by GOD, Prince and beginner of working, but thei casten, as a maner foundement of subiecte materiall, that is to sayne, of the nature of al reson. And if that any thyng is waxen or comen of no causes, then shall it seme, that thilke thyng is comen or waxen of naught. But if this ne maie not be doen, then is it not possible that hap be any soche thyng, as I have definishe a little here before. Bo. Howe shall it then be (q^d I); n'is there then nothyng, that by right maie ben cleped either hap, or els adventure, or fortune? Or is there ought, all be it so, that it is hid fro the peple, to whiche thyng these wordes ben convenable.

Phi. Myne Aristotele (q^d she) in the boke of his Physike definiseth this thyng by short reson, and nigh to the sothe.

Bo. In whiche maner? (q^d I).

Phi. As ofte (q^d she) as men doen any thyng, for grace of any other thyng, and another thyng then thilke thyng, that men entenden to doen, betideth by some causes, it is icleped happe, right as a manne dalfe the yerth, bicause of tilling of the field, and found there a gobet of golde bedolven, then wenen folke, that it is befall by fortunous betidying. But forsothe it n'is not of naught, for it hath his proper causes, of which causes the cours unforeseen and unware semeth to have maketh hap. For if the tiller of the fiede ne dolve not in the yerth, and if the hider of the golde ne had hid the golde in that place, the golde ne had not ben found. These ben then the causes of the abredgyng of fortuit hap, the whiche abredgyng of fortuit hap cometh of causes of encountring, and flowyng together to hemself, and not by th' extencion of the doer. For neither the hider of the golde, ne the delver of the field, ne understanden not, that the golde should have ben founde. But as I saied, it betid and ran together, that he dalfe there as the other had hid the golde. Now maie I thus definishe hap. Happe is an unware betiding of causes, assembled in thynges, that ben doen for some other thyng. But thilke order procedyng, by an uneschuable betidying together, whiche that descendeth from the well of purveiaunce, that ordeineth al thynges in ther places, and in ther times maketh that the causes rennen and assemblen together.

The shippes and the stockes araced with the flode moten assemblen, and the waters imedled wrappeth or emplierh many fortunell happes or maners, the whiche wandryng happes nathelless thilke declining lownesse of the yerth and the flowyng order of the slidying water governeth. Prosa secunda.

Animadverto, inquam, idque uti tu dicis, ita esse consentio. Sed in hac, &c.

THis understande I wel (qð I) and I accorde me that it is right as thou saiest. But I aske if there be any libertie of frewil, in this order of causes, that cleven thus together in 'hemself, or els I would weten if that the destinall cheine constraineth the movyng of the courages of men.

Phi. Yes (qð she) there is libertie of frewill, ne there ne was never no nature of reson, that it ne had libertie or frewill. For every thing that maie naturally usen reson it hath dome, by whiche it discerneth and demeth every thing. Then knoweth it by it self thynges that ben to fien, and thynges that ben to desiren, and the ilke thyng that any wight demeth to ben desired, that asketh or desireth he, and flieth thilke thyng, that he troweth be to fien. Wherefore in all thynges that reson is, in hym also is libertie of willyng and of n'illyng, but I ne ordaine not, as who saith, I ne graunt not, that this libertie, be evenlike in al thynges. For why? in the Soveraines divine substaunces, that is to sain, in spirites, judgement is more clere and will not corruppe, and mightie redy to speden thynges that ben desired. But the soules of men moten nedes ben more fre, when thei loken 'hem in the speculacion, or lokyng of the divine thought, and lasse fre when thei sliden into the bodies, and yet lasse fre when thei ben gathered together, and comprehended in yerthly members, but the lasse servage is, when that thei ben yeven to vices, and have ifall from the possession of ther proper reson. For after that thei have caste awaie ther eyen fro the light of the foveraine sothefastnesse, to lowe thynges and darke, anon thei darken by the cloude of ignorance, and be troubled by felonous talentes, to the whiche talentes when thei approchen and assenten, thei hepen and encreasen the servage, whiche thei have joyned to 'hem self. And in this maner thei ben caitives fro ther proper libertie, the whiche thing nathelesse the lokyng of the divine purveiaunce seeth, that al thynges beholdeth and seeth fro eterne, and ordeineth 'hem everiche in ther merites, as thei ben predestinate, and it is said in Greke, that all thynges he seeth, and al thynges he hereth.

So ne seeth not God, maker of the grete worlde; to hym that loketh all thynges from an high, ne understandeth nothyng by heviness of the yerth, ne the night ne withstandeth not to hym by the black cloudes, thilke God seeth in o stroke of thought all thynges that ben, weren, or shull come: and thilke GOD, for he loketh and seeth all thynges alone, thou maist saine that he is the verie sonne.

Prosa tertia.

Tum ego, en! inquam, difficiliore rursus ambiguitate confundor, &c.

THen said I thus, now am I confounded by a more hard doubt then I was. Phi. What doute is that? (qð she) for certes, I conjecte now by soch things, thou art troubled. Bo. It semeth (qð I) to repugnen and to contrarie gretlie, that God knoweth beforen all thynges, and that there is any fredome or libertie, for if so be that God loketh all thynges beforen, ne God ne maie not ben deceved in no maner. Then mote it nedes be, that all thynges the whiche that the purveiaunce of God hath seen beforen to come, for which if that GOD knoweth toforen, not onely the werkes of men; but also ther counsailes and ther willes, then ne shall there be no libertie of arbitre, ne certes there ne maie be none other dede, ne no wille, but the ilke whiche that the divine purveiaunce (that ne may not ben deceved) hath feled beforen, for if that thei mighten writhen awaie, in other maner, then thei ben purveied, then ne should there be no stedfast prescience of thyng to comen, but rather an uncertaine opinion, the whiche thyng to trowen of God, I deme it felonie and unlesfull. Ne I ne prove not the ilke same reson, as who saith, I ne allowe not, or I ne praise not thilke same reson, by whiche that some men wenen, that thei mowen assoilen, and unknitten the knot of this question. For certes thei saine, that thyng n'is not to comen, for that the purveiaunce of GOD hath seen beforen that it is to comen, but rather the contrarie, and that is this, that for that the thyng is to comen, that therefore ne maie it not ben hid fro the purveiaunce of God. And in this maner, this necessitie slideth ayen into the contrarie partie, ne it ne behoveth not nedes, that thynges betiden that ben ipurveied, but it behoveth nedes, that thynges that ben to comen ben ipurveied, but as it wer itravailed, as who saith, that thilke answeere procedeth right as though menne travaileden or weren busie to enquiren, the whiche thyng is cause of the which thynges. As whether the prescience is cause of the necessitie of thynges to comen, or els that the necessitie of thynges to comen is cause of the purveiaunce. But I ne enforce me not now to shewen it, that the betidyng of thynges iwisste beforen is necessarie, how so or in what maner, that the order of causes hath it self, although that it ne seme not, that the prescience bryng in necessitie of betidyng to thynges to comen. For certes, if that any wighte sitteth, it behoveth by necessitie, that the opinion be soth of hym that conjecteth that he sitteth, and ayenwarde also is it of the contrarie; for if the opinion be sothe of any wight, for that he sitteth, it behoveth by necessitie that he sitte. Then is here necessitie in that one, and in that other: for in that one is necessitie of sittyng, and certes in that other is necessitie of soth. But therfore ne sitteth not a wighte, for that the opinion of the sittyng is sothe, but the opinion is rather sothe, for that a wight sitteth beforen. And thus although that the cause of the sothe cometh of that other side, as who saith, that although the cause of sothe cometh of the sitting, and not of the true opinion, algates yet is there a common necessitie, in that one, and in that other. Thus semeth it, that I maie make semblable skilles, of the purveiaunce of God, and of thynges to comen. For although that for that thynges ben to comen, therefore ben thei purveied, and not certes, for thei ben purveied, therefore ne betide thei not, nathelesse it behoveth by necessitie, that either the thynges to comen ben ipurveyed of God, or els that the thynges, that ben purveied of God, betiden. And this thyng onelie suffiseth inough, to destroien the fredom of our arbitre, that is to sain, of our frewill. But certes, now sheweth it well howe farre fro the sothe, and how up so doun is this thing, that we seen that the betidying of temporall thynges is cause of the eterne prescience. But for to wenen that God purveyeth the thynges to comen, for thei ben to comen, what other thyng is it but for to wene, that thilke thynges that betide whilom, ben causes of thilke soverain purveiaunce, that is in God. And hereto adde I this thinge, that right as when that I wote that a thyng is, it behoveth by necessitie, that thilk self thing be, and eke when I have knowen that any thyng shall betiden, so behoveth it by necessitie, that thilke same thyng betide. So followeth it then, that the betidying of the thynges iwist beforne, ne maie not be eschewed, and at the laste, if that any wighte wene a thyng to ben otherwise then it is, it n'is not onely unscience, but it is decevable opinion, full divers and farre fro the sothe of science. Wherefore, if any thyng be so to comen, that the betidying of it ne be not certaine, ne necessarie, who maie weten beforne, that thilke thing is to comen. For right as science ne maie not be medled with falsenesse, as who saith, that if I wote a thing, it ne maie not be false that I ne wote it, right of thilke thyng, that is conceived by science, ne maie not be none otherwise then as it is conceived, for that is the cause why that science wanteth lesing, as who saith, why that weting ne receveth not lesing of that it wote, for it behoveth by necessitie, that every thyng be right, as science comprehendeth it to be. What shall I then sain, in whiche maner knoweth God, beforne all the thynges to comen, if thei ne be not certain? for if that he deme, that thei ben to comen uneschuably, and so maie be that it is possible, that thei ne shullen not comen, God is deceived, but not onely to trowen, that God is deceived, but for to speke it with mouthe, it is a felonous synne. But if that God wote, that righte so as thynges ben to comen, so shoulen thei comen, so that he mote egally, as who saith indifferently, that thyngs maie be doen, or els not idoen, what is thilke prescience, that ne comprehendeth no certaine thyng ne stable, or els what difference is there bitwene the prescience of thilke jape, worthy divinyng of Tiresie Devinour, that saied, all that I saie (q^d he) either it shall be, or els it shall not be, or els how moche is worthe the Divine prescience, more then the opinion of mankinde, if so be that it demeth the thynges uncertaine, as men doen, of the whiche domes of men the betidying n'is not certaine? But if so be, that none uncertain thynges ne maie ben in him, that is right certaine well of all thynges, then is the betidying certaine of thilke thynges, whiche that he hath wiste beforne fermely to comen, for whiche it followeth, that the fredome of the counsailes, and of the werkes of mankind n'is none, sith that the thought of God, that seeth all thynges, without errour of falsnesse, bindeth and constraineth 'hem to a betidying by necessitie. And if this thyng be ones igraunted and received, this is to saine, that there n'is no frewill, then sheweth it well, how grete destruction, and how grete damages there folowen of thynges of mankind, for in idell ben there then purposed, and behighte medes to gode folke, and paines to badde folke, sith that no movyng of fre courage voluntarie ne hath not deserved 'hem, that is to saine, neither mede ne paine. And it should seme

then, that thilke thing is alderworst, which that is now demed for aldermoste just, and moste rightful. That is to sain, that shrewes ben punished, or elles that gode folke be iguerdoned, the whiche folkes sene that ther proper wille ne sente 'hem to that one, ne to that other, that is to sain, neither to gode ne harme, but constraineth 'hem certain necessitie of thynges to comen, then ne shullen there never ben, ne never weren vice ne vertue, but it shullen rather be confusion of all desertes, medled without discrecion. And yet ther foloweth another inconvenience, of the whiche there ne maie be thought no more felonous, ne more wicked, and that is thus, that so as the order of thynges is idel, and cometh of the purveiaunce of God, ne that nothyng n'is lesfull to the counsailes of mankinde, as who saith, that men have no power to doen nothyng, ne will nothyng, then followeth it that our vices ben referred to the maker of al gode, as who saith then foloweth it, that God ought to have the blame of our vices, sith he constraineth us by necessitie to doen vices; then n'is there no reson to hopen in God, ne to praen to God, for what should any wight hopen to God, or why should he praen to GOD, sith that the ordinaunce of destinie, whiche that ne maie not ben enclined, knitteth and streineth al thynges, that men maie desiren? Then should ther be doen awaie thilke onely aliaunce, betwen God and man, that is to saien, to hopen and to praen. But by the price of rightwisnesse, and of very mekenesse, we deserven the guerdon of Divine grace, whiche that is inestimable, that is to say, that is so grete, that it ne maie not ben full praised, and this is onely the maner, that is to saie, hope and praers. For whiche it semeth that men woll speke with God, and by reson of supplicacion ben conjoined to thilke clerenes, that n'is not approached no rather, or that men seken it and impetren it. And if men ne wene not the hope ne praers ne have no strengthes, by the necessitie of things to comen received, what thing is there then, by whiche we mowen ben conjoined, and cleven to thilke soverain prince of thynges? For whiche it behoveth by necessitie, that the lineage of mankinde, as thou song a little here beforne, be departed and unjoined from his wele, and failen of his beginnyng, that is to saine God.

Metrum tertium.

Quanam discors fœdera rerum Causa resolvit? Quis tanta Deus, &c.

WHAT discordable cause hath to rent, and unjoined the bindyng or the aliaunce of thynges, that is to sain, the conjuncions of God, and of man? Whiche God hath establiished so grete bataille, betwene these two sothfaste, or verie thynges, that is to sain, betwene the purveiaunce of God, and frewill, that ben singuler, and divided, ne that thei ne wollen not be medled, ne coupled togid^{er}? But there n'is no discorde to the very thynges, but thei cleven alwaie certain to 'hem self. But the thought of man confounded and overthrowen, by the darke members of the body, ne maie not by fire of his darked lokyng, that is to saine, by the vigour of his insight, while the soule is in the bodie, knowen the thyn subtell knittynges of thynges. But wherefore eschaufeth it so by so grete love, to finden thilke notes of soth icovered, that is to saine, wherefore eschaufeth the thought of man, by so grete desire, to knowe thilke notificacions, that ben ihid under the covertures of sothe! Wote it ought thilke thynges, that that it anguissous desireth to knowe? As who saith naie. For no man ne travaileth for to weten thynges that he wote. And therefore the texte saith thus.

But who travaileth to weten thynges yknowe? And if that he ne knoweth hem not, what seketh thilke blinde thought? What is he that desireth any thynges, of whiche he wote right naught? As who saith, who so desireth any thynges, nedes somewhat he knoweth of it, or els he ne coud not desiren it. Or who maie followe thynges, that ne ben not i-wiste, and though that he seke the thynges, where shall he finde hem? What wight that is all unconyng and ignoraunt, maie knowe that for me, that is ifounde.

But when the soule beholdeth, and seeth the high thought, that is to saine God, then knoweth it together the somme and singularities, that is to sain, the principles, and everiche of hem by hymself. But now while the soule is hid in the cloude, and in the darknesse of the membres of the bodie, it ne hath not al foryeten it self, but it withholdeth the somme of thynges, and leseth the singularities. Than who-so that seketh sothenesse, he n'is in neither n'other habite, for he wote not all, ne he ne hath not all foryeten, but yet hym remembreth the somme of thynges, that he withholdeth, and asketh counsaile, and retreth depeliche thynges ifeen before, that is to saine, the grete somme in his mind, so that he mow adden the partes, that he hath foryetten, to thilke parties, that he hath withholden.

THen saied she, this is (qð she) the olde question of the purveiaunce of GOD. And Marcus Tullius, when he divided the Divinacions, that is to saine, in his boke that he wrote of divinacions, he moved gretlic this question, and thou thy self haste ifought it moche, and utterlie and long, but yet ne hath it not ben determined, ne isped fermelic and diligentlie of any of you; and the cause of this darknesse, and of this difficultie is, for that the moving of the reson of mankinde ne maie not moven to, that is to saine, applien or joynen to the simplicitie of the divine prescience, the which simplicitie of the divine prescience, if that men mighten thinke it in any maner, that is to saine, that if men mighten thinke, and comprehend the thynges, that God seeth himself, then there dwelled utterly no doubtr, the whiche reson and cause of difficulties, I shall asfaie at last to shewe and to speden, when I have firste ispeded, and answered to thy resons, by whiche thou art moved, for I aske why thou wenest, that thilke resons of hem that assoilen this question, ne be not spedfull inough ne sufficient, the whiche solution or the which reson, for that it demeth, that the prescience is not of necessitie of thynges to come, as who saith, any other waie then thus, but that the ilke thynges, that the prescience wote before ne maie not unbetiden, that is to saine, that thei moten betide? But then, if that prescience ne putteth none necessitie to thynges to comen, as thou thy self hast confessed it, and beknowe a little here before, what cause, or what is it, as who saith, there maie no cause be, by whiche that the endes voluntarie of thynges, mighten be constrained to certaine betidyng. For by grace of posicion, so that thou maie the better understand this that foloweth, I suppose that there ne be no prescience: then aske I (qð she) in as moche as apertaineth to that, shoulde then thynges that comen of frewill, be constrained to betiding by necessitie? Bo. Naie (qð I). Phi. Then ayenwarde (qð she) I suppose that there be prescience, but that it ne putteth no necessitie to thynges; than trowe I that thilke same fredome of will shall dwellen all whole and absolute, and unbounden. But thou wilt saine, that albeit so that prescience n'is not cause of the necessitie of betiding to thynges to comen, algates yet it is a signe, that the thynges ben to betiden by necessitie. By this maner then, although that prescience had never be, yet algates or at lest waie, it is certain thyng, that endes of betidinges of thynges to comen shoulde be necessarie. For every thing sheweth and signifieth onely, what the thing is, but it ne maketh not the thing that it signifieth. For which it behoveth, first to shew that nothing ne betideth, that it ne betideth by necessitie: so that it maie appere, that the prescience is signe of necessitie: or els if there n'ere no necessitie, certes thilke prescience ne might not be signe of thyng that n'is not. But certes, it is now certain, that the prove of this ifustened by stedfast reson, ne shall not ben ladde, ne proved by signes ne by argumentes, taken fro without, but by causes convenable and necessarie. But thou maiest saine, how maie it be that the things ne betiden not, that ben purveied to comen? But certes, right as we trowen that the thynges, whiche that the purveiaunce wote before to comen, ne be not to betiden. But that ne shold we not demen, but rather although thei shall betiden, yet ne have thei no necessitie of ther kinde to betiden: and this maiest thou lightly apperceven, by this that I shall sain. For we seen many thynges, when thei ben before our eyne, right as men seen the Carter worchyng in the tournyng, and in the attemptyng or adressing of his cartes or chariottes, and by this maner, as who saith, maiest thou understande of all other werkemene. Is there then any necessitie, as who saith, in our lokyng, that constraineth or compelleth any of thilke thynges to ben doen so? Bo. Naie (qð I) for in idel and in vaine were all the effecte of crafte, if that all thynges weren moved by constrainyng of our eyen, or of our sight. Phi. The thynges then (qð she) that when that men doen hem, ne have no necessitie that men doen hem, eke tho same thynges first or thei be doen, thei ben to comen without necessitie: for why? ther ben some thynges to betiden, of whiche the endes and the betidynges of hem ben absolute and quite of all necessitie. For certes, I ne trowe not that any manne would saine this, that the thynges that menne doen now, that thei ne were to betiden first, or thei wer doen. And thilke same thynges, although men hadden wiste hem before, yet thei have fre betidynges. For right as science of thynges present ne bryngeth in no necessitie to thynges that menne doen, right so to the prescience of thynges to comen ne bringeth in none necessitie, to thynges to betiden. But thou maiest sain, that of thilk same it is doubred, as whether that of thilke thynges, that ne have non issues and betidynges necessities, if thereof maie ben any prescience. For certes, thei semen to discorden, for thou wenest, that if that thynges ben seen before, that necessitie followeth hem, and if necessitie faileth hem, thei ne might not ben wiste before, and that nothyng maie be comprehended by science, but certaine; and if tho thynges ne have no certain betidynges, be purveighed as certain, it should be darknesse of opinion, not sothfastnesse of science. And thou wenest that it be divers fro the holinesse of science, that any man should deme a thyng to be otherwise therwise then it is it self, and the cause of this error is, that of al the thynges, that every wight hath knowe, thei wene that tho thynges ben knowe onely by the strengthe, and by the nature of the thynges, that ben wiste or knowe, and it is all the contrarie: for all that ever is knowe, it is rather comprehended and knowe, not after his strength and his nature, but after the facultie, that is to saie, the power and the nature of 'hem that knowen. And that this thing is sothe sheweth by a short ensample the roundnesse of a bodie, otherwise the sight of the eye knoweth it, and otherwise the touchyng. The lokyng, by castyng of his bemes, waiteth and seeth from a farre, all the bodie together, without movyng of it self, but the touchyng cleaveth to the rounde bodie, and moveth about the environnyng, and comprehendeth the parties by roundenesse, and the man hymself otherwise beholdeth hym, and otherwaies imaginacion, and otherwise reson, and otherwise intelligence: For the witte comprehendeth withoutforth the figure of the bodie of man, that is unstablied in the matter subject. But the imaginacion comprehendeth onelie the figure without the matter. Reson surmounteth imaginacion, and comprehendeth by universall lokyng the common species; but the eye of intelligence is higher, for it surmounteth the environnyng of the universitie, and loketh over by pure subtiltie of thought the ilke same simple forme of man, that is perdurable in the divine thought; in whiche this ought gretly to be considered, that the hiest strength for to comprehend thynges embraseth and containeth the lower strength, but the lower strength ne ariseth not in no maner to the higher strength. For witte ne maie comprehendeth nothyng out of matter, ne the imaginacion ne loketh not the universalle species, ne reson ne taketh not the simple forme, so as intelligence taketh it. But intelligence that loketh al aboven, when it hath comprehended the forme, it knoweth and demeth all the thynges, that ben under the forme, but she knoweth 'hem in thilke maner in whiche it comprehendeth thilke same simple forme, that ne maie never be known of none of that other, that is to saie, to none of the thre foresaied strengthes of the soule, for it knoweth the universitie of reson, and the figure of imaginacion, and the sensible materiall conceived by wit, ne it ne useth not ne of reson, ne of imaginacion, ne of witte withoutforthe; but it beholdeth all thynges, so as I shall saie, by a stroke of thought fermely, without discours of collacion. Certes, reson when it loketh any thyng universall, it ne useth not of imaginacion ne witte, and algates yet it comprehendeth the thynges imaginable, and sensible, for reson is she that definiseth the universalle of her concepte, right thus: Man is a resonable twofoted best: and how so that this knowyng is universall, yet n'is there no wight, that ne wote well, that a man is a thyng imaginable and sensible, and this same considereth well reson, but that n'is not by imaginacion, nor by witte, but it loketh it by resonable concepcion. Also imaginacion, albeit so, that it taketh of witte the beginnyng, to seen and formen the figures, algates although that witt ne were not presente, yet it environneth and comprehendeth all thynges sensible, not by reson sensible of demyng, but by reson imaginative. Seest thou not then, that all the thynges in knowyng usen more of ther facultie, or of ther power, then thei doen of the facultie, or of power of thynges that ben to knowen, ne that is no wronge, for so as every judgements, is that dede or doying of hym, that demeth, it behoveth that every wight performe his werke, and his entencion, not of foraine power, but of his proper power.

Metrum quartum.

Quondam Porticus attulit Obscuros nimium senes, &c.

THE porche, that is to saie, a gate of the tounne of Athenes, there as Philosophers hadden congregacion to dispute, thilk porche brought sometye olde men, full darke in ther sentences, that is to saie Philosophers, that highten Stoiciens, that wende that Images and sensibilities, that is to saie, sensible imaginacions, or els imaginacions of sensible thynges, were emprinted into soules, fro bodies withoutforthe; as who saieth, thilke Stoiciens wenden that the soule had be naked of hymself, as a mirroure, or clene perchemine, so that all figures musten first comen fro thynges fro without into soules, and ben emprinted into soules, right as we ben wonte, sometye by a swifte pointell, to fixen letters emprinted in the smothnesse, or in the plainesse of the table of waxe, or in the parchemine, that hath no figure ne note in it. Glosa. But now argueth Boece against that opinion, and saith thus. But if the thrivyng soule ne unpliteth nothyng, that is to saie, ne doeth thyng by his proper moving, but suffreth and lieth subject to the figures, and to the notes of bodies withoutforthe, and yeldeth Images idell, evill and vaine, in the maner of a mirroure, whence thrive then, or whence cometh the ilke knowyng in our soule, that discerneth and beholdeth all thynges, and whence is the ilke strengthe, that beholdeth the singuler thynges, or els whence is the strengthe, that divideth thynges iknowe, and thilke strength that gathereth together thynges divided, and strength that choseth the enterchaunged waie: for sometye it hevethe the hedde, that is to saie, that it hevethe up the entencion to right high thynges, and sometye it discendeth into right lowe thynges, and when it retourneth into hymself, it reproveth and destroyeth the false thynges, by the true thynges.

Certes, this strength is cause more efficient, and moche more mightie, to seen and to knowen thynges, then thilke cause that suffreth and receveth the notes and figures, impressed in maner of matter. Algates the passion, that is to saie, the sufferance, or the witte in the quicke bodie, goeth before exitynge, and movyng the strengthes of the thought, right so as when that clerenesse smiteth the eyen, and moveth 'hem to seen, or right so as voyce or soun hurleth to the eres, and commoveth 'hem to herken, then is the strengthe of the thought moved and excited, clepeth forth to semblable movynges the species that it halte within it self, and addeth the species of the notes to thynges withoutforthe, and medleth the Images of thynges withoutforthe to thynges hid within hymself.

Prosa quinta.

Quod si, in corporibus sentiendis, quamvis asficient instrumenta sensuum, &c.

BUT what is that in bodies to be feled, that is to saie, in the taking, and in the knowyng of bodily thynges? And albeit so that the qualites of bodies, that be objecte fro withoutforthe, moven and entalenten the instrumentes of the wittes, and all all be it so, that the passion of the bodie, that is to saie, the witte, or the suffraunce, goeth before the strength, or the worchyng courage, the whiche passion or suffraunce clepeth forthe the dede of the thought in it self, and moveth and exciteth in this mene while the formes that resten withinforthe, and insensible bodies, as I have said, our courages n'is not taught or emprinted by passion to knowe these thynges, but demeth and knoweth of his owne strength the passion or suffraunce subjecte to the bodie: moche more then tho thynges ben absolute, and quicke fro all talentes, or affections of bodies, as God or his Angels, ne folowen not in discernyng thynges object fro withoutforthe, but thei accomplishen and speden the dedes of ther thought. By this reson then, there comen many maner of knowynges, to diverse and to distyng substantiaces.

For the witte of the bodie, the whiche wit is naked, and dispoiled of all other knowing, thilke witte cometh to bestes, the whiche ne mowen not moven hemself here and there, as Oysters and Muskelles, and other soche Shellfishie of the Se, that cleven and ben nourished to rockes, but the imaginacion cometh of remuable bestes, that semen to have talent to flien, or to desiren any thyng: but reson is al onelie the linage of mankinde, right as intelligence is al onelie the Divine nature, of whiche it followeth, that the ilke knowyng is more worthe then is either, sens it knoweth by his proper nature, not onelie his subjecte, as who saith, it ne knoweth not al onelie, that appertaineth properlie to his knowyng, but it knoweth the subjectes of all other knowynges. But how shall it than be, if that witte and imaginacion striven ayen reson, and saie that of the ilke universall thyng, that reson weneth to seen, that it n'is right naught, for witte and imaginacion saie, that that is sensible or imaginable, it ne maie not ben universal.

Then is there either the judgement of reson sothe, ne that there n'is nothyng sensible, or els for that reson wote well, that many thynges ben subject to wit, and to imaginacion, then is the conception of reson vaine and false, whiche that loketh and comprehendeth that that is sensible and singuler, as universal. And if that the reson would answer ayenste these two, that is to saie, to witte and imaginacion, and saie that sothly she her self that is to saie reson, loketh and comprehendeth by reson of universalite, both that that is sensible, and that that is imaginable, and thilke two, that is to saie, witte and imaginacion, ne mowen not stretchen hemself to the knowyng of universalite, for that the knowing of hem ne maie not exceden, ne surmounten the bodily figures; certes, of the knowyng of thynges men oughten rather yeven more credence to the more stedfast, and to the more perfite judgemente, in this maner stryvyn; then we that have strengthe of reson, and of imaginacion, and of witte, that is to saie, by reson and by imaginacion, we would rather praise the cause of reson, as who saith, then the cause of witte, and of ymaginacion. Semblable thing is it, that the reson of mankinde ne weneth not, that the Divine intelligence beholdeth or knoweth thynges to come, but right as the reson of mankinde knoweth hem: For thou arguiste thus, that if that it ne seme not to men, that some thynges have certaine betidynges, thei ne maie not be wille before certainlie to betiden, and then is there no prescience of thilke thynges, and if we trowe, that prescience be in these thynges, then is there nothyng, that betideth not by necessitie. But if we might have the judgemente of the divine thought, as we ben parteners of reson, right so as we have demed, that it behoveth by imaginacion and witte, and beneith reson, right so would we demen, that it were rightfull thyng, that manne's reson ought to submitte it self to be beneth the divine thought, for whiche if we maie, as who saith, that if we maie, I counsaile, that we enhaunce us in the height of thilke soverain intelligence, for there shall reson well seen that, that it ne maie not beholde in it self, and certes, that is thus, in what maner the prescience of God seeth all thyngs and diffinieth, although thei have no certain betidynges: ne this is none opinion, but rather the simplicite of the soverain science, that is not shet within no maner of boundes.

*Quàm variis terras animalia permeant figuris!
Namque alia extento sunt corpore, &c.*

THE bestes passen by the yerthes, by full divers figures, for some of hem have ther bodies straught, and crepen in the dust, and drawn after hem a trace, or a sorough continued, that is to saie, as Neders and Snacles; and other bestes, by the wanderyng lightnesse of ther winges, beten the windes, and over swimmen the spaces of the long aire, by moste flying.

And other bestes gladden hemself to diggen ther traces, or ther steppes in the yerthe, with ther goyng, or with ther fete, and to gon either by the grene fieldes, or els to walken under the wodes. And all be it so that thou seest, that thei discorden by divers formes, algates ther faces enclined hevieth ther dulle wittes, onely the linage of manne hevethe highest his hie hedde, and standeth light with his upright body, and beholdeth the yerthes under hym. And but if thou yerthlie manne waxeste evill out of thy wit, this figure amonesteth The that askest the heven with thy right visage, and hast areised thy forehedde, to beren up on high thy courage, so that thy thought ne be not hevieth, ne put lowe under fete, sith that thy body is so high areised.

Quoniam igitur, uti paulò antè monstratum est, omne quod scitur, &c.

Therefore then, as I have shewed a little here before, that all thing that is wille, n'is not known by his nature proper, but by the nature of hem that comprehend it, let us loken now, in as moche as it is lesull to us, as who saith, let us loken now as we maie, whiche that is the estate of the Divine substance, so that we maie well knowe eke what his science is. To common judgement of al creatures reasonables then is, that God is eterne. Let us consider then, what is eternite, for certes, that shall shewen us togither, the divine nature, and the divine science. Eternite then is perfite possession, and all together of life interminable, and that sheweth the more certelie, by the comparison or collocation of temporall thynges.

For all thyng that liveth in tyme, it is present, and procedeth fro preterities, into futures, that is to saie, from time pased, into time coming: ne there n'is nothing establisshed in tyme, that maie embracen together all the space of this life, for certes, yet ne hath it not taken the tyme of to morowe, and it hath lost that of yesterdaie. And certes, in the life of this date, ye ne liven no more, but right as in this movable, and transitorie moment. Then thilke thyng that suffereth temporall condicion, although that it never began to be, ne though it never cese to be (as Aristoteles demed of the world) and although the life of it be stretched with infinite of tyme, yet algates n'is it no soche thyng, as men might trowen by right that it is eterne. For although that it comprehendeth, and embrace the space of the life infinite, yet algates ne embraseth it not the space of the life all together, for it ne hath not the futures that be not yet: Ne it ne hath no lenger the preterities that ben done or passed. But thilke thing than, that hath and comprehendeth togidre all the plente of the life interminable, to whom there ne faileth nought of the future, and to whom there n'is nought of the preterite escaped or passed, thilke same is ywitnessed and proved by right to ben eterne. And it behoveth by necessite that thilke thing be alway presente to him selfe, and competent, as who saith, alway presente to himselfe, and so mighty, that all be right at his pleasure, and that he have al present the infinite of the movable tyme. Wherefore some men trowen wrongfullye, that when they heren that it semed to Plato, that this world had never beginninge of time, that it never shall have faylinge: they wene in thilke maner, that this worlde be makid eterne, wyth his maker, as who saythe, they wene that this worlde and God be makid together eterne. And that is a wrongful wening, for other thing it is to be ladde by the life interminable, as Plato graunted to the worlde, and other thing it is to embrace together al the presence of the life that is interminable, which thing is clere and manifest to the dyvine thought. Ne it ne shulde not seme to us that God is elder than thinges that ben makid, by quantite of time, but rather by the propriete of his simple nature. For this ylke infynite movinges of temporal thynges foloweth thys presentary estate of thys lyfe immovable, and so as it ne maie not countrefeten ne faine it, ne be evenlike to it for the immobilitie, that is to say, that is in the eternite of God, it faileth and faileth into mowing fro the simplicitie of the presence of God, and discrepeth in the infinite quantite of future and preterite. And so as it may not have togydre all the plentie of the lyfe, algates yet for as moch as it cese never for to ben in some maner, yet it semeth somdele to us, that it foloweth and resemblith thilke thinge, that it ne may not attaine to ne fulfyllen, and bindeth it selfe to some maner presence of thys lytel moment: the whiche presence of thys lytel and swifte moment for that it bereth a maner ymage of lykenesse of the ayedwelling of God, it graunteth to soche maner thinges, as it betideth to, that it semeth hem as these thynges have ben, and ben. And for that the presence of soche lytel moment ne may not dwell, therefore it ravished and toke th' infinite waie of time, that is to saye, by succession, and by this manere it is done, for that it shulde continue the life in goyng, of the whiche lyfe it ne might not embrace the plentie of dwelling. And forthy, if we wollen put worthy names to thinges, that folowen Plato, let us saye than sothelye, that God is eterne, and that the worlde is perpetuell. Than sithe every judgement knoweth and comprehendeth by his owne nature, thinges that ben subject unto hym, there is to God alwaies an eterne and a presentarie estate. And the seynce of hym that overpasseth al temporal moment, dwelleth in simplicitie of his presence, and embraseth and confydereth all the infynite spaces of tymes preterities, and of tymes futures. And loketh in his simple knowing, al thynges of preterite, right as thei weren ydon presently right now.

If thou wolte than thynken and advise the prescience, by whiche it knoweth al thinges, thou ne shalt not demen it as prescience of thinges to comen, but thou shalt demen more rightfully that is science of presence or of instance that never ne faileth, for whiche it n'is not ycleped providence, but it shuld rather ben cleped purveiaunce, which is established full ferre fro right low thinges, and beholdeth from aserfe al thinges, right as it were fro the hie hyght of thynges. Why askest thou than, or why disputest thou than that thilke thynges ben doen by necessite, whiche that ben ysene and yknowen by the divine sight, sythe that forsothe men ne maken nat thilke thynges necessary, whiche that they sene ben ydon in ther sight, for addeth thy beholding any necessite to thilke thinges whiche thou beholdest present? Bo. Naye (q<sup>d</sup> I). Phi. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) than, yf men mighten maken any digne comparison or collacion of the presence divine, and of the presence of mankind, right so as ye sene some thinges in this temporal presence, right so seeth God all thing by his eterne presence. Wherefore this divine prescience ne chaungeth not the nature of the propertie of thinges, but beholdeth soch thinges present to him warde, as they shulden betyden to you warde in tyme to comen. Ne it ne confoundeth not the judgement of thinges, but by one syght of his thought, he knoweth the thinges to comen, as wel necessary as not necessary. Right so when ye sene together a man walke on the erthe, and the sonne arisen in the heaven, al be it so that ye sene al together that one and that other: yet nevertheles ye demen and discernen, that that one is voluntary, and that other is necessary: Right so than the divine lookinge, beholdinge al thinges under him, ne troubleth nat the qualite of thinges that ben certainly presente to him warde, but as to the condicion of tyme, forsothe they ben future, for whiche it foloweth that this n'ys none opinion, but rather a stedfaste knowing ystrengthened by sothensse, that when that God knoweth any thinge to be, he ne unwote nat that thilke thyng wanted necessite to be, this is to saine, that when that God knoweth any thinge to betide, he wote wel that it ne hath no necessite to betide. And yf thou seist here that thilke thing that God seeth to betide, it ne may nat unbetide, as who saythe it mote betyde, and thilke thinge that ne may nat unbetide, it mote betiden by necessite, and that thou streyn me to this name of the necessite, certes I will well confessen and beknownen a thyng of full sad trouthe, but uneth shall there anie wight mow sene it or come thereto, but if that he be beholder of the divine thought, for I will answer The thus, that thilke thinge that is future when it is referred to the divine knowinge than it is necessary. But certes when it is understanden in his owne kind, men sene it utterly fre and absolute fro all necessity. For certes there ben two maners of necessities, that one necessite is simple, as thus, that it behoveth by necessite that all men be mortall or dedlye. Another necessite is condycionell, as thus, yf thou wost that a man walketh, it behoveth by necessite that he walke, thilke thing than that any wight hath yknowe to be, it ne may nat ben none other wyse than he knoweth it to be. But this condicion ne draweth not with her thilke necessite simple, for certes this necessite condycionell, the propre nature of it ne maketh it nat, but the adjection of the condicion maketh it. For no necessite ne constraineth a man to gon, that goeth by his proper wil, al be it so, that when he goth, that is necessary that he goth. Right on this same maner than, yf that the purveiaunce of God seeth any thinge present, than mote thilke thinge ben by necessity, althoughe that it ne have no necessity of propertie

of his owne nature. But certes the futures that be-tyden by fredom of arbytrie, God seeth 'hem al to-giðer present. These thynges than if they ben referred to the diuine sight, than ben they makèd necessarie by the condicion of the diuine knowinge. But certes, if thilke thynges ben confidred by 'hemselfe, they ben absolute of necessite, and ne forletten not, ne cessen not of the libertie of ther owne nature. Than certes, without dout all the thynges shullen ben don whiche that God wote beforen that they ben to com-en and betiden of fre arbitrie, or of frewyll, that al be it so that they betiden, yet algates ne lese they not ther proper nature in beyng, by the whiche firste or they weren doen, they hadden power not to have betidde. Bo. What is this to saine than (qð I) that thynges ne be not necessary by ther proper nature, so that they comen in al ther maners in the likenesse of necessite, by condicion of the diuine science? Phi. This is the difference (qð she) that tho thynges which that I proposed The a lytel here beforen, that is to saine, the Sonne arisyng, and the man walkyng, that ther whiles that thilk thynges ben done, they ne might not ben undone. Nathelesse that one of 'hem or it was done, it behoveth by ne-cessite that it was done, but not that other. Right so it is here that the thynges whiche that God hath present, withouten doute they shullen ben, but some of 'nem discendeth of the nature of thynges, as the sonne arisyng, and some discendeth of the power of the doers, as the manne walkyng. Bo. Then said I, no wronge, that if these thynges be referred to the diuine knowyng, than ben they necessary, and if they ben confyded by 'hemselfe, than ben they absolute fro the bonde of necessite. Right so as al thynges that apereth or sheweth to the wittes, if thou referre 'hem to reson it is universall, and if thou loke it or refer it to it self, than is it singuler.
But nowe if thou saiest thus, that if that it be in my power to chaungen my purpose, than shall I voiden the purveiaunce of God, whan paraventure, I shall have chaunged the thynges whiche that he knoweth beforen.

Phi. Than shall I answeren The thus: Certes thou maiste wel chaunge thy purpose, but for as moche as the present sothnesse of the diuine purue-aunce beholdeth that thou maiste chaunge thy purpose, and whether thou chaunge it or no, and whierward that thou tourne it, thou ne maist not eschue the diuine prescience, right so thou ne maiste not slid the sight of the present eye, although that thou tourne thy self by thy frewil into divers actions. But thou maiste saine ayen to this thus: How shall it than be, shall not the diuine science ben chaunge by my disposicion, whan that I will one thing nowe, and now another thing? And thilke prescience ne semeth it not to entrechaunge stoundes of knowinge, as who saithe, ne shal it not semen to us, that the divine prescience entrechaungeth his diuers stoundes of knowinge, so that it knowe sometime one thing, and sometime it knoweth the contrarie of that thing?

Phi. Nosforsothe (qð she) for the diuine sight renneth beforen and seeth al the futures, and clepeth 'hem ayen, and re.ourneth 'hem to the propre prescience of his propre knowinge, ne he entrechaungeth not, so as thou wenest the stoundes of his foreknowyng, as nowe this, nowe that: but he dwelling aye cometh beforen, and embraseth at o stroke al the mutacions. And this prescience to comprehend and to sene al thynges God ne hath not taken it of the be-tidinges of thynges to comen, but of his propre sym-plicite. And hereby is alloied thilke thynges that thou puttest a litel here beforen, that is to saine, that it is unworthy thing to saun, that our futures yeven cause of the prescience of God. For certes strength of the diuine science, whiche that embraseth al thynges by his presentary knowyng, establiseth maner to all thynges, and it ne owerh not to latter thynges. And lithe that these thynges ben thus, that is to saine, that necessite is not in thynges by the divine prescience, than is ther fredom of arbitrie that dwelleth whole and unwemmed to mortal men, ne the lawes ne purposen not wycked medes, and and paines to the willinges of men, that ben unbounden and quite of all necessite: And God beholder and foreweter of al thynges dwelleth above, and the presente eternite of sight renneth alwaye wyth the diuers qualite of our dedes, dispensyng or ordeining medes to gode men, and tourmentes to wicked men.
Ne in ydel ne in vaine ne ben ther not put in God hope and praers, that ne mowen not ben unspedeful, ne without effecte, whan they ben rightful.

Withstande than and eschewe thou vyces, worshippe and love thou vertues, areyse thy corage to rightful hopes, yelde thou humble praers and highe.
Grete necessite of prowesse and of vertue is encharged and commaunded to you, if ye n'il not dissimulen, sith that ye worchen and done, that is to saine, your dedes and youre werkes beforen the eyen of the judge, that seeth and also that demeth al thynges.
Deo Gratias.

The

The Dreame of CHAUCER.

By the Person of a mourning Knight sitting under an Oak, is meant John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, greatly lamenting the Death of one whom he entirely loved, supposed to be Blanch the Dutcheß.

Have grete wonder by this light
Howe that I lyve, for daye ne night
I maye not slepin welny nought,
I have so many' an ydle thought,

Purely for the defaute of slepe,
'That by my trouth, I take no kepe
Of nothing, howe it cometh or gothe,
Ne me n'ys nothing lese nor lothe,
Al is iliche gode to me
Joye or sorowe, where so it be,
For I have felinge in nothing,
But as it were a masid thing
Al day in pointe to fall adoun,
For so'rowful ymaginacioun
Is alway wholly in my minde.

And well ye wote that againste kinde
It were to livin in this wise,
For nature ne wolde not suffise
Unto none erthy creature
Not longe tyme to endure
Withoutin slepe, and be in sorowe,
And I ne may ne night ne morowe
Slepin, and this melancolye
And drede I havin for to die;
Defaute of slepe and heviness
Hath slaine my spirite of quicknesse,
That I have lost al lustihed
Soche fantasies ben in mine hed,
So I n'ot what is best to do.
But men might askin me whifso
I may not slepe, and what me is?

But natheles, who askith thys
Lefeth his askyng trewily,
My selvin can not tellin why
The sothe, but trewly as I gessle
I holde it be a sikenessle,
That I have sutrid this cyght yere,
And yet my bote is ner the nere,
For there is phisicien but one
That may me hele, but that is done,
Passin we ovir until este,
That wil not be, mote nedes be leste,
Our first matir is gode to kepe.

So whan I sawe I might not slepe,
Til now of late this othir night
Upon my bedde I fate upright,
And bade one rechin me a boke,
A Romauncè, and it me toke
To rede, and drive the night away,
For why? me thought it betir play
Than play either at Chessle or tables.

And in this boke were writtin fables,
That Clerkis had in oldè time,
And othir poetes, put in rhyme,
To rede, and for to be in minde,
While men lovid the lawe of kinde.
This boke ne spake but of soche thinges
Of quenis livis, and of kinges,
And many othir thingis smale;
Amonge al this I fonde a tale,
Whiche that me thought a wondir thing.
This was the tale: There was a king

That hight Ceix, and had a wife
The best that mightin berin lyfe,
And this quenè hight Alcyone;
So it befil, thereafter sone
This king wol wendin ovir Se;
To tellin shortly, whan that he Was in the Se, thus in this wise
Soche a tempest began to ryse
That brake ther maste, and made it fal,
10 And clesfe ther ship, and dreint 'hem al,
That nevir was founde, as it telles,
Ne borde ne man, ne nothing elles;
Right thus this king yloste his life.

Nowe for to spekin of his wife,
This ladie, that was lete at home
Hath wondir, that the kinge ne come
Home, for it was a longè terme,
Anon her herte began to yerne,
20 And for that her thought evirmo
It was not wele, her thoughtin so,
She longid so aftir the king,
That certes it were a pitous thing
To tell her hertely so'rowful lyfe,
Whiche that she had, this noble wife,
For him she lovid aldirbest;
Anon she sent both est and west
To seke him, but they founde him nought.

Alas (qð she) that I was wrought!
And where my lorde my love be ded,
30 Certis I n'yl nevir ete bred,
I make a vowe to my God here,
But I mowe of my lordè here.

Soche sorowe this lady to' her toke,
That trewly I, that made this boke,
Yhad soche pite, and soche routhe
To rede her so'rowe, that by my trouthe
I farid the worse al the morowe
Aftir to thinkin on her sorowe.

So whan that she coude here no worde,
40 That no man myghtin finde her lorde,
Ful ofte she swouned, and saide alas!
For sorow ful nigh wode she was,
Ne she ne coude no rede but one,
But downe on knees she fate anone,
And wept, that pite was to here.

A mercy my swete lady dere,
Qð she to Juno her goddesse,
Helpith me out of this distresse,
110 And yeve me grace my lorde to se
Sone, or to wete where so he be,
Or howe he fareth, or in what wise,
And I shal make you sacrifice,
And wholly yours become I shal,
With gode wil, body, herte and al;
And but thou wolte this, lady swete,
Sendin me grace to slepe and mete
In my slepe some certaine swerin,
Where through that I may knowe evin
Whethir my lorde be quicke or ded.

60 With that worde she hinge down the hed,
And fel in a swoun, as colde as stone,
Her women caught her up anone,

And

And broughtin her in bed al naked,
 And she forwepid and forwaked
 Was wery, and thus the ded slepe
 Yfel on her, or she toke kepe,
 Through Juno, that had herde her bone,
 That madin her to slepe sone;
 For as she praide, right so was don
 In dede, for Juno right anon
 Ycallid thus her messangere
 To do' her craunde, and he come nere:
 Whan he was come, she bad him thus,
 Go bet (qð Juno) to Morpheus,
 Thou knowest him wel, the god of slepe,
 Nowe understande wel, and take kepe,
 Say thus on my behalfe, that he Go fast into the gretè Se,
 And bid him that on alle thinge
 He take up Ceix body the kinge,
 That lieth ful pale, and nothinge rody,
 Byd him crepin into the body,
 And do it gone to Alcyone
 The quene, there she lyith alone,
 And shewe her shortly' it is no nay
 Howe it was dreint this othir day,
 And do the body speke right so
 Right as it was womnid to do
 The whilis that it was alyve;
 Goith nowe fast, and hye The blive.
 This messanger toke leve and went Upon his way, and nevre' he stente
 Tyl he came to the darke valcy,
 That stante betwixtin rockis twey,
 There nevir yet grewe corne ne gras,
 Ne tre, ne nothing that ought was,
 Ne best ne man, ne nothing elles,
 Save that there werin a fewe welles,
 Came renning fro the clyffes adowne;
 That made a dedly slepinge sowne,
 And rennin downe right by a cave,
 That was undir a rocke ygrave
 Amyd the valey wondir depe,
 There as these goddis lay a slepe,
 Morpheus and Eclympasteyre,
 That was the god of slep'is heire,
 That slepte, and did none othir werke.
 This cave ywas also as derke
 As hel pitte, ovir all aboute,
 They had gode leysir for to route
 To vye who mightin slepe best,
 Some hinge ther chinne upon ther brest,
 And slepte upright ther hed yhed,
 And some lay nakid in ther bed,
 And sleptin whiles their dayis last.
 This messaunger come renning fast,
 And cried ho ho, awake anone;
 It was for naught, there herde him none;
 Awake (qð he) who lyith there?
 And blewe his horne right in ther ere,
 And cried awakith wondir hie.
 This god of slepe with his one eye
 Cast up, and asked who clepith there?
 It am I (qð this messangere)
 Juno bade that thou shouldist gone,
 And toldin him what he should done,
 As I have tolde you here before,
 It is no nede reherse it more,
 And wente his way whan he had saide:
 Anone this god of slepe abraide
 Out of his slepe, and gan to go,
 And did as he had bidde him do,
 He toke up the ded body sone,
 And bare it forthe to Alcyone,
 His wife, the quene, there as she lay,
 Right even a quartir before day,

And stode right at her bedd'is fete,
 And callid her right as she hete
 By name, and said: My swetè wife,
 Awake, let be your so'rowful lyfe,
 For in your so'row there lyth no rede,
 For certes, swete love, I am but dede,
 Ye shall me ner on lyve yse,
 But gode swete herte, I praye, that ye
 Bury my body, soche a tide
 Ye mowe it finde, the Se beside,
 And farewel swete, my world'is blisse,
 I pray that God your sorowe lyse,
 To lytel while our blisse ylasteth.
 With that her eyin up she calleth,
 And sawe naught; alas! for sorowe
 She died within the thirde morowe.
 But what she said more in that swowe
 I may nat tellin you as nowe,
 It were to longè for to dwel,
 My first matere I wil you tel,
 Wherfore I have ytolde this thinge
 Of Alcyone, and Ceix the kinge.
 For thus moche dare I sayin well,
 I had be dolvin everidel,
 And ded, right through defaute of slepe,
 Yf I ne had red, and take kepe
 Of this ilke tale next before,
 And I wil tellin you wherfore,
 For I ne might for bote ne bale
 Stepin, or I had redde this tale
 Of this ydreinte Ceix the kinge,
 And of the goddis of slepinge.
 Whan I had red this tale wele,
 And ovirloked it everidele,
 Me thought wondir, if it were so,
 For I had ner herde speke or tho
 Of no goddis, that couldin make Men for to slepe, ne for to wake,
 And I ne knewe ner God but one,
 And in my game I said anone,
 (And yet me lyst right il to pley)
 Rathir than that I shuldin dey Thorough defaute of slepinge thus,
 I woldin gyve thilke Morpheus,
 Or that goddesse hight dame Juno,
 Or some wight els, I ne rought who,
 To make me slepe, and have some rest,
 I will give him the althir best
 Yeste, that er he abode his lyve,
 And hereonwarde right now as blyve,
 If he wold make me slepe a lite,
 Of downe of pure Dovyis white
 I wol yeve him a fethir bed,
 Rayid with gold, and right wel cled
 In fine blacke Sattin doutremere,
 And many' a pilowe', and every bere
 Of clothe of raines to slepe on softe,
 Him thare not nede to turnin ofte,
 And I wol yeve him al that failles
 To his chambre and to his halles,
 I wol do painte 'nem with pure golde,
 And tapite 'hem ful many folde,
 Of one sute this shal he yhave,
 If that I wille where were his cave,
 If he can make me slepin sone,
 As did the goddesse, quene Alcyone,
 And thus this ylike god Morpheus
 May winnin of me mo fies thus Than er he wanne; and to Juno
 That 'is his goddesse, I shall so do,
 I trowe, that she shal hoide her paide
 I had unneth that worde isaide,
 Right thus as I have toldin you,
 That sodeinly I ne wiste howe

Soche a luste anone me yroke
 To slepe, that right upon my boke
 I fel aslepe, and ther-with even Me mette so inly soche a sweven,
 So wondirfull, that nevir yet
 I trowe no man ne had the wit
 To connin wel my fæcyn rede,
 No nought Joseph withoutin drede
 Of Egypt, he which that rad so
 The king's metinge Pharao,
 No more than coude the lesle of us,
 Ne nat fearly Macrobeus,
 He that wrote al the' avision,
 Whiche that he met kinge Scipion,
 The noble man, the African,
 Soche mervallis fortunid than
 I trowe arede my dremis even,
 Lo! thus it was, this was my sweven.
 Me thoughtin thus, that is was Maye,
 And in the dawning there I lay
 Me met thus in my bed al naked,
 And lokid forthe, for I was waked
 With smale foulis a gret hepe,
 That had afraied me' out of my slepe
 Through noise, and swetnesse of ther songe,
 And as me met, they fate amonge
 Upon my chambre rose without,
 Upon the tyks ove' al about,
 And everiche tonge in his wise
 The mosse swete and solempne servise
 By note, that evir man I trowe
 Had herde, for some of 'hem songe lowe,
 Some high, and al of one accorde,
 To tellin shortly, at o worde,
 Was nevir herde so swete a steven,
 But it had be a thinge of heven,
 So merie' a sowne, so swete entunes,
 That certis for the towne of Tewnes
 I n'olde, but I had herde 'hem singe,
 For al my chambre gan to ringe
 Through singin of ther harmony;
 For instrument, nor melody,
 Was no where herde yet halfe so swete,
 Nor of acorde halfe so mete,
 For there was none of 'hem that fained
 To singe, for eche of 'hem him painid
 To finde out many crafty notes,
 They ne yspaid nat ther throtes;
 And soth to faine, my chambre was Ful wel depainted, and with glas
 Were al the windowes wel yglased
 Ful clere, and nat an hole ycrased,
 That to beholde it was grette joy,
 For wholly al the flory' of Troy
 Was in the glaiunge ywrought thus,
 Of Hector, and kinge Priamus,
 Achilles, and kinge Lamedon,
 And eke Medea, and Jason,
 Of Paris, Heleine, and Lavine,
 And al the walles with colours fine
 Were paintid, bothè texte and glose,
 And al the Romaunte of the Rose;
 My wyndowes wern shet echone,
 And through the glasse the sunne yshone
 Upon my bed with bright bemis,
 With many glad gildy firemis,
 And eke the welkin was so faire,
 Blewe, bright, and clere ywas the ayre,
 And ful attempre', in sothe it was,
 For neithir colde, ne hote it n'as;
 Ne' in al the welkin was no clowde.
 And as I lay thus, wondir lowde
 Me thought I herde an huntir blowe
 T' allay his gret horne, and to knowe

Whethre' it was clere, or horse of sowne.
 And I herde goynge up and downe
 Men, horsis, houndes, and othir thinge,
 And al men spekin of huntinge,
 How they wolde sle the harte with strength,
 And how the harte had upon length
 So moche enbofed, I n'ot nowe what.
 Anon right whan I herdin that,
 How that they wolde on huntinge gone,
 I was right glad, and up anone
 I toke my horse, and forth I wente
 Out of chambre, I nevir stente Tyl I come to the felde without,
 There ovirtoke I a grette rout
 Of huntirs, and of foresters,
 And many relaies and limers,
 That hied 'hem to the forest fast,
 And I with 'hem, so at the last
 I askid one lad, a lymere,
 Say felowe, who shal huntin here,
 (Qð I) and he answered ayen,
 Sir, the Emperour Octonycn, (Qð he) and he is here faste by.
 A goddes halfe, in gode tyme (qð I)
 Than go we fast, and gan to ride;
 Whan we come to the forest side,
 Every man ydyd right sone
 As unto huntinge fel to done.
 The maistr huntre anone fote hote
 With his clere horne yblewe thremote
 At the uncouplinge of his houndis,
 Within a while, the harte founde is,
 I halowed, and rechafid fast
 A longe time, and so at the last
 This harte rousid and stale away
 Fro al the houndes a privy way.
 The houndes had ovirshot him all,
 And were on a defaulte yfal,
 Therwith the hont full wondir fast
 Yblewe a forloyn at the laste,
 I was go walkid fro my tre,
 And as I went, there came by me
 A whelpe, that fawned me as I stode,
 That had folowed, and coude no gode,
 It came and crepte to me as lowe,
 Right as it had me wele yknowe,
 Helde down his hed, and joyned his eres,
 And laide al smothe adowne his heres.
 I wolde have caught it up anone,
 It fled, and was fro me ygone,
 As I folowed, and it forth went,
 Downe by a floury grene it went
 Ful thick of grassie, ful softe and swete,
 With flouris sele fare undir fete,
 And lytil used, it semid thus,
 For bothe Flora, and Zephyrus,
 They two, that makin flouris growe,
 Had made ther dwelling there I trowe,
 For it was on for to beholde
 As though the crthe there envye wolde
 To be gayir than is the heven,
 To havin mo flouris soche seven
 As in the welkin steris be,
 It had forget the povirte
 Of wintir, through his coldè morowes
 That made it suffre, and his sorowes
 Al was forieten, and that was sene,
 For all the wode was woxin grene,
 Swetnesse of dewe had made it waxe.
 It is no nede eke for to axe
 Where there were many grenè greves,
 Or thicke of trees, so ful of leves,
 And every tree stode by him selve
 Fro othir, wel ten fote or twelve,

So grete trees, and so huge of strength,
Of fourty' or fifti' some length,
All clene withoutin bowe or sticke,
With croppis brode, and eke as thicke,
They werin not an ynche asonder,
That it was shadde ovir' all under,
And many' an hart, and many' an hinde
Was both before me, and behinde,
Of fawnis, sowirs, buckis, does,
Was ful the wode, and many roes,
And many squirrilis, that sete
Ful high upon the trees and ete,
And in ther manir madin festes,
Shortly, it was so ful of bestes,
That though Argus the noble countour
Yfate to rekin in his countour,
And rekin with his figures ten,
For by tho figures newe al ken,
If they be crafty, reken and nombre,
And tel of every thing the nombre,
Yet shulde he faile to rekin even
The wonders me met in my swerch;
But forthe I romed right wondir faste
Downe through the wode, so at the laste
I was ware of a man in blacke,
That sate, and had yturned his backe
Unto an ooke, and huge tre,
Lord! tho thought I, who may that be?
What cylith him to sittin here?
And anon right I went him nere,
Than founde I sitte evin upright
A wondir faire wel-faring knight,
By the manir me thoughtin so,
Of gode mokil, right yonge therto,
Of the' age of foure and twenty yere,
Upon his berde but litil here,
And he was clothid al in blacke;
I stalkid even unto his backe,
And there I stode, as stil as ought,
The sothe to say, he saw me nought,
For why? he hinge his hed adowne,
And with a dedly so'rowful fowne
He made of rime ten verses or twelve
Of a complainte unto himsele,
The moste pite, and the most routhe,
That evir I herde, for by trouthe
It was grete wondir that nature
Might suffre any creature
To have soche sorow', and he not ded,
Ful pitous pale, and nothing red
He laid a lay, a manir songe,
Withoutin note, withoutin songe,
And was this, for ful wel I can Reherse it, right thus it began.
I have of sorowe so grete wone,
That joye ne get I nevir none,
Nowe that I se my lady bright,
Which I have loved with all my might,
Is fro me ded, and is agone,
And thus in sorowe' leste me alone;
Alas! o dethe, what cylith The,
That thou n'oldist have takin me,
Whan that thou toke my lady swete?
Of all godenes she had none mete,
That was so faire, so freshe, so fre,
So gode, that men may wel yse.
Whan he had made thus his complainte,
His sorowful hert gan fast fainte,
And his spiritis wexin dede,
The blode was fledde, for pure drede,
Downe to his herte, to maken him warme,
For wel it feled the herte had harme,
To wete eke why it was adradde,
By kinde, and for to make it gladde,

For it is membre principal
Of the body, and that made al
His hewe ychaunge, and wexin grene,
And pale, for there no blode is sene
Within no manir lymme of his.
Anon therwith, whan I sawe this, 500
He farde thus yvil, there he sete,
I went and stode right at his sete,
And grette him, but he spake right nought,
But arguid with his owne thought, 430
And in his witte disputid faste
Bothe why, and howe his lyfe might laste,
Him thought his sorowes were so sinerte,
And lay so colde upon his herte.
So through his sorowe', and holy thought
Made him that he ne herde me nought, 510
For he had welnye lost his minde,
Though Pan, that men clepe god of kinde,
Were for his sorowes ner so wrothe.
But at the last, to saine right sothe,
He was ware of me, howe I stode 440
Before him, and did of my hode,
And had gret him, as I best coude,
Debonairly, and nothing loude,
He said, I pray The be not wrothe,
I herde The not, to saine the sothe, 520
Ne I sawe The not, sir, truly.
Ah gode sir, tho no force (qð I)
I am right sory', if I have ought Disronblid you out of your thought, 450
Forieve me, if I have myselfetake.
Yes, the amindes is light to make,
(Qð he) for there lithe non therto,
There is nothing mislaide, nor do.
Lo howe godely yspake this knight, 530
As it had be another wight,
And made it neithir tough ne queint!
And I sawe that, and gan me' aqueint
With him, and founde him so tretable,
Right wondir skylful and reso'nable, 460
As me thoughtin, for all his bale,
Anon right I gan finde a tale
To him, to loke where I might ought Have more knowleging of his thought.
Sir (qð I) this game is ydone,
I holde that this hart be ygone, 540
These huntis can him no where se.
I do no force therof (qð he)
My thought is theron ner a dele;
By' our lorde (qð I) I trowe you wele, 470
Right so me thinkith by your chere;
But sir, o thing wollin ye here?
Me thinketh in gret sorowe' I you se,
But certis sir, and if that ye
Wolde aught discovir me your wo,
I wolde, as wif God helpe me so, 550
Amende it, if I can or may,
Ye mowin prove it by assay,
For by my trouthe, to make you whole
I wol do al my powir whole, 480
And telleth me of your sorowes smert,
Paramter it may cle your herte,
That semeth ful lyke undir your side.
With that he lokid on me aside,
As who saithe nay, that n'yl not be.
Graunt mercy my gode frende (qð he) 560
I thanke The, that thou woldist so,
But it may ner the rather be do,
No man ne may my sorowe glade,
That maketh my lewe to fal and fade, 490
And hath myn understanding lorne,
That me is wo, that I was borne,
May nought make my sorowis flyde,
Not all the remedies of Ovide, 570

Ne Orpheus, god of melodie,
 Ne Dædalus, with his playes flye,
 Ne hele me may no physicien,
 I thought Hippocrates, ne Galien,
 My wo, that I live houris twelve,
 But who wol assaye him seive,
 Whether his hert can have pite
 Of any so'rowe, let him se me,
 I wretche, that dethe hath made al naked
 Of al the blisse that er was maked,
 I wrothe, the werste of alle wightes,
 That hate my dayis, and my nightes,
 My lyfe, my lustis, be me lothe,
 For alle fare and I be wrothe,
 The pure deth is so ful my foe,
 That I wolde die, it wil not soe,
 For whan I folowe' it, it wil flye,
 I wold have him, it wil not me;
 And this is paine withoutin rede,
 Alway dyinge and be not dede;
 That Sisyphus that lyeth in hel
 Ne may not of more sorowe tel,
 And who so wiste al, by my trouthe,
 All my sorowe, but he hadde routhe
 And pyte of my sorowes sinerte,
 That man ybath a fundely herte;
 For who so seeth me first on morowe,
 May sayne that he hath met with sorowe,
 For I am sorowe', and sorowe' is I,
 Alas! and I wyl tel The why,
 My sorowe' is tournid to playnyng,
 And al my laughtir to weping,
 My glad thoughtis to hevynesse,
 In travaile is myn ydlenesse,
 And eke my rest, my wele is wo;
 My gode is harme, and evirmore
 In wrathe is tournid my playing,
 And my delite in sorowing,
 Myn hele is turned into sickenesse,
 In drede is al my sycker nesse,
 To derke is turned al my lyght,
 My wytte is foly, my day night,
 My love is hate, my slepe wakyng,
 My mirth and melis is falling,
 My countinaunce is nicete,
 And al abawed, where so I be,
 My pece is pleding, and in werre,
 Alas, howe might I fare in werre!
 My boldenesse is turned to shame,
 For false fortune hath played a game,
 At chesse with me, alas the while!
 The trayteresse false and ful of gyle,
 That al behoteth, and nothing halte,
 She gothe upright, and yet she halte,
 That baggith soule, and lokith fayre,
 The dispitous and debonaire,
 That scornith many a creature,
 An ydole of false portraiture
 Is she, for she wol soner wryen
 She is the monstri's hed ywryen,
 As filthe, ovir ystrowed with floures,
 Her moste worship, and her floures,
 To lyen, for that is her nature
 Withoutin faith, lawe, or mesure,
 She false is, and evir laughing
 With one eye, and that othir weping,
 That is brought up, she set al downe,
 I likin her to the Scorpiowne,
 That is a false and flateriing best,
 For with his ded be makith fest,
 But al amynd his flateriinge
 With his taile he wil forely styng,
 And envenim, and so wil she,
 She is the envious charite,

That is aye false, and semith wele,
 So turnith she her false whele
 About, for it is nothing stable,
 Nowe by the fyre, nowe at the table;
 Ful many' one hath she thus yblent,
 She is playe of enchauntement,
 That semith one, and is not so,
 The false thefe, what hath she do? 650
 Trowest thou? by' our Lorde I wil The say,
 At Chesse with me she gan to play,
 With her false draughtis ful divers
 She stale on me, and toke my fers, 580
 And whan I sawe my fers away,
 Alas! I couth no lengir play,
 But sayid, farewell, swete ywis,
 And farewell al that er there is,
 Therwith fortune ysaid, cheke here,
 And mate in the' myd poynt of the' checkere 660
 With a paunc errant, alas!
 Ful craftyir to play she was
 Than Achaus that made the game
 First of the Chesse, so was his name,
 But God woide I had ones or twise
 Iconde, and knowe the joperdise,
 That coude the Greke Pythagores,
 I shulde have plaide the bet at ches,
 And kept my fers the bet therby,
 And though wherto? for trewily 670
 I holde that wishe not worthe a stre,
 It had be ner the bet for me,
 For fortune can so many' a wyle,
 Ther be but fewe can her begile,
 And eke she is the lasse to blame,
 My selfe I wolde have do the same,
 Before God, had I ben as she,
 She ought the more excusid be,
 For this I say yet more therto,
 Had I be God, and might have do 680
 My wyl, whan she my fers ycaught,
 I wolde have drawen the same draught,
 For al so wise God gyve me reste,
 I dare wel swere, she toke the beste,
 But throughe that draught I have ylorne
 My blyse, alas that I was borne!
 For evirmore I trowe trewly,
 For al my wil, ny luste wholly
 Is turne, but wote ye, what to done?
 By' our Lorde it is to dyin sone, 690
 For nothings I ne leve it nought,
 But lyve and dye, right in this thought,
 There n'ys planet in firmamente,
 Ne' in ayre ne' in erthe none elemente,
 That they ne yeve me' a yeste echone
 Of wepyng, whan I am alone;
 For whan that I advise me wele,
 And bethinke me everydele,
 How that there lieth in rekiunge
 In my sorowis for nothings, 700
 And howe there livith no gladnesse
 May gladdin me of my distresse,
 And howe I have losse suffisaunce,
 And therto I have no plesaunce,
 Than may I say, I have right nought,
 And whan al this falleth in my thought,
 Alas, than am I ovircome,
 For that is done, this not to come,
 I have more sorowe than Tantale.
 And whan I herde him tel this tale 710
 Thus pitouilly, as I you tell,
 Unnethis myght I lengir dwell,
 It did myn herre so mochill wo.
 A gode sir (qð I) say nat so,
 Have some pite on your nature,
 That fourmid you to a creature,

Remembrith you of Socrates,
For he ne countith not thre strees
Of nought that fortune coude ydo.

No (qð he) I ne can not so.
Why gode sir, yes parde (qð I)
Ne say not so for truily
Though ye had lost the feris twelve,
And for sorowe murdrid your selve,
Ye shulde be dampnid in this case,
By as gode right as Medea was,
That slough her childrin for Jason,
And Phyllis, for Demophoon
That hing her self so welaway!
For he had brokin his terme day
To come to her! Anothir rage
Had Dido, the quene of Carthage,
That slough her self, for Æneas
Was false, for whiche a fole she was;
And Echo dyed for Narcissus
Ne wolde nat love her, and right thus Hath many' an othir foly done,
And for Dalila died Sampson,
That sloughe him selfe with a pilere,
But there is no man alive here
Wolde for ther feris make this wo.

Why so? (qð he) it is not so,
Thou wotest ful lytil what thou menest,
For I have losse more than thou wencst.
And howe may that ybe (qð I)
Gode sir, tellith me al wholly,
In what wise, howe, why, and wherefore
That ye have thus your blisse ylore.

Blithely (qð he) come sit The down,
I tel The on condicioun,
Thou shalte wholly with all thy wit
Do thyne entente to herkin it.

Yes, sir; than swere thy trouthe therto,
Gladly to holdin The hereto.
I shal right blithe, so God me save,
Wholly with al the witte I have Here you as wel as er I can.

A godde's halfe (qð he) and began.

Sir (qð he) sithins firste I couthe
Have any manir witte fro youthe,
Or kindly understandinge,
To comprehend in any thinge
What love was, in mine ownè wit
Dredilese I have evir yet
Be tributary, and yeve rente
To love wholly, with gode entente,
And through plesaunce become his thral,
With gode wil, body, herte and al,
Al this I put in his servage,
As to my lorde, and dyd homage;
And full devoutly I praide hym tho
He shulde beset myne herte so,
That it plesaunce unto him were,
And worship to my lady dere.

And this was long, and many' a yere, (Er that min hert was set o where)
That I dyd thus, and ne wist why,
I trowe it came me kindly,
Paraunter I was therto most able,
As a white wal, or a table,
For it is redy to catché and take Al that men wollin therin make,
Whethir men will portrey or painte,
Be the werkis nevir so quainte.

And thilke tyme I farid right so,
I was able to have lernid tho,
And to have conde, as wel or better,
Parauntir, eithir arte or lettir,
But for love came first in my thought,
Therefore I ne forgate it nought,

710 I chees love to be my first crafte,
And therefore it is with me laste,
For why? I toke it of so yonge age;
That malice ne had my corage
Not that time turnid to nothing
Thorough to mokil knowleging,
For that tyme youth my maistresse
Governid me in ydilnesse,
For it was in my firste youth,
And tho ful litil gode I couthe,
For al my werkis were flirtyng
That time, and al my thought varying;
Al thinges were to me yliche gode,
730 That knewe I tho, but thus it stode.

It happed that I came on a day
In to a place, there that I sey
Trewly the fairist companie
Of ladies, that er man with eye
Had sene togheters in o place,
Shal I clepe it happe, eithir grace,
810 That brought me there? nought but fortune,
That is to lyin ful comune,
The false traitresse perverse,
740 God wolde that I coude clepe her werse,
For now she worchith me ful wo,
And I wol tel The sone why so.

Amonges these ladies thus echone,
The sothe to sayin, I sawe one,
That ne was lyke none of the route,
For I dare swere, withoutin doute,
820 That as the sommer's sonnè bright
Is fairer, clerer, and hath more lyght
Than any other planet in heven, 750 The monè, or the sterris seven,

For al the worlde right so had she Surmountin hem al of beaute,
Of manir, and of comlyneste
Of stature, and wel set gladnesse,
Of godelyhede, and so wel besey,
830 Shortly, what shal I more ysey,
By God and by his holowes twelve,
It was my swete right al her selve:
She had so stedfast countenaunce,
760 So noble porte, and maintenaunce;
And Love, that wel yherde my bone
Yhad espyid me thus sone,
That she fill sonè in my thought,
As helpe me God, so was I cought
So sodainly, that I ne toke 840 No maner counsaile, but at her loke,
And at min herte, for why? her eyen
So gladly I trowe myn herte feyne,
That purely tho min ownè thought
770 Said, it were bet serve her for nought,
Than with anothir to be wele,
And it was sothe, for every dele
I wil anone right tel The why.

I sawe her daunce so comily,
Carol and sing so swetily,
And laugh, and play so womanly,
850 And lokin so debonairly
So godely speke and so frendely,
That certes I trowe that evirmore
780 N'as sene so blisful a trefore,
For evèry here on her hed
The sothe to say it was not red,
Ne neithir yelowè ne browne it n'as,
Me thought moste like to golde it was,
And whiche eyin my lady had,
860 Debonaire, gode, and glad, and sad,
Simple, of gode mokil, not to wide!
Therto her loke n'as not aside,
Ne' ovirthwart, but beset so wele,
790 It drewe and toke up everydele

Al whiche that on her gan beholde,
 Her eyin semed anone she wolde
 Have mercy, folly wendin so,
 But it was ner the rathir do,
 It n'as no counterfetid thinge,
 It was her owne pure loking,
 Whiche that the goddesse dame Nature
 Had made 'hem opin by mesure,
 And close, for were she ner so glad,
 Her loking was not solishe sprad,
 Ne wildily, though that she plaide,
 But er me thought her eyin saide
 By God my wrathe is al forieue;
 Therwith her lifte so well to live,
 That dulnesse was of her adrad,
 She n'as to sobre ne to glad,
 In alle thingis more mesure
 Ne had nevir I trowe cecture,
 But many' one with her loke she herte,
 And that sate her full lyte at herte,
 For she knewe nothinge of ther thought,
 But wher she knewe, or knewe it nought,
 Algate she ne' wrought of 'hem a fire,
 To get her love no nere n'as he,
 That woned at home, than he in Inde,
 The formist was alway behinde;
 But gode folke ovir al othir
 She loved, as man may his brothir,
 Of whiche love she was wondir large,
 In skilful placis that bere charge;
 But whiche a visage had she therro!
 Alas! my herte is wondir wo,
 That I ne can discrivin it,
 Me lackith both Englishe and wit
 For to undo it at the ful,
 And eke my spirites ben so dull,
 So gret a thinge for to devise,
 I have not wyt that can suffyse
 To comprehendin her beaute;
 But thus moche I dare saine, that she Was white, rody, freshe, lifely hewed,
 And every day her beaute newed,
 And nyghe her face was aldirbeste,
 For certis nature had soche leste
 To make that faire, that trewly she Was her chefe patron of beaute,
 And chefe ensample' of al her werke
 And monstre, for be' it ner so derke
 Me thinketh I se her evirmo,
 And yet morecovir, though al tho
 That ever lived, were now a lyve,
 Ne wolde thei have founde to discrive
 In al her face a wickid signe,
 For it was sad, simple, and benigne.
 And soche a godely swete speche
 Yhad that swete, my lyv'is leche,
 So frendely, and so well ygrounded,
 Upon reson so wel ifounded,
 And so trefable to al gode,
 That I dare swere wel by the rode,
 Of eloquence was nevir fonde
 So swete a sowning and faconde,
 Ne trewir tonged, ne scornid lasse,
 Ne bet coude hele, that by the masse
 I durste swere, though the Pope it songe,
 That ther was ner yet through her tonge
 Man ne woman gretly harmid,
 As for her was al harme yhid,
 Ne lasse flatiring in her worde,
 That purely her simple recorde
 Was founde as trewe as any bonde,
 Or trouthe, of any mann'is honde.
 Ne chide she coude nevir a dele,
 That knowith al the worlde ful wele;

But soche a fairenesse of a necke
 Yhad that swete, that bone nor brecke . . . 940
 N'as there none sein, that misselatte,
 It was white, smothe, freight, and pure flatte;
 Withoutin hole, or canel bone,
 870 And by seming, she ne had none.
 Her throte, as I have nowe memoire,
 Semed as a rounde tour of yvoire,
 Of gode gretnesse, and not to grete,
 And Faire white ywas she here,
 That was my ladies namè right,
 And she was therro faire and bright, . . . 950
 She ne had not her namè wronge;
 Right faire sholdirs, and body longe
 She had, and armis evir lith, 880 Fattishe, fleshy, nat grete ther with,
 Right white handis, and nailis rede,
 Rounde brestis: And of a gode brede
 Her hippis were, a freight flatte backe,
 I knewe on her none othir lacke
 That al her limmis n'ere pure sewing,
 In as ferre as I had knowing; . . . 960
 Therro she coude so wel yplaye
 What that her lyst, that I dare saye
 That she was lyke to torchè bright,
 890 That every man may take of light
 Ynough, and it hath ner the leste
 Of manir and of comlynesse.
 Right so farid my lady dere,
 For every wight of her manere
 Moght catche ynough, if that he wolde,
 Yf he had eyen her to beholde, . . . 970
 For I dare swere wel, if that she Had among tenne thousande ybe,
 She woldin have be at the beste,
 900 A chefe myroure of al the feste,
 Though they had stondin in a rowe
 To mennis eyen, that coude have knowe;
 For where so men had plaide, or waked,
 Me thought the felowshippe as naked
 Withoutin her, that I sawe ones, . . . 980
 As a corowne withoutin stones;
 Trewily she was to min eye
 The' solein Phoenix of Arabye,
 For there livith nevir but one,
 910 Ne suche as she ne knowe I none:
 To speke of godenesse, trewly she Had as mochil debonaire
 As er had Hester in the Bible,
 And more, if more were possible;
 And sothe to sayin, therwithal
 She hadde a witte so general, . . . 990
 So whole enclinid to al gode,
 That al her witte was sette by the' rode Without malyce, upon gladnesse,
 920 And therro' I sawe ner yet a lesse
 Harmful, than she was in doing,
 I say not that she n' hadde knowyng
 What harme ywas, or ellis she Had coude no gode, so thinkith me;
 And trewly, for to speke of trouthe,
 But she had had, it had be routhe, . . . 1000
 Therof she had so moche her dele,
 And I dare saine, and swere it wele,
 That trouthe him selfe over al and al
 930 Had chose his manor, principal
 In her, that was his resting place;
 Therro she had the moste grace
 To have stedfaste perseveraunce,
 And esy' attempre govirnaunce,
 That evir I knewe, or wiste yet,
 So pure sufferant was her wit, . . . 1010
 And reson gladly she' understode,
 It folowid wel, she coude gode,
 She

She usid gladly to do wele,
 These were her manirs every dele.
 Therwith she lovid so wel right,
 She wronge do woldin to no wight;
 No wight ne might do her no shame,
 She lovid so wel her owne name.
 Her lust to holde no wight in honde,
 Ne be thou fiker, she wolde not fonde,
 To holdin no wight in balaunce
 By halfe worde, ne by countinaunce;
 But if men wolde upon her lye,
 Ne fende men into Walakye;
 To Pruise, and to Tartarie,
 To Alifaundrie, ne Turkye,
 And bidde him fast, anon that he Go hodelesse into the drie Se,
 And come home by the Carrenare;
 And sir, be ye nowe full ryght ware
 That I may of you here men faine
 Wurshippe, or that ye come againe.
 She ne used no soche knackis smale.
 But therfore that I tel my tale,
 Right on this same, as I have saide,
 Was wholly al my love ylaide,
 For certis she was that swete wife,
 My suffisaunce, my luste, my life,
 Min hope, min hele, and al my blesse,
 My worlde's welfare, and my goddesse;
 And I wholly' hers, and every dele.
 By' our Lorde (qð I) I trowe you wele,
 Hardly your love was wel beset,
 I n'ot howe it might have do bet.
 Bertir! ne not so wel (qð he)
 I trowe it sir (qð I) parde.
 Nay leve it wel: Sir so do I,
 I leve you wel, that trewily
 You thought that she ywas the best,
 And to beholde the alderfairest,
 Who so had loked her with your eyen.
 With myn! nay al whiche that her seyen,
 Sayid and swore that it was so,
 And though they ne had, I wolde tho
 Have lovid best my lady fre,
 Though I had had al the beaute
 That er had Alcibiades,
 And al the strenght of Hercules;
 And thereto had the worthinesse
 Of Alifaundre, and al the' richesse
 That evir was in Babyloine,
 In Carthage, or in Macedoine,
 Or in Rome, or in Ninive,
 And therro al so hardy be
 As was Hector, so have I joye;
 That Achilles yslough at Troye;
 And therfore was he slayne also
 In a temple, for bothe two Were slaine, he' and Antilegius,
 And so saithe Dares Fregius,
 For the love of Polyxena,
 Or ben as wise as Minerva,
 I wolde evir, withoutin drede
 Have lovid her, for I muste nede.
 Nede! Nay trewly I gabbe nowe,
 Nought nede, and I wol tellin howe,
 For of gode wil min herte it wolde,
 And eke to love her I was holde,
 As for the fairist and the beste,
 She was as gode, so have I reste,
 As was Penelope of Grece,
 Or as the noble wife Lucrece,
 That was the beste, he tellith thus,
 The Romane Titus Livius,
 She was as gode, and nothing like,
 Though ther stories be autentike,

Algate she was as trewe as she.
 But wherfore that I tellin The,
 Whan that I first my lady sey,
 I was right yonge, the sothe to sey;
 And ful gret nede I had to lerne,
 Whan that myn herte woldin yerne,
 To love it was a gret emprise,
 But as my wite wolne beste suffise,
 Astir my yonge and childely wit,
 Withoutin drede I beset it
 To lovin her in my beste wise,
 To do' her wurship, and the servise,
 Whiche that I coude tho, by my trouthe,
 Withoutin faining, cithir slouth,
 For wondir faine I wolde her se,
 So mokill it amendid me,
 That whan I sawe her a morowe;
 I was warished of al my sorowe
 Of al day aftir, tel' it were eve,
 Me thoughtin nothings might me greve;
 Were my sorowes nevir so smerte,
 And yet she syt so in min herte,
 That by my trouthe, I n'oldè nought
 For al this wolde out of my thought
 Yleve my lady, no trewly.
 Nowe by my trouthe sir (qð I)
 Me thinkith ye have soche a chaunce
 As shrifte, withoutin repentaunce.
 Repentaunce, nay nay fye (qð he)
 Shuldin I nowe repentin me
 To love, nay certes than were I wel
 Worse than ywas Achitophel,
 Or Antenor, so have I joye,
 The traitour that betrayid Troye,
 Or than the false Ganelon,
 He that purchasid the traifon
 Of Roulande, and of Oliver,
 Nay, while that I am alive here
 I n'yl foriet her nevirmo.
 Nowe gode sir (qð I) to him tho
 Ye have wel tolde me here before,
 It is no nede to reherse it more,
 Howe that ye sawe her first, and where,
 But wolde ye tel me the manere
 To her, whiche was your firste speche,
 Therof I woldè you beseeche,
 And howe that she knewe first your thought,
 Whethir ye lovid her, or nought,
 And tellith me eke, what ye have lore,
 I herde you tellin here before,
 Ye saide, thou n'otist what thou menest,
 For I have losse more than thou weneist,
 And what losse is that (qð I tho)
 N'il she not love you, is it so?
 Or havin ye ought done amis,
 That she hath kiste you, is it this?
 For Godd's love tellith me al.
 Before God (qð he) and I shal,
 I say right as I have ysaide,
 On her was al my love ylaide,
 And yet she n'iste it ner a dele,
 Not longè tyme, lewth it wele,
 For be right sykir, I durst nought
 For al this worlde tel her my thought,
 Ne' I wolde have wrathid her trewly,
 For wost thou why? she was lady
 Of the body that had the herte,
 And whoso' hath that may not avertere.
 But for to kepe me fro' ydlenesse
 Trewly I dyd my businelle
 To make songis as I best coude,
 And ofin time I songe 'hem loude,
 And made songis this a grete dele,
 Although I coude nat make so wele

Songis, ne knewe the arte so al
As coude Lamek's sone Tubal,
That founde out first the arte of songe,
For as his brothir's hamirs ronge
Upon his anvelt up and downe,
Therof he toke the firste sowne.

But Grekes faine of Pythagoras,
That he the first findir ywas
Of the arte, Aurora tellith so;
But therof no force of 'hem two,
Algatis songis thus I made
Of my felyng, min herte to glade,
And lo! this was the althir first,
I n'ot whethir it were the werst,

Lorde! it makith min hertè light,
Whan that I thinke on that swete wight,
That is so semely on to se,
And wishe to God it might so be
That she wolde holde me for her knight,
My lady, that is so faire and bright.

Nowe have I tolde The, soth to say,
My firste songe, upon a day
I bethought me what mochil wo
And sorowe that I suffrid tho
For her, and yet she wiste it nought,
Ne tel her durst I not my thought,
Alas! thaught I, I can no rede,
And but I tel her, I'am but dede;
And if I tel her, to say sothe,
I am adradde she wol be wrothe,
Alas! what shal I than ydo?

In this debate I was so wo,
Me thought myne hertè brast atwaine;
So at the laste, sothe for to faine,
I bethought me that Dame Nature
Ne formid nevir in creture
So mochil beaute trewily
And bountie, withoutin mercy.

In hope of that, my tale I tolde
With sorowe, as that I ner sholde,
For nedis, and mangre myne hed
I must have tolde her, or be ded:
I n'ot wel howe that I began,
Ful yvil reherce it I can,
And eke as helpe me God withal
I trowe it was in the dismal
That was the ten woundes of Egypte,
For many' a worde I ovirskipte
In telling my tale, for pure fere
Lest that my wordis mysleset were:
With sorowful hert, and woundes dede,
Softely and quaking for pure drede
And shame, and stinting in my tale,
For ferde and min hewe allè pale,
Ful ofte I wexte bothe pale and red,
Bowing to her I hinge the hed,
I durst not onis loke her on,
For wit, manir, and al was gone,
I saide: mercy swete, and no more,
It n'as no game, it fate me fore.

So at the laste, the sothe to faine,
Whan that myne herte was come againe,
To tellin shortly al my speche,
With whole herte I gan her beseche,
That she wolde be my lady swete,
And swore, and hertely gan her hete
Evir to be stedfaste and trewe,
And love her alway freschly newe,
And nevir othir lady have,
And all her worship for to save
As I beste coude, I swere her this,
For yours is al that er ther is,
For evirmore, myne hertè swete,
And ner to false you, but I mete,

I n'yl, as wise God helpe me so.

And whan I had my tale ydo,
God wote she' acomptid nor a stre
Of al my tale, so thoughtin me,
To tel shortly, right as it is,
Trewly her answere it was this,
I can not nowe wel countrefete
Her wordis, but this was the grete
Of her answere: she sayid nay

1170 Al utterly; alas that day

The sorowe I suffrid and the wo!
That trewly Cassandra, that so
Bewaylid the distruccion
Of Troyè, and of Ilion,

Had ner soche sorowe as I tho,
I durstin no more say therto

For pure fere, but ystale away,
And thus I lyved ful many' a day,
That trewily I had no nede

1180 Firthir than at my bedd'is hede

Nevir a day to sechin sorowe,
I founde it redy every morowe,
For why? I loved her in no gere.

So it befell an othir yere

I thought onis I wouldin sonde
To doe her knowe, and undirstonde
My wo, and she well undirstode

That I ne wilnid thyng but gode,

And worship, and to kepe her name

1190 Ovir all thynges, and drede her shame,

And was so busie her to serve,

And pitie were I shouldin sterve,

Sithe that I wilned none harme iwis.

So when my Ladie knewe all this,

My Ladie yave me all whollie

The noble yest of her mercie,

Savyng her worship by al waies,

Dredeclesse, I mene none othir waies,

And therewith she yave me a ryng,

1200 I trowe it was the firste thyng,

But if myne hertè was iwaxe

Glad, that it is no nede to axe.

As helpe me God, I was as blive

Yraifid, as fro deth to live,

Of all happis the aldirbest,

The gladdist, and the moste at rest,

For truilie that swete wight,

When I had wrong, and she the right

She wouldin alwaie so godelie

1210 Foryeve me so debonairlie,

In all my youth, in allè chaunce

She toke me in her govirnaunce,

Therewith she was alwaie so true,

Our joye was evir iliche newe,

Our hertis werne so even a paire,

That nevir n'as that one contraire

Unto that othir for no wo,

For sothe iliche thei suffrid tho.

O blisse, and eke o sorowe bothe,

Illiche thei were bothe glad and wrothe.

All was us one, withoutin were,

And thus we lived full many' a yere

So well, I can not tellin how.

Sir (qð I) and where is she now?

Now qð he and ystinte anone,

Therewith he woxe as dedde as stonè,

And faied, alas that I was bore!

That was the losse; that here before

I tolde The, that I had ylome.

1230 Berthinke The how I faied before,

Thou woste full lityl what thou menest,

For I have losse more then thou wenest.

God wor alas! right that was she.

Alas sir how! what maie that be?

She

She is dedde: Naie! Yes by my trouthe.
Is that your losse? by God it is routhe.

1310

And with that wordè right anone
Thei gan to strake forthe, all was done
For that tyme, the Hart huntynge.

With that me thoughtin that this kyng
Began homewardis for to ride
Unto a place was there beside,
Whiche that was from us but a lite,
A long castill with wallis white,
By saint John on a richè hill,
As me mette, but thus it befill.

1320

Right thus me mette, as I you tell,
That in the castell there was a bell,
As it had smittin houris twelve,
And therewith I awoke my selve,
And found me lying in my bedde,
And the boke whiche that I had redde
Of Alcyone, and Ceix the kyng,
And of the Goddis of slepyng,
I found it in myne hond ful evin,
Thought I, this is so queint a swevin,
That I would by processe of tyme
Fonde to put this swevin in rime,
As I can best, and that anon
This was my swevin, now it is doon.

As who saieth, no manne is all true I gesse,
And therefore, though I hight for to expresse
The sorowe' and woe that is in Mariage,
I dare not writen of it no wickidnesse,
Lest I my self fall eft in soche dorage.

I woll not saie how that it is the chaine

But I dare saie, were he out of his paine,
As by his will he would be boundin never,
But thilke doidd sole, that eft hath lever

The Assemble of Foules.

All Fowles are gather'd before Nature on St. Valentine's Day, to chuse their Mates. A formal Eagle being beloved of three Tercels, requireth a Year's respite to make her choice, upon this Triall, Qui bien aime, tard oublie, he that loveth well, is slow to forget.

THE life so short, the craft so long to lerne,
The assaye so hard, so sharp the conquere-
ryng,

The dredfull joy, alwaie that sit so yerne,
All this mene I by love, that my felyng
Astonieth with his wondirfull werkyng
So fore iwis, that when I on him thinke,
Naught were I well, whether I flete or sink!

For all be that I knowe not love in dede
Ne wor how that he quitirh folke ther hire,
Yet happith me full ofte in bokis rede
Of his miracis, and his cruill ire,
There rede I well he woll be lorde and sire,
I dare not saie, his strokis be so fore,
But God save soche a lorde, I can no more.

Of usage, what for lust and what for lore,
On bokis rede I oft, as I you tolde,
But wherfore that I speke all this, naught yore
Agon, it happid me for to beholde
Upon a boke iwrite with lettirs old,

And thereupon a certain thing to lerne 20
The longe daie full fast I radde and yerne;

For out of the olde feldis, as men saieth,
Comith all this newe come, fro yere to yere,
And out of olde bokis, in gode saieth
Comith all this newe science, that men lere;
But now to purpose, as of this mattere
To redin forthe, it gan me so delite,
That all that daie me thought it but a lite.

This boke, of whiche I makin mencion,
Entitid was right claus, as I shall tell, 30
Tullius of the drame of Scipion,
Chapiters seven it had, of heven and hell,
And yerth, and soulis that therein do dwell,
Of whiche, as shortly as I can it trete,
Of this sentence I woll you saie the grete.

First tellith it, when Scipion was come
In Affrike, how he metith Massinisse,
That hym for joie in armis hath inome,

5 N

Then

Then tellith he her speche, and all the blisse,
That was betwixt 'hem, til the daie gan misse, 40
And how his auncestre Affrikan so dere
Gan in his slepe that night till hym appere.

Then tellith it, that from a sterre place
How Affrikan hath hym Carthage yshewed,
And warnid hym beforne of all his grace,
And saied hym what man, lerid eithir leude,
That lovith common profite, well itheude,
He should into a blisfull place ywende,
There as joye is, that last withoutin ende.

Then askid he, if folke that here ben dede 50
Have life, and dwellyng in an othir place.
And Affrikan saied ye, withoutin drede,
And how our present worldly liv'is space
N'is but a manir deth, what waie we trace,
And rightfull folke shull gon aftir thei die
To heven, and shewid hym the Galaxie.

Then shewed he him the little yerth that here is To regarde of the hevin's quantite,
And after shewid he hym the nine speris,
And aftir that the melodie herd he, 60
That comith of thilke speris thryis thre,
That welles of Musike ben, and melodie
In this worlde here, and cause of harmonie.

Then saied he him, fens that yerth was so lite;
And full of tourment, and of hard grace,
That he ne shuld hym in this worlde delite,
Then tolde he him in certain yeris space
That every sterre should come into his place
There it was first, and all should out of mind,
That in this worlde is doen of all mankynd. 70

Then praied hym Scipion, to tell hym all
The waie to come into that hevin blisse
And he saied: First knowe thy self immortal,
And loke aie busely that thou werche and wisse
To common profite, and thou shalt not misse
To come swiftly, unto that place dere,
That full of blisse is, and of soulis clere.

And brekirs of the lawe, the sothe to faine,
And likerous folke, aftir that thei ben dede,
Shull whirle about the world, alwaie in pain, 80
Till many' a worlde be passid, out of drede,
And then foryevin all ther wickid dede,
Then shullin thei come to that blisfull place,
To whiche to comin God sendin The grace.

The daie gan failin, and the darkè night,
That revith bestis from ther businesse,
Berafte me my boke for lacke of light,
And to my bedde I gan me for to dresse
Fulfilled of thought, and busie hevinesse,
For bothe I had thyng, whiche that I ne wolde 90
And eke I ne had that thyng that I wolde.

But finally my spirite at the laste
For werie of my labour all that daie
Toke rest, that madin me to slepin faste,
And in my slepe I met, as that I laie,
How Affrikan, right in the self araie,
That Scipion hym sawe, before that tide,
Was come, and stode right at my bedd's side.

The werie huntir slepyng in his bedde,
The wodde ayen his minde goith anone, 100
The Judge ydremith how his ples be spedde,
The Cartir dremith how his cartis gone,
The rich of gold, the knight fight with his sone,

The sicke ymette he drinkith of the tonne,
The lovir mette he hath his ladie wonne.

Can I not faine, if that the cause ywere
For I had radde of Affrikan beforne,
That madin me to mete that he stode there,
But thus saied he: thou hast The so wel borne 110
In lokyng of myne olde boke all to torne,
Or whiche Macrobie ne raught not a lite,
That somedele of thy labour would I quite.

Thou Citherea, blisfull Ladie swete,
That with thy fire brond dauntist when The lest,
That madist me this swevin for to mete,
Be thou my helpe in this, for thou maist best,
As wisely as I seigh the North Northwest
When I began my swevin for to write,
So yeve me might to rime it and endite.

This foresaid Affrikan me hent anone, 120
And forthe with hym unto a gate ybrought
Right of a Parke, ywallid with grene stone,
And oer the gate with lettirs large ywrought
There werin versis writtin, as me thought,
On eithir halfe, of full grete difference,
On which I shall you saie the plain sentence.

Through me men gon into that blisful place,
Of herris hele, and dedly woundis cure,
Through me men gone into the well of grace,
There grene and lustie Maie shall er endure, 130
This is the waie to all gode avinture,
Be glad thou rede, and thy sorowe of cast,
All open am I, passe in, and spede The fast.

Through me men gon, then spake that othir side,
Unto the mortall strokis of the spere,
Of whiche disdain and daungir is the gide,
There nevir tre shall fruct, ne levis bere,
This streme you ledith to the so'rowfull were,
There as the fishe in prison is all drie,
The' eschewyng is onely the remedie. 140

These versis of gold and Asure writte were,
Of whiche I gan astonied to beholde,
For with that one encrefid all my fere,
And with that othir gan my herte to bolde,
That one me het, that othir did me colde,
No wit had I, for errour for to chese
To entre' or slie, or me to save or lese.

Right as betwixtin Adamantis two
Of evin weight a pece of yron fet,
Ne hath no might to movin to ne fro, 150
For what that one maie hale, that othir let,
So fared I, that I n'ist where me was bet
To entre' or leve, til Affrikan my gide Me hent and shovin, at the gatis wide. shows in at

And saied, it standith writtin in thy face
Thyne errour, though thou tell it not to me,
But dred The not to come into this place,
For this writyng is nothyng mente by The,
Ne by none, but he Lov's servaunt be,
For thou of Love hast lost thy tast I gesse, 160
As sicke man hath of swete and bittinesse.

But natheles, although that thou be dull,
That which thou canst not doe, yet maiest thou se,
For many' a man, that maie not stande a pull,
Yet liketh it hym at wrestlyng for to be,
And demith whethir he doe bet, or he,
And if thou haddist connyng for t' endite,
I shall The shewin mattir of to write.

With

With that my hand in his he toke anon,
Of whiche I comfort caught, and went in fast, 170
But Lorde! so I was glad, and well begon,
For ovir all, where I myne eyin cast,
Were treis clad with leves, that aie shal last,
Eche in his kinde, with colour freshe and grene,
As Emeraude, that joie it was to sene.

The bildir Oke, and eke the hardie Ashe,
The pillir Elme, the coffir unto caraine,
The Boxe pipetre, the Holme to whippis lashe,
The sailing Firre, the Cypres deth to plaine,
The shortir Ewe, the Aspe for shaftis plaine, 180
The Olive of pece, and eke the dronkin vine,
The victor Palme, the Laurir to divine.

A gardein sawe I, full of blofomed bowis,
Upon a Rivir, in a grenè Mede
There as swetenesse evirmore inough is,
With flouris white, and blewes, yelowes, and rede,
And colde and clere Wellestremis, nothyng dede,
That swommin full of smale fishis light,
With finnis rede, and scalis silvir bright.

On every bough the birdis herd I syng 190
With voice of angell, in ther harmonic
That busied hem, ther birdis forthe to bryng,
The little pretie Conies to ther plaie gan hic;
And furthir all about I gan espie
The dredfull Roe, the Buck, the Hart, and Hind, Squirils, and bestis small of gentle kind.

Of instrumentes of stringis in accorde
Herd I so plaie a ravishyng swetenesse,
That God, that makir is of all and Lorde,
Ne herd nevir a bettir, as I gesse, 200
Therewith a winde, unneth it might be lesse,
Made in the levis grene a noise soft
Accordant to the foulis song on loft.

The aire of the place so attempre was,
That ner was ther grevaunce of hot ne cold,
There was eke every wholsome spice and gras,
Ne no man maie there waxin like ne old,
Yet was there more joie a thousande fold
Then I can tell, or evir could or might,
There is evir clere daie, and nevir night. 210

Undir a tre beside a well I feye
Cupide our lorde his arrowes forge and file,
And at his fete his bowe all redie laye,
And well his doughtir temprid all the while
The heddis in the well, and with her wile
She couchid hem afir as thei should serve,
Some for to slea, and some to wound and carve.

Tho was I ware of plesance anon right,
And of arraie, luste, beaute, and curtisie,
And of the craft, that can yhave the might 220
To doen by force a wight to doen folie,
Disfigurid was she, I will not lie,
And by hymself, undir an Oke I gesse, Sawe I Delite, that stode with Gentilnesse.

Then sawe I beautie, with a nice atire,
And youth, all full of game and jolite,
Fole hardinesse, flattirie, and desire,
Mcflagerie, and mede, and othir thre,
Ther namis shal not here be tolde for me,
And upon pillirs grete of Jaspir long 230
I sawe a temple of Brasse foundid strong.

And about the temple dauncid alwaie
Women inow, of which some there ywere

Faire of hemself, and some of hem were gaie,
In kirtils all disheveled went thei there,
That was ther office er, fro yere to yere,
And on the temple sawe I white and faire
Of Dovyis sittynge many a thousande paire.

Before the temple dore full sobirlic
Dame Pece yfat, a curtaine in her honde, 240
And her besidis wondir discretlic
Dame Patience yfittynge there I fonde,
With face pale, upon an hill of sonde,
And althir nexte, within and eke without Behest and Arte, and of ther folke a rout.

Within the temple of sighis hote as fire
I herd a swough, that gan about to ren,
Whiche sighis were engendrid with desire,
That madin every herte for to bren 250
Of newe flambe, and well espied I then
That all the cause of sorowes, that thei drie,
Come of the bittir Goddis jelousie.

The God Priapus sawe I as I went
Within the temple in soveraine place yflonde
In soche arraie, as when the Asle hym shent
With crie by night, and with sceptr in honde,
Full busilie men gan assaie and fonde
Upon his hedde to set of sondrie hewe
Garlandis, full of freshe floris newe.

And in a privie corner, in disport 260
Foude I Venus, and her portir Richesse,
That was full noble, and hautin of her port,
Darke was that place, but afirward lightnesse
I sawe a lite, unnethes it might be lesse,
And on a bed of golde she laie to restle,
Till that the hote Sonne began to Weste.

Her gildid heris with a goldin threde
Iboundin were, untressid as she laie,
And nakid from the brest unto the hede
Men might her se, and sethylly for to saie 270
The remenaunt covied well to my paie
Right with a lityl kerelafe of Valence,
There nas no thickir clothe of no defence.

The place gave a thousande favours fore,
And Bacchus God of Wine fate her beside,
And Ceres next, that doeth of hunger bote,
And as I saied, amiddis laie Cypride,
To whom on kneis the yong folkis cride
To be ther helpe, but thus I let her lie,
And farthir in the temple I gan espie, 280

That in dispite of Diana the chaste
Full many a bowe ibroke hing on the wall
Of maidins, soche as gone ther tymis waste
In her service, and paintid ovir all
Of many a storie, of whiche I touchin shal
A fewe, as of Calisto and Atalante,
And many a maide, of which the name I want,

Semiramis, Candace, and Hercules,
Biblis, Dido, Thisbe, and Pyramus,
Tristram, Isoude, Paris, and Achilles, 290
Helaine, Cleopatra, and Troilus,
Scylla, and eke the mother of Romulus,
All these were paintid on that othir side,
And all ther love, and in what plite thei did

When I was comen ayen into the place
That I of spake, that was so sote and grene,
Forthe walked I tho, my selvin to solace,
Tho was I ware, where there yfate a Quene,
That

That as of light the Sommir Sonnè shene
Passith the Sterre, right so ovir mesure 300
She fairir was then any other cature.

And in a launde, upon an hill of floures,
Was set this Quene this noble Goddesse Nature,
Of braunchis were her hallis and her boures
Iwrought, after her craft, and her mesure,
Neither n'as foule, that cometh of engendrure,
That there ne were yprest, in her presence,
To take her dome, and yeve her audience.

For this was on saint Valentin's daie,
When every foule comith to chese her make 310
Of every kinde, than men ythinkin maie,
And that so huge a noife gan thei to make,
The yerth, the se, and tre, and every lake
So full was, that unne this there was space
For me to stande, so full was all the place.

And right as Alaine, in the plaint of kinde,
Deviseth Nature of soche araie and face,
In soche araie men mightin her there finde,
This noble Empreffe full of alle grace
Bad every foule takin her owne place, 320
As thei were wont alwaie, fro yere to yere,
On saint Valentines daie to standin there.

That is to saie, the foulis of ravine
Were highist set, and then the foulis smale,
That etin, as them Nature would encline,
As worme or thing, of whiche I tell no tale,
And watirfoule fate lowist in the dale,
And foules that liveth by fede, sat on the grene,
And that so fele, that wondir was to sene.

There mightin men the roiall Egle finde, 330
That with his sharpe loke persith the son.
And othir Eglis of a lowir kinde,
Of whiche that clerkis well devisin con,
There was the tirant with his fethirs don
And grene, I mene the goshaue that doth pine
To birdes, for his outrageous ravine.

The gentle faucon, that with his fete distreinet
The kyng's hand, the hardie Sperhaue eke
The Qual's foe, the Merlion that peinet
Hymself full oft, the Larkè for to seke, 340
There was the Dove, with her eyin so meke,
The jelous Swan, ayenst his deth that singeth,
The Oule eke, that of deth the bode ybringeth,

The Crane, the Geant, with his tromp's foune,
The thief the Chough, and eke the chattring Pie,
The scornynge Jaie, the Ele's foe the Herounce,
The false Lapwing, alle full of trechirie,
The Starling, that the counsaile can bewrie,
The tame Ruddocke, and the cowarde Kite,
The Cocke, that horiloge is of thropes lite. 350

The Sparow Venus son, the Nightingale
That clepith forthe the freshe levis newe,
The Swalowe murder of the Beis smale,
That maken honie of flouris freshe of hewe,
The weddid Turtell, with his herte true,
The Pecoche, with his angell fethirs bright,
The Fesaunt, scornir of the Cocke by night.

The waker Gose, the Cuckowe er unkinde,
The Poppingeie full of delicacie,
The Drake destroyir of his owne kinde, 360
The Storke, the wreckir of advouterie,
The hote Cormeraunt, full of glotonie,
The Ravin wife the Crowe, with voice of care,

The Throstill olde, and Frostie feldfare.

What should I saie? of foules of every kind,
That in this worlde have fethirs and stature,
Men mightin in that place assemblid finde
Before that noble Goddesse of Nature,
And eche of them ydid his busie cure
Benignèlie to chese, or for to take 370
By her accorde, his formell or his make.

But to the point, Nature held on her hond
A formell Egle, of shape the gentilest
That evir she emong her workis fonde,
The moste benigne, and eke the godeliest,
In her was every vertue at his rest
So farforthe, that nature her self had blisse
To loke on her, and oft her becke to kisse.

Nature, the vicare of the' almightie Lorde,
That hote and colde, hevie, light, moiste, and drie
Hath knit, by evin nombir of accorde,
In esie voice began to speke and saie,
Foulis, take hede of my sentence I praie,
And for your ese, in forðring of your nede,
As fast as I maie speke, I will me spede.

Ye know well, how on S. Valentine's daie,
By my statute, and through my govirnaunce
Ye chese your makes, and aftir sie awaie
With 'hem, as I doe pricke you with plesaunce,
But nathelesse, as by rightfull ordinaunce 390
Maie I not let, for all this worlde to win,
But he that moste worthiest is, shall begin.

The tercell Egle, as ye knowe full wele,
The foule roiall, above you' all in degre,
The wise and worthie, secret, true as stele,
The whiche I have formid, as ye maie se,
In every parte, as it best likith me,
It nedith not this shape you to devise, 400
He shall first chese, and spekin in his gife.

And after hym, by ordir shall ye chese, 400
Aftir your kinde, everiche as you likith,
And as your hap is, shall ye win or lese,
But which of you, that love most entrikith,
God sende hym her, that forest for hym sikith,
And therwithall the Tercell gan she call,
And saied, my sonne, the choise is to The fall.

But nathelesse, in this condicion
Muste be the choice of everiche that is here,
That she agre to his eleccion,
Who so he be, that should yben her fere, 410
This is our usage aye, fro yere to yere,
And who so maie at this time have his grace,
In blisfull tyme he came into this place.

With hed enclined, and with full humble chere,
This roiall Tercell spake, and taried nought,
Unto my sovaine Ladie, and not my fere,
I chose and chese, with will, and hert, and thought
The formell on your hand, so well iwrought,
Whose I am all, and evir will her serve,
Doe what her luste, to doe me live or sterve. 420

Besechyng her of mercie, and of grace,
As she that is my Ladie sovèrain,
Or let me die here present in this place,
For certis long maie I not live in pain,
For in my herte is corvin every vain,
Havyng regarde onily to my trouthe,
My dere herte, havith on my wo some routhe.

And

And if that I be founde to her untrue,
Disobeisfaunt, or wilfull negligent,
Avauntour, or in processe love anewe, 430
I praie to you this be my judgement,
That with these foulis I be all to rent
That ilke daie, that she me evir finde
To her untrue, or in my gilte unkinde.

And sith none lovith her so well as I,
Although she nevir of love me behet,
Then ought she to be mine, through her mercie,
For othir bonde can I none on her knet,
For for welc nor wo nevir shall I let
To servin her, how far so that she wende, 440
Saie what you list, my tale is at an ende.

Full right as the sote and freshe redde Rose newe Against the Sommir Sunne ycoloured is,
Right so for shame all waxin gan the hewe
Of this Formell, when that she herd all this;
Neithir she answerde well, ne saied amis,
So fore abashed was she, till that Nature
Saied, doughtir drede you not, I you assure.

An othir Tercell Egle spake anon,
Of lowir kind, and saied that should not be, 450
I love her bet then ye doe, by saint John,
Or at the lest I love as well as ye,
And lengir have served her in my degre,
And if she should have loved for long lovynge,
To me alone had be the guerdonyng.

I dare eke saie, if she me findin false,
Unkinde, jangler, rebell in any wise;
Or jelous, doe me hangin by the halfe;
And but I berin me in her servise.
As well aye as my wit can me suffice, 460
Fro point to point, her honour for to save,
Take she my life, and all the gode I have.

The thirde Tercell Egle answerid tho,
Now sirs, ye se the lityl lesir here,
For every foule crieth out to be ago
Forthe with his make, or with his Lady dere,
And eke nature her self ne will not here,
For tarying her, not half that I would seie,
And but I speke, I must for sorowe deie.

Of longe service avaunt I me nothing, 470
But as possible is me to die to day
For wo, as he that hath be languishing
This twenty wintre, and wel it happin may,
A man may serve bettir, and more to pay,
In halfe a yere, although it were no more,
Than some man doth, that hath servid ful yore.

I say not this by me, for I ne can Do no servise, that may my lady plesse,
But I dare say, I am her trewist man,
As to my dome, and fainist wolde her plesse, 480
At short wordis, til that dethe me cese
I wil be hers, whethir I wake or winke,
And trewe, in al that herte may bethinke.

Of al my lyfe syth that day I was borne
So gentle ple, in love or othir thinge
Ne herdin nevir no man me before,
Who so that had right lesir and conninge
For to reherse ther chere, and ther spekyng,
And from the morowe gan this speche laste
Till downward went the sonne wondir faste. 490

The noise of foulis for to be deliverde
So loudè range, have don and let us wende,

That wel wende I, the wode had all to sniverd,
Come of they cried, alas! ye wil us shende,
Whan shal your curfid pleding have an ende?
How shulde a judge on eithir partie leve
For ye or nay, withoutin any preve.

The gose, the cuckowe, and the ducke also
So cryid keke keke, cuckow, queke queke hyc, 500
Thorough myne cris the noyse wentè tho,
The gose sayde than al this n'ys worthe a flye,
But I can shape herof a remedye,
And wil yfay my verdite, faire and swithe,
For watir foule, who so be wrothe or blithe.

And I for worme foule, saied the sole cuckow,
For I wil of min owne autorite,
For common spece, take on me the charge now,
For to deliver us is grete charite,
Ye may abydin a while, yet perde.
(Qd the turtel) if that it be your wil 510
A wight may speke, it were as gode be stil.

I am a fede soule, one the unworthiest
That wote I wel, and the lest of connyng,
But bettir is, that a wight is tonge rest
Than entremetin him of soche doynge,
Of whiche he neithir redin can nor singe,
And who so it doth, ful foule him self acloyeth,
For office uncommittid ofte amoyeth.

Nature, whiche that alway yhad an ere
To murmure of the leudenesse behinde, 520
With faconde voice saied, hold your tongis there,
And I shal sone, I hope a counsaile finde
You to deliver, and fro this noyse unbynde,
I charge of every flocke ye shall one cal,
To say the verdite of you foulis all.

Assentid were to this conclusyon
The birdis al, and foulis of ravine
Have cholin first, by plaine election,
The Terelet, of the faucon to define
Al ther sentence, and as him lust to termine, 530
And to Nature him gan they to presente,
And she acceptith him with glad entente.

The Terelet sayd than in this manere,
Ful harde it were to preve it by reton
Who lovith best this gentil Formel here,
For everiche hath loche replication,
That by skillis may non be brought adoun,
I cannat se that argumentes availe,
Than semith it there must be a bataille.

Al redy, qd this Egle t. recelles tho; 540
Nay sirs (qd he) if that I durst it say,
Ye do me wronge, my tale is not ydo,
For sirs, ne takith nat a grete I pray,
It may not be as ye wolde in this way,
Ours is the voice, that have the charge in hande,
And to the Judg is dome ye multe yttande;

And therefore pece I say, as to my wit
Me woldin thinke, how that the worthiest
Of lnyghthode, and lengist had usid it,
Mott of estate, of blode the gentilest, 550
Were sittingest for her, if that her lest,
And of these thre she wote her selfe I trove
Whiche that he be, for it is light to knowe.

The watir foulis have ther hedis laide
Togidir, and of shorte avisement
Whan everiche had his verdite yfayde,
They saidin sothely al by one assent,
5 O

Howe

Howe that the gose, with the facondè gent
That so desirith to pronounce our nede,
Shal tel our tale, and prayed to God her spede.

And for these watir foulis tho began
The gose to speke, and in her cakelynge
She said, pece nowe, take kepe every man,
And herken whiche a reson I shal forth bring,
My witte is sharpe, I love no taryng,
I say I rede him, tho he were my brother,
But she wil love him, let him love another.

Lo here a parfite reson of a gose!
Tho (qð the sperhauke) nevir mote she The,
Lo soche a thing it is to have a tonge lose! 570 Nowe parde sole, yet were it bet for The
Have holde thy pece, than shewde thy nicete,
It lyeth nat in his wit, nor in his wil,
But sothe is faide, a sole can nat be still.

The laughtir arose of gentil foulis al,
And right anone the fede fowles chosin had
The Turtel trewe, and gan her to hem call,
And prayid her to say the sothe sad
Of this matir, and askid what she rad,
And she answered that plainly her entent 580
She woldè shewe, and sothly what she ment.

Nay, God forbede a lovir shuldè chaunge
The Turtel said, and wexte for shame al rede,
Though that his lady evirmore be straunge,
Yet let him serve her ay, tyl he be dede,
Forsothe, I ne praise not the gos'is rede,
For tho she dyed, I wolde none othir make,
I wil be hers, tyl that the dethe me take.

Welybourdid (qð the ducke) by my hat
That men shouldin love alway causelesse, 590
Who can a reson finde or wit in that Dauncith he mery, that is mirthelesse,
Who shuldin recke, of that is rechlesse?
Ye queke yet (qð the ducke) ful wel and faire,
There be no sterres in the skye than a paire.

Nowe sye churle (qð the gentil Terceler)
Out of the dounghil camè that word aright,
Thou canst not se which thinge is wel best,
Thou farest by love, as owlis do by light,
The day hem blindeth, ful wel they se by night, 600
Thy kinde is of so lowe a wretchidnesse
That what love is, thou canst not se nor gesse.

Tho gan the cuckow put him forthe in prece
For soule that etith worme, and sayid blyve,
So I (qð he) may have my make in pece
I ne wretche nought howe longe that ye strive,
Let eche of hem be soleine al ther lyve,
This is my rede, sens they may nat acorde,
This shortè lesoun nedith not recorde.

Ye, have the glutton filde inow his paunche, 610
Then are we wel, sayid the Emerlon,
Thou murdrir of the heifugge, on the braunche,
That brought The forth, thou most rufull glutton,
Live thou solein, wormis corrupcion,
For no force is of lacke of thy nature,
Go, leude be thou, while that the world may dure!

Nowe pece (qð Nature) I commaundin here,
For I have herde al your opinion,
And in effeete yet be we ner the nere,
But finally, this is my conclusion, 620
That she her selfe, shal have her election
Of whom her list, who so be wroth or blithe,

Him that she cheseth, he shal her have as swithe.

For sithe it may not here discussid be.
Who loveth her best, as said the Terceler,
Than wol I done this favour to her, that she Shal have right him, on whom her hert is set,
And he her, that his hert hath on her knet;
This judge I nature, for I may not lye
To none estate, I have none othir eye. 630

But as for counsayle for to chose a make,
Yf I were reson, certis than woulde I Counsailein you, the royal Tercel take,
As sayd the Terceler ful skilfully,
As for the gentylist, and most worthy,
Which I have wrought so wel to my plessaunce,
That to you it ought ben a suffisaunce.

With dredfull voice the Formell her answerde,
My rightfull lady, goddesse of Nature,
Soth is, that I am er undir your yerde, 640
As is als' evèriche othir cature,
And must be yours, while that my life may dure,
And therfore grauntith me my firstè bone,
And myne entent you wol I say right sone.

I graunt it you (qð she) and right anone
This Formel Egle spake in this degre.
Almighty quene, unto this yere be done
I aske respite for to avyfin me,
And aftir that to have my choyce all fre;
This al and some, that I wold speke and sey, 650
Ye get no more, although ye do me dey;

I wol not servin Venus, ne Cupide,
Forsothe as yet, by no manir of way;
Nowe sens it may none othir wayes betide
(Qð Dame Nature) here is no more to say,
Than wolde I that these foulis were away
Eche with his make, for taryng lengir here,
And said hem thus, as ye shal aftir here.

To you speke I, ye Tercelers (qð Nature)
Bethe of gode herte, and servith allè thre, 660
A yere is not so longe for to endure,
And eche of you paine him in his degre
For to do wel, for God wote quit is she Fro you this yere, what aftir so befall,
This entremes is dressid for you all.

And whan this werk ybrought was to an ende,
To evèry foule Nature yave his make
By even acorde, and on ther way they wende,
And lorde the blisse and joye which that they make!
For ech gan othir in his wingis take, 670
And with ther neckis eche gan othir winde,
Thankynge aye the noble goddesse of kinde.

But first were chosin foulis for to singe,
As yere by yere was alway ther ussaunce
To singe a roundel at ther departing,
To do to Nature honour and plessaunce,
The note, I trowe, ymakid was in Fraunce,
The wordis were soche, as ye may here find
The nextè vers, as I nowe have in minde.

Qui bien aime tard oublie.

Now welcom somir, with thy sonnis soft, 680
That haste this wintir wethirs ovirshake,
Saint Valentine, thou arte full hie on lofte,
Which drivist away the longe nightis blake,
Thus singin smale foulis for thy sake,
Well havin thy cause for to gladin ofte

Sens

Sens eche of 'hem recovered hath his make,
Ful blisful maie they sing when they awake.

And with the shouting when ther songe was do
That the foulis made at ther flight away,
I woke, and othir bokis toke me to 690

To rede upon, and yet I rede alway,
I hope ywis to redin so some day
That I shal metin some thinge for to fare
The bet, and thus to rede I n'il not spare.

Explicit.

The Floure of Courtesie, made by JOHN LIDGATE.

In this Book are set forth the rare Vertues of a certain Lady; made by John Lidgate, as some think, in the behalfe of some Gentlewoman in the Court.

IN Feverier, when that the frostie Monc
Was hornid, full of Phœbus fierie light,
And that the gan to raise her stremis sone,
St. Valentine, upon thy blisfull night
Of dutie, when that glad is every wight,
And foulis chefe, to voide ther oldē sorow,
Everiche his make upon the nextē morow,

The samē time I herde a Larke yfing
Full lustily againe the morow gray,
Awake, ye Loveres, out of your slumbring
This glade morow, in alle the haste ye may,
Doith some observaunce unto this day,
Your choise agen of hertē to renew
In confirming, for evir to be true.

And ye that be of chesing at your large
This lustie day, by custome of nature,
Take upon you the blisful holie charge
To fervin Love while that your Life may dure,
With body, herte, and alle your besy cure
For evirmore, as Venus and Cypride
For you disposith, and the God Cupide.

For joy owin ye plainly to obey
Unto this Lord's mighty ordinaunce,
And mercilesse full rathir for to dey,
Than evre' in you be founding variaunce,
And though your Life be medli'd with grevaunce,
And at your hert's closet be your wound,
Beth alway one, there as ye are ybound.

That when I herdin had and listid long
With devout herte the lusty melody
Of this herinly comfortable Song,
So agreable, as by harmony,
I rose anone, and fast I gan me hie
Toward a grove, and the way ytake Foulis to sene everiche chefe his Make.

And yet I was full thirsty' in languishing,
Mine Ague was so fervent in h's herte,
When Aurora for drierie complaining
Gan to distill her cristall teris wete
Upon the Soyle, with Silver dew so swete,
For she ne durstin not for Shame appere
Undir the light of Phœbus bemis clere.

And so for anguish of my painis kene,
And eke for constraint of my lighis sore,
I set me downe undir a laurir grene
Full pitously, and alwey more and more
As I beheld into the holtis hore,
I gan complaine mine inward dedely smerte

That aye so sore crampisith at mine herte.

And whilis that I in my dreery paine
Sate, and beheld about on every tre
The foulis sitt alway by twaine and twaine,
Then thought I thus, alas! what may this be,
That every foulē hath his libertie
Frely to chesin aftir his desire
Everiche his make thus fro yere to yere:

50

The sely Wren, the Tytēmosē also,
The little Redbreſt, have fre election
To flyin yfere, and togethir go
Whereas them list, aboutin environ,
As they of kind have inclination
And as Nature, the empress and the guide
Of every thing, list for them to provide;

60

But man alone (alas the hardē flound)
Full cruilly by kind's ordinaunce
Constrainid is, and by statute ybound
And debarrid from all such gode plesaunce?
What menith this, what is this purveiaunce
Of God above againe all right of kind,
Withoutin cause so narowe man to bind?

70

Thus may I ſcin and complaine, alas!
My wofull hour, and my disavinture,
That dolefully stonde in the same case,
So ferre behinde from alle helthe and cure,
My wound abidith like a surſanure,
For me Fortune so felly list dispose,
My harme is hid, that I dare not disclose.

For I my herte have sett in soche a place,
Where I am nevir likely for to spede,
So ferre I am yhindrid from her grace,
That save daungir I have none othir mede;
And thus, alas! I note who shall me rede,
Ne for myn helpē shapin remedie,
For malebouche, and for false envie.

80

The whichē twaine aye stondith in my wey
Maliciously, and false suspeccion
Is verry cause also why that I die,
Ginning and rote of my destruccion,
So that I f.hn in conclusion
That with ther trainis they wollin me stende
That dethe mote of my labour make an ende.

90

Yet or I die, with hertē, will, and thought
To God of Lovē this avowe I make,
As I best can, how dere that it be bought,
Where so it be that I or slepe or wake,

Whilis

Whilis that Boreas doth the levis shake,
As I have hight, plainly untill I sterue,
For wele or wo, that I shall her yserue.

And for her sake, now on this holie time,
St. Valentine, somewhat shullin I write,
Although so be it that I can nat rime,
Nor curiously by no craft endite,
Yet levir I have that she put the wite
In my unconning, than in negligence,
Whatevir I say of her excellence.

Whatevir I say it is of dutie,
In sothefastnes, and no presumption,
This I ensure to you that shall it se,
That it is all undir correction
What I reherse in commendation
Of her, that I shall to you as belive,
So as I can, her vertues here describe.

Right by example, as the summir sunne
Passith the steris with his bemis shene,
And Lucifer among the skyis dunne
A morow shewith to voide night's tene,
So verily, withoutin any wene,
My lady passith, whoso takith hede,
All tho alive, to speke of womanhede.

And as the Rubie hath the soveraintie
Of richè stonis, and the regalie,
And as the Rose of swetenesse and beantie
Of freshe flouris, without any lie,
Right so in sothe, with her so godely eye
She passith alle in bountie and fairenesse
Of mannir eke and of her gentilnesse.

For she is both the fairist and the best,
To rekin all, in verry sothefastnes,
For every vertue is in her at rest;
And furthirmore to speke of stedfastnes,
She is the rote, and of semelinessse
The very mirrour, and of govinaunce
To all example, without variaunce.

Of port benigne, and wondir glade of chere,
Evrmore having her true advertence
Alway to reson, so that her desire
Is bridlid ay by wit and providence;
Thereto of wit and also of high prudence
She is the well, yet aye devoid of pride,
That unto vertue her self is the guide.

And ovir all this, in her dalliaunce
Lowly to all she is, discrete, and wise,
And godely glade, by right attemperaunce,
That every wight, of high and low degre,
Are rightfull glade in herte with her to be,
So that shortly, if that I shall not lie,
She namid is the Floure of Curtisie.

And thereto, to speke of Femitie,
She is the leste mannish in comparison,
Godely abashid, having ay pitie
Of them that ben in tribulation,
For she alone is consolation
To all that arne in mischese and in nede,
To comfortin them, of her womanhede.

And aye in vertue is her besy charge,
Sad and demure, and but of wordis few,
Dredefull also of tonguis that ben large,
Eschewing aye them, that listin to hew
Above ther hedde, ther wordis for to shew,
Dishonestly to speke of any wight,

She deddely hatith of them to have a sight.

The herte of whome so honest is and clene,
And her entent so faithfull and entere,
That she ne may for all the world sustene
To suffir her eres any word to here
Of frend nor foe, neithir ferrè ne nere,
Amis refowne, that hindir shulde his name,
And if she do, she wexith redde for shame.

So truly in her mening she is sette
Without chaunging, or any doublenesse,
For bountie and beantie are togethir knet
In her person, undir firm faithfulnessse,
For devoid she is of newfanglenesse,
In herte ay one for evir to persever
There she is sette, and nevir to dislever.

I am to rude, her vertues everychone
Connyngly to discrivin and to write
For well ye wote that colour have I none
Like her discretion, craftely to endite,
For what I saying all it is to lite,
Wherfore unto you thus I me excuse,
That I acquaintid am not with no muse,

By Rhetorike my stile for to governe,
And all her preise and commendacion
I am to blynde so hyllye to description,
Of her ~~gode~~ godenes for to make discernen,
Save thus I sayin in conclusion
If that I shal her shortly commende,
In her is naught, that nature can amende.

For gode she is, lyke to Polyxene,
And in farenesse like to the quene Helaine,
Stedfast of herte, as was Dorigene,
And wisely trowth, if that I shal nat faine,
In constaunce eke and faith, she maye attaine.
To Cleopatre, and therto as setrone
As was of Troye the white Antigone.

As Hester mekè, lyke Judith of prudence,
Kynde as Alcest, or Marcia Catoun,
And to Grisildè lyke in pacience,
And Ariadne of discrecioun,
And to Lucrece, that was of Romè toun
She may be likened as for honeste,
And for her faith, unto Penelope.

To faire Phillis, and to Hypsipyle
For innocence, and eke for womanhede,
For similesse unto Canace,
And ovir this to speke of godelihede,
She passith al whiche that I can of rede,
For worde and dede, so that she naught ne fal,
Acorde in vertue, and her werkis al.

For though that Dido with her wittfull sage
Was in her time right stedfast to Enee,
Of hastinesse nathles she dyd outrage,
And so for Jason dyd also Medee,
But this my lady is so arifce,
That bountie and beantie both in her demaine,
She makith bountie alway soveraine.

This is to mene, bountie goith afore
Lad by prudence, and hath the soverainte,
And beaute foloweth, rulid by her lore,
That she ne fendin her in no degre
So that in one this godely freshe fre, Surmounting all, withoutin any were,
Is gode and faire, in one persone yfere.

And

And though that I for very ignoraunce
Ne may discribe her vertues by and by,
Yet on this day for a remembraunce,
Onely supportid undir her mercy,
With quakinge honde I shal ful humbily
To her hieness my rudenesse for to quite, 230
A lytil balade here beneth endite.

Evir as I can supprize in myne herte
Alway with fere, betwyxtin drede and shame,
Leste out of lose any worde shulde asterte
In this metre, to make it semin lame,
Chaucer is dede, which that had soche a name
Of faire making, that was withoutin wene
Fayrist in our tonge, as the Laurir grene.

We may assayn for to countrefete
His gay style, but it ne wol not ybe, 240
The welle is drie, with the lycoure so swete
Both of Clio, and of Calliope;
And first of all, I woll excusin me
To her that is the ground of godelihe,de,
And thus I say until her womanhe,de.

Balade simple.

With al my myght, and alle my best entent,
Wyth all the faithe that mighty God of kinde

Me yave, sith he me soule and knowing sent,
I chese, and to this bonde evir me binde,
To love you best, while I have life and minde. 250
Thus herdin I foulis in the dauninge
Upon the day of sainte Valentine singe.

Yet chese I at beginning this entent,
To lovin you, though I no mercy finde,
And if you lyst I died I wolde assent,
As evir twinne I quick from of this line,
Suffisith me to sene your fethirs ynde.
Thus herde I foulis in the morowninge
Upon the day of sainte Valentine singe.

And ovir this mine hert's luste to bente 260
In honour onily of the wodde binde
Wholy I yevin, nevir to repente,
In joye or wo, where ere so that I winde,
Tofore Cupido, with his eyin blinde,
The foulis all, when Titan did yspringe
With devout hert me thought I herdin singe.

L'envoye.

Princesse of beantie to you I present
This symple dyte, rude as in makinge,
Of hert, and will faithfull in mine entent,
Like as this day, the foulis herde I singe. 270

Here endeth the Floure of Curtesy.

Hereafter foloweth how pyte is dede and buried in gentyle herte.

Pyte, that I have sought so yore ago
With herte sore, and full of besy paine,
That in this worlde was nevir wight so wo
Withoutin derthe, and yf I shal nat faine,
My purpose was to pite to complaine
Upon the cruelte and tyrannye
Of love, that for my trouth doth me to dic.

And whan that I by length of certaine yeres,
Had evir in one sought a time to speke
To pite ran I all bespreint with teres 10
To prayn her on Cruelte me' a-wreke,
But or I might with any worde out breke,
Or tel her any of my painis smerte,
I found her ded, and buried in an herte.

A downe I fel, whan that I saw the herse,
Ded as a stone, while that the swonne me laste,
But up I rose, with coloure ful diverse,
And pitously on her myne eyen I cast,
And nerir the corse I gan presin fast, 20
And for the soule I shope me for to pray,
I was but lorne, there was no more to say.

Thus am I flaine, sith that Pite is ded,
Alas that day that evir it shulde fal!
What manir man dare nowe hold up his hed?
To whom shal now any soro'wfull hert call,
Nowe Cruelte hath cast to fle us al,
In ydle hope folke reddelesse of paine,
Sith she is ded, to whom shal we complaine?

But yet encrefish me this wondir newe,
That no wight wote that she is ded but I, 30
So many men as in her tyme her knewe,
And yet she dyid all so sodainly,

For I have sought her er full beily
Sithins that I had firste witte or mind,
But she was ded er that I coude her find.

Aboute her herse there stodin lustily,
Withoutin any mo, as thoughtin me,
Bountie, persitely well armed and richely,
And frsche beaute, and lust, and jolite, 40
Aslurid manir, youthe, and Honeste,
Wisdome, estate, with drede and governaunce,
Confedrid both by bonde and aliaunce.

A complainte had I writin in my honde
To have yput to Pyte, as a byl,
But I there al this company yfonde,
That rathir wouldin all my cause spill,
Then do me help, I held my plainte still,
For to those folke withoutin any faile
Without pite there maie no bill availe.

Then leave all vertues, save onely pitie, 50
Keping the corse, as ye have herd me faine,
Confedrid by bonde unto Cruelte,
And be assentid when I shall be flaine,
And I have put my compleinte up againe,
For to my foes my bill I dare not shewe,
The' effect which sayith thus in word is fewe.

Humblist of herte, hyist of reverence,
Flowir benigne, Coroune of Vertues alle,
Shewith unto your roiall excellence
Your servaunt, if I durstin me so call, 60
His mortall harme, in which he is ifall,
And nought all onely for his wofull fare,
But for your renome, as he shall declare.

It standeth thus that your contrary' crueltie
 Allyd is ayenst your regalie,
 Undir colour of womanly beautie,
 For men shouldin not knowe her tyrannie,
 With bountie Gentillesse, and Curtesie,
 And hath deprivid you thus of your place,
 That is hie Beaute' apertenant to your grace. 70

For kindly by your heritage and right
 Ye be annexid evir to bountie,
 And verily ye ought to doe your might
 To helpin trouthe in his adversitie,
 Ye be also the coroune of beautie,
 And certis if that ye want in these twaine,
 The worlde is lore, there is no more to saine.

Eke what availeth manir and gentillesse
 Withoutin you, O most benigne cecture,
 Shall crueltie ybe your governess? 80
 Alas! what hertè maie it long endure?
 Wherefore but ye rathir ytakin cure
 To brekin that perillous aliaunce
 Ye seen hem that ben in your obeisaunce.

And furthir ovir, if ye suffir this,
 All your renome is fordow in a throwe,
 There shall no man ywete what pitie is,
 Alas that your renome is fall so lowe!
 Ye be' also fro your heritage ithrowe
 By crueltie that occupieth your place, 90
 And we dispairid that sekin your grace.

Have mercie on me, thou Herenus Quene,

That you have sought so tenderly and fore,
 O let some streame of light on me be sene,
 That love and drede you er longir the more,
 For sothly to saine, I bere so fore,
 And though I be not connyng for to plaine,
 For God's love have mercie on my paine.

My paine is this, that what so I desire
 That have I not, ne nothyng like thereto, 100
 And evir setteth desire mine hertè on fire,
 Eke on that othir side, where that I go,
 What manir thing that may encrese my wo,
 That have I redy unsought every where,
 Me lackith but my deth, and then my bere.

What nedith to shewe percel of my paine,
 Sith every wo, that hertè maie bethinke,
 I suffir, and yet dare not to you plaine,
 For well I wote, though that I wake or winke, 110
 Ye recke not whether that I flete or sinke,
 And nathelasse yet my trouth I shall susteine
 Unto my deth, and that shall well be sene.

This is to saine that I will be yours ever,
 Though ye me flea by crueltie your so,
 Algate my spirite shall nevir discevir
 Fro your service, for any paine or wo,
 Sith ye be dedde, alas that it is so!
 Thus for your deth I maie wepin and plain,
 With hertè fore, and full of besie pain.

Explicit.

La belle Dame sans mercy.

M. Aleyn, Secretary to the King of France, framed this Dialogue between a Gentleman, and a Gentlewoman, who finding no mercy at her hand dyeth for Sorrow.

H Alse in a dreame, not fully well awaked,
 The goldin slepe me wrapped undir his wyng
 Yet not forthy I rose, and well nigh naked
 Al sodainly my self rememberyng
 Of a mattir, levyng all othir thyng,
 Which I must doe withoutin more delaie
 For them, whiche I ne durst not disobaie.

My charge was this, to translate by and by,
 (All thyng forgive) as parte of my penaunce,
 A boke callid La belle Dame sans mercy, 10
 Whiche Maistir Aleine made of remembraunce,
 Chief secretarie with the kyng of Fraunce:
 And hereupon a while I stode musyng,
 And in my self greatly imaginynge,

What wife I should perform the said processe
 Consideryng by gode advisement
 My unconnyng, and my grete simplenesse,
 And ayenward the straite commaundement
 Whiche that I had, and thus in myne entent
 I was vexid and tournid up and dounce, 20
 And yet at last, as in conclusioun,

I cast my clothis on, and went my waie
 This foresaid charge having in remembraunce,
 Till I came to a lustie grene valaie

Full of flouris, to se a grete plesaunce,
 And so boldly with ther benigne suffraunce,
 Which redin this boke touching this matere
 Thus I began if it plesse you to here.

NOT long ago, ridyng an esie paas,
 I fell in thought of joyful desperate, 30
 With grete disese and pain, so that I was
 Of all lovirs the most unfortunate,
 Sith by his darre moste cruill full of hate
 The deth hath take my ladie and maistresse,
 And left me sole, thus discomfite and mate,
 Sore languishyng, and in waie of distresse.

Then said I thus, it fallith me to cesse Eithir to rime, or ditees for to make,
 And surely to makin a full promesse
 To laugh no more, but wepe in clothis blake 40
 My joyfull tyme (alas) now doeth it slake,
 For in my self I fele no manir ese,
 Let it be written, soche fortune (as I take)
 Which neithir me, nor non othir doth plesse.

If it were so, my wyll or myne entent.
 Constrainid were a joyfull thing to write,
 My penne coud nevir knowing what it ment,
 To speke thereof my tonguè hath no delite,

Who

Tho with my mouthe I laugh mochil or lite,
 Mine eyin shouldmake a countenance untrue, 50
 My herte also, would have therof despire,
 The wepyng teris have so large issue.

These sicke lovirs I leve, that to hem longes,
 Which lede ther life in hope of alegeaunce,
 That is to saie, to make Balades and songes,
 Every of 'hem, as thei fele ther grevaunce,
 For she that was my joye, and my plesaunce
 Whose soule I praie God of his mercie save,
 She hath my will, myne hert's ordinaunce,
 Which lyith here, within this tombe igrave. 60

Fro this tyme forthe, tyme is to hold my pees,
 It werieth me this mattir for to trete,
 Let othir lovirs put 'hem selfe in prees,
 Their selson is, my tyme is now forgete,
 Fortune by strength the forcir hath unshete,
 Wherein was sperde all my worldly richesse,
 And all the godis which that I have gete,
 In my best tyme of youth and lustinesse.

Love hath me kept undir his govirnaunce,
 If I misdidd, God graunt me forgivenessse, 70
 If I did well, yet felt I no plesaunce,
 It causid neithir joye nor hevinessse,
 For when she dyid that was my maistres,
 My Welfare then ymade the same purchase,
 The derh hath shette my bondis of witnessse,
 Which for nothing myne hert shal nevir pase.

In this grete thought sore troublid in my mind,
 Alone thus rode I all the morrow tide,
 Till at the last it happid me to finde 80
 The place, wherein I cast me to abide,
 When that I had no furthir for to ride,
 And as I went my lodgyng to purvaie,
 Right sone I herd, a little me beside,
 In a gardin, where minstrels gan to plaie.

With that anonc I went me backir more,
 My self and I, me thought we were inow,
 But twaine that wer my frendis here before
 Had me espied, and yet I wote not how,
 Thei came for me, awaiewarde I me drowe,
 Somwhat by force, somwhat by ther request, 90
 That in no wise I coud my self rescowe,
 But nedes I must come in and se the fest.

At my commyng, the Ladies everichone
 Bad me welcome, God wote, right gentillie,
 And made me chere, every one by one,
 A grete dele bettir than I was worthie,
 And of ther grace shewed me grete curtisie
 With gode disport, bicause I should not mourne,
 That daie I bode still in ther companie,
 Whiche was to me a gracious sojourn. 100

The bordis were spred in right lityl space
 The Ladies sat, eche as she semid best,
 There were no dedly servautes in the place,
 But chosin men, right of the godelyest,
 And some there wer, peraventure most freshest,
 That sawin ther Judgis right full demure,
 Without semblaunt, eithir to moste or lest,
 Notwithstandyng thei had 'hem undir cure.

Emong all othir one I gan espie,
 Which in grete thought ful oftin came and went,
 As one that had ben ravished uttirly,
 In his language not gretly diligent,
 His countinaunce he kept with grete turment,
 But his desire farre passid his reson,

For er his eye went aftir his entent,
 Full many' a tyme, when it was no selson.

To makin chere sorely hymself he painid,
 And outwardly he fainid grete gladnesse,
 To sing also by force he was constrained,
 For no plesaunce, but verie shamefastnesse, 110
 For the complainte of his moste hevinessse
 Came to his voice, alwaie without request,
 Like as the soun of birdis doeth expresse,
 When thei sing loude, in fritte or in forest.

Othir there were, that servid in the hall,
 But none like hym, as aftir myne advise,
 For he was pale, and somwhat lene withall,
 His speche also tremblid in ferfull wise,
 And er alone, but when he did serveise,
 All blacke he ware, and no devise but plain, 130
 Me thought by him, as my witte coud tuffise,
 His herte was nothyng in his owne demain.

To fest 'hem all he did his diligence,
 And well he coud, right as it semid me,
 But evirmore when he was in presence
 His chere was doun, it n'olde none othir be,
 His Scholemaistr had soche auethorite,
 That all the while he bode still in the place
 Speke cou'd he not, but upon her beaute
 He lokid still, with a right pitous face. 140

With that his hedde he tournid at the last
 For to beholde the Ladies everichone,
 But er in one he set his eye stedfast
 On her, whiche that his thought was moste upon,
 For of his eyen the shot I knewe anone,
 Which ferfull was, with right humble requestes;
 Then to my self I saied, by God alone,
 Soche one was I, or that I lawe these jistes.

Out of the prese he went full esily,
 To make stable his hevie countinaunce, 150
 And wote ye well, he sighid wondirly,
 For his sorowes and wofull remembrance,
 Then in hymself he made his ordinaunce,
 And forthwithall came to bryng in the messie,
 But for to judge his n'osse wofull penance,
 God wote, it was a pitous entremesse.

Aftir dinir anone thei 'hem avaunced
 To daunce above the souke everichone,
 And forthwithal this hevie man he daunced,
 Somtime with twaine, and somtimes with one, 160
 Unto 'hem all his chere was aftir one,
 Now here, now there, as fell by avinture,
 But er emong he drewe to her alone,
 Whiche that he moste drede, of livyng cecture.

To mine advise gode was his purveiaunce,
 When he her chose to his maistr. sie alone,
 If that her herte were set to his plesaunce,
 As moche as was her beauteous persone,
 For who so evir setteth his trust upon
 The report of the eyen, withoutin more, 170
 He might be dedde, and gravin undir stone,
 Or er he should his hert's ese restore.

In her failid nothyng, that I coud gesse,
 One wife nor othir, privie nor aperte,
 A garison she was of godelinesse,
 To make a frontier for a lovirs herte,
 Right yong and freshe, a woman full coverte,
 Assurid wele of porte, and eke of chere,
 Wel at her ese, withoutin wo or smerte, 180
 All underneth the standerde of dangere. 10

To se the fest it weried me full fore,
 For hevic joye doeth fore the herte travaille,
 Out of the prese I me withdrawe therfore,
 And set me doune alone behinde a traile
 Full of levis, to se a grete mervaile,
 With grene wrethis iboundin wondirly;
 The levis were so thicke withoutin faile,
 That thoroughout no man might me espie.

To this Ladie he came full curtisly,
 When he thought time to daunce with her a trace,
 Set in an herbir, made full plesantly,
 Thei restid 'hem fro thens but lityl space,
 Nigh 'hem were none of a certain compace,
 But onely thei, as farre as I coud se,
 Save the traile, there I had ychose my place,
 Ther was no more bitwene 'hem two and me.

I herd the lovir sighyng wondir fore,
 For aie the more the forir it hym sought,
 His inward paine he coud not kepe in store,
 Nor for to speke so hardie was he nought, 200
 His leche was nere, the gretir was his thought,
 He musid fore to conquere his desire,
 For no man maie to more penaunce be brought,
 Then in his herte to bryng hym to the fire.

The herte began to swell within his chest,
 So fore strainid, for anguisse and for pain,
 That all to pecis almoste it to brest,
 When both at ones so fore it did constrain,
 Desire was bolde, but shame it gan refrain,
 That one was large, the othir was full close, 210
 No little charge was laied on hym certain,
 To kepe soche werre, and have so many fose.

Full oft in times to speke himself he pained,
 But shamefastnesse and drede saied evir naie,
 Yet at the last so fore he was constrained,
 When he full long had put it in delaie,
 To this Ladie right thus then gan he saie,
 With dredefull voice, wepyng, halfe in a rage,
 For me was purveied an unhappie daie,
 When I first had a sight of your visage: 220

I suffre pain, God wote, full hote brenning,
 To cause my deth, all for my true servise,
 And I se well, ye recke thereof nothing,
 Nor take no hede of it, in no kinde wise,
 But when I speke aftir my best advise,
 Ye reke it nought, but make thereof a game,
 And though I sewe so grete an entirprise,
 Yet peirith not your worship nor your fame.

Alas! what should it be to' you prejudice,
 If that a man doe love you faithfully? 230

To your worship, eschewyng every vice,
 So am I yours, and will be verily,
 I chalenge nought of right and reson why,
 For I am whole submit to your service,
 Right as you list it be, right so will I,
 To binde my self, where I was in fraunchise.

L'amant.

Though it be so, that I can not deserve
 To have your grace, but alwaie live in drede,
 Yet suffre me you for to love and serve,
 Without maugre of your moste godelihede, 240
 Both faith and trowth I give your womanhede,
 And my service without any callyng,
 Love hath me bound, withoutin wage or mede
 To be your man, and leve all othir thyng.

La dame.

When this ladie had herd al this language,
 She gave answere, full soft and demurely
 Without chaungyng of colour or courage,
 Nothyng in hast, but full mesurably.
 Me thinkith, fir, your thought is grete folly;
 Purpose ye nought your labour for to cese, 250
 For thinkith not, whilis ye live and I,
 In this mattir to set your herte in pefe.

L'amant.

Ther maie none make the pece, but onely ye;
 Which are the ground and cause of all this war,
 For with your eyen the lettirs writtin be,
 By whiche I am defied and put asfarre,
 Your plesaunt loke, my very lodestarre,
 Was made heraude of thilke same defiaunce;
 Whiche uttirly behight me for to barre
 My faithfull trust, and all myne affyaunce. 260

La dame.

To live in wo he hath grete fantasie,
 And of his hert also but slippir holde,
 That onely for beholdyng of an eye
 Can not abide in pece, as reson wolde;
 Other or me, if ye list ye maie beholde,
 Our eyen are made to loke, why should we spare?
 I take no kepe, neithir of yong ne olde,
 Who felith smart, I counsaile hym beware.

L'amant.

If it be so, one hurte an othir fore
 In his defeute, that felith the grevaunce, 270
 Of very right a man maie do no more,
 Yet reson would it were in remembraunce,
 And sith fortune onily by her chaunce
 Hath causid me to suffre all this pain
 By your beautie, with all the circumstaunce,
 Why list ye have me in so grete disdaine?

La dame.

To your persone ne have I no disdaine,
 Nor nevir had truelie, ne nought will have;
 Nor right grete love, nor hatred in certain,
 Nor your counsaile to knowe, so God me save, 280
 If that soche love be in your minde igrave,
 That lityl thyng maie doe you displeaunce,
 You to begile, or make you for to rave,
 I will not causin no soche encombraunce.

L'amant.

What er it be, that me hath thus purchased,
 Wenying hath not decevid me certain,
 But fervent love so fore hath me ichased,
 That I unware am castin in your chaine;
 And sith so is, as fortune list ordaine,
 All my welfare is in your handis fall, 290
 In eschewyng of more mischevous paine,
 Who sonist dieth, his care is left of all

La dame.

This sicknesse is right esie to endure,
 But fewe peple it causith for to die;
 But what thei mene I knowe it very sure,
 Of more comfort to drawe the remedie;
 Soche be there now plainyng full pitouslie;

That

That fele, God wote, not althir gretist pain, 300
And if so be love hurte so grevoullie,
Lesse harme it wer, one sorowful then twain.

L'amant.

Alas! Madame, if that it might you plesse,
Moche bet it were, by waie of gentillesse,
Of one sorie to make twain well at ese,
Then hym to destroie that liveth in distresse,
For my desire is, neithir more nor lesse,
But my service to doe for your plesaunce,
In eschewyng all manir doublenesse,
To make two joies, in stede of one grevaunce.

La dame.

Of love I seke neithir plesaunce nor ese,
Nor have I therein no grete affiaunce,
Though ye be sick it doeth me nothing plesse,
Also I take no hede of your plesaunce,
Chese who so will ther hertis to avaunce,
Freer am I now, and fre will I endure,
To be rulid by mann's govirnaunce
For yerthly gode, naie, that I you ensue.

L'amant.

Love, which that joy and sorow doth depart,
Hath set the Ladies out of all servage, 320
And largely doeth graunt 'hem for ther part Lordship and rule of every maner of age,
The pore servaunt nought hath of advantage,
But what he maie get onely by purchesse,
And he that ones to love doeth his homage,
Full oftyn tymes dere bought is the richesse.

La dame.

Ladies be not so simple, thus I mene,
So dull of witte, so sottid in folie,
That for wordis, which said be of the splene,
In faire language paintid full plesauntie, 330
Whiche ye and mo holde scholis of dailie,
To make 'hem all grete wondirs to suppose,
But sone thei can awaie their heddis wrie,
And to faire speche lightly ther cris close.

L'amant.

There is no man, that janglith busilie,
And setteth his herte, and al his minde therfore,
That by reson maie plain so pitoullie,
As he that hath moche hevinesse in store;
Whose hedde is whole, and faiech that it is fore,
His fainid chere is harde to kepe in mewe, 340
But thought, whiche is unfainid evirmore,
The wordis previth, as the wordis shewe.

La dame.

Love is subtill, and hath a grete awaite,
Sharp in working, in gabbing grete plesaunce,
And can hym venge of soche as by disceite
Would fele and knowe his secrete govirnaunce,
And makith 'hem to obeie his ordinaunce,
By cherefull waies, as in 'hem is supposed,
But when thei fallin into repentaunce,
Then in a rage ther counsaile is disclosed. 350

L'amant.

Sith for as moche as God and eke nature
Hath avauncid love to so hie degre,

Moche sharp is the point, thus am I right sure,
Yet grevith more the faute, where er it be,
Who hath no colde, of herte hath no deinte,
The one for that othir askid is expresse,
And of plesaunce knowith none certainte,
But it be one in thought and hevinesse.

La dame.

As for plesaunce, it is not alwaie one,
That you think swete, I think it bittir pain, 360
Ye maie not me constrain, nor yet right none,
Aftir your luste to love, that is but vain,
To chalenge love by right was never sein,
But herte assent, before bonde and promise,
For strength and force ne maie not er attain
I will that standeth enfeffid in franchise.

L'amant.

Right faire ladie, God mote I never plesse,
If that I seke othir right in this case,
But for to shewe you plainly my disese,
And your mercie to abide, and eke your grace, 370
If I purpose your honour to deface,
Or evir did, God and fortune me shende,
And that I ner unrightfully purchace
One onclie joye, unto my liv's ende.

La dame.

Ye and othir, that swere soche othis faste,
And so condempne, and cursin to and fro,
Full sikirly ye wene your othis laste
No lengir then the wordis ben ago,
And God, and eke his sainctis laugh also;
In soche sweryng there is no stedfastnesse, 380
And these wretchis, that have ful trust therto, Aftir thei wepe and wailin in distresse.

L'amant.

He hath no courage of a man truelie,
That sechith plesaunce, worship to dispise,
Nor to be callid, for he' is not worthie
The yerth to touch, the aire in no kind wise,
A trustie herte, a mouthe without feintise,
Thus by the strength of every manir name,
And who that laieth his faith for little prife,
He lesith both his worship and his fame. 390

La dame.

A cursid herte, a mouthe that is curteisie,
Full well ye wote thei be not accordyng,
Yet fainid chere right sone maie 'hem apeise,
Where of malice it set all ther workyng,
Full false semblant thei bere, and true femyng,
Ther name, ther fame, ther tonguis ben but fained,
Worship in 'hem is put in forgettyng,
Nought repentid, nor in no wise complained.

L'amant.

Who thinkith ill, no gode maie him befall,
God of his grace graunt eche man his desert, 400
But for his love, emong your thoughtis all,
As thinke upon my wofull sorowes smert,
For of my paine whethir your rendir hert
Of swete pitie be not therewith agreved,
And of your grace, to me were discovert,
That by your mene sone should I be releved.

5 Q

La dame.

A lightfome herte, a folie of plesaunce,
 Are moche bettir, the lesse while thei abide,
 Thei make you think, and bring you in a traunce,
 But that sikenesse will sone be remedide, 410
 Respite your thought, and put all this aside,
 Full gode disporte ywerieth me all daie,
 To helpe nor hurte my will is not aplide,
 Who troweth me not, I let hym passe awaie.

L'amant.

Who hath a birde, a faucon, or a hounde,
 That foloweth hym for love in every place;
 He cheriseth him, and kepith him ful sounde,
 Out of his sight he will not hym enchace,
 And I that set my wittis in this cace 420
 On you alone, withoutin any chaunge,
 Am put undir, moche farthir out of grace,
 And lesse set by, then othir that be straunge.

La dame.

Though I make chere to every man about,
 For my worship, and for myne owne fraunchise,
 To you I nill doe so, withoutin doubt,
 In eschewyng all manir prejudise,
 For wote ye well, love is so little wise,
 And in bileve, so lightly will be brought,
 That he takith all at his owne devise,
 Of thing, God wote, that servith him of nought.

L'amant.

If I by love, and by my true servise
 Lese the gode chere that straungirs have alwaie,
 Whereof shall serve my trouthe in any wise,
 Lesse then to him, that cometh and goeth al daie,
 Whiche holdeth of you nothyng, that is no naie,
 Also in you is lost, as to' my femyng,
 All curtise, whiche of reson will faie
 That love for love were lawfull desiryng.

La dame.

Curtise is alyid wondir nere
 To worship, whiche hym lovith tendirly, 440
 And he will not be bounde for no praiere,
 Nor for no giftes, I saie you verily,
 But his gode chere depart full largily
 Where hym lykith, as his concept will fall,
 Guerdon constrained, a gift doen thankfully,
 These twain can ner accord, nor nevir shal.

L'amant.

As for guerdon, I seke none in this cace,
 For that deserte to me it is to hie,
 Wherfore I aske your pardon and your grace,
 Sith me behovith deth, or your mercie, 450
 To give the gode where it wantith truly
 That were reson, and a curtise manere,
 And to your own moche bettir were worthy
 Then to straungirs, to shew hem lovely chere.

La dame.

What cal ye gode, fain would I that I wist,
 That plesith one, an othir smertith sore,
 But of his owne to large is he, that list
 Give moche, and lesin his gode name therfore,
 One should not make a graunt, little ne more,

But the request were right well accordyng, 460
 If worship be not kept and set before,
 All that is lefte, is but a little thyng.

L'amant.

Into this worlde was foundin nevir none,
 Nor undir hevin creature ibore,
 Nor nevir shall, save onely your persone,
 To whom your worship touchith halfe so sore;
 But me, whiche have no sefon lesse ne more,
 Of youth ne age, but still in your service,
 I have no eyen, no wit, nor mouthe in store,
 But all be givin to the same office. 470

La dame.

A ful grete charge hath he withoutin faile,
 That his worship kepith in sikirnesse,
 But in daungir he fettith his travaile,
 That fessith it with othirs businesse,
 To hym that longith honour and noblesse,
 Upon none othir should not be awaite,
 For of his owne so moche hath he the lesse,
 That of othir moche foloweth the conceite.

L'amant.

Your eyen hath set the print, which that I fele
 Within my herte, that where so er I go, 480
 If I doe thyng, that sounith unto wele,
 Nedes must it cum from you, and fro no mo,
 Fortune will this, that I for wele or wo
 My life endure, your mercy abidyng,
 And verie right will, that I thinke also
 Of your worship above all othir thyng.

La dame.

To your worship se well, for that is nede,
 That ye spende not your sefon all in vain,
 As touchyng myne, I rede you take no hede,
 By your follie to put your selfe in pain,
 To ovircome is gode, and to restrain
 An herte, whiche is decevid follilie, 490
 For worse it is to breke then bowe certain,
 Bettir to bowe, then to fall sodainly.

L'amant.

Now, faire Ladie, thinke, sith it first began,
 That love hath set mine herte undir his cure,
 It nevir might, ne truelie I ne can None othir serve, while I shall here endure,
 In most fre wise thereof I make you sure,
 Which maie not be withdraw, this is no naie,
 I must abide all manir advinture,
 For I ne maie put to, nor take awaie. 500

La dame.

I holde it for no gift in sothfastnesse,
 That one offirith, where it is forsake,
 For soche a gifte is abandonyng expresse,
 That with worship ayen maie not be take;
 He hath an herte full fell that list to make
 A gift lightlie, that put is to refuse,
 But he is wise, that soche concept will flake,
 So that hym nede neithir studie ne muse.

L'amant.

He should not muse, that hath his service spent
 On her, whiche is a Ladie honourable, 510
 And

And if I spende my time to that entenc;
Yet at the lest I am not reprovabie
Of fainid harte, to thinke I am unable;
Or I mistoke, when I made this request,
By whiche love hath of enterpryse notable
So many hertis gottin by conquest.

La dame.

If that ye liste doe astir my counsaile,
Seche a fairir, and of more highir fame,
Whiche in service of love will you prevaile,
Astir your thought, accordyng to the same, 520
He hurtith bothe his worship and his name,
That follily for twain himself will trouble,
And he also lesith his astir game,
That surely can not set his poinctis double.

L'amant.

This your counsaile, by ought that I can se,
Is bettir faied than doen, to myne advise,
Though I beleve it not, forgive it me,
Mine herte is soche, so whole without feintise,
That I ne maie give credence in no wise
To thyng, whiche is not sounyng unto truth, 530
Othir counsaile I se' is but fantasie,
Save of your grace to shewe pitie and ruth.

La dame.

I holde hym wise that workith no folie,
And when hym list, can leve and part therfro,
But in connyng he is to lerne truelie,
That would himself conduite, and can not so,
And he that will not astir counsaile doe,
His sure he puttith into disperaunce,
And all the gode that shoud yfall hym to,
Is lost and dedde, clene out of remembraunce. 540

L'amant.

Yet woll I shewe this mattir faithfullie,
Whilis I live, what evir be my chaunce,
And if it hap, that in my truthe I die,
Then deth shall doe to me no displeaunce,
But when that I, by your harde sufferance
Shall die so true, and with so grete a pain,
Yet shall it doe me moche the lesse grevaunce,
Then for to live a false lovir certain.

La dame.

Of me get ye right noght, this is no fable,
I will to you be neithir hard nor straite, 550
And right will not no man customable,
To thinke ye should be sure of my conceite,
Who sechith sorowe, his be the receite,
Othir counsaile can I not fele nor se,
Nor for to lerne I cast me not to' awaite,
Who will thereof, let hym assaie for me.

L'amant.

Ones must it be assaied, that is no naie,
With soche as be of reputacion,
And of true love, the right honour to paie
Of fre hartis gottin by due raunsome, 560
For frewil holdith this opinion,
That it is grete duresse and discomforte,
To kepe a herte in so straite a prison,
That hath but one bodie for his disporte.

La dame.

I knowe so many causis marveilous,
That I must nede of reson thinke certain
Soche avinture is wondir perilous,
And yet well more the coming backe again,
Gode or worship thereof is seldome sene, 570
Where I ne will make any soche araie,
As for to finde a plesaunce but baraine,
When it shall cost so dere the first assaie.

L'amant.

Ye have no cause to doubt of this matter,
Nor you to meve with no soche fantasie,
To put me farre all out as a straunger,
For your godenesse can thinke and well advise
That I have made aprise in every wise,
By whiche my truthe sheweth opin evidence,
My long abidyng, and my true service
Maie well be knownen by plain experience. 580

La dame.

Of verie right he maie be callid true,
And so must he be take in every place,
That can discern, and let as he ne knewe,
And kepe the gode, if he it maie purchase,
For who that praieth, or swereth in any case,
Right well ye wote, in that no trouth is preved,
Soch hath there ben, and ar, that gettin grace,
And lese it sone, when thei have it achieved.

L'amant.

If truthe me cause, by vertue soverain,
To shewe gode love, and alwaie find contrarie, 590
And cherishe The, whiche sleeth me with the pain,
This is to me a lovely adversarie,
When that pitie, whiche long on slepe doth rarie,
Hath set the fine of all my hevinesse,
Yet her comfort to me mooste necessarie
Shall set my will more sure in stablenesse.

La dame.

The woful wight, what maie he think or say,
The contrarie of all joye and gladnesse,
A sicke bodie, his thought is ferre alwaie
From 'hem that felin no fore nor sickenesse, 600
Thus hurtis ben of divers businesse,
Whiche love hath putt unto grete hinderaunce,
And truthe also put in forgetfulnesse,
When thei full fore begin to sigh askaunce.

L'amant.

Now God defende, but he be harmelesse
Of all worship or gode that maie befall,
That to werst tournith by his leudenesse
A gift of grace, or any thyng at all,
That his Ladie vouchsafe upon hym call, 610
Or cherish hym in honourable wise,
In that defeaute what er he be that fall,
Deservith more then deth to suffre twise.

La dame.

There is no judge iset on soche trespase,
By whiche of right love maie recovered be,
One cursith fast, an othir doth manace,
Yet dyith none, as farre as I can se,
But kepe ther course alwaie in one degre,

And

And evirmore ther labour doeth encrese
To bryng Ladies by ther grete subtilte,
For othirs gilte, in forowe and disese.

620

L'amant.

All be it so onè doeth so grete offence,
And is not dedde, nor put to no justice,
Right well I wore hym gainith no defence,
But he must ende in full mischevous wife,
And all evir saied, God will hym dispise,
For falsheid is all full of curtidnesse,
That his worship may ner have entirprise,
Where it reignith, and hath the wilfulnesse.

La dame.

Of that have thei no grete fere now a daise,
Soche as will saie and maintain it thereto,
That stedfast trithe is nothyng for to praise
In 'hem that kepe it long in wele or wo,
Their busie hertis passin to and fro,
Thei be so well reclaimid to the lure,
So well lernid 'hem to withholde also,
And al to chaunge, when love should best endure.

630

L'amant.

When one hath set his herte in stable wife
In soche a place as is bothe gode and true,
He should not slit, but doc forthe his service
Alwaic withoutin chaunge of any newe,
As sone as love beginnith to remewe
All plesaunce goeth anone in lityl space,
As for my partie that shall I eschue
While that the soule abidith in his place.

L'amant.

To love truely, there as it ought of right,
Ye maie not be mistakin doutlesse,
But ye be foule discevid in your sight
By your light understandyng, as I gesse,
Yet maie we well repele your businesse,
And unto reson have some attendaunce,
Moche bettir than to abide by simplenes
The feble soccouris of desperaunce.

L'amant.

Reson, counsaile, wisedome, and gode advise
Ben undir love arrestid everichone,
To whiche I can accorde in every wise,
For thei ben not rebell, but still as stone,
Ther will and myne be medlid all in one,
And therwith boundin with so strong a chain,
That as in 'hem departyng shall be none,
But pitie breke the mightie bonde atwain.

La dame.

Ye love not your self, what evir ye be,
That in love stande subject in every place,
And of your wo if ye have no pite,
Othirs pite bileve not to purchase,
But be fullie assured, as in this cace,
I am alwaic undir one ordinaunce,
To havin bettir trust nor astir grace,
And all that levith, take to your plesaunce.

L'amant.

I have my hope so sure and so stedfast,
That soche a Ladie should not lacke pitie,

670

But now alas! it is shrit up so fast
That daungir sheweth on me his cruelte,
And if she se the vertue faile in me
Of true service, though she doe faile also
No wondir were, but this is my surete
I must suffre, whiche waie that er it go.

La dame.

Leve this purpose, I rede you for the best,
For the lengir ye kepe, it is in vain,
The lesse ye get, as of your hert's rest,
And to rejoyce it shall you ner attain,
When ye abide gode hope to make you fain
Ye shall be founde asottid in dotage,
And in the ende ye shall knowe for certain,
That hope shall paie the wretchis for ther wage.

680

L'amant.

Ye saie as fallith moste for your plesaunce,
And your powir is grete, all this I se,
But hope shall ner out of my remembraunce,
By whiche I fele so grete adversite,
For when nature hath set in you plente
Of all godenesse, by vertue and by grace,
He ner assemblid 'hem, as semid me,
To put pitie out of his dwellyng place.

La dame.

Pitie of right ought to be resonable,
And to no wight do grete disavauntage,
There as is nede, it should be profitable,
And to the pitous shewyng no damage,
If a Ladie will doe so grete outrage
To shewe pitie and cause her owne debate,
Of soche pitie comith dispitous rage,
And of soche love also right dedly hate.

700

L'amant.

To comfort 'hem that live all comfortlesse
That is no harme, but comfort to your name,
But ye that have a herte of soche dureffe
And a faire Ladie I must affirme the same,
If I durst saie, ye winne all this defame
By crueltie, whiche sittith you full ill,
But if pitie, whiche maie all this attain,
In your high herte maie rest and tary still.

La dame.

What er he be that saieth he lovith me,
And paraventure I leve well it be so,
Ought he be wrothe, or should I blamid be,
Though I did not as he would have me doe?
If I medlid with soche or othir moe
It might be callid pitie mercilesse,
And afterward if I should live in wo,
Then to repent it were to late I gesse.

710

L'amant.

O marble herte, and yet more harde parde,
Whiche mercie maie not perce for no labour,
More strong to bowe then is a mighty tre,
What availerh you to shewe so grete rigour!
Pleserh it you more to se me die this hour
Before your eyen, for your disport and plaie,
Then for to shewe some comfort and soccour
To respice deth, whiche chafith me alwaie?

720

La dame.

Of your discafe ye may have allegeaunce,
And as for myne, I let it ovir flake,
Also ye shall not die for my plesaunce,
Nor for your hele I can no suretie make,
I will not hurte my self for othirs sake,
Wepe thei, laugh thei, or sing thei, I waraunt 730
For this mattir, so will I undirtake
That none of 'hem shall make therof avaunt.

L'amant.

I can not skill of love by God alone,
I have more cause to wepe in your presence,
And well ye wote, avauntour am I none,
For certainly I love bettir silence,
One should not love by his hert's credence,
But he were sure to kepe it secretlie,
For avauntour is of no reverence,
When that his tonge is his moste enemye. 740

La dame.

Male bouch in court hath grete commaundement,
Eche man studieth to saie the worst he maie,
These false lovirs in this tyme now present
Thei servin best to jangle as a jaie,
The moste secrete iwis, yet some men saie
How he mistrustid is in some partise,
Wherefore to ladies when men speke or saie,
It should not be bilevid in no wise.

L'amant.

Of gode and ill shall be, and is alwaic,
The world is soche, the yerth is not al plain, 750
Thei that be gode, the profe sheweth every daie,
And othir wife grete villonie certain,
It is not reson, though one his tongue disdain
With cursid speche to doe hymself a shame,
That soche refuse should wroghfully remain
Upon the gode renomid in ther fame.

La dame.

Soch as be nought, when thei here tidinges new
That eche trespas shall lightly have pardon,
Thei that pursuin to be gode and true
Will not set by none ill disposicion, 760
To continue in every gode condicion
Thei are the first that fallin in damage,
And full frely the hertis habandon
To lityl faithe, with soft and faire language.

L'amant.

Now knowe I well of verie certainte
If one doe truelie, yet shall he be shente,
Sith all manir of justice and pite
Is banished out of a Ladies entente,
I can not se, but all is at one stente,
The gode, the ill, the vice, and eke the vertue, 770
Soche as be gode, soche have the punismente,
For the trespas of 'hem that live untrue.

La dame.

I have no powir you to do grevaunce,
Nor for to punishe none othir creature,
But to eschewin the more encombraunce,
To kepe us from you all, I holde it sure,
For false semblaunce hath a face full demure

Lightlie to catche these Ladies in a waite,
Wherefore we must, if we will here endure,
Make right gode watch, lo! this is my conceite.

L'amant.

Sith that of grace a godely worde not one
Maie now be had, but alwaie kept in store,
I appele to God, for he maie here my mone,
Of the duresse, which grevith me so fore,
And of pite I complaine furthirmore,
Whiche he forgate in all his ordinaunce,
Or els my life to have endid before,
Whiche so sone am put out of remembraunce.

La dame.

My herte nor I have doen you no forfeite,
By whiche ye should complaine in any kinde, 790
Nothyng hurtith you, but your own conceite,
Be judge your self, for so ye shall it finde,
Thus alwaie let this sinke into your minde,
That your desire shall ner recovered be,
Ye noye me fore in wasyng all this winde,
For I have saied inough, as semith me.

This wofull man rose up in all his paine,
And departid with wepyng countinaunce,
His wofull herte almoste to brast in twaine,
Full like to die, walkyng forthe in a traunce, 800
And sayid deth come forthe, thy self avaunce,
Or that myne herte forget his propertie,
And make shortir all this wofull penaunce
Of my pore life, full of adversitie.

Fro thens he went, but whithir wist I nought,
Nor to what part he drewe in sothfastnesse,
But he no more was in his ladie's thought,
For to the daunce anon she gan her dresse,
And aftirward one tolde me thus expresse,
He rent his heer, for anguishe and for pain, 810
And in hymself toke so grete heviness
That he was dedde within a daie or twain.

L'envoy.

THE true lovirs thus I beseeche you all,
Soche adventures slye 'hem in every wise,
And as peple defamid ye 'hem call,
For thei truelie do you grete prejudice
His castelles strong stufid with ordinaunce,
For thei have had long tyme by their office
The whole countrey of love in obeisaunce.

And ye Ladies, or what estate ye be, 820
Of whom worship hath choise his dwellyng place,
For Godd's love doe no soche crueltie,
Nor in no wise ne solowe not the trace
Of her that here is namid right wisely,
Whiche by reson me semith in this cace
Maie be callid, La belle dame sans mercy.

Go lityl boke, God sende The gode passage,
Chese well thy waie, be simple of manere,
Loke thy clothyng be like thy pilgrimage,
And specially let this be thy praiere
Unto 'hem all, that The will rede or here,
Where thou art wrong after ther helpe to call
The to correcte in any parte or all.

Praie 'hem also with thine humble servise
 Thy boldnesse to pardon in this caze,
 For els thou art not able in no wise
 To make thy self appere in any place,
 And furthir more beseeche 'hem of ther grace
 By ther favour and supportacion
 To take in gre this rude transacion. 840

The which God wore standith full destitute
 Of eloquence, of metre, and colours,
 Like as a belt nakid without refute
 Upon a plain to abide all manir showers;

I can no more, but aske of 'hem socours,
 At whose request thou wer made in this wife,
 Commaundying me with body and servise.

Right thus I make an ende of this proses,
 Beseechyng hym, that all hath in balaunce,
 That no true man be vexid causelasse 850
 As this man was, whiche is of remembraunce,
 And all that doen ther faithfull observaunce,
 And in ther trowth purpose 'hem to endure,
 I praie God sende 'hem bettir avinture.

Of Quene ANNELIDA, and false ARCITE.

ARCITE a Theban Knight forsaketh Quene ANNELIDA, who lov'd him entirely, and taketh a new Lady; whereupon ANNELIDA maketh this great Complaint.

 Thou fiers God of armis Mars the rede,
 That in thy frostie countrey callid Thrace
 Within thy grisly templis full of drede
 Honourid art as patrone of that place,
 With The Bellona Pallas full of grace
 Be present, and my song continue' and gie,
 At my beginnyng, thus to The I crie.

For it full depè is sonkin in mynde
 With pitous herte in Englishe to endite
 This olde storie, in Latine whiche I finde, 10
 Of Quene Annelida and false Arcite,
 That elde, whiche all thingis can frete and bite,
 And it hath fretin many' a noble storie,
 Hath nigh devourid out of our memorie.

Be favourable eke thou Polymnia,
 On Parnassus that with thy sustirs glade,
 By Helicon, and not ferre from Cirrha,
 Singist with voice memoriall in the shade,
 Undir the Laurir, which that maie not fadè,
 And doe that I my ship to havin winne, 20
 First followe' I Stace, and aftir him Corinne.

Junque domos patrias, Scythica post aspera gentis Prælia, laurigero subeuntem Theſea curru Latifui plaufus, miſſuſque ad ſidera vulgi, &c.

When Theſeus with warris long and grete
 The aspre folke of Scythe hath overcome,
 The Laurir crounid in his chaire golde bete
 Home to his countre housis is icome,
 For whiche the peple blisfull all and some So cridin, that to the Sterris it went,
 And hym to' honourin did all ther entent.

Before this Duke, in ſigne of victorie,
 The Trompis come, and in his banir large 30
 The Image of Mars, and in token' of glorie
 Men mightin ſe of treſure many' a charge,
 Many' a bright helme, and many' a ſpere and targe,
 Many' a freſhe knight, and many' a blisfull rout,
 On horſe and ſore, in all the field about.

Hyppolyta his wife, the hardie Quene
 Of Scythia, that he conquerid had,
 With Emelie her younge ſuſtir ſhene,

Faire in a chare of golde he with him lad,
 That at the ground about her chare ſhe ſprad 40
 With brightneſſe of the beautie in her face,
 Fulſillid all of largeſſe and of grace.

With his triumph and laurir corouned thus
 In all the ſhoure of Fortun'is yevyng
 Lete I this noble prince this Theſeus
 Toward Athenis in his waie ridyng,
 And ſonde I woll in ſhortly for to bryng
 The ſlie waie of that I began to write,
 Of quene Annelida and false Arcite.

Mars that through his furious courſe of ire, 50
 The oldè wraſthe of Juno to fulfill,
 Hath ſet the peplis hertis bothe on fire
 Of Thebes and Grece, everich othir to kill
 With blodie ſperis, reſtid never ſtill,
 But throng now here now there among 'hem both,
 That everiche othir ſlue, ſo were thei wroth.

For when Amphiorax and Tydeus
 Hippomedon and Parthenope' alſo
 Were dedde, and ſlain was the proude Capaneus,
 And when the wretchid Thebans brethrin two 60
 Were ſlain, and kyng Adraſtus home ago,
 So deſolate ſtoode Thebis, and ſo bare,
 That no wight could remedie of his care.

And when that the old Creon gan eſpie
 How that the blodè roiall was brought adoun,
 He helde the cite by his tyrannie,
 And did the gentils of that region
 To ben his frendis, and dwell in the toun,
 So what for love of him, and what for awe,
 The noble folke were to the toun idrawe. 70

Emong all theſe Annelida the quene
 Of Ermonie was in that toun dwellyng,
 That fairir ferre was then the Sonnè ſhene,
 Throughout the worlde ſo gan her name to ſpyng.
 That her to ſe had every wight likyng,
 For as of trouthe ne is there none her liche,
 Of all the women in this worlde riche,

Yong was this quene, of twentie yeris olde,
 Of middle ſtature, and of ſoche faireneſſe
 That nature had a joye her to beholde, 80
 And for to ſpekin of her ſtedfaſtneſſe;

She

She passid hath Penelope, and Lucrese,
And shortlie if she shall ben comprehended,
In her there mightin nothyng ben amended.

This Theban knight Arcite eke sothe to faine
Was yong, and therwithal a lustie knight,
But he was double in love, and nothing plaine,
And subtil in that crafte ovre any wight;
And with his connyng wan this ladie bright,
For so ferforthe he gan her trowth assure,
That she hym trustith o'er any cature. 90

What should I faine? she lovith Arcite so,
That when that he was absent any throwe,
Anone her thought her herte brast a two,
For in her sight to her he bare hym lowe,
So that she wende have all his herte iknowe,
But he was false, it nas but fainid chere,
As nedith not soche craftis men to lere.

But nerthelesse full mikill businesse
Had he, er that he might his ladie winne, 100
And swore that he would dyin for distresse,
Or from his witte he sayid he would twinne;
Alas the while! for it was routhe and sinne,
That she upon his sorowis would rue,
But nothing thinketh the fals: as doth the true.

Her fredome found Arcite in soche manere,
That al was his, that she hath moche or lite,
Ne to no manir cature made she chere
Furthir then as it likid to Arcite,
Ther was no lack, with which he might her wite,
She was so ferforthe yevin him to plesse,
That all that likid hym did her to ese.

There nas to her no manir lettir sent,
That touchid love, from any manir wight,
That she ne shewid hym or it was brent,
So plain she was, and dyd her fullè might
That she n'ill hidin nothyng from her knight,
Left he of any untrouthe her upbreide,
Withoutin bode his herte she obeide. 120

And eke he made hym jelous o'ir her,
That what that any man had to her saied
Anon he would yprayin her to swere
What was that worde, or make him ill apaied.
Then wenid she out of her witte have braied,
But all was nought but sleight and flatterie,
Withoutin love he fainid jelousie.

And all this toke she so debonairly,
That al his wil her thought it skilful thing,
And er the lengir loved hym tendirly, 130
And did hym honour as he were a kyng,
Her herte was to hym weddid with a ryng,
For so ferforthe on trouthe is her entent
That where he goith, her hert with him went.

Whan she shal etc, on him is so her thought,
That wel unnethis of mette toke she kepe,
And whan that she was to her rest ybrought,
On him she thought alway tyl that she slepe,
Whan he was absent, prively dothe she wepe.
Thus livith faire Annelida the quene, 140
For false Arcyte, that dyd her al this tene.

This false Arcyte, of his newfanglenesse,
For she to him so lowly was and trewe,
Ytoke lesse deintè for her stedfastenesse,
And sawe anothir lady proude and newe,
And right anon he clad him in her hewe,
Wote I not whethir in white, red, or grene,

And falsid faire Annelida the quene.

But nerthelesse, grete wondir was it none
Though he were false, for it is the kinde of man.
Sithe Lamech was, that is so longe agone,
To be in love as false as er he can,
He was the firste fathir that began
To lovin two, and was in bigamie,
And he founde tentis first, but yf men lye.

This false Arcite, somewhat must he nede faine,
Whan he was false to coveren his traitourie,
Right as an horse, that can both bite, and plaine,
For he bare her in honde of trechirie,
And swore he coude her doubleness elpye, 160
And al was falsenesse that she to him ment,
Thus swore this thefe, and forth his way he went

Alas what herte might endurin it,
For routhe or wo, her sorowe for to tel,
Or what man hath the conning or the wir,
Or what man might within the chambre dwel,
If I to him reherlin shall the hel,
That suffrith faire Annelida the quene,
For fals Arcite, that did her al this tene. 170

She wepith, wailith, swounith pitoufly,
To grounde as ded she fallith as a ston,
She crampith her limmis crokidyly,
She spekith as her witte were al agone,
Othir colour than ashin hath she none,
Ne none othir worde speketh she moch or lite,
But mercy crail hert: min Arcite.

And thus endureth, til that she was so mate,
That she ne hath fote on which she may sustene,
But forth languishing er in this estate
Of which Arcite hath neithir rothe ne tene, 180
His herte was ellifwhere sette new and grene,
That on her wo ne deinet him not to think,
Him reckith ner whethir she flete or sinke.

This newe lady holdith him so narowe
Up by the bridil, at the slav's ende,
That every worde he dred it as an arowe,
Her daungir made him bothè bowe and bende,
And as her luste, madin him turne or wende,
For she ne grauntid him in her living, 190
No grace, why that he hath therof to singe,

But drove him forth, unneth list her to knowe
That he was servaunt to her ladyship,
But lesse that he were proude, she held him lowe,
Thus servith he, withoutin mete or sip,
She sente him nowe to lande, and nowe to ship,
And for she yave him daungir al his fil,
Therefore she had him at her owne wil.

Ensample of this, ye thrifful women al,
Take hede of Annelida and false Arcite,
That for her list him her dere herte call, 200
And was so meke, therefore he loved her lite,
The kinde of mann's herte is to delite
On thing that straunge is, al so God me save,
For what they may not get, that wold they have.

Nowe turne we to Annelida ayen,
That pinith day by day in languishing,
But whan she sawe that her ne gate no geyn,
Upon a day ful sorowfully weping
She cast her for to make a complaining,
And with her owne hande she gan it write, 210
And sente it to her Theban knight Arcyte.

The Complaint of ANNELIDA to false ARSITE.

O thirlid with the point of remembraunce
S The swerde of sorowe, whette with false plefaunce,

Myne herte bare of blisse, and black of hewe,
 That turnid is to quaking al! my daunce,
 My swertye in wapid courtinance,
 Sens it availith nothing to ben trewe,
 For who so trewe is certis it shall her rewe
 That servith love, and dothe her observaunce, 220
 Alway to one, and chaungith for no newe.

I wote my selfe as well as any wight,
 For I loved one with al min hert and might,
 More than my self, an hundred thousande sith,
 And callid him my hert's lyfe, my knight,
 And was al his, as ferre as it was right,
 And whan that he was glad, than was I blithe,
 And his disese ywas my dethe as swithe,
 And he ayen his trouthe hath to me plight 230
 For evirmore his lady me to kith.

Nowe is he false alas! and causeles,
 And of my wo he is so routheles,
 That with a worde him list not onis daine
 To bring ayen my sor'owful herte in pees,
 For he is caught up in an othir lees,
 Right as hym lyst he laughith at my paine,
 And I ne can min herte not restraine
 For to love him yet alway nertheles,
 And of all this I n'ot to whom to plaine. 240

And shoulde I plain, alas the hardè stounde!
 Unto my soc that yave myn herte a wounde,
 And yet desirith that myn harme be more,
 Now certis ferthir woll I nevir founde
 None othir helpe my foris for to founde,
 My destiny hath shapid so ful yore,
 I woll none othir medecyne ne lore,
 I woll ben aye there I was onis bounde,
 That I have said, be said for evirmore.

Alas! where is become your gentillnesse,
 Your wordes full of plefaunce and humblenesse,
 Your observaunce in so lowe a manere,
 Your awaitinge, and eke your besinesse
 On me, that ye tho callid your maistresse,
 Your soveraine lady in this worlde here?
 Alas! is there now neithir worde ne chere
 Ye vouchsafin upon myn hevinesse?
 Alas your love, I bye it al to dere!

Nowe certis swete Arcite, though that ye
 Thus causelesse the rusull Cause ybe 250
 Of all my pync, and dedly' Adversite,
 Your manly reason ought it to respite,
 To se your sothefast frende, and namely me,
 Which that have nevir yet in no degre Offendid you in ought, as wisly he,
 That all thinges wote of wo my soule quite.

But for I was so plain to The Arcite,
 In all my wordes and workis moche and lite,
 And was so besy aye you to delite,
 Myne honour only fave meke, kinde, and fre, 270
 Therefore Arcite ye put in me this wite,
 Alas! Alas! ye rechin not a mite
 Though that the percing swerde of sorow byte
 My woful hert, thorough your cruilte.

My swete soc, why do ye so for shame?

And thinkin ye that furthered be your name
 To lovin a newe, and ben untrewes aye,
 And putin you in flaundir nowe and blame,
 And do to me adversyte and grame,
 That love you most, God thou wotist alway 280
 Yet turne ayen, and yet be plaine some daye,
 And then shall this that now is mis ben game,
 And al forgerin, whilis I lyve maye.

Lo herte myne, al this is for to saine;
 As whethir shal I praye or ellis plaine,
 Which is the way to done you to be trewe?
 For eithir mote I have you in my chaine;
 Or with the deth ye mote depart us twayne,
 There beth none othir mene ne wayis newe,
 For God so wysely on my soule rewe, 290
 As verily ye slaine me with the paine,
 That mowe ye se unfainid on mine hewe.

For thus ferforth have I my deth ysought,
 My selfe I murdir with my privie thought,
 For sorowe and routh of your unkindenesse
 I wepe, I waile, I fast, al helpith naught,
 I voide alle joy that is to speak of aught,
 I voide alle company, I flye gladnesse,
 Who may avaunt her bet of hevinesse
 Than I, and to this plite have ye me brought, 300
 Withoutin gilte, me nedith no witnesse.

And shoulde I pray, and weivin womanhede?
 Nay rathir deth, than do so foule a dede,
 And aske mercy, and giltlesse, what nede?
 And if that I complaine what life I lede
 You reckith not, that know I out of drede;
 And if I unto you mine othis bede
 For mine excuse, a scorne shal be my mede;
 Your chere yflourith, but it woll not fede,
 Ful longe agon I might have takin hede. 310

For though I had you to morowe againe,
 I might as wel holde Aprilis from raine,
 As holdin you to makin you stedfast,
 Almyghty God, of trouthe the soveraine,
 Wher is the trouthe of man, who hath it slaine?
 She that hem lovith, shall hem finde as fast
 As in a tempest is a rottin mast,
 Is that a tame best, that is evir faine
 To renne away, when he is left agast?

Nowe mercy swete Arcite, if I missay 320
 Whethir have I aught said out of the way
 I n'ot, my witte is wastid al away,
 I fare as doth the fonge of chantepleure,
 For nowe I plaine, and nowe agen I pley
 I am so masid that I dey, I dey, Arcite, Arcite hath born away the key
 Of al my wele, and my gode avinture.

For in this world there ne is no cature,
 Walking alas! in more discomfiture
 Than I, ne that more sorowe doth endure, 330
 For yf I slepe a furlonge way or twey,
 Than thinkith me anon that your figure
 Suppliant before me stante clad in asure
 Redy este to proffe a newe asure
 For to ben trewe, and mercyme to prey.

The longè night this wondir syght I drie,
 That on the day, for soche Affray I dye,
 And of al this right naught iwys ye retche,

Ne nevirmore myne eyin two ben drye,
And to your routhe, and to your trouthe I crye, 340
But wel away! to ferre ben they to fetehe,
Thus holdith me my destiny a wretche,
But me to rede out of this drede or gye
Ne may my wit (so weke is it) not stretche.

Than ende I thus, sithe I may do no more,
I yeve it up for nowe and evirmore,
For I shall nevir este putten in balaunce
My sikirnefs ne lerne of love the lore,
But as the swan, I have herde say ful yore,
Ayenst his deth wol sing in his penance,

So singe I here the destinie and chaunce,
Howe that Arcite Annelida so fore
Hath thrillid with the poynt of remembraunce.

Whan that Annelida this woful quene
Hath of her hande ywrittin in this wise,
With face all ded, betwixin pale and grene
She fel a swoone, and sithe she gan to rise,
And unto Mars avowith sacrifice
Within the temple, with a so'rowfull chere,
That shapin was, as ye may plainly here.

Explicit.

The Assemble of Ladies.

A Gentlewoman dreameth that she seeth a greate number of Ladies put up their Billes of Complaint before a Judge; who promiset to relieve their Grievances.

N Septembre' at the fallinge of the lefe,
The freshe ceson was atogidir done,
And of the corne was gathirid the shefe,
In a gardine aboute twayne astir none
Ther were ladies walking, as was ther wone
Foure in nombre, as to my minde dothe fall,
And I the fiftie, the simplist of 'hem al.

Of gentilwomen faire there were also Disporting 'hem, everiche astir her gife,
In crosse aleis walking by two and two; 10
And some alone, astir ther fantasies,
Thus occupied we were in diverse wise,
And yet in trouthe we were not al alone,
There werin knightes and squiris many one.

Wherof I served, one of 'hem askid me,
I said ayen, as it fel in my thought,
To walke aboute the mase in certainte,
As a hedeless woman that nothing rought.
He askid me ayen whom that I sought, 20
And of my colour why I was so pale?
Forsothe (q'ð I) and therby lithe a tale.

That must me were (q'ð he) and that anone
Tel on, let se, and make no tarying.
Abide (q'ð I) ye ben a hastie one,
I let you were it is no lityl thing,
But for bicause ye have a grete longing
In your desire this processe for to here,
I shal you tel the plaine of this matere.

It happid thus, that in an astirnone
My felawship and I by one assent, 30
Whan al othir besinnessis were done,
To passe our time, into this mase we went,
And toke our waies, eche astir our entent,
Some went inward, and went they had gon out.
Some stonde in the mid, and loked all about.

And soth to say, some were ful ferre behinde,
And right anon as ferforthe as the best,
Othir there were so masid in ther minde
Al waies were gode for 'hem both est and west, 40
Thus went they forth, and had but lityl rest,
And some ther courage dyd 'hem sore assaile,
For very wrathe, they dyd step o'er the raile.

And as they sought 'hem selvin to and fro,
I gate my self a lityl avauntage,
Al forweried I might no furthir go,
Though I had won right grate for my viage,
So came I forthe into a straite passage,
Which brought me to an herbir faire and grene,
Ymade with benchis ful crasty and clene.

That as methoughtin, there might no cecture 50
Devise a bette by dewe proporcioun,
Safe it was closid wel I you ensure,
With masonrye of compace enviroun,
Ful secretly with stannis goyng down,
In myddes the place, with turning whele certain,
And upon that a potte of Margelaine.

With margerettes growinge in ordinanace
To shewe 'nem selfe, as folke went to and fro,
That to beholde it was a grete plesaunce,
And how they were accompainid with mo, 60
Ne momblifnesse and sonenelle also,
The poure penis were not dislogid there,
Ne gode wote ther place was every where.

The flore and bench was pavid faire and smothe
With stonis square, of many divers hewe,
So wel joynid, that for to say the soth
Al semid one, that no one othir knewe,
And undimith the stremis newe and newe,
As silvir bright, springing in soche a wise,
That whence it came, ye coude it not devise. 70

A lityl while ywas I al alone
Beholding wel this delectable place,
My felawship were coming everichone,
So muste we nedis abyde for a space,
Remembiring of many divers cace
Of tyme ypassid yore with sighis depe,
I set me downe, and there I fel aslepe.

And as I slept, me thought there came to me
A gentylwoman, metely of stature, 80
Of grete worship she semid for to be,
Atyrid wel, not high, but by mesure,
Her countinaunce full sad was and demure,
Her colours blewe, al that she had upon,
Ther ne came no mo but her selfe alone.

5 S

Her

Her gowne wel was embraundrid certainly
 With floris fette afir her owne devise
 In her purfillis, her worde by and by,
Bien & loyalement, as I coude devise :
 Than praide I her in any manir wife
 That of her name I might have remembraunce, 90
 She said she was callid Perfeveraunce.

So furthirmore to spekin was I bolde,
 Where she dwellid, I prayed her for to say ?
 And she againe ful curtilly me tolde,
 My dwelling is, and hath be many' a day,
 With a lady: what lady I you pray ?
 Of gret estate, thus warne I you (qð she)
 What cal ye her? Her name is Loyalte.

In what office stande ye, or what degre?
 (Qð I to her) that would I wete right faine? 100
 I am (qð she) unworthy though I be,
 Of her chambre her ushir in certaine,
 This rodde I bere, as for a tokin plaine,
 Lyke as ye knowe the rule in soche service,
 Apertaining is to the same office.

She chargid me by her commaundement
 To warne you, and your felawes everichone,
 That ye shulde come there as she is present,
 For a counsaile, whiche shal be nowe anone,
 Or sevin dayis be comin and gone, 110
 And furthirmore, she bad that I shulde say,
 Excusis there might be none nor delay.

Anothir thing was not forget behinde,
 Whiche in no wise I wolde but that ye knewe,
 Remembre wel, and bere it in your minde,
 Al your felawes and ye must come in blewe
 Everilyche, your matirs for to sewe,
 With more, whiche I pray you to thinke upon,
 Your wordis on your felvis everychon.

And be not abashed in no manir wise, 120
 As many ben, in soche an high presence,
 Make your request, as ye can best devise,
 And she gladly wol yeve you audience,
 There is no grete, nor no manir offence,
 Wherin ye fele that your herte is displefed,
 But with her help right sone ye shal be cled.

I am right glad (qð I) ye tel me this,
 But there is non of us that knoweth the waie;
 As of your way (qð she) ye shal not mis,
 Ye shal have one to gyde you day by day 130
 Of my felawes, I can not bettir say,
 Soche one as shal tel you the way ful right,
 And Diligence this gentilwoman hight.

A woman of right famous govirnaunce
 And wel cherished, I tel you in certaine,
 Her selschship shal do you grete plessaunce,
 Her porte is soch, her manirs trewe and plaine,
 She with glad chere wold do her besy paine
 To bring you there, now farewell, I have done,
 Abyde said I, ye may not go so sone. 140

Why so (qð she) and I have ferre to go,
 To yeve warning in many divers place
 To your felawes, and so to othir mo,
 And well ye wote I have but lytil space?
 Now yet (qð I) ye must tel me this cace,
 If we shal any men unto us cal;
 Not one (qð she) may come amonges you all.

Not one than said I, eigh Benedicite !
 What have I done? I pray you tel me that?

Nowe by my lyfe, I trowe but wel (qð she) 150
 But er I can byleve there is somwhat,
 And for to saye you trouthe more can I not,
 In questions I may nothing be to large,
 I meddle must no furthir then my charge.

Than thus (qð I) do me to undirstande
 What place is there this lady is dwelling?
 Forsethe (qð she) and one fought al this lande
 Fairir is none, though it were for a king,
 Devisid wel, and that in every thing,
 The touris hie ful plessaunt shal ye finde, 160
 With phanis fresch, turning with every wynde.

The chambris and the parlirs of a sorte,
 With bay windowes, godely as may be thought,
 As for daunsing, and othir wise disporte,
 The galeries be all right well ywrought,
 That wel I wote, if ye were thyðir brought,
 And take gode hede therof in every wise,
 Ye wol it thinke a very paradise.

What hight the place (qð I) now say me that?
 Plessaunt Regarde (qð she) to tel you plaine; 170
 Of very trouth (qð I) and wote ye what,
 It may right wel be callid so certaine,
 But furthirmore this wold I wit right fain,
 What I shulde do as sone as I come there,
 And afir whom that I may best enquire?

A gentilwoman, portir of the yate,
 There shal ye finde, her name is Countinaunce,
 If ye so hap ye come erly or late,
 Of her wer gode to have some acquaintaunce,
 She can you tel howe ye shal you avaunce, 180
 And howe to come to her ladye's presence,
 To her wordis I rede ye geve credence.

Nowe it is time that I shulde parte you fro,
 For in gode faithe I have grete businesse.
 I wote right wel (qð I) that it is so,
 And I thanke you of your grete gentilnesse,
 Your comforte hath yevin me hardinesse,
 That nowe I shal be bolde withoutin faile
 To do' afir your advice and gode counsaile.

Thus partid she, and I leste all alone, 190
 With that I sawe (as I behelde aside)
 A woman come a verie godely one,
 And forth withal as I had her aside
 Me thought anone it shoulde be the gide,
 And of her name anone I did enquire,
 Ful womanly she yave me this answere,

I am (qð she) but a simple cature,
 Sent from the courte, my name is Diligence,
 As sone as I myght come, I you ensure,
 I taried not attir I had licence, 200
 And nowe that I am come to your presence,
 Loke what service I can you do or may,
 Commaundith me, I can no furthir say.

I thankid her, and prayed her to come nere,
 Bycause I woulde se how she was araide,
 Her gown was blew dressid in gode manere,
 With her devise, her worde also that saide
Tant que je puis, and I was wel apaide;
 And than wist I, withoutin any more,
 It was ful trewe that I had herde before. 210

Though we toke nowe before a litil space
 It were ful gode (qð she) as I coude gesse, Howe farre (qð I) have we unto the place?
 A daye's journey (qð she) but litil lesse, Wherfore

Wherefore I rede that now we outwarde dresse,
For I suppose our felawship is past,
And for nothings I wolde not we were the last.

Than departid we at springing of the daye,
And forth we wente a softe and esy pace,
Til at the last we were on our journey 220
So far outwarde, that we might se the place;
Nowe let us rest (q<sup>d</sup> I) a litil space,
And say we as devoutly as we can
A Pater noster for saint Julian.

With al my herte I assent with gode wil,
Moch bettir shal we spede, whan we have done,
Than taried we, and said it every dyl,
And whan the day was past farre aftir none,
We sawe a place, and thider came we sone,
Whiche rounde aboute was closid with a wal, 230
Seminge to me full like an hospitall.

There found I one had brought all min aray,
(A gentil woman of mine acquaintaunce)
I have mervaille (q<sup>d</sup> I) what manir way
Ye had knowlege of al this ordinaunce.
Yes yes (q<sup>d</sup> she) I herde Perseveraunce
Howe she warnid her felawes everichone,
And what aray ye shouldin have upon.

Nowe for my love (q<sup>d</sup> I) this I you praye, Sith ye have take upon you all the paine, 240
That ye wolde helpe me on with mine araye,
For wit ye wel I wolde be gone right faine,
Al this prayir us nedith not certaine:
(Q<sup>d</sup> she) againe, come of and hyc you sone,
And ye shal se anone it shal be done.

But this I doute me gretly, wote ye what,
That my felawes be passid by and gone?
I warnè you (q<sup>d</sup> she) that are they nat,
For here they shall assemble everichone,
Norwithstandinge I counsaile you anone 250
Make you redy, and tary you no more,
It is no harme though ye be there before.

So than I dresid me in mine araye,
And asked her whether it were wel or no:
It is right well (q<sup>d</sup> she) unto my pay,
Ye nede not care to what place er ye go,
And whiles that she and I debatid so,
Came Diligence, and sawe me al in blewe,
Sistir (q<sup>d</sup> she) right wel broke ye your newe.

Discrecion purveour.

Than wente we forth and met at avinture 260
A yonge woman, an officir seminge,
What is your name (q<sup>d</sup> I) tell gode creture?
Discrecion (q<sup>d</sup> she) without lesinge.
And where (q<sup>d</sup> I) is your most abidinge?
I have (q<sup>d</sup> she) this office of purchase,
Chefe purveyour that longith to this place.

Acquayntaunce herbyger.

Faire love (q<sup>d</sup> I) in al your ordinaunce,
What is her name that is the herbigere?
Forsothe (q<sup>d</sup> she) her name is acquaintaunce,
A woman of right gracious manere; 270
Then thus (q<sup>d</sup> I) what straungirs have ye here?
But fewe (q<sup>d</sup> she) of high degre ne lowe,
Ye be the first, as ferforth as I knowe.

Countinaunce porter.

Thus with talis we came streight to the yare;
This yonge woman departid was and gone,
Came Diligence, and knockid fast thereat,
Who is without (q<sup>d</sup> Countinaunce) anone?
Truly (q<sup>d</sup> I) fayre sistir here is one.
Which one (q<sup>d</sup> she) and therewithal she longh?
I Diligence, ye knowe me wel ynonghe. 280

Than opened she the gate, and in we go,
With wordis faire she saide full gentilly,
Ye are welcome ywis, are ye no mo?
Nat one (q<sup>d</sup> she) save this woman and I;
Now than (q<sup>d</sup> she) I pray you hertily,
Takith my chaumbre for a while to rest,
Til your felawis come, I holde it best.

I thanked her, and forth we go everichone
Til her chaumbre withoutin wordis mo,
Came Diligence and toke her leve anone, 290
Where er ye lyst (q<sup>d</sup> I) nowe may ye go,
And I thanke you right hertily also
Of your labour, for which God do you mede,
I can no more, but Jesu be your spede.

Than Countinaunce thus askid me anone,
Your felawship, where be they all (q<sup>d</sup> she)?
For sothe (q<sup>d</sup> I) they are cominge everichone,
But where they are I knowe no certainte,
Without I may hem at this windowe se,
Here wil I stande a waiting here amonge, 300
For wel I wote they wil not hence be longe.

Thus as I stode musing ful busily,
I thought to take gode hede of her aray,
Her gowne was blewe, this wote I verily,
Of gode facyon, and furrid wel with gray,
Upon her sleve her worde this is no nay,
Whiche said thus, as my pennè can endite,
A may, qui voy writin with lettirs white.

Then forth withal she came streight unto me,
Your wordes (q<sup>d</sup> she) sain wold I that I knewe, 310
Forsothe (q<sup>d</sup> I) ye shal wel knowe and se,
And for my worde I have none, this is trew,
It is ynough that my clothing be blewe,
As here before I had commaundement,
And so to do, I am right well content.

Largeste stewarde.

But tel me this I pray you hertilye
The steward here say me, what is her name?
She hight Largeste I say you furily,
A faire lady and of right noble fame,
Whan ye her se ye wil reporte the fame, 320
And undir her to byd you welcome al
There is Belchier marshal of the hal.

Now al this while that ye here tary still,
Your own matirs ye may wel have in mind,
But tel me this, have ye brought any bill?
Ye ye (q<sup>d</sup> I) and els I were behinde,
Where is there one tel me that I may finde
To whom that I may shewe my matirs plaine?
Surely (q<sup>d</sup> she) unto the chambirlaine.

Remembraunce chambertlaine.

The chambirlaine (q<sup>d</sup> I) and say ye trewe? 330
Ye verily (said she) by myne advise,
Ben nat aferde, unto her lowlye sewe,

It

It shal be done (qð I) as ye devyse,
But I must knowe her name in any wise:
Trewly (qð she) to shewe you in substaunce
Withouten fainyng her name is Remembraunce.

The secretar ye may not be forget,
For she dothe right moche in every thinge,
Wherefore I rede, when ye have with her mete,
Your matere whole tel her without fainyng, 340
Ye shal her fynde ful gode and ful lovinge.
Tel me her name (qð I) of gentilnesse?
By my gode sothe (qð she) Av.senelle.

That name (qð I) for her is passing gode,
For every byl and schedule she must se,
Nowe gode (qð I) come stande there as I stode,
My felawes be cominge, yondir they be.
Is it in jape, or say ye sothe (qð she)?
In jape, nay nay, I say you for certayne,
Se how thei come togethir twain and twaine. 350

Ye say ful sothe (qð she) that is no nay,
I se coming a godely company:
They ben foch folke (qð I) dare I to say
That lyst to love, thinkir it verily,
And for my love I pray you faythfully
At any tyme, whan they upon you call,
That ye wol be gode frende unto hem all.

Of my frenship (qð she) they shal not misse,
And for their ese to put therto my paine.
God yelde it you (qð I) but take you this, 360
Howe shal we know who is the chambirlayne?
That shal ye wel know by her word certaine.
What is her worde syltir, I pray you say?
(Plus ne purroye) thus writith she alwaye.

Thus as we stode togyðir she and I,
Even at the yate my felawes were echone,
So met I hem (as me thought was godely)
And bade hem welcome al by one and one:
Then came forth Countinaunce to us anone,
Ful hertily, faire sistirs al (qð she) 370
Ye be right welcome into this countre.

I counsaile you to take a litil rest
In my chambre, if it be your plessaunce,
Whan ye be there, me think it for the best
That I go in, and cal Perseveraunce,
Bycause she is one of your acquaintaunce,
And she also wil tel you every thinge,
Howe ye shal be ruler of your cominge.

My felawes al and I, by one advise,
Were wel agreed, to do lyke as she sayde, 380
Than we began to dresse us in our gise,
That folke shoulde say we were not unpurvide,
And gode wagirs among us there we laide
Whiche of us was atirid moste godelest,
And of us al whiche shulde be praisid best.

The portir came and brought Perseveraunce,
She welcomid us in curteise manere,
Thinke not long (qð she) of your attendaunce,
I wil go speke unto the herbigere,
That she may purvey for your lodging here, 390
Than wil I go unto the chambirlaine,
To speke for you, and comé anone againe.

And whan that she departid was and gone,
We sawe folkis coming without the wal,
So gret peple, that nombre coude we none,
Ladies they were, and gentil women al,
Clothid in blewe, echone her worde withal,

But for to knowe her worde or her devise
They came so thicke, I ne might in no wise.

With that anone came in Perseveraunce, 400
And where I stode, she came streight unto me,
Ye ben (qð she) of min olde acquaintaunce,
You to enquire the boldir wolde I be,
What worde they bere eche aftir her degre,
I you pray tel it me in secret wise,
And I shall kepe it close on warrantise.

We ben five ladies (qð I) al in fere,
And gentil women four in company,
When they begin to opin ther matere,
Than shal ye knowe ther wordis by and by, 410
But as for me I have none verily,
And so I tolde Countinaunce here before,
Al min aray is blewe, what nedith more?

Nowe then (qð she) I wol go backe againe,
That ye may have knowlege, what ye shuld do,
In soth (qð I) if ye wolde take the paine,
Ye dyd right moche for us, if ye dyd so,
The rathir spede, the sonir may we go,
Grete coste alway there is in tarynge,
And longe to sewe it is a very thinge. 420

Then partid she, and came againe anone,
Ye must (qð she) come to the chambirlaine:
We be nowe redy (qð I) everychone,
To folowe you, whan er ye list certaine,
We have none cloquence to tel you plaine, Beseeching you we may be so excused
Our trewe meaning, that it be not refused.

Than went we forth aftir Perseveraunce,
To se the prees it was a wondir cace,
There for to passe it was a grete combraunce, 430
The peple stode so thicke in every place,
Nowe stande ye stil (qð she) a litil space,
And for your ese somewhat I shal assay,
If I can make you any bettir way.

And forth she gothe among hem everychon,
Making a way, that we might thorough passe,
More at our ese, and whan she had so done
She beckende us to come, where as she was,
So aftir her we folowed more and las,
She brought us streight unto the chambirlayne,
There lefte she us, and than she went againe.

We salued her, as reson woulde it so,
Ful humble beseeching her gret godenesse
In our mattirs, that we had for to do,
That she wolde be gode lady and maistresse.
Ye be welcome (qð she) in sothfastenesse,
And se what I can do, you for to plesse,
I am redy, that may be to your ese.

We folowed her unto the chambir dore,
Sistirs (qð she) come ye in aftir me, 450
But wete ye wel, there was a pavid flore,
The godlyist, that any wight might se,
And furthir more about than lokid we,
On eche cornir, and upon every wal,
Whiche was ymade of Burel and Crystal.

Wherein was graven of stories many one,
Firsste howe Phyllis, of womanly pite
Dyed piteously for love of Demophone,
Next aftir was the story of Thisbe, Howe that she slewe her selfe undir a tre, 460
Yet sawe I more, howe in ryght pitous caas
For Antony was slaine Cleopatras.

Upon

Upon that othir side was Hawes the shene,
 Ful untrewly discevid in her baine.
 There was also Annelida the quene,
 Upon Arcite howe fore she did complaine!
 Al these stories were gravid there certaine;
 And many mo, than I reherse you here,
 It were to longe to tel you al in fere.

And bicause that the wallis shone so bright 470
 With fine umple they were al ovir sprad,
 To the entent folke shulde not hurte ther sight,
 And thorough it the stories might be radde;
 Than furthir more I went, as I was lad,
 And there I sawe withoutin any faile
 A chaire yset, with ful riche aparaile:

And five stagis it was set fro the grounde;
 Of Cassidony ful curiously wrought,
 With soure pomelles of golde, and very rounde,
 Set with saphirs, as gode as coude be thought, 480
 That wot ye what, if it wer thorough fought
 As I suppose, fro this countre to Inde,
 Anothir soche it were right harde to finde:

For wete ye wel, I was right nere to that;
 So as I durst, beholding by and by,
 Above there was a riche clothe of estate
 Ywrought with the nedle ful straungely,
 Her worde thereon, and thus it said truely,
En Dieu est to tel you in wordis fewe,
 With grete lettirs, the bertir I hem knewe. 490

Thus as we stode, a dore opened anone,
 A gentilwoman, semely of stature,
 Bering a mace, came out her selfe alone,
 Sothely me thought her a godely cature;
 She spake nothings to lowde, I you ensure,
 Nor hastily, but with godely warninge,
 Make romie (qð she) my lady is cominge.

With that anone I sawe Perseveraunce
 Howe she helde up the tapet in her hande,
 I sawe also in godely ordinaunce 500
 This gret lady within the tapet stonde,
 Comyng outwarde, I wol ye undirstande,
 And aftir her a noble company,
 I coude not tel the nombre sikirly.

Of ther namis I wolde nothing enquire,
 Furthir than soche as we wolde fewe unto,
 Save a lady whiche was the chauncellere,
 Attemperaunce, sothely her name was so,
 For us nedith with her have moche to do
 In our mattirs, and alway more and more, 510
 And so forthe to tellin you furthir more,

Of this lady, her beaute to discrive,
 My conninge is to simple verily,
 For nevir yet the dayis of my live
 So inly faire I have sene none trewly,
 In her estate aslurid uttirly,
 There wantid nought, I dare you wel assure,
 That longid to a most godely cature.

And furthir more to speke of her araye,
 I shal tel you the manir of her gowne, 520
 Of clothe of golde ful riche, it is no nay,
 The colour blewe of right godely facyoun,
 In taberde wise, the sleeves hanging adown,
 And what purfil there was, and in what wise,
 So as I can I shal it you devise.

Aftir a sorte, the collir and the vente,
 Lyke as Armine is made in purfilinge,

With grete perlis ful fine and orient,
 They were couchid all aftir one worching,
 With diamondes in stede of powdiring, 530
 The slevis and the purfil of a fise,
 They werin made alike in every wise.

Aboute her necke a sorte of faire rubyes,
 In white flouris of right fine enamaile,
 Upon her hed set in the fairist wise
 A cirle of grete balais of entaile,
 That in ernest to speke withoutin faile,
 For yonge and olde, and every manir age,
 It was a worlde to loken on her visage.

Thus coming forth to sit in her estate, 540
 In her presence we kneled down everychone, Presenting our byllis, and wote ye what,
 Ful humbly she toke hem by one and one,
 Whan we had done, than came they al anone,
 And did the same eche aftir her manere,
 Kneling at ones, and risinge al in fere.

Whan this was don, and she set in her place,
 The chambirlaine she did unto her cal,
 And she godely coming to her apace,
 Of her entent knowinge nothing at al, 550
 Voyde backe the prese (qð she) up to the wall,
 Make large romie, but loke that ye do not tary,
 And take these byllis to the secretary.

The chambirlaine did her commaundement,
 And came againe, as she was byd to do,
 The secretary there beyng present,
 The byllis were delivered her also,
 Not onely ours, but many othir mo,
 Than the lady with gode advise againe
 Anone with al callid her chambirlaine. 560

We wol (qð she) the first thing that ye do
 The secretary ye make come anone,
 With ther billis, and thus we wil also
 In our presence she rede hem everychon,
 That we may takin gode advise thereon,
 Of the ladies that ben of our counsaile,
 Loke this be done, withoutin any faile.

Whan the chambirlaine wiste of her entent,
 Anone she did the secretarye call,
 Let your billis (qð she) be here present, 570
 My lady it wil: Madame (qð she) I shal,
 And in presence she wil that ye hem call,
 With right gode wil I am redy (qð she)
 At her plesure, whan she commaundith me.

And upon that was made an ordinaunce,
 They that came first ther byllis shulde be red,
 Ful gentilly than said Perseveraunce,
 Reson it wil that they were sonist spedde;
 Anone withal, upon a tapet spredde,
 The secretary layde hem downe echone, 580
 Our byllis first she redde tho one by one.

The first lady bering in her devise,
Sans que jannays, thus wrote she on her byl,
 Complaining sore, and in ful pitous wise
 Of promise made, with faithful hert and wyll,
 And so brokin ayenst al manir skil,
 Without deserte alwaies on her partie,
 In this matir desiring remedye.

Her next folowing, her word was in this wise,
Un sans changer, and thus she did complaine, 590
 Though she had be guerdoned for her service,
 Yet nothing like as she that toke the paine,
 5 T Wherfore

Wherfore she coude in no wise her restraine,
But in this case fewe until her presence,
As reson wolde to havin recompence.

So furthir more, to speke of othir twaine,
One of 'hem wrote aftir her fantasy,
Onques puis lever, and for to tel you plaine,
Her complaint was ful pitous verily,
For as she said, there was grete reson why, 600
As I can remembre in this matere,
I shal you tell the proceffe al in fere.

Her byl was made complaininge in her gife,
That of her joye, her comforte, and gladnesse,
Was no suretie, for in no manir wise
She said therin no point of stablenesse,
Nowe yl, now wele, out of al skirnesse,
Ful humbly desiring of her high grace
Sone to shewe her remedy in this case.

Her felawe made her bil, and thus she said, 610
In plaining wise, there as she lovid best,
Whethir that she were wrothe or wele apaide,
She might not se whan that she wole faintest,
And fulle wrothe she was in very earnest,
To tel her worde, as ferforth as I wote,
Entierement vostre, right thus she wrote.

And upon that she made a grete request
With hert and wil, and al that might be done,
As until her that might redresse it best,
For in her minde there might she find it sone, 620
The remedy of that whiche was her bone,
Reherfing that that she had saide before,
Beseeching her it might be so no more.

And in like wise as they had done before
The gentylwomen of our company
Put ther byllis, and for to tell you more,
One of 'hem wrote (C'est sans dire) verily,
And her matere wholly to specyfy,
Within her byl she put it in writinge,
And what it said, ye shall yhave knowinge. 630

It said, God wote, and that ful pitously,
Lyke as she was disposid in her herte,
No misfortune that she toke grevously,
Al one to her was the joy and the smerte,
Sometime no thanke for al her gode deserte,
Othir comforte she wantid none coming,
And so usid, it grevid her nothing,

Desiring her, and lowly beseeching,
That she wolde for her seke a bettir way,
As she that had yben her daies lyving 640
Stedfast and trewe, and wil be so alway,
Of her felawe somewhat I shal you say,
Whose byl was red the nexte forthe withal,
And what it ment, reherfin you I shal.

En Dieu est she wrote in her devise,
And thus she said withoutin any faile,
Her trouthe ne might be takin in no wise,
Like as she thought, wherfor she had mervaille,
For trouthe somtyme was wont to take availe 650
In every matere, but al that is ago,
The more pyte that it is suffrid so.

Moche more there was, wherof she shulde complain,
But she thought it to gret an encombraunce,
So moche to write, and therefore in certain
In God and her she put all her affiaunce,
As in her worde is made a remembraunce,
Beseeching her, that she wolde in this case

Shewe unto her the favour of her grace.

The thirde she wrote reherfing her grevaunce,
Ye, wote ye what, a pitous thing to here, 660
For as me thought she felt grete displeaunce,
One might ryght wel perceve it by her chere,
And no wondir, it fate her passyng nere,
Yet lothe she was to put it in writinge,
But nede wol havin course in every thinge.

Soyes assuré, this was her worde certain,
And thus she wrote within a litil space,
There she lovid, her labor was in vaine,
For he was set al in anothir place, 670
Ful humilly desiring in that eace
Some gode comforte her sorowe to appese,
That she might livin more at hert's ese.

The fourth surely me thought she likid wele,
As in her porte, and in her behavinge,
And bien moneste, as ferre as I coude fele,
That was her worde, tyl her wel belonging,
Wherfore to her she praied above al thing
Ful hertily, to say you in substaunce,
That she wold sendin her gode countinaunce.

Ye have reherfid me these byllis all, 680
But nowe let se somewhat of your entent;
It may so hap, paravinture ye shal;
Nowe I pray you while I am here present;
Ye shal have knowlege parde what I ment,
But thus I say, in trouthe and make no fable,
The case it selfe is inly lamentable;

And wel I wote that ye wol thynke the same,
Lyke as I say, whan ye have herde my byl;
Now gode tel on, I hate you by saint Jame;
Abyde a while, it is not yet my wil, 690
Yet must ye wete by reson and by skil,
Sith ye have knowlege of that was don before,
And thus it is said, without wordis more:

Nothing so lese as deth to come to me,
For final ende of my forowes and paine,
What shuld I more desire as semith ye,
And ye knewe al aforne it for certaine,
I wote ye wolde, and for to tel you plaine,
Without her helpe, that hath al thinge in cure,
I can nat thinke that it may longe endure. 700

As for my trouthe it hath be provid wele,
To say the sothe, and I can say no more,
Of ful longe tyme, and suffrid every dele
In pacience, and kepe it all in store,
Of her godenesse beseeching her therfore,
That I might have my thanke in soche a wife,
As my deserte yservith of justise.

Whan these billis were rad everychone,
The ladie toke a gode advisement,
And 'hem to answerin by one and one 710
She thought it was to moche, in her entent,
Wherfore she yave to 'hem commaundement
In her presence to come both one and al,
To yeve 'hem her answeere in generall.

What dyd she than suppose ye verily?
She spake her selfe, and said in this manere.
We have wel sene your byllis by and by,
And some of 'hem be pitous for to here,
We wol therfore ye knowe al this in fere,
Within shorte tyme our court of parliment 720
Here shal be holde in our palays presente.

And

And in al this, wherein you find you greved,
There shall ye finde an opyn remedy,
In soche a wise as ye shal be releved
Of al that ye reherfin here throughly,
As for the date ye shal knowe verily,
That ye may have a space in your coming,
For Diligence shal tel you by writing.

We thankid her in our most humble wise,
Our felawship eche one, by one assent, 730
Submittinge us lowly til her service,
For as we thought, we had our travaile spent
In soche wise as we heldin us content,
Than eche of us toke othir by the sleve,
And forth withal, as we shulde take our leve.

Al sodainly the watir sprange anone
In my visage, and therewithal I woke,
Where am I now? thought I, al this is gone,
Al masid, and up I began to loke;
With that anon I went and made this boke, 740

Thus simplyly reherfing the sustaunce,
Bicause it shulde not be out of remembraunce.

Now verily your dreame is passing gode,
And worthy to be had in remembraunce,
For though I stand here as longe as I stode,
It shulde not to me be none encombraunce,
I toke therin so inly grete plessaunce;
But tel me nowe what ye the boke do cal,
For I muste wete: Wyth right gode wyl ye shal:

As for this boke, to say you very right, 750
And of the name to tel you in certainte,
L'assemble de dames, thus it hight,
How thinkin ye, that name is gode parde,
Nowe go, farewell, for they cal astir me
My felawes al, and I must astir sone,
Rede wel my dreame, for now my tale is done.

Finit.

The Conclusions of the Astrolabie.

This Book (written to his Son in the Year of our Lord 1391, and in the 14 of King Richard II.) standeth so good at this Day, especially for the Horizon of Oxford, as in the Opinion of the Learned it cannot be amended, says the last Edit. of Chaucer.

Lytel Lowys my sonne, I perceve well by certaine evidences thyne abylyte to lerne scyences, touching nombres and proporcions, and also well consydre I thy besye prayer in especyal to lerne the trefyl of the Astrolabye. Than for as moche as a Philosopher saithe, he wrapeth hym in his frende, that condiscendeth to the ryghtfull prayers of his frende: Therefore I have given The a sufficient Astrolabye for oure orizont, compowned after the latitude of Oxenforde: Upon the whiche by mediacion of this lytell tretise, I purpose to teche The a certaine nombre of conclusions, pertaynyng to this same instrument. I say a certaine nombre of conclusions for thre causes, the first cause is this. Truste wel that al the conclusions that have be founden, or ells possiblye might be founde in so noble an instrument as in the Astrolabye, ben unknowen perfytely to anye mortal man in this region, as I suppose. Another cause is this, that forhely in any cartes of the Astrolabye that I have ysene, ther ben some conclusions, that wol not in al thinges perfourme ther behestes: and some of hem ben to harde to thy tender age of ten yere to conceve. This tretise divided in five partes, wil I shewe The wondir light rules and naked wordes in Englishe, for Latine ne canst thou nat yet but smale, my litel sonne. But neverthelesse suffiseth to The these trewe conclusyons in englishe, as well as suffiseth to these noble clerkes grekes these same conclusions in greke, and to the Arabines in Arabike, and to Jewes in Hebrewe, and to the Latin folke in Latyn: whiche Latyn folke had hem firste out of othir divers langages, and write hem in ther owne tonge, that is to saine in Latine.

And God wote that in all these languages and in manye mo, have these conclusyons ben sufficientlye lerned and taught, and yet by divers rules, right as divers pathes leden divers folke the right waye to Rome.

Now wol I pray mekely every person discret, that redeth or hereth this litel tretise to have my rude ententing excused, and my superfluite of wordes, for two causes. The first cause is, for that curious entituyng and harde sentences is ful hery at ones, for soch a childe to lerne. And the seconde cause is this, that sothely me semeth better to writen unto a childe twise a gode sentence, than he foriete it ones. And, Lowis, if it be so that I shewe The in my lith Englishe, as trewe conclusions touching this mater, and not only as trewe but as many and subtil conclusions as ben yshewed in latin, in any comon tretise of the Astrolabye, conne me the more thanke, and praye God save the kinge, that is lorde of this langage, and all that him faith bereth, and obeieith everiche in his degre, the more and the lasse. But consydreth well, that I ne usurpe not to have founden this werke of my labour or of myne engin. I n'ame but a leude compilatour of the laboure of olde Astrologiens, and have it translated in myn englishe onely for thy doctrine: and with this sverde shal I sene envy.

The first party.

THE firste partye of this tretise shall reherce the figures, and the membres of thyne astrolaby, bycause that thou shalte have the greter knowinge of thine owne instrument.

The seconde party.

THE seconde partye shall teche The to werken the very practike of the foresaid conclusions, as forthe and also narowe as may be shewed in so smale smale an instrumente portatife aboute. For wel wote every Astrologien, that smallest fractions ne wol not be shewed in so smal an instrument, as in subtil tables calculated for a cause.

The thirde partye.

THE thirde partye shal containe divers tables, of longitudes and latitudes of sterres, fixe in the Astrolabie. And tables of the declinations of the Sonne, and tables of the longitude of cities and townes. And tables as wel for the governacion of the clocke, as for to finde the altitude meridian, and many an other notable conclusion after the kalenders of the reverent clerkes frere John Som, and frere N. Lenne.

The fourth partye.

THE fourth partye shall be a theorike, to declare the meninge of the celestiall bodyes, wyth the causes, the whiche the fourth partie in special shal shew in a table of the very mevinge of the mone, from one to one, every daye and every signe, after thin almanacke. Upon the which table there foloweth a canon, sufficyent to tech as wel in maner of workynge in the same conclusions, as to knowe in our Orizont, with which degre of zodiack the mone ariseth in any latitude, and the arisinge in any planete after his latitude fro the eclyptyke lyne.

The fyfte partye.

THE fyfte partye shall ben an introductorye, after the statutes of our doctours, on whiche thou mayste lerne a grete parte of the generall rules of theorike in Astrologie. In whiche fyfte partie thou shalt finde tables of equacions of houses, after the latitude of Oxenforde, and tables of dignitees of planettes, and other noteful thinges, if God vouchsafe and his mother the mayden, mo than I behete.

The ryng.

THY Astrolabye hath a ringe to putten on thy thomb on thy right honde, in takinge of the heyght of thinges. And take kepe, from hence forwarde I wol clepe the heyght of hevy thing, that is take by the rule, the altitude withouten mo wordes.

The turet.

THis ringe ronnet in a maner of a turet, fastened to the moder of thin Astrolabye, in a rounne or space, that it distroubeleth not the instrument to hangen after his right centure. The moder of thin Astrolabye is thickest by the brinks, that is the utmost ringe with degrees, and al the myddle within the ryng shall be thynner, to receve the plates for divers clymates, and also for the rethe, that is shape in maner of a net, or els after the webbe of a loppe.

The moder.

THE moder of thin Astrolabye is the thickest plate perced with a large hole, that receveth in her wombe the thinne plates compowned of divers clymats, and thy rete shapen in maner of a net or of a web of a loppe.

Of the soure lyns.

THis moder is devided on the backhalfe with a line, that cometh disscndynge fro the ryng down to the netherest bordure, the which line, fro the foresaid ring unto the centre of the large hole amiddle, is cleped Southe line, or els the line Meridionall: and the remenaunt of this line doune to the bordure is cleped the North line, or all the line of the Mid-night.

Of fower lines, East, West, Northe, and Southe;

OVerthwarte this foresaid long line there crosseth hym an other line of the same length, fro Este to West, of the which line, from a little crosse in the bordure unto the centure of the large hble, is cleped the Est line, or els the line Oriental: and the remenaunt of the line, fro the foresaid Orientall unto the bordure is icleped the Weste line, or the line Occidental.

Now hast thou here the fower quarters of thin Astrolabie, devided after the fower principall plages or quarters of the firmament.

The degrees fro the Est line, to the Southe.

FRO the little crosse up to the ende of the Meridionall lyne under the ryng shalt thou finde the bordure, devided with xc. degrees, and by that same proporcion is every quarter of thyn Astrolabie devided, over the whiche degrees, there ben numbers of Augrim, that deviden thilke same degrees fro five to five, as sheweth by longe strikes bitwene: of the whiche by long strikes the space bitwene containeth a mile waie, and every degre of thilke bordure containeth fower Minutes, that is to saie, fower minutes of an houre.

Of the twelve signes, Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, and the other.

Under the Compasse of thilk degrees ben written the names of the twelve signes, as Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Virgo, Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricornus, Aquarius, and Pisces. And the nombres of the degrees of the signes ben written in Augrime above, and with long divisions, from five to five, devideth from the tyme that the signe entreth unto the laste ende. But understande well, that these degrees of signes ben everiche of hem considered of lx. Minutes, and every Minute of lx. secondes, and so forthe into small fractions infinite, as saith Alcabucius. And therefore knowe well, that a degre of the bordure containeth fower Minutes, and a degre of a signe containeth lx. minutes, and have this in minde.

The circle of the daies.

NExte this followeth the circle of the daies, that ben figured in maner of the degrees that containen in number thre hundred, threscore and five, devided devided also with longe strikes, from five to five, and the numbers of Augtime, written under the circle.

The circle of the twelve monethes.

NExt the circle of daies followeth the circle of the twelve names of the Monethes, that is to saie, Januarius, Februarius, Marcius, Aprill, Maius, Junius, Julius, August, September, October, November, December.

The names of these Monethes taken their names, some for properties, and some by statutes of Emperours, and some by other Lordes of Rome. Eke of these Monethes, as liked to Julius Caesar, and Caesar Augustus, some were icomponed of divers numbers of daies, as July and August. Then hath Januarius xxxi. dayes, Februarius xxviii. Marcius xxxi. April xxx. Maie xxxi. Junius xxx. August xxxi. September xxx. October xxxi. November xxx. December xxxi. Nathelesse although that Julius Caesar toke two daies out of Fevriere, and put 'hem in his Monethe of July, and Augustus Caesar cleped the Monethe of Auguste after his name, and ordained it of one and thirtie daies, yet trust well that the sonne dwelleth therfore never the more, ne the lasse in one signe, then in an other.

The names of the holie daies.

THen followeth the names of the holie daies in the Kalender, and next 'hem the letters A. B. C. on whiche thei fallen.

The scale of the Astrolabie.

NExt the foresaied circle of the A. B. C. under the crosse line is marked the scale, in maner of two Squires, or els in maner of ledders, that serveth by his xxii. pointes, and his divisions of full many a subtell conclusion of this foresaied scale: For the crosse line unto the verie angle, is cleped Umbra recta, or els Umbra extensa, and the nether partie Umbra versa.

The Rule.

THen hast thou a brode rule, that hath on every ende a square plate, parted with certaine holes, some more, and some lesse, to receven the stremes of the sonne by daie, and eke by mediation of thyne eye, to knowe the altitude of the sterres by night.

The pin, whiche is imagined to be pole artike and the horse.

THen is there a large pin, in maner of an exiltre, that goth through the hole that halte the tables of the climathes in the rete, in the wombe of the moder, thorowe whiche pin there goeth a little wedge, the whiche is cleped the Horse, that straineth all these partes together. This foresaied grete pin, in maner of an exiltre, is imagined to be the pole artike in thyne Astrolabie.

For lines on the wombe side.

THE wombe side of thyne Astrolabie is also divided, with a longe crosse in fower quarters, from the Est to Weste, and from the Southe to Northe, from right side to left side, as is the backside.

The degrees of the wombe side.

THE border of whiche wombe side is divided fro the point of the Est line, unto the point of the South line, under the ryng in xc. degrees, and by the same proporcion is every quarter divided, as is the backside, that amounteth thre hundred lx. degrees. And understande well, that the degrees of this border ben aunswerynge and consentyng to the degrees of Equinoctiall, that is divided in the same number, as every other circle is in the heven.

This border is divided also with xxiii. letters, and a small crosse about the South line, that sheweth the xxiii. houres equales of the clocke. And I have saied five of these degrees maken a mile waie, and thre mile waie maken an houre, and every degre of this border containeth fower Minutes, and every Minute fowertie secondes. Nowe have I tolde The twise, and for the more declaracion.

Of the principall circles.

THE plate under the rete is discribed with thre circles, of whiche the left is cleped the Circle of Cancer, because that the hedde of Cancer tourneth ever more concentrike, upon the same Circle. In this halfe of Cancer is the gretest declinacion Northward of the sonne and therefore is he icleped Solstitium of Sommer, whiche declinacion after Ptholome is xxiii degrees and fiftie Minutes, as well in Cancer, as in Capricorne. This Signe of Cancer is cleped the Tropike of Sommer, of Tropos, that is to saie, ayenward. The middell circle in widenesse of these thre, is cleped the circle Equinoctiall, upon whiche turneth ever more the heddes of Aries and Libra. And understande well, that evermore this circle Equinoctiall tourneth justlie fro very Este, to very Weste, as I have shewed in the sphere solid. This same circle is cleped also the wayer of the daie. For when the Sonne is in the hed of Aries and Libra, then ben daies and nightes like of lengthe, in all the worlde, and therefore ben these two signes called Equinoctis. And al that meveth within these heddes of Aries and Libra, is icalled Northward, and all that meveth without these heddes, his mevyng is cleped Southward, as for the Equinoctiall take kepe of the latitudes Northe and South, and forget it not: but this circle Equinoctiall ben considered the xxiii houres of the clocke. For evermore the arising of xv. degrees of the Equinoctiall maketh an hour equall of the clocke. This Equinoctiall is cleped the midwaie of the first mevyng, or els of the Sonne. And note that the first mevyng is cleped mevyng of the first movable of the eight Sphere, whiche mevyng is fro Est to West, and again into Est. Also it is cleped girdell of the first mevyng. For it departeth the first mevable, that is to saie, the sphere, in two, like parties, even distaunte fro the Poles of this worlde. The widell of these thre circles principall, is cleped the circle of Capricorne, and tourneth evermore concentrike, upon the same circle. In the hedde of this foresaied Capricorne is the gretest declinacion Southward of the Sonne. And therefore it is cleped Solstitium of Winter. This signe of Capricorne is also cleped the Tropike of Winter. For then beginneth the sonne to come again to us warde.

Of the almicanteras, the signet, and what is the Orizont.

UPon this foresaied plate ben compassed certain circles, that highten almicanteras: of whiche some of 'hem semen partite circles, and some semen unpartite impairte. The centure that standeth a middest the narrowest circle, is cleped the signet. And the nertherest circle, that devideth the two emispheres, that is the partie of the heven above the yerthe, and the partie beneath. These almicanteras ben compounded by two and two, all be it so that on divers Astrolabics some almicanteras ben divided by one, and some by two, and some by thre, after the quantite of the Astrolabie. This foresaied signet is ymagined to be the very point over the crowne of thy hedde, and also this signet is the very pole of the orizont in every region.

What been thyne Azimutes.

From this signet (as it semeth) there comen crooked strikes, like to the clawes of a loppe, or els like to the werke of a womans calle, in kerving overthwart the almicanteras, and these same strikes or divisions ben cleped Azimutes, and thei deviden the Orizontes on thine Astrolabie in xxiii divisions. And these Azimutes serve, to knowe the costes of the firmamente, and to other conclusions, as for to knowe the signet of the Sonne, and of every sterre.

Of the xii houres of the Planettes.

Nexte these Azimutes, undir the circle of Cancr ben the twelve divisions embolite, moche like to the shappe of the Azimutes, that shewen the spaces of houres of Planettes.

Thy Rete or els thy Zodiake.

Thy rete of thyne Astrolabie, whiche is thy Zodiake shapen in maner of a Nette, or of a lop webbe, after the olde descripcion; whiche thou maiest tourne up and doune, as thy self liketh, containeth certaine number of Sterres fixe, with ther longitudes and latitudes determinate, if so be that the maker have not erred. The names of the Sterres ben written in the margin of thy Rete, there thei sit, of the whiche Sterres the small point is cleped the Centure. And understande, that all the Sterres sitting within the zodiake of thyne Astrolabie, ben cleped Sterres of the North, for thei arisen by the North Est line, and all the remenaunt fixed out of the zodiake ben cleped Sterres of the South, but I saie not that thei arisen all by the Southe Est line, witnesse of Aldeberan and also Algomisa. Generally understonde this rule, that thilke Sterres, that ben cleped Sterres of the Northe, arisen rather then the degree of ther longitude, and all the Sterres of the South arisen after the degree of ther longitude, that is to saie, Sterres in thyne Astrolabie.

The mesure of longitude of Sterres is itaken in the line ecliptike of heven, under the whiche line when the Sonne and the Mone ben line righte, els in the superficie of this line, then is the eclips of the Sonne or of the Mone, as I shall declare and eke the cause why: but forthely the Ecliptike line of the zodiake is the uttereste bordure of the zodiake, there thy degrees ben marked. The zodiake of thy Astrolabie is shapen as a Compasse, whiche that containeth a large brede, as after the quantite of thy Astrolabie, in ensample that the zodiake of heven is imagined to be a superficies, containyng the latitude of twelve signes, where as all the remenaunte of circles in heven ben imagined verie lines, withouten any latitude; amiddes the celestial zodiake is imagined a line, which that is cleped the Ecliptike line, under the whiche line, is evermore the waie of the sonne. Thus ben there fixe degrees of the zodiake, on that one side of the line, and fixe degrees on that other. The Zodiake is devided in twelve principall divisions, that departen the xii signes, and for the straitnes of thine Astrolabie then is every small devision in a signe iparted by two degrees and two, I mene degrees containyng lx Minutes, and this foresaied hevenishe Zodiake is cleped the circle of the Signes, or the circle of bestes: For Zodiake in language of Greke sonneth bestes in Latin tongue, and in the Zodiake ben the xii Signes, that have names of bestes, bicause when the Sonne entreth in any of the Signes, he taketh the propertie of soche bestes, or els for that the sterres that ben there, ben fixed, ben disposed in signe of bestes, or shape like bestes, or els when Planettes ben under the Signes thei transmue us by ther influence, operations, and effectes. And understande also, that when an hotte Planette cometh into an hote Signe, then entereth his hete, and if a Planette be cold, then amenufeth his coldnesse, bicause of the hotte Signe. And by this conclusion maiest thou taken ensample in all Signes, be thei moiste or drie, movable or fixe, reckenyng the qualitie of the Planettes, as I first saied. And everich of these xii signes, hath respect to a certaine parcell of the bodie of a man, and hath it in governaunce! as Aries hath thyne hed and Taurus thy necke and thy throte, Gemini thyne arme holes and thyne armes, and so forthe, as shall be shewed more plainlie in the fifth parte of this tretise. The Zodiake, the whiche his partie of the eight Sphere, overkerveth the Equinoctial, and he overkerveth hym again in even partes, and that one halfe declineth Southwarde, and that other Northwarde as plainlie declareth the tretise of the Sphere.

The Labell.

Then haste thou a labell, that is shapen like a rule, save that it is strait, and hath no plates on either ende, but with the smal point of the foresaied labell shalt thou calculate the equacions in the bordure of thyne Astrolabie, as by thin almurie.

The Almurie, the denticle of Capricorne, or els the calculere.

Thyne almurie is cleped, the denticle of Capricorne, or els the calculere, this same almurie set fixe in the hed of Capricorne, and it serveth of many a necessarie conclusion in equacion of thynges, as shall be shewed.

Here beginneth the conclusions of thine Astrolabie, to finde the degre in the whiche the Sonne is daie by daie, after his course about.

Recken and knowe, whiche is the daie of the moneth, and lay thy rule uppon the same daie, and then wolt the verie point of thy rule verely sitten on the bordure, upon the degre of the Sonne. Ensamble as thus. The yere of our Lorde a thousande thre hundred ninetie and one the xii daie of Marche at middaie, I would knowe the degree of the Sonne, I sought in the back halfe of myne Astrolabie and founde the circle of the daies, the whiche I knewe by the names of the Monethes, written under the same Circle: Tho laied I my Rule over the foresaied daie, and founde the point of my Rule in the border, uppon the first degre of Aries, a litle within the the degre: and thus knewe I this conclusion.

An other daie I would knowe the degre of my Sonne, and this was at Middaie in the xiii daie of December, I founde the daie of the moneth in manner as I saied: tho laied I my Rule upon the foresaied xiii daie, and founde the point of my Rule, upon the first degre of Capricorne, a litle within the degre, gre, and then had I of this conclusion the verie Experience.

To knowe the altitude of the Sonne either of celestiall bodies.

PUT the ryng of thyne Astrolabie uppon thy right thombe, and tounce thy lifte side again the light of the Sonne, and remeue thy Rule up and doune, till the streame of the Sonne shine through bothe holes of the Rule: loke then how many degrees this Rule is areised fro the little crosse upon the Est line, and take there the altitude of thy Sonne: and in this same wise maiest thou knowe by nighte the altitude of the Mone, or of the bright Sterres. This Chapter is so generall ever in one, that there nedeth no more declaration; but forget it not.

To knowe the degre of the Sonne, and of thy Zodiake, by the daies in the backside of thine Astrolabie.

THen if thou wilt wete the reckenyng to knowe whiche is the daie in thy Kalender of the moneth, that thou art in, laie thyne Astrolabie, that is to saie the allidatha, upon the daie in the Kalender of thyne Astrolabie, and he shal shewe The thy degre of the Sonne.

To knowe every tyme of the daie, by light of the Sonne, and every tyme of the nighte, by the Sterres fixe, and eke to knowe by night or by daie the degre of the signe that ascendeth on th' est Orizont, which is cleped comenly ascendent.

TAke the altitude of the Sonne, when The liste, as I have said, and set the degre of the Sonne (in case that it be before the middle of the daie) among thin almicanteras, on the Este side of thyne Astrolabie: and if it be after the middle of the daie, sette the degree of the Sonne upon the Weste side. Take this maner of setting, for a generall rule ones for ever.

And when thou hast sette the degre of the Sonne uppon as many almicanters of height, as was the Sonne, taken by thy rule, laie over thy labell uppon the degre of the Sonne, and then wolt the pointe of the labell sitten in the bordure, upon the very tide of the daie. Ensample of this.

The yere of our Lorde a thousande, thre hundred, ninetie and one, the twelveth daie of Marche, I would knowe the tide of the daie, I toke the altitude of my Sonne, and found that it was xxv degrees, and xxx Minutes of height of the bordure in the backside, tho' touned I myne Astrolabie, and because it was before middaie, I touned my rete, and set the degre of the Sonne, that is to saie, the firste degre of Aries, in the right side in myne Astrolabie, uppon the xxv degre, and xxx minutes of height, among my almicanteras: Tho laied I my label uppon the degree of my Sonne, and found the point of my labell in the bordure, on the capital letter, that is cleped an X. Tho reckened I all the capital letters fro the line of Midnight, unto the foresaied letter X, and founde it was nine of the Clocke of the daie. Tho loked I over my Est Orizont, and found there the twelveth degre of Geminus ascendyng, whiche that I toke for myne ascendente, and in this wise had I the experience for evermore, in whiche maner I should knowe the tide of the daie, and eke myne ascendente. Tho would I wete that same night following the houre of the nighte, and wrought in this wise: among an hepe of Sterres, it liked me to take the altitude of the faire white Sterre, that is cle-

ped the Alhabor, and founde her sitting on the Weste side of the line of Middaie, eightene degrees of heighte taken by my Rule on the backside. Tho sette I the Centure of this Alhabor, upon eightene degrees, among my almicanteras, upon the Weste side, because that he was founde upon the Weste side: tho laied I my Labell over the degre of the Sonne, that was descended under the Weste Orizont, and reckened all the letters, capitalles, fro the line of Middaie, unto the pointe of my label in the bordure, and founde that it was after none, passed seven of the clocke the space of eleven degrees. Tho loked I doune uppon my Este Orizont, and founde there twentie degrees of Libra ascendyng, whom I toke for myne ascendente, and thus lerned ones for ever, to knowe in whiche maner, I should come to the houre of the nighte, and to myne ascendente, as verelie as maie be taken, by so small an instrumente. But nathelesse, this rule in generall will I warne thee for ever: ne make thou never none ascendente at none of the daie. Take a iuste ascendente of thyne Astrolabie, and have set iustlie a cloke when any celestiall bodie, by the whiche thou wenest governe thilke thynges, ben nie the Southe line; for trust well, when the Sonne is nere the Meridionall line, the degre of the Sonne remaineth so long concentrike upon thyne almicanteras, that sothelie thou shalt erre fro the iuste ascendente. The same conclusion saie I by my centure of my Sterre fixe by the night, and moreover by experience, I wote wel that fro our Orizont, fro eleven of the clocke, unto one, in takyng of the iuste ascendente, in a portatife Astrolabie, it is to harde to knowe, I mene from eleven of the clocke before none, till one of the clocke next followyng: and for the more declaration, loe here thy figure nexte after this rule that followeth.

To knowe the degre of the Sonne in thy Zodiake, by the daies, in the backside of thine Astrolabie.

THen thou wolte weten to reckon and knowe whiche is the daie of the moneth, that thou art in, and lay the rule of thy Astrolaby, that is to saie, the allidatha, upon the daie, in the Kalender of thine Astrolabie, and he shal shewe The thy degre of Sonne.

Speciall declaracion of the ascendente.

THE ascendente sothelie is as well in all Nativities, as in questions, and as in elections of tymes, is a thyng, whiche that these Astrologiens gretlie observen, wherefore me semeth convenient, sens I speke of the ascendent, to make it of a speciall declaracion. The ascendent sothelie, to take it at the largeste, is thilke degre that ascendeth, at any of these foresaied tymes, on the Este Orizont: and therefore, if that any Planet ascende at thilk same time, in the foresaied same degre of his longitude, men saie that thilke Planet is in Horoscopo, but sothelie the hous of that ascendent, that is to saie, the firste hous or the Est angle, is a thyng more brode and large, for after the statutes of Astrologiens, what celestiall body, that is v. degrees above thilke degre, that ascendeth on the Orizont, or within that number, that is to saie, nere the degre that ascendeth, yet reckon thei thilk planete in the ascendent, and what Planet that is under thilke degre, that ascendeth the space of xv. degrees, yet saie thei that Planet is like to hym, that is the houre of the ascendent. But sothelie, if he passe the boundes of the foresaied spaces, above or beneath, thei saie that thilke Planete is fallyng fro the ascendent: yet saie these Astrologiens, that the ascendent, and eke the Lorde of the ascendent, maie be shapen for to be fortunate, fortunate, or infortunate: as thus. A fortunate ascendent clepen thei, when that no wicked Planette of Saturne or Mars, or eis the taile of the Dragon, is in the hous of the ascendente, ne that no wicked Planette have no aspecte of enemitie uppon the ascendente: But thei woll caste, that thei have fortunate Planet in ther ascendente, and yet in his felicitie, and then saie thei that it is well. Furthermore, thei saie that Fortune of an ascendente is the contrary of these foresaid thinges. The Lorde of the ascendente saie thei, that he is fortunate, when he is in gode place for the ascendent, and eke the Lorde of the ascendent is in an angle, or in a succedent, where he is in his dignitie, and comforted with frendly aspectes receved, and eke that he maie see the ascendent not retrograde ne combust, ne joined with no shrewe in the same signe, ne that he be not in his discencion, ne reigned with no Planette in his discensions, ne have uppon hym none aspecte infortunate, and then they saie that he is well.

Nathelesse these ben observaunces of judiciall matter, and rites of Painims. in whiche my spīte hath no fa·he, ne knowyng of ther horoscopum, for thei saie, that every signe is departed in thre even partes by x degrees, and the ilke porcion thei clepen a face. And although a Planette have a latitude fro the Eclipse, yet saie some folke, so that the planette arise in that same signe, with any degre of the foresaid face, in whiche his longitude is reckened: And yet is the Planette in horoscopo, be in nativities or in eleccion.

To knowe the verie equacion of the degrees of the Sonne, if it so be that it fall betwixt ii almicanteras.

FOR asmoche as the almicanteras of thyne Astrolabie ben compouned by two and two, where as some almicanteras in sondrie Astrolabies be compouned by one, or els by two, it is necessarie to thy lernyng, to teche The firste to knowe, and wirche with thyne instrumente: wherfore when that the degre of the Sonne falleth betwene two almicanteras, or elles if thyne almicanteras ben graven with over grete a pointe of a Compasse, for bothe these thynges maie cause erreure, as wel in knowyng of the tide of the daie, as of the verie ascendente: Thou must werken in this wise: set the degre of the Sonne uppon the higher almicanteras of bothe. And waite well, where the almurie toucheth the bordure, and set there a pricke of ynke, set adoune again the degre of the Sonne upon the nether almicanteras of bothe, and sette there an other pricke: remeve then thy almurie in the bordure, even amiddes bothe prickes, and this woll leden justlie the degre of the Sonne to sit betwene bothe the almicanteras in his right place. Laie then the label on the degre of the Sonne, and finde in the bordure the very tyde of the day or of the night. And also verely shalt thou fynde upon thy Est orizonte thin ascendent.

To knowe the sprynge of the dawning, and the ende of the evening, the whiche ben cleped the two crepusculis.

SETTE the nadire of thy sonne upon 18. degrees of height amonge thyn almycanteras on the west syde, and lay thy labell on the degre of the Sonne, and than shall the pointe of the label shewe the sprynge of the daye: also sette the nadire of the sonne upon the 18. degrees of height among thin almicanteras on the est side, and lay over thy label upon the degre of the sonne, and wyth the point of thy labell fynde in the bordure the ende of thin eveninge, that is very night. The nadyre of the sonne is thylke de-gre that is oppolyte to the degre of the sonne in the 320. signe, as thus. Every degre of Aries by order, is nadire to every degre of Libra by order, and Taurus to Scorpion, Gemini to Sagittarius, Cancer to Caprycorne, Leo to Aquary, Virgo to Pisces. And yf any degre in thy zodiake be derke, hys nadire shall declare hym.

To knowe the arche of the day, that some folke callen the day artificial, fro the sonne rising tyl it go downe.

SETTE the degre of the sonne upon thin Est orizonte, and lay thy label on the degre of the sonne, and at the poynte of thy label in the bordure sette a pricke: turne than thy rete aboute, tyll the degre of the sonne syt upon the Weste orizonte, and laye the label upon the same degre of the sonne, and at the poynte of the labell sette another pricke. Reken than the quantite of time in the bordure betwix both prickes, and take there thine arche of the daye: the remnaunt of the bordure under the orizonte is the arche of the night. Thus maist thou reken bothe arches of every porcion where that thou likeste, and by this maner of working maist thou se how longe that any sterre fyxe dwelleth above the erthe, fro the time that he riseth tyll he go to reste. But the daye naturell, that is to sayne 24. houres, is the revolution of the equinoctiall, with as moche partye of the zodiake, as the sonne of his proper mowinge passeth in the mene while.

To turne the houres inequalles, and the houres equalles.

TO knowe the nombre of the degrees in the houres inequalles, and departe hem by 15. and take there thyne houres equalles.

To knowe the quantite of the day vulgare, that is to say, fro sprynge of the day unto the very night.

KNOWE thy quantyte of thyne crepusculis, as I have it taught in the chapitre before, and adde hem to the arche of the day artificial, and take there thy space of al the whole day vulgare unto the very nyght. In the same maner mayste thou werke to knowe the vulgare nyght.

To knowe the houres inequales by daye.

UNDERSTANDE well that these houres inequales ben cleped houres of the planettes: And understonde wel that sometye ben they longer by daye than they be by nyght, and sometye contrarie. But understand thou well, that evermore generally the houres inequale of the daye, with the houres inequale of the night, containeth 30. degrees of the bordure, the whiche bordure is evermore answeringe to the degrees of the equinoctiall, wherfore depart the arche of the daye artificiall in 12. and take there the quantite of the houre inequale by daye, and if thou abate the quantite of the houre inequale by daye out of 360. degrees, than shall the remnaunt that leaveth performe the houre inequale by night.

To knowe the quantite of houres equales.

THE quantytes of houres equales, that is to sayne the houres of the clocke, ben departed by 15. degrees alrede in the bordure of thy Astrolabie, as wel by night as by daye, generally for evermore. What nedeth any more declaracion? wherfore whan The lyste to knowe how many houres of the clocke clocke ben passed, or any parte of any of these houres ben to comen, fro soch a time to soche a time, by day or by nyght, knowe the degre of thy Sonne, and laye thy labell on it: than turne thy rete aboute joyntly with thy label and with the point of it reckon in the border fro the Sonne arisyng, into the same place there thou desirest by day as by night. This conclusion woll I declare in the fourthe partye of the laste chapter of this tretyse, so openly that there shal lacke no worde that nederth declaracion.

Speciall declaracion of the houres of the planettes.

Understand wel that evermore fro the arising of the Sonne tyl it go to reste, the nadyre of the Sonne shal shewe the houre of the planet, and fro that time forward al the nyght tyll the Sonne arise, than shall the very degre of the Sonne shewe the houre of the planet. Ensamble as thus. The 13. day of Marche fel upon a saturday paraventure, and at the arising of the Sonne I founde the second degre of Aries sitting upon min Est orizonte, al be it was but lytel. Than founde I the seconde degre of Libra nadire of my Sonne discendynge on my West orizonte, upon whiche west orizont every day generally at the Sonne arisyng entrethe the houre of any planet, under the forsaide west orizonte, after the whiche planete the day bereth his name, and endeth in the nexte strike of the planet, under the forsaide west orizonte: and ever as the Sonne clymbeth upper and upper, so gothe his nadire downer and downer, and echinge fro soch strikes the houres of planettes by order, as they sitten in heven. The fyrst hour inequale of every saturday is Saturne, and the seconde to Jupiter, the thirde to Mars, the fourth to the Sonne, the fyfth to Venus, the sixt to Mercurius, the seventh to the Mone, and than ayen the eight to Saturne, the ninth to Jupiter, the tenth to Mars, the eleventh to the Sonne, the twelfth to Venus. And nowe is my Sonne gon to rest as for that saturday; than shewethe the very degre of the Sonne the houre of Mercury, cntring under my west orizont at even. And nexte him succedeth the Mone, and so forth by order planete after planet, in houre after houre al the night longe til the Sonne arise. Now riseth the Sonne the sonday by the morowe, and the nadyre of the Sonne upon the west orizont, shewethe me the entrynge of the houre of the forsaide Sonne. And in this maner succedeth planete under planete fro Saturne unto the Mone, and fro Mone up againe to Saturne, houre after houre generally, and thus knowe I this conclusion.

To knowe with which degre of the zodyake any sterre fixe in thin Astrolabie ariseth upon the Est orizonte, although the orizonte be in an other signe.

Sette the centure of the sterre upon the Est orizonte, and loke what degre of anye signe that sitteth upon the same orizonte at the same tyme: And understande wel that with the same degre ariseth the same sterre. And this mervailous arisinge with a stronge degre in another sygne, is bycause that the latitude of the sterre fyxe is either Northe or Southe fro the equinoctial. But sothly the latitudes of planettes ben comenly icked fro the ecliptike, bycause that none of hem declineth but few degrees out fro the brede of the zodyake. And take gode kepe of this chapter of arisinge of celestially bodies, for ther trusteth wel, that neither mone neither sterre in our ambolife orizont, that ariseth with the same degre of his longitude, save in one case, and that is whan they have no longitude fro the eclypticke lyne. But never the lesse somtime is everyche of these planettes under the same lyne.

To knowe the declination of any degre in the zodyake, fro the equinoctial circle.

Sette the degre of any sygne upon the lyne meridional, and reken his altitude in the almicanteras, fro the Est orizonte up to the same degre sette in the forsaide lyne, and sette there a pricke: Turne up than thy rete and sette the hed of Aries or Libra in the same meridional line, and set there another pricke. And whan that this is done, consider the altitudes of hem bothe: for sothly the difference of thilke altitude is the declination of thilke degre fro the equinoctial. And yf it so be that thilke degre be northwarde fro the equinoctial, than is his declination North, and if it be southward, than it is south.

To knowe for what latitude in any region the almicanteras in my tables ben compowned.

Reken how many degrees of almicanteras in the meridional line, be from the circle equinoctial, unto the signet, or els from the pole artike unto the North orizont, and for so gret a latitude or so smale a latitude, is the table compowned.

To knowe the latitude of the Sonne, in the myddes of the day, that is cleped the altitude meridian.

SET the degre of thy Sonne upon the lyne meridional, and reken how many degrees of almicanteras ben bytwix thin Est orizonte, and the degre of thy Sonne, and take there thin altitude meridian, that is to sayn, the highest degre of the Sonne, as for that daye. So mayst thou knowe in the same line the highest lyne that any starre fyxe clymbeth by nyght, this is to sayn, that whan any starre fyxe is passed the lyne meridional, than beginneth it to discede, and so doth the Sonne.

To knowe the degre of the Sonne, by the rete for a maner curyosyte.

SEke busely with thy rule the highest of the Sonne in myddes of the daye, tourne than thyn Astrolabye, and with a pricke of ynke marke the nombre of the same altitude, in the lyne meridional. Tourne than thy rete aboute tyl thou finde a degre of thy zodyake, accordyng with the pricke, this is to sayn, sitting on the pricke, and in sothe thou shalt finde but two degrees in al the zodyake of that condicion. And yet thilke two degrees ben in divers sygnes. Than mayst thou lightly by the feson of the yere knowe the signe in whiche is the Sonne.

To knowe whiche day is like to other in length throughout the yere.

LOke whiche degrees ben lyke from the hedes of Cancer and Capricorne, and loke whan the Sonne is in any of thilke degrees, than ben the dayes lyke of length, that is to sayn, that as longe is that day in that moneth, as was soche a daye in soche a moneth, there varieth but lytell. Also if thou take two dayes naturelles in the yere, ylike farre from eyther points of the equinoctial, in the opposite parties, than as long is the day artificial on that one day as on that other, and eke the contrarie.

This chapter is a maner declaracion to conclusions that foloweth.

Understande well, that thy zodiake is departed into halfe circles, from the hed of Caprycorne unto the hed of Cancer, and ayenwarde from the hed of Cancer unto the hed of Capricorne. The hed of Capricorne is the lowest point, wher as the sonne goth in winter, and the hed of Cancer is the highest point, in which the sonne goth in sommer. And therefore understande wel, than any two degrees that ben ylyke far from any of these two hedes, trust wel that thilke two degrees ben lyke declinacion, be it Southward or Northwarde, and the dayes of 'hem ben lyke of length, and the nyghtes also, and shadowes ylyke, and the altitudes ylyke at mydday for ever.

To knowe the very degre of any maner starre straunge after his latitude, though he be indeterminate in thyn Astrolaby, sothly to the trowth thus he shal be knowen.

TAke the altitude of thy starre, whan he is on the Est side of the lyne meridional, as nygh as thou mayste gesse, and take that ascendent anone right by some maner starre fyxe, which thou knowest, and forget not the altitude of the first starre ne thin ascendent. And whan that this is done, aspie diligently whan this same first starre passeth any thing to the south westward, and catche him anone right in the same nombre of the altitude on the west syde of thys lyne meridional, as he was caught on the Est syde, and take a newe ascendent anone right by some maner fyxe, the whiche that thou knowest, and forgete not this seconde ascendent. And whan this is done, reken than howe many degrees ben bytwixt the first ascendent, and the seconde ascendent, and reken wel the middel degre bytwyxt bothe ascendentes, and set thilke myddel degre upon thin Este orizonte, and than loke what degre sit upon the line meridional, and take there the very degre of the ecliptike, in whiche the starre standeth for the tyme. For in the ecliptyke is the longitude of a celestial body, rekened even fro the halfe of the hed of Aries, unto the ende of Pisces, and his latitude is rekened after the quantyte of hys declynacion Northe or South, towarde the poles of thys werke. As thus, if it be of the sonne or any fix starre, reken his latitude or his declinacion fro the equinoctial circle, and if it be of a planete, reken than the quantite of his latitude from the ecliptike line, al be it so that from the equinoctial may the declinacion or the latitude of any body celestiall be rekened, after the sight Northe or Southe, and after the quantite of his declinacion. And yet so may the latitude or the declinacion of anye body celestiall, save onelye of the Sonne, after his sight Northe or Southe, and after the quantite of his declinacion be rekened from the ecliptike line, fro whiche lyne all planettes sometime decline, North or Southe, save only the forsaide Sonne.

To know the degrees of longitudes of fyxe sterres, after that they ben determinate in thin astrolabye, if it so be that they ben trewly set.

Sette the centre of the sterre upon the lyne meridional, and take kepe of thy zodiake, and loke what degre of anye signe sitte upon the same lyne meridional at the same tyme, and there the degre in whiche the sterre standeth, and with the same degre cometh the same sterre unto the same line from the orizonte.

To know in special the latitude of our centre, I mene after the altitude of Oxenforde, and the hight of our Pole.

Understande wel that as farre is the hed of Aries or Libra in the equinoctial, from our orizonte, as is the synet from the pole artike, and as hie as the pole artike from the orizonte, as the equinoctial is ferre from the synet, I preve it thus by the latitude of Oxenforde, understande wel that the height of our pole artike from our North orizont is 51. degrees, and 50. minutes, than is the sinet from the pole artike 38. degrees and 10. minutes, than is the equinoctial from our sinet 51. degrees, and 50. minutes, than is our southe orizonte from our equinoctial 38. degrees, and 10. minutes. Understande well this rekenyng, also forget not that the sinet is 90. degrees of height from the orizont, and our equinoctial is 90. degrees from our pole artike. Also this shorte rule is soth that the latitude of any planet in a region, is the distaunce from the sinet unto the equinoctial.

To prove the latitude of any place in a region by the preffe of the height of the pole artike in that same place.

IN some winter's nyght, whan the fyrmamente is clere and thicke sterred, waite a tyme tyll that every ster fix sit line right perpendicular over the pole artike, and clepe that ster A. and wayte another ster that sit lyne right under A. and under the pole, and clepe that ster F. and understand wel that F. is not confidred but onely to declare that A. that syt ever on the pole. Take than anone right the altitude of A. from the orizonte and forget it not, let A. and F. go farwel tyl againste the dawning a gret while, and come than again, and abyde tyll that A. is even under the pole under F. for sothely than wil F. sit over the pole, take than eftsones the altitude of A. from the orizonte, and note as wel the seconde altitude as the firste altitude. And whan that thys is done, reken how many degrees that the first altitude A. exceded his altitude, and take halfe the ilke porcion that is exceded, and adde it to his seconde altitude, and take there the elevacion of the pole, and eke the altitude of thy region. For these two ben of one nombre, that is to sayn, as many degrees as thy pole is elevat, so moche is the latitude of thy region. Ensamplie as thus. Paraventure the altitude of A. in the eveninge is 92. degrees of height, than wil the seconde altitude or the dawning be 21. that is to sayn, lesse than 92. that was his first altitude at even. Take than the halfe of 92. and adde to it 21. that was his seconde altitude, and than hast thou the height of the pole and the latitude of thy region. But understande wel to preve this conclusion, and many another faire conclusion, thou maiste have a plomet hanginge on a lyne hygher than thy hed on a perche, and that lyne mote hange even perpendicular bytwixt the pol and thine eye, and than shalte thou se yf A. syt even over the pole and over F. at even. And also if F. syt even over the pole and over A. at daye.

Another conclusion to preve the hyght of the pole artike from the orizont.

TAke any sterre fyxe that ever descendeth under the orizont in thilk region, and consyder his hyghest altitude and his lowest altitude from the orizont, and make a nombre of these altitudes, take than and abate halfe that nombre, and take there the the elevation of the pole artike in that same region, and for the more declaracion, &c.

082. 51. 0. 20.

Another conclusion to preve the latitude of a region that ye ben in.

Understande well that the larytude of any place in a region, is verely the space betwyxe the sygne of 'hem that dwellen there, and the equinoctial circle, North, or Southe, rakinge the mesure in the merydyonall line, as sheweth in the almicanteras of thin astrolaby, and thilke space is as moch as the Pole artike is hie in the same place fro the orizont. And than is the depressyon of the pole Antartike beneth the orizonte, the same quantite of space, neither more ne lesse, than if thou desire to know this latitude of the region, take the altitude of the Sonne in the myddle of the daye, when the Sonne is the hed of Aries or of Libra, for than movethe the Sonne in the lyne equinoctial, and abate the nombre of that same Sonnes altitude out of 90 degrees, and than is the remnaunt of the nombre that leaveth, the altitude of the region, as thus. I suppose that the Sonne is thilke daye at noone 38 degrees of heygth, abate than 38 degrees out of 90, so leaveth ther 52, than is 52 degrees the latitude, I saye not this, but for ensample, for wel I wote the latitude of Oxenorde is certain minutes lesse. Nowe if it so be that The thinketh to longe a tarying to abyde til that the Sonne be in the hed of Aries or of Libra, than waite whan that the Sonne is in anye other degre of the zodiake, and consider the degre of this declinacion be Northward from the equinoctial, abate than from the Sonnes altytude at none the nombre of his declinacion, and than hast thou the highest of the hedes of Aries and Libra, as thus. My Sonne peradventure is in the 10 degre of Leo almoste 56 of height at none, and his declinacion is almost 18 degrees northward from the equinoctial, abate than thilke 18 degrees of declinacion out of the altitude at none, than leaveth 38 degrees, so there the hed of Aries or Libra, and thin equinoctial in that region. Also if it so be that the Sonnes declinacion be southwarde from the equinoctial, adde than thilke declinacion to the altitude of the Sonne at none, and take there the hedes of Aries and Libra and thyn equinoctial, abate than the height of the equinoctial out of 90 degrees, and than leaveth there 38 degrees, that is the distaunce of the region from the equinoctial of any sterre fixe that thou knowest, and take the nether elongation lengthning from the same equinoctial lyne, and werke after the maner aforesaid.

Declaracion of the ascencion of signes as well in the circle directe, as in oblique.

THE excellence of the sphere solid amonges other noble conclusions, sheweth manifest the divers ascencions of signes in divers places, as wel in right circles as in embolyfe circle. These auctours writen that thilke signe is cleped of right ascencion with which the more part of the circle equinoctial and the lesse part of the zodiake ascendeth, and thilke signe ascendeth embolyfe, with which the lesse of the zodiake equinoctial, and the more parte of the zodiake ascendeth, and ever mo the arche of the daye, and the arche of the night is there ylike longe, and the sonne twise every yere passing through the signet of ther hed and 2 sommers and 2 winters in a yere have these forsaide people, and the almycanteras in ther Astrolabie ben streight as a line, so hath shewed in this fygure. The utilities to knowe the ascencions of sygnes in the right circle is this. Trust wel that by mediacyons of thilke ascencions, these Astrologiens by ther table and other instrumentes, knowen verely the ascencion of every degre and minute in al the zodiake, in the embolyfe circle, as shal be shewed. And note that this forsaide right orizonte that is cleped orizont rectum, devideth the equinoctial into right angles, and embolyfe orizonte, where as the pole is enhaunced upon the orizonte, overcometh the equinoctial embolyfe angles.

This is the conclusion to knowe the ascencions of sygnes in the right circle, that is circulus directus.

Sette the hed of what signe The lyst to knowe the ascending on the right circle, upon the lyne meridionall, and wayte where thin almurie toucheth the bordure, and set there a pricke, tourne than thy rete westwarde til the ende of the forsaide signe, sette upon the meridional lyne, and cftsones waite where thine almurie toucheth the bordure, and set there another pricke. Reken than the nombres of degrees in the bordure betwixe bothe prickes, and take than the ascencion of the signe in the right circle, and thus maist thou werke with every porcion of the zodiake.

To knowe the ascencions of signes in the embolyfe circle in every region, I mene in circulo obliquo.

Sette the hed of the sygne, which as The liste to knowe his ascencion upon the Est orizonte, and wayte where thine almurie toucheth the bordure, and sette there a pricke, tourne than thy rete upwarde til the ende of the same sygne, set upon the Est orizonte and waite cftsones where as thine almurie toucheth the bordure, and set there another prycke, reken than the nombre of the degrees in the bordure bytwixe both prickes, and take there the ascencion of the signe in the embolyfe circle. And understand wel that al the signes in the zodiake, from the hed of Aries unto the ende of Virgo, ben cleped signes of the Northe from the equinoctial, and these signes arisen betwixe the very Est and the very Northe in our orizont generally for ever: and all the signes from the hed of Libra, unto the ende of Pisces ben cleped signes of the southe fro the equinoctial, and these signes arisen evermore betwixe the very Est and the very southe in our orizonte; also every signe betwixe the hed of Capricorne unto the ende of Gemini, ariseth in our orizonte in lesse than two houres equalls and these same signes from the hed of Capricorne unto the ende of Gemini, ben called tortuous signes or croked signes, for they risen embolyfe in our orizonte, and these croked signes ben obedient to the signes that ben of the right ascencion. These signes of right ascencion ben fro the hed of Cancer unto the hed of sagittary, and these signes arisen more upright than dothe the other, and therefore they ben called soveraine signes, and everye of 'hem ariseth in more space than in two houres, of which sygnes Gemini obeyeth to Cancer, and Taurus to Leo, and Aries to Virgo, Pisces to Libra, Aquarius, to Scorpio, and Capricorne, to Sagitarie, and thus evermore two signes that ben like ferre from the hed of Capricorne obeyeth everiche of 'hem to other.

To knowe justly the soure quarters of the worlde, as Est, West, South, and North.

Take the altitude of thy sonne whan thou liste, and note well the quarter of the worlde in which the sonne is from the tyme by the asymutes, tourne than thin Astrolaby, and set the degre of the sonne in the almicanteras of his altytude, on thilke syde that the Sonne standeth, as is in maner of taking of houres, and ley thy labell on the degre of the

Soure

Sonne, and reken howe many degrees of the Sonne ben bytwene the lyne meridional, and the point of thy label, and note wel the nombres. Tourne than agayne thine Astrolabie, and set the point of thy grete rule there thou takest thin altitudes, upon as many degrees in hys bordure from his meridional, as was the point of thy label from the lyne meridional on the wombe syde. Take then thine Astrolabye with both handes sadly and flyly, and let the sonne shine through bothe holes of thy rule, and flyly in thilke shyning laye thine Astrolabye couche adoun even upon a playne ground, and than wyl the meridional lyne of thin Astrolabye be even south, and the Est lyne will lye even Est, and the West lyne West, and the Northe lyne Northe, so that thou werke softely and avifely in the couchynge, and thou haste thus the foure quarters of the firmament, &c.

To knowe the altitude of planettes from the way of the sonne, whether they ben Northe or Southe from the way aforefayde.

LOke whan a planette is on the line meridional, yf that her altitude be of the same heighte, that is the degre of the Sonne for that daye, and than is the planette in the very way of the Sonne, and hath no latitude. And yf the altitude of the planette be hyer than the degre of the Sonne, than is the planette Northe from the way of the sygne Southe, a quantite of latitude as sheweth by thine Almycanceras, and yf the altitude be lesse than the degre of the Sonne, than is the planette South from the waye of the Sonne, soche a quantite of latitude as sheweth by thine Almycanceras. This is to saine from the waye of the Sonne in everye place of the zodiake, for on the morowe the Sonne wyll be in another degre.

For to knowe the signet for the arising of the Sonne, this is to saine the party of the orizonte in whiche the Sonne ariseth.

THou muste first consider that the Sonne ariseth not in the verie Este signet, sometyne by North Este, and sometyne by Southe Este, sothly the Sonne ariseth evermore in the verie Este in our Orizonte, but if he be in the hedde of Aries or Libra. Now is thine Orizonte departed into xxiiii parties, of thy Minutes in significacion of xxiiii partes of the worlde, though it be so, that shipmen reken all that parties in xxxii. Then is there no more but waite in the whiche minute, that the Sonne entreth at his arising, and take there the signet of the rising of the Sonne.

The maner of devision of thine Astrolabie, is thus enjoined, as in this case.

First, it is devided in fower places principallie, with the line that cometh fro the Est to the Weste, and then with an other line, that goeth fro the South to the North, then is it divided in smal parties of minutes, as Est and Est by Southe, where that is the firste minute above the Est line, and so forthe fro partie to partie, till that thou come again to the Este line. Thus thou might understand the signet of every sterre, in whiche partie he ariseth.

To knowe in whiche partie of the firmament is the conjuncion.

Consider the tyme of the conjuncion, by the Kalender, as thus: howe many houres that the conjuncion is fro middaie of the daie before, as sheweth the Canon of the Kalender. Reken then that number in the bordure of thine Astrolabie, as thou were wont to doe in knowyng of the houres of the daie, or of the night, and lay thy labell over the degre of the sonne, then will the point of the labell sit upon the houre of the conjuncion. Loke then in whiche minute the degre of the Sonne sitteth, and in that partie of the firmamente is the conjuncion.

To knowe the signet of the altitude of the Sonne.

THIS is no more to saie, but any time of the daie take the altitude of the sunne, and by the minutes in whiche he ascendeth thou might se in whiche partie of the Firmamente he is, and in the same wise might thou se by night any Sterre, whether he sit Este, Weste, or Southe, or any parte bitwix, after the name of the minutes, in whiche the Sterres standeth.

To knowe sothlie the longitude of the Mone, or any Planette, that hath no latitude, fro the tyme of the Ecliptike line.

TAKE the altitude of the Mone and reken thine altitude up, emong thine almycanceras, on whiche side that the Mone standeth, and set there a pricke. Take then anone right upon the Mone's side, the altitude of every sterre fixe that thou knowest, and set his circle upon his altitude, emong thine almycanceras, there the Sterre is founden, waite then of whiche degre the zodiake is, to whiche the pricke of the altitude of the Mone, and there take the degre in whiche the Mone standeth. This conclusion is verie sothe, of the Starres in thine Astrolabie, and standeth after the trowth. Some tretise of the Astrolabie maketh non excepcion, whether the Mone have latitude or none, nor whether side of the Mone the altitude of the Sterre be founde. And note if the Mone shewe her self by daie, then thou maieste worche the same conclusion by the Sonne, as well as by the Sterre fixe.

This is the werching of the conclusions to knowe whether any Planette be directe, or retrograde.

TAKE the altitude of any sterre, that is cleped a Planette, and note it well, anone righte take the altitude of some Sterre fixe, that thou knowest, and note it well also, and come againe the thirde or the fowerth night next folowyng, for then thou shalt perceve well the mevyng of the Planet, whether he move forward, or backward, and waite well then when the Sterre fixe is in this same altitude that she was, when thou toke her firste altitude, of the foresaid Planet, and note it well, for truste well, if so be that the Planet be in the right side of the meridional line, so that his seconde altitude be lesse then the firste altitude was, then is the Planet directe, and if he be in the West side in that condicion, then is he retrograde, and if so be that this Planet be in the Est side, when his altitude is take, so that the seconde altitude be more then his firste altitude, then is he retrograde, and if he be in the West side of the line meridional, then is he direct, but the contrary moving of these parties is the cours of the Mone, for sothlie the Mone moveth the contrary fro either Planettes, in her ecliptike line, but in none other maner.

The conclusion of equacions of houses, after the Astrolabie.

SET the beginning of the degre that ascendeth upon the ende of the viii. houre inequall, than will will the line of the second house sit upon the line of Midnight, remove then the degre that ascendeth, and set hym upon the ende of the x. houre inequall, then will the beginnyng of the iii. house sitte upon the Midnight line, bring up again the same degre that ascendeth firste, and set hym upon the Este Orizonte, and then will the beginning of the iii. hous sit upon the Midnight line. Take then the nadire of the degre, that ascendeth firste, and set hym upon the ende of the ii. houre inequall, and then will the beginnyng of the v. house sit upon the Midnight line. Take then the nadire of the ascendent, and set him upon the ende of the iii. houre inequall, and then will the beginnyng of the vi. house sit upon the Midnight line. The beginnyng of the seventh house is nadire of the ascendente, and the beginnyng of the viii. house is nadire of the seconde, and the beginnyng of the ninth house is nadire of the thirde, and the beginnyng of the tenth house is nadire of the iii. and the beginnyng of the 'leventh house is nadire of the fiveth, and the beginning of the xii. house is nadire of the vi. house.

An other maner of equacions of houses, by the Astrolabie.

Take thyne ascendente, and then thou haste the fower angles, for well thou wotest, that th' opposite is of thine ascendente, that is to saie, the beginnyng of the seventh hous, sit upon the West Orizont, and the beginnyng of the tenth house, upon the line Meridionall, and his opposite upon the line of Midnight, then laie thy labell upon the degre that ascendeth, and reken then fro the point of thy labell all the degrees in the bordure, till that thou come to the Meridionall line, and departe all thilke degrees into thre even partes, and take there the even porcions of thre other houses, for to laie thy labell over every of these thre parties, and then thou might see by the labell in the Zodiake the beginning of these thre houses fro the ascendent, that is to saie, the twelveth next above the ascendente, and then the eleventh house and the x. house, upon the Meridional line, as I first saied, the same wise werche, fro the ascendent, doune to the line of Midnight, and thus thou haste thre houses, that is to saie, the beginning of the seconde, the thirde, and the fowerth house: then is the nadire of these thre houses, the beginnyng of these iii. houses that foloweth.

To finde the line Meridionall, to dwell fixe in any certain place.

Take a rounde plate of metall, for warpyng the border the better, and make thereupon a iuste compace; a little within the bordure, and laie this rounde plate upon an even ground, or some even stone, or on a even stocke fixe in the ground, and laie it even by a rule, in the centre of the compace sticke an even pinne or a wire upright, the smaller the better, and set thy pinne or thy wire, by a piomme rule's ende upright even, and let this pinne be no lenger then a quarter of thy diameter of the compace fro the pinne, and waite busilie aboute tenne or eleven of the clocke, when the Sonne sheweth, when the shadow of the pinne entereth any thing, within the circle of the compace one here brede, and make there a pricke with ynke: abide then still waityng on the Sonne, after one of the cloke, til that the shadowe of the pinne, or of the wire, passe any thyng out of the circle or compace be it never so little, and sette there a pricke. Take then a compace and mesure even the middle, betwixt bothe prickes, and set there a pricke: Take then a Rule and drawe a strike, even fro the pinne unto the middle prick, and take there the line Meridional for evermore, as in the same place. And if thou draw a crosse overthwart the compace, justly over the line Meridionall, then halie thou Est and West, and per consequens the oppositife, that is Southe and North.

Discripcion of the Meridionall line, and of the longitudes and latitudes, of citces and townes, as well as of climates.

This line Meridionall, is but a maner discripcion of a line ymaged, that passeth upon the poles of the worlde, and by the signette of our hedde: and it is cleped the signet, for in what place that any manne is at any tyme of the yere, when the Sonne by mevyng of the Firmamente cometh to his Meridionall place, then is it the verie Middaie, that we clepe None, and therefore it is cleped the line of Middaie. Then take hede that evermore of two Citces, or of two Townes, of whiche the one approacheth nerer the Ell, then doeth the other Towne, trust well that thilke two Townes have divers Meridians. Take kepe also, that the arche of the Equinocciall, that is contained and bounded betwene the two Meridians, is cleped the Longitude of the Towne. And if so be that two Townes have Meridian like, or one Meridian, then is the distaunce of hem bothe like farre: and in this maner thei chaunge not ther Meridian, but sothelie thei chaunge ther Almicanteras, for the haunsyng of the Pole, and the distaunce of the Sonne. The longitude of a climate maie be cleped the space of the yerth, fro the beginnyng of the firste climate, unto the laste ende of the same climate, even directe against the Pole artike, thus saie some aucthous. And some clerkes saie, that if men clepe the latitude of a center the arche Meridian, that is contened or intercepte, betwixe the signet and the Equinocciall, then thei saie, that the distaunce fro the Equinocciall unto the ende of the climate, even ayenst the pole artike, is the longitude of the climate for Southe.

To knowe with what degree of the Zodiake, that any Planet ascendeth on the Orizonte, where his latitude be North, or South.

KNowe by thyne Almanacke the degre of the Ecliptike of any signe, in which that the planete is rekened for to be, and that is cleped the degre of his longitude. And knowe also the degre of his latitude, fro th' ecliptike, North or South, and by these ensamples folowing in especialle, thou maicte wirc with every signe of the Zodiake. The longitude peraventure of Venus, or of an other planet was of Capricorne, and the latitude of hem Northward degrees, fro the Ecliptike line, then toke I subtil compas, and cleped the one point of my compace A, and that other F. then toke I the point of A. and set in the ecliptike line, and my zodiake in the degre of the Longitude of heddes, that is to saie in the ende of Capricorne, and then set I the point of F. upward in the same signe, bicause that the altitude was North, upon the latitude of Venus, that is to saie, in the degre fro the hed of Capricorne, and thus have I the degrees betwixe my two prickes, then laid I doune sothe my compace, and set the degre of the longitude upon the Orizont, then toke I and waxed my labell, in maner of a paire of tables to receive distinctly the pricke of my compace, then toke I this forsaide labell, and laied it fixe over the degre of my longitude, then toke I up my compace, and the point of A. in in the waxe of my labell, as I cond gette, over th' ecliptike line, in th' ende of the longitude I set the point point over endlonge on the labell, upon the space of the latitude inwarde, and on the zodiake, that is to say, Northward fro the ecliptike: then laied I down my compasse, and loked well in the waie upon th' ecliptike of A. and F. then tourned I my rete, till that the prick of F. sare upon the Orizont, then sawe I well, that the bodie of Venus in her latitude of degrees septentrionals, ascendeth in the ende of degre, fro the hed of Capricorne. And note that in this manner, thou mightest werch with any latitude septentrionall in al signes: but sothly the latitude Meridionall of a planet in Capricorn maie not be take, because of the little space betwixe the ecliptike, and the bordure of the Astrolabie, and sickerly in al other signes it maie be take. Also the degre peraventure of Jupiter, or of any other planette, was in the first degre of Pisces in longitude, and his latitude was degrees Meridionall. Then toke I the point of A. and set it in the first degre of Pisces on th' ecliptike, then set I the point downward of F. in the same signe, because that the latitude was South degrees that is to saie, fro the hed of Pisces, and thus have I degrees betwixe both prickes. Then set I the degre of the longitude, upon the Orizont, then toke I my labell, and laied him fixe upon the degre of longitude, then sette I the point of A. on my labell even over the ecliptike line, in the ende of the degre of the longitude, and I sette the point of F. endelong on my labell, the space of degrees of the latitude outwarde fro the Zodiake, that is to saie, Southwarde fro the Ecliptike towarde the bordure, and then tourned I my rete, til the point of F. sare upon the Orizont, then sawe I well that the bodie of Jupiter, in his Latitude of degrees Meridionall, ascendeth with the degre of Pisces in horoscopo. And in this maner thou maiest werche, with any Latitude, as I saied first, save in Capricorne. And thou wilt plie this crafte, with the arisyng of the Mone, loke thou reken well the course of houre by houre, for she dwelleth in a degre of her Longitude but a little while, as thou wost well: but neverthelesse, if thou legen well her verie mevyng by the tables, or after her course houre by houre, thou shalt doe well inough.

Umbra recta.

IF thou wilt wirche with Umbra recta, if thou might come to the base of the toure, in this maner shalt thou wirche: take the altitude of the Toure with bothe holes, so that the rule lie even on a point. Ensam- ple, as thus. I se hym through the point of fower then mete I the space betwixe me and the Toure, and I finde it twentie fote, then behold I how fower is to twelve, and I find it is the third part of twelve. Right so the space betwixe The and the Toure is the thirde parte of the altitude of the Toure: then thrise twentie fote is the highest of the toure, with th' addicion of thine owne bodie fro thyne eye. If the Rule fall on five, then is five times twelve, the highest of the Toure.

Umbra versa.

IF thou maiest not come to the base of the toure, and thou fixe hym through the number of one, set there a prick at thy fote, then go nere the Toure and se hym through at the point of two, and set there an other prick, and then beholde howe one hath hym to twelve, and thou shalt finde that he hath hym twelve sithes, then behold how two have hym to xii, and thou shalt finde it sixe sithes, and therefore the space betwixe two prickes, is sixe times thyne altitude. And note that at the first altitude of one, thou setteest a prick, and afterward when thou seest hym through at two, there thou setteest a prick, then thou findest betwene lxxx fote, then thou shalt finde that tenne is the 8th parte of lxxx. then is a fote the altitude of the Toure, but if it fall upon an other point, as thus. It falleth on fixe at the seconde takyng it, when it falleth on fower, then shalt thou find that fixe is the second part of twelve, and fower is the third parte of twelve, by the thirde parte, that is to say, the space betwixe two prickes, twice the height of the Toure, and if the difference wer three, then would it be thre times the height. Et sic de singulis. An other maner werchyng by Umbra recta. If thou maiest not come by the base of the Toure, wirche in this wise: Sette thy rule upon one, till thou se the altitude, and set at thy fote a prick, and then set thy rule upon two, and so doe in the same manner: then loke what is the difference betwixe one and two, and thou shalt finde that it is one. Then mesure the space betwixe the two prickes, and that is the twelveth part of the altitude of the Toure, and so of all other.

Umbra recta.

IF thy Rule fall upon the eighte point, on the right shadowe, then make the figure of eight, than loke howe moche space of the fete is, betwixe The and the Toure, and multiplie that by twelve, and when thou hast multiplied it by the same number then devide it by the number of eight, and kepe the residue, and adde thereto thy height unto thyne eye, to the residue, and that shall be the verie height of the Toure. And thus maiest thou worche on the same side, from one to twelve, &c.

Umbra recta.

AN other maner of workyng upon the same side. Loke upon what point thy rule falleth, when thou seest the toppe of the Toure, through the two holes, and then mete the space from thy fote, to the base of the Toure, and right as the number of the point hath hymself to twelve, right so the measure, betwixt The and the Toure, hath hym self to the height of the same Toure. Ensam- ple as thus. I sette case thy rule fall upon eight, then is eight two thirde partes of twelve, so is the space two thirde partes of the Toure.

Umbra versa.

TO knowe the heighte, by the point of Umbra versa. If the rule fall upon iii. when thou seest the toppe of the toure set a prick there thy fote standeth, and go nere till thou maiest se the same toppe, at the point of ii. and sette there an other prick: then mete howe many fote is betwixe the two prickes, and the height up to thine eye, and that shall be the height of the toure. And note, that iii. is the fowerth part of xii. and ii. is the thirde parte of xii. Now passeth ii. the number of iii. by distance of i. therefore the same space with thy height to thy eye is the height of the toure. And if it were so that there were two or thre distances in the numbers, so should the mesure betwixe the prickes be twice or thrise the height of the toure.

Umbra recta.

TO know the height, if thou maiest not come to the base of the thing, set thy rule upon what point thou wilt, so that thou maist se the toppe of the thing through the two holes, and make a marke, there as thy fote standeth, and go nere or farther, ferther, till thou maieſte ſe it through an other point, and make there an other marke, and loke what difference is betwixe the two pointes in the ſcale, and right as that difference hath hym to xii. right ſo the ſpaces betwixe the two markes hath hym to the height of the thing. Enſample. I ſet the caſe, that thou ſeeſt it through the point of iiii. and after at the point of iii. Now paſſeth the number of iiii. the number of iii. the diſtance of i. and right as this difference of one, hath hymſelf to xii. right ſo the meſure betwixe both the markes hath him to the height of the ſame thing puttyng therto the height of thy ſelf to thine eye. And thus maieſt thou werke from i. to xii.

Umbra verſa.

FERthermore, if thou wilt knowe in Umbra verſa, by the craſte of Umbra reſta, I ſuppoſe to take thine altitude at the point of iiii. and makeſt a marke, and then thou goeſt nere, till thou haſte it at the pointe of iii. and makeſt there an other marke, then muſt thou devide 144. by 4. the number that cometh thereof ſhall be 36. and after devide 144. by 3. and the number that cometh thereof is 48. then loke what difference is betwixe 36. and 48. and that ſhalt thou finde 12. and right as 12. hath hym to 12. ſo the ſpace betwixe the two prickes hath him to the altitude of the thyng.

Here endeth the concluſions of the Aſtrolabic.

The Complaint of the blacke Knight.

The heavy Complaint of a Knight, for that he can not win his Lady's Grace.

IN Maie when Flora the freſhe luſtie Quene
The ſoile hath cladde, in grene, and red, and whight,
And Phœbus gan to ſhede his ſtremis ſhene
Amidde the Bulle, with al the bemis bright,
And Lucifer to chace awaie the night
Ayen the morowe our Orizont hath take,
To bid all lovirs out of ſleepe awake.

'And hertis hevie for to recomforte
From drerihed of hevie night's ſorowe,
Nature bad 'hem riſe, and 'hem diſporte
Ayen' the godelie and the glad greie morowe,
And hope alſo with ſainct Ihon to borowe,
Bad in deſpite of daungir and diſpaire
For to takin the whoſome luſtie aire.

And with a ſigh I gan for to abreide
Out of my ſlombre', and ſodainly up ſterte,
As he (alas) that nigh for ſorowe deide,
My ſikeneſſe ſate aye ſo nie my herte,
But for to findin ſocour of my ſmerte,
Or at the left ſome releſe of my paine
That me ſo ſore yhalte in every veine.

I roſe anone, and thought I wouldè gone
Into the wodde, to here the birdis ſyng,
When that the miſtie vapour was agone,
And cleare and faire ywas the morownyng,
The dewe alſo like ſilvir in ſhinyng
Upon the levis, as any Baume ſwete,
Till ſirie Titan with his perſaunt here

Had dryid up the luſtie licour newe,
Upon the herbis in the grenè mede,
And that the floures of many divers hewe
Upon ther ſtalkis gonin for to ſprede,
And for to ſplaie out ther levis in brede
Again the Sonne, golde burnid in his ſpere,
That doun to 'hem ycaſt his bemis clere.

And by a rivir forthe I gan coſtei
Of watir clere as birell or criſtall;
Till at the laſt I founde a little weie
Toward a parke, enclodid with a wall,
In compaſſe rounde, and by a gatè ſmall,

Who ſo that would he frelie mightin gone
Into this parke, ywallid with grene ſlone.

And in I went to here the birdis ſong,
Which on the braunchis both in plain and vale,
So ſoude yſang, that all the wode yrong,
Like as it ſhould ſhivir in pecis ſmale,
And as methoughtin that the Nightingale
With ſo great might her voice began out wreſt,
Right as her harte for love would all to breſt.

10 The ſoile was plain and ſmoth, and wondir ſoft, 50
All oversprad with rapettes that Nature
Had made her ſelf: covirid eke aloft
With bowis grene, the flouris ſor to cure,
That in ther beantie thei maie long endure
From all aflaute of Phœbus ſervent fere, Whiche in his ſphere ſo hotte yſhone and clere.

The aire attempre, and the ſmothè winde
Of Zephyrus emong the bloſomes white
So whoſome was, and nourifhing by kinde,
20 That ſmale buddis, and round bloſomis lite, 60
In maner gan of her brethe to delite,
To yve us hope that there fruit ſhall ytake
Ayenſt Autumpne redy for to ſhake.

I ſawe the Daphne cloſid undir rinde
With the grene Laurir and the whoſome Pine
The Mirre alſo that wepith ever' of kinde,
The Cedris hie, as upright as a line,
The Filbert eke, that lowe doith encline
Her bowis grene unto the yerth adoun,
Unto her knight callid Demophoon. 70

30 There ſawe I growing eke the treſſie Hawthorne
In white Motley, that ſo ſore doeth yſmell,
Aſhe, Firre, and Oke, with many a yong acorn,
And many a tre mo then I can tell,
And me beforne I ſawe a little well
That had his courſe, as I could wele beholde Undir an hill, with quicke ſtremis and colde.

The gravill gold, the watir pure as glaſſe,
The bankis rounde, the well invironing
40 And ſoft as Velvet was the yongè graſſe 80
That

That thereupon lustilie came springyng,
The sute of trees aboutin compassyng
Ther shadowe cast, closyng the well arounde,
And all the herbis growyng on the grounde,

The water was so wholsome, and so vertuous
Through might of herbis growyng it beside Not like to the welle where as Narcissus
Hlain was, through the vengeance of Cupide
Where so wondir covertly he did hide
The grain of deth upon eche fatal brinke, 90
That deth mote folowe, who that ever drinke.

Ne like unto the pitte of the Pegace
Undir Parnassus where Poëtis slept,
Nor like to the welle of pure chastite
Which that Diana with her nymphis kept,
When she nakid into the watir lepte,
That slowe Actæon with her handis fell,
Onily for he came so nigh the well.

But this welle which that I now here reherse
So wholsome was, that it wouldin aswage 100
Wighes bollin hertis, and the venim perce
Of pensifched, withall the cruill rage,
And ovir more refreshin the visage
Of them that were in any verinesse
Of grete labour, or fallin in distresse.

And I that had through daungir and disdain
So drie a thirst thought that I would assaie
To tastin a draught of this Welle or twain,
My bittir langour if it might alaie, 110
And on the banke anone me dounc I laie,
And with mine hed unto the Welle I raught,
And of the watir dranke I a gode draught.

Whereof me thought I was refreshid wele
Of the brennyng that sate so nigh my herte,
That verily anone I gan to fele
An hugè parte relefid of my smerte,
And therewithall anone up I asterte,
And thought that I would walkin and se more,
Forthe in the parke, and in the holtis hore.

And thorough a launde as I yede apace, 120
And gan aboutin fast for to beholde,
I founde anone a delectable place,
That was beset with treis young and olde,
Whose namis here for me shall not be tolde,
Amidde of whiche there stode an herbir grene,
That benchid was with colours new and clene.

This herbir was all full of flouris gende,
Into the whiche as I beholde began,
Betwixt an Hulfere, and a Wode bende,
As I was ware, I sawe where laie a man 130
In blacke, and of white colour pale and wan,
And wondir dedly also of his hewe,
Of hurtis grene, and freshe woundis newe.

And ovirmore disstrainid with sicknesse
Beside all this he was full grevouslie,
For upon hym he had an hote accesse,
That daie by daie hym shoke full pitouslie,
So that for constraint of his maladie
And hertely wo, thus lying all alone, 140
It was a deth for one to here hym grone.

Whereof astoined, my fote I gan withdrawe,
Full gretly wondiring what it might be,
That he so laye and haddin no felawe,
Ne that I coude no wight with him yse,
Wherof I had grete routhe, and eke pite,

And gan anone, so softely as I coude,
Amonge the bushis prively me to shroude,

If that I myght in any wise aspie
What was the cause of this his dedly wo, 150
Or why that he so petously gan crie
On his fortune, and on his ure also,
With al my myght I layid an ere to Evèry worde, to marke wel what he saide,
Out of his swough anon as he abraide.

But first, if I shulde makin mencion
Of his persone, and plainly him discrive,
He was in sothe, without excepcion,
To speke of manhode, one the best one live, 160
There may no man ayen the trouth ystrive,
For of his time, and of his age also
He provid was, there men shuld have ado.

One of the best therto of brede and length,
So wel ymade by gode proporcion,
If he had be in his delivir strength,
But thought and sicknesse were occasyon
That he thus lay in lamentacyon
Grouffe on the grounde, in place so desolate,
Sole by him self, awhapid and amate.

And for me semith that it is fitting 170
His wordis al to put in remembraunce,
To me that herdin all his complaining,
And al the grounde of this his woful chaunce,
If there withall I maye you do plesaunce,
I wol to you so as I can anone
Lyke as he saide, reherce everichone.

But who shal helpin me nowe to complaine,
Or who shal nowe my stile gie or lede?
O Niobe, let nowe thy teris rayne
Into my penne, and helpe me eke in nede 180
Thou woful Myre, that felist mine hert blede
Of pitous sorowe, and myn hande eke quake,
Whan that I writin for this mann's sake.

For unto wo accordith complaining,
And doleful chere unto hevinesse,
To sorowe also sighing and weping,
And pitous mourning unto dreynesse,
And whoso that shall writin of distresse,
In party nedith to knowe felingly
The cause and rote of al soche malady. 190

But I alas! that am of witte but dul,
And that have no knowing of soche matere
For to discrive and writin at the ful
The woful complainte, which that ye shal here,
But evin like as doth a skrivinere
That can no more tell what that he shal write,
But as his maistr beside dothe endite,

Ryght so fare I, that of no sentement
Can sayin right naught in conclusioun,
But as I herde whan that I was present 200
This man complainin with a pitous soun,
For even like without addicioun
Or disencrese cythir of more or lesse,
For to reherse anone I wol me dresse.

And if that any nowe be in this place,
That felith in love breninge or fervence,
Or hindirid were to his ladie's grace,
With false tongis, that with pestilence
Sle trewe men, that nevir did offence
In worde nor dede, ne yet in ther entent, 210
If any soche there be here nowe present,

Lct

Let him of routhe lay him to audience
With doleful chere, and sobre countinaunce,
To herin this man by ful hye sentence
Hys mortal wo, and his dire perturbaunce
Complaining and now lying in a traunce
With lokis upcast, and with rusul chere,
Th' effecte of which was as ye now shal here.

The thought oppressed with inward sighis sore,
The painful lyfe, the body languishing; 220
The woful gost, the herte rent and tore,
The pitous chere all pale in complaining,
The dedly face, like ashis in shining,
The salte teris, that from min eyin fall,
Percel declare grounde of my painis al.

Whose herte is grounde to blede in hevynesse,
The thought receite of wo, and of complainte,
The brest is chest of dole and drerynesse,
The body eke so feble and so fainte,
With hote and colde mine axis is so maïnte, 230
That nowe I chivir for defaute of hete,
And hote as glede nowe sodainly I swete.

Nowe hote as fire, nowe cold as afhis ded,
Now hote for colde, now cold for hete again,
Now cold as yse, and now, as colis red,
For hete I brenne, and thus betwixin twaine
I possid am, and al forcaste in paine,
So that my hete full plainly as I fele
Of grevous colde is cause every dele.

This is the colde of inward hie disdaine, 240
Colde of despite, and colde of cruil hate,
This is the colde that doth his besy payne
Ayenist trouthe to fight and to debate,
This is the colde that doth the fyre abate
Of trewe mening, alas the hardè while,
This is the coldè that wol me begile.

For er the bettir that in trouth I mente
With al my myght her fathfully to serve,
With hert and al to be right diligent,
The lesse thanke, alas! I can deserve, 250
Thus for my trouthe daungir doth me serve,
For one that shuld my deth of mercy let,
Hath made despite anew his swerde to whet

Against me, and his arowis to fyle,
To take vengeance of wilful cruilte,
And tongis false thorough ther sleightly wyle
Han gone a werre, that wil not stintid be,
And false envie, with wrathe and envyte
Have conspirid against al right and lawe,
Of ther malyce that trouth shal be yslawe. 260

And malèbouche gan first the talè tel
To sclaudir trouth of indignacion,
And false reporte so loud yrange the bel,
That misbylese and false suspècion
Have trouthe ybrought to his dampnacion,
So that alas! wrongfully he dyith,
And falsenesse nowe his place occupyith,

And entirid is into trouth's londe,
And hath thereof the ful possession,
O rightful God, that first the trouthe fonde, 270
Howe maie thou suffre soche oppressyon,
That falsshed shulde have jurisdiction
In troth's right to sle him giltles!
In his franchise he may not live in pees.

Falsly accused, and of his Fone forjued,
Withoutin answere, while he was absent,

He dampnid was, and maie not be excused,
For cruilte yfare in judgèment,
Of hastynesse without advisèment;
And badde disdaine do execute anonc, 280
His judgèment in presence of his fone.

Attourney there maye, none admittid ben
To excuse trouthe, ne a worde to speke,
To faith or othe the judge ne lyste not sene,
There ne is no gaine, but he will be wreke.
O Lorde of trouthe, to The l cal and clepe,
Howe may thou sein thus in thy presence
Withoutin mercy murdrid innocence!

Nowe God, that art of trouthe sovèraine,
And seist how I lie for trouthe bounde, 290
So fore yknitte in lov's fyrie chaine,
Even at the deth through gyrtte with many'a wounde,
That lykily are never for to sounde,
And for my trouthe am dampnid to the deth,
And not abyde, but drawe along the breth:

Considere and se in thine eternal right
Howe that min herte professid wailom was
For to be trewe with al my ful myght
Onily to one, the whiche nowe alas! 300
Of volunte without any trespas
Myne accusours hath takin unto grace,
And cherishith 'hem, my deth to purchase.

What menith this? what is this wondir ure
Ot purveiaunce, yf so I shal it cal,
Of God of love, that false 'hem so assure,
And trewe alas! downe of the whele ben fal!
And yet in sothe, this is the worst of al,
That falsshed wrongfully' of troth hath the name,
And trouth ayenward of falsshed the blame.

This blindè chaunce, this stormy avinture, 310
In love hath mostely his experience,
For who that doth with trouthe most his cure
Shal for his mede yfindin moste offence,
That servith love with al his diligence;
For who can fainin undir lowlyhede,
Ne sailth not to findin grace and spede.

For I lovid one ful longe sythe agone
With all mine herre, and body, and ful might,
And to be ded my herte can not gone,
From his behest, but hold that he hath hyght, 320
Though I be banishid out of her syght,
And by her mouth dampnid that I shal dey,
To my behest yet I will er obey.

For evir sithins that the worlde began
Who so lyste lokin, and in story rede,
He shal aye findin that the trewe man
Was put abacke there, where as the falsshede
Yfurthred was, for love takith none hede,
To sle the trew, and hath of 'hem no charge,
Where as the false gothe frely at ther large. 330

I take recorde of true Palamedes
The giltles man, the noble worthy knight,
That evir lovid, and had no reles,
Notwithstanding his manhode and his might Yet love unto him dyd ful gret unright,
For aye the bet he dyd in chivalrye
The more he still was hindrid by envye.

And aye the bett he did in every place
Thorough his knighthode and his busy paine,
The ferdir was he from his ladye's grace, 340
For to her mercy might he ner attaine,

And to his deth he coude it not refraine
For no daungere, but aye obey and serve,
As he beste coude, plainly tyl that he lerve.

What was the fyne also of Hercules,
For al his conquest and his worthinesse,
That was of manly strength alone peres,
For lyke as bokis of him lisse expresse
He set pillers thorough his hye prowesse
Away at Gades, for to sygnifie 350
That no man might him passe in chivalrye,

The whichè pilliris ferre beyonde Inde
Beset of golde for a remembraunce,
And for al that yet was he set behinde
With hem that love lyst feblely to avaunce,
For him alas! set last upon a daunce
Against whom there helpe may no siffe,
And so for al his trowth he loste his life.

Phœbus also for al his plesaunt lyght
Whan that he wouid here in yerthe belowe, 360
Unto the verry herte with Venus sight
Ywoundid was thorough Cupidis bowe,
And yet his lady lyst him not to knowe,
Though for the love of her his herte dyd blede,
She let him go, and toke of him no hede.

What shal I sayin of yonge Pyramus?
Of trewe Tristram, for al his hye renowne,
Of Achilles or of Antonius,
Of Arcyte, or of him Palomowne, 370
What was the ende of all ther passiwne,
But astir sorowe deth, and than ther grave,
Lo here the guerdon that these lovirs have.

But false Jason with his doublenesse,
That was untrewé at Colchos to Medee,
And Theseus rote of unkindenesse,
And with these two also the false Enee,
Lo thus the false evir in one degre
Haddin in love ther lust and al ther wil,
And save falshode, there was none othir skil.

Of Thebis City eke the false Arcite, 380
And falsir Demophon eke for his slouth,
They had ther lust and al that myght delite,
For al ther falshode and ther gret untrouth.
Thus evir love alas! and that is routhe,
His false liegis forthirith what he may,
And sleeth the trewe ungodely day by day.

For trewe Adonis was slayne with the bore
Amidde the forest in the grenè shade,
For Venus love he feltin al the sore, 390
But Vulcanus with her no mercy made,
The foule chortle had many nightis glade,
Where Mars armipotent her knight and man
To syndin mercy comforte none he can.

Also the yongè freshe Hippomenes
So lustly fre he was of his corage,
That for to serve with al his hert he ches
Atalanta so faire of her visage,
But love alas! quite him so ill his wage,
With cruil daungir plainly at the laste, 400
That with the dethè guerdonlesse he paste.

Lo here alas! the fine of love's service!
Lo howe that love can his servauntis quite!
Lo how he can his faithful men dispise
To sle the trewe men, and false to respite!
Lo howe he dothe the swerde of sorowe byte
In hert'is, soche as moste his luste obey

To save the false, and do the trewe to dey.

For faith, nor othe, nor worde, ne assuraunce,
Trewe mening nor awaite, nor busynesse,
Neithir stil porte, ne faithful attendaunce, 410
Manhode, ne might, in armis worthinesse,
Nor pursute of worship, nor hic prowesse,
Nor in straunge landis riding ne travaile,
Ful lytil or nought in love dothe availe.

Peril of dethe, neithir in Se ne lande,
Hungir ne thirst, sorowe ne sykennesse,
Ne gret emprisis for to take on hande,
Sheding of blode, ne manful hardinesse,
Ne ofte wounding at sautis by distresse, 420
Nor in parting of life, nor deth also,
Al is for nought, love taketh no hede therto.

But lesing oures with ther base flattirie
Through ther falschode, and with ther doublenesse,
With talis newe, and many fainid lie,
By false semblaunt, and counterfeit humblese,
Undir colour depainte with stedfastnesse,
With fraude covered under a pitous face,
Acceptid be nowe rathist unto grace,

And can themselvin nowe best magnifie,
With fainid porte, and ther presumpcion, 430
They hauncin ther cause with false surquidrie,
Undir menyng of double entencion,
To thinkin one in ther opinion,
And saye' anothir to set them self alofte,
And hindir trouthe, as it is sene ful ofte.

The whichè thinge I bye nowe al to dere,
Thankid be Venus, and the god Cupide,
As it is sene by mine oppressid chere,
And by his arowes that stycken in my side, 440
That save my deth, I nothings elles abide Fro day to day, alas the hardè while!
Whenevir his darte that hym lyst to file,

My woful hertè for to rive atwo,
For faute of mercy, and lack of pite
Of her that causith al my paine and wo,
And lyst not onis of grace for to se
Unto my trothe thorough her cruelte,
And most of al for this I me complaine,
That she hath joy to laughin at my paine,

And wilfully she hath my deth ysworne 450
Al giltlesse, and wore no causè why,
Save for the trouthe that I had aforne
To her alone to servin faithfully,
O God of love, all unto The I crye,
And to thy blynde and double deite
Of this my gret wronge I complaine me,

And to thy stormy wilful variaunce
Lment with chaunge and gret unstablenesse,
Now up, now doune, so renning is thy chaunce, 460
That The to trust may be no sikirnesse,
I wite it nothings but thy doublenesse,
And who that is an archir and is blende,
Markith nothings, but shotith ay by wende,

And for that he hath no discrecion
Without advise he let his arowe go,
For lacke of sight, and also of reson,
In his shoring it happith oftin so
To hurte his frendist rathir than his fo,
So doith this blind god with his sharpe flone,
The trew he sleeth, and lettith the false gone.

And of his wounding this is worst of al,
Whan he hurt doith to so cruil wretche,
And makith the sycke for to crie and cal
Unto his very foe to be his leche,
And harde it is sothe for a man to seche
Upon the point of deth in jeoperdye
Unto his foe to findin remedie.

Right thus furith it nowe evin by me,
That to my foe that gave my herte a wounde
Mote askin grace, and mercy, and pite, 480
And namily there where none may be founde,
For nowe my fore my lechè wil confounde,
And God of kinde so ill hath set mine ure,
My lyv'is foe to have my wounde in cure.

Alas the whilè nowe that I was borne
Or that I evir sawe the brightè sonne!
For nowe I se plaine that ful longe asorne
Or I was borne my destiny was sponne
By the susterne to fle me yf they conne,
For they my deth had shopin or my sherte, 490
Onely for trouthe I may it not asterte.

The mighty goddesse also of Nature,
That undir God hath the whole govirnaunce
Of wordely thinges committid to her cure,
Disposid have through her wise purveiaunce
To give my lady so moche sustaunce,
Of al vertues, and therwithal purvyde
To murdre trouthe, hath take daungir to gide.

For bounte, beaute, shape, and semelihede,
For prudence, wit, and passingly fairenesse, 500
For benigne porte, glad chere with lowlyhede,
Of womanhede right plenteous largenesse,
Dame Nature dyd in her fully empresse,
Whan she her wrought, and alhir last disdaine,
To hindir trouthe, she made her chambirlaine.

Whan mistrust eke, and false suspeccion
With misbelve she madin for to be Chefe of counsaile, to this conclusion
For to exilin trouthe, and eke pite,
Out of her courte to makin mercy fle, 510
So that dispite now holdith forthe her reine
Through hasty bileve of tales that men feine.

And thus I' am only for my trouthe alas!
Murdrid and slayn, with wordis sharpe and kene,
Although gyltlesse, God wote, of al trespas,
And lye and blede upon this coldè grene;
Nowe mercy, swete, mercy my liv'is quene,
And to your grace of mercye yet I preye,
In your service that your true man may deye.

But if so be that I shal die algate, 520
And that I shal none othir mercy have,
Yet of my deth let this yben the date,
That by your wil I was brought to my grave,
Or hastily, if that you lyste me save,
My sharpe woundis, that akin so and blede,
Of mercy charme, and also' of womanhede.

For othir charme plainly ne is there none,
But onely mercy, to helpe in this case,
For though my woundis blede evir in one,
My lyfe, my deth ystandith in your grace, 530
And though my gilte ybe nothinge, alas!
I aske mercy in all my best entente,
Redy to dyin if that ye assente.

For there against shal I never strive
In worde ne werke, plainly I ne may,

For levir I have then to be alyve
To dye forthly, and it be to her paye:
Ye though it shuldè be this same day,
Or whan that evir her lyfle to devile,
Suffisith me to die in your service. 540

Thou God that knowest the thought of every wight,
Right as it is, in every thing maist se,
Yet er I dyin with al my ful myght
Lowly I pray to grauntin unto me,
That ye Lady godely, faire, freshe and fre,
Which onely fle me for defaute of rounthe,
Or that I dyin ye may knowe my trouthe.

For that in sothe inow suffisith me,
And the it knowe in every circumstaunce, 550
And afir I am wel apaide that she,
If that her lyst of deth to do vengeance,
Unto me that am undir her lygeaunce,
It sitè me not her dome to disobeye,
But at her luste fulle wisfully to deye.

Withoutin grutchinge or rebellion
In wil or wordis wholly I assente,
Or any manir contradiction,
Fully to be at her commaundement,
And if I dyin, in my testament
My herte I fende, and my spirite also 560
What so evir she lyste with 'hem to do.

And aldir last unto her womanhede,
And to her mercy, me I recommaunde,
That lye nowe here betwixin hope and drede,
Abidinge plainly what she list commaunde,
For uttirly this ne is no demaunde,
Welcome to me whilis me lastith breth
Ryght at her choise, where it be lyfe or deth.

And in this matir more what might I saine
Sithe in her hand, and in her wil is al, 570
Bothe lyfe and deth, my joye and al my peine?
And finally my heste holdin I shall Tyl my spirite by destinye fatal,
Whan that her lystith fro my body wende,
Have here my trouthe, and thus I make an ende.

And with that worde he gan to sighe as fore,
Like as his hert yryvin would atwaine,
And helde his pece, and spake no wordè more,
But for to se his wo and mortal paine
The teris gonin fro mine eyin raine 580
Ful pitcoulsly for very inwarde rothe,
That I him sawe so long wishyng for troth.

And al this while my selfe I keptè close
Aimonge the bowis, and my selfe gonne hide,
Tyl at the last the woful man arose,
And to a lodge ywent there close beside,
Where al the May his custome was t'abyde
Sole to complainin of his painis kene
From yere to yere undir the bowis grene.

And for bycause, that it drewe to the night, 590
And that the sonne his arke diurnal
Ypassid was, so that his persaunt lyght,
His brightè beinis and his stremis al
Were in the wavis of the watir sal
Undir the bordure of our ocean,
His chare of golde his courte so swiftly ran.

And while the twilight and the rowis rede
Of Phœbus light were deaurat alite,
A penne I toke, and gan me fast to spede
The woful plaintis of this man to write 600
All

All worde by worde right as he dyd endite,
Like as I herde and coude him tho reporte;
I have here set, your hertis to disporte.

If ought be misse, laye alle the wite on me,
For I am worthy for to bere the blame,
If any thinge amysse reporrid be,
To make this ditte for to seme lame
Through myne unconning for to faine the same
Like as this man his complaint dyd expresse.
I aske you mercy and forgivensse. 610

And as I wrote, me thought I sawe aserre,
Aferre in the west lustily appere
Esperus the so bright and godely sterre,
So glade, so faire, so persaunte eke of chere,
I menè Venus with her bemis clere,
That hevy hertis only to releve
Is wonte of custome for to shewe at eve.

And I as fast fel adowne on my kne,
And evin thus to her gan I to prey,
O lady Venus so feire on to se, 620
Let not this sothfast man for his trouthe deye,
For that joy which thou haddist whan thou leye
With Mars thy knight, when Vulcanus yfonde,
And with a chaine invisible you bonde

Togiðir bothè tway, in the same whyle
That al the courte above celestial
At your shamè began to laughe and smyle,
Ah, fairist lady willy fonde at al,
Comforte to careful Goddis immortal,
Be helping now, and do thy diligence 630
To let the stremis of thine influence

Discendin downe, in forthering of the trouthe,
Namely of 'hem that lye in sorowe bounde,
Shew now thy might, and on ther wo have routh,
Er that false daungir sle 'hem and confounde,
And special let thy might in this be founde
For to help and socour what that thou may
The trewe man that in the herbir lay;

And al that trewe are forthir for his sake,
O glade sterre, O lady Venus myne, 640
And cause his lady him to grace to take,
Her hert of stele to mercy so encline,
Er that thy bemis go up to declyne,

And er that thou nowe go fro us adowne,
For that love which thou haddist to Adowne.

And whan that she was gone unto her rest,
I rose anone, and home to bed ywente,
For wery I was, me thought it for the best,
Desiring thus in al my best entente,
That al trewe men, that be with daungir shente,
With mercy may in relese of ther paine
Recurid be, er Maye come eftc againe.

And for that I ne may no lengir wake,
Farewel ye loviris al that be trewe,
Praying to God, and thus my leve I take,
That er the sonne to morowe be ryfen newe,
And er he have ayen his rosin hewe,
That eche of you may havin soche a grace,
His owne lady in armis to embrace:

I mene thus only, in al honeste 660
Withoutin more ye may togiðir speke
What so ye lystin at gode liberte,
That eche may to othir ther herte ybreke
On Jelousie only to be awreke,
That hath so long of malice and envy
Ywerrid Trouthe with his tyranny.

L'envoye.

Princesse, plesith it your benignite
This lityl dyte for to have in minde
Of your womanhede, also for to se
That your trew man may of you mercy find, 670
And pite eke, that longe hath be behinde,
Let him againe be provokid to grace,
For by my trouthe it is against alle kinde
That false Daungere should occupye his place.

Go litil quaire unto my liv'is quene,
And to my very hert'is soveraine,
And be right glad, for that she shal The sene,
Soche is thy grace, but I alas! in paine
Am leste behinde, and n'ot to whom to plaine,
For mercy, ruth, and grace, and eke pyte 680
Exilid be, that I may not attaine
Recure to finde of mine adversite.

Explicit.

A Praise of Women.

Al tho that lyst of women ill to speke,
And sayin of 'hem worse than they deserve,
I pray to God that ther neckis to breke,
Or on some yll dethe mote tho janglirs serve,

For every man were holdin 'hem to serve,
And do 'hem worship, honour and servise,
In every manir they best coude devise.

For we ought first to think on what manere
Thei bring us forth, and what pain thei endure,
First in our byrth, and sith fro yere to yere, 10
How busily they done ther busy cure
To kepe us fro every myfavinture
In our youthhed whan that we have no might Our selfe to kepe, neythir by day nor night.

Alas! howe may we say on 'hem but wele,
Of whom we were yfostred and ybore,
And ben all our socoure, and trewe as stele,
And for our sake ful ofte they suffe fore,
Without women were al our joye ylore,
Wherefore we ought al women to obey 20
In al godnesse, I can no more ysay.

This is welknowin, and hath ben or this,
That women ben the cause of al lightnesse,
Knighthode, norture, eschewing al malis,
Encrese of worship, and of worthinesse,
Therto curteys, meke, grounde of alle godnesse,
Glad and mery, and trewe in every wise,
That any gentle hert can thinke or devise.

And

And though any would trust to your untruth,
And to your faire wordis would aught assent, 30
In gode faith me thinkith it wer grete ruth,
That othre' women should for ther gilt be shent,
That ner knew ne wist nought of ther entent,
Ne list not to here the faire wordes ye write,
Whiche ye you paine fro daie to daie t' endite.

But who maie beware of your tales untrue,
That ye so busilie painte and endite?
For ye will swerin that ye nevyr knewe,
Ne sawe the woman, neithir moche ne lite, 40
Save only her to whom ye had delite,
As for to serve, of all that er ye sey,
And for her love must ye nedis dey.

Then wil ye swere that ye knew ner before
What love was, ne his dredfull observaunce,
But now ye felin that he can wounde sore,
Wherefore ye put you' into her govirnaunce,
Whom love hath ordeined you to serve and do plesaunce.
With al your might your lityl liv'is space,
Whiche endith sone, but if she doe you grace.

And then to bedde will ye you sone ydrawe, 50
And sone your selvis sicke ye will then rain,
And swerin fast your Ladie hath you flawe,
And brought you sodainly in so high pain,
That fro your deth maie no man you restrain,
With a daungerous loke of her eyin two,
That to your dethè must ye nedis go.

Thus will ye morne, thus will ye sighin fore,
As though your hert anon in two wold brest,
And swerin fast that ye maie live no more,
Myne owne Ladie, that might if ye lest 60
Bryngin myne herte somdele into rest,
As if you list mercie on me to have,
Thus your untrouth will evir mercie crave.

Thus woll ye plainin, tho you nothing smerte,
These innocent cretures for to begile,
And swere to 'hem, so woundid is your herte
For love of them, that ye maie live no while,
Scarslie so long as one might go a mile,
So hyith deth to bryng you to an ende,
But if your soverain lady list you' amende. 70

And if she comfort you in any wise
For routh for pite' of your false othis fere,
So that she weneth it be as you devise,
And wenith your herte be as she maie here,
Thus to comfort, and somewhat do you chere,
Then woll these janglirs deme of her full ill,
And saine ye have her fully at your will.

Lo how redie ther tonguis ben, and prest,
To spekin harme of women causilese,
Alas! why might ye not as well saie the' best, 80
As for to demin 'hem thus giltyse?
In your herte iwis there' is no gentilnesse,
That of your own gilt liste thus women fame,
Now by my trouth me thinke ye be to blame.

For of women comith this worldly wele,
Wherefore we ought worship 'hem evirmore,
And though it mishap one, we ought to hele,
For it is all thorough our false lore,
That daie and night we pain us evirmore
With many' an othe these women to begile 90
With false talis, and many' a wickid wile.

And if falshe should be reckened and told,
It n'ere in women iwis full trouth were Not as in men is, by a thousande fold,
Fro all vicis iwis thei standin clere,
In any thyng that er I could of here,
But if entisyng of these men it make,
That 'hem to flatteren connin nevyr flake.

I would fain wete where evir ye coud here
Without mens tising women did amis, 100
There ye get 'hem, ye lie fro yere to yere,
And many' a gabbyng ye make to' 'hem iwis,
For I could nevyr here, ne knowen er this,
Where evir ye coud finde in any place
That evir women besought you of grace.

There ye you paining with al your full might,
With all your herte, and all your businesse,
To plesin 'hem aye both by daie and night,
Praying 'hem of ther grace and gentilnesse
To have pite upon your grete distresse, 110
And that thei woldin on your pain have routh,
And fle you not, sithin ye mene but trouth.

Thus maie ye sein that thei ben faultlesse,
And innocent to all your werkis fle,
And all your craftis, that touchin falsnesse,
Thei knowe 'hem not, ne maie 'hem not espie,
So swerin ye, that ye must nedis die,
But if thei woldin of ther womanhedde
Upon your trouth rewe, er that ye be dedde.

And then your lady, and your hert'is quene 120
Ye callin 'hem, and therewith ye sigh fore,
And saie, my ladie' I trowe that it be sene
In what plite that I have livid full yore,
But now I hope that ye wollin no more
In these painis suffre me for to dwell,
For of all godenesse iwis ye be the' well.

Lo whiche a paintid processe can ye make These harmlesse creturis for to begile:
And when thei slepe, ye painin you to wake,
And to bethinke you' on many' a wickid wile, 130
But ye shal se the daie that ye shall curse the while That ye so busily did your entent
'Hem to begile, that falshed nevyr ment.

For this ye know wel, though I woldin lie,
In women is all trouth and stedfastnesse,
For in gode faith I nevyr of 'hem sic
But moche worship, bounte, and gentilnesse,
Right commyng, faire, and full of mekenesse,
Gode and glad, and lowlie I you ensure,
Is this godelic and angelike cature. 140

And if it happe a man be in difese,
She doeth her businesse, and her full paine,
With al her might, him to comfort and plesse,
If fro his difese she might hym restrain,
In worde ne dede iwis she woll not faine,
With al her might she doth her businesse
To bryngin hym out of his hevinesse.

Lo here what gentillesse these women have!
If we could knowe it for our rudenesse,
How busie thei be us to kepe and save 150
Bothe in hele, and also in sickenesse,
And alwaie right sorie for our distresse,
In every manir thus shewe thei routh,
That in 'hem is all godenesse and all trouth.

And sith we find in 'hem gentilnesse, trouth,
Worship, bounte, and kindnesse evirmore,
6 A

Let

Let nevir this gentillesse, through your slouth,
In ther kinde trowth be evir aught forlore,
That in women is, and hath ben full yore,
For in revèrence of heven's quene
We ought to worship all women that bene.

For of all cretures that were get and borne
This wote ye well, a woman was the best,
By her was recovered the blis we' had lorne,
And through that woman shall we come to rest,
And ben isavid, if that our self left;

Wherefore me thinkith, if that we had grace,
We oughten honour women in every place.

160 Therefore I rede, that to our liv'is ende
Fro this time forth, while that we havin space, 170
That we have trespaced, pursue to amende,
Praying our Ladie, the welle of all grace,
To bryngin us unto that blisfull place,
There as she' and all gode women shal be' in fere
In heven above, emong the angils clere.

Explicit.

The House of Fame.

THE PROLOGUE.

In this Book is shewed how the Deeds of all Men and Women, be they good or bad, are carry'd by Report to Posterity.

OD tourne us everie dreame to gode,
For it is wondir thyng by the' Rode,
To my witte, what causith swevines
On the morowe or on evines,
And why the' effecte foloweth of some,
And of some it shall nevir come,
Why that is an avision,
And this a revelacion,
Why this a dreame, why that a sweven,
And not to every man liche even,
Why this a fantome, why that Oracles,
I n'ot: but whoso of these miracles
The causis knowith bet than I,
Define he, for I certainly Ne can 'hem not, ne nevir thinke
To busie my witte for to swinke
To knowe of ther significacions
The gendris, ne the distinccions
Of the tymes of 'hem, ne the causis,
Or why that this is more then that is,
Or if folkis complexions
Make 'hem dreame of reflexions,
Or ellis thus, as othir faine,
For the' grete feblenesse of ther braine
By abstinence, or by sicknesse,
By prison, strief, or grete distresse,
Or ellis by disordinaunce,
Or naturall accustomaunce,
That some men be to curious
In studie, or melancolious,
Or thus, so inly full of drede,
That no man maie 'hem botè rede,
Or ellis that devocion
Of some, and contemplacion,
Causin to them soche dremis ofte,
Or that the cruill life unsofte
Of 'hem that unkind lovis leden,
That ostin hopin moche or dreden,
That purely ther impressions
Causin 'hem to have visions,
Or if that spiritis han the might
To makin folke to dreame on night,
Or if the soule of propir kinde
Be so perfite as men yfinde,
'That it wele wote what is to come,
And that he warnith all and some

Of everiche of ther avintures,
By avisions, or by figures,
But that our fleshe ne hath no might
To understandin it aright, 50
For it is warnid to derkely,
But why the cause is, not wote I,
Well wotin of this thyngè clerkes,
That treten of that and othir werkes,
For I of none opinion
N'ill as now makin mencion,
But onely that the holy Rode Tournin us every dreame to gode,
For nevir sithin I was borne, 60
Ne no man ellis me besorne
Ymette I trowe right stedfastly
So wondirfull a dreame as I,
The tenthe daie now of December,
The whiche, as I can remember,
I woll you tellin every dele;
But at beginnyng trustith wele 20
I woll make invocacion
With devoute speciall devocion
Unto the God of slepe anone,
That dwellith in a cave of stone, 70
Upon a streame that cometh fro Lete,
That is a flode of hell unswete
Beside a Fulke, men clepe Cimerie,
There slepith aye this God unmerie,
With his slepie thousande sonnis, 30 That alwaie to slepe ther won is,
And to this God, that I of rede,
Praise I, that he wollin me spede
My swevin for to tell aright, 80
If every dreame stande in his might,
And he that movir is of all
That is and was, and evir shall,
So give 'hem joye that it here,
Of all that thei dremen to yere,
And for to standin all in grace
40 Of ther lovis, or in what place
That 'hem were levist for to stonde,
And shelde 'hem from povertè and shonde,
And from every unhappe and disese,
And sende 'hem that which maie 'hem plese, 90
That takith well, and scornith nought,
Ne it misdemin in ther thought

Through

Through malicious entencion;
And whofo through prefumpcion,
Or hate, or fcorne, or through envie,
Dispite, or jape, or felonie,
Misdeme it, praie I Iefus gode,
Dreme he barefore, or dreme he fhode,
That every harme, that any man
Hath had fithin the worlde began,
Befall hym thereof, or he fterve,
And graunt that he maie it deſerve:
Lo! with right ſoche concluſion
As had of his aviſion
Crefus, that was the kyng of Lyde,
That high upon a gibet dyde;
This prayir ſhall he have of me,
I am no bette in charite.

The Firſt Boke.

NOW herkin, as I have you ſaied,
What that I mette or I abraied,
Of December the tenth daie,
When it was night, to ſlepe I laie,
Right as I was wonte for to doen,
And fill aſlepè wondir ſone,
As he that was werie forgo
On pilgrimagede milis two
To the corps of ſainct Leonarde,
To makin lithe that crſt was harde.

But as me ſlept me mette I was Within a temple imade of glas,
In whiche there werin mo Images
Of golde, ſtandyn in ſondrie ſtages,
Sette in mo riche Tabirnales,
And with perrè mo pinnacles,
And mo curious portraiture,
And queint manir of figuris
Of golde worke, then I ſawe evir.

But certainly I n'ift nevir
Where that it was, but well wiſt I
It was of Venus redily
This temple, for in purtreiture
I ſawe anone right her figure
Nakid yſletyng in a Se,
And alſo on her hedde parde
Her roſy garland white and redde,
And her combe for to kembe her hedde,
Her dovis, and Dan Cupido
Her blindè ſonne, and Vulcano,
That in his face ywas full broune.

But as I romid up and doune,
I founde that on the wall there was Thus writtin on a table of bras.

*I woll now ſyng, if that I can,
The armis, and alſo the man,
That fiſt came through his deſtine
Fugitive fro Troye the countre
Into Itaile, wi h full moche pine,
Unto the ſtrond of Lavine,
And tho began the ſtorie anone,
As I ſhall tellin you echone.*

Fiſt ſawe I the diſtruccion
Of Troie, thorough the Greke Sinon,
With his falſe untrue forſwerynges,
And with his chere and his leſynges,
That made a horſe, brought into Troye,
By whiche Trojans loſte all ther joye.

And aftir this was graved, alas!
How Ilions caſtill aſſailed was,
And won, and kyng Priamus ſlain,
And Polites his ſonne certain,
Diſpitouſly of Dan Pyrrhus.

And next that ſawe I howe Venus,

When that ſhe ſawe the caſtill brende,
Doun from hevin ſhe gan diſcende,
And bade her ſonne Æneas fle,
And how he fled, and how that he Eſcapid was from all the pres,
And toke his fathre', olde Anchifes,
And bare hym on his backe awaie,
Crying alas and welawaie!

The whiche Anchifes in his hande
Bare tho the Goddis of the lande
I mene thilke that unbrennid were.

Then ſawe I next that all in fere
How Crenſa, Dan Æneas wife,
Whom that he lovid all his life,
And her yong ſonne clepid Julo,
And eke Aſcanius alſo,
Fleddin eke, with full drierie chere,
That it was pite for to here,
And in a foreſt as thei went How at a tournyng of a went Creüſa was iſoſte, alas!

That rede not I, how that it was How he her fought, and how her ghoſte
Bad hym to fle the Grekis hoſte,
And ſaied he muſt into Itaile,
As was his deſtinie, ſauns faile,
That it was pitie for to here,
When that her ſpirite gan appere,
The wordis that ſhe to hym ſaied,
And for to kepe her ſonne hym praied.

There ſawe I gravin eke how he
His fathir eke, and his meinè,
With his Shippis began to faile
Toward the countrey of Itaile,
As ſtreight as ere thei mightin go.

There ſawe I eke The, cruill Juno,
That art Dan Jupiter his wife,
That haſt ihatid all thy life
Mercileſs all the Trojan blode,
Rennin and crie as thou were wode
On Æolus, the God of Windes,
To blowin out of allè kindes
So loudè, that he ſhould ydrenche
Lorde, and ladie, and grome, and wenche
Of all the Trojanis nacion,
Without any' of ther ſavacion.

There ſawe I ſoche tempeſt ariſe,
That evèry herte might agriſe
To ſe it paintid on the wall.

There ſawe I eke gravin withall,
Venus, how ye, my Ladie dere,
Ywepyng with full wofull chere
Yprayid Jupiter on hie,
To ſave and kepin that navie
Of that dere Trojan Æneas,
Sithins that he your ſonne ywas.

There ſawe I Jovis Venus kiſſe,
And grauntid was of the' tempeſt liſſe.

There ſawe I how the tempeſt ſtente,
And how with allè pine he went,
And privilie toke a rivage
Into the countrey of Carthage,
And on the morowe how that he
And a Knight, that hight Achate,
Ymettin with Venus that daie
Goyng in a full queinte araie,
As ſhe had be an huntireſſe,
With winde blowyng upon her treſſe,

And how Æneas gan to plaine,
When that he knewe her of his paine,
And how his Shippis dreint ywere,
Or els iſoſte, he n'ifte not where;
How ſhe began hym comforte tho,
And bade hym unto Carthage go,

And

And there he should his folke yfinde,
 That in the Se were leste behinde.
 And shortly of this thyng to pace,
 She made Æneas so in grace
 Of Dido, Quene of that countre,
 That shortly for to tellin, she Became his love, and let hym do
 All that weddyng ylongith to,
 What should I spekin it more quainte,
 Or pain me my wordis to painte?
 To speke of love, it wolle not be,
 I can not of that faculte,
 And eke to tellen of the manere
 How that thei first acquaintid were,
 It were a long processe to tell,
 And ovir long for you to dwell.
 There sawe I grave how Æneas
 Tolde to Dido every caas,
 That hym was tidde upon the Se.
 And eft gravin was how that she Made of hym shortly at a worde
 Her life, her love, her lust, her lorde,
 And did to hym all reverence,
 And laied on hym all the dispence
 That any woman might ydo,
 Wenying that it had all be so
 As he her swore, and hereby demed
 That he was gode, for he soche femed.
*Alas what harme doth apparence
 When it is false in existence!*
 For he to her a traitour was,
 Wherefore she slowe her self, alas!
 Lo, how a woman doeth amis,
 To love him that unknowin is!
 For by Christ, lo thus it farith,
It is not all golde that glarith;
 For al so broke I well myne hedde,
There maie be undir godelihedde Covirid many a shreude vice;
 Therefore let no wight be so nice
 To take a love onely for chere,
 Or speche, or for frendly manere,
 For this shall every woman finde
 That some man of his pure kinde
 Woll shewin outward the fairist
 Till he have caught that what hym list,
 And then anon wolle causis finde,
 And swere how that she is unkinde,
 Or false, or privie, or double was.
 All this saie I by Æneas
 And Dido, and her nice lest,
 That lovid all to sone a gest.
 Wherefore I wolle saie o proverbe,
That He that fullie knoweth the herbe Maie safely laie it to his eye,
 Withoutin drede this is no lie.
 But let us speke of Æneas,
 How he betrayid her, alas!
 And lest her full unkindelie.
 So when she sawe all uttirle
 That he would her of trouthe faile,
 And wendin from her into Itaille,
 She gan to wring her handis two.
 Alas (qð she) that me is wo!
 Alas, is every man thus true,
 That every yere wolle have a newe,
 If it so longe tyme endure,
 Or ellis thre peravinture!
 And thus of one he wolle have fame,
 In magnifying his owne name,
 An othir for frendship saith he,
 And yet there shall the thirde ybe,
 That is ytaken for delite,
 Lo! 'or els for singuler profite.

In soche wordis began complaine
 This wofull Dido of her paine,
 As me mette dremyng redily,
 240 None other auctour aledge wolle I.
 Alas! (qð she) my swete herte,
 Have pitie on my sorowes smerte,
 And fle me not, go not awaie.
 O wofull Dido, welawaie!
 (Qð she) unto her selvin tho.
 O Æneas, what wolle ye do? 320
 O that your love, neithir your bonde,
 Which that ye swore with your right honde,
 Ne yet my cruill deth (qð she) 250 Maie holdin you still here with me!
 O! have ye' of my deth no pite?
 I wis myne own dere herte that ye
 Knowing full well that never yet,
 As farre as evir I had wit,
 Agilte you, in thought, ne in dede.
 O! have ye men soche godelihede 330
 In speche, and ner a dele of trouthe?
 Alas Alas, that er had routh
 Any woman on a false man!
 260 Now I se well, and tellin can
 We wretchid women can no arte,
 For certaine, for the more parte,
 Thus we ben servid everichone,
 How sore so that ye men can grone;
 Anon as we have you received
 Full certainlie we ben deceived, 340
 For though your love last a ceson,
 Waite upon the conclusion,
 And loke eke how ye determine,
 And for the more parte define.
 270 O welawaie that I was borne!
 For thorough you my name is lorne.
 And mine actis are redde and song
 O'er all this lande in every tong.
 O wickid fame, for there n'is
 Nothing so swifte lo! as she is! 350
 O sothe is, every thyng is wist,
Though it be coverde with the mist!
 Eke though that I might durin ever, 280 That I have done recovre I never,
 That it ne shall be saied, alas!
 I shamid was through Æneas,
 And that I shall thus judgid be,
 Lo! right as she hath doen, now she Woll doen eftsonis hardily,
 Thus saie the peple privily, 360
 But that is doen n'is not to done.
 But all her complaint ne her more
 Certain availed her not a stre:
 290 And when she wist sothely that he Was forthe into his ship agone,
 She into chambir went anone,
 And callid on her sustir Anne,
 And gan her to complainin thanne,
 And saied that she the cause ywas
 That she first lovid him, alas! 370
 And first coufailid her thereto.
 But what whan this was saied and do
 She roste her selvin to the herte,
 300 And deide thorough the woundis smerte.
 But all the manir how she deide,
 And all the wordis how she seide,
 Who so to knowe it hath purpoc,
 Rede Virgile in Æneidos,
 Or the Epistils of Ovide,
 What that she wrote or that she dide, 380
 And n'ere it to long to endite
 By God I would it here ywrite.
 But welawaie! the harme and routh,
 310 That hath beride for soche untrouth,

As men maie oft in bokis rede,
And al daie seen it yet in dede,
That for to thinkin it tene is.

Lo! Demophon, Duke of Athenis,
How he forswore him falsly,
And trayid Phyllis wickidly,
That kingis doughtir was of Thrace,
And falsely gan his termè pace,
And whan she wist that he was false,
She hong her self right by the halfe,
For he had doen her such untrouthe,
Lo! was not this a wo and routh?

Eke loke how false and richèles
Was to Briseida Achilles,
And Paris eke to Ocnone,
And Jason to Hypsipyle,
And este Jason to Medea;
And Hercules to Deianira,
For he left her for Iole,
That made hym take his deth parde.

How false was eke Duke Theseus,
That as the storie tellith us,
How he betrayid Adriane,
The devill be his soul's bane,
For had he laughid or iloured
He must have ben anone devoured,
If Ariadne ne had be,
And for she had of hym pite,
She made hym fro the deth escape,
And he made her a full false Jape,
For aftir this within a while
He left her slepyng in an Ile
Desert alone right in the Se,
And stalle awaie, and let her be,
And toke her sustir Phadra tho
With hym, and gan to shippe ygo,
And yet he had ysworne to here,
On all that evir he could swere,
That so she savid hym his life,
He would takin her to his wife,
For she desirid nothings elles
In certain as the boke us telles.

But for to excuse this Æneas
Fullliche of all his grete trespas,
The boke sayith withoutin faile
The Goddes bad hym go to Itaille,
And levin Affriques regioun,
And faire Dido and her faire toun.
Tho sawe I grave how to Itaille
Dan Æneas gan for to saile,
And how the tempest all began,
And howe he lost his sterisman
Whiche that the sterne, or he toke kepe,
Smote ovir the borde as he slepe.

And also saugh I how Sibile
And Æneas beside an Ile
To helle went yfere for to se
His father Anclises the fre
And how he there founde Palinurus,
And also Dido and Deiphobus,
And everiche tourment eke in hell
Sawe he, whiche long is for to tell,
Whiche painis who so liste to knowe,
He must redin many a rowe
In Virgile, or in Claudian,
Or Dantes that it tellin can.

Tho sawe I all the arivaile,
That Æneas made in Itaille,
And with kyng Latine his trete,
And all the battailis that he Was at himselfin and his knightes,
Or he had all iwonne his rightes,
And how he Turnus reft his life,
And wan Lavina to his wife,

And all the marveilous signals
Of the Goddis celestials,
How maugre Juno Æneas,
For all her sleighte and her compas,
Atchivid all his avinture.

390 For Jupiter toke on hym cure
At the praier of his Moðir Venus,
Whiche I praie alwaie savin us,
And us aie of our sorowes light.

When I had sein all this sight
Within this noble temple thus,
Hey! Lord, thought I, that madist us,
Yet sawe I never soch noblesse
Of Imagis, nor soche richesse,
As I se gravin in this churche,
400 But nought wote I who did 'hem worche,
Ne where I am, ne' in what countre,
But now will I out gone and se,
Right at the wickit if I can Seen oughtwhere fleyng any man,
That maie me tellin where I am.

When I out of the dorè cam,
I faste aboutin me behelde,
Then sawe I but a large felde
As farre as evir I might se,
410 Withoutin toun, or house or tre,
Or bushe, or grasse, or arid lande,
For all the felde was but of sande
As smal as men maye se at eye
In the desertis of Lybye;
Ne ferthir no manir cature,
That is yformid by nature,

420 Ne sawe I, me to rede or wisse;
O Christ, thought I, that art in blisse,
From fanton and illusion
Me save, and with devocyon
Myne eyin to the heven I caste,
Tho was I ware lo! at the lasse,
That faste by the sonne on hie
As kennin myght I with mine eye,
Me thought I sawe an Egle fore,
But that it semid mocht more
430 Than I had anye Egle yseine,
This is as sothe as deth certaine,
It was of golde, and shone so bright,
That never sawe men soche a sight,
But yf the hevin had ywonne
Al newe of God anothir sonne,
So shone the Egl's fethirs bright,
And somwhat downward gan it lyght.

Explicit liber primus.

440 NOwe herkin everye manir man,
That Englishe undistandè can,
And lystith of my dreame to here,
For now at erst shallin ye lere
So sely' and dredefull avysion,
That I saye neithir Scipion,
Ne kinge Nabugodonosore,
Pharao, Turnus, ne Alcanore,
Ne mettin soche a dreame as this,
450 Nowe O Thou faire blisful Cipris,
So be my favour at this time,
That ye me to endite and rime
Helpith that in Parnassus dwel
Beside Helicon the clere wel.

O thought, that wrote al that I met,
And in the tresorie it set
Of my braine nowe shal men yse
If any vertue in The be,
To tellin al my dreame aright
Nowe lithe thy engin and thy might.

This Egge of whiche I have you tolde,
 That with fethirs shone al of golde,
 Whiche that so hie began to fore,
 I gan beholden more and more,
 To see her beaute and the wonder,
 But never was that dente of thonder,
 Ne that thinge that men callin foudre,
 That smite sometime a roure to poudre,
 And in his swifte comminge brende,
 That so swithe gan downward discende,
 As this soule whan that it behelde
 That I arowme was in the felde,
 And with his grim pawis so stronge
 Within his sharpe nailis longe
 Me sleyn at a swappe he hente,
 And with his sours again up wente,
 Me caryng in his clawis starke,
 As lightly as I had ben a larke,
 Howe hye I can not tellin yowe,
 For I came up, I nill ner howe,
 For so allonied and asweved
 Was every virtue in me heved,
 What with his sours, and with my dred,
 That al my felinge gan to ded,
 For why, it was a gret affraye.

Thus I longe in his clawis laye,
 Til at the last he to me speke
 In mann's voice, and said, Awake,
 And be not agast so for shame,
 And callid me tho by my name,
 And for I shulde bettir abraide,
 Me to awakin thus he saide,
 Right in the same voice and stevin,
 That usith one I can nevin,
 And with that voice the sothe to saine,
 My minde ycame to me againe,
 For it was godely saide to me,
 So n'as it never wonte to be,
 And herewithal I gan to stere,
 As he me in his sete ybere,
 Til that he felte that I had hete,
 And felte eke tho mine herte ybere,
 And tho gan he me to disporte,
 And with gentil wordes me comforte,
 And sayid twise by saint Mary
 Thou arte a noyous thinge to cary,
 And nothings nedith it parde,
 For all so willy God helpe me,
 As thou no harme shalte have of this,
 And this case, that betidde The is,
 Is for thy lore, and for thy prowé,
 Lette se, darist thou loke yet nowé,
 Be ful enfurid boldily
 I am thy frende, and therwith I
 Gan for to wondir in my minde.

O God (qð I) that madest al kinde,
 Shal I none otherwise ydie?
 Wheðir Jove wil me stellysie,
 Or what thing maye this signifie?
 I am neithir Enocke ne Helye,
 Ne Romulus, ne Ganimede,
 That werin bore up, as men rede,
 To hevin with Dan Jupiter,
 And made the goddis botiler;
 Lo! this was tho my fantasie:
 But he that bare me gan asprie
 That I so thought, and sayid this,
 Thou demist of thy selfe amis,
 For Jove ne is not thereabouté,
 I dare The put ful out of doute,
 To makin of The yet a sterre,
 But er I berin The moche ferre,
 I wil The tellin what I am,
 And where thou shalte, and why I came;

To doin this, so that thou take Gode herte, and not for fere yquake;
 Gladly (qð I) now wel (qð he)
 First I, that in my fete have The,
 Of whom thou haste grete fere and wonder,
 Am dwellinge with the God of thonder,

100

Whiche men ycallin Jupiter,
 That doth me flyin ful ofte fer,
 To do all his commaundement,
 And for this cause he hath me sent
 To The: Herkin nowé, by thy trouthe, Certaine he hath of The grete routhe,
 For that thou haste so truly
 So long servid ententifly
 His blindè nephewe Cupido,
 And the faire Queene Venus also;
 Withoutin guerdon evir yet,
 And nathcles hast set thy wir,
 Althoughe in thy hed ful lite is;
 To make bokes, songis, and ditis,
 In rime or ellis in cadence,
 As thou best canst, in reverence
 Of love, and of his servauntes eke,
 That have his service sought, and seke,
 And painist The to praise his arte,
 Althoughe thou haddist never parte,
 Wherefore so willy God me blesse,
 Jovis yhalte it grete humbleste,
 And vertue eke, that thou wilt make Anight ful oft thine hed to ake
 In thy studye, so thou ywritest,
 And evirmore of love enditest,
 In honour of him and praisinges,
 And in his folkis fourthinges,
 And in ther matir al devisest,
 And not him ne his folke dispisest,
 Althoughe thou maiste go in the daunce
 Of them, that him lyst not avaunce,
 Wherefore as I now saide ywis,

110

120

130

Jupiter considrit wel this,
 And als, beausire, of othir thinges,
 That is, that thou halte no tidinges
 Of lov's folke, if they be glade,
 Ne of nothings els, that God made,
 And not onely fro ferre countre,
 That no tidinges comin to The,
 Not of thy very neighbouris,
 That dwellenalmost at thy doris Thou herist neithir that ne this;
 For whan thy labour al done is,
 And haste made al thy reckingis,
 In stede of reste and of newe thinges
 Thou goest home to thine house anone,
 And al so dombe as any stone
 Thou sittist at anothir boke,
 Tyl fully dasid is thy loke,
 And lyvist thus as an Hermite,
 Although thine abstinence is lyte;
 And therefore Jovis throughe his grace
 Wil that I bere The to a place,
 Whiche that ylight the house of Fame,
 And for to doe The sporte and game,
 In some recompensacion
 Of thy labour and devocion,
 That thou haste hadde, lo! causeless,
 To God Cupido the recheles,
 And thus this God throughe his merite
 Wil with some manir thing The quite,
 So that thou wilt be of gode chere;
 For trustith wel that thou shalte here,
 Whan we ben comen there as I say,
 Mo wondir thingis dare I lay,
 And of love's folke mo tidingis,
 Bothe forhsawis and lesingis,

140

150

160

And

And of mo lovis newe begon,
And longe servid tyl love is won,
And of mo lovirs casuelly
That ben betide, no man wote why;
But as a blinde man starteth an Hare;
And more jolite and welfare,
Whilis they findin love of stele,
As thinkin men, and o'r al wele
Mo discordes and mo jalousies,
Mo murmures, and mo novilties,
And also mo dissimulacions,
And eke feinid reperacions,
And mo berdis in two houres
Withoutin rasour or sisoures
Ymade, than grainis be of sandes,
And eke mo holdinge in mo handes,
And also mo renovaunces
Of olde forletin aqueintaunces,
Mo love dayis, and mo accordes,
Than on instrumentis ben cordes,
And eke of love mo exchaungis
Than evir corne were in graungis;
Unnethis maist thou trowin this,
(Qð he) no so' helpe me God as wis,
(Qð I) No why? (qð he) for it
Were impossible to my wit,
Although that Fame had al the pyes
In al a relme, and al aspies,
Howe that yet he shulde here al this,
Or they espyin; O. yes yes,
(Qð he) to me, that can I preve
By reson, worthy for to leve,
So that thou give thin advertence
To understandin my sentence.
First shalt thou here where she dwellith,
Right so as thine owne boke tellith,
Her palais standeth as I shal say
Right even emiddis of the way
Bytwene hevin, and yerthe, and Se,
That what so er in al these thre
Is spoken' in prive or apperte,
The way therto is so overte,
And stante eke in so juste a place,
That every sowne more to it pace,
Or what so cometh from anie tongue,
Whethre' it be rownid, redde, or songe,
Or spokin in suertè or drede,
Certaine it motin thiðir nede.
Nowe herkin wel, for why I wil
Ytellin The a propir skil,
And worthy demonstracion
In mine imaginacion.
Geffray, thou wortist full wel this,
That every kindly thinge that is Yhath a kyndely stede, there he May best in it conservid be,
Unto whiche place every thinge
Thorough his kyndely enclinige Ymevith for to comin to,
Whan that it is away therfro,
As thus, Lo! thou maiste al day se,
Take any thinge that hevy be,
As stone or led, or thinge of weight,
And bere it ner so hie on height,
Let go thine hande, it fallith downe,
Right so say I by fire or sowne,
Or smoke, or othir thingis light,
Alway they seke upwarde on height,
Light thinges up, and hevie down charge,
While everiche of 'hem be at large,
And for this cause thou maist wel se,
That every rivir to the Se
Enclinid is to go by kynde,
And by these skillis as I finde

170 Have fishes dwellinge in flote and Se;
And treis eke on the erthe be:
Thus every thinge by his reson
Hath his owne propir mancion,
To whiche he sekith to repaire,
There as it shuldin nat appaire.
Lo! this sentence is knowin couthe
Of every Philosophir's mouthe, 250
As Aristotle, and dan Platone,
And othir clerkis many one,
And to confirmin my resonne,
180 Thou wotist wel that speche is sowne;
Or ellis no man might it here,
Nowe herkin what I wol The lere.
Sowne is not but eyre ybrokin,
And every speche, that is spokin,
Where loude or prive, soule or faire;
In his substaunce ne is but eyre, 260
For as flame is but lightid smoke,
Right so is sowne but eyre ybroke;
But this may be in many wise,
190 Of the whiche I will The devise,
As sowne comith of pype or harpe;
For whan a pype is blowin sharpe,
The eyre is twisl with violence,
And rent: Lo! this is my sentence;
Eke, whan that men harpestringis smyte;
Wheðir that it be moche or lyte, 270
Lo! with the stroke the eyre it breketh,
And right so breketh it whan men speketh.
Thus wot thou wel what thing is speche,
200 Nowe hennisforthe I wil The teche
Howe everiche speche, voice, or sowne,
Throughe his multiplicaciowne,
Thoughe it were pipid of a mause,
More nedis come to Fam's house.
I prove it thus: takith hede nowe
By experience, for if that thou 280
Threwe in a watir nowe a stone,
Wel wost thou it wil make anone
A lityl roundil as a circle,
210 Para'venture as brode as a covircle,
And right anone thou shalt se wele
That circle cause anothir whele,
And that the thirde, and so forthe brother,
Every circle causinge other
Moch brodir than himselfin was,
And thus from roundil to compas 290
Eche aboutin othir goinge
Ycausith of othirs steringe,
And multiplying evir mo,
220 Tyl that it be so far ygo,
That it at bothè brinkis be,
Although thou mayist it not se
Above, yet gothe it alwaye under,
Although thou thinke it a grete wonder,
And whofo saithe of trouthe I vary, 300
Bydde him provin the contrary.
And right thus every worde ywis,
That loude or pryve' yspokin is,
Ymovith firste an eyre aboute,
230 And of his movinge out of doute
Anothir eyre anone is moved,
As I have of the watir proved,
That every circle causith other,
Right so of eyre, my levè brother,
Everiche eyre anothir sterith 310
More and more, and speche up berith,
Or voise or noyse, or worde, or sowne,
Aye through multiplicaciowne,
Tyl it be at the house of Fame,
240 Take it in earnest or in game;
Nowe have I tolde, if thou have mind,
Howe speche or sowne of pure kinde

Enclinid

Enclined is upward to meve,
 This mayist thou fele wel by preve,
 And that fame kindly stede ywis,
 That every thinge enclined to is,
 Yhath also his kyndelyche stede,
 That shewith it withoutin drede,
 That kindly the mancioun
 Of everyche speche, of every soun,
 All be it either soule or faire,
 Yhath his kindely place in eyre;
 And sith that every thinge ywis,
 Out of his kindely place ywis,
 Ay movith thurȝir for to go,
 Yf that it awaye be therfro,
 As I have before provid The,
 It shewith every soun perde
 Ymovith kindly to pace
 As up into his kindely place;
 And this place, of whiche I The tel,
 There as Fame doth yliste to dwell,
 Is sette amiddis of these thre,
 Hevin, and erthe, and eke the Se,
 As moste conservatise of soun;
 Than is this the conclusion,
 That every speche of every manne,
 As I The tellin firste beganne,
 Ymovith up on height to pace
 Kindly unto Fam's place.

I tellith me this nowe faithfully,
 Have I not provid thus simply,
 Withoutin any subtilte
 Of speche, or grete prolixyte
 Of termis of Philosophie,
 Of figuris of Poetrie,
 Of colouris of Rhetorike,
 Perde it oughtin The to like,
 For harde langage, and harde matere,
 Is incombrous for The to here
 At onis, wolle thou not wel this?
 And I answerid and said, yes.

Ah ha (q̃d he) lo! so I can Leudlye unto a leude man
 Yspeke, and shewin him soche skilles,
 That he maye shake 'hem by the bylles,
 So palpable they shuldin be;
 But tel me this nowe praye I The,
 Howe thinketh The my conclusioun?

Parde a gode persuasioun (Q̃d I) it is, and lyke to be,
 Right so as thou haste provid me.
 By God (q̃d he) and as I leve
 Thou shalte have it or it be eve,
 Of every worde of this sentence
 A profe, by thine experience,
 And with thine eris herin wel
 The toppe and taile, and every del,
 That every worde that spokin is Comith into Fame's house ywis,
 As I have saide, what wilte thou more?
 And with this worde uppir to fore
 He began, and saide by sainte Jame,
 Nowe wyll we spekin al of game.

Howe farest thou now q̃d he to me,
 Right wel (q̃d I) now se (q̃d he)
 By thy trouthe yondir adowne,
 Where that thou knowist any towne,
 Or house, or any othir thinge,
 And whan thou haste of ought knowynge
 Tho lokith that thou warne me,
 And I anone shal tellin The How farre that thou arte nowe therfro.

And I adowne gan lokin tho,
 And behelde feldis and plainis,
 Nowe hyllis, and nowe mountainis,

Nowe valeys, and nowe forestis,
 And nowe unnethis grete bestis,
 Nowe riveris, nowe citeis,
 320 Nowe townis, and nowe grete treis,
 Nowe shippis sailinge in the Se.
 But thus sone in a while he Was flowin fro the grounde so hye,
 That al the worlde as to myne eye
 No more ysemid than a pricke,
 Or ellis was the eyre so thicke,
 400 That I ne might it not discerne;
 With that he spake to me so yerne,
 And said: Seist thou any token,
 330 Or ought, that in this worlde's of spoken?
 I answered naye; no wondir is,
 (Q̃d he) for halfe so hye as this N'as Alexandre of Macedon
 Kynge: Ne of Rome dan Scipion,
 That sawe in dreme at pointe devise
 Heven and erthe, hel, and paradise,
 410 Ne eke the bold wretche Dadalus,
 Ne yet his childe nice Icarus,
 That slewe so hiȝ, that the here
 340 Hys wingis molte, and he fel wete
 In mydde the Se, and there he dreinte,
 For whom was made a grete complainte.
 Nowe tourne upwarde (q̃d he) thy face,
 And beholde here this large place,
 This eyre, but loke that thou ne be Adrad of 'hem that thou shalt se,
 420 For in this regioun certaine
 Dwellith many a citizeine,
 Of whiche yspekith dan Plato,
 350 These ben the eyrishe bestis lo!
 And tho sawe I al the menye,
 That bothe ygone, and also flye.
 Lo there! (q̃d he) cast up thine eye,
 Se yondir lo! the Galaxie,
 The whiche men clepe the milky way,
 For it is white: And some parfay
 430 Ycallin it han Watlynge strete,
 That onis was brente with the hete,
 Whan that the Sunn's sonne the rede,
 360 Which that hite Phaeton wolde lede
 Algate his fathir's carte, and gie.
 The carte horsis gan wel alpie
 That he ne coude no govirnaunce,
 And gonin for to lepe and prauunce,
 And bere him now up, and nowe downe,
 440 Tyl that he sawe the Scorpiowne,
 Whiche that in heven a signe is yir,
 And he for fere ylost his wit
 Of that, and let the reinis gone
 370 Of his horsis, and they anone
 Sone up to mounte, and downe discende,
 Tyl bothe the eyre and erthe ybrende,
 Tyl Jupiter lo! at the laste
 Hym slewe, and fro the carte ycaste.
 Lo! is it not a grete mischaunce
 To let a sole have govirnaunce
 450 Of thinges, that he can not demaine?
 And with this worde, sothe for to saine,
 He gan alway uppir to fore,
 380 And gladid me than more and more,
 So faithfully to me spake he.
 Tho gan I to loke undir me,
 And behelde the eyrishe bestis,
 Cloudis, mystis, and tempistis,
 Snowis, hailis, rainis, and windes,
 460 And the engendringe in ther kindes,
 Al the way thoroughe whiche I came,
 O God (q̃d I) that made Adame,
 Moche is thy myght and noblenes!
 390 And tuo thought I upon Boece,

That

That writeth a thought may flye so hie
With fethirs of Philosophie,
To passin everyche Element,
And when he hath so farre ywent
Than may ben sene behinde his backe,
Cloude, erthe, and al that I of spake.

Tho gan I wexin in a were,
And said, I wote wel I am here,
But whether in body or in gost
I n'ot ywis, but God thou wost,
For a more clere entendement
N'as to me nevir yet ysent.

And than thought I on Marcian,
And eke of Anticlaudian,
That sothe was ther discipcion
Of al the hevin's region,
As farre as that I sawe the preve,
And therefore I can 'hem beleve.
With that the Egle gan to crie,
Let be (qð he) thy fantasie,
Wylte thou lernin of steris ought?

Nay certainly (qð I) right nought;
And why? (qð he) for I am olde;
Or ellis wolde I The have tolde (Qð he) the steris namis lo!
And al the hevin's signis to,

And whiche they be: No force (qð I)
Yes perde (qð he) wost thou why?

For whan thou redist poetry,
Howe the goddis can stellify
A birde, a fysh, or him, or her,
As of birdes, the Ravyn and other,
Or Ariones harpe tynce,
Or Castor, Pollux, or Delphine,
Or Atalante's doughtirs seven,
How al these are yset in heven,
For though thou have 'hem ofte in hande,
Yet n'ost thou nat where that they stande.

No force (qð I) it is no nede,
As wel I leve, so God me spede,
'Hem that writin of this matere,
As though I knewe ther placis here,
And eke they femin here so bright,
That it shulde shendin al my sight
To loke on 'hem; that may wel be,
(Qð he) and so forth bare he me
A while, and tho began to crie,
That nevir herde I thinge so hie,
Holde up thine hed, for al is wel,
Sainte Julian lo! bonne hostel,
Se here the hõuse of Fame lo!
Mayist thou not here that I do?

Here what (qð I) the grete sowne (Qð he) that romblith up and downe in Fam'is house ful of tidinges, Bothe of faire speche and of chidinges,
And of false, and sothe compownid
Herkin wel, it is not rownid.

Herist thou not the grete swough?
Yes perde (qð I) well ynough,
And what sowne is it lyke (qð he)

Peter, lyke the' bering of the Se
(Qð I) against the rochis halowe,
Whan tempestes done, ther shippis swalow,
And that a man stande out of doute
A myle off thens, and here it route:

Or ellis lyke to the humblinge
Aftir the clappe of a thundringe,
Whan Jovis hath the eyre ybete,
But it doth me for fere to swete.

Nay drede The not therof (qð he)
It is nothing that will bytin The,
Thou shalte have no harme truely.

And with that worde both he and I

As nighe the place arivid were,
As men might castin with a spere,
I ne wist howe, but in a strete
He set me faire upon my fete,
And sayid, walkith forth a pace,
And tel thine advinture and case,
That thou shalte finde in Fam'is place.

Nowe (qð I) while that we have space
To speke, or that I go fro The,
For the love of God tellith me
In sothe, that I will of The lere,
If this ilke noise which that I here
Be as I have herde The me tell
Of folke that done in erthe ydwell,
And comith here in the same wise
As I The herde or this devise,
And that here liv'is body n'is
In al that house, that yondir is,
That makith al this londè fare.

No (answerid he) by sainte Clare,
And al so wisely God rede me,
But o thinge I will warnè The,
Of the whiche thou wilt have wondir.

Lo! to the house of Fame yondir
Thou wost howe comith every speche,
It nedith not The este to teche,
But undirstande now right wel this,
Whan any speche ycomin is Up to the palais, anone right
It wexith like the samè wight,
Whiche that the worde in erth yspake,
Be he clothid in red or blake,
And hath so very his likenesse,
And spake the worde that thou wilt gesse
That it the samè body be,

Wher Man or woman, he or she.
And is not this a wondir thinge?
Yes (qð I) tho by hevin kinge;
And with this worde farewell (qð he)
And here wil I abydin The,
And God of hevin sende The grace
Some gode to lernin in this place!
And I of him toke leve anone,
And gan forth to the palays gone.

510 Explicit liber secundus.

THou God of science and of light Apollo thorough thy grete might
This litil last boke now thou gye,
Nowe that I will for maistèrie,
Here arte potencial be shewde,
But for the rime is lyght and lewde,
Yet make it somewhat agreable,
Though some verse faile in a syllable,
And that I do no diligence
To shewin craftè but sentence,
And if that divine virtue thou
Wilt helpin me to shewin nowe
That in my hed ymarkid is,
Lo! that is for to menin this,
The house of Fame for to discrive,
Thou shalt yse me go as blive
Unto the next laurir I se,
And kylle it for it is thy tre;
Nowe entre in my brest anone.

Whan I was from the egle gone,
I gan beholde upon this place;
And certaine or I furthir passe,
I wol you al the shape devise
Of house and cite, and al the wise,
Howe I gan to this place approche,
That stode upon so hie a roche,

Hyir ystandith none in Spaine,
 But up I clambe with mochil paine,
 And though to clime ygrevid me,
 Yet I entente was to se,
 And for to porin wondre lowe,
 If I coude any wise yknowe
 What manir stonc this roche ywas,
 For it was lyke a limid glas,
 But that it shone ful more clere,
 But of what congelid matere
 It was I ne wiste redily,
 But at the laste espyd I,
 And founde that it was everydele
 A roche of yse, and not of stele;
 Thought I by saint Thomas of Kent
 This were a feble foundement
 To buildin on a place so hie,
 He ought hym lite to glorifie,
 That heron builte, God so me save.
 Tho sawe I all the hall igrave
 With famous solkis namis fele,
 That haddin ben in mochil wele,
 And ther famis full wide iblowe,
 But well unnethis might I knowe
 Any lettiris for to rede
 Ther namis by, for out of drede
 Thei werin almoste of thawed so,
 That of the lettiris one or two
 Were molte awaie of every name,
 So unfamous was wexe ther fame,
 But men saie, what maie evir last?
 Tho gan I in myne herte cast
 That thei were molte awaie for here,
 And not awaie with stormis bete,
 For on that othir side I sey
 Of this hill, that Northward yley,
 How it was writin full of names
 Of folke that had afore grete fames
 Of oldè tyme, and yet thei were
 As freshe, as men had written 'hem there
 The self daie, or that verry houre
 That I on 'hem began to poure:
 But well I wiste what it made,
 It was conservid with the shade,
 All the writyng which that I sie,
 Of a Castill that stode on hie,
 And stode eke in so cold a place,
 That here ne might it not deface.
 Tho gan I on this hill to gone,
 And found upon the coppe a wone,
 That all the men that ben on live
 Ne han the comyng to discrive
 The beaute of that ilkè place,
 Ne coudin castin no compace
 Soche an othir for to ymake,
 That might of beautie be his make,
 Ne one so wondirly iwrought,
 That it astonieth yet my thought,
 And makith all my witte to swinke,
 Upon this Castill for to thinke,
 So that the wondir grete beautie,
 Caste, craft, and curiosite,
 Ne can I not to you devise,
 My witte ne maie me not suffise,
 But nathelèsse all the substaunce
 I have yet in my remembraunce;
 For why? me thoughtin by saint Gile,
 That all was of stonc of Berile,
 Bothè the Castill and the Toure,
 And eke the hall, and every boure,
 Withoutin pecis or joynynges,
 But many subtil compaslynges,
 As Barbicans and pinnacles
 Imageries and tabernacles,

I sawe, and full eke of windowes,
 As flakis fallin in grete Snowes,
 And eke in eche of the pinacles
 30 Ywerin sondrie habitacles,
 In whiche stodin all withoutin
 Full the castill all aboutin
 Of all manir of Minstralis,
 And Jestours, that tellin talis
 Bothe of wepyng and eke of game,
 And all that longith unto fame,
 110 There herde I playin on an harpe,
 That ysounid bothe well and sharpe,
 Hym Orpheus full craftily,
 40 And on this othir side fast by Yfatte the Harpir Orion,
 And Gacides Chirion,
 And othir Harpirs many one,
 And the Briton Glaskirion
 And smale Harpirs with ther gleees
 Satte undir 'hem in divers fees,
 120 And gone on 'hem upwarde to gape,
 And counterfaited 'hem as an Ape,
 Or as crafte counterfeitith kinde.
 50 Tho sawe I standin 'hem behinde,
 Afarre from 'hem all by 'hem selve,
 Many a thousande tymis twelve,
 That madin loudè Minstralsies
 In Cornmusc and eke in Shalmies,
 And in many an othir pipe,
 That craftily began to pipe,
 130 Bothe in Douced and eke in Rede,
 That ben at festis with the brede,
 And many' a sloite, and litlyng horne,
 60 And pipis made of grenè corne,
 As have these little herdègromes,
 That kepin bestis in the bromes.
 There sawe I then dan Citherus,
 And of Arhenes dan Proserus,
 And Mercia that losse her skinne,
 140 Bothe in the face, bodie, and chinne,
 For that she would envyin, lo!
 To pipin bette than Apollo.
 There sawe I famous old and yong
 70 Pipiris of all the Duche tong,
 To lernin love dauncis springis,
 Reyis, and the straungè thingis.
 Tho sawe I in an othir place
 Ystandyng in a largè space,
 Of 'hem that makin blodie soun
 In trumpè, beme, and Clarioun.
 150 For in fight and in blodeshedynges
 Is usid glad clarionynges.
 There herde I trumpin Messenus,
 80 Of whom that spekith Virgilius.
 There herd I Joab trumpe also,
 Theodomas, and othir mo,
 And all that usid clarion
 In Casteloigne, and Aragon,
 That in ther tymis famous were,
 To lernin sawe I trumpin there.
 160 There sawe I sit in othir fees,
 Playing on othir sondrie gleees,
 Whiche that I can not now nevin,
 90 Mo then Sterris ben in hevin,
 Of whiche I n'ill as now not rime,
 For ese of you, and losse of time,
 For tyme ilost, this knowin ye,
 By no waie maie recovered be.
 There sawe I playing Jogèlours,
 Magiciens, and Tragètours,
 170 And Phetonissis, Charmereffis,
 And olde Witchis, and Sorcereffis,
 That usen Exorsifacions,
 100 And eke subfumigacions,

And

And clerkis eke, whiche connin well
All this Magike hight naturell,
That craftily doe ther ententes
To maken in certain ascendentes
Imagis lo! through whiche Magike
To maken a man ben whole or fike.

There sawe I the quene Medea,
And Circe, and Caliophia.

There sawe I Hermes Ballenus, Limote, and eke Symon Magus.

There sawe I, and yknewe by name,
That by soche arte doen men have fame.

There sawe I eke Coll Tragètour
Upon a table of Sicamour
Playin an uncouth thyng to tell,
I sawe hym cary a windemell
Undir a Walnote shale.

What should I makin lengir tale?
Of all the peple that I sey
I could not tell till Dom'isdey.

When I had all this folke beholde,
And founde me loce, and not yholde,
And I amufid a longe while Upon this wall all of Berile,
That shone lightir then any glas,
And made well more then it ywas,
As it kindly thing of fame is,
And then right anone aftir this,
I gan forthe romin till I fonde
The castill yate on my right honde, Whiche all so well ycorvin was,
That nevir soche an othir n'as,
And yet it was by avinture
I wrought by grete and subtrill cure,
It nedith not you more to tellen,
To makin you to long to dwellen,
Of these ilke yatis florishynges,
Ne of compacis, ne karvynges,
Ne the hackyng in Mafonries,
As corbettis, and Imageries.

But Lorde so faire it was to shewe!
For it was all with golde behewe;
But in I went, and that anone,
There met I crying many one,
A larges, larges, holde up well,
God save the ladie of this pell,
Our ownè gentill Ladie Fame,
And 'hem that willen to have a name
Of us, thus heard I cryin all,
And fast comin out of the hall,
And shoke noblis and starlyngis,
And corounid were as kyngis
With crounis wrought full of Losynges,
And many ribans, many fringes,
Were on ther clothis truily.

Tho at the last espyid I,
That Pursevautes and Heraudis,
That cryin riche folkis laudis,
It werin all, and every man
Of 'hem, as I you tellin can,
Had on him throwin a vesture,
Whiche men yelepe a cote armure,
Embroudirid wondirly riche.
As though thei werin not iliche;
But nought will I, so mote I thrive,
Be now aboutin to discrive

All these armis that there yweren
That thei thus on ther cotis weren,
For to me were impossible,
Men might make of 'hem a bible
Full twentie fore thicke as I trowe,
For certain, who so coud it knowe,
Ymight there all the armis sene
Of famous folke that er had bene

In Affrike, Europe, and Asie,
Sithins first began chivalrie.

250

Lo! how should I now tell all this!

Ne of the hall eke what nede is,

To tellin you that every wall

Of it, and rose, and flore withall,

Was platid halfe a fotè thicke

Of golde, and that ne was not wicke,

But for to provin in all wise

As fine as ducket in Venise,

Of whiche to lite all in my pouche is?

260

And thei were set as thicke of ouchis

Fine, of the finist stonis faire,

That men reden in the lapidaire,

Or as Grassis growen in a mede,

But it were all to long to rede

The namis: and therefore I pace.

But in this lustie and riche place

That Fam'is Hall ycallid was,

Full mochil pres of folke there n'as

Ne crouding for to mochil pres,

270

But all on hic above a des

Satte in a se Imperiall,

That made was of Rubie roiall,

Whiche that a Carbuncle is called,

I sawe perpetually istalled

A femine cature,

That nevir formid by nature

Was soche an othir thyng I saie,

For althirfirste the sothe to saie,

Me thoughtin that she was so lite,

That the smale length of a cubite

280

Was lengir than she semid be,

But thus sone in a while she

Her self tho' wondirly ystreight,

That with her fete she th' erthe yreight,

And with her hedde she touchid heven,

There as shinith the Sterris seven,

And thereto yet, as to my wit,

I sawin a grete wondir yit,

Upon her eyin to beholde,

But certainly' I 'hem nevir tolde,

290

For as sele eyin haddin she,

As fethirs upon foulis be,

Or werin on the bestis sours,

That Godd'is trone can to honoure,

As writeth Ihon in the' Apocalyps,

Her here that was owndie and crips,

As burnid golde it shone to se,

And sothe to tellin also she

Had also sele upstandyng eres,

300

And tongis, as on best ben heres,

And on her fete woxin sawe I

Partrich'is wingis redily.

But Lorde the perrie' and the richesse,

I sawe sittyng on the Goddesse,

And the hevinly melodie

Of songis full of armonie

I herde about her trone isong

That all the palais wall yrong!

So songe the mightie Musè, she

That clepid is Caliope,

310

And her sevin Sustirin eke,

That in ther facis femin meke,

And evirmore eternally

Thei songin of Fame, tho heard I,

Yheried be thou and thy name,

Goddis of renoun and of Fame,

Tho was I aware at the last,

As I myne eyin gan upcast,

That this ilke grete and noble Quene

Upon her shuldirs gan sustene

320

Bothè the armis and the name

Of tho that haddin largè Fame,

Ali-

Alifander, and Hercules,
That with a sherte his life did lese;
And thus founde I sitting this Goddesse,
In noble honour and richesse,
Of which I stinte a while now,
Of othir thing to tellin you.

Tho sawe I stande on th' other side
Streight doune unto the doris wide,
From the dees many a pillere
Of metall, that shone not full clere,
But though thei were of no richesse,
Yet were thei made for grete noblesse,
And in 'hem was there grete sentence,
And folke of hie and digne reverence,
Of which to tellin will I fonde.

Upon a pillir sawe I stonde,
Alderfirst there I ysie
Upon a pillir stonde on hie,
That was of Lede and Iron fine,
Hym of the scie Saturnine,
The Ebraike Josephus the old,
That of the Jewis gestis told,
And he bare on his shuldurs hie
All the fame up of the Jurie;
And by hym stod in othir seven,
Full wise and worthie for to neven,
To helpe hym berin up the charge,
It was so hevie and so large,
And for thei writtin of batailles
As well as of othir marvailles,
Therefore ywas lo! this pillere,
Of the whiche I you tellin here,
Of Lede and Iron bothe iwis,
For Iron Mart's metall is,
Whiche that the God is of bataille,
And eke the Lede withoutin faile
Is lo! the metall of Saturne,
That hath ful largè whele to turne,
To standin sothe on eithir rowe
Of 'hem, whiche that I could yknowe,
Though I by ordir 'hem not tell,
To makin you to long to dwell.

These, of the whiche I gan to rede,
These sawe I standin out of drede
Upon an Iron pillir strong,
That paintid was all endelong
With Tigr's blode in every place,
The Tholason with that height Stace,
That bare of Thebis up the name
Upon his sholdurs, and the fame
Also of cruill Achilles;
And by hym stode withoutin lese
Full wondir hie on a piller
Of Iron he the grete Omer,
And with him Dares and Titus
Before, and eke he Lollius,
And Guido eke the Colempnis,
And Englishe Galfride eke iwis,
And eche of these, as I have joye,
Was busie for to bere up Troye,
So hevie thereof was the fame,
That for to bere it was no game;
But yet I gan full well espie
Betwene 'hem was a little' envie,
One said that Omer madè lies
And feinyng in his poëtries,
And was to the Grekes favourable,
And therefore helde he it but fable.

Tho sawe I stande on a pillere,
That was of tinnid Iron clere,
Him the Latine Poete Virgile,
That hath bore up a longè while
The fame of Pius Æneas.

And nexte hym on a pillir was

Of Coppir, Venns clerke Ovide,
That both yfowin wondirs wide
The grete God of lov's fame,
And there he bare up well his name
Upon this piller al so hie
As I might se it with myne eye,
For why? this hall whereof I rede,
Was woxe on height, and length, and brede,
Well more by a thousande dele
Then it was erst, that sawe I wele.

Tho sawe I on a pillir by
Of Iron wrought full sternly
The grete Poete him dan Lucan,
That on his sholdurs bare up than
As hie as that I might it se
The fame of Julius and Pompe,
And by hym stod in all these clerkes,
That write of Rom's mightie werkes,
That if I would ther namis tell,
Tho all to long ymust I dwell.

And nexte hym on a pillir stode
Of Sulphure liche as he were wode,
Dan Claudian, sothe for to tell,
That bare up all the fame of hell,
Of Pluto, and of Proserpine,
That Quene is of the derkè pine.
What should I more tellin of this?
The hall ywas all full iwis
Of 'hem that writtin oldè jestes,
As ben on treis Rokis nestes,
But it a full confuse mattere
Were all these jestis for to here,
That thei of write, and how thei height.
But while that I beheld this sight,
I herde a noise approchin blive,
That fareth as Bees doen in an hive
Ayenst ther tyme of out flying,
Right soche a manir murmuring,
For all the worlde, it semid me.

Tho gan I loke about, and se,
That there come entryng into the' hall
A right grete companie withall,
And that of sondrie regions,
Of all kind of condicions,
That dwell in yerthe undir the Mone,
Bothe pore and riche, and al so sone,
As thei were come into the hall,
Thei gan on kneis doune to fall
Before this ilkè noble quene,
And sayid, graunt us Ladie shene,
Eche of us of thy grace a bone.
And some of 'hem she grauntid sone,
And some she warnid well and faire,
And some she grauntid the contraire
Of ther asking all uttirlye,
But this I saie you truillie,
What that her grace was I ne wist,
For of these folke full well I wist,
Thei haddin gode fame eche deserved,
Although thei were diversly served,
Right as her sistir dame Fortune
Is wont to servin in commune.

Now herkin how she gan to paie
'Hem that gan her of grace to praie,
And yet lo! all this companie
Yfaind sothe, and not a lie.

Madame (thus sayid thei) we be Folke whiche that here besechin The,
That thou grauntin us now gode fame,
And let our workis have gode name
In full recompensacion
Of gode worke, give us gode renoun.

I warne it you (qð she) anone,
Ye gettin of me gode fame none,

By

By God, and therefore go your waie.
 Alas (qð thei) and welawaie.
 Tellith us what your cause maie be.
 For that me lifte it not (qð she)
 No wight shall speke of you iwis
 Ne gode ne harme, ne that ne this.
 And with that worde she gan to call
 Her messengir, that was in hall,
 And bad that he should fast ygone
 Upon pain to be blinde anone,
 For Æolus the God of Winde,
 In Thrace there ye shall hym yfinde,
 And bid hym bryng his clarioun,
 That is full divers of his soun,
 And it is clepid clerè Laude,
 With whiche he wont is to heraude
 'Hem that me list ipraisid be,
 And also bid hym how that he Bryng eke his othir clarioun,
 That hight Sclaundir, in every toun
 With whiche he wont is to diffame
 'Hem that me list, and doe 'hem shame.
 This messengir gan fast to gone
 And founde where in a cave of stone
 In a countre which that hight Thrace
 This Æolus with hardè grace
 Yhelde the windis in distresse,
 And gan 'hem undir hym to presse,
 That thei gone as the Beris rore,
 He bounde and pressid 'hem so fore.
 This messengir gan fast to crie,
 Rise up (qð he) and fast The hie, Untill thou at my Ladie be,
 And take thy clarions eke with The,
 And spede The fast; and he anone
 Toke to him one that hight Tritone,
 His clarions to berin tho,
 And let a certain winde ygo,
 That blewe so hidoutly and hie,
 That it ne lestè not a skie
 In all the Welkin long and brode.
 This Æolus no where abode
 Till he was come to Fam'is fete,
 And eke the man that Triton hete,
 And there he stode as still as stone,
 And here withall there came anone
 An othir hugè companie
 Of gode folke and began to crie,
 Ladie, grauntith us now gode Fame,
 And let our workis have that name,
 Now in honour of gentilnesse,
 And al so God your soule yblesse,
 For we han well deservid it,
 Therefore is right that we be quit.
 As thrive I (qð she) ye shall faile,
 Gode workis shall you not availe
 To have of me gode Fame as now,
 But wote ye what, I grauntin yowe
 That ye shall havin a shrewde name,
 And wickid loos, and worsè fame,
 Though ye gode loos have well deserved,
 Now goeth your waie, for ye ben served;
 And thou Dan Æolus (qð she)
 Take forthe thy trompe anone, let se,
 That is iclepid Sclaundir light,
 And blowe ther loos, that every wight
 Speke of 'hem harme and shreudinesse
 In stede of gode and worthinesse,
 For thou shalt trompe all the contraire
 Of that thei have doen well and faire.
 Alas thought I what avintures
 Yhavin these forie cretures,
 That thei emongis al the pres
 Should thus be shamid giltles!

But what? it must nedis ybe.
 What did this Æolus, but he Toke out his blackè trompe of bras,
 That foulir then the Devill was,
 And gan this trompè for to blowe,
 As all the worlde should oirthrowe;
 Throughout evèry regioun
 Ywent this foulè trump'is soun
 As swift as pellit out of gonne,
 When fire is in the poudir ronne,
 And soche a smokè gan out wende
 Out of the foulè trump'is ende,
 Blacke, blue, and grenishe, swartishe, rede,
 As doith where that men melte lede,
 Lo! all on hie from the tewell;
 And thereto one thyng sawe I well,
 That ay the ferthir that it ranne,
 The gretir wexin it beganne,
 As doeth the rivir from a well,
 And it stanke as the pitte of hell;
 Alas! thus was ther shame irong,
 And giltlesse, on evèry tong.
 Tho came the thirdè companie,
 And gone up to the dees to hie,
 And doune on knees thei fell anone,
 And saidin, we ben everichone
 Folke, that yhan full truilie
 Deservid fame rightfullie,
 And prayin you it might be knowe
 Right as it is, and forthe yblowe.
 I graunte (qð she) for now me list
 That your gode workis shall be wist,
 And yet ye shall have bettir loos,
 Right in dispite of all your foos,
 Then worthie is, and that anone;
 Let now (qð she) thy trumpè gone,
 Thou Æolus, that is so blacke,
 And out thync othir trumpè take,
 That hightin Laude, and blowe it so,
 That through the worlde ther fame may go
 All esily, and not to fast,
 That it be knowin at the last.
 Full gladly, Ladie myne, he saied,
 And out his trompe of golde he braied
 Anone, and set it to his mouthe,
 And blewe it Est, and West, and Southe,
 And Northe, as loude as any thonder,
 That every wight hath of it wonder,
 So brode it ran or that it stent,
 And certis all the breth that went Out of his trump'is mouthe ysmelde
 As men a potte full of baume helde
 Emong a basket full of roses,
 This favour did he to ther loses.
 And right with this I gan espie
 There came the fowirth companie,
 But certaine thei were wondir fewe,
 And gonne to standin on a rewe,
 And saidin, certis, Ladie bright,
 We have doen well with all our might,
 But we ne kepe to havin fame,
 Hidith our workis and our name,
 For Godd'is love, for certis we Have surely doen it for bounte,
 And for no manir othir thyng.
 I grauntin you all your askyng,
 (Qð she) let your workis be dedde.
 With that about I tourned my hedde,
 And sawe anone the fivith rout,
 That to this Ladie gan to lout,
 And doune on knees anone to fall,
 And to her though befoughtin all,
 To hidin ther gode workis eke,
 And sayid, thei yeve not a leke

For no fame, ne no soche renoun,
For thei for contemplacioun,
And Godd's love, had it ywrought,
Ne of fame wouldin thei have nought.

What (qð she) and be ye so wode?
And wenin ye for to doe gode,
And for to have of that no fame?
Have ye dispite to have my name?
Naie ye shall lyin everichone,
Blowith thy trumpe, and that anone,
(Qð she) thou Æolus, I hore,
And ring these folkis workes by note,
That all the worlde maie of it here,
And he gan blowe ther loos so clere
Within his goldin clarioun,
That through the worlde ywent the soun
Al so kindly, and eke so soft,
That ther fame was yblowe aloft.

And tho came the sixt companie,
And gonin fast to Fame to crie,
Right verily in this manere;
Thei saidin, mercie, Ladie dere,
To tellin certain as it is,
We have doen neithir that, ne this,
But idill all our life hath be,
But nathelasse yet prayin we,
That we maie have as gode a fame,
And grete renome, and knowin name,
As thei that have doe noble jesses,
And have achevid all ther questes,
As well of love, as othir thyng,
All was us nevir broche, ne ryng,
Ne ellis what fro women sent,
Ne onis in ther herte iment,
To maken us onely frendly chere,
But mought ytemin us on bere,
Yet let us to the peple seme
Soche, as the worlde maie of us deme
That women lovin us for wode,
It shall do us as mochil gode,
And to our herte as moche availe,
The countirpeise, ese, and travaile,
As we had wonnin with labour,
For that is dere ybought honour,
At the regard of our grete ese;
And yet ye must us more yplese,
Let us beholdin eke thereto
Worthie, and wise, and gode also,
And riche, and happie unto love,
For Godd's love, that sitteth above,
Though we maie not the bodie have
Of women, yet, so God me save,
Let men yglewe on us the name,
Suffisith that we have the fame.

I graunt it (qð she) by my trouthe:
Now Æolus, withoutin slouth Take out thy trumpe of golde! (qð she)
And blowe as thei have askid me,
That every man wene 'hem at ese,
Although thei go in full badde lese;
This Æolus gan it so blowe,
That through the worlde it was iknowe.

Tho came the seventh route anone,
And fill on kneis everichone,
And sayid Ladie, graunte us sone,
The samè thyng, the samè bone,
Which that this nexte folke you have done.

Fie on you (qð she) everichone,
Ye nassie swine, ye idle wretches,
Fullfillid of rottin slowe tetches,
What? falsè theris, where ye wolde
Ben famid gode, and nothyng n'olde
Deservin why, ne nevir thought,
Men rathir you to hangin ought,

620 For ye be like the slepie Cat,
That would have fishe: but wost thou what?
He woll nothyng wete his clawis,
Evill thrifte come to your jawis,
And on myne, if I you it graunte,
Or doe favour you to avaunte.

Thou Æolus, thou kyng of Thrace,
Go, blowe this folke a sorie grace, (Qð she) anone, and wost thou how?
As I shal tellin The right nowe,
Say these ben they that wolde honour
630 Have, and do no kinde of labour,
Ne do no gode, and yet have laude,
And that men wende that belle I faude,
Ne coude 'hem not of lovè werne,
And yet she that ygrint at querne
Is al to gode to ese ther herte.

This Æolus anone up sterte,
And with his blackè clarioun
He gan to blasin out a soun
As loude as bellith winde in hel, 640 And eke therwith the forche to tel,
This sounè was so ful of japes
As evir mowis were in apes,
And that went al the worlde aboute,
That every wight gan on 'hem shoute,
And for to laugh as they were wode,
Soche game yfounde they in ther hode.

Tho came anothir companye
That hadde ydone the trechery,
The harme and the grete wickidesse,
650 That any herte coudin ygesse,
And prayid her to have gode fame
And that she n'olde do 'hem no shame,
But give 'hem loos and gode renoun,
And do it blowe in clarioun.

Nay wis (qð she) it were a vyce,
Al be there in me no justice,
660 Me lyst not for to do it nowe,
Ne this I ne will graunt it you.

Tho came there lepinge in a route,
And gan to clappin al aboute
660 Evèry man upon the crowne,
That al the hal began to fowne,
And sayid, lady lese and dere,
We ben soche folkes, as ye may here,
To tellin all the tale aright,
We ben shrewis evèry wight,
And have delite in wickidnesse,
As gode folke havin in godenesse,
And joye to ben yknowin shrewes
670 And ful of vice and wickid thewes,
Wherfore we pray you on a rowe
That our famè be soche yknowe
In al thingis right as it is.

I graunte it you (qð she) ywis,
But whar arte thou, that faiest this tale,
That werist on thy hose a pale,
And on thy tippet soche a bel?

Madame (qð he) the sothe to tel,
I am that ilke shrewe ywis,
680 That brent the temple of Isidis
In Athenis, lo! that cyte.
And wherfore diddest thou so (qð she)?
By my trouthe (answered he) madame,
I woldè faine have had a name
As othir folke had in the towne,
Although they were of grete renowne
For ther vertue and ther thewis,
Thought I, as grete fame have shrewis
(Though it be nought) for shrewdènesse,
690 As gode folke havin for godenesse,
And sithen I may nor have that one,
That othir n'yl I not forgone,

As for to gettin a fame here,
The temple sette I al on fire.
Nowe done our loos be blowin swithe,
As wisly be thou evir blythe.

Gladly (qð she) thou Æolus,
Herist thou not what they prayen us?
Madame I here ful wel (qð he)
And I will trumpin it parde,
And toke his blacke trumpe faste,
And gan to puffin and to blaste,
Tyl it was at the world's ende.

With that I gan aboutin wende,
For one that stode right at my bake
Me thought ful godely to me spake,
And sayid, frende, what is thy name?
Arte thou come hiðir to have fame?

Have Fame! nay for sothe, frende (qð I)

I come nat hirbir, grant mercy,
For no soche cause by my hed,
Suffisith me as I were ded,
That no wight have my name in honde,
I wor my selfe best, howe I stonde,
For what I drie, or what I thinke,
I wol my selfin al it drinke,
Certainly for the more parte,
As ferforth as I can mine arte.

What doist thou here than (qð he)?

(Qð I) that wol I tellin The,
The causè why I standin here
Is some new tidinges for to lere,
Some newè thing I ne wot what,
Tydingis eythir this or that,
Of love, or of soche thingis glade;
For certainly he that me made
To comin hiðir said to me,
I shuldin bothe yhere and se
In this place many wondir thinges,
But these ne be no soche tidinges
As I yment of: No (qð he?)

And I answerid no parde;
For ful wel I wote evir yet,
Sithinis that firste I had wit,
That some folke han desirid fame
Diversly, and loos and gode name,
But certainly I ne wist how,
Ne where that fame dwellid or nowe,
Ne eke of her discipcion,
Ne also her condicion,
Ne eke the ordir of her dome
Knewe I not till I hithir come.

Why than be lo! these tidinges
Which that thou nowe hethir bringis,
That thou hast herde (qð he) to me,
But nowe no force, for wel I se
What thou desirist for to lere,
Come forth, and stande no lengir here,
And I woll The withoutin drede
In to soche anothir place lede,
There thou shalte herin many one.

Tho gan I forthe with him to gone
Out of the castil sothe to sey.

Tho sawe I stande in a valey
Undir the castil faste by An house, that domus Dadali,
That Labyrinthus ycleped is,
N'as made so wondirly ywis,
Ne halfe so quently was ywrought,
And evirmo, as swifte as thought,
This queint house aboutin ywent,
That nevirmo it still ystent,
And there came out so gret a noise,
That had it stondin upon Oyse,
Men might have herde it esily
To Rome, I trowin sikirly,

770 And the noise whiche that I yherde
For al the worlde right so it serde
As dothe the routing of the stone,
That fro th' engin is letyn gone.

And al this house of whiche I rede,
Was made of twyggis salowe, rede,
And grene eke, and some werin white,
Soche as men to the cagis twhite,
Or makin of these paniers,
Or ellis hutchis or doffers,
That for the swough and for the twigges
This house was al so full of gigges,
And al so ful eke of chirkinges,
780 And of many othir wirkinges,
And eke this house hath of entrees
As many' as levis ben on trees
In sommir whan that they ben grene,
And on the rose yet men may sene
A thousande holis, and well mo,
To lettin the sowne out ygo,

790 And by day in every tyde
Ben al the doris opin wide,
And by night eche one is unshette,
Ne portir is there none to lette
No manir tydinges in to pace,
Ne nevir rest is in that place,
That it n'is filled full of tidinges,
Eythir loude, or of whisperinges,
And evir all the housis angles
Is ful of rowninges and of jangles,

800 Of werres, of pece, of mariages,
Of resles, of labour, of viages,
Of abode, of dethe, and of lyfe,
Of love, of hate, accorde, of strife,
Of losse, of lore, and of winninges,
Of hele, of sickenesse, or lesinges,
Of faire wethir, and tempestis
Of qualme, of folke, and of bestis,
Of divers transmutacions
Of estates, and of regions,
810 Of trust, of drede, of jealousy,
Of witte, of winning, of foly,
Of plenty, and of grete famine,
Of chepe, of derthe, and of ruine,
Of gode or of misgovernement
Of tyre, and divers accident.

And lo! this house of whiche I write,
Sykir be ye it n'as not lite,
For it was syxtie mile of length,
Al was the tymbir of no strength,
Yet it is foundid to endure
While that it lyste to avinture,
That is the mothir of tidinges,
820 As the Se of wellis and springes,
And it was shapin lyke a cage.

Certis (qð I) in al mine age
Ne sawe I soche an house as this.
And as I wondrid me ywis
Upon this house, tho ware was I
How that myne egle faste by
Was perchid hye upon a stone,
830 And I gan streight to him to gone,
And sayid Him thus, I pray The
That thou a while abidin me
For Godd's love, and let me sene
What wondirs in that place ybene,
For yet parauntir I may lere
Some gode therin, or somewhat here,
That lese me were, or that I went.

840 Peter, that is nowe myne entent, (Qð he to me) therfore I dwel,
But certaine one thinge I The tel,
That but I bringin The therin,
Ne shal thou nevir conne the gin

To

To come in to it, out of doute,
 So faste it whirlich lo! aboute;
 But sihe that Jov'is of his grace,
 As I have said wil The solace
 Finally with these ilke thinges,
 These uncouth sightis and tidinges,
 To passe away thine heviness,
 Soche routhe hath he of thy distresse,
 That thou suffrest debonairly,
 And wofte thy selvin uttirly
 Wholy desperate of al blisse,
 Sihe that fortune hath made amisse
 The sote of al thine hert's rest
 Languishe, and eke in pointe to brest,
 But he through his mightie melite
 Wil do The ese, al be it lite,
 And gave in expresse commaundement,
 To whiche I am obedient,
 To forthir The with al my myght,
 And wishe and techin The aright,
 Where thou maiste moste tidings here,
 Thou shalte here many one ylere.
 And with this worde he right anone
 Yhent me up bytwene his tone,
 And at a windowe in me brought,
 That in this house was, as me thought,
 And therewithal me thought it stent,
 And nothings it aboutin wente,
 And me set in the flore adoun;
 But soche grete congregacioun
 Of folke, as I sawe rome about,
 Some it within, and some without,
 N'as nevir sene, ne shal be esse,
 That certis in this worlde n'is leste
 So many formid by nature,
 Ne ded so many a creature,
 That wel unneithis in that place
 Had I a fot's brede of space,
 And every wight that I sawe there
 Rownid everiche in othir's ere
 A newe tidinge privily,
 Or els he tolde it opinly,
 Right thus, and said; Ne wost nat thou
 That is betiddin, lo! right nowe?
 No certis (q'ð he) tel me what;
 And than he tolde him this and that,
 And swore therto, that it was sothe,
 Thus hath he said, and thus he dothe,
 And this shal be, and thus herde I say,
 That shal be founde, that dare I lay,
 That al the folke that is on lyve
 Ne have the konninge to discrive
 Tho thingis that I herdin there,
 What aloude, and what in the ere,
 But al the wondir moste was this,
 Whan one had herde a thinge ywis,
 He came streight to anothir wight,
 And gan him tellin anone right
 The same tale that to him was tolde
 Or it a forlonge way was olde,
 And began somwhat for to eche
 Unto this tidinge in his speche
 More than evir it spokin was,
 And nat so sone departid n'as
 Tho fro him, that he ne ymette
 With the thirde man, and er he lette
 Any ffounde, he ytolde him alse,
 Werin the tidinges sothe or false,
 Yet wolde he tel it natheles,
 And evirmore with mo ences
 Than it was erst: thus northe and southe
 Went every tidinge, fro mouth to mouthe,
 And that encrefinge evirmo,
 As fire is wont to quicken and go,

From a sparcle sprongin amis,
 Tyl al a cite brent up is. 990
 And whan that that was ful up spronge,
 And waxin more on every tonge
 Than er it was, and went anone 920 Up to a windowe out to gone,
 Or but it might out there ypasse,
 It gan out crepe at some crevasse,
 And flewe forthe faste for the nones.
 And somtyme I sawe theré at ones
 A lesinge, and a fadde sothesawe,
 That gonnin of avinture drawe 1000
 Out at a windowe for to pace,
 And whan thei mettin in that place,
 They were acheckid bothé two,
 930 And neithir of 'hem myght out go,
 For eche othir they gonne so croude,
 Tyl eche of 'hem gan cryin loude
 Let me gone first, nay but let me,
 And here I wol ensurin The
 With vowis that thou wolt do so,
 That I shal nevir fro The go, 1010
 But be alway thin owne sworne brother,
 We wol meddle us eche in othir,
 That no man be he ner so wrothe
 940 Shal have one of us two, but bothe
 At onis, as beside his leve,
 Come we amorowe or on eve,
 Be we ycryde or styl yrowned;
 Thus sawe I false and sothe compowned
 Togiðir flye for o tidinge;
 Thus out at holis gonne to wringe 1020
 Evèry tidinge streight to Fame,
 And she gan yevin eche his name
 Aftir her disposicion,
 950 And yeve 'hem eke duracion,
 Some to wexin and wanin sone,
 As dothe the faire and white mone,
 And let him gonne, there might I sein
 Wingid wondirs full fast flyin
 Twenty thousande all in a route,
 As Æolus 'hem blewé aboute, 1030
 And lorde! this house in allé times
 Was ful of shypmen and pilgrimes,
 With scrippis bretteful of lesinges,
 960 Entremedilid with tidinges,
 And eke aloné by 'hem selve
 A many thousande tymis twelve
 Sawe I eke of these pardoners,
 Currours, and eke of messaugers,
 With boxis crommid ful of lyes,
 As evir vessil was with lies. 1040
 And as I althirfastist went Aboute, and dyd al myne entent
 Me for to playen and for to lere,
 970 And eke a tidinge for to here,
 That I had herde of some countre,
 That shal not nowe be tolde for me,
 For it no nede is, redyly
 Folke can ysinge it bet than I,
 For al mote out or late or rathe
 Allé the shevis in the fathe. 1050
 I herdin a grete noise withall
 Within a cornir of the hal,
 There men of love tydingis tolde,
 980 And I gan thiðirwarde beholde,
 For I sawe renninge every wight
 As faste as that they haddin might,
 And everyche cride, what thinge is that?
 And some said I n'ot nevir what,
 And whan they were al on an hepe,
 Tho thei behinde gonnin up lepe, 1060
 And clambin up on othir faste,
 And up the noise on hyghin caste,
 And

And tredin fast on othir's heles,
And stampe, as men done astir eles.
But at the laste I sawe a man,
Whiche that I nought discribe ne can,
But he ysemid for to be
A man of grete auctorite.
And therewithal I anon abraide
Out of my slepe halfe affraidè, Remembring wel what I had sene,

1070

And howe hye and ferre I had bene,
In my gost, and had grete wonder
Of that the mighty god of thonder
Had let me knowen, and gan to write
Lyke as ye have herde me endite,
Wherfore to study and rede alway
I purpose to do day by day.
And thus in dreminge and in game
Endith this litil Boke of Fame.

1080

Here endeth the Boke of Fame.

The Floure and the Leafe, written by GEFERY CHAUCER.

The Argument.

A Gentlewoman, out of an Arbour, in a Grove, seeth a great Company of Knights, and Ladies in a Dance upon the green Grasse. The which being ended, they all kneel down, and do honour to the Daisie, some to the Flower, and some to the Leaf. Afterward this Gentlewoman learneth by one of these Ladies the meaning hereof, which is this: They which honour the Flower, a thing fading with every Blast, are such as look after Beauty, and worldly Pleasure: But they that honour the Leaf, which abideth with the Root, notwithstanding the Frosts and Winter Storms, are they which follow Virtue and during qualities, without regard of worldly Respects.

When that Phœbus his chair of gold so hie
Had whirlid up the sterrie Sky aloft,
And in the Bole was entrid certainly,
When shouris fote of rain descendid soft,
Causing the ground, felè timis and oft,
Up for to give many an wholesome air,
And every plain was yclothid faire.

With newè grene, and makith smale flours
To springin here and there in field and mede,
So very gode and wholesome be the shouris,
That they renewin that was old and dede,
In wintir time, and out of every fede
Springith the herbè, so that every wight
Of this seson wexith richt glad and light.

And I so gladè of the seson swete,
Was happid thus, upon a certain night,
As I lay in my bed, slepe full unmete
Was unto me; but why that I ne might Rest, I ne wist, for there n'as erthly wight
[As I suppose] had more of hertis ese,
Than I, for I n'ad sicknesse nor disese.

Wherfore I mervaile gretly of my self,
That I so long withoutin slepe lay,
And up I rose thre houris astir twelfe,
About the springing of the gladsome dáy,
And on I put my gear, and mine aray;
And to a plesaunt grove I gan to pas,
Long or the bright Sonnè uprisin was:

In which were okis grete, streight as a line,
Undir the which the grasse so freshe of hew
Was newly sprong, and an eight fote or nine
Every tre well fro his fellow grew,

10

20

30

With braunchis brode, ladin with levis new,
That sprongin out agen the Sonnè shene,
Some very rede; and some a glad light grene.

Which [as me thought] was a right plesaunt sight,
And eke the birdis songis for to here,
Would have rejoicid any erthly wight;
And I, that couth not yet in ho manere
Herin the Nightingale of all the yere,
Full basily herk'nid with hert and ere
If I her voice perceve could any where.

40

And at the last a path of litil brede
I found; that gretly had not usid be,
For it forgrowin was with grasse and wede,
That well tinnethis a wight might it se,
Thought I, this path some whiðir goth pârde!
And so I followid; till it me brought
To a right plesaunt herbir wel ywrought,

Which that benchid was, and with turfis new 50
Freshly turnid, whereof the grenè grasse
So small, so thick, so short, so fresh of hew,
That most like to grene wöll wot I it was:
The hegge also, that yedin in compas,
And closid in allè the grene herbère,
With Sycamor was set and Eglatere,

60

Within in fere so well and cunninggly,
That every braunch and lese grew by mesuré
Plain as a bord, of an height by and by,
I se never a thing [I yôu ensûre] 60
So well ydone; for he that toke the cure
It for to make [I trowe] did all his pèine
To make it pass all tho that men have seine.

6 E

And

And shapin was this herbir rose and all,
 As is a pretty parlour; and also
 The hegge as thick as is a Castil wall,
 That who that list without to stond or go,
 Thogh he wold all day pryin to and fro,
 He should not se if there were any wight
 Within, or no; but one within well might, 70

Perceve all tho, that yedin there without Into the field, that was on every side
 Cover'd with corn and grafs, that out of doubt
 Tho one would sekin all the world wide,
 So rich a feld could not be espyde
 Upon no cost, as of the quantity:
 For of all gode thing there was plenty.

And I, that all these plesant fightis se,
 Thought suddainly I felt so swete an air
 Of the Eglenterè, that certainly
 There is no hert [I deme] in such dispair
 Ne yet with thoughtis froward and contraire
 So overlaid, but it should sone have bote,
 If it had onis felt this favour fore.

And as I stode, and cast aside mine eye
 I was ware of the fairist medler tre,
 That evir yet in all my life I se,
 As full of blossomis as it might be;
 Therein a Goldfinch leping pretily
 From bough to bough, and as him list, heete 90
 Here and there of buddis and flouris swete.

And to the herbir side was adjoyning
 This fairist tre, of which I have you told,
 And at the last the bird began to sing, [Whan he had etin what he etin would]
 So passing swetely that by many fold
 It was more plesant than I couth devise,
 And whan his song was endid in this wise,

The Nightingale with so mery a note
 Answerid him, that alle the wode yrong 100
 So sodainly, that as it were a sote
 I stode astonied, and was with the song
 Thorow ravishid, that till late and long
 I ne wist in what place I was, ne where,
 Ayen, methought, she song c'en by mine ere.

Wherefore I waitid about busily
 On every side if I her might se,
 And at the last I gan full well aspy
 Where she sate in a fresh grene laury tre,
 On the furthir side evin right by me, 110
 That gave so passing a delicious smell,
 According to the Eglanterie full well.

Whereof I had so inly grete plesure,
 As methought I surely ravishid was,
 Into Paradise, wherein my desire
 Was for to be, and no ferthir to pas,
 As for that day, and on the sote grafs
 I sat me down; for as for mine entent,
 The birdis song was more convenient,

And more plesant to me by many fold,
 Than mete, or drink, or any othir thing,
 Thereto the herbir was so fresh and cold,
 The wholesome favours eke so comforting,
 That [as I demid] sith the beginning
 Of the world was nevir seen er than
 So plesant a ground of none erthly man.

And as I sat the birdis herkening thus,
 Methought that I herd voicis suddainly,

The most swetist, and most delicious,
 That evir any wight, I trow trewly, 130
 Herdin in ther life, for the armony
 And swete accord was in so gode musike
 That the voicis to Angels most were like.

At the last out of a grove evin by [That was right godely and plesant to sight]
 I se where there came singing lustily
 A world of Ladies, but to tell aright
 Ther beauty grete, lyith not in my might,
 Ne ther array; nevirtheless I shall Tell you a part, tho' I speke not of all. 140

The Surcots white of velvet well fitting
 They werin clad, and the femis eche one,
 As it werin a mannir garnishing,
 Was set with Emeraudis one and one 80
 By and by, but many a rich Stone
 Was set on the purfilis out of dout
 Of Collours, Sleeves, and trainis round about;

As of grete perlis round and orient,
 And Diamondis fine and rubys red,
 And many othir stone of which I went 150
 The namis now; and everich on her hede
 A rich fret of gold, which withoutin drede
 Was full of stately rich stonys set,
 And every lady had a Chapelet

On ther hedis of braunchis fresh and grene,
 So wele ywrought, and so marvelously,
 That it was a right noble sight to sene;
 Some of Laurir, and some full plesantly
 Had Chapelets of wodebind, and sadly 160
 Some of Agnus Castus werin also,
 Chapelets fresh, but there were many of tho,

That dauncid and eke song full sobirly,
 But all they yede in maner of compace;
 But one there yede in mid the company,
 Sole by her self; but all follow'd the pace
 That she kept, whose hevinly figured face
 So plesant was, and her wele shape person,
 That of beauty she past them everichone.

And more richly beseen by manyfold
 She was also in every manir thing, 170
 Upon her hede full plesant to behold
 A Coron of gold rich for any King,
 A braunch of Agnus Castus eke bearing
 In her hand, and to my sight trewily
 She Lady was of all the company.

And she began a roundell lustily
 That Sus le foyle de vert moy men call,
Sine & mon joly cœur est endormy,
 And than the Company answerid all 180
 With voicis swete entunid, and so small
 That methought it the swetist melody
 That evir I herd in my life sothly.

And thus they all came dauncing and singing,
 Into the middis of the Mede echone
 Before the herbir where I was sitting, 120
 And God wot I thought I was well bigone,
 For than I might avise them one by one,
 Who fairist was, who best could dance, or sing,
 Or who most womanly was in all thing.

They had not dauncid but a little throw 190
 When that I herd not fer of sodainly,
 So grete a noise of thundering trumpis blow,
 As though it should have departid the Skie,
 And

And aftir that within a while I fe,
From the fame grove, where the Ladies came out,
Of Men of Armys coming fuch a rout,

As all men on erth had ben assemblid
On that place well horrid for the nonis,
Stering fo fast, that all the erth tremblid;
But for to speke of richis and stonis, 200
And men and horfe, I trow the large wonis
Of Pretir John, ne all his Trefory
Might not unneth have bought the tenth party,

Of their array; whofo list to here more,
I shall reherfe, fo as I can, a lite.
Out of the Grove, that I speke of before,
I fe come first all in their Clokis white
A company, that wore for ther delite
Chapèlets freth of okis ferial
But newly sprong; and trumpets were they all.

On every trump hanging a brode bannere
Of fine Tartarium full richly betè,
Every trumpet his Lord's armis bere,
About there neckis with grete perlis fete
Collaris brode, for coft they wou'd not lete,
As it would seem for ther scochons echone
Were fet about with many a precious ftone.

Ther horfis harneis was all white also;
And aftir them next in one company
Camin Kingis at armis and no mo, 220
In clokis of white cloth with gold richly,
Chaplets of grene on their heds on hye,
The Crownisthat they, on their Scotchons, bere,
Were fet with perl, and ruby, and faphere,

And eke grete Diamondis many one;
But all ther horfe harneis and other gere;
Was in a fute according everichone,
As ye have herd the forsaide trumpets were,
And by fering they were nothing to lere,
And ther guiding they did fo manirly; 230
And aftir them came a grete company

Of Heraudis and Purfevauntis eke, Arrayid in clothis of white velvet,
And hardily they were nothing to feke,
How they on them shouldin the harneis fet,
And every man had on a chapèlet,
Scotchonis and eke horfe harneis in dede
They had in fute of them that fore them yede.

Next after these appere in armour bright,
All save their hedis, femely knightis nine, 240
And every clasp and nail, as to my fight,
Of ther harneis were of red gold fo fine;
With cloth of gold, and furrid with ermine
Were the tappoutis of ther stedis strong,
Both wide and large, that to the ground did hong.

And every boss of bridle and paitrel,
That they had on, was worth, as I would wene,
A thousand pound, and on ther hedis well
Dressid were crounis of the laurir grene,
The best ymade that evir I had fene; 250
And every knight had aftir him riding
Thre henchmen still upon him awaiting;

Of which every (first) on a short trunchon
His lord's helmet bore fo richly dight
That the worst of them was worth the ransoun
Of any King; the second a shield bright
Bare at his back; the thred barin upright
A mighty spere, full sharp yground and kene,

And evèry child ware of levis grene

A freth chap'let upon his hairis bright; 260
And clokis white of fine velvet they were,
Ther stedis trappid and arayid right,
Without difference as ther lordis were,
And aftir them on many'a freth Courfere,
There came of armid knightis fuch a rout,
That they besprad the large field about.

And all they werin, aftir ther degrees,
Chappèlets new, or made of laurir grene,
Or some of oke, or some of othir trees,
Some in ther hondis barin boughis shene, 270
Some of laurir, and some of okis bene,
Some of hawthorne, and some of the wodebind,
And many mo, which I have not in mind.

And fo they came ther horfe freshly stirring
With bloudy fownis of ther trompis loud,
There se I many' an uncouth disguising
In the array of thilkè knightis proud;
And at the last, as evenly as they coud,
They toke ther place, in middis of the mede,
And every knight turnid his horfis hede 280

To his felow, and lightly laid a spere
Into the rest, and fo justis began
On ev'ry part aboutin here and there,
Some brake his spere, some drew down horfe and 285 man,
About the felde astray the stedis ran.
And to behold their rule and govirnaunce,
I you ensure, it was a grete plesaunce.

And fo the justis last an hour and more,
But tho, that crownid were in laurir grene,
Did win the prife; their dintis were fo fore, 290
That there was none agenst them might sustene,
And the justing allè was left off clene:
And fro ther horfe the nine alight anon,
And fo did all the remnaunt everichone.

And forth they yede togiðir, twain and twain,
That to behold it was a worthy fight,
Toward the Ladies on the grene plain,
That song and dauncid, as I said now right;
The ladies, as sone as they godely might,
They brakin off both the song and the daunce,
And yede to mete them with full glad semblaunce.

And every lady toke full womanly
By the hond a knight, and fo forth they yede Unto a faire laurir, that stode fast by,
With levis laid the boughis of grete brede,
And to my dome ther never was indede
A man, that had sene half fo faire a tre,
For undirneath it there might well have be

An hundrid persons, at ther own plesaunce,
Shadowid fro the hete of Phæbus bright, 310
So that they shouldin have felt no grevaunce Neithir for rain, ne haile, that them hurt might:
The Savoir eke rejoice would any wight,
That had be sick, or melancholious,
It was fo very gode and vertuous.

And with grete rev'rence they enclinid low,
Unto the tre, fo sote and fair of hew;
And aftir that, within a litil throw,
They all began to sing, and daunce of new;
Some song of love, some plaining of untrew, 320
Environing the tre, that stode upright,
And evir yede a lady and a knight.

And

And at the last, I cast mine eie aside,
 And was ware of a lusty Company,
 That came roming out of the feldē wide;
 And hond in hond a knight and a lady;
 The ladies all in Surcotes, that richly
 Purfilid were with many a rich stone,
 And every knight of grene ware mantlis on,

Embroudid wele, so as the Surcots were, 330
 And everich had a Chapelet on her hed,
 [Which did right wele upon the shining here]
 Makid of godely flouris, white and red,
 The knightiseke, that they in hondē led,
 In fute of them ware chaplets everichone,
 And before them went Minstrels many one:

As harpis, pipis, lutas, and sautry,
 Alle in grene, and on ther hedis bare
 Of diverse flouris made full craftily
 All in a fute, godely chaplets they were; 340
 And so dauncing into the Mede they fare.
 In mid the which they found a rust that was All ovin sprad with flouris in compas.

Whereto they enclinid everichone,
 With grete reverence, and that full humbly,
 And at the last there rho began anon
 A Lady for to sing right womanly
 A Bargaet in praising the daisie.
 For (as methought) among her notis sweite,
 She said Si douce est la margarete. 350

Then they all answerid her in fere,
 So passingly well, and so plefauntly,
 That it was a most blisfull noise to here,
 But I n'ot how it happid sodainly,
 As about None the Sonn so fervently
 Waxe hotē, that the pretty tendir floures
 Had lost the beauty of their fresh collours.

Forshronke with hete the Ladies eke to brent,
 That they ne wist where they them might bestow,
 The knightis swelt for lack of shade nie shent, 360
 And afir that within a litil throw
 The wind began so sturdily to blow,
 That down goth all the flowris everichone
 So that in all the Mede there last not one;

Save such as succoured were among the leves
 Fro every Storme that mightē them assaile,
 Growing undir the heggis, and thick greves;
 And afir that there came a storme of haile
 And rain in fere, so that withoutin faile
 The ladies ne the knightis n'ade o'thred 370
 Dry on them, so dropping wet was ther wede.

And when the storme was clene passid away,
 Tho in the white, that stode undir the tre,
 They felt nothing of all the grete affray,
 That they in grene without had in ybe;
 To them they yede for routh, and for pite,
 Them to comfort afir their grete disese,
 So fain they were the helplelle for to ese.

Than I was ware how one of them in grene
 Had on a Coron rich, and well-fitting; 380
 Wherfore I demid well she was a quene,
 And tho in grene on her were awaiting;
 The ladies then in white, that were coming
 Towardis them, and the knightis in fere
 Began to comfort them, and make them chere.

The quene in white, that was of grete beauty
 Toke by the hondē the quene that was in grene,

And seidē, Sustir, I have grete pity
 Of your annoy, and of your troublous tene;
 Wherein ye, and your company have bene 390
 So long alas! and if that it you plese
 To go with me, I shall do you the ese

In all the plesure that I can or may;
 Whereof that othir, humbly as she might,
 Thankid her, for in right evil array
 She was, with storme and hete I you behight;
 And every lady then anon right,
 That were in white, one of them toke in grene
 By the hond, which when the knightis had sene,

In like manir eche of them toke a knight.
 Clad in the grene, and forth with them they fare
 To an heggē, where that they anon right,
 To makin these justis they would not spare
 Boughis to hew down, and eke trees to square,
 Wherewith they made them stately fris grete,
 To dry ther clothis, that were wringing were.

And afir that of herbis that there grew
 They made for blistirs of the Sonne brenning, Ointmentis very gode, wholfome, and new,
 Where that they yede the sick fast anointing; 410
 And afir that they yede about ga'dring
 Plesant Saladis, which they made them etc,
 For to refreshe ther grete unkindly hete.

The lady of the lefe then gan to pray
 Her of the floure [for so to my seming
 They should be callid as by ther array]
 To soupe with her, and eke for any thing
 That she should with her all her pepill bringe
 And she ayen in right godely manere
 Thankith her fast of her most frendly chere; 420

Saying plainely, that she would obay
 With all her hert all her commandement:
 And then anon without lengir delay
 The lady of the lefe hath one ysent
 To bring a palfray afir her intent
 Arrayid wele in fair harnais of gold,
 For nothing lackid that to him long shold.

And afir that to all her company
 She made to purvey horse and every thing
 That they nedid, and then full hastily 430
 Even by the herbir where I was sitting
 They passid all, so merrily singing,
 That it would have comfortid any wight.
 But then I se a passing wondir sight,

For then the Nightingale, that all the day
 Had in the laurir sene, and did her might
 The whole service to sing longing to May,
 All sodainly began to take her flight,
 And to the Lady of the lefe forthright
 She flew, and set her on her hand softly, 440
 Which was a thing I mervail'd at gretly.

The Goldfinch eke, that fro the Medlar tre
 Was fled for hete unto the bushis cold,
 Unto the lady of the flowre gan fle,
 And on her hond he set him, as he wold
 And plefauntly his wingis gan to fold,
 And for to sing they peine them both as sore,
 As they had do of all the day before.

And so these Ladies rode forth a grete pace,
 And all the rout of knightis eke in fere, 450
 And I that had sene all this wondir case
 Thought that I would assay in some manere,
 To

To know fully the trouthe of this mattere;
And what they were that rode so plesauntly;
And when they were the herbir passid by,

I drest me forth, and happid mere anon,
A right fair lady I do you ensure,
And she came riding by her self alone,
Allè in white, with semblaunce full demure,
I her salued, bad her gode avinture 460
Mote her befall, as I couð most humbly,
And she answered, my doughtir, gramercy.

Madame, quoth I, if that I durst enquire
Of you, I wold fain, of that company,
Wit, what they be, that passed by this harbere?
And she ayen answerid right frendly;
My doughtir, all tho that passid hereby
In white clothing, be servants everichone
Unto the lefe, and I my self am one.

Se ye not her, that crownid is, (qð she) 470
Allè in white? Madame, then qð I, yes.
That is Dian, Goddes of chastity,
And for bicause that she a Maidin is,
Into her hond the branch she berith this,
That Agnus Castus men call propirly;
And all the Ladies in her company

Which ye se, of that herbè Chaplets were,
Be such, as han alwey kept maidinhede:
And all they, that of laurir chaplets bere,
Be such as hardy were in manly dede 480
Victorious, name which nevir may be dede,
And all they were so worthy of ther honde,
In their time that no one, might them withstonde.

And tho that were chapèlets on ther hede
Of fresh wodebind, be such as nevir were
To love untrue in word, in thought, ne dede,
But ay stedfast, ne for plesance, ne fere,
Tho that they shulde ther hertis all to tere,
Woud never flit, but evir were stedfast,
Till that ther livis there assundir braft. 490

Now fair Madam, qð I, yet woud I pray
Your Ladiship [if that it mightin be]
That I might knowe by some manir of wey,
Sithin that it hath likid your beaute
The trouthe of these ladies for to tell me,
What that these Knightis be in rich armour,
And what tho be in grene, and were the flour?

And why that some did rev'rence to the tre,
And some unto the plot of flouris fair?
With right gode will, my doughtir fair, qð she, 500
Sith your desire is gode and debonaire,
Tho nine crownid be very exemplaire
Of all honour longing to chivalry,
And those certain be clept the Nine Worthy,

Which that ye may se riding all before,
That in ther time did many' a noble dede,
And for ther worthines full oft have bore
The crown of laurir levis on ther hede,
As ye may in your oldè bokis rede:
And how that he, that was a conqueror, 510
Had by laurir alwey his most honour.

And tho, that barin bowis in ther hond
Of the precious laurir so notable,
Be such as were [I wold ye undirstond]
Most noble Knightis of the round table,
And eke the douseperis honourable,

Which they bere in the sign of victory,
As witnes of ther dedis mightily.

Eke there be Knightis old of the Gartir,
That in ther timis did right worthily, 520
And the honour they did to the laurir,
Is for by it they have ther laud wholly,
Ther triumph eke, and martial glory,
Which unto them is more perfite riches
Than any wight imagia can or gette.

For one lefe givin of that noble tre
To any wight, that hath done worthily, [An it be done, so as it ought to be]
Is more honour than any thing erthly;
Witnes of Rome that foundir was truly 530
Of all Knighthode, and dedis marvelous,
Record I take of Titus Livius.

And as for her, that crownid is in grene,
It is Flora, of these flouris Goddelle,
And all that here on her awaiting bene,
It are such folk that lovid idlenesse,
And not delite in no kind besinesse,
But for to hunt, and hawke, and pley in medes,
And many othir such like idle dedes.

And for the grete delite and the plesance 540
They have to the flour, and so reverently
They unto it doin such obeisaunce,
As ye may se, now fair madame, qð I,
[If I durst ask] what is the cause, and why,
That Knightis have the ensigne of honour,
Rathir by the lefe than by the flour?

Sothly, doughtir, qð she, this is the trouthe,
For knightes evir shoud be persevering
To seke honour, without feintise, or slouth;
Fro wele to bettir in all manir thing, 550
In sign of which, with levis ay lasting,
They be rewardid afir ther degre,
Whose lusty grene may not appairid be,

But ay keping ther beauty fresh and grene,
For ther n'is no florme, that may them deface,
Ne hail nor snowe, ne wind, nor frostis kene,
Wherfore they have this propriety and grace.
And for the flour, within a litil space,
Wollin be lost, so simple of nature
They be, that they no grevaunce may endure. 560

And every florme wold blowe them sone away,
Ne they laste not but for a selson,
That is the cause [the very trouthe to say]
That they may not by no way of reison,
Be put to no such occupacion.
Madame, qð I, with all mine whole servise
I thank you now in my most humble wise.

For now I am ascertain'd thoroughly
Of every thing I desirid to knowe.
I am right glad that I have said, sothly, 570
Ought to your plesure, (if ye will me trow)
Quoð she ayen, but to whom do ye owe
Your service? and which wollin ye honour [Pray tell me] this year? The lefe or the flour?

Madam, qð I, although I lest worthy,
Unto the lefe I ow mine observance;
That is, qð she, right weil done certainly,
And I pray God to honour you advance,
And kepe you fro the wickid remembrance
Of Malebouch, and all his crueltie, 580
And all that gode and well-condition'd be.

For here I may no lorigir now abide,
 But I must follow the grete company,
 That ye may se yondir before you ride;
 And forthwith as I couth most humily
 I toke my leve of her, and she gan hie Astir them as fast as evir she might:
 And I drow homeward for it was night.

And put all that I had sene in writing
 Undir support of them that lust it rede. 590
 O little boke! thou art so unconning,
 How darst thou put thy self in prees for drede?
 It is wondir that thou wexist not rede!
 Sith that thou wost full lite, who shall behold
 Thy rude langage full boytously unfold.

The PROLOGUE of the Testament of Love.

MAny men there ben, that with eres openly sprad so moche swalowen the deliciounette of jelles and of ryme, by queint knittinge coloures, that of the godenesse or of the badnesse of the sentence take they litel hede or els none.

Sothelye dulle witte and a thoughtfull soule so fore have mined and graffed in my spirites, that soche craft of enditinge woll nat ben of mine acquaintaunce.
 And for rude wordes and boistous percen the herte of the herer to the inrest point, and planten there the sentence of thinges, so that with litel helpe it is able to spring, this boke, that nothyng hath of the grete flode of wytte, ne of semelyche colours, is dolven with rude wordes and boistous, and so drawe togidre to maken the catchers therof ben the more redy to hent sentence.

Some men there ben, that painten with colours riche and some with wers, as with red inke, and some with coles and chalke: And yet is there gode matter to the leude peple of thylke chalkye purtreture, as hem thinketh for the time, and afterward the syght of the better colours yeven to hem more joye for the first leudenesse. So sothly this leude clowdy occupacyon is not to prayse, but by the leude, for comenly leude leudenesse commendeth.
 Like it shal yere syght that other precyous thynges shall be the more in reverence. In latin and frenche hath many souveraine wittes had grete delyte to en-dite, and have many noble thinges fulfild, but cer-tes there ben some that speken thar poysye mater in Frenche, of whiche speche the Frenche men have as gode a fantasie as we have in heryng of Frenche mens Englishe. And many termes there ben in English, whiche unneth we Englishe men connen declare the knowleginge: Howe should than a Frenche man boine? soche termes connejumpere in his matter, but as the Jay chatereth Englishe. Right so true-ly the understandyn of Englishmen woll not stretche to the privie termes in Frenche, what so ever we bosten of straunge langage. Let than clerkes endi-ten in latin, for they have the propertie of science, and the knowinge in that facultie: and lette Frenche men in ther Frenche also enditen ther queinte termes, for it is kyndely to ther mouthes, and let us shewe our fantasies in soche wordes as we lerneden of our dame's tonge. And although this boke be lytel thank worthy for the leudnesse in travaile, yet soch writing exiten men to thilke thinges that ben necessarye: for every man therby may as by a perpetual myrrour sene the vices or vertues of other, in whyche thyng lightly may be conceived to eschue perils, and necessities to catch, after as adventures have fallen to to other peple or persons.

Certes the souverainst thinge of desire and most creature resonable, have or els shuld have full appetite to ther perfeccyon: unresonable bestes mowen not, fith reson hath in hem no workinge: Than resona-ble that wol not, is comparisoned to unresonable, and made lyke hem. Forsothe the most souveraine and finall perfeccion of man is in knowynge of a sothe, withouten any entent decevable, and in love of one very God, that is inchaungeable, that is to knowe, and love his creator.

Nowe principally the mene to bryng in knowleging and lovyng his creatour, is the consideracyon of thynges made by the creatour, wher through by thylke thinges that ben made, understandynge here to our wyttes, arne the unsene pryvities of God made to us syghtfull and knowinge, in our contem-placion and understondinge. These thinges, than forsoth moche bringen us to the ful knowleginge sothe, and to the parfytte love of the maker of heavenly thynges. Lo! David saith: thou haste delited me in makinge, as who saith, to have delite in the tune how God hat lent me in consideracion of thy makinge. Wherof Aristotle in the boke de Animalibus, saith to naturell Philosophers: it is a grete likynge in love of knowinge ther creature: and also in know-inge of causes in kindelye thynges, considrid forsothe the formes of kindelye thinges and the shap, a gret kyndely love we shulde have to the werkman that hem made. The crafte of a werkman is shewed in the werk. Herefore trulie the philosophers with a lyvely studie manie noble thinges, righte precious, and worthy to memorye, writen, and by a gret swet and travaille to us lessen of causes the properties in natures of thinges, to whiche therfore Philosophers it was more joy, more lykinge, more herry lust in kindely vertues and matters of reson the perfeccion by busy study to knowe, than to have had all the tresour, al the richesse, al the vaine glory, that the passed Emperours, Princes, or Kings hadden. Therfore the names of hem in the boke of perpetuall memorie in vertue and pece arne writen; and in the contrarie, that is to saine, in Styxe the soule pitte of helle arne thilke pressed that soch godenes hated.
 And bicause this boke shall be of love, and the prime causes of stering in that doinge with passions and de-seses for wantinge of desire, I wil that this boke be cleped the Testament of Love.

But nowe then rede, who is thilke that will not in scorne laughe, to here a dwarfe or els halie a man, say he wil rende out the swerde of Hercules handes, and also he shulde set Hercules Gades a mile yet ferther, and over that he had power of strength to pull up the spere, that Alisander the noble might never wagge, and that passinge al thinge to ben mayster of Fraunce by might, there as the noble gracious Edward the thirde for al his grete prowesse in victories ne might al yet conquere?

Certes I wote well, ther shall be made more scorne and jape of me, that I so unworthely clothed altogether in the cloudie cloude of unconning, wil patten me in prees to speke of love, or els of the causes in that matter, sithen al the grettest clerkes han had ynough to don, and as who saith gathered up clene toforne hem, and with ther sharp sithes of conning al mowen and made therof grete rekes and noble, ful of al plenties to fede me and many another. Envy forsothe commendeth noughte his reson, that he hath in hain, be it never so trusty. And although these noble repers, as gode workmen and worthy ther hier, han al draw and bounde up in the sheves, and made many shokes, yet have I ensample to gather the smale crommes, and fullin my walet of tho that fallen from the bourde among the smalle boundes, notwithstanding the travaile of the almoigner, that hath draw up in the cloth al the remissailes, as trenchours, and the relese to bere to the almesse. Yet also have I leve of the noble husbnde Boece, although I be a straunger of conninge to come after his doctrine, and these grete workmen, and glene my handfuls of the shedyng after ther handes, and yf me faile ought of my ful, to encrese my porcion with that I shal drawe by privyties out of shokes; a fye servaunte in his owne helpe is often moche commended; knowynge of trouthe in causes of thynges, was more hardier in the firste sechers, and so sayth Aristotle, and lighter in us that han folowed after. For ther passing study han freshed our wittes, and onre understandynge han excited in consideracion of trouthe by sharpenes of ther reasons. Utterly these thynges be no dremes ne japes, to throwe to hogges, it is lyfelych mete for children of trouthe, and as they me betiden whan I pilgramed out of my kith in wintere, whan the wether out of mesure was boillous, and the wyld wynd Boreas, as his kind asketh, with dryng coldes maked the waves of the ocean se to arise unkindely over the commune bankes that it was in point to spill all the erthe.

Thus endeth the PROLOGUE.

Hereafter foloweth the first Boke of the Testament of Love

This Book is an Imitation of BOECIUS de Consolatione Philosophie.

- I. In the first Part whereof, Love by way of Legacy bequeaths to all them that follow her Instructions, the knowledge of Truth from Error, whereby they may rightly judge of the Causes of crosse Fortune, and such Adversities as befall them, whether in their suits of Love, or otherwise, and so in the end obtain their wish'd Desires.
  - II. In the second Part she teacheth the Knowledge of one very God our Creator, as also the State of Grace, and the State of Glory; all which good things are figur'd by a Margarite Pearl.
- CHAUCER compil'd this Book as a Comfort to himself after great Griefs conceiv'd for some rash Attempts of the Commons, with whom he had join'd, and thereby was in fear to lose the Favour of his best Friends, and also therein to set an end to all his writing, being commanded by Venus (as appears by Gower in the end of his eighth Book, entituled Confessio Amantis) so to do, as one that was Venus Clerk; even as Gower had made his Confessio Amantis, his last Work, and shrift of his former Offences.

A Las! Fortune alas! I that some tyme in delicious houres was wont to enjoy blifful stoundes, am now dryve by unhappy heviness to bewaile my sondrie yeels in tene. Trewlie I leve, in myn herte is writte of perdurable letters al the entencyons of lamentacion that now ben ynempned; for any maner disese outward in sobbyng maner sheweth sorowful yexynge from within. Thus from my comfort I ginne to spille, sith she, that shulde me solace, is ferre fro my presence. Certes her absence is to me an hell, my servinge deth thus in wo it myneth, that endelese care is throughout myne herte clenched, blysse of my joye, that ofte me murthed, is turned into galle, to thynke on thing that may not at my wil in armes me hent.

Mirth is chaunged into tene, whan swink is there continually, that rest was wont to sojourne and have dwellynge place. Thus witleste, thoughtull, sightlesse lokinge, I endure my penaunce in this derke prisonne, caist out of frendshippe and acquaintance, and forsaken of al that any worde dare speke. Straunge hath by way of intrucion made his home there me shoulde be, yf reson were herce as he shuld. Never the later yet hertly lady precious Margaret, have minde on thy servaunte, and thynke on his disese, howe lightly he lyveth, sith he the beemes burnende in love of thin eien am so bewet, that wouldest and cloude arwene us twy wol not fure myn hartes of hem to be enlumyned. Thinke that one vertue of a Margarite precious is amouges manye of them ther the sorowful to comforte, yet wil of that me sorowfull to comforte, is my luste to have nought els at this tyme, dede ne deth, ne no maner traveyle hath no power myne hert so moche to fade, as shulde to here of a twincklinge in your disese. Ah! God forbode that, but yet let me dey, let me sterue withouten any mesure of penaunce, rather than myne hertely thinking comfote in ought were disefed. What may my service aveile in absence of her, that my service shulde accepte? is this nat endeleffe sorowe to thinke? Yes, yes, God wote, myne hert breketh nie asonder; how should the ground without kindly noriture, bringen forth any frutes? How should a ship withouten a sterne in the grete Se be governed? how shold I withouten my blisse, my herte, my desire, my joye, my godenesse, endure in this contrarious prision, that thinke every houre in the daie an hundred Winter? Wel maie now Eve saine to me Adam, in sorowe fallen from welthe driven art thou out of Paradise, with swete thy sustenaunce to beswinke. Depe in this pinyng pitte with wo I ligge illocked, with chaines linked of care, and of tene. It is so hie from thens I lie, and the common yerth, there ne is cable in no land maked, that might stretche to me, to drawe me into blisse, ne steys to steye on is none, so that without recover endeleffe here to endure I wote well I purveide. O! where art thou nowe frendship, that sometyme with laughande chere madeft bothe face and countenaunce to me wardes? Trulye nowe arte thou wente out of rounne, but ever me thinketh, he wereth his olde clothes, and that the soule, in the whiche the life of frendship was in, is drawn out from his other spirites. Now then farewell, frendship, and farewell felawes, me thinketh ye all han taken your leve: no force of you all at ones.

But ladie of love, ye wote what I mene, yet think on thy servaunt, that for thy love spillesh, all thynges have I forsake, to solowen thine hestes: reward me with a thought, though ye doe naught els. Remembraunce of love lith so sore under my breste, that other thought cometh not in my mynde, but gladnesse to thanke on your godenesse, and your merie chere, frendnes, and sorowe to think on your wretche and your daunger, from whiche Christ me save. My grete joye it is to have in meditacions the bounties, the vertues, the nobley in you printed: sorowe and hel comen at ones, to suppose that I be veined. Thus with care, sorowe, and tene am I shapt min ende with deth to make. Now gode godely thinke on this.

O wretched fole that I am fallen into so lowe, the hete of my brenning tene hath me all defased: how should ye, Lady, set prise on so soule sith? My conning is thinne, my witte is exiled, like to a fole naturell am I comparifoned. Trulye ladie, but your mercie the more were, I wote well all my labor were in idell: your mercie than passeth right. God graunt that propoficion to be verifed in me, so that by trust of gode hope, I mowe come to the haven of ese! and sith it is impossible, the colours of youre qualities to chaunge, and forsoth I wote well, wemme ne spot maie not abide, there so noble vertue haboundeth, so that the defasyng to you is verily imaginable, as countenance of godenes with encrefing vertue, is so in you knit to abid by necessarie maner, yet if the rivers might fal, which is ayenst kinde, I woll well myn hert, ne should therefore naught flit, by the lestte point of Geometrie, so sadlie is it foned, that awaie from your service in love, maie he not departe. O love, when shall I ben plesed? O Charitie, when shall I ben efed? O gode godelie, when shall the Dice tourne? O still of vertue, do the chaunce of comforte upwarde to fall. O love, when wolt thou thinke on thy servaunt? I can no more, but here out cast of all welfare abide the daie of my deth, or els to se the sight that might all my wellynge sorowes voide, and of the flode make an ebbe. These diseses mowen well by duresse of sorowe make my life to unbodie, and so for to die: but certes, ye ladie in a full perfeccion of love ben so knitte with my soule, that deth maie not thilke knotte unbinde ne departe, so that ye and my soule together as endeleffe in blisse should dwel, and there shall my soule at the full ben efed, that he maie have your presence, to shewe the entent of his desires: Ah! dere God, that shall be a grete joye. Now yerthlie Goddesse, take regarde of thy servaunt, though I be feble, for thou art wont to praise them better, that would conserve in love, all be he full mender then kinges or princes, that woll not have that vertue in minde. Now precious Margarith, that with thy noble vertue hast drawn me into love firste, me wenying thereof to have blisse, as Galle and Aloes are so moche sprong, that favour of swetenesse maie I not atast; alas! that your benigne eyen, in which that mercie semeth to have all his noriture, n'll by no waie tourne the clerenesse of mercie to mewardes. Alas! that your brennande vertues, shynnyng emonges all folke, and enluminyng all other peple, by habundaunce of encrefing, sheweth to me but smoke, and no light. These thynges to thinke in myne herte, maketh every daie wepyng in myne eyen to renne. These ligen on my backe so sore, that importable burden me semeth on my backe to be charged, it maketh me backwarde to me, when my steppes by comon course even forthe pretende: These thynges also on right side and lefte have me so envolved with care, that wanhope of helpe is throughout me ronne truelie, and leve that gracelesse is my fortune, whiche that ever shieweth it mewardes by a cloudie disese, all redy to make stormes of tene, and the blisfull side halte still awaiward, and woll it not suffer to mewardes to turne: no force yet woll I not ben conquered.

O, alas! that your nobley so moche emong all other cretures commended by solowyng streame, by al maner vertues, but there ben wonderfull, I n'ot whiche that let the flode to come into my soul, wherfore purely mated with sorowe through sought, my self I crie on your godenes, to have pite on this caitife, that in the inrest degre of sorowe and disese is left, and without your godelic will, from any help and recovery. These sorowes maie I not sustene, but if my sorowe should be tolde, and to you wardes shewed, although moche space is betwene us twaine, yet me thynketh that by soche joleinyng wordes my disese ginneth eb. Truelie me thinketh that the sounne of my lamentacious wepyng is right now flowe into youre presence, and there crieth after mercie and grace, to whiche thyng me semeth The liste none answer to yeve, but with a deinous chere ye commaunded it to avoide, but God forbidde that any worde should of you spryng, to have so little ruth. Parde pite and mercie in every Margarith is closed by kinde, emonges many other vertues, by qualities of comforte, but comfort is to me right naught worthe, withouten mercie and pite of you alone, whiche thynges hastily God me graunt for his mercie.

Retherfing these thynges and many other, without time or moment of rest, me semed for anguifhe of disese that all together I was ravished, I can not tell how, but wholly al my passions and felynges weren loste, as it semed for the time, and sodainly a maner of drede light in me al at ones, nought soche fere as folke have of an enemy, that were mightie, and would hem greve, or doen hem disese: for I

trouwe this is well knowe to many persones that other-while if a man be in his Soveraine's presence, a maner of ferdnesse crepeth in his hert, not for harme, but of godelic subjeccion: namelic as men reden that Aungelles ben aferde of our saviour in heven. And parde there he is, ne maie no passion of disese be, but it is to mene, that Aungelles ben adradde, not by frendnes of drede, sithen thei ben perfittly blissed, as affection of wonderfulness, and by service of obedience; soche ferde also han these lovers in presence of ther loves, and subiectes aforne their soveraines: right so with ferdnesse mine hert was caught, and I sodainlie astonied; there entered into the place, there I was lodged, a ladie, the semeliche and moſte godelie to my sight, that ever to forne appeared to any creature, and trulie in the blustering of her loke she yave gladnesse and comforte sodainly to all my wittes, and right so she doeth to every wight, that cometh in her presence. And for she was so godelie (as me thought) mine herte began somdele to be embolded, and went a little hardie to speke, but yet with a quakyng voice as I durst, I salued her, and enquired what she was, and why she so worthie to sight dained to enter into so foule a dongeon, and namely a prison, without leve of my keepers. For certes, although the vertue of dedes of mercie stretchen to visiten the pore prisoners, and hem after that faculties ben had to comforte, me semed that I was so ferre fallen into miserie and wretched hid caritiffnesse, that me should no precious thing neigh: and also that for my sorowe every wight should ben hevie, and wishe my recovery. But when this lady had somdele apperceived, as well by my wordes, as by my chere, what thought busied me within, with a gode womanlie countenance she said these wordes: O my norie, wenest thou that my manner be, to foryet my frendes, or my servauntes? Naie (qð she), it is my full intent to visite and comfort all my frendshippes and alies, as well in tyme of perturbation, as of moſte propertie of blisse, in me shall unkindnesse never be founden. And also sithen I have so fewe especial true, now in these daies, wherefore I maie well at more leisir come to hem that me deser-ven, and if my comyng maie in any thyng availe, were well I woll come often.

Now godeladie (qð I) that art so faire on to loke, rinyng home by thy wordes, blisse of paradise aine thy lokynges, joye and comfort are thy movinges, What is thy name? How is it that in you is so mokenell working vertues enpight, as me semeth, and in non other creature, that ever sawe I with mine eyen? My disciple (qð she) me wondreth of thy wordes and on The, that for a little disese hast foryetten my name. Wost thou not well that I am Love, that firste The brought to thy service? O gode Ladie (qð I) is this worship to The, or to thyne excellence, for to come into so foule a place? Parde sometime tho I was in prosperitie, and with forain godes envolved I had mokil to doon to draw The to mine hostell, and yet many werninges thou madest, ere thou list fullie to graunt thine home to make at my dwelling place: and now thou comest godelie by thine own vise, to comfort me with words, and so therethrough I ginne remember on passed gladnes. Trulie ladie I ne wot whether I shall saie welcome or none, sithen thy comyng woll as moche doe me tene and sorowe, as gladnesse and mirth: se why. For that me comforteth to thinke on passed gladnesse, that me annoyeth est to be in doing. Thus thy comyng both glad-deth and teneth, and that is cause of moche sorowe: lo! Ladie, how then I am comforted by your coming, and with that I gan in teres to distill, and tenderhe wepe. Now certes (qð Love) I se well (and that me overthinketh) that wit in The faileth, and art in point to dote. Trulie (qð I) that have ye maked, and that ever wol I rue. Wottest thou not well (qð she) that every Shepherde ought by reson to seke his sperkel and shepe that arne ron into wildernesse, among bushes and perils, and hem to ther pasture ayen bryng, and take of hem privie bulie cure on keping? And tho the unconning Shepe scattred would ben lost renning to wildernesse, and to desertes drawe, or els woulde put hem self to the swallowyng Wolfe, yet shall the Shepherde, by businesse and travaile, so put him forthe, that he shall not let him be lost by no waie. A gode shepherd putteth rather his life to ben lost for his shepe.

But for thou shalt not wene me being of werse condicion, trulie for everiche of my folke, and for all tho that to mewarde be knit in any condicion, I woll rather die than suffre hem through error to ben spilt. For me list, and it me liketh, of all myne a Shepherdesse to be cleped. Wost thou not well, I failed never wight, but he me refused, and would negligent go with unkindnesse? And yet parde, have I many soche holpe and releved, and thei have ofte me begiled, but ever at th' ende it disceded in ther own neekes. Haste thou not radde, howe kinde I was to Paris, Priamus sonne of Troie? How Jason me salued for all his fals behest? How Caesar sonke, I tefte it for no tene, till he was troned in my blis for his service. What (qð she) moſte of all, maked I not a lovedaie bitwene God and mankind, and chese a maide to be nonper, to put the quarell at ende? Lo, how I have travailed to have thanke on all sides! and yet list me not to reſte, and I might finde on whom I should werche. But trulie mine own disciple, because I have The sounde at all allais in thy will to be redie mine hestles to have followed, and hatte ben true to that Margarite Perle that ones I The shewed, and she alwaie ayenward hath made but dangerous chere, I am come in proper persone to put The out of errours, and make The glad by waies of reſen, so that sorow ne disese shal no more hereafter The amastrie. Wherthrough I hope, thou shalt lightlie com to the grace, that thou longe haste desired, of this Jewell. Haste thou not herd many ensamples, how I have comforted and releved the ſervitors of my lo? Who hath worthied kinges in the felde? Who hath honoured ladies in boure, by a perpetuall m of their truth in my service? Who hath caused the folke to voide vice and shame? Who hath red-citees and reimes in prosperitie? If The list clepe ayen thyne old remembraunce, thou condest every pointe of this declare in especiall, and saie that I thy mai-stres have be cause, causyng these thynges, and many mo other.

Now iwis Madame (qð I) all these thynges I knowe well my self, and that thyne excellence passeth the understanding of us bestes, and that no manne's witte yerthlie maie comprahende thy vertues. Well then (qð she) for I se The in disese and sorowe, I wote well thou art one of myne nories, I maie not suffer The so to make sorowe, thine owne self to stender: but I my self come to be thy fere, thine hely charge to make to ſeme the lark, for wo is him that is alone: And to the sory to ben oned by a sorowfull wight it is grete gladnes. Right so with my sicke fiendes I am sicke, and with sorie I cannot els but sorowe make, till when I have hem releved, in soche wise that gladnesse in a maner of counterpaifing shall restore as mokell in joye, as the passed helmette biforne did in tene. And also (qð she) when any of my servauntes ben alone in solitarie place, I have yet ever busied me to be with hem, in comfort of ther hertes, and taught hem to make songes of plainte and of blis, and to enditen letters of Rhetorike, in quent under-standinges, and to bethinke hem in what wise thei might beste ther Ladies in gode service please, and also to lerne maner in countenaunce, in wordes, and in beryng, and to ben meke and lowlie to every wight, his name and fame to encrese, and to yeve grete yestes and large, that his renome maie spryngen; but The thereof have I excused, for thy losse and thy grete costages, wherethrough thou arte nedie, arne nothing to me unknowen, but I hope to God sometime it shal ben amended, as thus, as I saied. In norture have I taught al mine, and in curtesie made hem expert, ther Ladies hertes to winne, and if any would be deinous, or proude, or be envious, or of wretches acquaintaunce, hasteliche have soche voided out of my schole: for all vices trulie I hate: vertues and worthinesse in all my power I avaunce.

Ah worthie creature! (q<sup>d</sup> I) and by iuste cause, the name of Goddes dignely ye mow bere: in The lithe the grace, through whiche any cature in this worlde hath any godenesse, truly all maner of blisse, and preciousnesse in vertue out of The springen, and wellen, as brokes and rivers proceden from ther sprynges, and like as all waters by kinde drawen to the Se, so all kindly thinges threten by ful appetite of desire to drawe after thy steppes, and to thy presence aproche, as to ther kindlie perfeccion; how dare then bestes in this world aught forsere ayenst thy Divine purveighaunce? Also lady ye krowen all the privie thoughtes, in hertes no counsaile maie ben hidde from your knowyng. Wherefore I wote well, Ladie, that ye knowe your self, that I in my conscience am, and have ben willyng to your service, all conde I never doe as I should, yet forsothe fained I never to love otherwise then was in myne herte: and if I could have made chere to one, and ithought an other, as many other doen aldaie afore myne eyen, I trowe it would not me have vailed. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) haddest thou so doen, I would not now have The here visted. Ye wete well Ladie eke (q<sup>d</sup> I) that I have not plaid racket, Nettle in, Docks out, and with the Wethercocke wared, and truely there ye me sette by accorde of my conscience, I would not slie till ye and reason by aperte strength maden myne herte to tourne.

In gode faithe (q<sup>d</sup> she) I have knowe The ever of tho condicions, and sithen thou wouldest (in as moche as in The was) amade me privie of thy counsaill, and judge of thy conscience, tho I forsoke it in tho daies, till I sawe better my tyme, would never God that I should now faile, but ever I woll be redie, witnessyng thy sothe, in what place that ever I shall ayenst al tho that woll the contrary sustene, and for as moche as to me is naught unknowen, ne hid of thy privie herte, but all haste thou tho thynges made to me open at the full, that hath caused my comyng in to this prison, to voide the webbes of thine eyen, to make The clerely to se the errours thou haste ben in; and bicause that men ben of divers condicions, some adradde to saie a sothe, and some for a sothe anone redie to fight, and also that I maie not my self ben in place, to withsaie thilke men that of The speken otherwise then the sothe, I woll and charge The in vertue of obedience, that thou to me owest, to witten my wordes, and set hem in writynges, that thei mowe as my witnessyng ben noted among the peple. For bokes witten neither dreden ne shaming, ne strive comen, but onely shewen the entente of the writer, and yeve remembraunce to the herer: and if any woll in thy presence saie any thinge to tho writers, loke boldlie, trust on Mars to answere at the ful. For certes, I shal him enforme of all the trouthe in thy love, with thy conscience, so that of his helpe thou shalt not varie at thy nede. I trowe the strongest and the best that maie be founde, woll not transverse thy wordes, whereof then wouldest thou drede?

GRetelie was, I tho gladded of these wordes, and as who faith, wexen somede leight in hert, bothe for th' auctoritie of witnessse, and also of sikernes: of helpe of the foresaied behests, and said. Truly, ladie, now am I well gladded, through comforte of your wordes: be it now likyng unto your nobly to shewe, whiche folke defame your servauntes, sith your service oughte above all other thynges to ben commended. Yet (q<sup>d</sup> she) I se well thy soule is not al out of the amased cloude: The were better to here thing, that The might light out of thyne hevie charge, and after knowyng of thyne owne helpe, then to stirre swete wordes, and soche resons to here: for in a thoughtfull soule (and namely soch one as thou art) woll not yet soche thinges sinken. Come of therefore, and let me seen thy hevie charge, that I maie the lightlier for thy comfort purveigh.

Now certes ladie (q<sup>d</sup> I) the moste comfort I might have, were utterlie to wete me be sure in hertes of that Margarite I serve, and so I thinke to doen with all mightes, while my life durerst. Then (q<sup>d</sup> she) maicste thou thereafter, in soche wise that mispleaunce ne entre? In gode faithe (q<sup>d</sup> I) there shall no mispleaunce be caused, through trespass on my side. And I doe The to weten (q<sup>d</sup> she) I sette never yet persone to serve in no place (but if he caused the contrary, in defaultes and trespasses) that he ne sped of his service. Myne owne yerthly ladie (q<sup>d</sup> I tho) and yet remember to your worthinesse how long sithen, by many revolving of yeres, in tyme when October his leve ginneth take, and November sheweth hym to sight, when Bernes ben full of godes, as is the Nutte on every halke, and then gode londe-tillers ginneth shape for the yerth with grete travaile to bryng forthe more Corne, to manne's sustenaunce, ayenst the next yeres folowing; In soche tyme of plentie, he that hath an home, and is wise, liste not to wander mervailles to seche, but he be constrained or excited: oft the lothe thing is doen, by excitation of other manne's opinion, whiche woulde faine have myne abidyng, take in herte of luste to travaile, and se the windyng of the yerth, in that tyme of Winter, by wodes that large stretes werne in, by small pathes, that swine and hogges hadden made, as lanes with ladels rher maste to seche, I walked thinkyng alone, a wonder grete while, and the grete bestes that the wode haunten, and adorneth al maner forestes, and herdes gone to wilde: then ere I was ware, I neighed to a Se banke, and for ferde of the bestes, shipcraft I cride: for ladie I trowe ye wete well your self, nothyng is werse then the bestes that shoulde ben tame, if thei catche ther wildenesse, and ginne again waxe ramage: thus forsothe was I aferde, and to Shippe me hied. Then were there inow to lache myne handes, and drawe me to Shippe, of whiche many I knewe well the names. Sight was the firste, Luste was an other, Thought was the thirde, and Will eke was there a Master: these broughten me within borde, of this Shippe of travaile. So when the saile was sprad, and this Shippe gan to move, the Winde and Water gan for to rise, and overtwhartlie to tourne the Welken, the waves semeden as thei kisse together, but often under colour of killyng is mokell olde hate privelie closed and kepte. The storme so straungelic, and in a devouryng manner ganne so faste us assaile, that I supposed the date of my deth should have made there his ginning, now up, now down, now under the wave, and now above was my shippe a grete while. And so by mokell duresse of wethers, and of stormes, and with grete avowyng pilgrimages, I was driven to an Ile, where utterlie I wend first to have be rescowed, but truelie at the firste beginnyng, it semed me so perilous the haven to catch, that but through grace I had ben comforted, of life I was full dispaired. Truelie

Ladie,

Ladie, if ye remember a right of all maner thynges, your self came hastelie to seene us Se-driven, and to wete what we weren: but firste ye were deinous of chere, after whiche ye gon better alight, and ever as me thought, ye lived in grete drede of disese, it seemed so by your chere. And when I was certified of your name, the lenger I loked in you, the more I you godelie dradde, and ever myne herte on you opened the more, and so in a little tyme, my Shippe was out of mynde. But ladie, as ye me lad I was ware bothe of bestes and of fishes a grete number throngyng together: among whiche a Muskell in a blew shell had enclosed a Margarite Perle, the moste precious, and best that ever tofore came in my sighte, and ye tolden your self, that ilke jewell in his kinde was so gode and so vertuous, that her better should I never finde, all sought I thereafter to the worlde's ende, and with that I helde my pece a grete while: and ever sithen I have me bethought on the man, that sought the precious Margarites, and when he had founden one to his likyng, he solde all his gode to buy that jewell: I wis thought I, and yet so I think, now have I founden the jewell that mine herte desireth, whereto should I seche further! trulie nowe woll I stinte, and on this Margarite I sette me for ever. Now then also, sithen I wiste well it was your will, that I should to soche a service me take, and so to desire that thyng, of whiche I never have blisse, there liveth none but he hath disese: your might then that brought me to soch service, that to me is cause of sorrow and of joy, I wonder of your worde that ye faine to bringen men into joye, and parde ye wot well that defaute ne trespase maie not resonable ben put to me wardes, as ferre as my conscience knoweth: but of my disese me liste now a while to speke, and to informe you in what maner of blisse ye have me throng. For truly I wene that all gladnesse, all joye, and all mirth is bestet under lock, and the keye throwe in soche place, that it maie not be found: my brenning who hath altered all my hewe. When I should slepe, I walowe and I thinke, and me disporte. Thus combred, I seme that all folke had me mased. Also ladie mine, desire hath long dured, some spekyng to have, or els at the leste have ben enmoised with sight: and for wantyng of these thynges, my mouthe would, and he durste, pleine right fore sithen evils for my godenesse, arne manifold to me holden. I wonder, Lady, truely, save evermore your reverence howe ye mowe for shame soche thynges suffer on your servaunte, to be so multiplied: wherefore kneeling with a lowe herte I praie you to rue on this caitife, that of nothyng now maie serve. Gode ladie, if you liste, now your help to me shew, that am of your priviest servauntes, at all assaies in this tyme, and under your wings of proteccion. No helpe to mewardes is shapen, how shall then straungers in any wise after succour loke, when I that am so privie, yet of helpe I do faile? Further maie I not, but thus in this prisone abide: what bondes and chaines me holden, Ladie, ye se well your self? A reniant forjudged hath not halfe the care. But thus sighyng and sobbyng I waile here alone, and n'ere it for comforte of your presence, right here would I sterve. And yet a little am I gladded, that so godelie soche grace and none hadde I hente, graciouslie to finde the precious Margarite, that all other leste, men should buie, if thei should therefore sell al ther substance. Wo is me! that so many let-games, and purpose brekers ben maked waiters, soche prisoners as I am evermore to overlake and to hinder, and for soche lettours it is harde any soche jewell to winne. Is this, lady, an honour to thy deitie? Me thinketh by right, soche peple should have no maistrise, ne ben overlokers over none of thy servauntes. Truely were it lesfull unto you, to all the Goddes would I plaine that ye rule your Divine purveighaunce amonges your servauntes nothing as ye should. Also Lady my noble is insuffisaunte to countervail the price of this jewell, or els to make th' eschaunge: eke no wight is worthie soche perles to were, but Kynges or Princes, or els their peers: This jewell for vertue would adorne and make faire all a relme, the nobley of vertue is so moche that her godenesse over all is commended. Who is it that would not waile, but he might soche riches have at his wille? the vertue thereof out of this prisone maie me deliver, and nought els. And if I be not there thorowe holpen I se my self withouten recovery: although I might hence voide, yet would I not, I would abide the daie, that destenie hath me ordeined, which I suppose is withoute amendement, so fore is myne herte bounden, that I maie thinken none other. Thus strait (Ladie) hath sir Daunger laced me in flockes, I leve it be not your will: and for I se you taken so little hede, as me thinketh, and woll not maken by your might, the vertue in mercie of the Margarite on me for to stretch, so as ye mowe wel, in case that you list, my blisse and my mirth arne felde, sickenesse and sorowe ben alwaie redie, the cope of tene is wounde about all my bodie, that standyng is me beste, unneith maie I ligge for pure miserie sorowe, and yet al this is little inough to be the earnest silver, in forward of this bargaine, for treblefolde so mokell muste I suffer, ere tyme come of myne ese. For he is worthie no welth, that maie no wo suffer. And certes, I am hevie to thinke on these thynges, but who shall yeve me water inough to drinke, lest mine eyen drie for rennyng stremes of teres? Who shall waile with me myne own happie heviness? Who shall counsaile me now in my likyng tene, and in my godelie harte? I n'ot. For ever the more I brenne, the more I covete: the more that I sorowe, the more thrust I in gladnesse. Who shall then yeve me a contrarious drinke, to slaunch the thrust of my blisfull bitternes? Lo thus I brenne, and I drenche, I shiver and swete; to this reversed yvel was never yet ordeined salve, forsoth al liches ben unconninge, save the Margarite alone, any soche remedy to pivey.

And wyth these wordes I brasle out to wepe, that every tere of myne eyen for gretnesse seemed they boren out the bal of my syght, and that al the water hadde ben out ronne. Than thought me, that love gan a litel to hevye for myscomforte of my chere, and gan soberly and in esy maner speke, wel avising what she said. Comenly the wise speken esylie and softe for many skilles: One is, ther wordes are the better beleved, and also in esy spekyng avisement men may catche what to put forthe, and what to holden in. And also the auctoritie of esye wordes is the more, and eke they yeven the more understanding to other intencion of the mater. Ryght so this ladye esily and in a softe manere gan say these wordes.

Mervaille (quod she) gret it is, that by no maner of semblaunt, as ferre as I can espie, thou lyfle not to have any reconr, but ever thou plainest and sorowest, and wayes of remedie for solishe wilfulnesse. The liste not to seche: but enquire of thy nexte frendes, that is thyne inwitte, and me that have ben thy maistrisse, and the reconr and syne of thy disese, for of disese is gladnesse and joye, with a ful vessel so helded, that it quenbeth the feling of the first tenes. But thou that were wonte not onely these thynges remembre in thyne herte, but also soles therof to enfourmen, in adnulling of ther errours, and destroyinge of ther derke opinions, and in comfort of ther fere thoughtes, nowe canste thou not ben comforte of thine owne soule, in thinkinge of these thynges. O where haste thou be so long commensal, that haste so mikel eten of the potages of foryetfulness, and dronken so of ignorance, that the oide souking, whiche thou haddest of me, arne amaisred and lorne fro al maner of knowinge? O this is a worthy persone to helpe other, that can not counsaile him selfe. And with these wordes for pure and strong shame I wox al red.

And she than seinge me so astonied by divers foundes sodainly (whiche thyng kynde hateth) gan deliciously me comforte with sugred wordes, putting me in ful hope that I shulde the Margarite getten, if I folowed her hertes, and gan with a faire clothe to wipen the teres that hyngen on my chekes: and than said I in this wise. Now welles of wisdom and of all welthe, withouten The may nothyng ben lerned, thou berest the keies of all privy thynges. In vaine traivale men to catche anye stedship, but if ye, lady, firste the locke unshet, ye, lady, lerne us the waies and the bypathes to heaven: ye, lady, maken all the heavenly bodies godely and benignely to done ther course, that governen us bestes here on erthe: Ye armen your servauntes ayenst al debates, with imperciable harnais, ye seten in ther hertes insuperable blode of hardinesse, ye leden hem to the parfitte gode. Yet al thing desireth, ye werne no man of helpe, that wele done your lore, graunt me now a litell of your grace, all my sorowes to cese. Myne own servaunt (q<sup>d</sup> she) trewly thou sittest nie myne herte, and thy badde chere gan sorely me greve: but amonge thy plaining wordes, me thought thou allegest thynges to be letting of thine helping, and thy grace to hinder, wherthrough me thinketh that wanhope is crope through thine hert: God forbid that nile unthristie thought should come in thy mynde thy wittes to trouble, sithen every thyng in comynge is contingent, wherfore make no more thy propofytion by an impossible. But nowe I pray The reherse me ayen tho thynges, that thy myltrust causen, and thilke thynges I thinke by reson to destroyen, and put full hope in thine herte. What understandest thou there (q<sup>d</sup> she) by that thou saidest, many legames are thin overlokers? And also by that, thy moebie is insuffisaunt? I n<sup>o</sup>t what thou therof menest.

Trewly (q<sup>d</sup> I) by the first, I say that janglers evermore anne spekinge, rather of evyll than of gode, for every age of man rather enclineth to wickednesse, than any godenesse to avaunce. Also false wordes springen so wide, by the sterynge of false lyinge tonges, that fame als swyttly flieth to ther eres, and, and saithe many wicked tales, and as sone shal falsenesse ben leved as trouthe, for all his grete sothenesse. Now by that other (q<sup>d</sup> I) me thinketh thilke jewel so precious, that to no soch wretche as I am wolde vertue therof extende, and also I am to feble in worldely joyes, any soche jewell to contrevaille. For soche peple that worldely joyes han at ther will, ben sette at the highest degre, and moste in reverence ben accepted, for false weninge maketh felicity therein to be supposed: but soche caytives as I am evermore ben hindred. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) take gode hede, and I shal by reson to The shewen, that all these thynges mowe not let thy purpose, by the lest point that any wight coude pricke.

REmembreth nat (q<sup>d</sup> she) ensample is one of the strongest maner, as for to preve a manne's purpose. Than yf I nowe by ensample endure The to any propoficion, is it nat proved by strength? Yes forsothe (q<sup>d</sup> I). Well (q<sup>d</sup> she) raddeste thou never howe Paris of Troye and Helen loved togiðer, and yet had they not entrecomuned of speche? Also Acrisius shete Danae his doughter in a tour, for fuerie that no wight shulde of her have no maistrise in my service, and yet Jupiter by sygnes without any spech had al his purpose ayenst her father's will. And many soche mo have ben knitte in trouthe, and yet spake they never togiðer, for that is a thinge enclosed under secretenes of privitie, why twey persons entremellen hertes after a sight. The power in knowing of soche thynges so preve shal nat alutterly be yeven to you bestes, for manye thynges in soche precious matters ben reserved to judgement of divine purveiaunce, for amonge lyving peple by manne's consideracion moun they not be determined. Wherfore I saye, all the envye, al the jangling, that welny peple upon my servauntes maken este, is rather cause of espolite, than of any hindringe. Why than (q<sup>d</sup> I) suffre ye soche wronge, and moun when ye list lightly all soche yvels abate? me semeth to you it is a gret unwurship. O (q<sup>d</sup> she) holde nowe thy pece, I have founden to many that han ben to me unkind, that trewly I woll suffre every wyght in that wise to have disese, and who that continueth to the end wel and trewly, hem wol I helpen, and as for one of mine into blyss to wende; as marcial doing in Grece; Who was yecrowned? by God, nat the strongest, but he that rathest come and lengest abode and continued in the journey, and spared nat to traivale as longe as the play lest. But thilke person that profereth him nowe to my service, theryn is a while, and anon voideth and redy to another, and of nowe one he thinketh, and nowe another, and into water entreth, and anon respireth, soche one liste me nat into persite blisse of my servyce bring. A tre oft set in divers places woll not by kinde endure to brynge forth fruites. Loke nowe I pray The, howe myne olde servauntes of tyme passed continued in ther service, and solow thou after ther steppes, and thanne might thou not faile, in case thou worche in this wise.

Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) it is nothyng lich, this world to tyme passed, eke this cowntre hath one maner, and another cowntre hath another. And so maie not a man alwaye put to hys eye the salve that he heled with his hele. For this is sothe, betwyxe two thynges liche ofte diversite is required. Now (q<sup>d</sup> she) that is sothe, diversite of natyon, dyversite of lawe, as was maked by many resons, for that diversyte cometh in by the contrarious malice of wicked peple, that han envious hertes ayenst other. But trewly my law to my servauntes ever hath ben in generall, whiche maie not faile; for right as manne's law, that is ordeined by manie determinacions, may not be knowe for gode or badde, tyl assay of the peple han proved it, and to what end it draweth, and than it sheweth the necessite therof, or els the impossibilite, right so the law of my servauntes so wel hath ben proved in general, that hitherto hath it not failed. Wiste thou not well that all the lawe of kinde is my lawe, and by God ordained and stablised to dure by kinde reson? wherfore al law by manne's witte purveid ought to be underputte to lawe of kinde, whiche yet hath be commune to every kinde-ly creature, that my statutes and my lawe that ben kyndely, arne generall to all peples. Olde doinges, and by many turninges of yeres used, and with the peple's maner proved, mowen not so lightly ben defased, but newe doinges contrariauntes soche old often causen diseses and breken many purposes.

Yet saie I nat therfore, that ayen new mischefe men should not ordaine a newe remedye, but alway loke it contrary not the olde no farther than the malice stretcheth. Than foloweth it, the olde doinges in love han ben universall, as for moste espolite, forthi used: Wherfore I wold not yet that of my lawes norhinge be adnulled.

But thanne to thy purpose, soche jangelers and lookers, and waiters of games, if thei thinke in ought they they mowe dere, yet love wel alway, and sette 'hem at nought, and lette thy porte ben lowe in every wightes presence, and redie in thine herte to mainteine that thou hast begone, and a litell The faine with mekenesse in wordes, and thus with sleight shalt thou surmounte and dequace the yvell in ther hertes. And wisdomes yet is to seme flye other while there a manne woll fight. Thus with soche thynges, the tonges of yvell shal ben stilled: els fully to graunte thy full mening, forsothe ever was and ever it shall be, that mine enemies ben aferde to trust to any fighting: and therefore have thou no cowarde's herte in my service, no more than somtime thou haddest in the contrarye, for if thou drede soche janglers thy viage to make: understand wel, that he that dredeth any rain to sowe his comes, he shall have thin bernis, also he that is aferde of his clothes, let him daunce naked. Wlo nothings undertaketh, and namelie in my service, nothings achieveth. After grete stormes the wether is often mery and smoth. After moche clattering there is morkill rowninge: thus after jangling wordes cometh hushite, pece and be still. O gode lady (q<sup>d</sup> I than) se now how seven yere passed and more, have I grafted and groubed a vine, and with al the waies that I coude, I sought to afede me of the grape, but fruit have I non founde. Also I have this seven yere served Laban to awedded Rachel his doughter, but blere-eyed Leah is brought to my bedde, whiche alway engendreth my tene, and is full of children in tribulacion and in care: and although the clippinges and kyslynges of Rachell shoulde seme to me swete, yet is she so baraine, that gladnesse ne joye by no way wol springe, so that I may wepe with Rachel, I may not ben counsailed with solace, sithen issue of men hertely desire is failed. Nowe than I pray that to me sone freedom and grace, in this eight yere, this eyghterh mow to me bothe be kynreste and masseday after these seven werke daies of travail, to folow the christen lawe: and what ever ye do ells, that thilke Margarite be holden so lady in your pryvy chambre, that she in this case, to none other perion be committed. Loke than (q<sup>d</sup> she) in this case to none other persone be committed, loke than (q<sup>d</sup> she) thou persever in my service, in whiche I have The grounded, that thilke skorne in thy enemies mowe thus on thy person be not forhed: lo! this man began to edifie, but for his foundement is bad, to the ende maye he it nat bring. For mekenesse in countenance, with a manly herte in dedes and in longe countinace, is the conifance of my livery, to al my retinue delivered. What wenest thou that me lyst avaunce soche persones as loven the firste sittinges at festes, the higheste stoles in churches, and in hal, loutinges of peuples in markettes and faires, unstedfaste to byde in one place any while togiðer, wenyng his owne wit more excellent than other, scorning al maner devise but his owne: Nay, nay, God wor, these shul nothing parten of my blyss. Truly my maner heretofore hath ben worship with my blisse, Lions in the felde, and lambes in chambre, Egles at altaute, and maidens in hal, Foxes in counsaile, stil in ther dedes, and ther protection is graunted redy to ben a bridge, and ther baner is arered like wolves in the felde. Thus by these wayes shul men ben avannced: ensample of David that from keping of shepe was drawn up into the order of kingly governaunce, and Jupiter from a boie to ben Europe's fere, and Julius Cesar from the lowest degre in Rome, to be maister of al erthly princes, and Aeneas from hell, to be kynge of the countre there Rome is now stonde. And so to The I say thy grace by bering thereafter maye set The in soch plight, that no jangling may greve the lest tucke of thy hemmes, that all ther janggles is nought to counte at a cresse in thy disavauntage.

EVer (q<sup>d</sup> she) hath the peple in this worlde desired to have had grete name in worthinesse, and hated soule to bere any fame, and that is one of the objections thou alegest to be ayen thin hertely desire. Ye forsothe (q<sup>d</sup> I) and that so comenly the peple wol lye a d bringe aboute soche enfame. Now (q<sup>d</sup> she) if men with lesinges put on The enfame, wenest thy self thereby ben enpeired? that wenyng is wrong, se why, for as moch as they lien, thy merite encreseth, and thei make The ben more worthy to 'hem that knowen of The the sothe, by what thing thou art apeired, that in to morkil thou arte encrefed of thy beloved frendes: and sithely a wounde of thy frend is to The litle harme, ye sir, and better than a false kyslyng in disceivable glosyng of thin enemy, above that than to be wel with thy frende maketh soch enfame, exgo, thou art encrefed and nat apeired. Lady (q<sup>d</sup> I) somtyme yet if a man be in disese, th' estimation of the envious peple ne loketh nothing to desertes of men, ne to the merites of ther doynge, but onely to the aventure of fortune, and thereafter they yeven ther sentence. And some loke the voluntary wil in his herre, and thereafter telleth his judgement, not taking hede to refon ne to the qualyte of the doing, as thus. If a man be riche and fulfille with worldly welfulnesse, some commenden it, and faine it is so lente by julle cause, and he that hath adversite, they faine he is wicked, and hath deserved thilke anoie. The contrarye of these thinges some men holden also, and sain that to the rich prosperite is purvaied into his confusion, and upon this matter, many autorites of many and grete-witted clerkes they alegen. And some men sayne, though all gode estimation forsaken tolke that han adversite, yet is it merite and encrese of hys blisse; so that these purposes arne so wonderful in understandinge, that trewly for mine adversite, nowe I n'ot how the sentence of the indifferent peple wyll judgen my fame. Therefore (q<sup>d</sup> she) if anye wight shulde yeve a trew sentence on soche matters, the cause of the disese maist thou se well, understande therupon after what ende it drawethe, that is to sayne gode or bade, to ought it to have his fame by godenesse, enfame by baddenesse: for every resonable persone, and namelye of a wise man, his witte ought not without reson to forme herde, sodainly in a matter to juge. After the sayes of the wise, thou shalt not juge ne d. me toforme thou knowe. Lady (q<sup>d</sup> I) ye remembre wel that in molle laude and praisyng of certain saintes in holy church, is to reheren ther conversation some badde into gode, and that is to rehered, as by a perpetuall myroure of remembrance in wurshiping of tho saintes, and gode ensample to other misdoers in amendement. How turned the Romaine zedeories fro the Romaines, to be with Haniball ayenst his kind nacion: And afterwarde him semyng the Romaines to be at the next degre of confusion, turned to his olde aies, by wole witte after was Hanibal discombed. Wherefore to enfourme you lady, the manner, why I mene, se now in my youth I was drawe to be assentant, and in my mightes helping to certayne conjurations, and other grete matters of rulyng of citizins, and thylke thinges ben my drawers in, and extours to the matters werne so painted and coloured, that at the prime face, me semed them noble and glorious to al the peple: I than wenyng mykell merite have detened in furthering and maintenance of tho thinges, besyded and laboured with all my diligence, in wenyng of thilke matters to the ende. And trewly, lady, to tell you the sothe, me rong' a lot of any true of the mighty senatours in thilke cite, ne of communes malice, for two skilles: One was I had comforte to ben in soche plite, that both profite were to me and to my frendes. Another was, for common profite in comunaltie is not but pece and tranquillite with just governaunce proceden from thilke profite, sithen by counsaile of mine inwitte, me thought the first painted thinges, malice and evyll meninge, withouten any gode availinge to anye peple, and of tyrannye purposed, and so for pure sorrowe and of my medlyng, and badde infame that I was in ronne, tho teres lashed out of myne eyen, were thus awaye washe, thanne the under hydde malice and the rancoure of purposinge envie fornicall and ymaged, in distruction of mokil peple, shewed so openly, that had I ben blinde, with mine handes all the circumstance I might well have feled.

Nowe than tho persones that soch thinges have caste to redresse, for wrathe of my firste meddlyng, shopen me to dwel in this pynande prision, tyll Lachesis my threde no lenger woulde tweyne. And ever I was sought, if me lyfte to have grace of my lyfe, and frenesse of that prision, I shulde openly confesse howe pece might ben endused to enden al the firste rauncours. It was fullie supposyd my knowinge to be ful in tho matters. Than lady I thought that every man that by any waye of ryght, ryghtfully done, maye helpe any comune helpe to ben saved, whiche thing to kepe above all thinges I am holde to mayntaine, and namely in distroyng of a wrong, al shulde I therthrough enpeche myne owne fere, if he wer guilty, and to do misdede assentaunt, and maiester ne frende maye nought availe, to the soule of hym that in falsenesse deyeth, and also that I nere desired wrathe of the peple, ne indignacion of the worthy, for nothinge that ever I wrought or dyd, in anye doinges my selfe els, but in the maintenaunce of these foresaid errours, and in hydyng of the privities thereof.

And that al the peples hertes holding on the errours side weren blinde and of elde so ferforthe begiled, that debate and strife they maintained, and in distruction on that other side, by whiche cause the pece, that moste in comunaltie should be desired, was in pointe to be broken and adnulled. Also the cytye of London, that is to me so dere and swete, in whiche I was forth growen, and more kindly love have I to that place, than to any other in yerth, as every kindly cature hath full appetite to that place of his kindly engendrure, and to wilne reste and pece in that stede to abyde: thilke pece should thus there have ben broken, and of al wise it is commended and desired. For knowe thyng it is, all men that desiren to comen to the parfite pece everlasting, muste the pece by God commended bothe maintaine and kepe. This pece by angels voice was confirmed, our God entrynge in this worlde. This as for his testament he lefte to al his frendes, when he retourned to the place from whence he came: This his Apostell admonesteth to holden, without whiche man parfity may have none insight. Also this God by his comynge made not pece alone betwene heavenly and yerthely bodies, but also among us on yerth so he pece confirmed, that in one hied of love one body we should persourme. Also I remembre well howe the name of Athenes was rather after the God of pece, than of bataile, shewing that pece moste is necessarie to comunalties and cytyes. I than so stered by al these wayes toforne nempned, declared certain pointes in this wise. First that thilke persons that hadden me drawn to ther purposes, and me not witting the privy entent of ther meninge drawn also the feblewitted peple, that have none insight of gubernatife prudence, to clamure and to crie on matters that they stired, and under pointes for commune avauntage, they enbolded the passife to take in the active's doying, and also stired innocentes of comynge to crie after thinges, whiche (q̃d they) maye not stand but we ben executours of tho matters, and auctorite of execucion by comen eleccion to us be delyvered, and that muste enter by strength of your maintenaunce, for we out of soch degre put, oppression of these oldehindrers shal againe surmouren and putten you in soche subjection, that in endlesse wo ye shul complaine. The governementes (q̃d thei) of your cite left in the handes of torcencious citezins shal bring in pestilence and distruction to you gode menne, and therefore let us have the comune administration to abate soche yvelles. Also (q̃d they) it is worthy the gode to commende, and the guilty desertes to chastice. There ben citezins many for ferde of execucion that shall be done, for extorcions by hem committed, ben evermore ayenst these purposes, and al other gode meninges. Never the latter ladie, trewly the meninge under these wordes was fully to have apeched the mighty senatours, whiche hadden hevie herte for the misgovernance that they seen. And so lady, when it fell that fre eleccion, by grete clamour of moche peple, for grete disefe of misgovernance so fervently stoden in ther eleccion, that they hem submitted to every maner face, rather than have suffered the maner and the rule of the hated governours, notwithstanding that in the contrary helden moch comune meiny, that have no consideration, but onely to voluntary lufles withouten reson. But than thilke governour so forsaken, saininge toforne his undoinge for misrule in his time, shope to have letted thilke eleccion, and have made a newe him selfe to have bene chosen, and under that mokylore have arered. These thinges, lady, knowen amonge the princes, and made open to the peple, draweth in amendement, that every degre shal bene ordained to stande there as he shulde, and that of errours coming hereafter, men may lightly toforne hande purvaye remedye, in thys wise, pece and rest to be furthered and hold. Of the which thinges ladie, thilke persons broughten in answer toforne ther most soverain judge, not coarted by paininge dures openlye knowlegeden, and asked therof grace, so that apertely it preveth my wordes ben soche without forginge of lesinges.

But nowe it greveth me to remembre these divers sentences, in jangling of these shepy peple: certes me thinketh they oughen to maken joy that a sothe maie be knowe. For my trouthe and my conscience bene witness to me bothe, that this knowing sothe have I saide for no harme, ne malyce of tho persones, but onely for trouthe of my sacrament in my leigeaunce, by whiche I was charged on my kinges behalfe. But se ye not nowe lady, how the felonous thoughtes of this peple, and covins of wicked men, conspiren ayen my sothfast trouthe? Se ye not every wight that to these erroneous opinions were assentaunt, and helpes to the noise, and knewen all these thinges better than I my selfen, apparaylen to synden newe frendes, and clepen me false, and studyen howe they mowen in ther mouthes werse plyte nempne. O God what maye this be, that thylke folke which that in tyme of my mayntenaunce, and whan my might availed to stired the forsaid matters, tho me commended, and yave me name of trouthe, in so manye folde maneres, that it was nighe in every wight's ere, there as any of thylke peple weren, and on the other syde, thylke companie somtyme passed, yevynge me name of badde loos, nowe bothe tho peples turned the gode into badde, and badde into gode! whiche thinge is wonder, that they knowing me saying but soth arne nowe tempted to reply ther olde prayfinges, and knowen me well in all doinges to ben trewe, and saine openly that I false have said many thinges. And they aleged nothinge me to ben false or untrewe, save thilke mater knowleged by the parties 'hemselfe: and God wot other matter is none. Ye also lady knowe these thinges for trewe, I avaunte not in praisinge of my self, therby shulde I lese the precious secrete of my conscience. But ye se well that false opinion of the peple for my trouthe, in tellinge out of false conspired maters, and after the judgement of these clerkes I shulde not hide the soth of no manner person, maister ne other, wherefore I wolde not drede, were it put in the consideracion of trewe and of wyse. And for comers hereafter shullen fully out of denwere all the sothe knowe of these thinges in acte, but as they werne, I have put it in scripture, in perpetuel remembraunce of true mening. For truly lady me semeth, that I ought to bere the name of trouthe, that for the love of rightwisenesse have thus me submitten: But nowe than the false fame whiche that clerkes saine flieth as faste as dothe the fame of trouthe, shall so wide sprede, til it be brought to the jewel that I of mene, and so shall I ben hindred withouten any mesure of trouthe.

stretch to

THan gan Love sadlye me beholde, and saide in a chaunged voyce, lower than she hadde spoken in any tyme. Faine wolde I (q<sup>d</sup> she) that thou were holpen, but hast thou said any thinge, whiche thou might not proven? Parde (q<sup>d</sup> I) the persons every thinge as I have said han knowleged 'hem selfe. Yea (q<sup>d</sup> she) but what yf they hadden naied, how woldest thou have maintained it. Sothelye (q<sup>d</sup> I) it is well wiste bothe amongst the grettest, and other of the relme, that I profered my body so largely into provinge of tho thinges, that Mars shuld have judged th'ende: but for sothnesse of my wordes they durst not to thilke judge trust. Now certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) above all fames in this world, the name of marcial doynges moste plesen to ladies of my lore, but fythen thou were redy, and thine adversaires in thy presence refused thilke doynges, thy fame ought to be so borne, as if in dede it had take to the ende. And therfore every wight that anye droppe of reson hath, and hereth of the infame, for these thinges hath this answer to saye, trewly thou saidest, for thyne adversaries thy wordes affirmed. And yf thou haddest lied, yet are they discomfited, the prife lened on thy side, so that fame shall holde downe infame, he shall bringe upon none half. What greveth The thine enemyes to saine ther owne shame? as thus: We are discomfited, and yet oure quarell is trewe. Shall not the loos of thy frendes ayenward dequace thilke infame, and say they graunted a sothe without a stroke or fighting? Many men in batail ben discomfited and overcome in a rightfull quarell, that is Godde's privy judgement in heven: but yet although the partie be yolden, he may with wordes say his quarell is trew, and to yelde him in the contrarie for dred of dethe he is compelled, and he that graunteth and no stroke hath feled, he may not crepe away in this wise, by none excusacion. Indifferent folke will say, ye who is trew? who is false? himself knowlegeth tho thinges. Thus in every side fame sheweth to The gode and no badde. But yet (q<sup>d</sup> I) some will saye, I ne shuld for no deth have discovered my maistresse, and so by unkindnes they wol knette infame to pursue me aboute: thus enemies of wil in manifold maner wol seche privie serpentines queintises, to quenche and distroye by venime of many businesses the light of truthe, to make herres to murmoure ayenst my persone, to have me in haine, withouten any cause. Nowe (q<sup>d</sup> she) here me a fewe wordes, and thou shalt fully ben answered, I trow. Me thinketh (q<sup>d</sup> she) right nowe by thy wordes, that Sacramente of sweryng, that is to saie, charging by othe, was one of the causes, to make The discover the malicious ymaginacions tofore nempned, every othe by knittynge of copulacion must have these lawes, that is true judgement and rightwisenesse, in whiche thyng, if any of these lacke, the othe is turned into the name of perjurie: then to make a true sermente must nedes these thynges followe, for ofte tymes for a man to saie sothe, but judgement and justice folowe, he is forsworne: ensample of Herodes for holdyng of his serment, was dampned.

Also to saie truthe rightfullliche, but in judgement, otherwhile is forboden, by that all sothes be not to saine. Therefore in judgement, in truthe and rightwisenesse, is every cature bounden up paine of perjurie full knowyng to make, tho it were of his owne persone, for drede of sinne, after that worde better is it to dey, then live false, and all would perverted people false reporte make in unkindnes, in that entent thy fame to reise, when light of truthe in these matters is forthe sprongen, and openly published among commons, then shall not soche dark enfame dare appere, for pure shame of his falsnes, as some men there ben that ther owne enfame can none otherwise voide, or els excuse, but by hindring of other mennes fame, whiche that by none other cause clepen other men fals, but for with ther own falsnesse mowen thei not ben avaunfed, or els by false sclandryng wordes other men shendin ther owne true sclander to make seme the lasse, for if soche men woulde ther eyn of ther conscience revolve, thei shoulde seene the same sentence, thei legen on other, spring out of ther sides, with so many branches, it wer impossible to nomber. The which therfore maie it be saied in that thing, this man thou demest, therein thy self thou condemnest. But (q<sup>d</sup> she) understande not by these wordes, that thou wene me saie The to be worthie sclander, for any matter tofore written, truly I would witnesse the contrary, but I saie that the bemes of sclandring words maie not ben doon awaie, till the daie of dome. For how shoulde it not yet emonges so gret plentie of peple ben many shrewes, sithen when no mo but eghte persones in Noe's ship wer closed, yet one was a shrewe, and scorned his father? These things (q<sup>d</sup> she) I trowe, shewen that false fame is not to drede, ne of wise persones to accepte, and namely not of thy Margarite, whose wisdom hereafter I think to declare, wherefore I wot well soche thyng shall not her assent, then of unkindnesse thine oth hath The excused at the full. But now if thou woldest not greve, me liste a fewe thinges to shewe. Saie on (q<sup>d</sup> I) what ye wol, I trowe ye mene but trouthe, and my profite in tyme commyng. Truelie (q<sup>d</sup> she) that is sothe, so thou con wel kepe these wordes, and in the inrest secrete chamber of thine herte so faste 'hem close, that thei never sitte, then shalte thou finde 'hem availyng. Loke now what peple haste thou served, whiche of 'hem all in tyme of thine exile ever The refreshed, by the value of the lest coigned plate, that walketh in money? Who was sorie, or made any rueth for thy disese? If thei hadden gotten ther purpose of thy misaventure, sette thei not an haw. Lo! when thou wer enprisoned, howe faste thei hied in helpe of thy deliveraunce. I wene of thy deth thei yeve but lite: Thei looked after no thyng, but after ther owne luses. And if thou liste saie the sothe, all that meinie that in this brigge The broughten, lookeden rather after thyne helps, then The to have releved.

Owen not yet some of 'hem money for his commons? Paidest not thou for some of ther dispences, till till thei were touned out of Seland? Who yave The ever ought, for any ridyng thou maidest? Yet parde, some of hem token money for thy chamber, and putte the pens in his pourse, unwetyng of the renter.

Lo! for which a companie thou meddest, that neither The, ne them self mighten helpe, of unkindnesse, now thei bere the name, that thou supposdest of hem for to have. What might thou more have don, then thou diddest, but if thou wouldest in a false quarell have ben a stinking martire? I wene thou fleddest as long as thou might, ther privitie to concele, whiche thyng thou heleste lenger then thou shouldest. And thilke that ought The money, no pennie would paie, thei wend thy returne had ben an impossible. How might thou better have hem proved but thus in thy nedie difeses? Now haste thou ensample, for whom thou shalt meddle; truelie this lore is worth many godes.

Ofte gan love to sterne me these wordes, thinke on my spech, for truelie here after, it wold doe The likyng, and how so ever thou se Fortune shape her whele to tourne, this meditation by no waie resolve. For certes fortune sheweth her fairest, when she thinketh to begile. And as me thought heretofore, thou saidest thy loos in love, for thy right-wisenesse ought to be raised, should be allowed in tyme comyng, thou might in love so The have, that loos and fame shull so ben raised, that to thy frendes comforte, and sorowe to thin enemies, endlesse shul endure.

But if thou were that one Shepe cmonges the hundred, were losse in deserte, and out of the waie had erred, and now to the flocke art restored, the Shepherd hath in The no joye, and thou ayen to the Forreste tourne. But that right as the sorowe and anguisse was grete, in tyme of thyne outwaicgoyng, right so joye and gladnes shall be doubled, to seen The converted, and not as Lot's wife ayen lokyng, but whole counsaile with the Shepe folowyng, and with them graspe and herbes gader. Never the later (qð she) I saie not these thynges for no wantruste that I have, in supposyng of The otherwise then I should. For truelie I wore wel, that now thou art sette in soche a purpose, out of whiche The liste not to part. But I saie it, for many men ther ben that to knowyng of other mannes doyns setten all ther cure, and lightly desiren the badde to clatter, rather than the gode, and have no will ther owne maner to amende. Thei also hate of old rancour lightly haven, and there that soche thing abideth, sodainly in ther mouthes procedeth the habundaunce of the herte, and wordes as stones, stones out throwe. Wherefore my counsaile is evermore, openlie and apertlie, in what place thou sit, counterplete th' errors and meninges, in as ferre as thou hem wifest false, and leve for no wight to make hem be knowe in every bodies ere, and be alwaie pacient, and use Jacobe's wordes, what so ever menne of The clappen, I shall sustain my ladie's wrathe, whiche I have deserved, so long as my Margarite hath rightwised my cause. And certes (qð she) I witnesse my self, if thou thus converted, sorowest in gode menyng in thyne herte, wolt from all vanitie partitely departe, in consolacion of al gode plesaunce; the Margarite, which that thou desirest, after wil of thine hert, in a maner of a mother's pitie, shull fullie accept The into grace. For right as thou rentest clothes in open sight, so openlie to sowe hem at his worshippe, withouten reprofe commended. Also, right as thou were ensample of moche folde errour, right so thou muste be ensample of many folde correccon, so gode favour to forgoyng all erreure destroyinge causeth diligente love with many plaited praisynges to followe, and then shall all the firste errors make the followyng worshippes to seme hugelie encrefed; blacke and white sette togidder every for other more semeth, and so doth every thing contrarie in kinde. But infame that goeth alwaie tofore, and praisyng worship by any cause folowyng after, maketh to rise thilke honour, in double of welth, and that quencheth the spotte of the firste enfame. Why wene I saie these thynges, in hinderyng of thy name? Naie, naie, God worte, but for pure encrefing worshippe, thy right-wisenesse to commende, and thy trouthe to seme the more. Woste not well thy self, that thou in forme of makyng passdest not Adame, that ete of the apple? Thou passdest not the stedfastnes of Noe, that etyng of the grape become dronke. Thou passdest not the chastite of Lot, that laie by his daughter. Eke the nobley of Abraham, whom God reproved by his pride. Also Davide's mekenesse, whiche for a woman made Urie be slawe. What? also Hector of Troie, in whom no defeaute might be founde, yet is he reproved that he ne had with manhod not suffred the warre begon: ne Paris to have went into Grece, by whom ganne all the sorowe: for truelie hym lacketh no venime of privie consentyng, whiche that openly levethe a wrong to withsaie. Lo eke an olde proverbe, emong many other! He that is still, semeth as he graunted.

Now by these ensamples, thou might fully understand, that these thynges ben writ to your lernyng, and in rightwysnes of the persones, as thus: To every wight his defaut committed made godenesse afterwarde doen be the more in reverence, and in open shewyng; for ensample, is it not song in holy churche? Lo how necessarie was Adame's sinne? David the kyng gatte Salomon the king, of her that was Urie's wife. Truelie for reprove is none of these thynges writte: Right so tho I reherse thy beforesede, I reprove The never the more, ne for no villany of The ar thei reherfed, but for worship, so thou continue well hereafter, and for profite of thy self I rede thou on hem thinke.

Then saied I right thus. Ladie of unitie and accorde, envie, and wrathe lurken there thou comest in place; ye weten well your selve, and so doen many other, that while I administred the office of common doynge, as in rulyng of the stablismentes cmonges the peple, I defouled never my conscience for no maner dede; but ever by wit and by counsaile of the wisest the matters weren drawn to their right endes. And thus truly for you ladie, I have desired soche cure, and certes in your service was I not idle, as far as soch doing of my cure stretcheth. That is a thing (qð she) that may draw many herts of noble, and voyce of common into glorie, and fame is not but wretched and fickle.

Alas! that mankinde coviteth in so leud a wise to be rewarded of any gode dede, sith glorie of Fame in this worlde is not but hinderyng of glorie in tyme comyng. And certes (qð she) yet at the hardeste soche fame into heaven is not the yerthe but a centre to the circle of heaven? A pricke is wonder little, in respecte of all the circle, and yet in all this pricke maie no name be borne, in maner of persyng, for many obstacles, as waters and wildernesie, and straunge languages, and not onelie names of menne ben stilled, and holden out of knowleging, by these obstacles, but also citces and relmes of prosperitie ben letted to be knowe, and ther reson hindred, so that thei mow not ben perfetly in mennes proper understandyng. Howe should then the name of a singular londenoy pass the glorious name of London, whiche by many it is commended, and by many it is lacked, and in many mo places in yerth not know-

en, then knowen? for in many countrees litle is London in knowyng, or in speche, and yet emong one maner of peple maie not soche fame in godenesse come, for as many as praisen, commonly as many lacken. Fie then on soche maner fame! slepe and suffre him that knoweth privitie of hertes, to dele soche fame in thilke place, there nothing ayenst a sothe shal neither speke, ne dare apere, by attorney, ne by other maner. How many grete-named, and many grete in worthinesse losed, han be tofore this tyme, that now out of memorie are slidden, and clenelie forgotten, for defaute of writynges, and yet scriptures for gret eldeso ben defased, that no perpetualitie maie in hem ben judged. But if thou wolt make comparison to ever, what joye maiest thou have in yerthly name? it is a faire likenesse, a pees or one graine of Whete to a thousande shippes full of corne charged. What number is betwene the one and the other? and yet mowe bothe thei be nombred, and ende in reckenyng have. But truely al that maie be nombred, is nothing to reckon, as to thilke that maie not be nombred, for of thinges ended is made comparison, as one litle, an other grete, but in thynges to have an ende, and an other no ende, soche comparison maie nor be founden. Wherefore in heaven to ben losed with God hath none ende, but endlessse endureth, and thou canste nothyng doen arighte, but thou desire the rumour thereof be heled, and in every wighte's ere, and that dureth but a pricke in respecte of the other. And so thou sekest rewarde of folkes, smale wordes, and of vain praisynges. Truelie therein thou leseste the guerdone of vertue, and lesest the grettest valour of conscience, and uphap thy renome everlastyng. Therefore boldly renome of fame of the yerth should be hated, and fame after deth should be desired, of werkes of vertue asketh guerdoning, and the soule causeth all vertue: Than the soule delivered out of prison of yerthe, is moste worthie soche guerdone emong to have in the everlastyng fame, and not the bodie that causeth all manne's evils.

OF twey thynges art thou answered, as me thinketh (q<sup>d</sup> Love) and if any thing be in doubte in thy soule, shewe it forthe, thyne ignorance to clere, and leve it for no shame. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) there ne is no bodie in this worlde, that aught could saie by reason ayenst any of your skilles, as I leve, and by my wit now fele I well, that evill spekers, or berers of enfame, may litle greve, or let my purpose, but rather by soche thing my quarel to be forthered. Yea (q<sup>d</sup> she) and it is proved also, that the ilke jewell in my keping shall not there-through be stered, of the lest moment that might be imagined. That is sothe (q<sup>d</sup> I). Well (q<sup>d</sup> she) then levethe there to declare that thy insuffaunce is no maner letting; as thus, for that she is so worthie, thou shouldest not climbe so high, for thy moebles and thin estate arn voided, thou thinkest fallen in soche miserie, that gladnes of thy pursure woll not on The discende. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) that is sothe: right soche thought is in myne herte, for commonlie it is spoken, and for an olde proverbe it is ledged: he that heweth to hie, with chippes he maie lese his sight. Wherefore I have ben about in al that ever I might, to studie wayes of remedie by one side or by an other. Now (q<sup>d</sup> she) God forbede, ere thou seke any other doynges, but soche as I have lerned The in our restyng whiles, and soche herbes ben planted in our Gardins. Thou shalte well understande, that above man is but one God alone. How (q<sup>d</sup> I) han men tofore this tyme trusted in writtes and chauntementes, and in helpes of Spirites, that dwellen in the aire, and thereby thei han gotten ther desires, where as firste for all his manlie power he daunced behinde.

O (q<sup>d</sup> she) fie on soche matters! for truelie that is sacrilege, and that shal have no fort with any of my servautes in myne eyen shal soche thing not be looked after. How often is it commanded by these passed wise, that to one God shall men serve, and not to Goddes? And who that list to have mine helpes, shall ask non helpe of foule spirites. Alas! is not man maked semblable to God? Wofte thou not well, that all vertue of liveliche werkyng by Godd's purveighaunce is under put to resonable cecture in yerth? is not every thyng a thisshalfe God? Made buxome to manne's contemplacion, understanding in heaven, and in yerthe, and in helle. Hath not manne beyng with stones, soule of wexyng with trees and herbes?

Hath he not soule of feling with bestes, fishes, and foules, and soule of reson and understanding with Angels? so that in him is knitte all maner of livinges by a resonable proporcion. Also man is made of all the fower Elements. All universitie is rekened in him alone: he hath under God principalitie above al thinges. Now is his soule here, now a thousande mile hence, now farre, now nighe, now lowe, as farre in a moment, as in mountenaunce of ten Winter, and all this in manne's governaunce and disposicion. Then sheweth it, that men ben liche unto Goddes, and children of moste height. But nowe sithen all thynges are underput to the wille of resonable creatures, God forbede any man to win that Lordship, and aske helpe of any thyng lower then hym selfe, and then namelic of foule thinges innominable.

Nowe then, why shouldest thou wene to love to high, sithen nothing is The above, but God alone. Truelie I wote well, that the ilke jewell is in a maner even in line of degre there thou art thy selfe, and nought above, save thus. Angell upon Angell, man upon man, and Devill upon Devill, han a maner of Sovereintie, and that shall cese at the daie of Dome: and so I saie, though thou be put to serve thilke jewell, duryng thy life, yet is that no servage of underputtyng, but a maner of travailing plesaunce, to conquere and get that thou haste not.

I set now the hardest in my service, now thou deidest for sorowe of wantyng in thy desires: truelie all hevenlie bodies with one voyce shall come, and make melodie in thy coming, and saie welcome our sere, and worthie to enter into Jupiter's joy, for thou with mighte haste overcome dethe, thou wouldest never slitte out of thy service, and we all shall now praie to the Goddes, rowe by rowe to make the ilke Margarite, that no routh had in this persone, but unkindely without comforte lette The deie, shall be set her self in soch wise, that in yerth for part of vengeaunce shall she no joye have in love's service: and when she is dedde, then shal her soule ben broughte up into thy presence, and whither thou wilt chese, the ilke soule shal ben committed. Or els after thy deth, anone all the foresaid hevenlie bodies by one accorde shal be nommen from thilke perle, all the vertues that firste her were taken, for she hath hem forfeited, by that on The my servaunte in thy live she would not suffer to worche all vertues, withdrawn by might of the high bodies: Why then shouldest thou wene so any more? And if The liste to loke upon the lawe of kinde, and wise order, whiche to me was ordained, sothlie none age, none overtournyng tyme hitherto had no tyme ne power, to chaunge the weddyng, ne that knotte to unbinde of two hertes through one assente in my presence together accorded to endure till deth hem departe. What trowest thou every ideot wot the menyng and the privie entente of these thinges? Thei wene for sothe, that soche accorde mai not be, but the Rose of maidenhede be plucked, doe waie, doe waie, thei knowe nothyng of this: for consente of two hertes alone maketh the fastenyng of the knot, neither lawe of kind, ne manne's Lawe, determineth neither the age, ne the qualitie of persones, but onelie accorde betwene thilke twaie. And truelie, after tyme that soche accorde by ther consent in herte, is enfeled and put in my tresorie, emonges my privie thinges then ginneth the name of spoufaile, and althoughe thei breken forward bothe, yet soche matter enfeled is kepte in remembraunce for ever. And se now that spouses have the name anon after accorde, though the Rose be not take. The Aungell bade Joseph, take Mary his Spouse, and to Egypt wende: Lo! she was cleped spouse, and yet toforne ne after neither of hem bothe mente no fleshely luste knowe, wherefore the wordes of trouthe accorden, that my servauntes shoulde forsake bothe father and mother, and be adherand to his spouse, and thei two in unitie of one fleshe shoulde accorde. And this wise two that werne firste in a little maner disacordaunte, higher than one, and lower than other, ben made evenliche in grete stonde.

But now to enforme The, that ye benliche Goddes, these clerkes saie, and in determinacion shewen, that thre thinges haven the names of Goddes ben cleped, that is to saie, Man, Devill, and Images; but yet is there but one God, of whom all godenesse, all grace, and all vertue cometh, and he is loving and true, and everlasting, and prime cause of all beyng thynges: but men ben Goddes, loving and true, but not everlasting, and that is by adopcion of the everlasting God. Devils ben Goddes, stirring by a manner of livyng, but neither ben thei true, ne everlasting, and ther name of godlihed thei han by usurpacion, as the Prophete saith: All Goddes of Gentiles, that is to saie Painims, are Devils. But Images ben Goddes by nuncupacion, and thei ben neither living ne true, ne everlasting: After these wordes thei clepen Goddes Images wrought with mennes handes.

But nowe resonable creature that by adopcion alone art to the grete God everlasting, and thereby thou art God cleped, let thy fathers maners so entre thy wittes, that thou might folowe, in as moche as longeth to The, thy father's worship, so that in nothing thy kinde from his will decline, ne from his nobley povertie. In this wise if thou werche, thou art above al other thinges, save GOD alone, and so saie no more thine herte to serve in to hie a place.

FULLIE have I now declared thin estate to be so gode, so thou followe thereafter, and that the objection first by The aleged, in worthines of thy Margarite shal not The let, as it shal forther The, and encrease The, it is now to declare the last objection in nothing maie greve. Yes certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) bothe greve, and let muste it nedes, the contrary maie not ben proved, and se now why. While I was glorious in worldlie welfulnesse, and had soch godes in welth, as maken men riche, tho was I drawe into compaignies that loos, prise, and name yeven: Tho louteden blasours, tho curreiden glosours, tho welcomeden flatterers, tho worshipped thilk, that now deinen not to loke. Every wight in soche yerthlie wele habundaunt is hold, noble, precious, benigne, and wise, to do what he shall in any degre that men hym set, all be it that the sothe be in the contrary of all tho thinges: but he that can, ne never so wel him behave, and hath vertue habundaunte, in manyfolde maners, and be not welthed with soche yerthlie godes, is holde for a sole, and saied his wit is but sorted. Lo howe false for ever is holde true! Lo howe true is cleped false, for wantyng of godes! Also Ladie, dignitees of office, maken menne mikell comended, as thus: he is so gode, wer he out, his pere should men not find. Truelie I trowe of some soch that art so praised, were thei out ones, an other should make him so be knowe, he should of no wise no more ben looked after: but onely soles well I wot, desiren soch newe thinges. Wherefore I wonder that thilke governour, out of whom alone the causes proceden, that governen all thinges, which that hath ordeined this worlde in werkes of the kindly bodies so be governed not with unstedfaste or happious thinge, but with rules of reson, whiche shewen the course of certain thinges: why suffreth he soche sliding chaunges, the misturnen soche noble thinges as ben we men, that arne a faire persell of the yerth, and holden the uppereste degre under God of benigne thinges, as ye saiden right now your self, should never man have ben set in so worthie a place, but if his degre were ordained noble. Alas! thou that knittest the purveighaunce of all thynges, why lokest thou not to amenden these defautes? I se shrewes that han wicked maners sitten in chaires of domes, Lambes to punishen, there Wolves should ben punished. Lo, vertue shined naturally for povertie lurketh, and is hid under cloude: but the Mone false forsworne, as I knowe my self, for aver and yestes hath usurped to shine by daie light, with peinture of other mennes praisynges, and truely thilke forged light foully should fade, were the trouthe awaie of colours feined. Thus is night touned into daie, and daie into night, Winter into Sommer, and Sommer into Winter, not in dede, but in mislepyng of folishe peple.

Nowe (q<sup>d</sup> she) what weneest thou of these thynges? How selest thou in thine hert, by what governaunce that this cometh about?

Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) that wotte I never, but if it be, that Fortune hath graunt from above, to lede the ende of menne as her liketh. Ah nowe I se (q<sup>d</sup> she) the entent of thy menyng: Lo! bicause thy worldly godes ben fulliche dispente, thou berafte out of dignitie of office, in which thou madest thy gathering of thilke godes, and yet diddest in that office, by counsaile of wise, any thyng were ended, and true were unto hem, whose profite thou shouldest loke, and seest now many, that in the ilke herveest made of The mokell, and now for glosyng of other deinethe The nought to forther, but enhaunsen fals shrewes by witnesyng of trouthe: These thinges greveth thine herte, to seen thy self thus abated, and then frailtie of mankinde ne setteth but litle by the lesers of soche richesse, have he never so moche vertue, and so thou weneest of thy jewell to renne in dispite, and not ben accepted into grace: All this shal The nothyng hinder. Now (q<sup>d</sup> she) firste thou wotte well, thou lostest nothyng that ever mightest thou challenge for thine own: When nature brought The forth, come thou not naked out of thy mother's wombe? Thou haddest no richesse, and when thou shalt enter into the ende of every fleshy bodie, what shalte thou have with The then? So every richesse thou haste, in tyme of thy living, n'is but lent, thou might therein challenge no propertie. And se now, every thing that is a manne's owne, he maie do therewith what hym liketh, to yeve or to kepe: but richesse thou plainest from The loste, if thy might had stretched so forth, saie thou wouldest have kepte, multiplied with mo other: and so ayenst thy will ben thei departed from The, wherefore thei wer never thine. And if thou laudest and joyest any wight, for he is stuffed with soche maner richesse, thou art in that beleve begiled, for thou weneest thilk joye to be felinesse, or els ese, and he that hath loste soche haps, to ben unfelie. Ye forsothe (q<sup>d</sup> I). Well (q<sup>d</sup> she) then woll I prove that unfelie, in that wise is to praise, and so the tother is the contrary to be lacked. Howe so (q<sup>d</sup> I)? For unfelie (q<sup>d</sup> she) begileth not, but sheweth the entent of her workyng. Et è contra. Scelinesse begileth, for in prosperitie, she maketh a jape in

that

in blindenesse, that is, she windeth hym to make sorowe, when she withdraweth. Wolte thou not (q<sup>d</sup> she) praise hym better, that sheweth to The his herte, tho it be with bitande wordes, and dispitous, then hym that gloseth, and thinketh in ther absence, to do The many harmes. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) the one is to commende, and the other to lacke and despise. A ha (q<sup>d</sup> she) right soe while she lasteth, gloseth and flattereth, and lightly voideth, when she moste pleasantly sheweth, and ever in her absence she is aboute to doe. The tene and sorowe in herte: but unselie all be it with bitande chere, sheweth what she is, and so doeth not that other, wherefore unselie doeth not begile. Selinesse deceiveth: unselie putteth awaie doubt. That one maketh men blind, that other openeth ther eyn, in shewyng of wretchednesse. The one is full of drede, to lese that is not his owne: That other is sober, and maketh men discharged of mokell heviness in burthen: The one draweth a man from very gode, the other haleth him to vertue, by the hokes of thoughtes. And wenest thou not, that thy disese hath doen The mokell more to winne, then ever yet thou lostest? And more than ever the contrary made The winne? Is it not a grete gode to thy thinking, for to knowe the hertes of thy forthfast frendes. Parde thei ben proved to the full, and the true have discovered from the false. Truly at the goyng of thilke brotall joye, there yede no more a waie, then the ilke that was not thine proper: He was never firm that lightly departed, thine own gode therfore levet it stil with The. Nowe gode (q<sup>d</sup> she) for how moche woldest thou sometyme have bought this very knowynge of thy frendes, frome the flatcrynge flyes that they glosed, whan thou thought thy selfe sely! But thou that plainest of losse in riches, hast founden the most dere worthy thinge that thou clepest unsely hath made The moche thing to winnen. And also for conclusioun of all, he is frend that nowe levet not his hert from thin helps. And if that Margarit denieth now not to suffre her vertues shine to The wardes, wyth spredinge bemes, as farre or farther than if thou were sely in worldly joye, Trewly I saye not elles but she is some dele to blame.

Ah, pece (q<sup>d</sup> I) and speke no more of thys, mine herte braketh, nowe thou touchest any soche wordes. A well (q<sup>d</sup> she) thanne lette us syngen, thou herest no more of these thinges at this thime.

Thus endeth the first boke of the Testament Love.

Here after foloweth the seconde.

Very welth may not be founden in al this world, and that is wel sene: Lo! howe in my moste comfort, as I wende and most suposed to have had full answer of my contrary thoughtes, sodainly it was vanished. And all the workes of man faren in the same wise, whan folke wenen beste ther entente for to have, and willes to persourm, anon chaunging of the list side to the right halve, tourneth it so clene into another kind, that never shal it come to the firste plite in doinge.

O this wrongful stering so sone otherwisef out of knowing! but for my purpose was at my beginnunge, and so dureth yet, yf God of his grace tyme woll me graunt, I thinke to performe this worke, as I have begonne in love, after as my thinne witte, wyth inspyracyon of him, that hildeth all grace, woll suffre. Grevously God wotte have I suffred a grete throwe that the Romayn Emperour, whiche in unyte of love shuld accorde and every with other in cause of other to avaunce, and namely sithe this Empire to be corrected of so many sectes in heresy, of faith, of service, of rule in love's religion. Trewly all were it but to shende erronious opinions, I maye it no lenger suffre: For many menne ther ben that sain love to ben in gravell and sande, that with Se ebbing and flowing woweth, as riches that sodainly wanisheth. And some saine that love shulde be in windy blastes, that stoundemele tourneth as a phane, and glorie of renome, whiche after lustes of the variaunt peple is areysed or stilled. Manie also wenen that in the sunne and the mone, and other sterres, love shulde ben founden, for amonge all other planettes moste soverainlie they shinen, as dignitees in reverence of estates rather than gode han, and occupien. Full many also there ben that in okes and in huge postes supposen love to ben grounded, as in strength and in might, which mowen not helpen ther owne wretchednesse, whan they ginne to fal. But soche diversite of sectes ayenst the rightfull hyleve of love, these errors ben forth spredde, that loves servauntes in the true rule and stedfast faith in no place darne apere: Thus irrecuparable joy is went, and anoy endlesse is entred. For no man aright reproveth soche errors, but confimen ther wordes, and sain that badde is noble gode, and godenes is badde, to whiche folke the prophet biddeth wo without ende.

Also many tongues of grete false techinges in gilinge maner, principallye in my times, not onely with wordes, but also with armes, loves servauntes and professes in his religion of trew rule, pursuwen to confounden and to distroyen. And for as moche as holy fathers, that our christen faith aproved and strengthened to the Jewes, as to men resonable, and of divinite lerned, proved thilke faith with reson, and with auctoritees of the olde testament, and of the newe ther pertinacie to distroy: But to painyms, that for bestes and houndes wer hoide to putte hem out of ther errour, was myracles of God shewed. These thinges were figured by coming of th' angell to the shepherdes, and by the sterre to painims kinges as who saith: Angel resonable, to resonable creature, and sterre of miracle to peple bestial, not lerned, werne sent to enforme. But I lovers clerke in al my conning and with al my mightes, trewly I have no soche grace in vertue of miracles, ne for no disconfite falsheedes, suffiseth not auctorites alone, sithen that suche heretikes and mayntaynours of falsites. Wherefore I wot well, sithen that they ben men, and reson is approved in hem, the cloude of errour hath ther reson bewond with probable resons, whiche that catchende wit rightfully may not with sitte. But my travaillynge studie I have ordeined hem, with that auctorite mysghosed by manne's reson to graunt shal be enduced.

Now ginneth my penne to quake, to thinken on the sentences of the envious peple, whiche alwaye ben redy, both ryder and goer to skorne and to jape this leude boke, and me for rancoure and hate in ther hertes they shullen so dispyse, that althoughe my boke be leude, yet shal it ben more leude holden, and by wicked wordes in manye maner apaired. Certes me thinketh the sowne of ther badde speche right nowe is full bothe mine eres. O gode precious Margarite, mine herte shulde wepe, yf I wist ye token hede of soche manere speche, but trewly I wotte wel in that your wysedome shal not asterte. For of God maker of kind witnesse I toke, that for none envy ne yvel have I drawe this matter togiðer, but only for godenesse to maintain, and errors in falsites to distroy. Wherefore (as I said) with reson I thinke thilke forsaide errors to distroye and dequace. These

These resons and soch other, yf they enduce men in love's service trewe to beleve of parfite blisse, yet to full faithe in credence of deserte fully mowe they not suffise, sithen faith hath no merit of mede, whan manne's reson sheweth experience in doing. For utterly no reson the parfite blisse of love by no way maye make to be comprehended. Lo! what is a perfell of lover's joye? parfite science in gode service, of ther desire to comprehende in bodely doinge the likinge of the soule, nat as by a glasse to have contemplacion of tyme cominge, but thilke firste imagined and thought, after face to face in beholdyng: what hert, what reson, what understandinge can make his heven to be seled and know without assay of doing? certes none. Sithen than of love cometh soche fruite in blisse, and love in himselfe is the moste amonge other vertues, as clerkes sain: The fede of soche springinge in all places, in all countreis, in all worldes shulde ben sowe.

But o wellawaye! thilke fede is forsake, and mowen not ben suffred the londetillers to set a werke, without meddlyng of cockle, badde wedes which somtime stonken hath caught the name of love amonge ydiotes and baddemening peple. Never the latter, yet howe so it be that menne clepe thilke kinge preciousst in kinde, with many eke names, that other thinges, that the soule yeven the ilke noble name, it sheweth well that in a maner men have a grete lyking in wurshipping of thilke name, wherfore this worke have I writte, and to the tytyle of love's name I have it avowed in a maner of sacrifice, that where ever it be radde, it mow in merite by the excellence of thilke name the more wex in autorite, and wurshippe of takinge in hede, and to what entente it was ordained, the inferes mowen ben moved: Every thinge to whome is owande occasion done as for his ende, Aristotle supposeth that the actes of every thinge ben in a maner his finall cause. A final cause is noblerer, or els even as noble as thilke thinge that is finally to thilke ende, wherfore accion of thinge everlasting is demed to be eternall, and not temporall, sithen it is his finall cause: Right so the actes of my boke love, and love is noble, wherfore though my boke be leude, the cause with whiche I am stered, and for whom I ought it don, noble forsothe ben bothe. But bycause that in conninge I am yonge, and canne yet but crepe, thys lende A, b, c, have I set into lerning, for I can not passen the tellinge of thre as yet: and yf God will in shorte time, I shall amende this leudenesse in joyninge of syllables, whiche thinge for dulnesse of witte I maye not in thre letters declare. For trewly I say the godenesse of my Margarite perle wolde yeve matter enditinge to many clerkes: certes her mercy is more to me sweter than any lyvynges, wherfore my lyppes mowen not suffice in speking of her ful laude and worshippe as they shuld. But who is that in knowing of the orders of heven, and putteth his resones in the erthe: I forsothe may not with blere eyn the shininge sonne of vertue in bright whele of this Margarite beholde, therfore as yet I maye her not discrive in vertue as I wolde. In time comming in another tretise thorow Godde's grace, this sonne clerenesse of vertue to be knowe, and howe she enlumineth al this day, I think to declare.

IN this mene while this comfortable lady gan sing a wounder mater of enditing in Latin, but trewly the noble colours in Rhetorike wise knit were so craftely, that my conning woll not stretche to remembre, but the sentence I trowe somedele have I in minde. Certes they were wonder swete of sowne, and they were touched al in lamentacion wise, and by no werbelles of mirth. Lo! thus ganne she sing in Latin, as I may constrewe it in our Englishe tonge.

Alas! that these hevenlye bodies ther lyght and course shewen, as nature yave hem in commaundement at the ginning of the firste age, but these thinges in fre choise of reson han none understandinge: but manne that ought to passe all thyng of doinge, of right course in kinde, overwhelmed sothenesse by wrongful tytyle, and hath drawen the sterre of envy to gon by his side, that the clipes of me that shoulde be his shininge sonne, so ofte is sey, that it wened thilke ertour thorowe him come in, shulde ben myne owne defeaute. Trewly therfore I have me withdrawe, and made my dwellyng out of lande in an yle by my selfe, in the ocean closed, and yet saine there many they have me harborowed, but God wot they faylen. These thinges me greven to thinke, and namely on passed gladnesse, that in this worlde was wonte me disporte of highe and lowe, and nowe it is failed: they that wolden maistries me have in thilke stoundes, in heven on high above Saturne's sphere, in sesonable tyme wer they loged, but nowe come queinte counsaillours that in no house woll suffre me sejourne, wherof is pire: And yet sain some that they me have in celler with wine shed, in garnere ther corne is laide, covered with whet, in sacke sowed with wol, in purse with money faste knitte, among pannes mouled in a wiche, in presse among clothes laid with riche pelure araied, in stable amonge horse and other bestes as hogges, shepe, and nete, and in other maner wise. But thou maker of light (in winkinge of thin eye the sonne is queint) wolte right well that I in trewe name was never thus herberowed. Somtyme toforne the sonne in the seventh partie was smiten, I bare both crosse and mitre, to yeve it where I wolde. With me the pope went a fote, and I tho was wurshiped of al holy church, kinges baden me ther crownes holden. The lawe was set as it shuld tofore the judge as wel that pore durst shewe his grefe as the riche, for all his money. I defended tho tailages, and was redy for the pore to pay. I made grete festes in my time, and noble songes, and married damofelles of gentill fature, withouten golde or other rychesse. Pore clerkes, for witte of schole, I sette in churches, and made soche persones to prech: and tho was service in holy churches honest and devoute, in plesauce bothe of God and of the peple. But nowe the leude for simonie is avanced, and shendeth al holye church. Now is steward for his achates, nowe is courtiour for his debates, now is eschetoure for his wronges, nowe is losell for his songes, personer and provendre alone, with whiche many thriftye shulde encrese. And yet is this shrewe behinde, freherte is forsake, and losengeour is take. Lo! it accordeth, for soche there ben that voluntarie lustes haunten in courte with ribaudrie, that til midnight and more wol playe and wake, but in the church at matins he is behinde, for evil disposicion of his stomake: therfore he shuld ete benebrede, and so dyd his fire, his estate therewith to strengthen. His auter is broke, and lowe lithe in pointe to gone to the yerthe, but his horse must ben esy and hie to bere him over grete waters. His chalice pore, but he hath riche cuppes. No towaile but a shete there God shall ben handeled. And on his meteborde there shall ben bordeclothes and towelles many paire. At masse serveth but a clergion: five squiers in hall. Pore chauncell, open holes in every sidebeddes of filke with tapites going al about his chambfe. Pore masseboke and leude chapelaine, and broken surplice with manye an hole: gode houndes and manye, to hunte after harte and hare, to fede in ther festes. Of pore men have they grete care, for they ever crave, and nothinge offren, they wolden have hem dolven. But amonge

amonge legyslres there dare I not come, my doinge they faine maken 'hem nedie, they ne wolde for nothing have me in town, for than wer tort and forth nought worthe an haw about, and plesen no men, but thilke grevous and torcious ben in might and in doinge: these thinges toforne said mowe wel if men liste ryme, trewly they acorde nothinge. And for as moch as al thinges by me shulden of right ben governed, I am sorye to se that governaunce failerth, as thus: To sene smale and lowe governe the hie, and bodies above. Certes that polisyse is nought, it is forbode by them that of governaunce tretten and enformen. And right as bestly witte shulde ben subiecte to reson, so erthely power in it self the lower shuld ben subiect to the hier.

What is worth thy body but it be governed with thy soule? right so litel or nought is worthe erthely power, but if regnatise prudence in hedes governe the smale, to whiche hedes the smal owen to obey, and suffre in ther governaunce. But soverainnesse aye warde shulde thinke in this wise, I am servaunt of these cretures to me delivered, not lord but defendour, not maister but enfourmer, not possessor but in possession, and to 'hem lyche a tre in whiche sparowes shullen stelen, ther birdes to norishe and forth bringe under suertie aye nst al reveinous foules and bestes, and not to be tiraunt them selfe. And than the smale in reste and quiete, by the hedes wel disposed, owen for ther soveraines helth and prosperite to pray, and in other doinges, in maintenaunce thereof performe, wythouten other administracion in rule of anye maner governaunce. And they wit have in 'hem, and grace to come to soch thinges, yet shuld they cefe tyll ther hedes them cleped, although profit and plesaunce shulde folowe. But trewly other governaunce ne other medlinge ought they not to claime, ne the hedes on 'hem to put. Trewly amonges cosinage dare I not come, but if riches be my mene, forthly she and other bodily godes maketh nigh cosinage, ther never propinquite ne aly-aunce in lyve was, ne shulde have be, n'ere it for ther medlinge maners, wherfore kindly am I not there leged. Povert of kinred is behind, riches suffreth 'hem to passe: trewly he saithe he come never of Japhete's children: wherof I am sory that Japhete's children for povert in no linage ben rekened, and Caine's children for riches be maked Japhete's heirs. Alas! this is a wonder chaunge bytwene tho two Noc's children, sithen that of Japhete's offspringe comeden knyghtes, and of Cain discended the line of servage to his brother's children. Lo! howe gentillesse and servage as cosins, both discended out of two bretherne of one body: wherfore I say sothnesse that gentillesse in kinrede maken not gentil linage in succession, without desert of a manne's own selfe. Where is nowe the lyne of Alysandre the noble, or els of Hector of Troye? Who is discended of right blode of lyne fro kinge Artour? Parde sir Perdicas, whom that kinge Alysandre made to ben his heire in Grece, was of no kinge's blod, his dame was a tobystere. Of what kinred ben the gentils in our daies? I trow therfore if any gode be in gentylesse, it is onely that it semeth a maner of necessitye be input to gentlemen, that they shulden not varien fro the vertues of ther auncestres. Certes all maner lynage of men bene evenlyche in birth, for one father maker of all godenes enformed 'hem al, and al mortal folke of one sede are greined. Wherto avaut men of ther lynage, in cosinage, or in elde fathers? Loke nowe the ginning, and to God maker of man's person, there is no clerke ne no worthy in gentillesse: and he that noriseth his corare with vices and unreasonable lustes, and leverth the kinde course, to whiche ende him brought forthe his byrthe, trewly he is ungentil, and amonge clerkes may not ben nempned. And therfore he that wol ben gentil, he mote daunten his fleshe fro vices that causen ungentillesse, and leve also reignes of wicked lustes, and draw to him vertue, that in al places gentillesse gentlemen maketh. And so speke I in feminine gendre in generall, of tho persones at the reverence of one, whom every wight honoureth. for her bountie and her noblesse ymade her to God so dere, that his moder she became, and she me hath had so gret in worship, that I n'il for nothinge in open declare that in any thing aye nst her este may sowne: For al vertue and al wortihnesse of plesaunce in 'hem haboundeth. And although I wolde any thinge speke, truly I can not, I may finde in yvel of 'hem no maner mater.

RYght with these wordes she stinte of that lamentable melodie, and I ganne with a lyvely herte to praye, if that it were lykyng unto her noble grace, she wolde her deine to declare me the mater that first was begonne in whiche she lesie and stinte to speke before she ganne to singe.

O (q'd she) this is no newe thyng to me to sene you menne desyren after mater, whiche your selfe caused to voyde.

Ah gode lady (q'd I) in whom victorie of strength is proved above all other thing, after the judgement of Eldram, whose lordshyp al lignes, who is that right as Emperour 'hem commandeth, whether thilke ben not women, in whose likenesse to me ye aperen. For right as man halte the principalle of al thing under his beinge, in the masculyne gender, and no mo genders ben there but masculine, and femynyne, all the remnaunte ben no genders but of grace, in facultie of grammer. Ryght so in the feminine, the women holden the upperest degre of al thinges, under thilke gendre conteyned. Who bringeth forth kinges, which that ben lordes of Se and of yerthe? and al peples of women ben borne: they norishe 'hem that grassen vines, they make men comforte in ther gladde cheres. Ther sorowe is deth to manne's herte. Without women the beyng of men were impossible. They comen with ther swetenesse the cruel hert ravish, and make it meke, buxome, and benyng, without violence meving. In beaultie of ther eyen, or eiles of other maner fetures, is all mens desires, ye more than in golde, preeyous stones, cyther anye riches. And in this degre lady your self manye hertes of men have so bounden, that parlite blisse in womankind to ben men wenen, and in nothinge els. Also lady the godenesse, the vertue of women, by propertie of discrecion, is so wel knowen, by litalnesse of malice, that desire to a gode asker by no waye comen they waive, and ye thanne that woll not passe the kinde werching of your sectes by general discrecion, I wotte well ye woll so encline to by prayere, that grace of my requeste shal fully ben graunted. Certes (q'd she) thus for the more parte fareth al mankind to praye, and to crie after woman's grace, and faine maine fantasies to make hertes to encline to your desires: and whan these sely women frely of ther kind beleven your wordes, and wenen all be gospel the promise of your behestes, than graunt they to you ther hertes, and fullfyllen your lustes, wherthrough ther liberty in maistership that they toforne had is thralled, and so maked soverain and to be praid, the first was servaunt, and voice of prayer used. Anone as filled is your luste, manye of you be so trewe, that litel hede take ye of soche kindnesse, but with traifoun anone ye thinke 'hem begile, and let light of that thyng whiche first ye maked to you wonders dere, so what thing to women is to love any wight or she him well know, and have him proved in manye lialie, for every glittering thing is not golde, and under colour of faire speche many vices may be hid and conseled. Therefore I rede no wight to trust on you to rath, mens chere, and ther speche right gileful is ful ofte, wherefore without gode assaye, it is not worthe on many on you to truste: Truly it is right kindly to every man that thinketh women betraye, and shewen outward al godenes, tyl he have his wil performed. Lo! the birde is begiled with the mery voice of the fouler's whistell. Whan a woman is closed in your nette, than wol ye causes finden, and bere unkindnes her on hande, or falsen upon her putte, your own malicious traizon with soche thing to excuse. Lo! than han women non other wrech in vengeance, but blober and wepe til 'hem lyst stent, and sorily ther mishap complaine, and is put into wenyng that al men ben so untrew. How often have men chaunged ther loves in a litel while, or els for failing ther wil in ther places 'hem sette: for frendship shal be one, and fame with another him list for to have, and a thirde for delyte, or els were he lost both in packe and in clothes: is this faire? nay, God wot. I maye nat tel by thousand partes the wronges in trechery of soche false peple, for make they never so gode a bonde, all set ye at a myte, whan your herte tourneth: And they that wenen for sorow of you dey, the pite of your false hert is slow out of towne. Alas therefore, that ever any woman wolde take any wighte in her grace, til she knowe at the ful on whome she might at all assayes truste! Women conno more crafte in queinte knowinge, to understande the false disceivable coniectementes of manne's begilinges. Lo! howe it fareth, though ye men groven and crien, certes it is but disceit, and that preveth wel by th' endes in your working. How many women have bene lorne, and with shame soule shent by longe lastyng time, whiche thorowe mennes gile have ben disceved? ever ther fame shall dure, and ther dedes radde and songe in many londes, that they have done recoveren shal they never, but alway ben demed lightly, in soche plite ayen shulde they fal, of whiche flanders and tenes ye false men and wicked bene the very causes, on you by right ought these shames and these reproves all wholly discende. Thus arne ye al nigh to entrewe, for all your faire speche your herte is full sickell. What cause han ye women to dispise? better fruite than they bene, ne swetter spices to your behove mowe ye not finde, as farre as worldly bodyes stretchen. Loke to ther forminge at the makinge of ther persones by God in joye of paradise, for godenesse of manne's propre bodye were they maked, after the sawes of the bible, rehersing God's wordes in this wise: It is gode to mankinde that we make to him an helper. Lo! in paradise for youre helpe was this tre grafted, out of whiche all linage of man discendeth: yf a man be noble frute, of noble frute it is sprongen: the blyss of paradise to mennes sory hertes yet in this tre abyderth. O! noble helpes ben these trees, and gentil jewel to ben worshipped of every gode creature: He that 'hem annoieth doth his owne shame, it is a comfortable perle ayenst al tenes. Every company is mirthed by ther present being. Trewly I wist never vertue, but a women were therof the rote. What is heven the worse, though Sarazins on it lien? Is your faith untrew, though rennogates maken theron lesinges? If the fire doth any wight bren, blame his own witte, that put himself so farre in the hete. Is not fyre gentillest and mozte element comfortable amonges all other? fire is chese werker in forthering sustenance to mankinde, shal fire bene blamed for it brennd a sole naturelly, by his owne stulty witte in steringe? Ah wicked folkes! for your propre malice, and shrewdenesse of your self, ye blame and dispise the precious thinge of your kinde, and whiche thinges amonge other most ye desiren. Trewly Nero and his children ben shrewes, that dispisen so ther dames. The wickednesse and giling of men, in disclaundring of thilke that most hath 'hem gladdened and plesed, were impossible to write or to nempne. Never the later yet I saye, he that knoweth a waye, may it lightly passe: eke, an herb proved may safely to smertande fores ben laide: So I say in him that is proved is nothing soch yvels to gscie. But these thinges have I rehersed to warne you women all at ones, that to lyghtly without gode assay ye assenten not to man's speche. The sonne in the day light is to knowen from the mone that shineth in the nighte. Nowe to The thy self (q's she) as I have oft said, I know wel thine herte, thou arte none of all the tofore nempned peple, for I know wel the continuance of thy service, that never sithen I set The a werke, might thy Margarete for plesauce, frendship, ne fairehede of none other, be in pointe moved from thin herte, wherefore into myne housholde hastelye I woll that thou entre, and all the parfyte privyte of my werkyng make it be knowe in thy understandyng, as one of my privy familyers. Thou desirest (q's she) faine to here of tho thinges there I left.

Ye forsothe (q's I) that were to me a grete blisse. Nowe (q's she) for thou shalt not wene that womans condicyons for faire speche soche thinge be longeth,

THou shalt (q's she) understand first amonge all other thynges, that al the cure of my servyce to me in the parfyte blisse in doinge is desired in every manne's herte, be he never so moche a wretche, but every man travaileth by divers studye, and sekith thilke blyss by divers waies, but all the endes are knitte in selynesse of desire in the perfite blisse, that is soche joye, whan men it have gotten, there liveth no thing more to ben covered: But how that desire of soche perfeccion in my service be kindly set in lovers hertes, yet ther erroneous opinions misturne it by falsenesse of wenyng. And although mennes understandinge be misturned, to knowe whiche shoulde ben the waye unto my persone, and whyther it abyde: yet wote they ther is a love in every wight, weneth by that thing that he coveteth most, he shoulde come to thilke love, and that is parfyte blyss of my servautes, but than fulle blyss maye not be, and there lacke anye thinge of that blisse in anye side. Eke it soloweth than, that he that muste have ful blyss, lacke no blyss in love on no side.

Therefore lady (q's I tho) thilke blisse I have desired, and sothe tofore this, my self, by wayes of riches, of dignite, of power, and of renome, wenyng me in tho thrages had ben thilke blisse, but ayenst the here it turneth. Whan I supposed best thilke blisse have get and come to the full purpose of your service, sodainly was I hindred, and throwen so fer abacke, that me thinketh an impossible to come there I leste. I wote (q's she) and therefore haste thou failed, for thou wentest not by the hie waye, a litell misgoynge in the ginyng causeth mikell error in the ende, wherefore of thilke blisse thou failedest, for having of richesse, ne none of th' other thinges thou nempnedest, mowen not make soche perfite blisse in love, as I shall shewe. Therefore thei be not worthie to thilke blisse, and yet somewhat must ben cause and waie to thilke blisse: Ergo, there is some soche thing, and some waie, but it is little in usage, and that is not openly iknow. But what felest in thin hert of that service, in which by me thou art entred? wenest aught thy self yet be in the hie waie to my blisse? I shall so shewe it to The, thou shalt not con saie the contrary.

Gode

Gode Ladie (q<sup>d</sup> I) altho I suppose it in my herte, yet would I here thynce wordes, how ye menen in this matter. (Q<sup>d</sup> she) that I shall with my gode will. The ilke blisse desired somedeles ye knowen, altho it be not perfytely, for kindly entencion ledeyth you thereto, but in thre maner livynges is all soche waies shewed. Every wight in this worlde to have this blisse, one of the ilke thre waies of lives muste procede, whiche after opinions of grete clerkes, are by names cleped, bestialliche, resonabliche, and vertuous: Manliche is worldliche, bestiallich is lustes and delitable, nothing restrained by bridle of reson, all that joiethe and yeveth gladnesse to the hert, and it be ayenst reson, is likened to bestiall living, whiche thing followeth lustes and delites, wherfore in soche thing maie not that precious blisse, that is maister of al vertues, abide. Your fathers tofornye you have cleped soche lustie livynges after the flesh passions of desire, whiche are innominable tofore God and man bothe. Then after determinacion of soche wise, we accorden that soche passions of desire shall not ben nempned, but holden for absolute from all other livynges and provynges, and so liveth into livynges, manliche and resonable, to declare the matters begon. But to make The fullie have understanding in manliche livynges, which is holden worldlich in these things, so that ignoraunce be made no letter, I wol (q<sup>d</sup> she) nempne these forsaied waies by names and conclusions.

Firste, riches, dignite, renome, and power, shall in this worke be cleped bodily godes, for in hem hath ben a grete throw manne's trust of felices in love, as in riches suffisaunce to have maintained that was begonne, by worldlie cattell in dignitie, honour, and reverence of hem that werne underput, by maistrie thereby to obeie. In renome glory of peples praising, after lustes in ther herte, without hede taking to qualitie and maner of doying, and in power, by trowth of Lordships maintenaunce, thing to procede forthe in doying. In all whiche thynges a longe tyme manne's coveitise in commune hath ben gretly grounded, to come to the blis of my service, but truly thei wer begiled, and for the principall must nedes faile, and in helping mowe not availe. Se why, for holdest him not pore that is nedy? Yes parde (q<sup>d</sup> I). And him for dishonored that moche folke dein not to reverence? That is soth (q<sup>d</sup> I). And what him that his mightes failen and mowe not helpen? Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) me semeth of all menne he should be holden a wretche. And wenest not (q<sup>d</sup> she) that he that is little in renome, but rather is out of the praisinges, of mo men then a fewe be not in shame? Forsothe (q<sup>d</sup> I) it is shame and villanie to hym that coveiteth renome, that more folke not praise in name then praise. Soth (q<sup>d</sup> she) thou failest sothe, but all these thynges are folowed of soche maner doying, and wenden in riches suffisaunce, in power might, in dignitie worship, and in renome glorie, wherfore thei disceded into discevable wening, and in that service disceite is folowed. And thus in generall, thou and all soche other that forworchen, failen of my blisse, that ye long han desired, wherfore truly in life of reson is the hie waie to this blisse, as I thinke, more openly to declare hereafter. Never the later, yet in a little to comforte thy herte, in shewyng of what waie thou art entred thy self, and that thy Margarite maie knowe The set in the hie waie, I wol enforme The in this wise. Thou hast failed of thy first purpose, bicause thou wenteste wrong, and leftest the hie waie on thy right side, as thus, thou lokest on worldly livyng, and that thyng The begiled, and lightly therefore as a litle assaie thou songedest, but when I tourned thy purpose, and shewed The a part of the hie waie, tho thou abode therin, and no deth ne ferdnesse of none enemy might The out of thilke waie reve, but ever one in thine hert, to come to thilk blisse, when thou wer arested, and first time enprisoned, thou wer loth to change thy waie, for in thy herte thou wendest to have ben there thou shouldest, and for I had routh to sene The miscaried, and wist wel thine ablenes my service to forther and encrease. I come my self without other mene to visite thy persone, in comforte of thy herte: and parde in my comyng thou were gretely gladed, after whiche time, no disce, no care, no tene might move me out of thy herte. And yet I am glad and gretly enpited, how continually thou haddest me in minde, with gode avisement of thy conscience, when thy king and his princes, by huge wordes and grete, looked after variaunce in thy spech, and ever thou wer redy for my sake, in plesaunce of that Margarite perle, and many mo other, thy body to oblige in to Marce's doing, if any contraried thy sawes; stedfast waie maketh stedfast herte, with gode hope in the ende. Truly I woll that thou it well knowe, for I se The so set, and not chaunging hert haddest in my service, and I made thou haddest grace of thy king, in foryevenesse of mikil misdede: to the gracious king art thou mikil holden, of whose grace and godenesse sometime hereafter I thinke to enforme, when I shewe the ground, where as mortall vertue groweth. Who brought The to werke? Who brought this grace about? Who made thy herte hardie? Truly it was I, for haddest thou of me failed, then of this purpose had never taken in this wise. And therefore I saie, thou might well trust to come to thy blisse, sithen thy ginning hath ben herd, but ever graciously after thy herte's desire hath proceeded. Silver lined with many hetes menne knowen for true, and safely men maie trust in The alwaie in werkyng. This disceles hath proved, what waie hence forwarde thou thinkest to holde. Nowe in gode faith, Ladie (q<sup>d</sup> I tho) I am now in, me semeth it is the hie waie and the righte. Ye forsothe (q<sup>d</sup> she) and nowe I woll disprove thy first waies, by whiche many men wenen to gette thilke blisse. But for as moche as every hert that hath caught full love, is tied with queinte knyttinges, thou shalt underlande that love, and thilke forsaied blisse tofornye declared, in this provynges, shall hote the knotte in the herte. Well (q<sup>d</sup> I) this impollesion I woll well underland. Now also (q<sup>d</sup> she) for the knotte in the herte must be from one to an other, and I knowe thy desire, I woll thou underlande these matters to ben faied of thy self, in disprovyng of thy first service, and in strengthyng of thilk that thou hast undertake to thy Margarite perle. A Godde's halte (q<sup>d</sup> I) right wel I se that all this case is possible and true, and therefore I admitted all together. Understanden well (q<sup>d</sup> she) these termes, and loke no contradiccion thou graunt. If God wol (q<sup>d</sup> I) of all these thynges woll I not faile, and if I graunte contradiccion, I should graunt an impossible, and that wer a foule inconvenience. For whiche thynges, Ladie, iwis hereafter I thinke me to kepe.

WELL (q<sup>d</sup> she) thou knowest that every thyng is Cause, where through any thyng hath beyng, that is cleped Caused, then if riches caulen knot in hert, thilke riches arne cause of the ilke precious thyng beyng: But after the sentence of Aristotle, every cause is more in dignite then his thyng caused, wherethrough it followeth richesse to ben more in dignite then thilke knotte, but richesse arne kindly naughtie, badde, and nedy, and the ilke knotte is thing kindly gode, moste praised and desired: Erge thyng naughtie, badde, and nedy, in kindly understanding standing is more worthie, then thyng kindly gode, molle desired and praised: The consequence is false, nedes the antecedente mote ben of the same condicion. But that riches ben badde, naughtie, and nedie, that woll I prove, wherfore thei mowe cause no soch thing, that is so glorious and gode: the more riches thou haste, the more nede hast thou of help 'hem to kepe. Ergo thou nedeest in riches, whiche nede thou shouldest not have if thou 'hem wantest. Then must riches ben nedie, that in ther havynge maken The nedie to helpes, in suretie thy riches to kepen, wherthrough soloweth riches to ben nedie. Every thing causyng evills is bad and naughtie: but riches in one causen misse, in an other thei mowen not evenly stretchen al about. Wherof cometh ple, debate, theft, begilinges, but riches to win, whiche thynges ben bad, and by riches arn caused: ergo the ilke riches ben badde, whiche badnesse and nede ben knitte into riches, by a maner of kindlie properrie, and every Cause and Caused accorden, so that it followeth the ilke riches to have the same accordaunce with badnes and mede, that ther cause asketh. Also every thyng hath his beyng by his cause, then if the cause be destroyed, the beyng of caused is vanished: And so if riches causen love, and riches weren destroyed, the love should vanishe, but the ilke knotte and it be true, maie not vanishe for no goyng of no riches: Ergo riches is no cause of the knotte. And many men, as I saied, setten the cause of the knotte in riches, the ilke knitten the riches, and nothyng the evill: the ilke persones, what ever thei ben, wenen that riches is moste worthie to be had, and that make thei the cause: and so wene thei thilke riches, be better than the persone. Commonly soche asken, rather after the quantitie, then after the qualitie, and soche wenen as well by 'hem self, as by other, that conjuncion of his life, and of his soule is no more precious, but in as mikell as he hath of riches. Alas! howe maie he holden soche thynges precious or noble, that neither han life ne soule, ne ordinaunce of werchyng limmes: soche riches ben more worthie, when thei ben in gatheryng, in departyng ginneth his love of other mennes praisyng. And Avarice gatheryng maketh be hated, and nedie to many out-helpes: and when levethe the possession of soche godes, and thei ginne vanishe, then entereth sorowe and tene in ther herts. O bad and straite ben thilke, that at ther departyng maketh men teneful and sorie, and in the gatheryng of 'hem make menne nedie moche folke at ones mowen not together moche thereof have. A gode geste gladdeth his hoste and all his meinie, but he is a bad geste, that maketh his hoste nedie, and to be aferde of his geste's goyng. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) me wondereth therefore, that the common opinion is thus: he is worthe no more then that he hath in cattel. O (q<sup>d</sup> she) loke thou be not of that opinion, for if golde or money, or other maner of riches, shinen in thy sight, whose is that? Not thine: and tho thei have a little beutie, thei be nothyng in comparison of our kinde, and therefore ye should not set your worthinesse in thing lower then your self, for the riches, the fairenesse, the worthinesse of thilke godes, if there be any soche preciousnesse in 'hem, ar not thin, thou madeste 'hem so never, from other thei come to The, and to other thei shull from The: wherfore embracest thou other weightes godes, as tho thei wer thine kinde hath drawe 'hem by 'hem self. It is soth the godes of the yerth ben ordeined in your fode and nourishing, but if thou wolte holde The apaied with that suffiseth to thy kinde, thou shalt not be in daunger of no soch riches; to kind suffiseth little thing, who that taketh hede. And if thou wolt algates with superfluitie of riches be athroted, thou shalt hasteliche be anoied, or els evill at ese. And fairnesse of fieldes, ne of habitacions, ne multitude of meine, maie not be rekened as riches that are thine owne, for if thei be bad, it is grete sclander and villanie to the occupier, and if thei be gode or faire, the matter of the workman that 'hem made is to praise. How should otherwise bountie be compted for thine, the ilke goddesse and fairnesse be proper to tho thynges 'hem selfe, then if thei be not thin, sorowe not when thei wend: ne glad The not in pompe and in pride, when thou 'hem hast for ther bountie and ther beauties cometh out of ther owne kind, and not of thine owne persone: as faire ben thei in ther not having; as when thou haste 'hem, thei be not faire, for thou haste 'hem; but thou hast gotten 'hem for the fairenesse of them self. And there the valance of men is demed in riches outforthe, wenen me to have no proper gode in them self, but seeke it in straunge thynges. Truly the condicion of gode wening is in The mistourned, to wene your noblenes be not in your self, but in the godes and beutie of other thynges. Parde the bestes that han but feling soules have suffisaunce in ther owne selfe: and ye that ben like to God, seeken increse of suffisaunce from so excellent a kinde, of so low thynges, ye do grete wrong to him that you made lordes over al yerthly thynges, and ye put your worthinesse under the number of the fete of lower thynges and soule, when ye judge thilke riches to be your worthinesse; then put ye your self by estimation under thilke soule thynges, and then leve ye the knowing of your self, so be ye viler then any dombe best, that cometh of shreude vice. Right so thilk person, that loven none evill, for dere worthines of the persone, but for straunge godes, and saith the adornement in the knotte lieth in soche thinge, his errour is perilous and shreude, and he wrieth moche venime, with moche welth, and that knotte maie not be gode, when he hath it gotten. Certes thus hath riches with flickeringe sighte anoied many: and often when there is a throwout shrewe, he coineth al the gold, all the precious stones that mowen be founden to have in his bandon, he weneth no wight be worthe to have soch thynges but he alone. How many hast thou knowe now in late time, that in ther riches supposed suffisaunce have folowed, and now it is all failed? Ye, ladie (q<sup>d</sup> I) that is for misse medling, and otherwise governed thilke riches, then thei should. Yea (q<sup>d</sup> she tho) had not the flode gretlie arised, and throwe to 'hemwarde bothe gravell and Sande, he had made no medlyng. And right as Se yeveth flode, so draweth Se ebbe, and pulleth ayen under wawe all the firste ourthrowe, but if gode piles of noble governaunce in Love, in well-menyng maner ben sadlie grounded, to whiche hold thilke gravell, as for a while, that ayen lightly mowe not it turne: and if the piles ben true, the gravell and sande woll abide. And certes, full warning in love shalt thou never through 'hem get ne cover, that lightlie with an ebbe, ere thou beware, it will ayen meve.

In riches, many men have had tenes and diseses, which thei should not have had, if thereof thei had failed. Through whiche nowe declared, partlie it is shewed, that for riches should the knotte in herte neither ben caused in one, ne in other: truly knot maie ben knitte, and I trow more stedfast in love, though riches failed, and els in riches is the knot, and not in herte. And then soche a knotte is false, when the Se ebbereth and withdraweth the gravel, that soche riches voideth, thilke knotte woll unknitte. Wherfore no truste, no waie, no cause, no parfitte being is in riches, of no soche knot, therefore an other waie must we have.

Honor

Honor in dignitie is wened to yeven a full knotte. Ye certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) and of that opinion ben many, for thei saine dignitie, with honour, and reverence, causen hertes to encheinen, and so abled to knitte toghithir, for the excellence in soverainte of soche degrees.

Now (q<sup>d</sup> she) if dignitie, honoure, and reverence, causen thilke knotte in herte, this knotte is gode and profitable. For every cause of a cause is cause of thyng caused: Then thus, gode thynges and profitable ben by dignitie, honour, and reverence, caused. Ergo thei accorden, and dignities ben gode with reverences and honour, but contraries mowen not accorden: wherfore by reson there should no dignitie, no reverence, none honour accorde with shrewes, but that is false: Thei have ben cause to shrewes, in many shreudnesse, for with 'hem thei accorden. Ergo from beginning, to argue ayenwarde, till it come to the laste conclusion, thei are not cause of the knotte. Lo! all daie at eye arne shrewes not in reverence, in honour, and in dignitie? Yes forsothe, rather then the gode. Then foloweth it, that shrewes rather then gode, shull ben cause of this knotte. But of this contray of all lovers is beleved, and for a sothe openlie determined to holde.

Now (q<sup>d</sup> I) fain would I here, how soch dignities accorden with shrewes.

O (q<sup>d</sup> she) that wolle I shewe in manifolde wise. Ye wene (q<sup>d</sup> she) that dignities of office here in your Cite is as the Sonne, it shineth bright withouten any cloude: whiche thyng, when thei comen in the handes of malicious tyrautes, there cometh moche harme, and more grevaunce therof, then of the wilde fire, though it brende all a strete. Certes, in dignitie of office, the werkes of the occupier shewen the malice and the badnesse in the persone, with shrewes thei maken manifolde harmes, and moch peple shamen. How often han rancours, for malice of the governour should ben maintained? Hath not then soche dignities caused debate, rumours, and evils? Yes, God wote, by soche thynges have ben trusted to, make mennes understandyng encline to many queinte thynges. Thou worstest well, what I mene. Ye (q<sup>d</sup> I) therefore as dignitie soche thyng in tene iwrought, so ayenwarde the substaunce in dignitie changed, relied to bryng ayen gode plite in doying. Do waie, do waie (q<sup>d</sup> she) if it so betide, but that is feld that soch dignitie is betake in a gode manne's governaunce. What thyng is to reckon in the dignities godenesse? Parde the bountie and godenesse is thers, that usen it in gode governaunce, and therefore cometh it, that honour and reverence should ben doen into dignitie, bicause of encrefying vertue in the occupier, and not to the ruler, bicause of soverainte in dignite. Sithen dignitie maie no vertue cause, who is worthie worship for soch godenesse? Not dignitie, but persone that maketh godenesse in dignitie to shine. This is wonder thyng (q<sup>d</sup> I) for me thinketh, as the persone in dignitie is worthie honour for godenesse, so tho a persone for badnesse magre hath deserved, yet the dignitie leneth to be commended. Let be (q<sup>d</sup> she) thou erreth righte foule, dignitie with badnesse is helper to performe the felonous doing: parde wer it kindly gode, or any propertie of kindly vertue hadden in 'hem self, shrewes should 'hem never have, with 'hem should thei never accorde. Water and fire that ben contrarious, mowen not togiðer ben assembled, kinde wolle not suffre soche contraries to joyn. And sithen at eye by experience in doying we seen that shrewes have 'hem more often, then gode men, siker maist thou be, that kindly gode in soch thynges is not appropred. Parde wer thei kindly gode, as well one as other shoulde evenliche in vertue of governaunce ben worthe: but one faileth in godenesse, an other doeth the contrary, and so it sheweth kindly godenesse in dignitie not be grounded. And this same reson (q<sup>d</sup> she) maie be made in generall on all the bodily godes, for thei comen oft to throwout shrewes: After this he is stronge, that hath might to have grete burthens, and he is light and swifte that hath soveraintie in ronning to passe other, right so he is a shrew; on whom shreude thynges and bad han moste werching. And right as Philosophy maketh Philosophers, and my service maketh lovers: right so if dignities weren gode, or vertuous, thei should maken shrewes gode, and tourne ther malice, and make 'hem be virtuous, but that doe thei not, as it is proved, but causen rancour and debate. Ergo thei be not gode, but utterly bad. Had Nero never ben Emperor, should never his dame have be slaine, to maken open the privitie of his engendrure. Herodes for his dignitie slewe many children. The dignitie of King Ihon would have destroyed all Englande. Therefore mokell wisdome and godenes bothe nedeth in a persone, the malice in dignitie sily to bridell, and with a gode bit of a restre to withdrawe, in case it would prauce otherwise then it should: truly ye yeve to dignities wrongful names in your cleping. Thei shuld hete not dignitie, but monstre of badnesse, and manteiner of shrewes. Perde shine the sonne never so bright, and it bring forth no hete, ne selsonably the herbes out brynge of the yerth, but suffre froles and cold, and th'erth baraine to ligge, by time of his compas in circuite about, ye would wonder and dispreise that sonne. If the mone be at full, and sheweth no light, but dark and dimme to your sight appereth, and make distruction of the waters, wol ye not suppose it be under cloude, or in clips? And that some privie thing unknownen to your wittes is cause of soche contrarious doying? Then if clerkes that han full insight, and knowing of soche impedimentes, enforme you of the soth, very idiores ye ben, but if ye yeven credence to thilke clerkes wordes. And yet it doth me tene, to seen many wretches rejoycen, in soch many planettes. Truly little con thei on Philosophy, or els on my lore, that any desire haven soche lighting planettes, in that wise any more to shewe. Gode ladie (q<sup>d</sup> I) tell ye me how ye mene in these thyngs. Lo! q<sup>d</sup> she) the dignities of your citee, Sonne and Mone, nothing in kinde shew ther shining as thei should. For the sonne made no brenning hete in love, but frefed envie in mens hertes, for feblenes of shining hete: and the Mone was about under an old cloud the livynges by waters to destroye. Ladie (q<sup>d</sup> I) it is supposid thei had shined as thei should. Ye (q<sup>d</sup> she) but now it is proved at the full, ther beutie in kindly shining failed, wherfore dignitie of him selven hath no beantie in fairenesse, ne driveth not awaye vices, but encrefeth, and so be thei no cause of the knotte. Now se in gode truthe, holde ye not soche sonnes worthie of no reverence and dignities, worthie of no worship, that maketh men to doe the more harmes? I n'ot (q<sup>d</sup> I). No (q<sup>d</sup> she) and thou se a wise gode man, for his godenesse and wisenesse wolt thou not doe hym worship thereof he is worthie? That is gode skil (q<sup>d</sup> I) it is dewe to soche, bothe reverence and worshippe to have. Then (q<sup>d</sup> she) a shrewe for his shreudnesse, altho he be put forth to for other for ferde, yet is he worthie for shreudnesse to be unworshipped: of reverence no parte is he worthie to have, to contrarious doying belongeth, and that is gode skille. For right as he besmiteth the dignities, thilk same thyng ayenward him smiteth, or els should smite. And over this thou wolt well (q<sup>d</sup> she) that fire in every place heteth where it be, and water maketh wet: why? For kindly werkyng is so iput in 'hem to do soche thynges: for every kindly in werking sheweth his kind. But though a wight had ben Maier of your Cite, many Winter together and come in a straunge place, there he were not knowen, he should for his dignitie have no reverence. Then neither worship ne reverence is kindelic proper in no dignitie, fithen thei shoulde doen ther kinde in soche doying if any were. And if reverence ne worshippekindely be not sette in dignities, and thei more therein ben shewed than godenesse, for that in dignitie is shewed, but it proveth that godenesse kindlie in 'hem is not grounded. I wis neither worship ne reverence, ne godenesse in dignitie, doen none office of kind, for thei have none soche properie in nature of doying, but by false opinion of the peple. Lo! howe sometyme thilke that in your Cite werne in dignitie noble, if thou liste 'hem nempne, thei ben nowe overtourned, bothe in worshippe, in name, and in reverence; wherefore soche dignities have no kindely werchyng of worship, and of reverence, he that hath no worthinesse on it self: Now it riseth, and now it vanisheth, after the variaunte opinion in false hertes of unstable peple.

Wherefore, if thou desire the knotte of this jewelle, or els if thou wouldest suppose she should sette the knotte on The, for soche maner of dignitie, then thou weneest beantie or godenesse of the ilke somewhat encrefeth the godenesse or vertue in the bodie: but dignities of 'hem self ben not gode, ne yeven reverence ne worship by ther owne kinde, howe should thei then yeve to any other, a thing, that by no waie mow thei have 'hem self? It is seen in dignitie of the Emperour, and of many mo other, that thei mowe not of 'hem selve kepe ther worship, ne ther reverence, that in a little while it is now up, and now down, by unstedfast hertes of the peple. What bountie mowe thei yeve, that with Cloude lightlie levethe his shynyng? Certes to the occupier is mokell apeired, fithen soche doing doeth vilanie to him that maie it not maintain, wherefore thilke way to the knotte is croked: and if any desire to come to the knot, he must leve this waie on his left side, or els shal he never come there.

AVaileth aught (q<sup>d</sup> she) power of mighte in maintenaunce of worthie to come to this knot. Parde (q<sup>d</sup> I) ye, for hertes ben ravished from soche maner thyngs. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) though a fole's herte, is with thyng ravished, yet therfore is no generall cause of the powers, ne of a liker parsite herte to be loked after. Was not Nero the moste shrewde, one of thilke that men rede, and yet had he power to make Senatours, Justices, and Princes of many landes? Was not that grete power? Yes certes (q<sup>d</sup> I). Well (q<sup>d</sup> she) yet might he not helpe hymself out of dilec, when he gan fall. Howe many ensamples canst thou remember of kynges, grete and noble, and huge power holden, and yet thei might not kepe 'hem selve from wretchednesse. How wretched was kyng Henry Curtmantil ere he diede? He had not so moche as to cover with his members: and yet was he one of the gretest kynges of all the Normandes offspring, and moste possession had. O, a noble thing and clere is power, that is not founden mightie to kepe hymself.

Now truelie a grete fole is he, that for soche thyng would set the knotte in thyn herte. Also power of relmes is not thilke gretest power emonges the worldlie powers reckened? And if soche powers han wretchednesse in 'hemself, it foloweth other powers of febler condicion to ben wretched, and then that wretchednesse should ben cause of soch a knot. But every wight, that hath reson, wote well that wretchednesse by no waie maie ben cause of none soche knotte, wherefore soche power is no cause. That powers have wretchednesse in 'hem self maie right lightly ben preved.

If power lacke on any side, on that side is no power, but no power is wretchednes: for all be it so, the power of Emperours or kynges, or els of ther relmes (which is the power of the Prince) stretchen wide and brode, yet besides is there mokell folke, of whiche he hath no commaundemente ne lordship; and there as lacketh his power, his nonpower entereth, where under springeth, that maketh 'hem wretches. Nopower is wretchednesse, and nothyng els: but in this maner hath kynges more porcion of wretchednes, than of power. Truly soche powers ben unmightie, for ever thei ben in drede, how the ilke power from lesyng maie be keped of sorowe, so drede sorily pricketh ever in ther hertes: Little is the power, which careth and ferdeeth it self to maintaine. Unmightie is that wretchednesse, whiche is entered by the ferdfull wenyng of the wretche hym self: and knotte imaked by wretchednesse, is betwene wretches, and wretches all thyng bewailen: wherefore the knotte should be bewailed, and there is no soche parfit blisse that we supposed at the ginning. Ergo, power in nothing should cause soch knottes. Wretchednesse is a kindlie properie in soche power, as by waie of drede, whiche thei mowe not eschue, ne by no waie live in sikernes. For thou wolte welle (q<sup>d</sup> she) he is nought mighty, that wolde done that he may not don ne performe. Therefore (q<sup>d</sup> I) these kynges and lordes that han suffisaunce at the ful of men and other thinges, mowen well ben holden mighty: ther commaundementes ben done, it is nevermore denied. Fole (q<sup>d</sup> she) or he wot him selfe mightye or wote it not: for he is nought mighty, that is blinde of his might, and wote it not.

That is soth (q<sup>d</sup> I). Than yf he wot it, he must nedes ben adrade to lesen it. He that wote of his might is in doute that he mote nedes lese, and so ledeth him drede to ben unmightie. And if he retche not to lese, litel is that worth that of the lesing reson retcheth nothyng: and if it were mighty in power or in strength, the lesing shulde ben with set, and whan it cometh to the lesinge he may not withsitte. Ergo, thilke might is leude and naughtie. Soch mightes arne ylike to postes and pillars that upright stonden, and grete might han to bere, manye charges, and yf they croke on any side, litel thinge maketh 'hem overthrowe. This is a gode ensample (q<sup>d</sup> I) to pillars and postes that I have sene overthrowed my self, and hadden they ben underput with anye helpes, they had not so lightlie fal. Than holdest thou him myghty that hath many men armed and many servautes, and ever he is adrade of 'hem in his herte, and for he gasteth 'hem sometime he mote the more fere have. Comenly he that othet agasteth, othet in 'him ayenward werchen the fame: and thus warnished mote he be, and of warnishe the houre drede: Litel is that might and right leude, who so taketh hede. Than semeth it (q<sup>d</sup> I) that soche famulers aboute kynges and grete lordes, shull grete might have. Althoughe a sipher in augrim have no might in significacion of it selve, yet he yeveth power in significacion to other, and these clepe I the helpes to a post, to kepe him from falling. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) thilke skilles ben leude. Why? but if the shores ben wel grounded, the helpes shullen sliden and suffre the charge to fal, ther myght lytel availerth. And so me thinketh (q<sup>d</sup> I) that a poste alone stondyng upright upon a basse, maye lenger in grete burthen endure, then croked pillars for all ther helpes, and ther grounde be not siker. That is soth (q<sup>d</sup> she) for as if the blind in bering of the lame ginne stamble, bothe shuld fal, right so soch pillars pillers so environed with helps in falinge of the grounde faileth all togiðer, howe ofte than soche famulers in ther most pride of prosperite ben sodainly overthrowen! Thou haste knowe manye in a moment so ferre overthrowe, that cover might they never, whan the hevynesse of soche faling cometh by case of fortune, they mowe it not eschewe: and might and power, if ther wer any, shulde of strenght soche thinges voide and weive, and so it is not. Lo than whiche thing is this power, that tho men han it they ben agast, and in no time of full having be they siker: and if they wold weyve drede, as they mowe not, lytel is in worthines: Eye therfore on so noughty thing any knot to cause! Lo! in adversitie, thilke ben his foes that glosed and semed frendes in welth, thus arne his familiars his foes and his enemies: And nothing is werse ne more mighti for to anoye, than is a familier enemye, and these thinges may they not weive, so treuly ther might is not worth a cresse. And over al thinge, he that may not withdrawe the bridel of his fleshy lustes and his wretched complaintes (now thinke on thy self) trewly he is not mighty: I can sene no way that lithe to the knotte. Thilke peple than, that setten ther hertes upon soch mightes and powers, often ben begiled. Parde he is not myghty that may do any thinge, that another may done him the selve, and that men have as grete power over hym as he over other. A justice that demeth men, ayenward hath ben often demed. Busyris slew his gestes, and he was slayne of Hercules his gest. Hugest betraihed many menne, and of Collo was he betraied. He that with swerde smiteth, with swerde shal be smitten. Than gan I to studien a while on these thinges, and made a countenance with my hande in maner to ben huilte. Nowe let sene (qð she) me thinketh somewhat there is within thy soule, that troubleth thy understanding, saye on what it is. (Qð I tho) me thinketh that although a man by power have soche might over me as I have over other, that disproveth no might in my persone, but yet maye I have power and might never the later. Se now (qð she) thine owne leudenesse: He is mighty that maye without wretchednesse, and he is unmighty that may it not withsitte: but than he that might over The, and he wold put on The wretchednes, thou might it not withsitte. Ergo, thou seest thy selfe what foloweth. But nowe (qð she) wouldest thou not skorne and thou se a flye han power to don harme to an other flie, and thilke have no might ne ayeturninge him selfe to defende? Yes certes (qð I). Who is a frailer thinge (qð she) than the fleshye body of a man, over whiche have often tyme flies, and yet lasething than a flye mokel myght in grevaunce and anoyinge, withouten anye withsittyng, for all thilke manne's mightes. And sithen thou seest thine fleshy body in kindly power faile, howe shoulde than the accident of a thyng be in more suretie of being than substantial: wherfore thilke thinges that we clepe power, is but accident to the fleshy body, and so they maie not have that suretie in might, which wanteth in the substancial body. Why there is no waye to the knotte, that loketh aryght after the hye waye as he shulde.

Verelye it is proved that richesse, dignite, and power ben not trewe way to the knotte, but as rath by soche thinges the knotte to be unbound: Wherfore on these thynges I rede no wight trust, to gette anye gode knotte. But what shuld we saye of renome in the peples mouthes, shuld that ben any cause? what supposeth thou in thin hert?

Certes (qð I) yes I trowe, for your flye resons I dare not safely it saye. Than (qð she) wol I prove that shrewes as rathe shul ben in the knotte as the gode, and that wer ayenst kinde. Fayne (qð I) would I that here, me thinketh wonder how renome shuld as well knitte a shrewe as a gode persone: renome in every degre hath avaunced, yet wist I never the contrarye: shulde than renome accorde with a shrewe? It maye not sinke in my stomake till I here more. Now (qð she) have I nat said alwayes, that shrewes shul not have the knotte. What nedeth (qð I) to reherse that any more, I wotte wel every wight by kindly reson shrewes in knittinge wold eschewe. Than (qð she) the gode ought thilke not to have. How els (qð I). It were grete harme (qð she) that the gode were weved and put out of espoire of the knot, if he it desired. O (qð I) alas! on soche thinge to thinke, I wene that heven wepeth to se soch wronges here ben suffred on yerth: the gode ought it to have and no wight elles. The godnesse (qð she) of a person maye not ben knowe outforth, but by renome of the knowers, wherfore he must be renomed of godenes to come to the knot. So muste it be (qð I) or elles all losse that we carpen. Sothly (qð she) that were grete harme, but if a gode man might have his desyres in service of thilke knot, and a shrewe to be veined, and they ben not knownen in general but by lacking and praising and in renome, and so by the consequence it foloweth, a shrewe ben praised and knit, and a gode to be forsake and unknit. Ah (qð I tho) have ye lady ben herabouten, yet wold I se by grace of our argumentes better declared, howe gode and bad do accorden by lacking and praising, me thinketh it ayenst kinde. Nay (qð she) that shalt thou se as yerne: these elementes han contrarious qualites in kinde, by whiche they mow not accorde no more than gode and bad: and in qualites they accorde, so that contraries by qualite accorden by qualyte. Is not yerth drie, and water that is nexte and bytwene th' erth is wete, drie and wete ben contrary and mowen not accorde, and yet this discordaunce is bounde to accorde by cloudes, for bothe elementes ben colde. Right so the eyre that is nexte the water is wete, and eke it is hot. This eyre by his hete contrarieth water that is colde, but thilke contrarioulye is oned by moisture, for both be they moist. Alto the fyre that is nexte the yerth, and it encloseth al about, is drie, wherthrough it contrarieth yerth that is wete: and in hete they accorde, for bothe they ben hote. Thus by these accordaunces discordantes ben joyned, and in a maner of acordaunce they acorden by conneccon, that is knittinge togiðer, of that accorde cometh a maner of melodye that is right noble. Right so gode and bad arne contrarie in doinges, by lacking and praising: gode is bothe lacked and praised of some, and badde is bothe lacked and praised of some: wherfore ther contrarioulye acorde bothe by lacking and praising. Than foloweth it though gode be never so mokel praised, oweth more to ben knit than the bad: or elles bad for the renome that he hath must be taken as wel as the gode, and that oweth not. No forsothe (qð I). Well (qð she) than is renome no waye to the knot: lo: sole (qð she) how clerkes writen of soche glorie of renome. O glorie, glorie, thou art none other thinge to thousandes of folke, but a grete sweller of eres. Manye one hath had ful grete renome by false opinion of variaunt peple: And what is fouler than folk wrongefully to ben praised, or by malice of the peple giltlesse lacked? Nedes shame foloweth thereof to hem that wyth wronge prayseth, and also to the desertes praised, and vylanye and reprofe of him that disclaundreth sureth his godenesse, not by slevelesse wordes of the peple, but by sothfastnesse of conscience? by God sothinge. And if it be faire a manne's name be celled by moche folkes praising, and fouler thing that mo folke not praifen. I said to The a litel here before, that no folke in straunge countreies nought praifen soch renom may not comen to ther cres, because of unknowing, and other obstacles, as I saide: Wherefore more folke not praifen, and that is right soule to him that renome desireth, to wete lesse folke praifen than renome enhance. I trowe the thanke of a peple is naught worth, in remembraunce to take, ne it procedeth of no wise judgement, never is it stedfast pardurable: It is veine and fleyng, with winde wasteth and encrefeth. Trewly soch glory ought to be hated. If gentillesse be a clere thyng, renome and glorie to enhance, as in reckening of thy linage, than is gentillesse of thy kinne, for why? it semeth that gentillesse of thy kinne is but prayfinge and renome that come of thine auncestres desertes, and if so be that prayfinge and renome of ther desertes make ther clere gentillesse, than mote they nedes ben gentill for ther gentill dedes, and not thou: for of thy self cometh not soche maner gentillesse, prayfinge of thy desertes. Than gentillesse of thine auncestres, that foraine is to The, maketh The not gentil, but ungentil and reproved, and if thou continuest not ther gentillesse. And therefore a wise man ones said: Better is it thy kinne to ben by The gentiled, then thou to glorifye of thy kinne's gentillesse, and hast no desert thereof thy selfe.

Gode childe (qð she) what echeth soche renome to the conscience of a wise man, that loketh and measureth

How passing is the beauteie of fleshy bodyes? more flyttinge than movable floures of sommer. And if thine eyen weren as gode as the Lynx, that may fene thorow many stone walles, both and faire and foule in ther entrailes of no maner hew shulde apere to thy sight, that were a foule sight. Than is fairenesse by feblesse of eyen, but of no kind, wherefore thilke shuld be no way to the knot: Whan thilke is went the knot wendeth after. Lo! now at al proves, none of al these thinges mowe parfitly ben in understanding, to ben waye to the duringe blisse of the knotte. But nowe to conclusion of these maters herkeneth these words. Very sommer is know from the Winter: in shorter course draweth the dayes of December, then in the moneth of June: The springes of May faden and folowen in Octobre. These thinges be not unbounden from ther olde kind, they have not losse ther worke of ther proper estate. Men of voluntarious wil withsitte that heven governeth. Other thinges suffren thinges patiently to werche: Man in what estate he be, yet wolde he ben chaunged. Thus by queint thynges blisse is desired, and the fruit that cometh of these springes n'is but anguis and bitter, although it be a while swete, it may not be withhold, hastily they departe: thus all daye faileth thinges that soles wende. Right thus hast thou failed in thy firste weninge. He that thinketh to faile, and drawe after the course of that sterre, de polo antarctico, shall he never come Northward to the contrary sterre of polus arcticus, of whiche thinges if thou take kepe, thy first out waye goinge prison and exil may be cleped. The grounde falsed underneth, and so haste thou sayled. No wight I wene blameth him that stineth in misgoing, and secheth redy way of his blisse.

Nowe me thinketh (q<sup>d</sup> she) that it suffiseth in my shewing the wayes, by dignite, richesse, renome, and power, if thou loke clerely arne no wayes to the knotte.

EVery argumente lady (q<sup>d</sup> I tho) that ye han maketh in these fore nempned matters, me thinketh hem in my full wytte conceived, shall I no more if God will in the contrarie be begiled: But faine wolde I and it were your will, blisse of the knotte to me wer declared, I might fele the better howe my herte might assente to pursue th'ende in service, as he hath begonne. O (q<sup>d</sup> she) there is a melodye in heven, whiche clerkes clepen armony, but that is not in breking of voice, but it is a maner swete thing of kindly werching, that causeth joy out of nombre to reckon, and that is joined by reson and by wisdom, in a quantite of proporcion of knitting. God made all thing in reson and in witte of proporcion of melodye, we mowe not suffice to shewe. It is written by grete clerkes andwise, that in erthly thinges lightly by studye, and by travale, the knowinge may be gotten: but of soche heavenly melodye mokel travaille woll bringe out in knowinge right lytel. Swetnesse of this paradyse hath you ravished, it semeth ye slepten, rested from all other diseses, so kindly is your hertes therein ygrounded. Blisse of two hertes in full love knitte maye not aright ben imagined: ever is ther contemplacion in ful of thoughty study to plessaunce, matter in bringing comforte everiche to other. And therefore of erthelye thinges, mokel matter lyghtly cometh in your lerning. Knowledge of understanding that is nighe after ye, but not so nigh the covetise of knittinge in your hertes: More soverain desire hath every wight in litel hering of heavenly conninge, than of mokell materiall purposes in yerth. Right so it is in propertie of my servauntes, that they ben more affyched in sterenge of lytel thinge in his desyre, than of mokel other matter, lasse in his conscience. This blisse is a manner of sowne delycious, in a queint voice touched, and no dynne of notes: there is none impression of brekinge labour. I canne it not otherwise nempne, for wanting of privie wordes, but paradyse terrestre ful of delicious melodye, withouten travaille in sowne perpetuell service, in ful joye coveted to endure. Only kinde maketh hertes in understandinge so to slepe, that otherwise may it not ben nempned, ne in other manere names for lyking swetnesse can I nat it declare, all sugre and honye, al minstrelsy and melodye ben but sore and galle in comparison, by no maner proporcion to reken, in respecte of this blisful joye. This armony, this melodye, this perdurable joye may nat be in doinge, but betwene hevns and elementes, or twey kindly hertes, full knit in trowth of naturell understanding, withouten wening and disceit, as hevns and planettes, whiche thinges continually for kindly accordaunces forieteth al contrarious mevinges, that into passyve diseses maye sowne, evermore it thirsteth after more working. These thinges in proporcion is so wel joyned, that it undoth al thing, whiche into badnes by any way may be accompted. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) this is a thing precious and noble. Alas that falsenesse ever or wantrust shuld ever be maintained, this joy to void! Alas that ever any wretch shulde thorow wrathe or envy, jangling dare make to shove this melodye so farre a backe that openly dare it not ben used! truly wretches ben fullfyllled with envy and wrathe, and no wight els. Flebring and tales in soche wretches dare apere openly in every wight's ere with ful mouth so charged, mokel malyce moved many innocentes to shende, God wold ther soule therwith were strangeled. Lo! trowth in this blisse is hid and over al under cover him hideth: he dare nat come a place for waiting of shrewes. Commonly badnes godnes amaistereth; with my self and my soule this joy wolde I bye if the godenesse wer as moch as the nobli in melodi. O (q<sup>d</sup> she) what godenesse may be accompted more in this material world! truly non that shalte thou understande. Is not every thing gode that is contrariant and distroieng yvel? How els (q<sup>d</sup> I)

I) Envy, wrathe and falsenes ben generall (q<sup>d</sup> she) and that wot every man beyng in his right mind, the knotte the whiche we have in this blisse is contrariaunt and destroieth soche maner yvelles. Ergo it is gode, what hath caused anye wight to do anye gode dede? Fynd me any gode, but if this knot be the chiefe cause: Nedes mote it be gode, that causeth so many gode dedes. Every cause is more, and worthier than thing caused, and in that more's possession all thynges lesse ben compted. As the kinge is more than his peple, and hath in possession al his relme after: Right so the knot is more than al other godes, thou might reckon al thynges lasse, and that to him longethe owethe into his mores causes of worship and of wil do tourne, it is elles rebel, and out of his mores defending to voyd. Ryght so of every godenesse into the knot and into the cause of his worship oweth to tourne. And trewly every thinge that hath beyng profitablye is gode, but nothing hath to ben more profitably than this knot: Kynges it maintaineth, and hem ther powers to maintaine: It makethe misse to bene amended, with gode governaunce in doynge. It closeth hertes so togidir, that rancour is outthresten. Who that it lengest kepeth, lengest is gladed. I trow (q<sup>d</sup> I) heretykes, and misse-mening peple hence-forward wol maintaine this knotte, for thierthrough shull they ben maintained, and utterly woll tourne, and leve ther olde yvel understanding, and knitte this godenes, and proffer so ferre in service, that name of servauntes might they have. Ther jangles shal cese, me thinketh hem lacketh mater now to alge. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> love) if they of gode will thus turned as thou sayst, wolen trewly perfourme, yet shull they be abled party of this blisse to have: and they wol not, yet shul my servauntes the werre wel susteyne in min helpe of mayntenance to the end. And they for ther gode travaile shullen in rewarde so ben meded, that endlesse joy body and soule togidir in this shullen abyden, ther is ever action of blisse withouten possible corrupcion, there is action perpetuel in werke without travaile, there is everlastyng passyfe withouten any of labour: continuel plite without cesing coveted, to endure. No tonge maye tell ne herte maye thinke the lesse pointe of this blisse. God bringe me thi<sup>d</sup>ir (q<sup>d</sup> I than). Continueth wel (q<sup>d</sup> she) to the ende, and thou might not fail than, for though thou speke not here, yet shal the passion of thy martrid lyfe ben writen, and radde toforne the gret Jupiter, that God is of routhe, an highe in the holownesse of heren, ther he sit in his trone, and ever thou shalt forward ben holden amonge all these hevins for a knight, that mightest with no penaunce ben discomfited. He is a verie martyr that livingely goinge is gnawen to the bones. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) these ben gode wordes of comforte, a litell mine hert is rejoyfied in a mery wife. Ye (q<sup>d</sup> she) and he that is in heaven felith more joye, than whan he firste herde therof speke. So it is (q<sup>d</sup> I) but wist I the soth, that after disese comforte wold folowe with blisse, so as ye have often declared, I wold wel suffre this passion with the better chere, but my thoughtful sorow is endlesse, to think howe I am cast out of a welesfare, and yet daineth not this yvel none herte none hede to meward throwe, whiche thynges wold gretly me by wayes of comforte disporte, to weten in my selfe a litel with o-ther me ben ymoned: and my sorowes peisen not in ther balaunce the weight of a pese: Slings of ther daunger, so hevily peysen, they drawe my causes so hie that in ther eyen they semen but light and right lytell.

O, for (q<sup>d</sup> she) heaven with skies that soule cloudes maken and darke wethers with grette tempestes and huge, maketh the mery dayes with softe shinninge sonnes. Also the yere with-draweth floures and beaute of herbes and of yerth. The same yere maketh springes and jolyte in Ver so to renovel with painted coloures, that erthe semeth as gay as heaven. Sees that blasfeth, and with wawes throweth shippes of which the living cretures for grette peril of hem dreden: right so the same Sees maketh smothe waters and golden sailen, and comforteth hem, with noble havan that firste were so ferde. Haste thou not (q<sup>d</sup> she) lerned in thy youth that Jupiter hath in his wardrobe bothe garmentes of joye and of sorowe? What wost thou howe sone he wol tourne of The thar garmente of care, and clothe The in blisse? Parde it is not ferre fro The. Lo an olde proverbe aleged by many wise! Whan bale is grettest, than is bote anie bere. Wherof wylt thou dismaye? hope wel and serve wel, and that shall The save with thy gode by-leve. Ye, ye (q<sup>d</sup> I) yet se I not by reson howe this blisse is comming, I wot it is contingent, it maye fal an other. O (q<sup>d</sup> she) I have mokel to done to clere thine understanding and voide these errors out of thy mynde, I woll prove it by reson thy wo maie not alway endure. Every thinge kindly (q<sup>d</sup> she) is governed and ruled by the heavenly bodies, whiche haven ful werching here on erth, and after course of these bodies all course of your doynge here ben governed and ruled by kind. Thou woste well by cours of planettes all your dayes proceden, and to everich of singuler houres be enterchaunged stonde me about, by submitted worchyng naturelly to suilre, of whiche chaunges cometh these transitorie tymes, that maketh revolving of your yeres thus stoundmele, every hath ful might of worching, till all seven han hadde ther cours about. Of whiche worchings and possession of houres, the dayes of the weke have take ther names, after denominacion in these seven planettes. Lo your sonday ginneth at the firste houre after none on the saturday, in whiche houre is than the sonne in ful might of worching, of whom sonday taketh this name. Next him foloweth Venus, and after Mercurius, and than the Mone, so than Saturnus, after whom Jovis, and than Mars, and ayen than the Sonne, and so forthe be xxiii. houres together, in whiche houre ginning in the ii. day stante the Mone, as maister for that time to rule, of whom monday taketh his name, and this course foloweth of al other dayes generally in doinge. This course of nature of these bodies chaunging slinten at a certaine terme, limited by ther first kind, and of hem al governementes in this elemented world proceden, as in springes, constellacions, engendures, and al that folowen kind and reson; wherfore the course that foloweth sorow and joy, kindly moten entrechangen ther tymes, so that alway on wele as alway on wo may not endure. Thus seest thou apertly thy sorowe into wele mote ben chaunged, wherfore in soche case to better fide evermore enclin thou shuldest. Trewly nexte the ende of sorowe anon entreth joye, by maner of necessite, it wol ne may non other betide, and so thy contingency is disproved: if thou holde this opinion any more, thy wit is right leud. Wherfore in ful conclusion of al this, thilke Margarite thou desirest, hath ben to The dere in thy herre, and for her hast thou suffred many thoughtfull diseses, hereafter shall be cause of mokell myrth, and joy, and loke how glad canst thou bene, and cese al thy passed hevynesse with manyfolde joyes. And than wol I as blithly here The speken thy myrthes in joy, as I nowe have yherde thy sorowes and thy complaints. And if I mowe in aughte thy joy encrease, by my trouthe on my side shal nar be leved for no maner travaile, that I with al my mightes right blithly wol helpe and ever ben redy you both to plesse. And than thanked I that lady with al godely manner that I worthily coude, and trewly I was gretly rejoyced in myne herte, of her faire behestes and profered me to be slawe in all that she me wold ordein whyl my life lasted.

ME thinketh (q<sup>d</sup> I) that ye have rightewel declared, that way to the knot shuld not ben in none of these disproving thinges, and nowe order of our purpose this asketh, that ye shuld me shew if any way be thither, and which thilke way shuld ben, so that openly may be sey the very hye way in ful confusion of these other thinges.

Thou shalt (q<sup>d</sup> she) understande, that one of thre lyves (as I firste said) every creature of mankind is sprongen, and so forth procedeth. These lyves ben thorow names departed in thre maner of kindes, as bestialliche, manlyche, and resonabliche, of whiche two ben used by fleshely body, and the thirde by his soule. Bestiall amonge resonables is forboden in every lawe and every secte, bothe in christen and other, for everye wight dispiseth him that lyveth by lustes and delites, as him that is thral and bounden servaunte to thinges right foule, soche ben compted werse than men, he shal nat in ther degre ben rekened, ne for soche one allowed. Heritikes saine they chosen life bestiall, that voluptuouslye lyven, so that (as I firste saide to The) in manly and resonable livinges our mater was to declare, but manly lyfe in lyving after flesch, or els fleschly waies to chese may nat blisse in this knot be conquered, as by reson it is proved. Wherefore by resonable life he must nedes it have, sithe a way is to this knotte, but nat by the first tway lyves, wherefore nedes more it ben to the thirde, and for to lyve in fleshe but nat after fleshe, is more resonablich than manlyche rekened by clerkes. Therefore how this way cometh in I wol it blithely declare.

Se now (q<sup>d</sup> she) that these bodily godes of manliche livinges, yelden sorowfull sloundes and smertande houres. Who so wel remembre him to ther endes, in ther worchinges they ben thoughtful and forie. Right as a Be that hathe had his honie, anon at his flight beginneth to stinge: So thilke bodily godes at the laste mote away, and than sting they at ther goinge, wherthroughe entreth and clene voideth al blisse of this knot.

Forsothe (q<sup>d</sup> I) me thinketh I am wel served, in shewing of these wordes. Although I hadde lyttell in respecte amonge other grete and worthy, yet had I a faire parcel, as me thought for the tyme, in forthering of my sustenance, whiche while it dured, I thought me having mokel hony to mine estate. I had richesse suffisauntly to weive nede, I had dignite to be reverenced in worship. Power me thought that I had to kepe fro min enemies, and me semed to shine in glory of renome, as manhode asketh in mene, for no wighte in myne administracyon coude non yvels ne trechery by sothe cause on me putte. Lady, your selve weten wel, that of tho confederacies maked by my souverains, I n'as but a servaunt, and yet mokel mene folke woll fully ayenste reson thilke maters mainteine, in whiche maintenance glorien them self, and as often ye haven saide, therof ought nothing in yvel to be laide to me wardes, sithe as repentaunt I am touned, and no more I thinke, neither tho thinges ne none soch other to sustene, but utterly distroye without medling maner, in all my mightes. How am I now cast out of al swetenes of blisse, and mischevously stongen by passed joye? Sorowfully must I bewaile, and live as a wretche. Every of tho joyes, is turned into his contrary: for richesse now have I povertie, for dignite now am I imprisoned, in stede of power, wretchednesse I suffre, and for glory of renome I am now dispised, and fouliche hated: thus hath farne fortune, that sodainly am I overthrowen, and out of all welth dispoiled.

Truely me thinketh this waie in entre is right harde God graunt me better grace er it be al passed, th' other waie lady, me thought right swete. Now certes (q<sup>d</sup> Love) me list for to chide. What aileth thy darke dulnesse? Woll it not in clerenesse ben sharpened? Have I not by many resons to The shewed, soch bodily godes failen to yeve blesse, ther might so forth woll not stretch? Shame (q<sup>d</sup> she, it is to saie) thou liest in thy wordes. Thou ne hast wist but right few, that these bodily godes hadde all atones commenie thei dwellen not togethir. He that plentie hath in riches, of his kinne is ashamed: an other of linage right noble and well know, but povertie him handeleth, he were lever unknowe. An other hath these, but renome of peples praising maie he not have, over all he is hated, and defamed of thinges righte foule. An other is faire and semely, but dignite him faileth: and he that hath dignite is croked or lame, or els mishapen, and foully despised. Thus partable these godes dwellen, commonly in one housholde ben thei but silde. Lo how wretched is your trust, on thing that woll not accorde! Me thinketh thou clepest thilk plite thou wer in felines of fortune, and thou saiest for that that felines is departed, thou art awretch. Then foloweth this upon thy wordes, every soule resonable of man maie not die, and if deth endeth felines, and maketh wretches, as nedes of fortune maketh it an end. Than soules after deth of the body in wretchednes should liven. But we knowe many that han gotten the blisse of heaven after ther deth. Howe then maie this life maken men blisful, that when it passeth, it yeveth no wretchednesse, and many times blisse, if in this life he can live as he should. And wolt thou accompt with fortune, that now at the first she hath doen The tene and sorowe: if thou loke to the maner of all glad things and sorowful, thou maist not naie it, that yet, and namely now thou standest in noble plite in a gode ginning, what gode forthgoing herafter. And if thou wen to be a wretch, for soch welth is passed, why then art thou not well fortunate, for badde thinges and anguis wretchednes ben passed? Art thou now come first into the hostrie of this life, or els the both of this world, art thou now a sodain gest into this wretched exile? Wenest there be any thing in this yerth stable? Is not thy first arest passed, that brought The in mortall sorowe? Ben these not mortall things agon with ignorance of bestiall wit, and hast received reson in knowing of vertue? What comforte is in thy herte? The knowing fikerly in my service be grounded. And wolt thou not wel as I said, that deth maketh ende of all fortune? What then, standest thou in noble plite, litle hede or recking to take, if thou let fortune passe ding, or els that she fle when her list, now by thy live. Parde a man hath nothyng so lese as his life, and for to holde that he doeth all his cure and diligent travaille. Then saie I thou art blisfull and fortunate sely, if thou knowe thy godes, that thou hast yet beleved, whiche nothing may doubt that thei ne ben more worthy than thy life? What is that (q<sup>d</sup> I); gode contemplacion (q<sup>d</sup> she) of well-doing in vertue, in time coming, bothe in plesance of me, and of thy Margarite perle: hastily thyn hert in full blisse what her shal be esed. Therefore dismay The not, fortune in hate grevously ayenst thy bodilie person, ne yet to grete tempest hath she not sent to The, sithe the holding cables and ankers of thy life holden by knirting so faste, that thou discomforte The nought of time that is now, ne dispaire The not of time to come, but yeven the comfort in hope of well-doing, and of getting again the double of thy lesing, with encreasing love of thy Margarit perle therto. For this hitherto thou hast had al her ful daunger, and so thou mighte amend al that is misse and and all defautes that sometime thou diddest, and that now in all thy time to that ilke Margarite in full service of my lore thine hert hath continued, wherefore she ought moche the rather encline fro her dangerous fete. These thinges ben yet knit by the holding anker in thy live, and holden mote thei: To God I praie al these things at ful ben performed. For while this anker holdeth, I hope thou shalt safely escape, and while thy true mening service about bryng, in dispite of all false meners, that The of newe harten for this true service, thou art now entered.

Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) emong thynges I asked a question, which was the waie to the knot. Trulie ladie, how so it be, I tempt you with questions and answers, in speking of my first service, I am now in ful purpose in the prick of the hert, that thilke service was an enprisonment, and alwaie bad and naughtie, in no maner to be desired. Ne that in getting of the knot maie it nothing availe. A wise gentil hert loketh after vertue, and non other bodily joies alone. And bicause toform this in tho waies I was fet, I wot well my self I have erred, and of the blisse failed, and so out of my waie hugely have I ronne. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) that is soth, and there thou hast miswente, eschue that pathe from henceforward I rede. Wonder I trulie, why the mortalle folke of this worlde seche these waies outforthe, and it is prived in your self. Lo how ye ben confounded with errour and follie! The knowing of very cause and waie, is godenes and vertue. Is there any thing to The more precious than thy self? Thou shalt have in thy power, that thou wouldest never lese, and that in no waie maie be taken fro The, and thilk thing is that is cause of this knotte. And if deth mowe it not reve, more than an yerthly creture, thilke thing then abideth with thy self soule. And so our conclusion, to make soch a knot thus gotten, abideth with this thing, and with the soule, as longe as thei laste. A soule dieth never, vertue and godenes evermore with the soule endureth, and this knot is perfite blisse. Then this soul in this blisse endlesse shall endure. Thus shul hertes of a true knot ben esed: thus shul ther soules ben plesed: thus perpetually in joye shul thei sing. In gode trouth (q<sup>d</sup> I) here is a gode beginning, yve us more of this waie. (Q<sup>d</sup> she) I saied to The not long sithen, that resonable life was one of thre thinges, and it was proved to the soule. Every soule of reson hath two thinges of steryng life, one in vertue, and an other in the bodilie working: and whan the soule is the maister over the bodie, then is a manne maister of himself: and a man to be a maister over himself, liveth in vertue and in godenesse, and as reson of vertue techeth. So the soule and the body worching vertue togider, liven resonable life, whiche clerkes clepen felicitie in living, and therein is the hic waie to this knot. These olde Philosphers, that hadden no knowyng of divine grace, of kindly reson alone wenden that of pure nature, without any help of grace, me might have ishoned the other livinges: resonable have I lived, and for I thinke hereafter, if God woll (and I have space) thilke grace after my leude knowyng declare, I leve it as at this tyme. But (as I saied) he that outforthe loketh after the waies of this knotte, connyng with whiche he shold knowe the waie inforthe, slepeth for the tyme, wherefore he that woll this waie know, must leve the loking after false waies outforthe, and open the eyen of his conscience, and unclothe his hert. Seest not he that hath trust in the bodily life, is so busie bodily woundes to anoint in kepyng from smert (for all out maie thei not be healed) that of woundes in his true understanding he taketh no hede? the knowing even forth slepeth so harde, but anone as in knowing awake, then ginneth the privie medicines, for helyng of his true content, inwardes lightlie helethe conscience, if it be well handled. Then must nedes these waies come out of the soul by steryng life of the bodie, and els maie no man come to perfite blisse of this knot: and thus by this mene he shal come to the knot, and to the perfite felinelle that he wende have had in bodily godes outforthe? Ye (q<sup>d</sup> I) shall he have bothe knot, riches, power, dignitie, and renome in this maner waie? Ye (q<sup>d</sup> she) that shall I shewe The. Is he not riche that hath suffisaunce, and hath the power that no man maie amastrien? Is not grete dignitie to have worship and reverence? And hath he not glory of renome, whose name perpetnall is during, and out of number in comparacion? These be the thinges that men wenen to gotten outforthe (q<sup>d</sup> I). Ye (q<sup>d</sup> she) thei that loken after a thing that nought is, thereof in all ne in partie longe mowe thei gapen after: that is sothe (q<sup>d</sup> I:) therefore (q<sup>d</sup> she) thei that sechen gold in grene trees, and wene to gaðer precious stones emong vines, and laine ther nettes in mountaines to fish, and thinken to hunt in depe Sees after hert and hind, and sechen in yerth thilke thinges that surmounteth heaven. What maie I of hem saie? But folishe ignoraunce misledeth wandring wretches by uncouth wayes, that shulden be foreteten, and maketh hem blind fro the right pathe of true waie, that should ben used. Therefore in generall errour in mankinde departeth thilke godes by mille seching, which he should have whole and he sought by reton. Thus goeth he begiled of that he sought, in his hode men have blowe a jape. Now (q<sup>d</sup> I) if a man be vertuous, and al in vertue liveth, how hath he al these thinges? That shall I proven (q<sup>d</sup> she). What power hath any man to let an other of living in vertue? For prisionment or any other disese he take it patiently, discomfite he not, the tiraunte over his soule no power maie have; then hath that man so tourmented soche power, that he n'll be discomfite, ne overcome maie he not ben, sithen paeience in his soule overcometh, and is not overcome. Soche thing that maie not be amastred, he hath nede to nothyng, for he hath suffisaunce inow to help himself. And thilke thing that thus hath power and suffisaunce, and no tiraunte maie it reve, and hath dignitie to set at naught all thynges, here it is a grete dignitie that deth maie amastrie. Wherefore thilke power suffisaunce so enclosed with dignitie, by all reson renome must have. This is thilk riches with suffisaunce ye should loke after: this is thilk worshipful dignitie ye should covet: this is the ilke power of might, in whiche ye should trust: this is thilke renome of glory, that endlesse endureth, and al n'is but substantance in vertuous living. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) all this is sothe, and so I se well that vertue with ful gripe encloseth al these thinges. Wherefore in soth I maie saie, by my troth, vertue of my Margarite brought me first into your service, to have knitting with that jewell, not sodaine longinges ne folkes smale wordes, but onely our conversacion togider: and then I seing th'entent of her true mening, with florishing vertue of paeience, that she used nothing in evill, to quite the wicked lesynges, that false tonges oft in her have laied, I have sey it my self, godely foryevenesse hath spronge out of her hert, unitive and accorde above al other thinges she desireth in a gode meke maner, and suffreth many wicked tales.

TRuelie, Ladie, to you it were a gret worship, that soch thinges by due chastisement were amended. Ye (q<sup>d</sup> she) I have The excused all soche thinges as yet mow not be redressed: thy Margarite's vertue I commend commende well the more, that paciently soche anoies suffreth. David king was meke and suffred mōkell hate, and many evil speches: no dispite ne shame, that his enemies him didin, might not move pacience out of his hert, but ever in one plite mercie he used. Wherefore God himself toke reward to the thinges, and thereon soche punishment let fal. Truly by reson it ought be ensample of drede to al maner peple's mirth. A man vengeable in wrath no governance in punishment ought to have. Plato had a cause his servaunte to scourge, and yet cleped he is neighbour, to performe the doing, himself would not, lest wrath had him amaistred, and so might he have laid on to moche: evermore grounded vertue sheweth the entent fro within. And truly I wot well for her godnes and vertue, thou hast desired my service, to her plesant well the more, and thy self therto fully hast profered. Gode Ladie (q̃d I) is vertue the hie waie to this knot, that long we have ihandled? Ye forsoth (q̃d she) and without vertue godely this knotte maie not be gotten. Ah! now I se (q̃d I) how vertue in me faileth, and I as a sere tre, without buxioning or frute alwaie welke, and so I stonde in dispaire of this noble knotte, for vertue in me hath no maner working. A wide where about have I travailed. Pecc (q̃d she) of thy firste waie thy travaile is in idell, and as touching the seconde waie, I se well thy mening. Thou wouldest conclude me if thou coudest, bicause I brought The to service, and every of my servauntes I helpe to come to this blisse, as I said here before; and thou saidest thy self, thou mightest not be holpen as thou wenest bicause that vertue in The faileth. And this blisse perfittly without vertue maie not be gotten, thou wenest of these wordes, contradiccion to folowe. Parde at the hardest I have no servaunt, but he be vertuous in dede and thought; I brought The in my service, yet art thou not my servaunt: but I saie, thou might so werch in vertue hereafter, that then shalt thou be my servaunt, and as for my servaunt accompted. For habite maketh no Monke, ne wering of gilt spurres maketh no knight. Never the later, in comfort of thine hert, yet wol I otherwise answere. Certes ladie (q̃d I tho) so ye muste nedes, or els I had nigh caught soche a cordiake for sorowe, I wot it well I shuld it never have recovered. And therefore now I prairie to enforme me in this, or els I hold me without recoverie. I maie not long endure, till this lesson be lerned, and of this mischete the remedie knowen. Now (q̃d she) be not wrothe, for there is no man on live, that maie come to a precyous thyng, longe covered, but he sometime suffre tenefull disces, and wenest thy self to ben unliche to al other? That maie not ben: and with the more sorowe that a thing is gotten, the more hath he joye, the ilke thyng afterwarde to kepe, as it fareth by children in schole, that for lernyng arne beten; when ther lesson thei foryetten, commonly after a gode disciplinyng with a yerde, thei kepe right well doctrine of ther schole.

Right with these wordes, on this Ladie I threwe up myne eyen, to se her countinaunce and her chere, and she aperceving this fantasie in mine herre, ganne her semblaunte godelic on me cast, and said in this wise.

It is well knowe bothe to reson and experience in doying, every active worcheth on his passive, and when thei ben together, active and passive ben icleped by these Philosophers, if fire be in place, chafyng thyng able to be chafed or here, and the ilke thynges ben sette in soche a distaunce, that the one may werche, the other shall suffre. The ilke Margarite thou desirest, is full of vertue, and able to be active in godenesse: But every herbe sheweth his ver-tue, outforthe from within, the Sonne yeveth light, that thinges maie be seye.

Every fire heteth the ilke thyng that it neighed, and it be able to be here, vertue of this Margarite outforthe wrethe, and nothyng is more able to suffer worchyng, or worke catche of the active, but passive of the same active, and no passive to vertues of this Margarite but The in all my doner canne I finde, so that her vertewe muste nedes on The werche, in what place ever thou be; within distaunce of her worthinesse, as her very passive thou art closed: but vertue maie The nothyng profite, but thy desire be performed, and all thy sorowes cesed. Ergo, through werchyng of her vertue thou shalt esilie ben holpen, and driven out of all care, and welcome to this long by The desired.

Ladie (q̃d I) this is a gode lesson, in ginyng of my joye: But were ye well forsoth, though I suppose she have moche vertue, I would my spousale wer proved, and then maie I live out of doubte, and rejoyce me gretlie, in thinkyng of tho vertues so shewed. I herd The saie (q̃d she) at my beginning, when I receved The first for to serve, that thy jewell, thilke Margarite thou desirest, was closed in a muskle, with a blewe shell. Ye forsothe (q̃d I) so I said, and so it is: Well (q̃d she) every thyng kindelic sheweth it self, this jewell closed in a blewe shell, excellence of colours, sheweth vertue from within, and so every wight should rather loke to the proper vertue of thynges, then to his foraine godes. If a thyng be engendred of gode matter, comonlie and for the more parte it followeth after the congelemente vertue of the first matter, and it be not corrupte with vices, to procede with encrease of gode vertues: Eke right so it fareth of badde. Truly grete excellence in vertue of lynage for the more part descendeth by kind to the succession in vertues to folowe. Wherefore I saie, the colours of every Margarite sheweth from within the finesse in vertue.

Kindely heven, when merie wether is alofte, apereth in manne's eye of colour in blewe, stedfastnesse in pecc betokenyng within and without: Margarite is engendred by hevenlic dewe, and sheweth in it self, by finenesse of colour, whether the engendrure wer maked on morowe or on eve: thus saith kinde of this perle. This precious Margarite that thou servest, sheweth it self descended by nobley of vertue, from his hevenliche dewe, norished and congeled in mekenesse, that mother is of all vertues, and by werkes that men seen withouten the significacion of the coloures ben shewed mercie and pitie in the hert, with pecc to al other, and al this is iclosed in a Muskle, who so redilie these vertues loken. All thyng that hath soule, is reduced into gode by mene thynges, as thus: Into GOD manne is reduced by soules resonable, and so forthe bestes, or bodies that mowe not moven after place ben reduced into man, by bestes meve that moven from place to place: so that thilke bodies that han felyng soules, and move not from places, holden the lowest degre of solyng thynges in felyng, and soche ben reduced into man by menes. So it foloweth, the muskle as mother of all vertues, halte the place of mekenesse, to his lowest degre descendeth doune of heven, and there by a maner of virgin engendrure, arne these Margarites engendred, and afterward congeled. Made not mekenesse so lowe the hie heven, to enclose and catch out thereof so noble a dewe, that after congelement a Margarite, with endles vertue and everlasting joy, was with ful vessel of grace yeven to every cature, that godely would it receive? Certes (q̃d I) these thinges ben right noble, I have er this herde these same sawes. Then (q̃d she) thou wost well these thynges ben sothe? Ye forsothe (q̃d I) at the

the full. Now (q<sup>d</sup> she) that this Margarite is full of vertue, it is well proved, wherefore some grace, some mercie among other vertues, I wotte right well on The shall discende? Ye (q<sup>d</sup> I) yet would I have better declared vertues in this Margarite kindlie to ben grounded. That shall I shewe The (q<sup>d</sup> she) and thou wouldest it lerne? Lerne (q<sup>d</sup> I) what nedeth soche wordes? wete ye not well, Ladie, your self, that all my cure, all my diligence, and all my might, have tourned by your counsaile, in plesance of that perle? al my thought and all my study, with your helpe desireth, in worshippe the ilke jewell, to encrese al my travaill, and all my businesse in your service, this Margarite to glad in some halve: me were lever her honour, her plesance, and her gode chere, thorowe me for to be maintained and kept, and I of soche thyng in her likyng to be cause, then all the welthe of bodily godes ye could reckon. And would never God, but I put my self in grete jeopardy of al that I would, that is now no more but my life alone, rather then I should suffer thilke jewel in any pointe ben blemished, as ferre as I maie suffre, and with my mightes stretch. Soche thing (q<sup>d</sup> she) maie mokel further thy grace, and The in my service avaunce. But now (q<sup>d</sup> Love) wilt thou graunte me thilke Margarite to ben gode: O gode gode (q<sup>d</sup> I) why tempt ye me and tene with soche maner speche? I would graunte that, though I should anone die, and by my trowth fight in the quarell, if any wighte would counterplede. It is so moche the lighter (q<sup>d</sup> Love) to prove our entent. Ye (q<sup>d</sup> I) but yet would I here, how ye would prove, that she were gode by resonable skill, that it mowe not ben denied, for although I knowe, and so doeth many other, manyfolde godenes and vertue in this Margarite ben printed, yet some menne there ben, that no godenesse speken: and wherever your wordes ben herd, and your reasons ben shewed, soche evill spekers, Ladie, by auctoritie of your excellence shullen ben stopped and ashamed. And more thei that han none acquaintaunce in her persone, yet knowe thei know her vertues, and ben the more enformed in what wise thei mowe set ther hertes, when 'hem list into your service any entre make: for truly all this to begin, I wote well my self, that thilke jewell is so precious perle, as a womanly woman in her kinde, in whom of godenesse, of vertue, and also of aunswering shape of limmes, and setures so well in all pointes accordyng, nothing faileth: I leve that kinde her made with grete studie, for kinde in her persone nothyng hath foryet, and that is well seen. In every gode wighte's herte she hath grace of commendyng, and of vertuous praisyng. Alas that ever kinde made her dedlie: save onelie in that I wote well, that Nature in formyng of her in nothyng hath erred.

Certes (q<sup>d</sup> Love) thou haste well begonne, and I aske The this question: Is not in generale every thyng gode? I n'ot (q<sup>d</sup> I). No (q<sup>d</sup> she) saw not GOD everie thing that he made, and they werne right gode? Then is wonder (q<sup>d</sup> I) howe evill thynges commen a place, sithen that all thynges weren right gode. Thus (q<sup>d</sup> she) I woll declare everiche qualitie, and every accion, and every thing that hath any maner of beyng, it is of God, and GOD it made, of whom is all godenesse, and all beyng, of hym is no badnesse: badde to be is naught: Gode to be is somewhat, and therefore gode and beyng is one in understandyng. How maie this be (q<sup>d</sup> I) for often han shrewes me assailed, and mokell badnesse therein have I founden, and so me semeth bad, to be somewhat in kind? Thou shalt (q<sup>d</sup> she) understande that soche maner badnesse, which is used to purifie wrong doers is somewhat, and God it made, and beyng hath, and that is gode: other badnes no beyng hath utterlie, it is in the negative of somewhat, and that is naught, and no-thing beyng. The parties essenciall of beyng arne saied in double wise, as that it is, and these parties ben found in every cecture, for al thing a this halfe the firste beyng is beyng through participacion, taking partie of being, so that every cecture is difference between beyng, and of him through whom it is, and his owne beyng: right as every gode is a maner of beyng, so is it gode through beyng, for it is naught other to be: and every thing though it be gode, it is not of hymself gode, but it is gode by that it is ordinable to the grete godenes. This dualitie after clerkes determinacion, is founden in every cecture, be it never so single of onhed. Ye (q<sup>d</sup> I) but there as it is isaid, that God saw every thyng of his makyng, and they were right gode, as your self said to me, not long tyme sithen, I aske whether every cecture is isaid gode, through godenesse unformed, either els formed, and afterwarde if it be accepte utterly gode? I shall saie The (q<sup>d</sup> she) these grete passed clerkes han divided gode into gode being alone, and that is nothing but gode, for no-thing is gode in that wise, but God. Also in gode by participacion, and that is icleped gode, for farre fitte, and representative of godelic godenesse, and after this manifolde gode is saied, that is to laie, gode in kinde, and gode in gendre, and gode of grace, and gode of joye.

Of gode in kind Augustine saith, al that ben, ben gode: but peraunder thou wouldest wete, whether of himself it be gode, or els of an others godenes, for naturell godenesse of every substaunce is nothing els than his substaunciall beyng, whiche is icleped godenesse, after comparison that he hath to his first godenesse, so as it is inductatife by menes into the firste godenesse. Boece sheweth this thing at the full, that this name gode is in generall name in kinde, as it is comparifoned generally to his principalle ende, whiche is God, knotte of all godenes. Every cecture crieth God us made, and so thei han full apeted to thilke God by affection, soche as to 'hem belongeth: and in this wise all thynges ben gode, of the grete GOD, whiche is gode alone. This wonder thing (q<sup>d</sup> I) how ye have by many reasons proved, my first waie to be error and misgoyng, and cause of badnesse and fible menyng, in the ground ye alledged to be roted: whence is it, that soche badnesse hath springes, sithen all thynges thus in generall ben gode, and badnesse hath no beyng, as ye have declared: I wene if all thynges ben gode, I might then with the firste waie in that gode have ended, and so by godenesse have comen to blisse in your service desired. All thing (q<sup>d</sup> she) is gode by beyng in participacion out of the first godenesse, which godenesse is corrupte by badnesse, and badmenyng maners: God hath in gode thynges, that thei ben gode by beyng, and not in evil, for there is absence of rightfull love, for badnesse is nothing only but evil wil of the user, and through gites of the doer, wherefore at the ginning of the worlde, every thing by himself was gode, and in universall thei werne right gode. An eye or a hand is fairer, and better in a bodie sette in his lordliche place, then from the bodie discovered. Every thing in his kindlie place beyng kindlie, gode doth werche, and out of that place voided, it dissolveth and is defouled hym selve. Our noble GOD in gloriande wise by armonie this worlde ordamed, as in putteitures, storied with colours medied, in whiche blacke, and other darke colours, commend the golden and the assured painture, every put in kindely place, one beside an other, more for other glitereth: right so little faire maketh right faire more glorious, and right so of godenes, and of other thynges in vertue. Wherefore other bad, and not so gode perles as this Margarite, that we han of this matter, yeven by the aire little godenesse, and little vertue, right mokell godenesse and vertue in thy Margarite to ben proved, in thining wise to be found and shewed. How shuld ever godenes of pece have ben knowe, but if unpece somtime reigne, and mokell evil wrothe? Howe shuld mercie ben proved, and no trespassse were, by due justificacion to be punished? Therefore grace and godenesse of a wighte is founde, the sorowful hertes in gode mening to endure, ben comforted, unite, and accorde betwene hertes knitte in joye to abide.

What wenest thou that I reioyce, or els accompte hym among my servautes, that pleseth Pallas, in undoyng of Mercurie, all be it that to Pallas he be knitte by title of Lawe, not accordyng to the resonable conscience, and Mercurie in doying have grace to ben suffered: or els hym that weneth the Mone, for fairenesse of the Evesterre? Lo! other while by nightes light of the Mone gretlie comforteth in darke thoughtes and blinde. Understanding of love yeveth grette gladnesse: Who so liste no bileve, when a soth tale is shewed, adewe and adewblis, his name is entred. Wise folke and worthie in gentillesse, bothe of vertue and of livyng, yeven full credence in sothenes of love with a gode hert, there as gode evidence or experience in doinge shewethe not the contrarie. Thus mightest thou have ful prefe in thy Margarite's godenesse, by commendement of other jewels badnesse, and yvelnesse in doinge. Stoundemele disefes yeveth severall houres in joye.

Nowe by my trouthe (q<sup>d</sup> I) this is wel declared, that my Margarite is gode, for sythen other ben gode, and she passeth many other in godenes and vertue, wherthrough by maner necessarye she muste be gode: and godenesse of this Margarite is nothinge elles but vertue, wherefore she is vertuous, and if there failed anye vertue in any side, there were lacke of vertue: badde nothinge els is ne maye be but lacke and wante of gode and godenesse, and so shoulde she have that same lacke, that is to sayne badde, and that maye not be, for she is gode, and that is gode me thinketh all gode, and so by consequence me semeth vertuous, and no lacke of vertue to have. But the Sonne is not knowe but he shine, ne vertuous herbes but they have ther kinde werching, ne vertue but it strecthe in godenesse or profite to another, is no vertue. Than by al waies of reson, sithen mercie and pite ben moste commended amonge other vertues, and they might never ben shewed refreshment of helpe, and of comforte, but nowe at my moste nede, and that is the kinde werkinge of these vertues, trewly I wene I shall not varie from these helpes.

Fyre and if he yeve none hete, for fire is not demed. The Sonne but he shine, for sonne is not accompted. Water but it were, the name shal ben chaunged. Vertue but it werche, of godenes dothe it faile, and into his contrarie the name shal be reversed, and these ben impossible: wherefore the contradictory that is necessarye, nedes must I leve. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) in thy person and out of thy mouth these wordes lien well to ben said, and in thine understandinge to be leved, as in entent of this Margarite alone: and here now my spech in conclusion of these wordes.

IN these thynges (q<sup>d</sup> she) that me list nowe to shewe openly, shal be founde the matter of thy sickenesse, and what shal ben the medicin that maye be thy sorowes lisse and comfort, as well The as all other that amisse have erred, and out of the waye walked, so that any drop of gode will in amendement ben dwelled in ther hertes. Proverbes of Salomon openly techeth, howe somtime an innocent walked by the waye in blindenesse of a derke night, whome mette a woman (if it be lesely to saye) as a strumpete araied, redily purveied in turning of thoughtes with veine janglinges, and of reste impacient, in dissimulation of my termes, sayng in this wise: come and be we dronken of our swete pappes, use we covetous collinges. And thus drawen was this innocent, as an ox to the larder. Lady (q<sup>d</sup> I) to me this is a queinte thinge to understande: I praye you of this parable declare me the entente. This innocent (q<sup>d</sup> she) is a scholer lerninge of my lore, in seching of my blisse, in which thinge the daye of his thought turninge enclineth into eve, and the sonne of verye light failinge, maketh darke night in his conninge. Thus in derkenesse of manye doutes he walketh, and for blindenesse of understanding, he ne wote in what way he is in: forsothe soche one may lightly ben begiled. To whome came love fained, not clothed of my livery, but unlesful lustie habite, with softe speche and mery, and with faire honied wordes heretikes and missemeneing peple, skleren and wimplen ther errours. Austin witnesseth of an heretike that in his firste beginninge, he was a man right experte in resons, and swete in his wordes, and the werkes miscorden. Thus farreth fayned love in her first werchinges: thou knowest these thynges for trewe, thou hast hem proved by experience. Somtime in doinge to thin owne person, in whiche thing thou haste founde matter of mokel disefe. Was not fained love redily purveied, thy wittes to catch and tourne thy gode thoughtes? trewly she hath wounded the conscience of manye, with florishinge of mokill janglinge wordes: and gode worthe thanked I it for no glose, I am gladde of my prudence thou haste so manly her veined. To me arte thou moche holden, that in thy kinde course of gode meninge I returne thy minde: I trowe ne had I shewed The thy Margarite, thou haddest never returned. Of firste in gode perfite joye was ever fayned love impacient, as the water of Syloe, which ever more floweth with stilnesse and privi noise tyl it come nyghe the brinke, and than ginneth it so out of mesure to bolne, with novelleries of chaungyng stormes, that in course of every renninge it is in pointe to spil al his circuit of bankes. Thus fained love prively at the fullest of his flowinge newe stormes debate to arise. And al be it that Mercurius often with whole understanding knowen soche perillous matters, yet Veneriens so lustie ben and so leude in ther wyttes, that in soche thynges right litel or naught don they fele, and witten and cryen to ther felowes: here is blisse, here is joye, and thus into one same errour mokel folke they drawen. Come they faine, and be we dronken of our pappes, that ben fallas and lying glose, of whiche mowe they not sonke mylke of helthe, but dedly venim and poyson, corrupcion of sorowe. Mylke of fallas is venim of discete: Mylke of lyinge glose is venim of corrupcion. Lo what thinge cometh out of these pappes: use we coveted collinges, desire we and meddle we false wordes with sote, and sore with false, truely this is the forinesse of fained love, nedes of these surtettes sikenesse must folow. Thus as an ox to thy langoryng deth wer thou drawen, the sote of the smoke hath The al defased. Ever the deper thou somtime wadest, the foner thou it founde: yf it had The killed it had be littell wonder. But on that other side my trewe servautes not faynen ne disceve conne, sothly ther doying is open, my foundement endureth, be the burthen then never so grete, ever in one it lasteth: it yeveth lyfe and blisfull godenesse in the last endes, though the ginninges ben sharpe. Thus of two contraries contrarie ben the effectes. And so thilke Margarite thou servest, shal sene The by her service out of perillous tribulacion delyvered, bycause of her service into newe disese fallen, by hope of amendemente in the laste ende with joye to be gladded, wherfore of kinde pure her mercy with grace of gode helpe shall she graunt, and elles I shal her so straine, that with pite shall she ben amaistred. Remembre in thine herte howe horrible sometyme to thine Margarite thou trespassest, and in a gret wise ayenst her thou forfetest: clepe ayen thy minde, and knowe thine owne gyltes. What godenes, what bountie, with mokell folowing pyte founde thou in that tyme? Were thou not godely accepted into grace? By my pluckyng was she to foryevenesse enclined. And after I her stirred to drawe The to house, and yet wendest thou utterlie for ever have ben refused. But wel thou wofte, sithen that I in soche sharpe disese might so gretelye awayle, what thinkest in thy wyt? Howe ferre maye my witte stretch? And thou lach not on thy side I wol make The knotte: Certes in thy gode bering I woll accorde with the psalter, I have founde David in my service true, and with holy oyle of pece and of rest longe by him desired, utterly he shal be annoynted. Truste wel to me, and I wol The not faile. The lening of the first way wyth gode hert of continuance, that I se in The grounded, this purpose to parfourme, draweth me by maner of constraining, that nedes must I ben thine helper: although mirthe a while be taryed, it shal come at soche celson, that thy thought shal ben joyed, and wolde never God, sithen thyne herte to my resonnes arne assented, and openly haste confessed thyne amisse goynge, and now criest after mercy but yf mercy folowed: thy blisse shal ben redy ywis, thou ne wofst how sone.

Nowe be a gode chylde I rede. The kind of vertues in thy Margaryte rehersed, by strength of me in thy persone shul werche. Comfort The in thys, for thou mayst not miscarie. And these wordes said, she streight her on length and rested awhile.

Thus endeth the seconde boke.

Here after foloweth the thirde boke.

OF nombre saine these clerkes that it is naturel some of discret thinges, as in tellinge one, two, thre, and so forth: but among all nombres thre is determined for moste certain. Wherfore in nombre certaine this werke of my besye leudenesse I thynke to ende and parfourme.

Ensample by this worlde in thre tymes is divided: Of whiche the firste is cleped Demacian, that is to say, going out of trew waye, and all that tho deiden in hell were they punished for a manne's sinne, tyl grace and mercy sette hem thence, and there ended the first time. The second time lasteth from the coming of merciable grace, untill the ende of transitorie time, in which is shewed the true way in sordinge of the badde, and that is ycleped tyme of grace: and that thinge is not yeven by deserte of yeldinge one benefite for another, but onely through godenesse of the yever of grace in thilke tyme. Who so can wel understand, is shapen to be saved in souled blyffe. The thirde tyme shal gin when transitorie thinges of worldes han made ther ende, and that shal ben in joy, glory, and rede both body and soule, that wel han deserved in the time of grace. And thus in that heaven together shul they dwel perpetuelli, without any ymaginatif yvel in any halve. These tymes are figured by tho thre dayes, that our God was closed in yerthe, and in the thirde arose, shewing our resurrection to joy and blisse of tho that it deserven by his merciable grace. So this leude boke in thre matters accordaunt to tho tymes, lightly by a gode infer maye ben understande, as in the firste etroure of misse-going is shewed, with sorowful pine punished is, crieth after mercie. In the secnde is grace in gode waye proved, whiche is failing without deserte, thilke first misse amending in correccion of tho errours, and even waye to bringe with comforte of welfare, into amendemente wexinge. And in the thirde joye and blisse, graunted to him that wel canne deserve it, and hath favour of understanding in the tyme of grace. Thus in joye of my thirde boke shall the matter be till it ende. But speciall cause I have in my herte to make this processe of a Margarit perle, that is so precious a gemme with clere and litell stones, of whiche stones or jewel the tonges of us :nglish peple tourneth the right names, and clepeth hem Margeryte perles: thus varieth our spech from many other langages. For trewely Latin, Frenche and manye mo other langages clepeth hem Margery perles, the name Margarite or Margrit perles: wherfore in that denominacion I woll me accorde to other mens tonges in that name cleping. These clerkes that treten of kindes, and studien out the propertie ther of thinges, saine the Margarit is a lytel white perle, throughout holow and rounde, and verruous, and on the Se-sides in the More Britain in muskle shelles of the heavenly dewe the best ben engendred: in which by experience ben founde thre faire vertues. One is, it yeveth comforte to the felynge spirites in bodily persones of reason. Another is gode, it is profitable helth ayenst passions of forie mens hertes. And the thirde it is nedefull and noble in staunchinge of blode, there elles to moche wolde out ren. To which perle and vertues me list to liken at this tyme Philosophye with her thre species, that is naturell, and moral, and resonable: of whiche thinges hereth what saine these grete clerkes. Philosophie is knowinge of divinly and manly thinges joyned with studie of gode living, and this stante in two thinges, that is conunge and opinion: conunge is whan a thing by certa ne reson is conc.ved. But wretches, and toles, and leude men many wil conceive a thing and maintain it as for a sothe, though reson be in the contrarie, wherfore conunge is a straunger. Opinion is while a thing is in non-certaine, and hidde from mens very knowleginge, and by no parfite reson fully declared, as thus: if the sonne be so mokel as men wenen, or els if it be more than the erthe. For in sothnes the certaine quantite of the Planet is unknowen to erthly dwellers, and yet by opinion of some menne it is holden for more than midde erth. The firste speec of Philosophie is naturel, which in kindly thinges treten, and sheweth causes of heven, and strength of kindly course: as by arismetrike, geometry, musike, and by astronomye, techeth waies and course of hevens, of planetes and of sterres aboute heven and erthe, and other elementes. The second speec is morall, whiche in order of living maners techeth, and by reson proveth vertues of soule moste worthy in our living, whiche ben Prudence, Justice, Temperaunce, and strength. Prudence is godely wisdom in knowinge of thinges. Strength voydeth al adversitees aliche even. Temperaunce destroieth bestiall lyving with esie bering. And Justice right fully judgeth, and judginge departeth to every wight that, that is his owne. The thirde speec tourneth into reson of understanding al thinges to be said soth and discuffed, and that in two thinges is divided: one is art, another ther is rhetorique, in which two al lawes of man's reson ben grounded or els maintained. And for this boke is all of love, and thereafter bereth his name, and Philosophie and law must herto accorden by ther clerghal discriptions: as Philosophie for love of wisdom is declared: Lawe for maintainaunce of pece is holde, and these with love muste nedes acorden, therefore of hem in this place have I touched. Ordre of homly thinges and honest maner of living in vertue, with rightfull judgement in causes, and profitable administracion in comunalties of reimes and cities, by evenhede profitably to raine, nat by singuler avauntage, ne by privy envy, ne by sole in purpose in covetise of worship or of godes ben disposed in open rule shewed, by love, Philosophie, and law, and yet love toforn al other. Wherefore as susterly unite they acorden, and one ende, that is pece and rest, they causen norisshinge, and in the joye mainteinen to endure. Nowe than, as I have declared my boke acordeth with discription of thre thinges, and the Margarit in vertue is likened to Philosophie with the thre speces. In whiche matters ever twei ben acordaunt with bodily reson, and the thirde with the soule: But in conclusion of my boke and of this Margarit perle, in knitting togider law by thre sondry maners shal be lykened, that is to saye, lawe, right, and custome, which I wol declare. Al that is law cometh of Godde's ordinaunce by kindly worching, and thilke thinges ordained by man's wittes arne icleped right, whiche is ordayned by many maners and in constitution writen: But custome is a thinge that is accepted for right or for lawe, ther as lawe and right failen, and ther is no difference, whether it come of scripture or of reson. Wherefore it sheweth that law is kindly governaunce: right cometh out of manne's probable reson: and custome is of comen usage by length of time used, and custome nat write is usage and if it be writte constitution it is ywriten and ycleped: But lawe of kinde is comen to every nation, as conjunction of man and woman in love, succession of children in inheritance, restitution of thinge by strength taken or lent, and this lawe among al other halte the soverainest gre in worship, whiche lawe began at the beginning of resonable creature, it varied yet never for no chaunging of time, cause so. sothe in ordaining of lawe was to constraine mens hardynesse into pece, and withdrawinge his wil will, and turning malice into godenelle, and that innocence likerly withouten tencful anoy amonge shrewes safe, might inhabyte by protection of safe conduct, so that shrewes harme for harme by bridle of ferdynesse shulden restraine. But forsothe in kindly law nothinge is commended, but soche as Godde's wil hath confirmed, ne nothinge denied but contrayonstie of Godde's will in heaven: eke than al lawes or custome, or els constitution by usage, or wrytyng, that contrarien law of kinde, utterly ben repugnaunt and adversary to our Godde's wil of heaven. Trewly law of kind for Godde's own lusty will is verily to maintaine under whiche lawe (and unworthy) bothe professe and regular arn obediencer and bounden to this Margarit perle, and by knotte of love's statutes and establishment in kinde, whiche that godely maye not ben withsetten. Lo! under this bonde am I constrained to abyde, and man under lyvinge lawe ruled, by that lawe oweth after desertes to ben rewarded by pain or by mede, but if mercie weyre the paine: so than by parte resonfulli maye be sey, that mercy both right and lawe passeth. Th' entent of al these matters is, the lest clere understanding to weten at th' ende of thysthirde boke fulknowinge thorow Godde's grace I think to make never the later, yet if these thinges han a gode and a sleight insecr, whiche that canne souke hony of the hard stone, oylie of the drie rocke, may lightly fele nobley of matter in my leude ymaginacion closed.

But for my boke shal be of joye (as I said) and I so ferre set fro thylke place, fro whens gladnes should come, my corde is to short to let my boket ought catche of that water, and fewe menne be abouten my corde to eche, and many in ful purpose ben redy it shorter to make, and to enclose th' enter, that my boket of joye nothinge shulde catch but empty returne my careful sorowes to encrese, and if I die for pain, that wer gladnes at ther hertes. Gode lord, send me water into the cop of these mountaines, and I shall drinke therof my thrustes to stanch: and sey these be comfortable welles into helth of godenes of my saviour am I holpen. And yet I say more, the house of joy to me is not opened. How dare my sorowfull gost than in any mater of gladnesse thynken to trete? for ever sobbynges and complaints be redy refrete in his meditations, as werbles in manyfolde stoundes comming about I n'ot than. And therefore what maner of joye coude endite, but yet at dore shal I knocke, if the key of David wolde the locke unshyt, and he bring me in, whiche that childrens tonges bothe openeth and closeth. Whose spirite where he wil worcheth, departinge godely as him lyketh. Now to Godde's laude and reverence, profite of the reders, amendement of maners of the hearers, encreasing of worship among love's servautes, releving of my herte into grace of my jewel, and frenship plesance of this perle, I am stered in this making, and for nothing els: and yf any gode thing to menne liking in this scripture be founde, thanketh the maister of grace which that of the gode, and al other is authour, and principal doer. And if any thing be insufficient or els myslyking, wit The that the leudnesse of myne unable conning, for body in disese anoyeth the understanding in soule. A disceply habytacion leteth the wittes many thinges, and namely in sorow. The custome never the later of love, by longe time of service in termes I thinke to pursue, whiche ben lively to yeve understanding in other thynges. But nowe to enform The of this Margarite's godenes, I may her not halfe praise. Wherefore not she for my boke, but this boke for her is worthy to be commended, tho my boke be leude: right as thinges nat for places, but places for thinges ought to be desired and praised.

NOW (qð love) trewely thy wordes I have well understonde. Certes me thinketh hem ryght gode, and me wondreth why thou so lightly passest in the law. Sothlye (qð I) my wit is leude, and I am right blind, and that mater depe, how shuld I than have waded, lightly might I have drenched and spilt ther my self. Yea (qð she) I shall helpe The to swime. For right as lawe punisheth brekers of preceptes, and the contrary doers of the writen constitucions: right so ayenward, law rewardeth and yeveth mede to hem that law strengthen. By one law this rebel is punished and this innocent is mede, the shewe is emprisoned and this rightfull is crowned. The same lawe that joyneth by wedloke wythout forsakyng, the same law yeveth libel of departicion bycause of divorce, both demed and declared. Ye ye (qð I) I finde in no lawe to mede and reward in godenes the gilrie of desertes. Fole (qð she) gilty converted in your law, mykel merite deserveth. Also Pauly of Rome was crowned, that by him the maintainers of Pompeius weren known and distroied: and yet toforn was this Paulin chefe of Pompeius counsaile. This lawe in Rome hath yet his name of mesuring in mede, the bewraying of the conspiracy. ordained by tho senatours the deth. Julius Caesar is acompted into Catons right-wisenesse.

wisnesse, for ever in trouthe flourisheth his name amonge the knowers of reson. Perdiccas was coronned in the heritage of Alexander the great, for telling of a privy hate that king Porrus to Alexander hadde. Wherefore every wight by reson of law after his right-wisenes apertly his mede maye challenge: and so thou that maintainest law of kinde, and therefore disce hast suffred in the law, reward is worthy to be rewarded and ordained, and apertly thy mede might thou challenge. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) this have I well lerned, and ever hensforward I shall draw me thereafter in one hed of will to abide this lawe both maintain and kepe, and so hope I best entre into your grace, wel deserving in o worship of a wight without nedeful compulsion ought medefully to be rewarded. Truly (q<sup>d</sup> Love) that is soth, and tho by constitucion gode service into profite and avauntage stretch, utterly many men it demen to have more desert of mede, than gode wil nat compelled. Se now (q<sup>d</sup> I) how may men holden of this the contrary. And what is gode service? Of you wolde I here this question declared. I shall say The (q<sup>d</sup> she) in a few wordes, resonable workinges in plesance and profite of thy soveraine. How shuld I thus performe (q<sup>d</sup> I)? right well (q<sup>d</sup> she) and here me now a lytell. It is hardly (q<sup>d</sup> she to understand) that right as mater by due overchaunginges foloweth his perfeccion and his forme: right so every man by right-werkinges ought to folow the letul desires in his hert, and se toforne to what ende he deserveth, for many times he that loketh nat after th'ende, but utterly therof is unknowen, befalleth often many yvels to don, wherthrough er he be ware, shamfull he is confounded, th'end therof nedeth to be before looked to every desire of soch foresight in gode service three thinges specially nedeth to be rulers in his werkes. First that he do gode, next that he do by election in his owne hert, and the thirde that he do godely withouten any surquedry in thoughtes. That your werkes shulden be gode in service, or in any other actes, authorities many may be aleged, never the latter, by reson thus may it be shewed. Al your werkes be cleped second, and moven in vertue of the first wercher, which in gode works wrought you to procede, and right so your werkes moven into vertue of the last ende, and right in the first working wer nat, no man shuld in the second werche. Right so but ye feled to what ende, and sen ther godenes closed, ye shulde no more retch what ye wrought, but the ginning gan with gode; and there shal it cese in the last ende, if it be wel considered. Wherefore the mydle, if other wayes it draw than acordant to th'endes, there stineth the course of gode, and another maner course entreth, and so it is a party by him selve, and every part be nat acordant to his al, is foule and ought to be eschewe, wherefore every thing that is wrought and be nat gode, is nat acordant to th'endes of his al whole, it is foule, and ought to be withdraw. Thus the persons that neither don gode ne harme, shamen foule ther making: Wherefore without working of gode actes in gode service, may no man ben accepted. Trewly the ilke that han might to do gode, and done it not, the crowne of worship shal be take from hem, and with shame shul they be anulled. And so to make one werke accordant with his endes, everye gode servaunt by reson of consequence must do gode nedes. Certes it suffiseth not alone to do gode, but godely withal folow, the thanke of godenes els in nought he deserveth: For right as al your being come from the gretest gode, in whom al godenes is closed, right so your endes ben directe to the same gode. Aristotell determineth that ende and gode ben one, and convertible in understanding, and he that in wil doth away gode, and he that loketh not to th'end loketh not to gode, but he that doth gode and doth not godely, draweth awaye thy dyrection of th'ende, not godely must nedes be bad. Lo! badde is nothing els, but absence or negative of gode, as derkenes is absence or negative of light. Than he that doth not godely directeth thilke gode into th'ende of badde. So must thing not gode folow, eke badnes to soch folk ofte foloweth. Thus contrariaunt workers of th'ende that is gode, ben worthy that contrary of th'ende that is gode to have. How (q<sup>d</sup> I) may any gode dede be done, but if godely it helpe. Yes (q<sup>d</sup> Love) the devil doth many gode dedes, but godely he levethe behinde, for even badly and in deservable wise he worketh. Wherefore the contrary of th'ende him foloweth. And do he never so many gode dedes, because godely is away, his godenes is not rekened. Lo than! tho a man do gode, but he do godely, th'ende in godenelle wol not folowe, and thus in gode service both gode dede and godely den mellen joyne together, and that it be done with free choise in hert: and els deserveth he nat the merite in godenes, that wol I prove, for if thou do any thing gode by chaunce or by happe, in what thing art thou therof worthie to be commended? for nothing by reson of that turneth it to thy praisage ne lacking. Lo! thilke thinge done by hap by thy wil is nat caused, and therby shulde I thanke of lile deserve: and sithen that sayeth, th'ende whiche that wel shuld reward, must nedes lile. Clerkes lare, no man but willing is blessed, a gode dede that he hath done is not done of free choise willing, without whiche blisidnes may nat folow. I go nether thanke of godenelle ne service in that is contrary of the gode ende, so than to gode service longeth gode dede godely don, thorow fre choise in hert. Truly (q<sup>d</sup> I) this have I wel understand. Wel (q<sup>d</sup> she) every thing thus done sufficiently by law that is cleped justice, after reward claimes. For law and justice was ordained in this wise, soche desertes in godenes after quantite in donge, by mede to reward, and of necessity of soch justice, that is to say rightwitenes was fre choise in deserving of wel or of yvel praimed to resonable creatures. Every man hath fre arbitrement to choi gode or yvel to performe. No ve (q<sup>d</sup> I) tho if I by my gode wil deserve this margarit pille, and am not thereto compelled, and have fre choise to do what me listeth: she is than holden to me thinketh to reward th'entent of my gode wil. Goddes forbode els (q<sup>d</sup> Love) no wight mayeth otherwise, I knowe he wil of gode hert after mede deserveth. Hath every man (q<sup>d</sup> I) fre choise by necessary maner of wil in every of his donges, that him liketh, by God's proper purveiance? I wolde se that well declared to my lende understanding, for necessary and necessity ben wordes of moled intencion, closing (as to say) so mote it be nedes, and otherwise maye it nat betide. This shal thou lerne (q<sup>d</sup> she) so thou take hede in my spech. If it were nat in manne's own liberte of he wil to do gode or bad, but to the one tord by londe of God's pre-ordinaunce: Than do he never so wel it were by nedeful compulsion of thilke bonde and nat by fre choise, wherby nothing he desireth, and do he never so yvel it were nat man for to wite, but onlich to him that soch thing ordained hem to done. Wherefore he ne ought for bad be punished, ne for no gode dede rewarded, but of necessity of rightwitenes was th'forefre choise of arbitrement put in manne's proper disposicion: truly if it were othar wise it contained God's charitie, that badnes and godenes rewardeth after desertes of pain, or of mede. Al thanke this wonder (q<sup>d</sup> I) for God by necessity foretold thinges coming, and so mote it nedes be: and thilke thinges that that ben doen by our fre choice comen nothing of necessitie, but onely by wil: how maie this stande togither? and so me thinketh truly, that fre choice fully repugneth Godde's forweting. Truly, ladie, me semeth thei mowe not stande together.

Then gan love nigh me nere, and with a noble countenance of visage and limmes, dressed her nigh my sitting place. Take forthe (q<sup>d</sup> she) thy penne, and redily write these wordes, for if God wolle, I shall 'hem so enforme to The, that thy leudenesse, whiche I have understand in that matter, shall openly be clered, and thy sight in full loking therein amended. First, if thou thinke that Godde's prescience repugne libertie of arbitrie of arbitrement, it is impossible that thei should accord in onhed of sothe to understanding. Ye (q<sup>d</sup> I) forsoth so I it conceive. Well (q<sup>d</sup> she) if thilke impossible were awaie, the repugnaunce that semeth to be therein, wer utterly removed. Shew me th' absence of that impossibilitie (q<sup>d</sup> I). So (q<sup>d</sup> she) I shall. Now I suppose that thei mowe stande together, prescience of God, whom foloweth necessitie of things coming, and libertie of arbitrement, through whiche thou belevest many thynges to be without necessitie. Bothe these propoosicions be sothe (q<sup>d</sup> I) and well mowe stande togither, wherefore this case as possible I admit. Truly (q<sup>d</sup> she) and this case is impossible. How so (q<sup>d</sup> I)? For hereof (q<sup>d</sup> she) foloweth and wexeth an other impossible. Prove me that (q<sup>d</sup> I). That I shall (q<sup>d</sup> she) for some thyng is comyng without necessitie, and God wote that toforne, for all thing comyng he before wot, and that he before wot of necessitie is coming: as he before wot, be the case by necessary maner then, or els thorowe necessitie, is something to be without necessitie, and whider to every wight that hath gode understanding, is seen these thinges to be repugnaunt. Prescience of God, which that foloweth necessitie, and libertie of arbitrement, fro which is removed necessitie, for truly it is necessarie, that God have forweting of thinge, withouten any necessitie coming. Ye (q<sup>d</sup> I) but yet remeve ye not awaie fro mine understanding, the necessitie followyng Godde's before weting, as thus. God before wote me in service of Love, to be bounden to this Margarite perle, and therefore by necessitie thus to love am I bound, and if I not had loved, through necessitie had I ben kept from all lovededes. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> Love) bicause this matter is gode and necessary to declare, I think herein wel to abide, and not lightlie to passe. Thou shalt not (q<sup>d</sup> she) saie all onely God before wote me to be a lover, or no lover, but thus: God before wote me to be a lover, without necessitie. And so it followeth, whether thou love, or not love, every of 'hem is and shal be. But now thou seest the impossibilitie of the case, and the possibilitie of thilke that thou wendest had ben impossible, wherefore the repugnaunce is adnulled. Ye (q<sup>d</sup> I) and yet doe ye not awaie the strength of necessitie, when it is said, though necessitie it is me in love to abide, or not to love without necessitie, for God before wote it. This maner of necessitie forsothe semeth to some men into coaccion, that is to saie, constrainyng, or els prohibicion that is defendyng, wherefore necessitie is me to love of wil. I understande me to be constrained, by some privie strengthe, to the will of lovyng, and if no love, to be defended from the will of loving, and so through necessitie me semeth to love for I love, or els not to love, if I not love, wherethrough neither thanke ne maugre in tho thynges maie I deserve.

Now (q<sup>d</sup> she) thou shalt well understande that often we saie thyng, through necessitie, to be that by no strengthe to be neither is coarted, ne constrained, and thorowe necessitie not to be, that with no defendyng is removed, for we saie, it is thorowe necessitie, GOD to be immortalle, nought dedliche, and it is necessitie, God to be rightfull, but not that any strengthe of violente maner constraineth hym to be immortall, or defendeth hym to be unrightful, for nothing maie make him dedly or unrightfull. Right so if I saie through necessitie is The to be a lover or els none, only thorow will, as God before wote, it is not to understande, that any thing defendeth or forbit The thy wil, which shal not be, or els constraineth it to be, which shal be: that same thing forsoth God before wot, whiche he before seeth, any thyng commend of onely wille, that wil neither is constrained ne defended through any other thinge. And so through libertie of arbitrement it is doe, that is doen of wil. And truly, my gode child, if these thynges be wel understand, I wene that none inconvenient shalt thou finde, betwene Godde's forweting, and libertie of arbitrement, wherefore, I wote well thei maie stande togither. Also farthermore, who that understanding of prescience properliche considereth, through the same wise, that any thing be afore wist, is said for to be comyng, it is pronounced, there is nothing toforne wist, but thyng comyng, forewetyng is but of trouthe, doubt maie not be wist: wherefore, when I sey, that God toforne wot any thyng, through necessitie is thilke thing to be coming, all is one if I sey, if it shal be, but this necessitie neither constraineth, ne defendeth any thing to be, or not to be. Therefore sothly if love is put to be, it is said of necessitie to be, or els for it is put not to be, it is affirmed not to be of necessitie: not for that necessitie constraineth or defendeth, love to be, or not to be. For when I saie, if love shal be of necessitie it shal be, here foloweth necessitie. The thinge toforne put, it is as moche to saie, as if it were thus pronounced, that thing shal be: none other thing signifieth this necessitie but onely thus, that shal be maie not togither be and not be. Evenliche also it is soth, love was and is, and shal be, not of necessitie, and nede is to have be all that was, and nedefull is to be all that is, and coming to all that shal be: and it is not the same to saie, love to be passed, and love passed to be passed, or love present to be present, and love to be present, or els love to be comyng, and love coming to be comyng: diversite in setting of wordes maketh diversite in understanding, altho in the same sentence thei accorden of significacion, right as it is not all one, love swete to be swete, and love to be swete: for moch love is bitter and sorowfull ere hertes ben esed, and yet it gladdeth thilk sorowfull hert on soche love to thinke. Forsoth (q<sup>d</sup> I) otherwhile I have had mokell blisse in hert of love, that stoundmele hath me sorily anoied: and certes, lady, for I se my self thus knit, with this Margarite perle, as by bonde of your service, and of no libertie of will, my hert will now not accorde this service to love. I can demin in my self none otherwise, but through necessitie am I constrained, in this service to abide. But alas! then, if I through nedefull compulsion, mangre me, be withholde, litte thanke for all my grete travaille have I then deserved. Now (q<sup>d</sup> this ladie) I saie as I saied: Me liketh this matter to declare at the full, and why? For many men have had divers fantasies and reasons, bothe on one side therof, and in the other. Of which right sone I trowe, if thou wilt understand, thou shalt conyeve the sentence, to the partie more probable by reson, and in sothe knowing, by that I have of this matter made an ende. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) of these thinges long have I had grete luste to be learned, ned, for yet I wene Godde's will and his prescience accordeth with my service, in lovyng of this precious Margarite perle, after whom ever in my herte with thursting desire wete I doe brenne, and wast- yng I langour and fade, and the daie of my desti- nie, in deth or in joye, I abide; but yet in the ende I am comforted be my supposaille in blisse, and in joye to determine after my desires. That thyng (q<sup>d</sup> Love) hastelle to The neigh, God graunt of his grace and mercie, and this shal be my praier, till thou be likened in herte at thine own wil. But now to enforme The in this matter (q<sup>d</sup> this Ladie) thou woste where I left, that was love to be swete, and love swete to be swete, is not all one for to saie: For a tre is not alwaie by necessitie white, some- time er it wer white, it might have be not white: and after time it is white, it maie be not white: but a white tre ever more nedefull is to be white: for neither tofome ne after it was white, might it be to- gith<sup>r</sup> white and not white. Also love by necessitie is not present as now in The, for er it wer present it might have be, that it should now not have be, and yet it may be, that it shal not be present: but thy love present, whiche to her Margarite The hath bound, nedefull is to be present. Truly some doing of accion, not by necessitie is coming farre toforn it be, it maie be that it shal not be coming: thing for- soth coming nedefull is to be comng, for it maie not be that coming shal not be coming. And right as I have saied of present and of future tymes, the same sentence in sothnesse is of the preterit, that is to say, time passed, for thing passed must nedes be passed, and er it were it might have not be, where- fore it should not have passed. Right so when Love comyng, is saied of love that is to come, nedefull is to be that is saied, for thing comming never is not comyng, and so oft the same thyng we saie of the same; as when we saie every man is a man, or every lover is a lover, so must it be nedes, in no waie maie he be man, and no man together. And if it be not by necessitie, that is to say, nedeful al thing comming to be comming, then some thyng comming is not comming, and that is impossible, right as these termes nedefull, necessitie, and necessa- rie, betoken and signifyng nedes to be, and it maie not otherwise be. Right these termes, impossible signifieth, that thing is not, and by no waie maie it be, then through pette necessite, all thing comming is comming, but that is by necessitie, soloweth with nothing to be constrained. Lo! when that com- myng is saied of thyng, not alwaie thinge through necessitie is, altho it be comyng. For if I saie to morowe, love is comyng in this Margarite's herte, not therefore through necessitie shal thilke love be, yet it maie be that it shal not be, altho it were comyng. Neverthelater, sometyne it is sothe, that some thyng be of necessitie, that is saied to come: and if I saie to morowe be comyng the rising of the Sonne. If therefore with necessitie I pronounce comyng of thyng to come, in this maner love to morne comyng in thine Margarite, to The warde by necessitie is comyng, or els the rising of the Sonne to morn comming through necessitie is com- myng. Love sothlie, whiche maie not be of necessitie alone followyng, through necessite comyng it is made certain. For future of future is saied, that is to saie, comyng of comyng is saied: as if to morowe comyng, is through necessite coming it is. Arising of the Sonne through two necessities in comyng, it is to understande, that one is to forgoyng necessite, whiche maketh thing to be, therefore it shal be, for nedeful is that it be. An other is solowyng necessitie, which nothing constraineth to be, and so by neces- sitie it is to come, why? for it is to come.

Now then, when we saie, that God before wote thyng comyng nedefull is to be comyng, yet therefore make we not in certaine, evermore thyng to be through necessitie comyng. Sothly thing comyng maie not be not comyng by no waie, for it is the same sentence of understanding: as if we saie thus: If God before worte any thing, nedefull is that to be comming. But yet therefore foloweth not that prescience of God, thing through necessitie to be coming: for altho God tofome wot all thinges comming, yet not therefore he before wot every thing coming thorow necessitie. Sum thinges he before wot coming of frewill, out of resonable creature. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> ) these termes, nede and ne- cessitie, have a quaint maner of understandyn, thei wouiden duilen many mennes wites. Therefore (q<sup>d</sup> she) I wol 'hem openly declare, and more clerely then I have tofome er I depart here. First of this matter (q<sup>d</sup> she) thou shalte understande, that right as it is not nedeful, God to wile that he wil, no more in many things is not nedefull, a man to wile that he woll, and ever right as nedefull is to be, what that God woll, right so to be it is nede- full, that man wile in the thinges, whiche that God hath put into manne's subjection of wilyng: as if a man woll love, that he love: and if he ne woll love, that he love not, and of soche other things in man's disposition. For why? now then that God woll maie not be, when he woll the will of man thorow no necessitie to be constrained, or els defended for to wile, and he woll th' affeete to folowe the will, than is it nedefull wil of man to be tre, and also to be that he woll. In this maner it is soth that thorow necessitie i man's werke in loving, that he woll do altho he woll it not with necessitie. (Q<sup>d</sup> I than) how stant it in love of thilke will, thilke men loven wilyng of fre choise in hert. Wherefore if it be thorow necessitie, I praie you, Ladie, of an answer to this question to assoile. I woll (q<sup>d</sup> she) answer The blively: right as men will not thorow necessitie, right so is not love of wil thorowe necessitie, ne thorowe necessitie wrought the like same wile; for if he would it not with gode will, it should not have ben wrought, although that he doeth it is nedefull to be doen. But if a man do sine, it is nothing els but to wile, that he should not: right so syn of will, is not to be maner necessary doen, no more then wil is necessary. Never the later this is soth, if a man woll sine, it is necessary him to sine, but through thilke neces- sitie nothing is constrained ne defended in the will, right so thilke thing that frewill woll, and man, and not maie, not wile, and nedefull is that to wile he maie not wile, but thilke to wile nedefull is, for impossible to hym it is one thing, and the same to wile, he maie not wile, but thilke to wile nede- full is: for impossible to hym it is one thing and the same to wile, and not to wile.

The werke forsothe of will, to whom it is yere, that it be that he hath in will, and that he woll not, voluntarie of spontanie it is, for by spontanie will it is doe, that is to saie, with gode wil, not constrained: then by wil no constrained, it is constrained to be, and that is it maie not together be. If this neces- sitie maketh libertie of wil, whiche that aforne thei weren, thei might have ben cledied and shunned: God then, which that knoweth all truthe, and no- t yng but truthe, all these thinges, as thei are, spon- tanie, or necessary sight, and as he seeth so thei be: and so with these thinges well considered, it is open at the fulle, that without all maner repenance, God before wote al maner things ben doen by fre- will, whiche aforne thei weren, might have ben ne- ver thei should be, and yet ben thei thorow a maner necessitie, from frewill descended.

Hereby

Hereby maie (qð she) lightly ben knowe that not all thynges to be is of necessitie, though God have hem in his preseience, for somthynges to be, is of libertie of will, and to make The to have full knowyng of Godde's befoineweting, here me (qð she) what I shal saie. Blithly lady (qð I) me list this matter entirely to understande. Thou shalte (qð she) understande, that in heven is Godde's being, although he be over al by power, yet there is abiding of divine persone, in which heven is everlastyng preseience, withouten any movable tyme there, for I have I not saied toforne this, as tyme hurteth, right so ayenwarde, tyme heleth and rewardeth: and a tre oft failed, is holde more in deintie, when it fruct forthe bringeth.

A Marchaunte that for ones lesyng in the Se, no more to aventure thinketh, he shall never with aventure come to richesse: so oft must menne on the Oke smite, till the happie dente have entred, whiche with the Oke's owne swaie, maketh it to come al at ones. So oft falleth the lethy water on the harde rocke, till it have through perced it. The even draught of the Wier drawer, maketh the wier to ben even, and supplie werchyng, and if he stinted in his draught, the Wier breketh asonder. Every Tre well springeth, when it is well grounded, and not often removed. What shall this fructe be (qð I) now it ginneth ripe? Grace (qð she) in parfitte joye to endure, and therewith thou begon. Grace (qð I) me thinketh, I should have a rewarde for my long travaile? I shall tell The (qð she) retribucion of thy gode willes, to have of thy Margarite perle, it bereth not the name of mede, but onely of gode grace, and that cometh not of thy desert, but of thy Margarite's godenesse, and vertue alone. (Qð I) should all my long travaile have no rewarde, but through grace, and sometyme yourselfen saied, rightwisenesse evenliche rewardeth to quite one benefite for an other. That is sothe (qð Love) ever as I saied, as to hym that doeth gode, which to doen he were neither holden, ne yet constrained. That is sothe (qð I). Truly (qð she) all that ever thou doest thyne Margarite perle, of will, of love, and of reson thou owest to doen it, yet is it nothyng els but yelding of thy debte, in quiting of thy grace, which she The lente, when ye first mette. I wene (qð I) right little grace to me she delivered: Certes it was harde grace, it hath nigh me astrangled. That it was gode grace I wotte well thou wilt it graunte, ere thou departe hence. If any man yere to an other wight, to whom that he ought not, and whiche that of himself nothyng maie have, a garmente or a cote, though he were the cote, or els thilke clothynge, it is not to put to him that was naked the cause of his clothing, but onelie to him that was yever of the garment; wherefore I saie, thou that were naked of love, and of thy self none have mighteste, it is not to put to thyne owne persone, sithen thy love came through thy Margarite perle; Ergo she was yever of the love, although thou it use, and there sente she The grace, thy service to beginne. She is worthie the thanke of this grace, for she was the yever.

All the thoughtes, busie doynges, and plesaunce in thy might, and in thy wordes, that thou canste devise, ben but right little, in quityng of thy debte: had she not ben, soche thyng had not ben studied. So all these matters kindlie drawn homward to this Margarite perle, for from thens were thei borrowed, all is whollie her, to witte, the love that thou havest, and thus quitest thou thy debte, in that thou stedfastlie serveest. And kepe well that love, I The rede, that of her thou hast borrowed, and use it in her service, thy debte to quite, and then art thou able right sone to have grace, wherefore after mede in none halve maieest thou loke.

Thus thy ginyng and endyng is but grace alone; and in thy gode deservyng thy debte thou aquiteste: without grace is nothyng worthe what so ever thou werche. Thanke thy Margarite of her grete grace that hitherto The hath guided, and pray her of continuance forthe in thy werkes hereafter, and that for no mishap thy grace overthwartlie tourne. Grace, glorie, and joye, is comyng through gode folkes desertes, and by gettyng of grace therein shullen ende. And what is more glorie, or more joie then wisdom, and love in perfite charitie, whiche God hath graunted to all tho that well can deserve? And with that this Lady all at ones starte into myne herte: here wol I onbide (qð she) for ever, and never wol I gone hence, and I woll kepe The from medlyng, while me liste here on bide: thyne entremetyng maners into stedfastnes shullen be chaunged.

SOberliche tho threwe I up myne eyen, and hugelie tho was I astonied of this sodain adventure, and faine would I have lerned how vertues shulden ben knowen, in which thynges I hope to God, hereafter she shall me enformen, and namely sithen her resting place is now so nigh at my will: and anon all these thynges that this ladie saied, I rememored me by my self, and revolved the lives of myne understanding wittes.

Tho found I fully all these matters perfitelie there written, howe miserule by fained love bothe realms and cities hath governed a grete throwe. Howe lightlie me might the fautes espie, howe rules in love should ben used, howe sometyme with fained love soule I was begiled, how I should love have knowe, and howe I shall in love with my service procede.

Also furthermore, I found of perdurable letters wonderlie there graven these matters, whiche I shall nempne. Certes none age, ne other thing in yerth, maie the lest syllable of this in no point deface, but clerly as the Sonne in myne understanding soule thei shinen. This maie never out of my minde, how I maie not my love kepe, but through willyng in hert: wilne to love maie I not, but I lovyng have. Love have I none, but through grace of this Margarite perle. It is no maner doubte, that will woll not love, but for it is lovyng, as wille woll not rightfully, but for it is rightfull it felve. Also will is not lovyng for he woll love, but he woll love for he is lovyng: it is all one to will to be loving, and lovynges in possession to have. Right so will woll not love, for of love hath he no partie, and yet I denie not lovyng, will wilne more love to have, which that he hath not, when he wold more than he hath, but I say he maie no love wilne, if he no love have, through whiche thilk love he should wilne: but to have this lovyng will, maie no manne of hym self, but onely through grace toforne goyng: right so maie no man it kepe, but by grace folowing. Consider now every man a-right, and lette seen if that any wight of himself, mowe this loving well get, and he thereof first no-thing have: for if it should of himself spryng, either it must be willing, or not willynge. Willyng by hymself maie he it not have, sithen him failleth the matter that shuld it forth bring, the matter him failleth: why? He maie thereof have no knowing, till when grace put it in his herte. Thus willyng by himself, maie he it not have, and not willing maie he it not have. Parde every conceipt of every resonable cature otherwise wil not graunt: will in affirmatife with not willing by no waie mow accord. And although this loving woll come in mine hert by frenesse of arbitrement, as in this boke fullie is shewed, yet owe I not therefore as moche alowe my frewill frewill, as grace of that Margarite, to me lened, for neither might I without grace toforne goyng, and afterwarde folowing, thilk grace get ne kepe, and lese shal I it never but if frewill it make, as inwilling otherwise then grace hath me graunted. For right as when any persone taketh willing to be sober, and throweth that awaie willing to be dronke, or els taketh will of drinking out of mesure: which thing anon as it is doen, maketh through his own gilt by frewill, that leseth his grace. In which thing therefore, upon the nobley of grace I mote trusten, and my busie cure set the ilke grace to kepe, that my fre will otherwise then by reson it shoud werche, cause not my grace to voide: for thus must I bothe loken to frewill and to grace. For right as naturell usage, in engendering of children, maie not ben without father, ne also but with the mother, for neither father ne mother in begetting may it lacke: right so grace and frewill accorden, and without hem both maie not lovyng will in no partie ben gotten. But yet is not frewill, in gettyng of that thyng, so mokell thanke worthie as is grace, ne in the kepyng thereof, so moche thanke deserveth, and yet in gettyng and kepyng bothe doen thei accorde. Truely oftentime grace frewill helpeth in sordoyng of contrary thynges, that to willyng love not accorden, and strength will adversities to withste, wherfore al together to grace oweth to ben accepted, that my willyng deserveth: Frewill to lovyng in this wise is accorded. I remember me well how all this boke (who so hede taketh) considereth all thynges, to werchinges of mankinde evenly accordeth, as in turning of this word love into troth, or els rightwisenesse, whether that it like. For what thing that falleth to man, in helping of fre arbitrement, thilke rightwisenesse to take, or els to kepe, through whiche a man shall be saved, of whiche thyng all this boke mencion hath made, in everie point thereof, grace oweth to be thanked.

Wherefore I saie, every wight havynge this rightwisenesse, rightfull is, and yet therefore I fele not in my conscience, that to all rightfull is behoten the blisse everlasting, but to hem that ben rightfull, withouten any unrightfulness. Some man after some degree maie rightfully ben accomplished: as chaste men in livyng, and yet ben thei janglers, and full of envie prest: to hem shall this blisse never ben delivered. For right as very blisse is without al maner nede, right so to no man shall it be yeven, but to the rightfull, voide from al maner unrightfulness founde, so no man to her blisse shall ben folowed, but he be rightfull, and with unrightfulness not bounde, and in that degree fullie be knowe. This rightfulness in as moche as in hymself is, of none evill it is cause, and of all maner godenesse truely it is mother. This helpeth the spirite, to withste the leude lustes of fleshly likyng: this strengtheth and mainteineth the lawe of kind, and if that otherwhile me weneth harme of this precious thinge to followe, therethrough is nothyng the cause, of somewhat els cometh it aboute, who so taketh hede. By rightfulness forsoth, werne many holic sainctes gode favour in swetenesse to God Almighty, but that to some folkes thei weren favour of deth into dedly ende, that come not of the sainctes rightwisenesse, but of other wicked mennes badnesse hath proceeded. Truely the ilke will, whiche that the ladie of love me lerned affeccion of wille to nempne, whiche is in willing of profitable thynges, evill is it not, but when to fleshly lustes it consenteth, ayenst reson of soule: but that this thing more clerely be understande, it is for to knowe, whence, and how the ilke will is so vicious and so redie evil dedes to performe.

Grace at the ginning ordeined thilk wil in godenesse ever to have endured, and never to badnesse have assented: menne should not beleve, that God thilke wil maked to be vicious. Our firste father as Adam and Eve, for vicious appetites, and vicious wille to soche appetites consentyng, ben not one thing in kinde, other thyng is doen for the other. And how this will first into manne first assented, I holde it profitable to shewe: but if the first condicion of resonable cature woll be considered and apertly looked, lightly the cause of soche wille maie ben shewed. Intencion of God was, that rightfully and blessed should resonable nature ben maked, himself for to kepe, but neither blissfull ne rightfull might it not be, withouten will in them bothe. Will of rightfulness is the ilke same rightfulness, as here toforne is shewed: but wil of blisse is not the ilke blisse, for every manne hath not thilke blisse, in whom the will thereof is abiding. In this blisse after every understandyng, is suffisance of covenable comodites, without any maner nede, whether it be blisse of angels, or els the ilke, that grace first in paradise suffred Adam to have. For although Angels blisse be more than Adam's was in paradise, yet maie it not be denied, that Adam in paradise ne had suffisance of blisse: for right as grete herie is without al maner of coldnesse, and yet maie an other hert more hete have, right so nothing defended Adam in paradise to ben blissed, without all maner nede.

Although Angels blisse be moche more, forsothe it foloweth not laste then an other to have therefore hym nedeth, but for to wante a thyng, whiche that behoveth to ben had, that maie nede ben cleped, and that was not in Adam, at the first ginning, God and the Margarite weren what I mene. For sothe where as is nede, there is wretchednesse, God without cause toforne goyng made not resonable cature wretched, for him to understande and love hadde he first maked. God made therefore man blissed without all maner indigence, together and at ones toke resonable cature blyss, and of wil of blissednesse, and will of rightfulness, whiche is rightfulness it selve, and libertie of arbitrement, that is fre wil, with whiche thilke rightfulness may be kepe and lese. So and in that wise ordained thilke two, that wil whiche that instrumente is cleped, as here toforne mencion is made, shoulde use thilke rightfulness, by techinge of his soule to gode maner of governance, in thought and in wordes, and that it shoulde use the blisse in obedient maner, withouten any incommode. Blisse forsothe into man's profite, and rightfulness into his worship God delivered at ones: but rightfulness so was yeven that man might it lese, whiche yf he losse had not, but continually have it kept, he shoulde have deserved the avancement into the felowshippe of angels, in whiche thing if he that losse, never by himselfe forwarde shoulde he it now aynward recover: and as wel the blisse that he was in, as aungeles blisse that to him wardes was coming, shoulde be nome at ones, and he deprived of them bothe. And thus syl man unto likeness of unresonable bestes, and with hem to corrupcion and unlesly appetites was he under throwne, but yet wil of blisse dwelleth, that by indigence of gode, whiche that he lost through grete wretchednes, by right shoulde be ben punished. And thus for he weived rightfulness, losse hath he his blisse: but faile of his desire in his owne commodite maye he not, and where comodites to his resonable nature, whiche he hath losse may he not have, to false lustes, whiche ben bestial appetites, he is turned: folye of unconning hath him begiled, in weying that thilk ben the comodites that owen to ben desired. This affeccion of will by libertie of arbitrement is enduced to win thus thing that he shoulde not, and so is wil not maked yvel but unrightful, by absence of rightfulness, which thing by reson ever shulde he have. And frenesse of arbytrement may he not wilne whan he it not haveth, for while he it had, thilke helpe it not to kepe: so that without grace may it not ben recovered. Wil of comodite, in as moche as unrightful it is maked, by willing of yvel lustes, willing of godenesse may he not wilne, for wil of instrument to affeccion of wil is thralled, sithen that other thing may not it wilne, for wil of instrument to affeccion desireth, and yet ben bothe they wil cleped: for that instrument woll, through affeccion it wylmeth, and affeccion desireth thilke thing wherto instrument him ledeth. And so frewil to unlusty affeccion ful servaunt is maked, for unrightfulnes maye he not releve, and without rightfulness ful fredome may it never have. For kindly liberty of arbitrement without it veine and ydel is forsoth. Wherefore yet I say, as often have I said the same, whan instrument of will losse hath rightfulness, in no maner but by grace may he ayen retourne rightfulness to wilne.

For sithen nothings but rightfulness alone shuld he wilne, what that ever he wilneth without rightfulness, unrightfully he it wilneth. These than unrightful appetites and unthristy lustes which the flesch desireth, in as mokel as they ben in kinde, ben they not bad, but they ben unrightful and badde, for they ben in resonable creature, wher as they beyng in no way shuld ben suffred. In unresonable bestes neither ben they yvel ne unrightful, for there is ther kinde beyng.

KNowen may it wel ben now, of these thinges tofore declared, that man hath not alwai tunk rightfulness, which by dute of right evermore haven he shuld, and by no way by him selfe maye he it get ne kepe; and after he it hath if he it lese, recover shall he it never, without especial grace: wherefore the commune sentence of the peple in opinion, that everye thinge after destinie is ruled, false and wicked is to beleve: For thoughte predestinacion be as wel of gode as of badde, sithen, that it is said God hadnest made, whiche he never ne wrought, but for he suffreth hem to be maked, as that he hardeth whan he nought mislaith, or ledde into temptacion whan he not delivereth, wherefore it is none inconvenient if in that maner be said, God tofore have d. stinied both badde, ande ther badde werkes, whan hem ne ther yvel dedes nether amendeth, ne ther to hem grace levet. But speciallyche predestinacion of godenes alone is saide by these grete clerkes, for in him God doth that they ben, and that is godenes they werchen. But the negatife herof in badnesse is holden, as the lady of love hath me lerned, who so aright in this boke loketh. And utterly it is to weten, that predestinacion properly in God maye not ben demed, no more than before weting. For in the chapitre of Godde's before-weting, as love me reherf. d, al these maters apertely maye ben founden. Al thinges to God ben now together, and in presence duringe. Trewly presence and predestinacion in nothinge disacorden, wherefore as I was lerned howe Godde's before-weting and fre choice of will mowe stonden togither, me thinketh the same reson me ledeth, that destenie and fre wil acorden, so that neither of hem both to other in nothings contrarieth. And resonabliche may it not ben demed, as often as any thinge falleth frewil werching, as if a man another man wrongfully anoyeth, wherefore he him fleeth that it be constrained to that ende, as mokell folke crieth and saithe: Lo! as it was destinied of God tofore know, so it is thorowe necessite fal, and otherwise might it not betide. Trewlye neither he that the wronge wrought, ne he that him selfe venged, none of thilke things thorow necessite wrought: for if that with fre wil ther had it not willed, neither had wrought that he perfourmed: and so utterly grace that fre wil in godenes bringeth and kepeth, and fro badnes it tourneth, in al thinge moste thanke deserveth. This grace maketh sentence in vertue to abyde, wherefore in body and in soule in full plentie of conninge, after ther gode deserving in the everlastinge joye, after the day of dome, shul they endles dwel, and they shul ben lerned that in kingdome with so mokel affecte of love and of grace, that the lest joye shal of the gretest in glorie rejoyce and ben gladdened, as if he the same joye had. What wonder sith God is the gretest love, and The ne ought to loken thinges with resoning to prove, and so is instrument of wil, will: and yet varieth he from effecte and usinge both. Affeccion of wil also for wil is cleped, but it varieth from instrument in this maner wise, by that name, liche whan it cometh into minde, anon right it is in willing desired, and the negatife therof with willing maye not acorde: this is closed in hert, though usage and instrument slepe. This slepeth whan instrument and us waken: and of soche maner affeccion trewelye some man hath more, and some man lesse. Certes trewe lovers wenen ever therof to litell to have. False lovers in litell wenen have right mokell. Lo! instrumente of will in false and trewe bothe evenlich is proporcioned, but affeccion is more in some place than in some, bycause of godenes that foloweth, and that I think hereafter to declare. Use of this instrument is wil, but it taketh his name whan wilned thinge is in doynge. But utterly grace to catch in thy blisse, desire to ben rewarded. Thou muste have than affeccion of will at the ful, and use whan his tyme asketh wysely to ben governed. Sothly, my disciple, without fervent affeccion of will maye no man ben saved: this affeccion of gode service in gode love, may not ben grounded, without fervent desire to the thinge in will covered. But he that never retcheth to have or not to have, affeccion of wil in that hath no resting place. Why? for whan thinge cometh to minde and it be not taken in hede to comin or not come, therfore in that place affeccion failleth: and for thilke affeccion is so litel, thorow whiche in godenes he shoulde come to his grace, the litelnes wil it not suffre to availe by no waye into his helpes: Certes grace and reson thilke affeccion foloweth. This affeccion with reson knitte, dureth in everiche trewe herte, and evermore is encrefing, no ferdnes, no strength may it remove while truthe in herte abideth. Sothly whan falsched ginneth entre, truth draweth away grace and joye both, but than thilke falsched that trouthe hath thus voided hath unknit the bonde of understandinge reson bytween wil and the hert. And who so that bonde undoth, and unkitteth wil to be in other purpose than to the first accorde, knitteth him with contrary of reson, and that is unreson. Lo! than will and unreson bringeth a man from the blisse of grace, whiche thinge of pure kinde every man ought to shonne, and to eschew, and to the knot of wil and reson confirme. Methinketh (q<sup>d</sup> she) by thy student lokes, thou wenest in these wordes me to contrarien, from other sayinges heretofore in other place, as whan thou were sometime in affeccion of will, to thinges that now han brought The in disese, whiche I have The counsaile to voide, and thin hert discover, and there I made thy wil to ben chaunged, whiche now thou wenest I argue to witholde and to kepe. Shortlye I say the revers in these wordes may not ben founde: for though dronkenes be forboden, men shull not alway ben drinkles. I trow right for thou thy wil out of reson shulde not tourne, thy will in one reson shuld not unbinde, I say thy wil in thy firste purpose with unreson was closed: Constrewe forth of the remnaunte what

The gode liketh. Trewly that wil and refon shuld be knit together was fre wil of refon, after time thine herte is assentaunt to them both, thou myght not chaunge, but if thou from rule of refon varye, in whiche variaunce to come to thilke blisse desired contrariouly thou werchest: and nothing may know wil and refon but love alone. Than if thou voide love, than wevest the bonde, that knitteth, and so nedes, or els right lightly the other gon afondry, wherfore thou seest apertly that love holdeth this knot, and amaistreth 'hem to be bounde. These thinges, as a ring in circuit of wreth, ben knit in thy soule without departing. A! let be, let be (q<sup>d</sup> I) it nedeth not of this no reherfaile to make, my soule is yet in parfite blisse, in thinking of the knot.

NOW trewly, lady, I have my grounde wel understood, but what thinge is thilke spire that into a tre shoulde wexe: Expowne me that thyng, what ye therof mene. That shal I (q<sup>d</sup> she) blithlie, and take gode hede to the wordes I The rede. Continuaunce in thy gode service, by long processe of tyme in full hope abiding, without any chaunge to wilne in thyn hert, this is the spire, whiche if it be well kept and governed shal so hugey spring, til the fruit of grace is plentifully out-sprongen: for altho thy wil be gode, yet may not therfore thilke blisse desired hastily on The discenden, it must abyde his fesonable tyme. And so by proces of growing, with thy gode traveile, it shal into more and more wexe, til it be founde so mighty, that windes of yvel speche, ne scornes of envie make nat the travaile overthrow, ne frostes of mistrust, ne hailes of jelousy right litel might have in harming of soch springes. Every yong setling lightly with smal stormes is apeired, but whan it is woxen somdele in gretnes, than han grete blastes and wethers but litel might, any disavauntage to him for to werche. Mine own sovereign lady (q<sup>d</sup> I) and welth of mine hert, and it were lyking unto your noble grace therthrough nat to be displeased, I suppose ye erren, now ye maken jelosity, envy, and distourbour to 'hem that ben your servautes. I have lerned ofte toforne this time, that in every lover's hert grete plentie of jelousie's greves ben sowe, wherfore me thinketh ye ne ought in no maner accompte thilke thing among these other welked winers and venomous serpentis, as envy, mistrust, and yvel speche. O sole (q<sup>d</sup> she) mistrust with foly, with yvel wil medled engendreth the welked padde. Trewly if they were distroied jelousy undowne were for ever, and yet some maner of jelosity, I wot wel is ever redy in al the hertes of my trew servautes, as thus: to be jelous over him self, lest he be cause of his own disese.

This jelousye in ful thought, ever shuld be kept for ferdnes to lese his love by miskeping thorowe his owne doing in leudnes, or els thus: Lest she that thou servest so fervently is beset ther her better lyketh, that of al thy gode service she compteth nat a cresse. These jelousies in hert for acceptable qualitees ben demed: these oughten every trew lover by kindly evermore haven in his minde, til fully the grace and blisse of my service be on him descended at wil. And he that than jelosity catcheth, or els by wening of his owne folishe wilfulnes mistrusteth, truly with fantasy of venim he is soule begiled. Yvel wil hath grounded thilke mater of sorow in his leude soule, and yet nat for than to every wight shuld me not trust, ne everi wight fully misbeleve, the mene of these thinges owen to be used. Sothly withouten causful evidence mistrust in jelousye shulde not be wened in no wise person comenly, soch leude wickednes shulde me nat finde. He that is wise and with yvell wil nat be acomered, can abyde wel his time til grace and blisse of his service folowing have him so mokell efed, as his abidinge tofore hande hath him disced. Certes (lady q<sup>d</sup> I tho) of nothing me wondreth, sithen thilke blisse so precious is and kindly gode, and wel is, and worthy in kind, whan it is medled with love, and refon as ye toforne have declared. Why? anon as hie one is sprong, why springeth not the tother? and anone as the one cometh, why receveth not the other? For every thing that is out of his kindly place by full appetite ever cometh thitherward kindly to drawe, and his kindly being therto him constraineth. And the kindly stede of this blisse is in soch wil medled to unbyde, and nedes in that it shuld have his kindly beyng. Wherfore me thinketh anon as that wil to be shewed, and kinde him profereth, thilke blisse shulde hym hie thilke wil to receive, or els kind of godenes wochea not in 'hem as they shuld. Lo! be the sonne never so ferre ever it hath hys kynde werching in erth: grete weight on hie on loft caried stineth never til it come to his resting place. Waters to the Se waid ever ben they drawing, thing that is light blythly will not sinke, but ever ascendeth and upward draweth. Thus kind in every thing his kindly counse, and his being place sheweth: Wherfore by kinde on this gode wil, anon as it were sprong, this blisse shuld theron discende, ther kinde wold they dwelleden together, and so have ye said your selfe. Certes (q<sup>d</sup> she) thyne hert sitteth wonder fore this blisse for to have, thin herte is foregrieved that it tarieth so longe, and if thou darstest, as me thinketh by thine words, this blisse woldest thou blame. But yet I say, thilke blisse is kindly gode, and his kindly place in that will to unbyde. Never the later, there comming together after kindes ordinaunce nat sodainly may betide, it must abide time, as kind yeveth him leve, for if a man, as this wil medled gonne him shewe, and thilke blisse in haste folowed, so lightly comming shulde lightly cause going, longe time of thrusting, causeth drinke to be the more delicious whan it is atalled. Howe is it (q<sup>d</sup> I than) that so many blisses be I all day at min eye, in the first moment of a sight with soche wil accord. Ye, and yet other while with wil assenteth, singularly by him selfe ther refon taketh, travaile was none, service had no time. This is a quaint in ner thinge, how soche doing cometh aboute. O (q<sup>d</sup> she) that is thus, the erthe kindly after fasons and times of the yere, bringeth forth innumerable herbes and trees bothe profitable and other, but soch as men might leve though they were nought in nourisunge to man's kinde serve, or els soche as tournen sone unto mennes confusion in case that thereof they atalle, comen forth out of the erthe by ther owne kind, withouten any mane's cure or any butynes in traveile: and the like herbes that to mennes livelode necessarily serve, without whiche godly in this li e creatures mowen not endure, and molte ben nourishen to mankind, without grete traveile, grete tilthe, and longe abiding time, comen not out of the erthe, and it with fede toforne ordained soche herbes to make spring and forthe grow. Right so the parfite blisse that we have in mening of duringe tyme to abyde, maye nat come so lightly, but with grete traveile, and right besy tilth, and yet gode fede to be sowe, for oft the croppe failerthe of badde fede, be it never so wel traveiled. And thilke blisse thou spoke of so lightly in comminge, trewely is nat necessary ne abydinge: and but it the better be stamp-ed, and the venomous jeuse outwongen, it is likely to enpoisonen all tho that thereof tasten. Certes the bitter ben the herbes that shewen first the yere of ther own kind. Wel the more is the harvest that yeldeth many graines, tho long and fore it hath ben traveykd. What woldest thou demen yt a man wo de yeve thre quarters of nobles of golde, that wer a precious gift? ye certes (q<sup>d</sup> I). And what (q<sup>d</sup> she) thre quarters ful of perles? Certes (q<sup>d</sup> I) that were a riche gifte. And what (q<sup>d</sup> she) of as mokel azure? (Q<sup>d</sup> I) a precious gyfte at ful. Were not (q<sup>d</sup> she) a noble gifte of all these at ones? In gode faith (q<sup>d</sup> I) for wanting of Englishe naming of so noble a worde, I can not for preciousnesse yeve it a name: Rightfully (q<sup>d</sup> she) hast thou demed, and yet love knitte in vertue passeth all the golde in this erthe. Gode wil accordant to reson, with no maner property may be countervailed, all the azure in the worlde is not to accounte in respecte of reson, love that with gode wil and reson accordeth, with non erthely riches maye nat ben amended. This yest hast thou yeven I knowe it my self, and thy Margarithe thilke gift hath received, in which thing to reward she hath her self bounde. But thy gift as I said, by no maner riches maye be amended, wherefore with thing that may nat be amended thou shalt of thy Margarithes rightwisnesse be rewarded. Right suffred yet never, but every gode dede somtyme to be yoided. Al wolde thy Margarith with no reward. The quite, right that nevermore dieth thy mede in merite wol purvey. Certes soch sodaine blisse as thou first nempnest, right wil hem reward as The wel is worthy, and though at thin eye it semeth the reward the desert to passe, right can after sende soch biternes evenly it to reward: so the sodain blisse by al ways of reson in grete godenes may not be acompted, but blisse long, both long it abyde, and endlesse it woll last. Se why thy wil is endelese, for if thou lovedeste ever, thy will is ever ther to abide and nevermore to change: evenhed of reward must ben done by right: than muste nedes thy grace and this blisse endelese in joy to unbide. Evenlyche disese asketh evenlyche joy, whiche hastily thou shalt have. A (q<sup>d</sup> I) it sufficeth not than alone gode will, be it never so well with reson medled, but if it be in gode service long travailed. And so through service should men come to the joye, and this me thinketh should be the waxing tre of which ye first moved.

Vry trouthe (q<sup>d</sup> she) hast thou now conceived of these things in thin hert, hastily shalt thou be able very joye and parfite blisse to receive. And now I wote well thou desyrest to knowe the maner of branches, that out of the tre should spring. Therof lady (q<sup>d</sup> I) hertely I you pray: For than leve I wol, that right sone after I shall taste of the frute that I so longe have desired. Thou haste herde (q<sup>d</sup> she) in what wise this tre tosome this have I declared, as in grounde and in stocke of waxing. First the ground shuld be thy frewil ful in thine herte, and the stocke (as I saide) should be continuance in gode service, by long time in travaille, til it were in gretnes right well woxen. And whan this tre soche gretnes hath caught, as I have reherfed, the branches then that the frute should forth bringe, speche muste they be nedes in voice of prayer, in complaining wise used. Out alas! (q<sup>d</sup> I tho) he is sorowfully wounded that hideth his speche, and spareth his complaints to make, what shal I speke? that care; but paine even lyke to hel sore hath me assailed, and so ferforth in paine me throng, that I leve my tre is fere and never shal it frut forth bring. Certes he is gretly cased, that dare his prevy mone discover to a true felow, that conning hath and might wherthrough his plaint in any thing may be amended. And mokel more is he joied that with hert of hardines dare complaine to his ladye, what cares that he suffreth, by hope of mercy with grace to be avauced. Truly I say for me, sithe I came this Margarith to serve, durst I never me discover of no maner disese, and wel the later hath min herte hardied soch thinges to done, for the grete bounties and worthy refreshmentes that she of her grace godelye, without any deserte on my halve, ofte hath me rekened, and nere her godenes the more with grace and with mercy medled, which passen all desertes, travails, and servinges, that I in any degre might endite, I wold wene I shuld be without recover in getting of this blisse for ever. Thus have I stilled my disese, thus have I covered my care, that I bren in sorowful anoy, as gledes and coles wassen a fire under ded ashen. Wel the hotter is the fire, that with ashen it is overlain: right longe this wo have I suffred. Lo! (q<sup>d</sup> Love) how thou farest: me thinketh the palse yvel hath acomered thy wittes, as fast as thou hiest forward, anon sodainly backward thou movest. Shall nat yet all thy leudnes out of thy braines? dul ben thy skilful understandings, thy wil hath thy wit so amaistred. Wost thou not wel (q<sup>d</sup> she) but every tre in his resonable time of buxioning shewe his blomes fro within, in signe of what fruite shuld out of him spring, els the frute for that yere men halt delivered, be the ground never so gode. And though the stock be mighty at the ful, and the braunches fere and no buxions shew, farewell the gardiner, he may pipe with an yve lese, his fruite is failed. Wherefore thy braunches must buxionen in presence of thy lady, if thou desire any frute of thy ladies grace, but beware of thy life, that thou no wodelay use, as in asking of things that stretchen into shame, for than might thou not speche by no way that I can espie. Vertue woll not suffre villany out of himself to springe. Thy wordes may not be queint ne of subtil maner understanding. Frelwitted people supposen in soch poesies to be begiled, in open understanding must every word be used. Voice without clere understandinge of sentence, saith Aristotel, right nought printeth in hert. Thy wordes then to abide in hert and cleve in ful sentence of trewe mening platly must thou shew, and ever be obedient her hestes and her willes to performe, and be thou set in soche a wit to wete by a loke evermore what she meneth. And he that list nat to speke, but stilly his disese suffre: what wonder is it tho he never come to his blisse? Who that travaileth unwist, and coveteth thing unknowe, unweting he shal be quited, and with unknow thing rewarded. Gode lady (q<sup>d</sup> I than) it hath oft be sene, that weathers and stormes so hugely have fal in buxioning tyme, and by perte durese han beten of the springes so clene, wherthrough the frut of thilk yere hath failed. It is a grete grace whan buxions han gode weathers, ther frutes forth to bring. Alas! than after soche stormes howe harde is it to avoide, till este webring and yeres han maketh ther circute cours al about, er any frute be able to be tasted! he is shent for shame, that sole is rebuked of his speche. He that is in fire brenning fore smarteth for disese. Him thinketh ful long er the water come that shuld the fire quenche. Whil men gon after a leche, the body is buried. Lo howe semely this frute waxeth! me thinketh that of tho frutes may no man taste, for pure bitternes in favour. In this wise both fruit and the tre wassen away togidre, though mokel besy occupation have be spent to bringe it so ferforthe, that it was able to spring. A litel spech hath maketh that al this labour is in ydel. In or (q<sup>d</sup> she) wherof it serveth thy question to assoile, me thinketh The now duller in wittes, than whan I with The first mette, although a man be leude communly for a sole he is not demed, but if he no gode wol lerne, sortes and soles let lightly out of minde the gode that men techeth hem. I said therefore thy stocke must be strong, and in gretnes welherted, the tre is ful feble that that at the first dent faileth: and although frute faileth one yere or two, yet shall soche a feson come one time or other, that shall bring out frute that is nothing preterit, ne passed ther is nothing, future ne coming, but al thinges togid̃er in that place ben present everlasting without any meving, wherfore to God al thing is as now: and though a thing be nat in kindly nature of thinges as yet, and if it shoud be hereafter, yet evermore we shul saye God it maketh be time present, and nowe, for no future ne preterit in him may be found. Wherfor his wetinge and his beforeweting, is al one in understanding. Than if wetinge and beforewetinge of God putteth in necessite to al thinges which he wot or beforewot, ne thinge after eternite, or els after anye time, he wol or doth of liberte, but al of necessite; which thing if thou wene it be ayenst reson, nat thorowe necessite, to be or nat to be, al thinge that God wot or beforewot to be or nat to be, and yet nothing defendeth any thing to be wist or to be before wist of him in our willes or our doinges to be done, or els comming to be for fre arbitrement. Whan thou hast these declaracions well understande, than shalt thou finde it resonable at prove, and that many thinges be nat thorowe necessite, but thorowe liberte of wil, save necessite of fre-wil, as I tofore said: and as me thinketh al utterly declared. Me thinketh lady (q̃d I) so I shoulde you nat displese, and evermore your reverence to kepe, that these thinges contrarien in any understandinge, for ye sain somtyme is thorowe libertye of wyll, and also thorowe necessite. Of this have I yet no favour, without better declaracion. What wonder (q̃d she) is there in these thinges, sithen al day thou shalt se at thine eye, in manye thinges receven in hem selfe revers, thorowe divers resons, as thus. I praye The (q̃d she) whiche thinges ben more revers than comen and gone: For if I bidde The come to me, and thou come, after when I bid The go and thou go, thou reverest fro thy firste cominge. That is sothe (q̃d I) and yet (q̃d she) in thy firste alone by divers reson was ful reverfinge to understand. As how (q̃d I). That shall I shewe The (q̃d she) by ensample of thinges that have kindly moving. Is there any thing that moveth more kindly than doth the heavens eye, which I clepe the Sonne. Sothely (q̃d I) me semeth it most kindly to move. Thou saiest soth (q̃d she). Than it thou loke to the Sonne, in what parte he be under heaven, evermore he heigheth him in movinge fro thilke place, and heigheth mevinge towarde the ilke same place, to thilke place from whiche he gothe he heigheth comming, and without any cefinge to that place he neigheth from which he is chaunged and withdraw. But now in these thinges after diversite of reson, revers in one thing may be sey without repugnaunce. Wherfore in the same wise, without any repugnaunce by my resons tofore maked, all is one to beleve, somthing to be thorow necessite cominge, for it is coming, and yet with no necessite constrained to be cominge, but with necessite that comethe out of fre wil, as I have said. Tho list me a litel to speke, and gan stint my penne of my writing, and said in this wise. Trewly, lady, as me thinketh, I can allege autoritees grete that contraien your sayinges. Job saith of manne's person, thou hast putte his terme, whiche he might nat passe. Than saye I that no man maye shorte ne length the daye, ordained of his doing, altho somtyme to us it semeth some man to do a thinge of fre wil, wherthrowe his deth he henteth. Nay forsothe (q̃d she) it is nothing ayenst my sayng, for God is nat begiled, ne he seeth nothing wheðer it shall come of liberte or elles of necessite, yet it is said to be ordained at God immovable, whiche at man or it be done maye be chaunged.

Soch thing also is that Poule the apostel saith of hem that tofore werne purposed to be saintes, as thus: whiche that God before wist, and hath predestined, conformes of ymages of his sonne, that he shuld ben the firste begeten, that is to say, here amonges many brethern; and whom he hath predestined, hem he hath cleped, and whom he hath cleped, hem he hath justified, and whom he hath justified, hem he hath magnified. This purpose after whiche thei ben cleped saintes, or holy in the everlasting present, where is neither time passed, ne time coming, but ever it is only present, and now as mokell a momente, as vii. M. Winter, and so ayenward withouten any meving, is nothing liche temporell presence, for thyng that there is ever presente. Yet emonges you men, ere it be in your presence, it is movable through libertie of arbitrement. And right as in the everlasting present, no maner thing was, ne shal be, but onely is, and now here in your temporell time, some thing was and is, and shal be but moyng floundes, and in this is no maner repugnaunce, right so in the everlasting presence, nothing maie be chaunged: and in your temporell time, other while it is proved movable, by libertie of will, or it be doo, withouten any inconvenience thereof to folow. In your temporell tyme is no soche presence, as in the other, for your presente is doon, when passed and to come ginnen entre, which times here emonges you, everich cilly foloweth other, but the presente everlastyng dureth in one hed, withouten any imaginable chaunging, and ever is presente and nowe. Truly the course of the planettes, and overwhelmynges of the Sonne, in daies and nightes, with a newe ginning of his cirenite after it is ended, that is to say, one yere to folowe an other, these maken your transitorie times, with chaungyng of lives, and mutacion of peple. But right as your temporell presence coveteth every place, and all thinges in every of your times be contained, and as now both sey and will to God's very knowing. Than (q̃d I) me wondreth why Poule spake these wordes, by voice of significacion in time passed, that God his saintes beforewilt hath predestined, hath cleped, hath justified, and hath magnified: me thinketh he should have said the wordes in time present, and that had ben more accordaunte to the everlasting presente, then to have spoke in preterit voice of passed understanding. O (q̃d love) by these wordes, I se well thou hast little understanding of the everlasting presence, or els of my before spoken wordes, for never a thing of tho thou haste nempned, was tofore other, or after other, but al atones evenliche at the God ben, and al togid̃er in the everlasting presente be now to understanding, the eternall presence, as I saied, hath inclose togid̃er in one all tymes, in whiche close and one all thinges, that ben in divers times, and in divers places temporell, without posteriorite or priorite, ben closed therein perpetuell nowe, and maked to dwell in present sight. But there thou saiest that Poule should have spoke thilke forfard sentence by time present, and that moste should have ben accordaunt to the everlasting presence, why gabbest thou to thy wordes? Sothlie I saie Poule moved the wordes, by significacion of time passed, to shewe fulle that thilke wordes wer not put for temporell significacion, for al thilke time wer not thilke sentence temporallliche borne, whiche that Poule pronounced, God have tofore know, and have cleped then magnified; wherthrough it maie well be knowe, that Poule used the wordes of passed significacion, for neede and lacke of a worde in man's bodily spech, betokening the everlasting presence. And therefore in wordis most semelich in likenesse to everlasting presence he toke his sentence, for thinges, that here become ben

Passed, utterly be immovable, ilike to the everlasting presence. As thilke that ben there never mowe not ben present, so thinges of time passed ne mowe in no wise not ben passed: but all thinges in your temporell presence, that passen in a litle while, shullen ben not present. So then in that it is more similitude to the everlasting presence significacion of tyme passed, than of time temporall presente, and so more in accordaunce. In this maner what thyng of these that ben don through fre arbitrement, or els as necessarie, holy writ pronounceth, after eternitie he speketh, in whiche presence is everlasting soth, and nothing but soth immovable, that after tyme, in which naught alwaie ben your willes and your actes; and right as while thei be not, it is not nedefull 'hem to be, so oft it is not nedefull, that sometyme thei should be. As how (q<sup>d</sup> I) for yet must I be lerned, by some ensample. Of love (q<sup>d</sup> she) wol I now ensample make, sithen I knowe the hed knot in that yelke. Lo! sometyme thou writest no art, ne arte then in no wil to write, and right as while thou writest not, or els wolt not write, it is not nedeful The to write, or els wilst to write.

And for to make The knowe utterly, that thynges ben otherwise in the everlasting presence, than in temporall time: se now my gode child, for something is in the everlasting presence, then in temporell tyme, it was not in eternitie tyme, in eterne presence shall it not be. Then no reson defendeth, that some thing ne maie be in tyme temporell moving, that in eterne is immovable. Forsothe it is no more contrary ne revers, for to be movable in time temporell, and movable in eternitie, then not to be in any tyme, and to be alwaie in eternitie, and have to be, or els to come in tyme temporell, and not have be, ne nought comyng to be in eternitie. Yet never the later, I saie not somethyng to be never in tyme temporell, that ever is eternitie, but all onely in sometyme not to be. For I saie not thy love to morne in no time to be, but to daie alone I deny ne it to be, and yet never the later, it is alway in eternitie.

Also (q<sup>d</sup> I) it semeth to me, that comyng thyng, or els passed, here in your temporall tyme to be, in eternitie ever now, and present oweth not to be demed, and yet soloweth not thilke thing, that was or els shall be, in no maner therto ben passed, or els coming: then utterly shall we deny, for there without cessing, it is in his present maner. O (q<sup>d</sup> she) myne owne disciple, now ginnest thou able to have the name of my servaunt. Thy witte is clered, awaie is now errour of cloud in unconnyng, awaie is blindnesse of love, awaie is thoughtfull study, of meddling maners, hastlie shalte thou entre into the joye of me, that am thine owne maistres.

Thou haste (q<sup>d</sup> she) in a fewe wordes well and clerely concluded mokell of my matter. And right as there is no revers, ne contrariouseie in tho doinges, right so withouten any repugnaunce, it is saied, some thyng to be movable in time temporell, and for it be, that in eternitie dwelleth immovable, not afore it be, or after that it is, but without cessing; for right naught is there after time, that same is there everlasting, that temporaliche sometyme n'is, and toforne it be, it maie not be, as I have saied. Now sothly (q<sup>d</sup> I) this have I well understande, so that now me thinketh that prescience of God, and fre arbitrement, withouten any repugnaunce accorden, and that maketh the strength of eternitie, whiche encloseth by presence, duryng all tymes, and all thynges that ben, han ben, and shall ben in any tyme.

I would now (q<sup>d</sup> I) a litle understande, sithen that all thyng thus before wotte, whether thilke wetyng be of tho thynges, or els thilke thynges ben to ben of God's wetyng, and so of God nothyng is:

and if every thyng be through God's weting, and thereof take his being, then should God be maker and authour of badde werkes, and so he should not rightfully punishe evil doinges of mankinde. (Q<sup>d</sup> Love) I shall tel The, this lesson to lerne, myne owne true servaunte, the noble Philosophicall Poete, in Englishe, whiche evermore hym busieth and travaileth rightfore, my name to encrese; wherefore all that willen me gode, owe to doe him worship and reverence both, truly his better ne his pere in schole of my rules cond I never finde: He (q<sup>d</sup> she) in a tretise that he made of my servaunt Troilus, hath this matter touched, and at the full this question assailed: Certainly his noble sayngs, can I not amend: in godenes of gentil manlich spech, without any maner of nicitie of staries imaginacion; in wit and in gode reson of sentence, he passeth al other makers. In the boke of Troilus, the answer to thy question maiest thou lerne, never the later, yet maie lightly thine understanding somdele ben lerned, if thou have knowyng of these tofornsaid thinges, with that thou have understanding of two the last chapters of this seconde boke; that is to saie, gode to be some thing, and bad to want al maner being, for badde is nothyng els, but absence of gode; and that GOD in gode, maketh that gode dedes ben gode, in evill he maketh that thei ben but naught, that thei ben bad: for to nothing is badnesse to be. I have (q<sup>d</sup> I tho) inough knowing therein, me nedeth of othier thinges to here, that is to saie, how I shall come to my blisse so long desired.

IN this matter toforne declared (q<sup>d</sup> Love) I have wel shewed, that every man hath fre arbitrement of thinges in his power to doe, or undoe what hym liketh. Out of this ground muste come the Spire, that by processe of tyme, shall in gretnesse sprede, to have branches and blosomes, of waxyng fruite in grace, of whiche the taste and the savour is endeleffe blisse in joye ever to onbide.

Now Ladie (q<sup>d</sup> I) that tre to sette faine would I lerne. So thou shalte (q<sup>d</sup> she) ere thou departe hence. The firste thyng thou must set thy werke on ground siker and gode, accordaunte to thy springes. For if thou desire grapes, thou goest not to the Hasell; ne for to fetchen roses, thou seekest not on okes; and if thou shalt have Honie-soukels, thou levest the fruit of the soure Docke. Wherefore if thou desire this blisse in parfite joye, thou must set thy purpose ther vertue foloweth, and not to loke after the bodily godes, as I saied when thou were wrytyng in thy seconde boke. And for thou hast set thy self in so noble a place, and utterly loved in thine herte the misgoyng of thy firste purpose, this settele is the esier to spring, and the more lighter thy soule in grace to be lised. And truly thy desire, that is to saie, thy will, algates mote ben stedfast in this matter, without any chaunging, for if it be stedfaste, no man maie it voide. Yes parde (q<sup>d</sup> I) my will maie ben tourned by frendes, and disese of manace, and thretning in lesing of my life, and of my limmes, and in many other wise, that now cometh not to minde. And also it more ofte ben out of thought, for no remembrance maie hold one thyng continually in herte, be it never so lustie desired. Nowe se (q<sup>d</sup> she) thou thy will shal folowe, thy frewill to be grounded continually to abide: It is thy frewill that thou lovest and haste loved, and yet shalt loven this Margarite perle, and in thy wil thou thinkest to holde it. Then is thy will knitte in love, not to chaunge for no newe luste beside: This will techeth thyne herte, from all maner varyng. But then althoughe thou be thretened in deth, or els in otherwise, yet is it in thin arbitrement to chofe, thy love to voide, or els to holde: and thilke arbitrement is in a maner a judgements, judgemente, bitwene desire and thy herte. And if thou deme to love thy gode wil faileth, then art thou worthy no blisse, that gode wil shuld deserve: and if thou chose continuaunce in thy gode service, then thy will abideth, nedes blisse folowyng of thy gode will muste come by strengthe of thilke judgemente: for thy firste will that taught thine herte to abide: and halt it from th'eschange, with thy reson is accorded. Truly this maner of will thus shall abide, impossible it were to turne if thy herte be true, and if every man diligently the menynges of his will consider, he shall well understande, that gode will knit with reson, but in a false herte, never is voided: for power and might of keping this gode wil, is through libertie of arbitrement in hert, but gode wil to kepe maie not faile. Eke then if it faile, it sheweth it self, that gode will in keping is not there. And thus false will that putteth out the gode, anone constraineth the herte to accorde in lovyng of thy gode will and this accordaunce bitwene false wille and thine herte, in falsitie ben likened together. Yet a little wold I saie The in gode wille, thy gode willes to raise and strength. Take hede to me (q<sup>d</sup> she) howe thy willes thou shalt understande. Right as ye han in your bodie divers members, and five sondrie wittes everiche aparte to his owne doying, whiche thynges as instrumentes ye usen, as your handes apart to handle, fete to goe, tongue to speke, eye to se: right so the soule hath in hym certaine sterynges and strengthes, whiche he useth as instrumentes, to his certain doynges. Reson is in the soule, whiche he useth thynges to knowe and to prove and will, whiche he useth to wilne: And yet is neither wille ne reson all the soule, but everich of hem is a thing by hymself in the soule. And right as everich hath thus singuler instruments by hymselfe, thei han as well divers aptes, and divers maner usynges, and thilk aptes mowen in will ben cleped affeccions. Affeccion is an instrument of willyng in his appetites. Wherefore mokell folke saie if a resonable cecture's soule any thing fervently wilneth, affectuously he wilneth, and thus maie wille by terme of equivocac in three waies ben understande: one is instrument of willyng, an other is affeccion of this instrument: and the third is use, that setteth it a werke. Instrumente of willyng is the ilke strengthe of the soul, which The constraineth to wiln, right as reson is instrument of resons, which ye usen when ye loken. Affeccion of this instrument is a thing, by whiche ye be drawe desirously any thing to wilne in covetous maner, all be it for the time out of your mind: as if it come in your thought thilk thing to remember, anon ye ben willing thilke to doen, or els to have. And thus is instrument will, and affeccion is will also, to wilne thing as I saied: as for to wilne helth, when will nothyng thereon thinketh, for anone as it cometh to memorie, it is in wil; and so is affeccion to wilne slepe, when it is out of minde, but anon as it is remembered wil wilneth slepe, when his time cometh of the doing. For affeccion of wil never accordeth to sicknesse, ne alwaie to wake. Right so in a true lover's affeccion of willing instrument is to wilne truthe in his service, and this affeccion alway abideth, although he be sleping or thretned, or els not thereon thinkyng, but anone as it cometh to minde, anon he is stedfast in that will to abide. Use of this instrument forsoth is an other thing, by hymself, and that have ye not but when ye be doying, in willed thing by affecte or instrument of will, purposed or desired: and this maner of usage in my service wisely nedeth to be ruled, from waiters with envie closed, from spekers full of jangeling wordes, from proude folke and hautain, that lambes and innocentes both scornen and despisen. Thus in doying varieth the actes of willing everiche from other, and yet ben thei cleped wil, and the name of will utterly owen thei to have, as instrument of wil is wil, when ye turne into purpose of any thing to doen, be it to sit or to stande, or any soche thing els. This instrument maie ben had, although affecte and usage be left out of doying, right as ye have sight and reson, and yet alway useyegreteli wisdom, in hem that be, and thei in God. Nowe then when all false folke be ashamed, whiche wenen al bestialtie and yerthly thing be sweter and better to the body, then heavenly is to the soule: this is the grace and the fruct that I long have desired, it doth me gode the favour to smel. Christe now to The I crie of mercy and of grace, and graunte of thy godenes to every maner reder ful understanding in this lend pamphlet to have, and let no man wene other cause in this werke, then is verily the soth: for envy is ever redy all innocentes to shend, wherefore I would that gode spech envie evermore hinder. But no man wene this werke be sufficiently maked, for God's werke passeth man's, no manne's wit to parlit werke maie by no waie purvaie th'ende: how shold I then so leude aught wene of perfeccion any ende to get? Never the later grace, glorie and lande, I yelde and put with worshipful reverence to the sothfast God in Thre, with Untie closed, whiche that the hevie langor of my sicknesse hath tourned into mirth of helth to recover: for right as I was sorowed, through the gloton cloud of manifold sickly sorowe, so mirth ayen coming helth hath me gladd and greatly comforted. I beseeche and praie therefore, and I crie on God's grete pitie, and on his mokell mercie, that these present scourges of my flesh now make medicine and lechecraft of my inner man's helth, so that my passed trespass and tenes through wepyng of mine eyes ben washe, and I voided from al maner disese, and no more to wepe hereafter, I now be kept thorowe God's grace: so that God's hand which mercially me hath scourged, hereafter in gode plite fro thence mercially me kepe and defende. In this boke be many privie thynges wimpied and fold, unneeth shuld leude men the plites unwande, wherefore I praie to the holy ghosse here of his ointmentes mens wittes to clere, and for God's love no man wonder, why or how this question cum to my minde, for my grete lustie desire was of this ladie to ben informed, my leudnesse to amende. Certes I know not other mens wittes, what I should aske, or in answer, what I should saie, I am so leude my self, that mokell more lernyng yet me behoveth. I have made therefore as I could, but not sufficiently as I would, and as matter yave me sentence, for my dol wit is hindred, by slepmother of forgytyng, and with cloude of unconnyng, that floppeth the light of my margarite perle, wherefore it maie not shine on me as it should. I desire not only a gode reder, but also I covete and praie a gode boke amender, in correccion of wordes, and of sentence: and onely this mede I covete for my travaile, that every infier and herer of this leude fantasie, devoute horisons and prayers to God the grete judge yelden, and praie for me, in that wise that in his dome my sinnes now ben relefed and foryeven: he that praieith for other, for hymself travaileth. Also I praie that every man parsitelic mowe knowe, through what intencion of hert this tretise have I drawe. How was it the sightfull Manna in desert to children of Israel was spirituall mete? bodily also it was, for menne's bodies it nourisheth. And yet never the later, Christe it signified. Right so a jewell betokeneth a gemme, and that is a stone vertuous, or els a perle. Margarine a woman betokeneth grace, lernyng, or wisdom of GOD, or els holie Church. It bred through vertue is made holie fleshe, what is that our God saith? It is the spirit that yeveth life, the fleshe of nothyng it profiteth. Fleſhe is fleſhly underſtanding: Fleſhe without grace and love naught is worthe.

The letter ſleeth, the ſpirit yeveth lifelich underſtandying. Charitie is love, and love is Charitie, God graunte us all therein to be frended. And thus the Teſtament of love is ended.

Here endeth the teſtament of Love.

The Lamentacion of Marie Magdaleine.

This Treatiſe is taken out of St. Origen wherein Mary Magdalen lamenteth the cruell Death of her Saviour Chriſt.

Longid in the wawe of mortall diſtreſſe
Alas for wo to whom ſhal I complein!
Or who ſhall devoide this grete hevineſſe
Fro me' wofull Marie, wofull Magdalein!
My Lord is gon, alas who wrought this tein!
This ſodain chaunce perſith my herte ſo depe,
That nothing can I do, but waile and wepe.

My Lorde is gone, that here in grave was laied, Aſtir his grete paſſion, and deth cruell,
Alas who hath hym thus again betraied!
Or what man here aboutin can me tell
Where he' is become the Prince of Iſraell, Jeſus of Naz'areth, my ghofly ſuccour,
My parſite love, and hope of all honour!

What creature hath hym hennis caryid,
Or how might this ſo ſodainly befall?
I would I had here with him taryid,
And ſo ſhould I have had my purpoſe all;
I bought ointmentes full precious and roial,
Where with I hoped his corps to have anointed,
But he thus gone, my minde is diſapointed.

While I therefore advertiſe and beholde
This pitous chaunce, here in my preſence,
Full little marvaile though my hert be colde,
Conſidering ſo! my Lord's abſence;
Alas! that I ſo full of negligence
Should be foundin, bicauſe I come ſo late,
All men maie ſaie I am infortunate.

Cauſe of my ſorowe you maie undirſtonde,
Quia tulerunt Dominum meum,
An othir is, that I ne maie Him ſonde,
I wote nere Ubi poſuerunt eum,
Thus I muſte bewaile Dolorem meum
With hertie wepyng I can no bet deſerve,
Till deth approche, my herte ſor to kerve.

My herte oppreſt with ſodain avinture
By fervent anguiſhe is bewrappid ſo
That long this life I ne maie not endure,
Soche is my pain, ſoch is my mortall wo,
Nevirtheleſſe to what parte ſhall I go
In hope to findin myne owne Turtill true,
My liv'is joye, my ſoverain Lorde Jeſu?

Sith all my joye, that I call his preſence,
Is thus removed, now I am full of mone,
Alas the while I made no providence
For this miſhap, wherefore I ſigh and grone, Succour to finde, to what place might I gone!

Fain I would to ſome man my herte breke,
I n'ot to whom I maie complain or ſpeke.

Alone I ſtande, full ſorie, and full ſad, 50
Which hopid to have ſeen my Lorde and Kyng, Small cauſe have I to be merie or glad,
Remembryng this bitterfull departyng,
In this worlde ne is no creature living,
That was to me ſo gode and gracious,
His love alſo then golde more precious.

Full ſore I ſigh, without comfort again,
There is no cure to my ſalvation,
His brenning love my hert ſo doth conſtrain,
Alas here is a wofull permutacion! 60
Whereof I finde no joye nor conſolacion,
Therefore my pain all onely to confeſſe
With deth I fere woll ende my hevineſſe.

This wo-and anguiſh is intollerable,
If I bide here, life can I not ſuſtain,
If I go hence my paines be uncurable,
Where him to finde I knowe no place certain,
And thus I ne wote of theſe thingis twain
Whiche I maie take, and which I maie reſuſe,
My hert is wounded heron to thinke or muſe.

A while I ſhall ſtande in this morowning
In hope if any viſion would appere,
That of my love might tell ſome gode tyding,
Whiche into joy might chaunge my wepyng chere,
I truſt in his grace and his mercie dere,
But at the leſt, though I therewith me kill,
I ſhall not ſpare to waile and wepe my fill.

And if that I die in ſoche avinture
I can no more, but welcome as my chaunce, 80
My bones ſhall reſt here in this ſepulture,
My life, my deth, is at his ordinaunce,
It ſhal be tolde in laſting remembraunce.
Thus to departin is to me no ſhame,
And alſo thereof I'am nothyng to blame.

Hope againſt me ſo hath her courſe itake
That there is no more, but thus ſhall I die,
I ſe right well my Lorde hath me forſake,
But in my conceipt cauſe know I none why,
Although he be farre hence and nothyng nye, 90
Yet my wofull herte after hym doeth ſeke,
And cauſeth teres to ren down by my cheke.

Thinking alas! I have loſt his preſence,
Which in this worlde was all my ſuſtinaunce,
I crie

I crie and call with hertie diligence,
But there is no wight givith attendaunce,
Me to certifie of myne enquireaunce,
Wherefore I will to all this worlde bewraie
How that my Lorde is slain and born awaie.

Though that I mourne it ne is no grete wonder Sith he is all my joye in speciall, 100
And nowe I thinke we be so farre asonder,
That hym to se I fere nevyr I shall,
It helpith no more aftir hym to call,
Ne after hym to enquire in any cosse,
Alas! how is he thus ygone and lost?

The Jewis I thinke full of miserie,
Yfet in malice by ther busie cure,
With force and might, of gilefull trecherie,
Hath enterned my Lord's sepulture,
And borne awaie that precious figure, 110
Levyng of it nothyng, if thei' have doen so,
Married I am, alas what shall I do!

With ther vengeance insaciabie
Now have thei hym gilleles entretid so,
That to reporte it is to lamentable,
Thei bete his bodie from toppe to the toe,
Nevyr man was yborne that felte soche woe,
Thei woundid hym alas! with all grevaunce,
The blode doun reilid in most habundaunce.

The blodie rowis stremed doun ovr all, 120
Thei him assailid so maliciouslie
With ther scourgis and strokis bestiall,
Thei sparid not, but smote incessauntlie,
To satisfie ther malice thei were busie,
Thei spit in his face, thei smote here and there,
He groined full sore, and swete many a tere.

Thei crounid hym with thornis sharpe and kene,
The vainis rent, the blode ran doun apace,
With blode ovrcome were bothe his cyeen,
And bolne with strokis was his blessid face, 130
Thei hym entretid, as men without grace,
Thei knelid to hym, and made many a scorne,
Like helhoundis they have hym all to torne.

Upon a mightie crosse in length and brede,
(These turmentours shewid ther cursidnesse)
Thei nailid hym without pitie or drede,
His precious blode braft out in largenesse,
Thei strained hym along as men mercilesse,
The verie jointes all to myne apparence
Rived asondir, for ther grete violence. 140

All this I beholding with mine cyeen twain
Stode there beside, with rufull attendaunce,
And er me thought, he beyng in that pain
Lokid on me with dedly countinaunce,
As he' had said in his speciall remembraunce
Farwell Magdalen, depart must I nedes hens,
My herte is Tanquam cera liquefens.

Whiche rufull sight when that I gan beholde,
Out of my witte I almoste tho distraught,
I tare my here, my handis wrang and folde, 150
And of the sight my hert dranke soche a draught,
That many a fall swounyng there I caught,
I brused my bodie fallyng on the grounde,
Whereof I fele many a grevous wounde.

Then these wretchis, full of all frowardnesse,
Gave hym to drinke Eifell temprid with gall,
Alas! that poison full of bittirnesse
My lov's chere causid then to appall,

And yet thereof might he not drinke at all,
But spake these wordis, as him thought it best,
Fathir of hevin, Consummation est.

Then knelid I doune, in pain's outrage
Clipping the crosse within myne armis twain,
His blode distillid doune on my visage,
My clothis eke the droppis did distain,
To have dyid for hym I would full fain,
But what shoulde it availe if I did so
Sith he' is, Suspensus in patibulo.

And thus my Lorde full dere was all disgised,
With blode, and pain, and woundis many one, 170
His veinis braft, his jointis all to rived,
Partying asondir the fleshe fro the bone,
But I sawe that he hing not there alone,
For Cum inquis deputatus est,
Not like a man, but like a leprous best.

A blinde knight men ycallid Longias
With a spere aproched to my soverain,
Launsyng his side full pitouslie alas!
That his precious herte be clave in twain,
The purple blode eke fro the hertis van 180
Doun railid right fast, in mosse rufull wise,
With cristal water brought fro Paradise.

When I behelde this wofull passion,
I wote not how, by sodain avinture
My hert was perfed with very compassion,
That in me remained no life of nature,
Strokis of dethe I felt without mesure,
My deth's wounde I caught with wo oppress,
And brought to point as my hert shuld ybrest.

The wounde, the hert, and blode of my darling 190
Shal never slide fro my memorial,
The byttir paines also of tourmenting
Within my soule be gravin principal,
The spere alas! that was so sharpe withall
So thrillid my herte, as to my feling,
That body and soule were at departing.

Sone as I might I releved up againe,
My brethe I coude not very wel restore,
Feling my self drownid in so grete paine,
Both body' and soule me thought wer al to tore,
Violent fallis grevid me right fore,
I wept, I bledde, and with my selfe I fared
As one that for his life nothing had cared.

I lokyng up unto that rufull Rode Sawe first the visage pale of that figure,
But so pitous a sight spottid with blode
Sawe nevyr yet no living creature,
So it exceedid the boundes of mesure,
That mann's minde with al his wittis fyve
Is nothing able that paine to diserve. 211

Than gan I there min armis to unbrace,
Up lisyng my handis ful mournyngly
I fighid and sore sobbid in that place,
Both hevin and erthe might have herde me crie
Weping, and said alas! incessauntly,
Ah my swete herte, my gostly paramour!
Alas I may nat thy body socour!

O blessid Lorde, how fierse and how cruel
These cursid wightis nowe hath The yslaine, 211
Kervyng alas! thy body everidel,
Wounde within wounde, full byttir is thy pain,
Nowe wolde God that I might to The attaine
To naile my body fast unto thy tre

- So that of this paine thou mightst go free!
- I can nat reporte, ne make reherfaile
Of my demening, with the circumstance,
But wel I wote the spere with every naile
Thirlid my soule by inwarde resemblaunce,
Which never shall out of my remembraunce,
During my life it woll cause me to waile, 230
As ofte as I remembre that bataile.
- Al ye Jewes, worse than doggis rabiate
What moved you thus cruilly him to'aray?
He never displefed you, nor caused debate,
Your love and true hertes he coveytid aye,
He preched, he teched, he shewid the right way,
Wherefore ye lyke tyrantes wode and way-warde
Nowe have him thus yslaine for his rewarde.
- Ye ought to'have remembrid one thing special
His favour, grace, and his magnificence, 240
He was your prince borne, and Lorde ovir all,
Howe be it ye toke him in smal reverence,
He was ful meke in fulfiring your offence,
Nertheles ye devoured him with one assent,
As hungry wolves doth the lambe innocent.
- Where was your pite,'o peple mercilesse?
Arming your selfe with falsheid and trefon,
On my Lorde ye have shewid your wodenesse,
Like no men, but bestis without reson,
Your malyce he suffrid for the seson, 250
Your paine wol come, ne thinke it nat to slacke,
Man without mercy of mercy shal lacke.
- O traitours and maintainirs of madnesse,
Unto your soly' I ascribe al my paine,
Ye have me deprived of joye and gladnesse,
So deling with my Lorde and souveraine,
Nothing ne shulde I nede thus to complaine
If he' had lived in pece and tranquillite,
Whom ye have slaine through your iniquite.
- Farewel your noblenesse that sometime did raine, 260
Farewel your worship, your glory and fame,
Hereafter to lyve in hate and disdain
Marvaile ye not, for your trespase and blame
Unto shame is tournid al your gode name,
Upon you now wol wondir every nation,
As peple of a most vile reputation.
- These wickid wretchis these houndis of hel,
As I have tolde plaine here in this sentence,
Were not content my dere love thus to quel,
But yet they must embesile his presence, 270
As I perceive, by covert violence
They have him conveyed, to my displeasure,
For here is laste but nakid sepulture.
- Wherefore of trouth and rightfull judgèment,
That ther malice againe maye be acquitted,
After my verdite and avisèment,
Of false murdre they shullin be endited,
Of theft also, which shal not be respited,
And in al haste they shal be hanged and drawe,
I wol my selfe plede this cause in the lawe. 280
- Alas! yf I with a trewe attendaunce
Had styl abiddin with my Lord's corse,
And kept it stil with trewe perseveraunce,
Than had nat befall this woful devorse,
But as for my paine welcome and no force,
This shal be my songe where so er I go,
Departing is the grounde of al my wo.
- I se right wel now in my painis smerte,
- There is no wounde of so grevous dolour
As is the wounde of my careful herte, 290
Sirhin I have losse thus my paramour,
Al my swetnesse is tournid into sour,
Mirthe to my herte nothing ne maie convey
But he that bereth therof bothe locke and key.
- The joye excellent of blissed paradise
Maye me alas! in no wise re-comforte,
Songe of angel nothing may me suffise,
As in min herte nowe to make disporte,
Al I refuse, but that I might reforte
Unto my love, the wel of godeliheide, 300
For whose longing I trowe I shal be ded.
- Of painful labour and tourment corpo'ral
I ne make therof none excepcion,
Painis of hel I wol passe ovir al,
My love to finde, in myne affection,
So grete to him is my delectacion,
A thousande timis martrid wolde I be,
His blessid body ones if I might se.
- About this worlde so large in all compace
I shal not spare to renne my life during, 310
My fete also shal not rest in one place,
Tyl of my love I may here some tiding,
For whose absence my handis nowe I wring,
To thinke on him cese shal never my minde,
O gentil Jesu, where shal I The finde!
- Jerusalem I wol serche place fro place,
Sion, the vale of Josaphath also,
And if I finde him not in al this space,
By mount Oliver to Beth'any woll I go,
These waies wol I wandir, and many mo, 320
Nazareth, Bethleem, Mountana Jude,
No travaile shal me paine him for to se.
- His blisid face if I might se and finde, Serche I wolde evèry coste and countrey,
The far'st parte of Egypt or hote Inde
Shulde be to me but a litil journey;
Howe is he thus gone or takin away!
If I knewe the ful trouth and certentè,
Yet from this care relefid might I be.
- Into wildirnesse I thinke best to go, 330
Sithe I can no more tidinges of him here,
There may I my lyfe ledin to and fro,
There may I dwel, and to no man apere;
To towne ne village woll I not come nere,
Alone in wodes, in rockes, and in caves depe
I may at mine owne will both waile and wepe.
- Myn eyin twaine withoutin variaunce
Shal never cese, I promise faithfully,
There for to wepin with gret aboundaunce
Byttir teris renning incessantly, 340
The whiche teris medlid ful petously
With the very blode er shal renne also,
Expressing in mine hert the grevous wo
- Worldely fode and sustenaunce I desire none,
Soche living as I finde soch wol I take,
Rotis that growin on the craggy stone
Shal me suffise with watir of the lake;
Than thus may I say for my Lord's sake
Fuerunt mihi lacrymae mea
In deserto panes, die ac nocte.
- My body to clothe it makith no force,
A mourning mantil shal be sufficient.
The grevous woundis of his pitous corse
- Sha!

Shal be to me a ful royal garnement,
He departid thus I am best content,
His crosse with nailis and scourgis withal
Shal be my thought and paine especial.

Thus wol I live, as I have here ytolde,
If I may any longè time endure,
But I fere deth is ovir me so bolde 360
That of my purpose I can not be sure,
My painis encrefin without mesure,
For of longe lyfe who can lay any reson?
Al thing is mortal and hath but a selson.

I sigh ful sore, and it is ferre yfet,
Myne hert I fele now bledith inwardly,
The bloody teres I may in no wise let,
Sith of my paine I finde no remedye,
I thank God of al, if that I nowe dye,
His will perfourmid I holde me content, 370
My soule let him have that hath it me lent.

For lengir to' endure it 'is intollerable,
My woful herte is inflamid so huge,
That no sorow to myne is comparable,
Sith of my minde, I ne finde no refuge,
Yet I him require as a rightful juge
To devoide fro me the inwarde sorowe,
Lest that I live not to the nexte morowe.

Within mine hert is impressid ful sore,
His royal forme, his shappe, his semelines,
His porte, his chere his godenes evirmore,
His noble persone with al gentilnes,
He is the welle of allè parfitnes,
The very redemir of al mankindc,
Him love I best with herte, and soule, and minde.

In his absence my paines ful bittir be,
Right wel I may it fele nowe inwardely,
No wondir is though they hurte or fle me,
They causin me to crie so rufully,
Myne herte oppressed is so wondirfully, 390
Onely for him, which so is bright of ble,
Alas I trowe I shal him never se!

My joye is translate ful farre in exile,
My myrthe is chaungid into paynis colde,
My lyfe I think endureth but a while,
Anguiste and paine is that that I beholde,
Wherfore my handis thus I wringe and folde,
Into this grave I loke, I cal, I pray,
Deth remainith, and life is borne away.

Now must I walk, and wandir here and there, 400
God wot to what partis I shal me dresse,
With quaking hert wepinge many a tere,
To seke out my love, and all my swetnes,
I wolde he wyft what mortal hevines
About min herte renewith more and more,
Than wolde he nat kepe pite long in store.

Withoutin him I may not longe endure,
His love so sore workith within my brest,
And er I wepe before this sepulture,
Sighing ful sore, as mine herte shulde ybrest, 410
During my lyfe I shal obtaine no rest,
But mourne and wepe, where that evir I go,
Making complaint of al my mortal wo.

Fast I crie but there is no audience,
My comming hi'ir was him for to plesse,
My soule opprest is here with his absence,
Alas he list not set mine herte in esse!
Wherfore to paine my selfe with al disesse

I shal not spare tyl he take me to grace,
Or ellis I shal sterve here in this place. 420

But onis if that I might with him speke
It were al my joy, with parfite plesaunce,
So that I might to him myne herte breke,
I shulde anone devoide al my grevaunce,
For he' is the blisse of very recreaunce;
But now alas! I can nothing do so,
For in fiede of joy naught have I but wo.

His noble corse within min hert'is rote,
Depe is ygravid, whiche shal never flake,
Nowe is he gone, to what place I ne wote, 430
I mourne, I wepe, and al is for his sake, Sithen he is passe, here a vowe I make
With hertely promise, and therto me binde,
Never to cese til that I may him finde.

Unto his mothir I thinke for to go,
Of her haply some comforte may I take,
But one thinge yet me feith and no mo,
Yf that I any mencion of him make,
Of my wordis she wolde triable and quake,
And who coude her blame, she having but one,
The sonne borne away the mothir wol mone.

Sorowes many hath she suffrid trewly
Sith that she first conceivid him and bare,
And seven thinges there be most specially,
That drownith her hert in sorowe and care,
Yet lo! in no wise maye they not compare,
With this one now, the whiche if that she knew
She wolde her painis everichone renewe.

Gret was her sorowe by mennis saiyng,
Whan in the temple Simeon jullus 450
Shewid to her these wordis prophesying,
Tuam animam pertransibit gladius;
Also whan Herode that tyraunt furious
Her childe pursuid in every place,
For his life went neithir mercy ne grace.

She mournid sore whan that she knewe him gone,
Full longe she sought or she him founde ayen,
Whan he went to deth his crosse him upon,
It was to her sight a full rewful paine,
Whan he long theron, betwene thevis twaine, 460
And the spere unto his herte thrust was right,
She swounid, and to the grounde there ypyght.

Whan ded and bloody in her lappè lay
His blissid body, bothe handes and fete al tore,
She cryid out and said, now welaway!
Thus arayid was never man before;
Whan hast was made his body to be bore
Unto sepulture here for to remaine,
Unnethis for wo she coude her sustaine.

The sorowes seven, like swerdes every one 470
His mothir's herte woundid fro syde to syde,
But if she knewe her sonne thus ygone,
Out of this worlde she shuld with deth yride,
For care she coude no lengir here abide,
Having no more joy nor consolacioun,
Than I here standing in this flacioun.

Wherfore her to se I dare nat presume,
Fro her presence I wol my selfe refraine,
Yet had I levir to dye and consume,
Than his mothir shulde have any more paine, 480
Nethcles her sonne I wolde se ful faine,
His presence was very joye and swetnes,
His absence is but sorowe and hevynesse.

There

There is no more, sith I may him nat mete,
Whom I desire above al othir thing,
Nede I must take the souir with the swete,
For of his noble corse I here no tiding,
Ful oftin I crie, and my handis wring,
Myne herte alas! relentith al in paine,
Whiche wol ybrastin both sinewe and vaine. 490

Alas howe' unhappy was this woful hour,
Wherin is thus mispendid my service!
For min entent and eke my true labour
To none effecte may come in any wise;
Alas! I thinke if he do me dispise,
And list not take my simple observaunce,
There is no more, but deth is my finaunce.

I have him called, Sed non respondet mihi,
Wherfore my mirth is tournid to mourning,
O my dere Lord Quid mali feci tibi 500
That me to comforte I finde no' erthely thing?
Alas! have compassion of my crying,
Yf fro me Faciem tuam abscondis,
There is no more, but Consumere me vis.

Within myne hert is groundid thy figure,
That al this world's horrible tourment
May' it not asvage, it' is so without mesure,
It is so brenning, it is so fervent;
Remembir, Lorde, I have ben diligent Evir The to plesse onely and no mo, 510
Myne herte is with The where so er I go.

Therfore my dere darling, Trabe me post te,
And lette me not standin thus desolate,
Quia non est, qui consoletur me,
Myne herte for The is so disconsolate,
My paines also nothing me moderate,
Nowe if it list The to speke with me' alyve,
Come in hast, my herte asondir will rive.

To The I profir lo! my pore service,
The for to plesse astir mine owne entent, 520
I offre' here, as in devout sacrifice
My boxe replete with precious oyntment,
Myne eyin twaine weping sufficient,
Myne herte with anguyshe fulfilled is alas!
My soule eke redy for love out to pas.

Naught ellis have I The to plesse or pay,
For if min herte were golde or precious stone,
It shulde be thine without any delay,
With hertely chere thou shulde have it anone,
Why suffrist thou me than to stande alone? 530
Thou hast I trowe my weping in disdaine,
Or els thou knowist nat what is my paine.

If thou withdrawe thy noble daliaunce,
For ought that evir I displeid The,
Thou knowest right wel it is but ignoraunce,
And of no knowlege for a certainte,
If I have offendid Lorde, forgive it me,
Gladde I am for to make ful repentaunce
Of all thing that hath ben to thy grevaunce.

Myne herte alas! swellith within my brest, 540
So sore opprest with anguyshe and with payne,
That al to pecis forsothe it wol brest,
But if I se thy blyssid corse againe,
For lyfe ne deth I can nat me refraine,
If that thou make delay, thou maist be sure,
Myne hert wol lepe into this sepulture.

Alas my Lorde, why farest thou thus with me!
My tribulacion yet have in minde,

Where is thy mercy? wher is thy pite,
Whiche evir I trustid in The to finde? 550
Sometime thou were to me both gode and kinde, Lette it plesse The my prayir to accept,
Whiche with my teris I have here bewept.

On me thou oughtist to have very routh,
Sith for The onely is al this mourning,
For sith I to The plightid firste my trouthe
I nevir varyid with discording,
And that knowist thou best my owne darling,
Why constrainist thou me thus for to wayle?
My wo forsothe can The nothing availe. 560

I have endurid without variaunce,
Right as thou knowst, thy lovir just and trew,
With hert and thought aye, at thyn ordinaunce,
Lyke to the saphire alwaye in one hewe,
I nevir woulde chaungin The for no newe,
Why withdrawist thou The fro my presence,
Sithins al my thought is for thine absence?

With hert intier, swete Lorde, I crie to The,
Encline thine cres to my peticioun,
And come Velociter, exaudi me, 570
Remembre mine hert's disposicioun,
It may not endure in this condicioun,
Therfore out of these paines Libera me,
And where thou arte Pone me juxta te.

Let me beholde, O Jesu, thy blissed face,
Thy faire, thy glorious angelike visage,
Bowe thine cris to my complaint, alas!
For to convey me out of this wode rage,
Alas! my Lorde, take fro me this damage,
To my desire for mercy condiscende, 580
For non but thou may my grevaunce amende.

Now yet gode Lorde, I The besech and pray,
As thou raistid my brothir Lazarous
From deth to life, that upon the fourth day
Came ayen in body and soule precious,
As gret a thing maist thou shewe unto us
Of thy self, by powir of thy godhed,
As thou dyd of him lyng in grave ded.

Myne hert is woundid with thy charite,
It brennith, it flamith incessauntly, 590
Come my dere Lorde, Ad adjuvandum me,
Nowe be not longe, my paine to multiplie,
Lest in the mene time I departe and die,
In thy grace I put hope and confidence,
To do as plesith thy magnificence.

Flodis of dethe, and tribulacioun,
Into my soule I fele entrid ful depe,
Alas that here' is no consolacioun!
Evir I waile, evir I mourne and wepe,
And sorow hath woundid myn hert ful depe, 600
O dere love, no marvaile though that I die,
Sagitta tua infixæ sunt mihi.

Wandringe in this place, as in wildirnesse,
No comforte have I ne yet assuraunce,
Desolate of joye, replete with faintnesse,
No' answer receving of mine enquirance,
Myne herte also grevid with displeaunce,
Wherfore I may saye, O Deus, Deus,
Non est dolor sicut dolor meus.

Myne hert expressith Quod dilexi multum, 610
I may nat endure although I wold faine,
For now Solum superest sepulchrum,
I know it right wel by my huge paine,

And

And thus for love I may not life sustaine,
But o my God, I muse what aylith The,
Quod sic repente precipitas me.

Alas! I se' it wil none othirwise be,
Nowe must I take my leve for evirmore,
This sore paine hath almost discomfite me,
My love's corse I can in no wise restore, 620
Alas to this wo that er I was bore!
Here at this tombe nowe must I die and starve,
Deth is aboutin my hert for to carve.

My testament I wol begin to make,
To God the fathir my soule I commende,
To Jesu my love, that died for my sake,
My herte and al both I gyve and ysende,
In whose dere love my lyfe ymakith ende,
My body also to this monument
I here bequeth, bothe boxe and oyntement. 630

Of al my willes lo nowe I make the last,
Right in this place within this sepulture
I woll be buried whan I' am ded and past,
And on my grave I wol have this scripture,
*Here within restith a gostly cature,
Christ's true lovyr, Mary Magdalaine,
Whose hert for love ybracke in pecis twaine.*

Ye vertuous women, tendir of nature,
Ful of pite and of compassion,
Resorte I pray you to my sepulture, 640
To singe my dirige with grete devocion,
Shewe your charite' in this condicion,
Sing with pite, and let your hertis wepe,
Remembring I am ded, am layd to slepe.

Than whan that ye begin to parte me fro,
And endid have your mourning observaunce,
Remembre where so evir that ye go
Alway to ferche and make due enquirance
Aftir my love, mine hert's sustinaunce, 650
In every towne, and in every village,
If ye may here of his noble ymage,

And if it happe by any grace at laste,
That ye my trewe love finde in any cost,
Say that his Magdaleine is ded and paste,
For his pure love hath yeldid up the gost,
Say that of al thing I lovid him most,
And that I ne might not this deth eschewe,
My painis so sore dyd evir renewe.

And in token of love perpetual,
Whan I am buried in this place present, 660
Take out myne hert, the very rote and al,
And close it within this boxe of oyntment,
To my dere love make therof a present,
Kneling downe with wordis lamentable
Do your message, speke faire and trefable.

Say that to him my selfin I commende
A thousande timis, and with herte so fre
This povir token say to him I sende,
Plesith his godenesse to take it in gre, 670
It is his owne of right, it is his fe,
Whiche he askid, whan he said longe before,
Gyve me thy hert, and I desire no more.

Adue my Lorde, my love so faire of face,
Adue my turtle dove so freshe of hue,
Adue my mirthe, adue al my solace,
Adue alas! my Saviour Lorde Jesu,
Adue the gentillist that er I knewe,
Adue my most excellent paramour,
Fairir than rose, swetir than lylly flour.

Adue my hope of plesure eternal, 680
My lyfe, my welth, and my prosperite,
Mine herte of golde, my perle oriental,
Myne adamant of parfite charite,
My chese refuge, and my telycite,
My comforte, and my recreacioun,
Farewel my perpetual salvacioun.

Farewel mine Emperour Celestial,
And most beautiful prince of al mankinde,
Adue my Lord, of hert moste lyberal,
Farwel my swetist bothe soule and minde, 690
So loving a spouse shall I nevir finde,
Adue my soveraine, very gentelman,
Farewel dere herte, as hertely as I can.

Thy wordes eloquente slowinge in swetnesse
Shal no more alas: my minde recomforte,
Wherfore my life must ende in bittirnesse,
For in this worlde shal I nevir resorte
To The, whiche was mine hevynly disporte, 700
I se alas! it wol none othir be,
Nowe farewel the grounde of al dignite.

Adue the fairist that evir was bore,
Alas I may nat se your blessid face:
Nowe welaway that I shal se no more
Thy blessid visage, so replete with grace,
Wherin is printid my parfite solace!
Adue mine hert's rote and al for ever,
Nowe farith wel, I must from The discever.

My soule for anguishe is nowe ful thrusly
I faint I faint right sore for hevines,
My Lorde, my spouse Cur me dereliquisti? 710
Sith I for The suffre al this distresse,
What causith The to seme thus mercilesse?
Sith it The pleseth of me to make an ende,
In manus tuas my spirite I cominende.

The Remedie of Love.

The PROLOGUE.

S Eyng the manyfolde inconvenience
Failing by unbryddid prosperite,
Whiche is not temprid with moral prudence,

Nothing more welthie than in youth's frelte,
Moved I am, bothe of right and equite,
To youth's wele somewhat for to endite,
Whereby he may himselfin safecondite.

And firste I note as a thinge most noyous,
And unto youth a grevous malady,
Amongis us callid love encombrous,
Vexing alway yonge peple straungely,
Oftin by force it causith 'hem to dye,
And age is also turmentid by love,
I mene bineth the girdle', and not above.

Wherefore this werke, whiche is right laborous,
For age me nedith nat in honde to take,
To youthe me owith to be' obsequious;
Nowe I begin thus to worke for his sake,
Whiche may the servence of love aslake,
To the lovir, as a mitigative,
To him that is none a preservative.

That mighty Lorde, whiche that me govirneth,
'Tis youthe I mene, mesure if that I pace,
In every matir whiche that him concerneth,
First, as is behoveful, I wol aske grace,
And forthwithal now in this same place,
Er I begin, I wol yknele and say
These fewe wordis, and him of helpe praye.

Thou flowing youth, whiche hast the avauntage
In strength of body, in luste, and beaute,
Also a precelling halie above age
In many' a singuler commodite, Howe be it one thing he hath beyonde The
To thy most profite, and gretist availe,
Whiche shuld The conduit, I mene sad counsaile,

And yet gode Lorde, of a presumption,
I n'il deprave thy might and deite,
I lyve but undir thy protection,
I am thy subiecte, I were thy lyerie,
For thou arte grounde of my prosperite,
And freshist flowir of al my garlande,
My singuler aide, as I well undirstande.

But as he that oweth his Lorde best service,
And entire faith, his honour to supporte,
Right so I speke, and in none othir wise,
I knowlege my self one of the lest sorte
Of thy servantes, to our eldirs comforte,
Drawe sadde counsaile unto The if thou liste,
The and thy powir who maie then resiste.

Fie on age, I say, undir wordis fewe,
And his erroneous opinion,
What spekist of him, whiche saith moste untrue
All youth to be of ill disposicion,
Dampnith us all without excepcion?
And for a colerable avauntage
He saith in hym restith all counsaill sage.

Well sothly maie sadde counsaile in him rest,

But yet his dedis ben full ferre therefro,
He maie wel sayin with our parishe prest,
Doith as I saie, and not as I do;
For I my selfin know wele one or two Well strikin in age that for neighbourhedde
Ywollin to ther neighbours wivis bedde.

He will in presence of the yongè man
Her clippe and kisse, ye and her doune ylaie
And to blere his eye, thus he sayith than,
O suffre yet olde Morell for to plaie,
Now have I doin that I can or maie,
Thus he sayith her husband for to queme,
That he nor no man shouldin not misdeme.

In worde nor dede nedith him not be coic,
It' is impossible that he doe amisse,
If the yong man speke, anon he saicth, boic,
To rebuke age besemeth The not iwis,
And thus his olde face aye his warrant is,
All is in hym but sleight and subtilte,
And ferre from right reson I tellin The.

And shortly age is not abovin me,
Age is impotent, and of no resistance,
Age unweldie ne maie not fight nor fle,
What werin age withoutin my defence?
Sad counsaile saiest givith hym assistance,
Right reson is freshist where that I ame,
Wherefore in thy sayng thou art to blame.

Sith reson to me' is rathir accompanied Then unto age, whiche is the opinion
Of every wise man not to be denied,
And sith sad counsaile procedith of reson,
Sad counsaile in me hath his chefe macion;
This is no naie, but what than is the ende
Of this thy suasion, what doest entende.

Age to compare unto thyne excellence,
I n'll presume hym so to dignifie,
Ye be not egall, how be it experience
Hym avauntageth, for she moste certainly Hym techith what thing to hym is contrary,
And ofte to fore se, and warily eschewe,
Whiche thou never aslaidist yet nor knewe.

Experience makith a man moste certain
Of thing erthly, and of necessite
Sad counsaile requirith certaintie plain,
So ferre to movin thus whereto nede we?
But to my purpose, as thou commaundest me,
Shortly mine entent is thus, and none other,
Under thy licence to counsaile my brother.

How shouldist give any counsaile so yong,
Lacking experience? unto thyne owne speche
I report me, I wore as for thy tong
Will serve The right wel, but than for to tech,
I doubt me lest that thy wit woll not tech,
Youth and experience thou saist be not convert,
How shouldist thou then teche well unexpert?

Scripture witnissith that God will oft shitte
Fro the' hie wittid man, and shew it the child,
To hym I mene that of his owne witte
Presumeth

Presumeth not, but is debonaire and milde,
By counsaile I entend vertue to bilde,
Whiche of myne elders part have I borrowed,
And part of experience, which I have sorowed.

Well than, if it be as thou lettist fare, 120
Shewe forth thy doctrine, be not ought agaste,
I woll The supporte, loke thou doe not spare,
Maugre age, although that he fete or gnaste,
To aske age counsaile herein were but wast,
Boldely begin, go forth to the proceffe,
Fere not, fithins thou art of soche surenesse.

Graunt mercie Lorde, fithin it The doerh like
To licence me, now I woll and dare boldly,
Assaile my purpose, with scriptures autentike
My werke woll I ground, undirset, and fortifie. 130
Aspire my ginning, O thou wode furie,
Alecto, with thy fustirs, and in speciall
To The, mother of jelousie, Juno I call.

Explicit Prologus.

This Book, taken for the most part out of the Proverbs of Solomon, is a Warning to take heed of the deceitful Company of Women.

His werke who so shall se or yrede
Of incongruite doe me not impeche,
Ordinatelie behoveth me first to procede
In deduccion thereof, right as the leche
His paciente's sicknes oweth first for to seche,
The which knowen medicin he should aplice,
And shorly as he can, shape remedie.

Right so by counsaile, willing The to exhort,
O yong man prosperous, which doth abounde
In thy floures of luste, belongeth on The sort, 10
Me first to considir what 'is rote and ground
Of thy mischefe, whiche is plainlie yfound
Woman yfarcid with fraude and disceipt,
To thy confusion moste allecive baite.

Flie the miswoman, lest she The disceve,
Thus saith Salomon, which taught was fullie
The falschod of women in his daies to conceive,
The lips of a strumpet ben sweter than honic,
Her throte souplid with oile of flatterie
How be it the ende and effeete of all 20
Bittir is then any wormwode or gall.

Flie the miswoman, if thou love thy life,
Beware of the straungir's blande eloquence,
Straungir I call her that is not thy wife,
Of her beantie have no concupiscence,
Her countinaunce, pretending benevolence,
Beware her signes and eye so amiable,
Holde it for ferme, thei ben discervable.

Lo here an ensample what women be
In ther signis and countinaunce shortlie!
I woll shewin The how loviris thre 30
Ylovid one woman right entirelie,
Eche of them knewe othiri's maladie,
Wherefore it was all ther daily labour
Who coud approchin next in her favour.

At sondrie sasons, as fortune requireth,
Severallie thei came to se her welfare,
But ones it happinid, love them so fireth,
To se ther Ladie thei all would not spare,
Of othir's comyng none of them were ware, 40
Till all thei mette, whereas thei in o place
Of ther Ladie sawe the desirid face.

To suppir set, full smallie thei coude etc,
Full sobir and demure in countinaunce,
There taried none of 'hem for any mete,
But on his Ladie to give attendaunce,

And in secrete wise some signifiuance
Of love to have, the whiche perceyving she Fetelic' executid thus her properte.

In due seson, as she alwaie aspied 50
Every thyng to execute convenientlie,
Her one lovir first frendelic she eyed,
The seconde she offrid the cuppe curtislie,
The thirde she gave a tokin secretlie,
Undirneeth the borde she trade on his fore,
Through his entrailis tiklid the herte rote.

By your leve, might I here aske a question
Of you my mailirs that sewe lov'is trace,
To you likely belongeth the solucion
Whiche of thes thre ystode now in her grace? 60
Clere to answeere ye would aske long space,
The mattir is doubtfull and opinable,
To ascertain you I woll my self enable.

Of the foresayid thre my self was one,
No man can answeere it better then I,
Hertely of us bilovid was there none,
But warr'is packe we bare all by and by,
Whiche at the last I my self gan aspie,
And time as me thought, then I left the daunce,
O thoughtfull herte, gret is thy grevaunce! 70

Hence fro me, hence, that me for to endite
Halpe aie here afore, o ye musis nine,
Whilom ye were wont be mine aide and light,
My penne to direct, my brain to illumine,
No lenger alas maie I sewe your doctrine!
The freshe lustie metirs, I wont to make
Have ben here afore, I uttirlic forsake.

Come hither Erinnys, and ye furies all,
Whiche fer ben undre' us, nigh the nethir pole, 80
Where Pluto reignith, o kyng internall,
Sende out thine arpies, lend angusthe and dole, Miserie and wo, leve ye me not sole,
Of right be present mult pain and torment,
The pale deth belemeth not to be absent.

To me now I call all this lothsome sort,
My paines t' encrese, my sorowes to augment,
For worthie' I am to be bare of all comfort,
Thus sith I have consumid and mispent
Not onely my daies, but fivefolde talent,
That my Lorde gave me, I can not recompence, 90
I maie n'ot to dcrely' abyn my negligence.

By

By the path of penance yet woll I revert
To the well of grace, mercie there to fetch,
Despitist not, God, the meke contrite herte,
Of the cocke crowe, alas I would not retche
And yet it is not late in the seconde wetche,
Mercie shall I purchase by incessaunt cryng,
The mercies of our Lorde er shall I syng.

But well mayist thou waile, wicked woman,
That thou shuldest disceve thus an innocent, 100
In recompence of my sinne, so 'as I can,
To' al wol I make and leve this monument,
In shewing part of thy falsheid is myne entent,
For all were to moche, I cann'ot, well I wote,
The cause shewith plainly he that thus wrote.

If al the yerth wer parchment scribable,
Spedie for the hande, and all manir wode
Wer hewed and proporcioned to pennis able,
All water Ynke, eithir in damme or flode, 110
Every man being a parsite Scribe and gode,
The curfidenesse yet and desceipt of women
Coud not be shewid by the mene of penne.

I like all odious resemblaunces,
The Devil's bronde call women I might,
Whereby man is enensid to mischaunces,
Or a flinkyng rose, that faire is in sight,
Or dedly' empoison, like the sugir white,
Whiche by his swetnesse causith man to tast,
And sodainly sleeth and bringeth him to' his last.

It 'is not my manir to use soche langage, 120
But this my doctrine, as I maie lawfullie
I woll wholly grounde with authoritie sage,
Willing wisdom, and vertue edefie,
Wine and women into apostasie
Cause wisemen to fall, what is that to saie?
Of wisdom cause them to forget the waie.

Wherefore the wiseman doith The advise,
In whose wordis can be founde no lesyng,
With the straungir to sittin in no wise,
Whiche is not thy wife, fall not in clippyng 130
With her, but beware eke of her kytlyng,
Kepe with her in wine no altercacion,
Lest thyne herte fall by inclination.

Maie a man thinkist hide and safely laie
Fire in his bosome, without empairement,
And brenning of his clothes, or whider he may Walke on hotte colis, his fete not ybrente?
As who sayith naie, and whereby is mente
This foresaied proverbe and similitude,
But that thou ridde The plainly to denude 140

From the flattirys forgettyng her gide,
The gide of her youth, I mene shamfastnes, Whiche should cause her maidinhed to abide,
Her Godd's behest eke she full rechelesse,
Not retching committeth to forgetfulnes,
Neithir God ne shame in her havyng place,
Nedis must soche a woman lacke grace.

And all that neighin her in waie of fin,
To tourne of grace shall lacke the influence,
The pathis of life no more to come in; 150
Wherefore first stendè The with Sapience, Remembring God, and astir with Prudence,
To thyne owne wele that so thei may The kepe.
Unto thyne hertè left her wordis crepe.

In his boke where I take my moste ground,
And in his proverbis sage Salomon

Tellith a tale, which is plainly found
In the fiveth chapter, wher in dede don,
Or mekely feined to our instruccion,
Let clerkes determine, but this am I sure 160
Moche like thyng I my self have had in ure.

At my windowe saith he I lokid out,
Faire yongè peple where I sawe many Emong 'hem all, as I lokid about
To a yong man fortunèd I lent myne eye,
Estraungid from his minde it was likely,
By the strete at a cornir, nigh his own hous,
He went about with eye right curious.

When that the daie his light began withdrawe,
And the night approchid in the twynlight, 170
How a woman came and met hym I sawe,
Talking with him undir shade of the night,
Now blestid be God (qð she) of his might,
Whiche hath fulfillid myne hert's desire,
Aslaked my painis, which were hore as fire.

And yet myne aucthour, as it is gode skill,
To folowe, I must tell her araiment,
She was full nice soulis like to spill,
As nice in countenance yet as in garmente, 180
For janglyng she was of rest impaciente,
Wanderyng still in no place she ystode,
But restless now, and now out forthe she yode.

Now in the hous she was, now in the strete,
Now at a cornir she standeth in awaite,
Incessauntly busie her praie to geto,
To bring to the lure whom she doith laite.
Now where I left, unto my mattir strait
I woll tournin again, how she hym met,
Swetely kissid, and frendly him grette.

With wordes of curtisie many 'and diverse, 190
Right as in part I have before ytolde,
Now as I can I purpose to reherse
How she flattiring saied with visage bolde,
I have made vowes and offringes manifolde
For thy sake, O myne herte, O my love dere,
This daie I thanke God all performid were.

Therefore I came out, and made thus asterte,
Verle desirous your welfare to se,
Now I have seen you plesid is myne herte,
In faith shall none yhave my love but ye, 200
As true as I am to you be to me,
I praie you hertily dere herte come home,
No man should be to me so much welcome.

And in gode faith, the sothè for to saie,
Your comyng unto me ran in my thought,
Harke in your ere, my beddè freshe and gaie
I have behanged with tapettis new bought
From Egypte, and from far countries ybrought, Steinid with many a lustie freshe hue,
Excedyng Golde or Jaspir in value. 210

My chambir is strowed with Mirre and Infence,
With sote fav'oring Aloes and Sinnamome,
Brethyng an Aromatike redolence,
Surmountyng Olibane, in any man's dome,
Ye shall bitwene my brestes rest if ye come,
Let us now have our desirid halfyng,
For we maie safe be till in the mornyng.

Myne husband is not at home, he is went Forthe in his journey, a farre waie from hence,
A bagge with money he hath with hym hent, 220
As hym thought nedefull was for his expence.
Unto

Unto my wordis give faith and credence,
Now is the Monè yong, and of light dulle,
Ere he come home it woll be at the fulle.

And thus craftily hath she hym besette;
With her lime rodís, and pantir, and snare,
The felie soule ycaught hath in her netre,
Of her sugrid mouthe alas! nothyng ware.
And thus is he left gracielesse and bare
Of helpe, and comfort, and ghostlie succour, 230
And furthir more as sayith myne aucthour,

As a best ledde to his deth doith pante,
This yong man folowith her in that stounde,
And as a wanton Lambe full ignorant
How he is pulled and drawin to be bounde,
Unto the tyme he hath his deth's wounde,
And like a birde that hastith to the grin,
Not knowyng the perill of' his life therein.

Now gentle sonne, faith Salomon, take hede,
My wordis in thy brest kepe and make faste, 240
Let her not thy mynde in her waies milled,
Be not deceyvd, leith not thy taste,
Many hath she woundid, many doune caste,
Many strong men by her hath losse ther breth,
Her waies are waies of hell ledyng to deth.

And in this lite narracion precedente
The womanne's manifolde gilt I attende,
The yongè man alas how she hath shent!
Disceyvd her husbände, her own next frend,
In these bothe her God she doith offende, 250
To breke her spousail, to 'her is of no weight;
Furthir more to shew woman's craft and sleight,

A woman at her dore fate on a stall
To se folke passe by stretes of the cite,
With eye and countinaunce eke she gan call,
If there be any pretie 'one, come to me,
Come hithir ye pigges nye, ye little babe,
At last she saied to a yong man hertlesse
Of her disceypt unware and defencelesse:

Moche sweter, she faith, and more acceptable 260
Is drinke when it is stollin privily,
Then wh n it 'is taken in form avowable,
Bread hiddin and gottin jeopardouslie
Y must nedis be swete and semblable
Venison stolin is aie the sweter,
The ferthir the narrowir fet the bettir.

And whom this woman, faith Salomon, festes,
The yong man wotith not whom she doth fede,
Of the darke depencesse of hell ben her gastes;
Beware, O yong man, therefore! The rede, 270
And how be it chiefly for thy gode spede
This werke to compile I have take in charge,
I must of pitie my charitic 'enlarge.

With the felie man whiche is thus begiled,
Her husband I mene, I wol wepe and waile
His painfull infortune, whereby reviled
Causelesse he is, nevir to convaile,
Every man yong and olde woll him assaile
With wordes of occasion, with the loth name,
And alas! gode soule, he nothyng to blame. 280

But she whiche that coud so ill doe and wolde
Hers be the blame for her foule demerite,
And leve that opprobrious name cokcold
To apropr to hym as in dispite.
Ransake yet we wouldin if that we might
Of this wordè the true ortographie,

The verie discent and etymologie.

The well and grounde of' the firste invencion
To knowe the' ortographie we must derive,
Whiche is coke and cold in composicion, 290
By reson, as nigh as I can contrive;
Then how it is writtin we knowe belive;
But yet lo! by what reson and what grounde
Y was it of these two wordis compounde.

As of one cause to give very judgement,
The' Etymology let us firste beholde,
Eche lettir an whole worde doeth represent,
As C put for colde, and O put for oldè,
K is for knave, thus divers men don holde,
The firste parte of this name we have yfounde,
Let us etimologise the secounde.

As the firste findir mente I am right sure
C for calot, for of we havin O,
And L for leude, and D for demenure,
The craft of the' enventour ye maie se lo!
How one name signifieth personis two,
A colde olde knave, cokcold himself wenyng,
And eke a calot of leude demenyng.

The secounde cause of the' imposicion
Of this foresayid name was jelousie, 310
To be jelouse is gretifl occasion
To be cokcold, that men can wel aspie,
And though the passion be very fire,
And of continuell fervence and hete,
The patient aye suffrith colde on his sete.

And who that 'is jelous, and aye in a drede,
Is full of Melancolie and galleie ire,
His wiv's nose if she onis mistrede
He woll cutte of, ye and he woll conspire
His deth who evir that woll her desire, 320
Whiche she percevyng brasstith streight his gall,
And anone his grete wodenesse doith fall.

As sone as she hath knit for hym that knot,
Now is he tame that was so ramagious,
Mekely sittith he doune and raseth his lot,
Layid ben now his lokes so furious,
And he but late as a cocke barailous
Hote in his quarell, to avange hym holde,
Now is he callid bothe coke and colde.

This sayyng, to' all curtisie dissonant, 330
Whiche ysemith that it of malice grewe,
In this rude tretise I ne woll not plant
As parcell thereof, but onely to shewe
The opinion of the taleatise shrewe,
Whiche in ill sayyng is ever merie,
No man as I is thereof so werie.

But I as parcell of this my lite boke
Woll grassin in some sadde counsaill wherby
The weddid man, if that he daigne to loke
In it, the bettir shall mowin hym gie, 340
And provide for his saied infortunie,
Whiche as I have sayid with him complaine
I woll, as partinir of his grete paine.

As moste expedient unto his wele
I woulde that all jelousie were abjecte, if he be jelous, that he it concele,
And in his labour be full circumspecte
To knowe her waies, if thei semin suspecte,
And not for to breke, for one worde brokin
She woll not misse but she woll be wrokin. 350

Forbid her net that thou n'oldist have don,
 For loke what thyng so e're she is forbod,
 To that of all thyngis she is most prone,
 Namely if it be ill and no gode,
 Till it be executid she' is nigh wode,
 Soche is a woman, and soche is her fete,
 Her craft by craft than labour to defete.

If thou hereaftir, now a single man,
 Shouldist be jelous if thou haddest a wife,
 Wedde not but if thou can trust a woman,
 For els shouldist thou lede a carefull life,
 That thou moste sothist should ybe full rife,
 Yet I ne will gainsaie Matrimonie,
 But Melius est nubere quam uri.

That is to saie, bettir is in Wedlocke
 A wife to take as the church doith kenne,
 Then for to ben undir the flesh's yoke,
 In fleshlie lustis alwaie for to brenne,
 But as I layid, for all jelous menne,
 So thei livin chaste, I holde it laste ill,
 That thei ne wedde not, than them selfin spill. 370

The single man whiche that is yet to wedde,
 And not the weddid man, thus I arede,
 To warne hym now he is to farre yspedde,
 It is all to late hym for to forbode,
 But let hym take as for his ownè nede
 Soche counsaile as is hym before ytolde,
 These wordis folowyng eke to beholde.

Thy watir to kepe the wiseman doeth reche,
 That thou in no wise let it have issue 380
 At a narowe riste waie it woll yseche,
 And semblable the woman that 'is untrue
 To give her fre walke in all wise eschue,
 If she at large, not at thine hande walke,
 She woll The flamin, thou shalt it not balke.

Weddid or single, thus saith the wiseman
 Her which that both daie and night evirmore
 Lithe in thy bosome, wife or yet lemman,
 Love not to hore, lest thou repent it sore,
 Lest the The brynging into some ill lore, 390
 Thy wife not to love yet I n'ill support,
 But that thou dote not thus I The exhort.

Lo! if thou love her, love thine honestie,

Be she not idill, for what woll betide,
 If she sit idle, of very necessitie
 Her mindè woll serchin ferre and eke wide,
 Namelic if she be not accompanide;
 How accompanied? not with yongè men,
 But with maidinis I mene or women.

Maidin servautes be right convenient 400
 In house to helpin to doe her service,
 In whom she maie use her commaundement,
 In the seson all at her owne device,
 To techin 'hem gode yeve her thine advice
 To make them huswifis, thus businesse
 Maie yet refrainin her from idleness.

But bid not her that thou wolt have her do,
 Ot thine entent that might be a lettyng,
 But craftily encourage her therto
 By othir menis, as by commendying, 410
 And not to moche but duily mengying
 Bothe praise and blamè, and in thy reson
 First praise wisely the place and seson.

Of faithfull will, and hertè full tender,
 One thing I call into remembèraunce
 Again, whiche though my wit be to slender,
 Astir my powir and my suffisaunce
 I purpose to makin a purveiaunce,
 Sith women of nature ben changeable,
 Frele, and not ware, also discevable, 420

Be' it that thy wife be excellently gode,
 That none be bet of disposicion,
 In processe of time she might turn her mode,
 By some misse-liver's instigacion,
 Divers men to thilke occupacion
 Aplyin daily ther mynde and eke herte,
 From ther godenesse frele women to perverte.

If thou aspie any suspect person
 Drawe to thy wife, beware in allè wise,
 To hym nor her of thy suspencion 430
 Breke not one worde, though that thin herte agrife.
Kindle no fire a.d no smoke woll arise,
 Although he be of a corrupt entent,
 She peraventure is not of assent.

The Complaint of Mars and Venus.

Ladith ye lovirs in the morowe graie,
 Lo Venus risen emong yon rowis rede!
 And flouris freshe honour ye this daie,
 For when the sonne, uprist, then would thei sprede;
 But ye lovirs that lie in any drede,
 Flyth lest wickid tonguis you aspie,
 Lo yonde the Sonne, the candle' of jelousie!

With teris blewe, and with a woundid hert
 Taketh your leve, and what saint Ihon to borowe 10
 Apesith somewhat of your painis smert,
 Time comith eft, that cessin shall your sorow,
 The glad night is worthe an hevie morowe,
 Saint Valentine, a foule thus herde I sing,
 Upon thy daie or Sonnè gan up spring.

Yet fang this foule, I rede you all awake,
 And ye that have not chosèn in humble wife,
 Without repentyng chesith now your make,
 Yet at the lest renoveleth your service,
 And ye that have full chosèn, as I devise,
 Confermith it perpetually to dure, 20
 And pacientlie takith your avinture.

And for the worship of this highè feste,
 Yet woll I in my bridd's wife ysyng,
 The sentence of the complaint at the lestè,
 That wofull Mars made at the departying
 Fro freshe Venus in a morownyng,
 When Phæbus with his fine torchis rede
 Ransaked hath every lovir in his drede.

Whilome

Whilome the thre hevenis lorde above,
As well by hevenliche revolucion,
As by deferte, hath wonne Venus his love,
And she hath take hym in subjeccion,
And as a maistresse taught him his lesson,
Commaundying hym nevyr in her service
He were so bolde no lovyr to dispise.

For she forbade hym jelousie at all,
And crueltie, and bofte, and tirannie,
She made him at her luste so humble and thrall,
That when she dained to cast on him her eye,
He toke in pacience to live or die;
And thus she bridlith him in her manere,
With nothing, but with scorning of her chere.

Who reignith nowe in blisse but faire Venus,
That hath this worthi knight in govirnaunce?
Who singith nowe but Mars that servith thus
The fayre Venus, the causir of plesaunce?
He bint him to perpetuel obeissaunce,
And she binte her to lovyn him for ever,
But so be that his trespase it discover.

Thus be they knitte, and reignin as in heven,
By loking most, as it fel on a tide,
That by ther bothe assent was set a steven,
That Mars shall entre as fast as he may glyde
Into her nexte palays to abyde,
Walking his course til she had him ytake,
And he prayed her to haste her for his sake.

Than saide he thus myne hert's lady swete
Ye knowin wel my myschefe in that place,
For sikirly tyl that I with you mete
My lyfe stante there in avinture and grace,
But whan I se the beaute of your face
There is no drede of deth may do me smerte,
For al your luste is ese unto mine herte.

She hath so grete compassion of her knight,
That dwellith in solitude til she come,
For it stode so, that ylike time no wight
Counsaillid him, ne saide to him welcome,
That nigh her wit for sorowe was overcome,
Wherefore she spedd her as fast in her way
Almoste in one daye as he did in tway.

The gret joye that ywas betwixe 'hem two,
Whan they be mette, there maye no tonge tel,
There is no more but unto bedde they go,
And thus in joye and blisse I lette 'hem dwel,
This worthy Mars that is of knighthode wel,
The floure of fairnesse happith in his armes,
And Venus kyssith Mars the god of armes.

Sojournid hath this Mars, of which I rede,
In chambre amydde the palais privily,
A certaine time, til that him fele a drede
Through Phœbus that was comin hastily
Within the palais yatis sturdily,
With torch in honde, of which the stremis bright
On Venus chambre knockidin ful light.

The chambre there as laye this freshe quene,
Depaintid was with whitè bolis grete,
And by the light she knew that shon so shene
That Phœbus came to bren 'hem with his hete,
This silly Venus ny dreint in teres wete,
Enbraith Mars, and said alas I die!
The torch is come, that all this worlde wol wrie.

Up sterre tho Mars, him listid not to slepe,
Whan he his lady herdin so complaine,

30 But for his nature was not for to wepe,
In fiede of teris from his eyin twaine
The fire sparclis sprongin out for paine,
And hente his hauberke that lay him beside,
Fly wold he nought ne might him sellin hide.

He throwith on his helme of hugè weight,
And girt him with his swerde, and in his bonde
His mighty spere, as he was wont to feight
He shakith so, that it almost to wonde,
Ful hevy was he to walken ovir londe,
He may not holde with Venus company,
But badde her flye lest Phœbus her espy.

O woful Mars alas! what maist thou sain,
That in the palais of thy disturbaunce
Arte lest behind in paril to be flaine,
And yet thereto is double thy penaunce,
For she that hath thine hert in govirnaunce
Is passid halfe the sterres of thine eyen,
That you n're swift wel maist thou wepe and crie.

Nowe flyeth Venus into Ciclinus tour,
With voide corte, for fere of Phœbus light,
Alas! and there ne hath she no socour,
For she ne founde ne sey no manir wight,
And eke as there she had but litl might,
Wherefore her selvin for to hide and save,
Within the gate she fledde into a cave.

Darke was this cave, and smoking as the hel
Nat but two paas within the yate it stode,
A naturel day in darke I let her dwel,
Now wol I speke of Mars furous and wode,
For sorowe he wolde have seen his hert blode,
Sith that he might done her no companie,
He ne rought not a mitè for to die.

So feble he wext for hete and for his wo,
That nigh he swelt, he might unneth endure,
He passith but a sterre in dayis two,
But nertheles, for al his hevy armure,
He foloweth her that is his lyf's cure,
For whose departing he toke gretir yre,
Than he did for his brenning in the fire.

Altir he walkith softly a paas,
Complaining that it pite was to here,
He saide, O lady bright Venus alas!
That er so wide a compas is my sphere!
Alas, whan that I mete you herte dere!
This twelve dayis of April I endure,
Through jelous Phœbus, this misavinture.

Now God helpe sely Venus all alone!
But as God wolde it happid for to be,
That while that weping Venus made her mone,
Ciclinus riding in his chyvaunche
Fro Venus, Valanus might this palais se,
And Venus he salvith, and makith chere,
And her recevith as his frende ful dere.

Mars dwellith forth in his adversite,
Complaining evir in her departing,
And what his complaint was remembrith me,
And therefore in this lustie morowning
As I best can, I wol it saine and sing,
And altir that I wol my leve ytake,
And God yeve every wight joy of his make.

The

The Complaint of Mars.

THE ordir of complaynt requireth skilfully,
That if a wight shall plainin pitoufly,
Ther mote be cause wherfore that men yplaine,
Or men may deme he playnith folily,
And causeles, alas! that am not I,
Wherfore the grounde and cause of all my paine,
So as my troublid witte may it attaine,
I wol reherse, not for to have redresse,
But to declare my grounde of hevynesse.

The first time alas! that I was ywrought,
And for certain effeitis hiðir brought,
By him that lordith eche intelligence,
I yave my trewe service and my thought
For evirmo, how dere I have it bought!
To her, that is of so gret excellence,
That what wight that shewith first her offence,
Whan she is wrothe and taketh of him no cure,
He may not longe in joye of love endure.

This is no fainid matir that I tel,
My lady is the very fours and wel
Of beaute, luste, fredome, and gentilnesse,
Of rich array howe dere so men it sel,
Of al disporte in whiche men frendly dwel,
Of love and play, and of benigne humbleesse,
Of fowne of instrumentes of al swerlesse,
And thereto so wel fortunèd and thewid,
That through the world her godenes is shewid.

What wondir is than though that I besette
My service on soche one that may me knette
To wele or wo, siþe it lithe in her might,
Therefore myne herte for er I to her hette,
Ne trewly for my deth shall I not lette
To ben her trewist servant and her knight,
I flatter nat, that may wete every wight,
For this day in her service shal I dye,
But grace be, I se her never with eye.

To whom shal I plainin of my distresse?
Who may me help, who may my hert redresse?
Shal I complaine unto my lady fre?
Nay certis, for she hath soche hevynesse
For fere and eke for wo, that, as I gesse,
In litil time it would her bane ybe,
But were she safe, it were no force of me,
Alas that evir lovirs mote endure
For love so many per'ulous avinture!

For though so be that lovirs be as trewe
As any metal that is forgid newe,
In many a case 'hem tidith oft forowe,
Somtime ther ladies wol nat on 'hem rewe,
Somtimes if that jelousy it knewe
They mightin lightly lay ther hed to borowe,
Somtime envious folke with tongis horowe
Depravin 'hem, alas! whom may they plesse?
But he be false, no lovir hath his ese.

But what availith soch a long fermoun
Of avinturis of love up and down?
I wol retourne and spekin of my paine,
The point is this of my distructioun,
My right lady and my salvacioun
Is in affray, and not to whom to plaine;
O herte swete, o lady soverayne!

For your disese I ought wel swoun and swelt,
Though I none othir harme ne drede yfelt.

To what fine made the God that sytte so hie
Beneth him othir love or companye,
And strainith folke to love maugre ther hed,
And than ther joye for aught I can espie
Ne lastith not the twinkeling of an eye?
And some have never joye til they be ded,
What menith this, what is this mistihed?
Wherto constrainith he his folke so fast
Thing to desirin but it should ylast?

And though he made a lovir love a thing,
And makith it seme stedfast and during,
Yet putteth he in it soche misavinture,
That rest ne is there none in his yeving,
And that is wondir that so juste a king
Ydothe soche hardnesse unto his creture,
Thus whethir love breke or ellis dure,
Algatis he, that hath with love to done,
Hath affir wo, than chaungid is the Mone.

It semeth he hath to lovirs enmyte,
And lyke a fisher, as men may al day se,
Baitith his anglechoke with some plessaunce,
Til many a fishe is wode to that he be Cesid therwith, and then at erst hath he Al his desire, and therwithal mischaunce,
And though the line ybreke he hath penaunce,
For with that hoke he woundid is so fore,
That he his wagis hath for evirmore.

The broche of Thebis was of soche a kinde,
So ful of rubyes and of stones of Inde,
That every wight, that sette on it an eye,
He wende anone to worthe out of his mynde,
So fore the beaute would his hert ybynde,
Til it he had, him thought he must ydie,
And when that it was his, than should he drie Soche wo for drede aye while that he it had,
That welnigh for the fere he should be mad;

And whan it was fro his possession,
Than had he double wo and passion,
That he so faire a jewil hath forgo;
But yet this broche, as in conclusion,
Was not the cause of his confusion,
But he that wrought it enfortuned it so,
That every wight that had it should have wo;
And therefore in the worchir was the vice,
And in the covetour that was so nice.

So farith it by lovirs, and by me,
For though my lady have so grette beaute,
That I was mad to I had gette her grace,
She was not cause of mine adversite,
But he that wroughtin her, as mote I The,
That put so gret a beaute in her face,
That made me covetin, and so purchase
Mynce owne deth, him wite I that die,
And mine unwit that er I clambe so hie.

But to you hardy knightis of renowne,
Sithe that ye be of my devisyowne,
Al be' I not worthy to so gret a name,
Yet faine these clerkis I am your patrone,
Therefore ye ought have some compassion
Of my disese, and take it nat agame,
The proudest of you may be made ful tame;
Wherfore I pray you of your gentillesse
That ye complainin for mine hevynesse.

And

And ye my ladyes, that ben trew and stable,
By way of kinde ye oughtin to ben able To have pite of folke that ben in paine, 130
Nowe have ye cause to clothin you in fable, Sith that your empères the honorable
Is desolate, wel oughtin ye to plaine,
Nowe shoude your holy teris fal and raine,
Alas your honour and your emperice
Nigh ded for drede ne can her not chevice.

Complainith eke ye lovirs al in fere,
For her, that with unfainid humble chere
Was evir redy to do you socour, 140
Complainith her that er hath be you dere,
Complainith beaute, fredome, and manere,
Complainith her, that endith your labour,
Complainith thilke ensample of al honour,
That nevir yet dyd ought but gentilnesse,
Kythith therfore in her some kindenesse.

The Complaint of Venus.

Here n'ys so high comfort to my plessaunce,
Whan that I am in any hevinessse,
As for to have leysir of remembraunce
Upon the manhode and the worthynesse,
Upon the trouthe, and on the stedfastnes
Of him whose I am al while I maye dure,
There ought to blamin me no creature,
For every wight praisith his gentillesse.

In him is bounte, wisedome, govirnaunce,
Well more than any mann's witte can gesse, 10
For grace hath wolde so ferforth him avaunce,
That of knightthod he his parsite richesse,
Honour honourith him for his noblesse,
Therto so wel hath fourmid him nature,
That I am his for er, I him ensure,
For every wight praisith his gentillesse.

And natwithstanding all his suffisaunce,
His gentil herte is of so gret humbleesse,
To me, in worde, in werke, and in countenaunce, 20
And me to serve is al his besinesse,
That I am sette in very sykinessse,
Thus ought I to blisse wel mine avintour,
Sith that him liste me servin and honour,
For every wight praisith his gentillesse.

Nowe certis, love, it is right covenable,
That men ful dere abye thy noble thinges,
As wake abedde, and fastin at the table,
Weping to laugh, and singe in complainynges,
And downe to castin visage and lokinges,
Oftrin to chaunge visage and countinaunce, 30
Playe in slepinge, and dremyn at the daunce,
Al the revers of any gladd feling.

Jelousy he hangid by a cable,
She wolde al knowin through her espiyng,
There dothe no wight nothing so resonable,
That al n'is harme in her ymagining,
Thus dere abought is love in his yeving,
Whiche ofte he yevith without ordinaunce,
As sorowe ynough, and litil of plessaunce, 40
Al the revers of any gladd feling.

A litil tyme his yest is agreable,
But ful accomberous is the usinge,
For subtil jelousy the discervable
Ful oftyn tyme ycausith disflourbinge,
Thus ben we evir in drede and suliring,
In no certaine, we languishen in penaunce,
And have wel ofte many an harde mischaunce,
Al the revers of any gladd feling.

But certis, love, I saye not in soche wise,
That for to scape out of your lace I ment, 50
For I so longe have ben in your service,
That for to lete of wil I ner assint,
No force though jelousye me doe tourment,
Suffisith me to se him whan I may,
And therfore certis to mine ending day
To love him best shal me nevir repent.

And certis, love, whan I me wel advise,
Of any estate that man may represent,
Than have ye made me thorough your franchise
Chesin the best that evir in erthe went, 60
Nowe love well, hert, and loke thou nevir stent,
And lette the jelous putte it in assaye,
That for no paine ne wol I not say naye,
To love him best shal I nevir repent.

O herte, to The it ought ynoughe suffice,
That love so highe a grace hath to you sent,
To chose the worthyist in alle wise,
And most agreable to mine entent,
Sekith no ferthir, neithir way ne went,
Sith ye have suffisaunce unto my paye. 70
Thus wol I ende this complaint or this lay,
To love him best shal I nevir repent.

L'envoye.

Princes, receveth this complaininge in gre,
Unto your excellent benignite
Directe astir my litil suffisaunce,
For elde, that in my spirite dullith me,
Hath of enditing al the subtilte
Weligh berafte out of my remembraunce,
And eke to me it is a grete penaunce,
Sith rime in Englishe hath soche scarcite, 80

Here foloweth the Letter of C U P I D E.

This Letter is said to have been made by Tho. Occleve of the Office of the Privy Seal, Chaucer's Scholar; and the Author telling us at the Conclusion it was made Anno Dom. 1402. it can't be Chaucer's, who dy'd A. D. 1400.

Upido, unto whose commaundement
The gentill kinrede of goddis on hie,
And peple infernall ben obedient,
And al mortal folke servin busily,
Of the goddesse sonne Cythera onely,
Unto al tho that to our deite
Ben subjectes, hertily greting sende we.

In general we wollin that ye knowe,
That ladies of honour and of reverence,
And othir gentilwomen havin sowe Soche sede of complaint in our audience
Of men that do 'hem outrage and offence,
That it our cris grevith for to here,
So pitous is the' effecte of this matere.

Passing al londis, on the lytil yle,
That cleped is Albion, they muste complaine,
They say that ther is croppe and rote of gile,
So con tho men dissimulin and faine,
With standing dropis in ther eyin twaine,
Whan that ther hertis felith no distresse,
To blindin women with ther doublencse.

Ther wordis spokin be so sighingly,
With so pitous a chere and countinaunce,
That every wight, that menith trewly,
Denith they in herte havin soch grevaunce,
They say so' importable is ther penaunce,
That but ther lady lust to shewe 'hem grace,
They right anone must stervin in the place.

Ah lady myne they say, I you ensure,
As dothe me grace, and I shal evir be,
While that my lyfe may lastin and endure,
To you as humble' and lowe in eche degre,
As possible' is and kepe al thinges in secre
Right as your selfin listith that I do,
And ellis myne herte mote braft in two.

Ful harde it is to knowe a mann's herte,
For outwarde may no man the trouthe deme,
Whan word out of the mouth may none asterte,
But it by reson semed a wight to queme,
So it is said of herte as it would seme;
O faithful woman, ful of innocence,
Thou art discevid by false apparence.

By processe movith ofte woman's pite,
Wening al thing were as these men yfey,
They graunt 'hem grace of ther benignite,
For that men shouldin not for ther fake dey,
And with gode hert settin 'hem in the wey
Of blisful love, kepin it if they conne,
And thus othir while women berthe ywonne.

And whan this man the pan hath by the stele,
And fully is in his possession,
With that woman kepeth he no more to dele.
Aftir yf he may findin in the toun
Any woman his blinde affectioun
Unto bestowe, but yvel mote he preve!
A man for al his othes is harde to' beleve.

And for that every false man hath a make,
As unto every wight is light to know,
Whan this traitour this woman hath forsake,
He fast spedith him unto his felowe,
Til he be there his herte is on a lowe,
His false discrete ne may him not suffise,
But of his trayson tellith al the wife.

Is this a fair avaunt, is this honour,
A man himselfe accuse thus and diffame?
Is' it gode to confesse him selfe a traitour
And bring a woman unto sclaudrous name,
And tel howe he her body hath do shame?
No wurshippe may he thus to him conquer,
But grete disclaundir unto him and her.

To her? nay, yet ywas it no represe,
For al for vertue was that she ywrought;
But he that brewid hath al this mischefe,
That spake so faire, and falsely inwarde thought,
His be the sclauder, as it by reson ought,
And unto her be thanke perpetuell,
That in soche a nede helpin can so wel.

Although through mann's sleight and subtilte
A fely simple' and innocent woman
Betraied is, no wondir sihe the cite
Of Troye, as the storie tellin can,
Betrayid was through the discrete of man,
And set on fyre, and al downe ovirthrowne
And finally destroyid as men knowen.

Betrayin nat men cites grete and kinges?
What wight is it that can shape remedy
Ayenist these falsely purposid thinges?
Who can the crafte soche craftis to espy,
But man, whose witte is er redy t' aply
To thing that sowning is into falsehede?
Woman berthe ware of false men I The rede.

And farthirmore have these men in usage,
That where they nat lykily ben to spece,
Soche as they ben, with a double visage,
They procurin for to pursewe ther nede,
He prayith him in his cause to procede,
And largely guerdonith he his travayle,
Litil wote women howe men 'hem assaile.

Anothir wretche unto his felowe faith,
Thou fishist faire, the which that The hath fired,
Is false, inconstaunt, and she hath no faith,
She for the rode of folke is so desired,
And as an horse fro daie to daie she' is hired,
That when thou twinnist fro her companie,
Comith an othir, and blered is thine eye.

Now prick on fast, and ridin thy journey,
While thou art there, for she behinde thy backe
So liberall is, she woll nothyng withsey,
But smartly of an othir take a smacke,
And thus farin these women all the packe,
Who so 'hem trustith hangid mote he be,
Evir thei desire chaunge and novilt.

Whereof

Whereof procedith this but of envie?

For that he hymself her ne winnin maie,
He spekith her represe and villanie,
As mann's blabbyng tong is wont alwaie;
Thus divers men full oftin make assaie
For to distourbin folke in sondrie wise,
For thei maie not eschuin ther emprite.

Many one eke would spekin for no gode,
That hath in love his tyme spent and used,
Men wist his ladie his askyng withstode;
Ere that he were of her plainly refused,
Or waste and vaine al that he had ymused,
Wherefore he can none othir remedy,
But on his lady shapith him to lyc.

Every woman he saithe is light to gete,
Can none say nay, yf she be wel yfought,
Who so may leisir have with her to trete,
Of his purpose ne shal he failin nought,
But he on madness be so depe ybrought,
That he shende al with opin homlynelle,
That loven women, they dotin as I gesse.

To sclaudir women thus what may profite?
To gentillesse namely that 'hem arne should
In defence of women, and 'hem delite,
As that the ordre of gentillesse wolde?
If that a man list gentill to be holde,
He must al eschewe that therto' is contrary,
A sclaudrons tonge is his gret adversaryc. 140

A foul vice it is of tonge to be light,
For who so mochil clappeth, gabbieth ofte,
The tonge of man so swifte is and to wight,
That whan it is yreisid up on losse,
Reson is shewid so slowly and softe,
That it him nevir oirtakin may,
Lorde! so these men ben trusty in assay.

Al be it that men find one woman nice,
Inconstaunt, rechellesse, and variable;
Deignous, and proude, fulfillid of malyce,
Without faithe or love and discevable,
Slye, quaint, false, in al untrust couplable,
Wickid, or feirse, or ful of cruilte,
Yet foloweth not that soche all women be.

Whan the High God aungelis fourmid had,
Amongis 'hem al fourmid were there none,
That foundin was malicious and bad?
Yet al men wotin ther were many one,
That for ther pride fill fro hevin anone,
Should weforth yve all angils proude name? 160
Nay, he, that that susteinith, is to blame.

Of twelve Apostils one a traitour was,
The remenante yet gode werin and trewe,
So yf it happin men findin percas
O woman false, soche gode is to eschewe,
And deme not al that they therfore be' untrewes,
I se wel that mennis owne falsines
'Hem causith woman for to trust the lesse.

O! every man ought have an hert tendre
To a woman, and deme her honorable,
Whethir his shape be thicke, or els slendre,
Or he be gode or badde, it is no fable,
Every wight wote that witte hath resonable,
That of a woman he discendid is,
Than is it shame of her to speke amyffe.

A wickid tre gode frute may non forth bring,
For soche the frute is aye as is the tre,

Take hede of whom thou toke thy beginning,
Let thy mother be mirrour unto The,
Honour her, yf thou wolte honourid be, 180
Dispisith her than not in no manere,
Lest that therby thy wickidnesse apere.

An olde proverbe there said is in Englishe,
That birde or foule sothly is dishonest,
What that he be, and holdin ful churlishe,
That useth to defoulin his own nest,
Men to say wel of women it' is the best,
And naught to dispisin 'hem ne deprave,
If that they wol ther honour kepe or save.

The ladies evir complaine 'hem on clerkes, 190
That they have made bokis of ther diffame,
In whiche they dispise women and ther werkes,
And spekin of him grete reprofe and shame,
And causelesse yve 'hem a wickid name,
Thus they dispisid be on every side,
Disclaundirid and blowin on ful wyde.

Tho fory bokis makin mencion
Howe women betraide in especial
Adam, David, Sampson, and Salomon,
And many' one mo, who maye reherse 'hem al, 200
The treason that they havin do and shal?
The worlde ther malice may not comprehende,
As clerkis saine, for it ne hath none ende.

Ovide, in his boke callid Remedie
Of love, grete reprofe of women ywriteth,
Wherin I trowe that he dyd grete folie,
And every wight who' in soche case him delyteth,
A clerk's collome is whan he enditeth
Of women, be it prose, or rime, or vers,
Say they be wickid, al know he the revers. 210

And the boke scholirs lerned in ther childhede,
For they of women beware should in age,
And to lovin 'hem evir be in dred,
Sith to disceve is set al ther corage,
They say' of peril men should cast th'avauntage,
Namely of soche as men havin bewrapped,
For many' a man by women hath mishapped.

No charge is what so these clerkis ysaine,
Of all ther writing I ne doe no cure,
All ther labour and travaile is in vain, 220
For betwene me and my ladie nature
Shal not be sutrid, while the world maie dure,
Thus these clerkes by ther cruell tirannie
On felie women kithin ther maistrice.

Whilom for many of 'hem wer in my cheine
Ytyd, and now for unweldie age,
And unlust, thei maie not to love atteine,
And saine now that love' is but verie dotage,
Thus for thei 'hem selthin lackin courage,
Thei folke excitin by ther wickid sawes 230
For to rebell ayenst me and my lawes.

But maugre 'hem that blamin women moste,
Soche is the force of myne impressioun,
That sodainlie I can tell all ther bosse,
And all ther wrong imaginacion,
It shal not ben in ther electioun
The foulis slutte in all the toun to' refuse,
If that me luste, for all that thei come muste,

But her in herte as brenningly desire,
As though she were a duchesse or a queene, 240
So can I folkis hertis set on fire,
And as me list sendin 'hem joye or tene,

Thei

- Thei that to women ben ywhet so kene,
My sharpè persyng strokis how thei smite
Shull fele and knowin, how thei kerve and bite
- Parde this clerke, this subtill flye Ovide,
And many' an othir discevid have be
Of women as it is knowin full wide,
What? no men more; and that is great deinte;
So excellent a clerke as was he, 250
And othir mo, that coudin full well preche, Bettrappid wer, for aught that thei coud teche.
- And trustith well that it is no marvaile,
For women knowin plainly ther entent.
Thei wist how softilie thei coud assaile
'Hem, and what falsbede thei in herte mente,
And thus thei clerkis in ther daungir hente,
With o venime an othir is destroyed,
And thus these clerkis oftin were anoied.
- These ladies, ne these gentiles nerthelless, 260
Were none of tho that wroughtin in this wise,
But soche women as werin vertuleffe,
Thei quittin thus these oldè clerkis wife,
To clerkis mochil lesse ought to suffice,
Then to dispravin women generally,
For worship shullin thei none gette thereby.
- If that these men that lovirs 'hem pretend,
To women werin faithfull, gode, and true;
And dredde 'hem to disceve, or to offende,
Women to love 'hem woldin not eschue, 270
But every daie hath man an herte newe,
It upon one abidin can no while,
What forse is it soche a wight to begile?
- Men bering eke the women upon hond,
That lightly and withoutin any pain
Thei women be, thei can no wight withstond,
That his discele list to 'hem to complain,
Thei be so frele, thei maie 'hem not refrain,
But who so likith 'hem maie lightly have,
So be ther hertis esie in to grave. 280
- To maistr John de Mone, as I suppose,
Then it was a leude occupacioun,
In makyng of the Romane of the Rose,
So many' a slyh imaginacioun,
And perilles for to rollin up and down,
The long processe, so many' a slight cantell,
For to disceve a felie damosell.
- Nought can I saie, ne my wir comprehend,
That art, and pain, and subtiltie should faile
For to conquere, and sone to make an ende, 290
When men a feble place shullin assaile,
And sone also to venquishe a bataille,
Of whiche no wight maie makin resistance,
Ne herte hath none to make any defence.
- Then mote it folowe of necessitie,
Sith art askith so grete engine and pain,
A woman to disceve, what so she be,
Of constauce be thei not so barain,
As that some of these sely clerkis sain,
But thei be as women oughtin to be, 300
Sadde, constante, and fulfillid of pite.
- How frendly was Medea to Jason,
In his conquiryng of the Fleece of gold:
How falsly quit he her true affeccion,
By whom victorie he gate as he would!
How maie this man for shamè be so bolde
To falsin her, that fro his deth and shame
- Him kept, and gate him so grete prise and name!
- Of Troie also the Traitor Aeneas,
The faithlesse wretche, how he himself forswore
To Dido, which that quene of Cartage was,
That hym relevid of his smertis fore!
What gentileffe might she have doin more,
Then she with herte unfainid to hym kidde,
And what mischefe to her therof betidde!
- In my legende of natures maie men finde,
Who so ylikith therein for to rede
That othis ne behest maie man not binde,
Of reprovabie shame have thei no drede, 320
In man's herte trouthe ne hath no stede,
The soile is naught, there maie no troth ygrow,
To women namely it is not unknowe.
- Clerkis saine also there is no malice
Like unto womans wickid crabbidness,
O woman, how shalt thou thy self chevice,
Sith men of The so mochil harme witnesse!
Beth ware o woman of ther fikelnesse,
Kepith thyn owne, what men clappe or crake,
And some of 'hem shall smarte I undirtake.
- Malice of women what is it to drede? 330
Thei sle no man, destroyin no citces,
Ne oppresse peple, ne them ovirlede,
Betraie Empiris, Relmis, or Duchees,
Ne bireven men ther landis ne ther mees,
Enpoyson folke, ne housis set on fire,
Ne false contractis makin for no hire.
- Trust, parfite love, and entere charite,
Fervent will, and entalentid corage,
All thewis gode, as sittith well to be,
Have women er of custome and usage, 340
And well thei connin mann's ire alwage,
With softè wordis, discrete and benigne,
What thei be inward thei shewe outward by signe.
- Womanis herte unto no crueltie Enclinid is, but thei be charitable,
Pitous, devote, full of humilitie,
Shamefast, debonaire, and amiable,
Dredefull, and of wordis mesurable,
What women these have not paraventure
Folowith not the waie of ther nature. 350
- Men saine that our first mothir nathelless
Made all mankinde lesin his libertie,
And nakid it of joyè doutheless,
For Godd's heste disobeyid she,
When she presumid to taste of the tre
That God forbade, that she etc therof should,
And ne 'had the devill be, no more she would.
- The envious swelling, that the fende our foe
Had unto man in herte for his welth,
Sent a serpent, and made her for to goe 360
To disceve Eve, and thus was man's welth
Birasfe him by the fendè in a stelth,
The woman not knowyng of that disceipt,
God wote ful ferre was it from her conceipt.
- Wherefore I saie that this gode woman Eve
Our fathir Adam ne discevid nought,
There maie no man for a disceipt it preve
Propirly, but that she in herte and thought
Had it compassid first or she it wrought, 370
And for soche was not her impressioun,
Men maie it call no decepte by reson.

Ne no wight disceivith, but he purpose;
The fende this disceipt caste, and nothyng she;
Then it is wrong to demin or suppose,
That of his harme she should the cause be;
Wyrith the fende, and his be the maugre,
And all excusid have her innocence,
Save onely that she brake obedience.

And touchyng this, full fewe men there be,
Unnethis any dare I safely saie,
Fro daie to daie, as men maie all daie se,
But that the heste of God thei disobaie;
Have this in mindè sirs I you praie,
If that ye be discrete and resonable
Ye woll her holde the more excusable.

And wher men saie in man is stedfastnesse,
And woman is of her courage unstable,
Who maie of Adam bere soche a witnesse,
Tellith me this, was he not chaungeable?
Thei bothe werin in o case semblable,
Save that willyng the fende discevid Eve,
And so did she not Adam by your leve.

Yet was this sinnè happie to mankinde,
The fende discevid was for all his sleight,
For aught he coud him in his sleightis winde,
For his trespase came fro hevin on height
God, to discharge man of his hevvy weight,
He fleshe and blode ytoke of a virgine,
And suffrid deth, hym to deliver of pine.

And God, to whom there maie nothing hid be, 400
If he in woman knowen had soch malice,
As men record of 'hem in generalte
Of our Ladie of life reperatrice
He n'olde have be borne, but that she of vice
Was voide, and full of vertue, well he wiste,
Endowid, of her to be borne hym liste.

Her hepid vertue hath soche excellence,
That all to lene is mann's facultie
To declare it, and therefore in suspence
Her due praisyng put nedis must ybe, 410
But thus I sayin, verily that she Next God, best frende is that to man longith,
The keye of mercie by her girdle hongith.

And of mercie hath every man soche nede,
That resyng that, farwell the joye of man,
And of her power now takith right gode hede,
She mercie maie well, and purchacin can,
Displesth her not, honoureth that woman,
And othir women honour for her sake,
And but ye doe, your sorowe shall awake. 420

In any boke also where can ye finde
That of the werkis of deth or of life
Of Jesu spelleth or makith any minde,
That women hym forsoke for wo or strife,

Where was there any wight so ententise
Aboutin hym as woman? provid none.
The'Apostlis hym forsokin everichone.

Women forsoke hym not, for all the faicth
Of holie church in women left onely,
This is no lees, for thus holy writte saicth, 430
Loke and ye shall so finde it hardily,
And therefore I maie well previn thereby
That in woman reignith stable constauce,
And in men is the chaunge of variaunce

Thus precious gemme of martirs Margarite,
That of thy blode dredest none effusion,
Thou lovir true, thou maidin mansuete,
Thou constante woman in thy passion,
Ovircame the fend's tempracion,
And many' a wight convertid thy doctrine 440
Unto' the faithe of holy God, thou virgine.

But understandeth this, I commend her nought
By enche son of her virginite,
Trustith it came nevir into thought,
For evir were I ayenst chastitie,
And evir shall, but lo! this mevith me,
Her lovyng herte, and constant to her laie,
Drive out of my remembraunce I ne maie.

Now holdith this for ferme, and for no lie,
That this true and juste commendacion 450
Of women tell I for no flattirie,
Ne bicause of pride or clacion,
But onely lo! for this entencion,
To yeve 'hem courage of perseveraunce
In vertue, and ther honour to avaunce.

The more the vertue, the lasse is the pride,
Vertue so digne is and so noble' in kinde
That vice and he woll not in fere abide,
He puttith viciis clene out of his minde,
He slieth fro 'hem, he levith 'hem behinde; 460
O woman that of vertue art hostresse,
Grete is thy honour, and thy worthinesse.

Then woll I thus concludin and define,
We you commaunde our ministris echone,
That redie ye be our hestes to encline,
That of these falsè men our rebell fone
Ye doin punishment, and that anone,
Voide 'hem our court, and banishe 'hem for ever.
So that therein more comin may thei never.

Fulfillid be it, cefyng all delaie. 470
Loke that there be none excusacion.
Writtin in the lustie moneth of Maie,
In our palcis, where many' a million
Of lovirs true have habitacion,
In the yere of grace joyfull and joconde
A thousande fowir hundrid and seconde

Thus endeth the letter of Cupide.

A Ballade in commendacion of our Ladie.

Thoufande stories coud I mo reherce.
 A Of olde Poetis touching this matere,
 How that Cupide the hertis gan so perce
 Of his fervauntis setting 'hem in fere!
 Lo here the fine of th' error and the fere!
 Lo here of love the guerdone and grevaunce,
 That er what wo her fervauntes do avaunce!

Wherefore now plainly I woll my stile dresse
 Of one to speke, at nede that woll not faile;
 Alas for dore I ne can ne maie' expresse
 Her passyng prife, and that is no mervaile!
 O winde of grace, now blowe unto my saile,
 O auriate licour of Clio, to write
 My penne enspire of that I woll endite.

Alas! unworthie I am and unable To love soche one, all women surmountyng,
 But she be benigne to me and merciabile,
 That is of pitie the welle and the spryng;
 Wherefore of her in laude and in praisyng,
 So as I can, supportid by her grace,
 Right thus I saie, knelyng before her face.

O sterre of steris with thy stremis clere,
 Sterre of the Se, to shipmen light and gide,
 O lustie livyng moste plesaunt to' appere,
 Whose bright bemis the cloudis maie not hide,
 O waie of life to 'hem that go or ride,
 Haven astir tempest surist up to rive,
 On me have mercie for thy joyis live.

O rightfull rule, O bore of holinesse,
 And lightsome line of pitie for to plain,
 Originall of grace and all godnesse,
 And clenest conduct of vertue moste soverain,
 Mothir of mercie, our trouble to restrain,
 Chambir and closet clenest of chastitie,
 And namid herbrough of the deitie,

O closet gardin voide of wedis wicke,
 Cristallin welle, of clerenesse clere consigned,
 Fructified olive of foiles faire and thicke,
 And redo'lent Cedre most dere worthy digned,
 Remember on sinnirs that to The be' affined,
 Or wickid fendis ther wrathe on 'hem wreche,
 Lanterne of light, thou art ther livis leche.

Paradise of plesaunce, gladsome to all gode,
 O benigne braunchilet of the Pine tre,
 Vinarie' envermailed, refreshir of bode,
 Licour ayen langour that palled maie not be,
 Blisful blomie blosme, bidyng in bounte,
 Thy mantell of mercie on our miserie sprede,
 And er we' awaie wrappe us undir thy wede.

O rodie rosier, flouring without spine,
 Fountain filthlesse, as birill current clere,
 Sum drop of gracefull dewe to us propine;
 Light without nebule shinyng in thy sphere,
 Medecine to mischeves, pucell without pere,
 Flambe down the full light of thin influence,
 Remembring thy servantes for thy magnificence.

Of all christin protectrice and tutele,
 Retourne of exiled put in the proscricion,
 To 'hem that erren in the' pathe of ther sequele,

To werie forwandrid, tent and pavilion,
 To faint and to freshe the pafsacion,
 To unrestie bothe rest and remedie,
 Fructfull to all tho that in her affie.

To 'hem that rennin thou art itinerarie,
 O blisfull brave to knightes of thy werre,
 To werie werkmen she' is diourne denarie,
 Mede unto mariners that have failed ferre,
 Laureate coroune stremyng as a sterre,
 To 'hem put in palastre for thy sake
 Tours of ther conquest, white as any lake.

O mirthe of martyrs, sweter than Sitole,
 Of Confessours also riche donatise,
 Unto virgines eternall Lauriole,
 'Fore all woman havyng prerogative,
 Mothir and maide, bothe widowe and eke wife,
 Of all the worlde is none but thou alone,
 Now sith thou maie, be succour to my mone.

Trustie turtle truefastist of all true,
 Curteise columbe, replete of all mkenesse,
 O Nightingale with thy notis newe,
 O Popinjaie purid with all clenesse,
 O laveroke of love, singyng with swetnesse,
 Phœbus waityng till on thy brest he light,
 Undir thy wing at domisdaie us dight.

O rubie rubified in the passion
 Of thy sonne, us have emongis in minde,
 O stedfast diametre of duracion,
 That fewe feris any time might thou finde,
 For none to hym was foundin halfe so kinde,
 O hardie herte, O lovyng creature,
 What was 'it but love that made The so endure?

Semely saphre, depe loupe, and blewe cwage,
 Stable as the loupe cwage of pitie,
 This is to saie the freshist of visage,
 Thou lovest unchaungid 'hem that servin The,
 And if offence or varyng in 'hem be Thou art aie redie on ther wo to rue,
 And 'hem recevist aye with herte full true.

O godelie gladdid when that Gabriel
 With joy The grette, that maie not be nombrid,
 Or halfe the blisse who coud ywrite or tell,
 When the' holy Ghoste to The was obumbrid,
 Wherthrough fendes were bittirly encombrid,
 O wemlesse maide, embelished in his birthe,
 That man and angill therof haddin mirthe.

Lo here the blosme, and the budde of glorie;
 Of whiche the prophet so long spake before!
 Lo here the fame that was in memorie
 Of Esaie, so long or she was yborne!
 Lo here of David the delicious corne.
 Lo here the grounde of life into bilde,
 Becomyng man our ransome for to yilde.

O glorious viole, vite inviolate,
 O fire Titan, persyng with thy bemes,
 Whose vertuous brightnes was in brest vibrat,
 That al the world embelished with the lemes,
 Conservatrice of Kingis, Dukes and ruelmes,
 Of Jesse his sede the swete * sinamite,

* Perhaps Cinnamonite, or Cinnamomite.

Mesure my mourning, mine own Margarite.

O soverainist yfought out of Syon,
Coekle with gold-dewe from above berainid Dewe- bushe unbrent, firelesse fire set on,
Flaming with fervence, not with herte painid,
Duryng daise that no wethir stainid,
Flece undefouled of gentilist Gidion,
And fructifying fairist yerde of Aaron.

The mightie arche, the probatife piscine, Laughyng aurora, and of pece olive,
Columpne and base, up beryng from abime,
Why n'ere I connyng here for to discrive,
Chosin of Joseph, whom he toke to wive,
Unknowyng hym, childyng by miracle,
And of our manly figure the tabernacle.

I have none Englishe convenient and digne,
Myne herte's hele lady, The with to honour,
Ivorie clene, therefore I woll resigne
Into thyn hande till that thou list succour,
To helpe my makyng both florisshe and flour,
Then should I shewe in love how that I brende,
In songis makyng, thy name to commende.

For if I coud before thyn excellence
Syngin in love I wouldin what I fele,
And evir standin Ladie' in thy presence,
To shewe in opin how I love you wele,
And sith although your hert be made of stele
To you withoutin any disceve'raunce
J'ay en vous toute ma fiance.

Where might I love evir bettir beset
Then in this Lilie likyng to beholde,
That lace of love, the bonde so well thou knit,
That I maie se The or myne herte colde,
And or I passe out of my dayis olde,
Tofore syngyng evirmore uttirly,
Your eyin two woll sle me sodainly.

For love I langour, blissed be soch sicknesse,
Sith it 'is for you my hertely sustenance,
I can not ellis saie in my distresse,
So faire one hath myne hert in govinaunce,
And aftir I begin on esperance,
With feble entune, though it rhine hert perce,
Yet for thy sake this lettir I reherse.

God wote on Musike I can not, but I gesse,
Alas why so, that I might saie or syng,
So love I you my own soveraine maistresse,
And evir shall withoutin departyng,
Mirrour of beautie, for you' out shuld I ring,
In remembraunce eke of your eyin clere,
Thus ferre from you my soverain Ladie dere.

So wouldin God your love would me yslo,
Sith for your sake I finging daie by daie,
O herte why he nilt thou breke a two,
Sith with my Ladie dwellin I ne maie!
Thus many' a roundell, many' a virelaie,
In freshe Englishe, when I me leisir finde,
I doe recorde, on you to havin mynde.

Now ladie mine, sith I you love and drede,
And you' unchaunged evir finde in o degre,
Whose grace ne maie sie fro your womanhede,
Disdainith not for to remembre' on me,
Myne herte bledith for I maie not you se,
And sith ye wotte my menyng desirous
Plenres pour moy s'il vous plaist amoureux.

What marveile is though I in painybe,
I am departid from you my soverain,
Fortune alas, dont vrent la destenie,
That in no wise I can ne maie attain
To se the beautie of your eyin twain,
Wherefore I saie, for tristesse doeth me grame,
Tant me fait mal departir de ma dame.

Why n'ere my wissling brought to soche esloit,
That I might saie for joye of your presence,
Or amon cuer ce qui vouloit
Or amon cuer, the highist excellence,
That er had wight, and sith mine advertence
Is in you, rewith on my painis smerte,
I am so sore ywoundid to the herte.

To live well merie two lovirs were ifere,
So maie I saie withoutin any blame,
And if that any man to wilde were,
I coud hym techin for to be full tame,
Let hym go love and se where it be game,
For I am bridlid unto sobirnesse
For her that is of women chief princesse.

But evir when thought my hert shuld embrace,
Then unto me it is best remedie
When I loke on your godely freshe face,
So merie 'a mirrour coud I ner espie,
And if I coud I would it magnifie,
For nevir none ywas so faire yvounde,
To reken hem all, and also Rosamonde.

And finally with mouthe, and will present,
Of double eye withoutin repentaunce,
Mine hert I yeve you Ladie' in this entent,
That ye shall therof have the govinaunce,
Takyng my leve with hert's obeisaunce,
(Salve Regina) synging last of all
To be our helpe when that we to The call.

All our love is nought els but idlenesse,
Save your love alone, who might therto' attain,
Who so woll have a name of gentillesse,
I counsaile hym in love that he not fain,
Thou swete Ladie, refute in every pain
Whose mercie molte unto me availith,
To gie by grace, when that fortune failith.

Nought maie be told withoutin any fable
Your high renome, your womanly beaute,
Your govinaunce to all worship able,
Putteth every herte in ese in his degre,
O violet, O flowir desire,
Sithin I am for you so amercous,
L'esignes may de cuer joyeux.

With fervent hert my brest hath brost on fire
L'ardant espoir en mon cuer point est mort.
D'avoir l'amour de celle que je desire,
I menè you swete molte plesaunt of porte
Et je j'ay bien que ce n'est pas mon tort.
That for you syng, so as I maie for mone,
For your departyng alone, I live alone.

Though that I might I would none othir chese,
In your service I would ben foundin sadde,
Therefore I love no labour that ye lese,
When that in longyng forist ye be fladde,
Loke up your lovirs and be right gladde,
Now ayenist saint Valentin's daie,
For I have chese that ner forsake I maie.

John

JOHN GOWER, unto the noble King HENRY IV.

Noble worthie Kyng Henrie the ferth,
In whom the gladdè fortune is befall
The peple to governe here upon yerth,
God hath The chosèn in comfort of us all,
The worship of this land, which was doun fal,
Now stant upright through grace of thy godenesse,
Which evèry man is hold for to bleße.

The most high God of his justice alone
The right whiche longith to thy regalie
Declarid hath to stande in thy persone,
And more then God maie no man justifie,
Thy title' is knowe upon thyne auncestrie,
The land'is folk hath eke thy right affirmed,
So stant thy reigne, of God and man confirmed.

There is no man maie saie in othirwise,
That God hymself ne hath the right declared,
Whereof the lande is bounde to thy service,
Whiche for defaute of helpe hath long ycared,
But now there is no mann'is herte spared,
To love and serve, and worchin thy pleasaunce, 20
And all this is through God'is purveiaunce.

In allè thing whiche is of God begonne
There foloweth grace, if it be well governed,
Thus tellin thei whiche oldè bokis come,
Wherof my lorde I wote well thou art lerned,
Aske of thy God, so shalt thou not be werned
Of no request the whiche is resonable,
For God unto the gode is favourable.

King Salomon, whiche had at his askyng
Of God, what thing hym was levist to crave, 30
He chafe wisdom to the right govirnyng
Of Godis folke, the whiche he wouldin save,
And as he chafe it fill hym for to have,
For through his wit while that his reign did last
He gate hym pece and rest into his last.

But Alexandre', as tellith his storie,
Unto the God besought in othir waie,
Of all the worlde to win the victorie,
So that undir his swerde it might obaie, 40
In werre he had all that he wouldin praie,
The mightie God behight hym that beheste,
The worlde he wanne, and had it of conqueste.

But though it fill at thilkè tymè so,
That Alexandre' his askyng hath atchived,
This sinfull worldè was all Painim tho,
Was none whiche hath the High God beleved,
No wondir was though thilk world was greved
Though a tyrant his purpose might ywin,
All was vengeance and infortune of sin.

But now the faith of Christ is come aplace 50
Emongis the princis in this yerth here,
It sitte 'hem well to doe pite and grace,
But yet it must be temprid in manere,
For that thei findin cause in the mattere,
Upon the point, what astirward betide,
The lawe of right shall not be laied aside.

So maie a king of werrè the voyage
Ordain and take, as he thereto is holde,
To claime and aske his rightfull heritage,
In al placis whereas it is witholde,
But othirwise if God himselfe would

Affirmin love and pece bitwene the kinges,
Pece is the best above al erthely thinges.

Gode is to eschewe warre, and nathèles,
A king may makin werre upon his right,
For of bataile the final ende is pece,
Thus stant the lawè that a worthy knight
Upon his trouth may goin to the fight,
But if so werè that he mightin chese,
Bettir is pece, of which may no man lese. 70

To sterc pece ought evèryche one on lyve
First for to settin his liege lorde in rest,
And eke these othir men that they ne strive,
For so this landè may standin at best,
What king that woldè be the worthiest,
The more he might our dedly werris cese,
The more he should his worthinesse encrese.

Pece is the chefe of al the world'is welth,
And to the heven it ledith eke the way, 80
Pece is of soule and life the mann'is helth,
Of pestilence and doth the werre away,
My liegè lorde take hede of that I say,
If that werre may be leste, take pece on hande,
Whiche may not be withoutin Godd'is fande.

With pece stant evèry creature in rest,
Withoutin pece there may no lyfe be gladdè,
Above al othir gode pece is the best,
Pece hath himself, whan werre is all bestadde,
The pece is safe, the werre is evir dradde, 90
Pece is of allè charite the kay,
Whiche hath the life and soulè for to way.

My liegè lorde if that The lystè to seche
The soth ensamplis what the werre hath wrought,
Thou shalt wel herin of wise mennis speche,
That dedly werrè tournith into nought,
For if these old bokis be wel ysought,
There might thou se what thing that werre hath do
Both of conquest and conquerour also.

For vaine honour, or for the world'is gode
They that whilom the strongè werris made, 100
Wher be they now, bethinke wel in thy mode,
The day is gone, the night is derke and fade,
Ther cruilte, whiche that made 'hem than glade,
They sorowen now, and yet have naught the more,
The blode is shad, which no man may restore.

The werre is mothir of the wrongis al,
It sleeth the priest in holy churchè at masse,
Forlith the maide, and doth her flour to fal,
The werrè makith the grete cite lalle, 110
And dothe the lawe his rulis ovirpasse,
Ther is nothing, wherof mischese may growe,
Whiche is not causid of the werre, I rowe.

The werre bringith in povirtie' at his heles,
Wherof the comin peple is sore greved,
The werre hath set his cart on thilkè wheles,
Where that fortune he may nat be beleved, 120
For whan men wenin best to have acheved,
Ful oftin it is al newe to begin,
The werre hath nothing sikir, tho he win.

60 Forthy, my worthy prince, in Christ'is halve, 120
As for a parte whose faith thou hast be gide,

Ley

Ley to this oldè fore a newè falve,
 And do the werre away, what so betide,
 Purchacin pece, and set it by thy syde,
 And suffre nat thy peple be devoured,
 So shal thy name er aftir stand honoured.

If any man be nòwe or evir was Ayen the pece thy privy counsaillour,
 Let God be of thy counsaile in this cas;
 And put away the cruil warriour,
 For God, whiche is of man the crëitour,
 He woldè not men slough his creature,
 Withoutin cause of dedly forfaiture. 130

Where nedith môst, behovith most to loke,
 My lorde, howe so thy werris be without,
 Of time ypassid who that hede ytoke,
 Gode were at home to se right wel about,
 For evirmore the worste is for to dout,
 But if thou mightist parfite pece attaine,
 There should ybe no causè for to plaine. 140

About a king gode counsaile is to preise,
 Above al othir thinges most vailable,
 But yet a king within himselfe shal peise,
 And seen the thingis that ben resonable,
 And therupon he shal his wittis stable,
 Among the men to settin pece in evin,
 For love of him whiche is the King of hevyn.

A! wel is him that ne shedde nevir blode,
 But if it were in cause of rightwyfenes,
 For yf a kynge the peril undirstode,
 What is to sle the peple, than I gesle,
 The dedly werris and the hevines,
 Wherof the pece distourbid is ful ofte,
 Shuld at some timè cesse and wexin fote. 150

O kinge fulfillid of grace and knighthode,
 Remembre upon this pointe for Christe's sake,
 If pece be profered unto thy manhode,
 Thine honour save, let it not be forsake,
 Though thou the werris darst wel undirtake,
 Aftir reson yet tempre thy courage,
 For lyke to pece there is none avauntage. 160

My worthy lorde, thinke wel, howe so befall,
 Of thilke lore, as holy bokis faine,
 Christ is the hed, and we be membris al,
 As wel the subiecte as the soveraine,
 So sitte it wel that charite be plaine,
 Whiche unto God himselfe most accordeth,
 So as the lore of Christ's worde recordeth.

In the olde lawe, or Christ himselfe was bore, Amonge the x. commaundementes I rede, 170
 Howe that manslaughter shoulde be forbore,
 Soche was the wil that tyme of the Godhede,
 But aftirward, whan Christ toke his manhede,
 Pece ywas the first thing he let do crie,
 Ayenst the world's rancour and envie.

And or Christ went out of this erthè here,
 And stighed to heven, he made his testament,
 Where he bequath to his disciplis there,
 And yave his pece, whiche is the foundement
 Of charite, withoutin whose assent 180
 The world's pece may nevir wel be tried,
 Ne love be kept, ne lawe be justified.

The Jewis with the Painims haddin werre,
 But they among 'hemselfe stode er in pece,
 Why shouldin than our pece stande out of erre,
 Which Christ hath chose unto his owne encrese,

For Christ is morè than ywas Moyses,
 And Christ hath sette the parfite of the lawe,
 The whiche ne should in no wise be withdrawe.

To yere us pece was cause why Christ ydide, 190
 Withoutin pece may nothing stonde availed.
 But nowe a man may se on every side,
 Howe Christ's faith is every day assailed,
 With painims distroyid and so batailed,
 That for defaute of helpe and of defence,
 Unnethis hath Christ his dewe revèrence.

The right faith to kepin of holy church
 The first point is ynamid of knighthode,
 And evèry man is holde for to worche
 Upon the point that stante to his manhode, 200
 But now alas! the fame is spred so brode,
 That evèry man this thing complainith,
 And yet is there no man that helpe ordainith.

The world's cause is waitid ovir al,
 There be the werris redy to the ful,
 But Christ's owne cause in special,
 There ben the swerdis and the speris dul,
 And with the sentence of the Pop's bul,
 As for to done the folke paine obey,
 The church is tournid al anothir wey. 210

It' is wondir above any mann's wit
 Withoutin werre how Christ's faith was won,
 And we, that be upon this erthè yet,
 Ne kepe it not as it was first begon,
 To every cature undir the sonne
 Christ bad himselfe that we shoulde preche,
 And to the folke his Evangely teche.

More light it is to kepè than to make,
 But that whiche we foundin made tofore honde
 We kepe not, but let it lightly slake, 220
 The pece of Christ hath al to broke his bonde,
 We rest our selfe, and suffrin every lond
 To sle eche othir, as thinge undefended,
 So stant the werre, and pece is not amended.

But though the hed of holy church above
 Ne doith not al his whole businessse
 Amonge the peple to set pece and love,
 These kingis oughtin of ther rightwyfenesse
 Ther owne cause among 'hemselfe redresse,
 Tho Peter's ship as now hath lost his fiere, 230
 It lythe in 'hem the barge for to fiere

If that holy church aftir the dewte
 Of Christ's worde ne be nat al avised,
 To makin pece, accorde, and unite,
 Amonge the kingis that be now devised
 Yet natheles the lawe stand assised
 Of mann's witte to be so resonable,
 Withoutin that to stande himselfe stable.

Of holy church we ben the childrin al,
 And every childe is holde for to bowe 240
 Unto the mothir, how that er it fal,
 Or ellis he must reson disalowe,
 And for that cause a knight shall first avowe
 The right of holy church for to defende,
 That no man shal the privilege oitende.

Thus were it gode to sette al in evyn,
 The world's princis, and the prelats bothe,
 For love of him whiche is the King of hevyn,
 And if men should algaïs wexin wrothe,
 The Sarazins, whiche unto Christ ten lothe; 250 6 Y Let

Let men be armid ayenst 'hem to fight,
So maye the knight his dede of armis right.

Upon iii. pointis stant Christ's pece oppressed,
First holy churchè in her selfe dividid,
Whiche ought of reson first to be redressed,
But yet so highe a cause is not desidid,
And thus whan humble pacience is pridid,
The remenaunt, whiche that they shuldin rule,
No wondir is though it stande out of rule.

Of that the hed is sicke the lymmis aken, 260
These reignis, that to Christ's pece belongen,
For world's gode these dedly werris maken,
Whiche helpèlessè, as in balaunce yhongen,
The hed above 'hem hath nat undirfongen
To set pece, but every man sleith other,
And in this wise hath charite no brother.

The two defaultis bringin in the thirde,
Of myscreantes, that seen how we debate,
Betwene the two they fallin in amydde, 270
Where now al day they finde an opin gate;
Lo! thus the dedly werrè stant algate,
But evir I hope of king Henrie's grace,
That he it is which shal the pece embrace.

My worthy noble prince, and king anoynt,
Whom God hath of his gracè so preserved,
Beholde and se the world upon this point,
As for thy part, that Christ's pece be served,
And so shal thy high medè be deserved,
To him, whiche al shal quite The at the laste,
For this life here ne may no while laste. 280

Se Alexandir, Hector, and Julius,
Se Machabeus, David, and Josue,
Se Charlemaine, and Godefray, and Arthus,
Fulfilled of werre, and of mortalyte,
Ther same abyte, but al' is but vanite,
For deth, which hath the werris undir fote,
Hath made an ende, of which ther is no bote.

So many a man the soth wete and know,
That pece is gode for every kinge to have,
The fortune of the werre is er unknowe, 290
But wher pece is, ther is the marchis save,
That now is up, to morow' is undir grave,
The myghtye God yhath al grace in hande,
Withoutin him men may not longè stande.

Of the tennis to winne or lese a chace
May no life wete or that the bal be ronke,
Al stant in God what thing men shal purchase,
Th' ende is in hym or that it be begonne,
Men faine the wolfe, when it is well ysponne,
Doth that the cloth is stronge and profitable, 300
And ellis it maye never be durable.

The world's chauncis upon avinture
Ben evir sette, but thilkè chaunce of pece
Is so behovely to the creature,
That it is above al othir peres,
But it may not begetin nathèles
Amonge the men to lastin any while,
But where the herte is plaine withoutin gile.

The pece is as it were a sacrament,
Tofore the God, and shal with wordis plaine, 310
Without any double entendement,
Be tredit, for the trouth ne can not faine,
But yf the men within 'hemselfe ben vaine,
The substance of the pece may not be trewe,
But every day it chaungith upon newe.

But who that is of charite parfite,
He voidith allè sleightis ferre awaye,
And sette his worde upon the samè plyte
Where that his hert hath found a sikir waye,
And thus when conscience is trewly waye, 320
And that these ben yhandlid with the wise,
It shal abyde, and stande in allè wise.

The' Apostil saith, ther may no life be gode
Whiche is not groundid upon charite,
For charite ne sheddè never blode,
So hath the werre as there no properte,
For thilkè vertue whiche is sayd pite,
With charité so ferforth is acquainted,
That in her may no false semblant be paynted.

Cassodore, whose writinge is authorised, 330
Saithe: where that pite reignith there is grace,
Thruugh which the pece hath al his welth assyfed,
So that of werre he dredith no manace,
Where pyte dwellith in the samè place
There may no dedly cruilte sojourne,
Wherof that mercy shoulde his waye tourne.

To se what pyte forth with mercy doth,
The cronique is at Rome in thilke empire
Of Constantine, whiche is a talè sothe, 340
When him was levir his owne deth desirè
Then do the yongè childrin to martire,
Of cruilte he lestin the quarele,
Pyte he wrought, and pyte was his hele.

For thilkè mann's pyte whiche he dede
God was pytous, and made him whole at al,
Silvester came, and in the samè stede
He yave him baptisme first in special,
Whiche did awaye the sinne original,
And al his lepre' it hath so purified,
That his pyte for er is magnified. 350

Pyte was the cause why this Emperour
Was whole in body and in soulè bothe,
And Rome also was sette in thilke honour
Of Christ's faith, so that they leve or loth,
Whiche haddin be with Christ tofore wroth,
Recevid werin unto Christ's lore,
Thus shal pyte be praisid evirmore.

My worthy liegè lorde Henry by name,
Whiche Englande haste to governin and right, 360
Men oughtin wel thy pyte to proclame,
Whiche opinliche in al the world's sight
It shewith, with the helpe of God almight,
To yeve us pece, which long hath be debated
Wherof thy prife shal never be abared.

My lorde, in whom hath evir yet be founde
Pyte, withoutin spotte of violence,
Kepe thilkè pece alwayis within bounde,
Whiche God hath plantid in thy counscience,
So shal the cronique of thy pacience
Amonge the saintes be taken into memorie, 370
To the legende of perdurable glorie.

And to thin erthely prife, so as I can,
Whiche every man is holdin to commende,
I Gower, whiche am al thy liegè man,
This lettir to thine excellence I sende,
As I whiche evir unto my live's ende
Wol pray for the estate of thy persone,
In worshippe of thy sceptre and thy throne.

Not onely to my kinge of pece I write,
But to these othir princis Christin al, 380
That

That eche of 'hem his ownè herte endite,
And cese the werre or more mischefe yfal,
Sette eke the rightful puppe upon his stall,
Kepe charite, and drawe pite to hande,
And maintaine lawe, and so the pece shall staude.

Explicit carmen, de pacis commendatione, quod, ad laudem & memoriam serenissimi principis domini regis Henrici quarti, suus humilis orator Johannes Gower com-posuit.

*'Electus Christi pie rex Henrice fuisti,
Qui bene venisti, cum propria regna petisti,
Tu mala vicistis bonis bona restituiisti,
Et populo tristi nova gaudia contulisti.
Et mihi spes lata, quod adhuc per te renovata
Succedent fata prisca probitate beata,
Est tibi nam grata gratia sponte data.
Henrici quarti primus regni fuit annus,
Quo mihi defecit visus ad æta mea.
Omnia tempus habent, finem natura ministrat,
Quem virtute sua frangere nemo potest.
Ultra posse nihil, quamvis mihi velle remansit,
Amplius ut scribam non mihi posse manet.
Dum potui scripsi, sed nunc quia curva senectus
Turbavit sensus, scripta relinquo scholis.
Scribat, qui veniet post me, discretior alter,
Ammodo namque manus & mea penna silent.
Hoc tamen in finem verborum quæso meorum
Prospera quod statuat regna futura Deus.*

CHAUCER dreameth that he heareth the Cuckow and the Nightingale contend for Excellency in singing.

THE God of love, ah benedicite!
Howe mighty and howe gret a Lorde is he!
For he can makin of lowe hertis hie,
And of hye lowe, and lykè for to die,
And hardè hertis he can makin fre :

He can makin within a litil ffounde
Of sickè folkè whole, and freshe, and founde,
And of the whole he can ymake seke,
He can ybindin and unbindin eke,
That he wol have yboundin or unbounde,

To tel his might my wit may not suffise,
For he can makin of wise folke ful nice,
For he may do al that he wol device,
And lithy folkè to distroyin vice,
And proude hertis he can make agrise.

Shortly al that evir he wol he may,
Against him there dare no wight say naye,
For he can glad and greve whom him lykith,
And who that he wol he loweth or sikith,
And most his might he shedith er in May.

For evèry true gentle hertè fre,
That with him is or thinkith for to be,

Against May nowe shal have some steringe.
Or to joye, or ellis to some mourning,
In no seson so moche, as thinkith me.

For whan that they may here the birdis singe,
And se the flouris and the levis springe,
That bringith into ther remembraunce,
A manir ese ymedlid with grevaunce,
And lusty thoughtis ful of grete longing ;

And of that longing comith hevinessè,
And therof growith oft grete sikènessè,
And for the lacke of that that they desire ;
And thus in May ben hertis set on fire,
So that they brennin forth in gret distresse.

I speke this of feling trewily,
What? tho that I be olde and unlusty,
Yet I have selte of the sicknesse through May,
Bothe hote and cold, and axis every day,
How fore iwis there wote no wight but I

I am so shakin with the fevirs white,
Of al this May ne slepe I but a lite,
And also it is not lyke unto me
That any hertè shoulidin slepy be.

In

In whom that love his fry darte wol smite.

But as I lay this othir night waking
I thought howe lovirs had a tokining,
And amonge 'hem it was a commune tale,
That it were gode to here the Nightingale,
Moche rathir than the leude Cuckowe finge.

And than I thought anon as it was day
I woldè faine go somewhere to aslay
If that I might a Nightingale yhere,
For yet had I none herde of al that yere,
And it was tho the thirde night of May.

And right anon as I the day aspidè,
No lengir would I in my bedde abide,
But unto a wodde that was me fast by
I went forthe my self alone boldily,
And helde the way downe by a broke side,

Tyl I came to a launde of white and grene,
So faire an one had I nevir in bene,
The grounde was grene, ypoudrid with daisye,
The flouris and the grevis alike hie,
Al grene and white was nothing ellis fene.

There fate I downe among the faire flouris,
And sawe the birdes trippe out of ther bowris,
There as they restid 'hem had al the night,
They were so joyful of the day's lyght,
They began of Maye for to done honouris.

They coudin wel that service al by rote,
And there was many a full lovely note,
Some songin loude as they had yplained,
And some in othir manir voice yfained,
And some songin al out with the ful throte.

They proynid 'hem, and madin 'hem right gay,
And daumfidin, and leptin on the spray,
And ev'more were two and two in fere,
Right so as they had chosin 'hem to yere,
In Feverere on saint Valentine's day.

And the rivir whiche that I sat upon,
It madin soche a noise, as it ron,
Accordaunt with the birdis armony,
Me thought that it was the best melody
That mightin ben yherde of any mon.

And for delyte, I ne wotte nevir howe,
I fel in soche a slombre and a swowe,
Nat al aslepe, ne fully awaking,
And in that swowe me thought I herdè finge,
The sory birde, I mene the leude Cuckowe.

And that was upon a tre right fast by,
But who was than evil apaide but I?
Now God (qð I) that dyid on the crois,
Yeve sorowe on The, and on thy leude vois,
Ful litil joye have I now of thy crie.

And as I with the Cuckow thus gan chide,
I herdin in the nextè bush beside
A Nyghtingale so lustily yfinge,
That with her clerè voice she madin ringe,
Ecchoing thorough al the grene wode wide.

Ah! gode swete Nightingale (qð I) then,
A litil hast thou ben to longè hen,
For here hath ben the leude sory Cuckow,
And songin songis rathir than hast thou,
I pray to God that evil fire her bren.

But now I wol you tel a wondre thing,
As longe as I ylay in that swouning
Me though I wist what that the birdis ment,
And what they fayd, and what was ther entent,
And of ther speche I had full gode knowing. 110

50 There herdin I the Nightingale yfay,
Now gode Cuckow goith some where awaye,
And let us that can singin dwellin here,
For every wight eschevith The to here,
Thy songis ben so elenge in gode fay.

What (qð she) what may The aylin as nowè?
It thinkith me, I finge as wel as thou,
For my songè is both true and eke plaine,
And though I can not crakil so in vaine
As thou dost in thy throte, I wot ner how. 120

60 And every wight may understandin me,
But, Nightingale, so may they not done The,
For thou hast many a nice queintè crie,
I have The herdè faine, ocy, ocy,
Howe might I knowin what that should ybe?

Ah fole (qð she) wost thou not what it is?
Whan that I fay, ocy ocy ywys
Than menin I that I would wondre faine,
That al they werin shamfully yslaine,
That menin ought against love amis. 130

90 And also' I would that al tho had the dede,
That thinkin not in love ther life to lede.
For who so wol not the God of love serve,
I dare wel say he is worthy to sterve,
And for that skil, ocy ocy I grede.

Eye (qð the Cuckow) this is a queint lawe,
That every wight shal love or be to draw,
But I forsakin al soche company,
For myne entent ne is not for to die,
Ne ner while I live on love's yoke to draw. 140

80 For lovirs ben the folke that ben on lyve
That most disefe yhave, and most unthrive,
And most endurin sorow, wo and care,
And that the lest yfelin of welfare,
What nedith it ayenist trowth to strive?

What (qð she) thou art alle out of thy minde,
How might thou in thy churlinesse yfynde
To speke of lov'is servautes in this wise?
For in this world is none so gode service,
To every wight that gentle is of kinde. 150

90 For therof truly comith al godenesse,
Therof al honour and al gentilnesse,
Thereof worship, ese, and al hert'is lust,
And parfite joye, and ful assurid trust,
And jolytie, and plesaunce and freshenesse.

And lowlyhed, largesse, and curtisye,
And semelyhed, and trew company,
And drede of shamè for to done amys,
For he that truly lov'is servaunt is Were lothir to be shamid than to die. 160

100 And that thys is the sothe whiche that I sey,
In that beleve I wil bothe live and dey,
And, Cuckow, so I rede thou do ywys.
Than (qð he) let me nevir havin blisse,
Yf evir I to that counsaile obey.

Nyghtingale, thou yspekist wondre faire,
But for al that is the soth contrayre,

For love ne is in yongè folke but rage,
And is in oldè folke a grete dorage,
Who most it usith he most shal enpaire.

For therof commeth disese and hevinessè,
So sorow' and care and many' a grete sikenessè,
Despite, debate, and angre, and envy,
Depraving, shame, untrust and jelousie,
Pride, mischefe, povertie and wodenessè.

Loving is aye an office of dispaire,
And one thing is therin that is not faire,
For who that getteth of love a litil blisse,
But if he be alwaie therewith iwis,
He maie full sone of age yhave his haire.

And Nightingalè therefore hold The nic,
For leve me well, for all thy queintè crie,
If thou be ferre or longè fro thy make,
Thou shalt be as othir that ben forsake,
And then thou shalt yhotin as do I.

Fie (qð she) on thy namè and on The,
The God of Love ne let The nevir the,
For thou art worse a thousandfolde than wode,
For many' one is full worthie and full gode,
That had be naught ne haddin love ibee.

For evirmore love his servauntes amenderth,
And from all evill tachis 'hem defendeth,
And makith 'hem to brenne right in a fire,
In trouthè and in worshipfull desire,
And when him likith, joy inough 'hem sendeth.

Thou Nightingalè he sayid, be still,
For love have no reson, but it is will,
For oft tymis untrue folke he esith
And true folke so bittirly displeisith,
That for defaute of courage he let' hem spill.

Then toke I of the Nightingalè kepe,
How that she cast a sigh out of her depe,
And saied, alas that evir I was bore!
I can for tene not saie one wordè more,
And right with that wordè she braist out to wepe.

Alas (qð she) my hertè woll to breke,
To herin thus this leude birde speke
Of love, and of his worshipfull service,
Now God of love, thou helpe me in some wise,
That I maie on this Cuckowe ben awreke.

Me thoughtin then that he sterte up anon,
And glad was I tho that he was agon,
And evirmore the Cuckowe as he slaie
Ysayid farewell, farewell Poppingaie,
As though he had yscornid me alone.

And then ycame the Nightingale to me,
And sayid, frende, forsoth I thankè The,
That thou hast likid me for to rescowe
And one avowe to love ymake I now,
That all this Maie I woll thy singir be.

I thankid her, and was right well apaied,
Ye (qð she) and ne be thou not dismaied,
Tho thou have herd the Cuckow erst than me,
For if I live it shall amendid be,
The nextè Maie, if I be not affraied.

And one thing I woll redin The also,
Ne leve thou not the Cuckow ne' his loves so,
For all that he hath saied is strong lesyng;
Naie (qð I) thereto shall nothing me bryng,

For love and it hath do me mochi wo. 230

Ye hath it? use (qð she) this medicine,
Every daie this Maie or that thou dine
Go lokin upon the freshe Daïsie,
And though thou be for woe in point to die,
That shall full gretly lessen The of thy pine:

And loke alwaie that thou be gode and true,
And I woi sing one of the songis newe,
For love of The, as loude as I maie crie,
And then she began this songè full hie,
I shrewe all 'hem that ben of love untrue 240

180 And when she had ysong it to the ende,
Now farewell (qð she) for I mote wende,
And God of love, that can right well and may,
As mochi joyè sendè The this daie,
As any yet lovir he evir sende.

Thus taketh the Nightingale her leve of me,
I praie to God alwaie with her to be,
And joye of love he sende her evirmore,
And shilde us fro the Cuckowe and his lore,
For there is not so false a birde as he. 250

190 Forthe she yflewe the gentill Nightingale
To all the birdis that were in that dale
And gate 'nem all into a place in fete,
And besoughtin 'hem that they woldin here,
Her disese, and thus she began her tale.

The Cuckowe, well it is not for to hide,
How the Cuckowe and I tall havin chide
Evir sithin that it ywas daie light,
I praie you all that ye doin me right
Of that foule and false and unkindè bride. 260

200 Then speke o birde for all by one assent,
This mattir askith gode avisement,
For we ben allè birdis here in fere,
And sothe it is, the Cuckowe is not here,
And therefore we woll have a parliment.

And thereat shall the Egle be our Lorde,
And othir peris that ben of recorde,
And the Cuckowe shall be astir ysent,
And there shall be yevin the judgement,
Or els we shall finally make accorde. 270

And this shall be ydone withoutin naie
The morowe astir saint Valentine's daie,
Undir a Maple that is faire and grene,
Before the chambir windowe of the quene,
At Wodestocke upon the grenè laie.

She thankid 'hem, and then her levè toke,
And siew into an Hawthorne by that broke,
And there she sate and song upon that tre,
For terme of life love hath withholdè me,
So loudè, that I with that song awoke. 280

Explicit.

○ Leude boke with thy foule rudenessè,
Sith thou hast neither beautie ne' eloquence,
Who hath The caused or yeve The hardinessè
For to appere in my Ladie's presence,
I am ful likir thou knowest her benivolence,
Full agreable to all her abiyng,
For of all gode she is the best livyng.

Alas that thou ne haddist worthinessè

To shewin to her some plesaunt sentence
 Sith that she hath thorough her gentillesse 290
 Acceptid The servaunt to' her digne reve'rence!
 O! me repentith that I ne' had science
 And leisir als, to make The more florishyng,
 For of all gode she is the best livyng.

Beseche her mekely with all lowlinesse,
 Though that I be ferre from her in absence,
 To thinke on my trouth to' her and stedfastnesse,
 And to' abridge of my sorowes the violence,
 Which caused is, wherof knowith your sapience,

She like emong to notifie me' her liking, 300
 For of all gode she is the best living.

L'envoye.

A Urore of gladnesse, daie of lustinesse, Lucerne anight with hevenlie influence
 Illumined, rote of beautie and godenesse,
 Suspiris, whiche I effunde in silence
 Of grace I beseche aledge let your writyng,
 Now of all gode sith ye be best livyng.

Explicit.

SCOGAN, unto the Lordes and Gentilmen of the Kinge's House

Here followeth a Moral Ballad to the Prince, to the D. of Clarence, the D. of Bedford, the D. of Glocester, the King's Son, by Henry Scogan, at a Supper among the Merchants in the Vintry at London, in the House of Lewis John.

MY noble sonnes and eke my lordis dere,
 I your fathir callid unworthilie,
 Sende unto you this litil trete here,
 Writin with mine owne hand full rudilie,
 Although it be that I not reverentlie
 Have written to your estatys, I you praie
 Myne unconnyng takith benignelie
 For Godd's sake, and herkin what I saie.

I complain fore when I remembre me
 The sodain age that is upon me fall,
 But more complain my mispent juventure
 The whiche is impossible ayen to call,
 But certainly the moste complaint of all
 Is to thinke that I have be so nice
 That I ne wouldin vertues to me call,
 In all my youth, but vices aie cherice.

Of whiche I askè mercie of The, Lorde,
 That art Almighty God in majestie,
 Besekyng to make so evin accorde
 Betwixt The and my soule, that vanitie,
 Ne worldlie lust, ne blinde prosperitie
 Have no lordship ovir my fleshe to frele,
 Thou Lorde of reste and perfite unitie
 Put fro me vice, and kepe my soule in helle.

And yeve me might, while I have life and space,
 Me to confirme fully to thy plesaunce,
 Shewe to me the abundaunce of thy grace,
 And in gode werkes graunt me perseveraunce,
 Of all my youth forget the ignoraunce,
 Yeve me gode will to serve The aie to queme, 30
 Set all my life after thyne ordinaunce,
 And able me to mercie or thou deme.

My lordis dere, why I this complaint write
 To you whom that I love most entirely,
 Is for to warne you as I can endite
 That tyme losse in youthhed folily
 Grevith a wight bodily and ghostly,
 I mene hym that to luste and vice entende,
 Wherefore, lordis, I praie you specially, 40

Your youth in vertue shapith to dispende. 40

Plantith the rote of youth in soche a wise,
 That in vertue your growyng be alwaie,
 Loke alwaie godenesse be your exercise,
 That shall you mightie make at eche assaie,
 The fende to withstandin at eche affraie,
 Passith wisely this perillous pilgrimage,
 Thinke on this worde, and werke it every daie,
 That shall you yeve a parsite flourid age.

Taketh also hede how that these noble clerkes
 Writin in ther bokes of grete sapience, 50
 Saiyng that faith is ded withoutin werkes,
 And right so is estate with negligence
 Of vertue, and therefore with diligence
 Shapith of vertue so to plante the rote
 That ye thereof have full experience,
 To worship of your life and soul's bore.

Taketh also hede that lordship ne estate
 Withoutin vertue maie not long endure, 20
 Thinketh eke how vice and vertue at debate
 Have ben and shal while that the worlde maie dure,
 And evir the vicious by avinture
 Is ovirthrowe, and thinkith evirmore
 That God is Lorde of all vertue, and figure
 Of all godenesse, therfore folowe his lore.

My maistr Chaucer, God his soule save,
 That in his langage was so curious,
 He said the fathir whiche is ded and grave
 Biqueth nothing his vertue with his hous
 To his childrin, and therefore labourous
 Ought ye to be, besekyng God of grace 70
 To yeve you might for to be vertuous,
 Thro whiche ye mightin have parte of his place.

Here maie ye se that vertuous noblesse
 Cometh not to you by waie of auncestrie,
 But it comith by lesfull businesse
 Of honest life, and not by slogardrie,
 Wherefore in youth I rede you edifie

The

The house of vertue in soche a manere,
That in your age it maie you kepe and gie
Fro the tempest of world's wawis here. 80

Thinkith how betwixe vertue and estate
There is a parsite blestid Mariage,
Vertue is cause of pece, vice of debate,
In manne's soule, the which be full of corage,
Cherishith then vertue, vice to outrage,
Driveth it away, let it have no wonning
In your soules lesich not the heritage,
Whiche God hath yeve to vertuous livyng.

Take hede also how men of pore degre
Through vertue have be set in gret honour, 90
And evir lived in grete prosperitie,
Through cherishyng of vertuous labour,
Thinkith also how many a govirnour,
Callid to estate hath be set full lowe,
Through misusyng of right, and of errour,
Therefore I counsaile you vertue to know.

By your auncestirs ye maie nothing claime,
As that my maistr Chaucer saith expresse,
But tempo'ral thing, that men may hart or maime;
Then is God stocke of vertuous noblesse, 100
And sithe that he is lorde of blissidnesse,
And made us all, and for us all ydeide,
Folowe' hym in vertue with full businesse,
And of this thing herke how my maistr seide:

The first stocke the fathir of gentilnesse,
What man that claimeth gentill for to be,
Must folowe' his trace, and all his wittis dresse
Vertue to love, and viciis for to fle,
For unto vertue longith dignitie,
And not the revers safely dare I deme, 110
All were he mitre, croune, or diademe.

The firste stocke was full of rightwisenesse,
True of his worde, sobre, pitous, and fre,
Clene of his ghost, and lovid businesse,
Ayenst the vice of sloth in honeste,
And but his heire love vertue as did he,
He is not gentill though he richè seme,
All were he mitre, croune, or diademe.

Vicè maie be an heire to olde richesse, 120
But there maie no man, as all men maie se,
Biqueth his heire his vertuous noblesse,
That is appropriated unto no degre,
But to the first fathir of Majestie,
That maketh his heiris hem that can him queme,
All were he mitre, croune, or diademe.

Lo here this noble Poete of Bretaine,
How lightlie he in vertuous sentence
The losse on youth of vertue can complain!
Therefore I praie you with your diligence, 130
For your profite and Godd's reverence,
Tempirith fully vertue in your mynde,
That when ye come to your judg's presence,
Ye be not founde vertulesse then behinde.

Many lordes have a manir now adaies,
Though one shewe hym a vertuous mattere,
Ther fervent youth is of so false alaies,
That of that arte thei have no joye to here,
But as a ship that is without a stere,
Drivith up and down without govirnanee, 140
Wenyng that calme would lastin yere by yere,
Right so fare thei for very ignoraunce.

For verie shame knowin thei not by reson,

That afir an eb cometh a fode ful rage?
In the same wise when youth passith his seson,
Cometh crokid, and unweldie pallid age,
And sone after the Kalendes of dotage,
And if her youth have no vertue provided,
All men woll saie sic on ther vailalage,
Thus hath ther sloth fin worship hem divided.

Boccius, as men may rede and se,
Saith in his boke of Consolacion,
What man desirith of Vine or of tre,
Plenteous fruite in the repyng seson,
Must er escue to doe oppression
Unto the rote, while it is yong and grene;
Thus maie ye se well by that inclusion,
That youth vertulesse doith mochil tene.

Seeth there ayenst how vertuous noblenesse
Rotid in youth with gode perseveraunce 160
Drivith awaie all vice and wretchidnesse,
As slogardie, and riote, and distaunce,
Seeth eke how vertue causith sustaunce,
Seeth eke how vertue voidith alle vice,
And who so hath vertue hath all habundaunce
Of wele, as ferre as reson can devile

Taketh hede of Tullius Hostilius,
That fro povertè came to high degre,
Through vertue, redith eke of Julius
The conquerour, how pore a man was he, 170
Yet through his vertue and his humilite
Many countrey had he in govirnanee;
Thus vertue bringeth a man to gret degre,
Eche wight that lust to do hym emendaunce

Rede here ayenst of Nero vertules, Takith hede also of proude Belthasare,
Thei hatid vertue, equite and pefe,
And loke how Antiochus fill fro his chare,
That he his skin and bonis all to rare,
Loke what mischaunce thei had for ther viciis,
Who so woll not by thesè signis beware,
I dare well saie infortunate and nice is.

I can no more now saie, hereby ye se
How vertue causith persite filinesse,
And viciis exilen all prosperite,
The best is eche man to chose as I gesse,
Doeth as you list, I me excuse expresse,
I would be right forie if ye mischese,
God confirme you in vertuous noblesse,
So that through negligence ye not it lese. 190

Explicit.

Somtime the worlde so stedfast was and stable,
That manne's worde was an obligacioun,
And now it is so false and discevable,
That worde and dede as in conclusioun
Is nothyng like, for tourned is up so down
All the worlde, thorough mede and fikilnesse,
That all is losse for lacke of stedfastnesse.

What maketh the worlde to be so variable
But lust that men have in discession?
For emong us a man is holde unable, 200
But if he can by some collusion
Doe his neighbour wrong and oppression:
What causith this but wilfull wretchidnesse?
That all is losse for lacke of stedfastnesse

Trouthe is put doune, reson is holde fable,
Vertue hath now no domination,
Pitie is exiled, no man is merciable,

Through covetise is blente discrecion,
The worlde hath made a permutacion
Fro right to wrong, fro trouthe to fikilnesse, 210
That all is losse for lacke of stedfastnesse.

L'envoie.

Prince aye desire to be honourable,
Cherishe thy folke, and hate extorcion,
Suffre nothyng that maie be reprovabie
To thine estate doen in thy region,
Shewe forth the yerde of castigacion,
Drede God, do law, love treuth and worthines,
And wedde thy folke ayen to stedfastnesse.

Explicit.

Gode counsaile of Chaucer.

FLie fro the prefe and dwell with sothfastnesse, Suffise unto thy gode though it be small, 220

For horde hath hate, and climbyng tikilnesse, Prece hath envie, and wele it brent oer all,
Savour no more then The behovin shall,
Rede well thy self, that othir folke canst rede,
And trouthe The shall delivir it 'is no drede.

Paine The not eche crokid to redresse,
In trust of her that tournish as a balle,
Grete rest standirh in litil businesse,
Beware also to spurne again a nalle,
Strive not as doith a crocke with a walle,
Demith thy self that demist othir's dede,
And trouthe The shall deliver it 'is no drede.

That The is sent receive in buxomenesse;
The wrastring of this worlde askith a fall;
Here is no home, here is but wildirnesse,
Forthe pilgrim, forthe o best out of thy stall,
Loke up on high, and thanke thy God of all,
Weivith thy luste and let thy ghost The lede,
And trouthe The shall delivir, it 'is no drede.

Balade of the village without paintyng.

Plaintife to Fortune.

His wretchid world's transmutacion
As wele and wo, nowe pore, and now honour,
Without ordir or due discrecion
Govirnid is by fortun's error,
But nathelesse the lacke of her favour
Ne maie not doe me syng though that I die,
J'ay tout perdu, mon temps & mon labour
For finally fortune I doe desie.

Yet is me left the sight of my resoun
To knowin frende fro foe in thy mirrour,
So moche hath yet thy tournyng up and down, 10
Itaughtin me to knowin in an hour,
But truily no force of thy reddour
To hym that ovir hymself hath maistrice,
My suffisaunce yshal be my succour,
For finally fortune I do desie.

O Socrates, thou stedfast champion,
She ne might nevir be thy turmentour,
Thou nevir dreddist her oppression,
Ne in her chere foundin thou no favour, 20
Thou knewe wele the disceipt of her colour,
And that her moste worship is for to lie,
I knowe her eke a false dissimulour,
For finally fortune I do desie:

The answer of Fortune.

No man is wretchid but hymself it wene,
He that yhath hymself hath suffisaunce,
Why saiest thou then I am to The so kene,
That hast thy self out of my govirnaunce?
Saie thus graunt mercie of thin habundaunce,
That thou hast lent or this, thou shalt not strive,
What wost thou yet how I The woll avaunce?
And eke thou hast thy beste frende alive.

I have The taught division betwene
Frende of effeete, and frende of countinaunce,
The nedith not the galle of an Hine,
That curith eyin derke for ther penaunce,
Now seest thou clere that wer in ignoraunce,
Yet holt thine anker, and thou maiest arive
There bountie bereth the key of my substaunce, 40
And eke thou haste thy beste frende alive.

How many have I refused to sustene,
Sith I have The fostrid in thy plesaunce?
Wolt thou then make a statute on thy quene,
That I shall be aie at thine ordinaunce?
Thou born art in my reign of variaunce, 10
About the whele with othir must thou drive
My lore is bet, then wicke is thy grevaunce,
And eke thou hast thy beste frende alive.

The answer to Fortune.

Thy lore I dampne, it is adversitie,
My frend maist thou not revin blind goddesse, 50
That I thy frendis knowe I thanke it The,
Take 'hem again, let 'hem go lie a presse,
The nigardis in kepyng ther richesse
Pronostike is thou wolt ther toure assaile,
Wicke appetite cometh aie before sickenesse,
In generail this rule ne maie not faile.

Fortune.

Thou pinchist at my mutabilitie,
For I The lent a droppe of my richesse,
And now me likith to withdrawin me,
Why shouldist thou my roialtie oppresse? 60
The Se maie ebbe and flowin more and lesse,
The welkin hath might to shine, rain, and haile,
Right so must I kithin my brotilnesse,
In generail this rule ne maie not faile.

The

The Plaintiffe.

Lo, the' execution of the majestie,
That all purveighith of his rightwisenesse,
That same thyng fortune yclepin ye,
Ye blindè bestis full of leudenes!
The heven hath propertie of sikirness,
This worldè hath evir restlesse travaile,
The last daie is the ende of myne entresse,
In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

Th' envoye of Fortune.

Princes I praie you of your gentilesse,
Let not this man and me thus crie and plain,
And I shall quitin you this businesse,
And if ye liste releve hym of his pain,
Praie ye his best frende of his noblenesse
That to some bettir state he maie attain.

L'envoye.

TO brokin ben the statutes hic in heven,
That create were eternally t' endure,
Sith that I se the brightè Goddis seven
Mowe wepe and waile and passion endure,
As maie in yerth a mortall creature,
Alas fro whenis maie this thyng procede
Of whiche errour I die almoste for drede!

By words eterne whilom was it yshape,
That fro the fift circle in no manere
Ne might of teris nothing doune escape,
But now so wepith Venus in her sphere,
That with her teris she woll drench us here,
Alas Scogan! this is for thine offence,
Thou causist this deluge of pestilence.

Hast thou not saied in blasfeme of the goddis,
Through pride, or thorough thy gret rekilnes, Soche thinges as in the law of love forbode is,
That for thy ladie sawe not thy distresse
Therefore thou yave her up at Mighelmessie?
Alas Scogan! of oldè folke ne yong
Was never erst Scogan blamed for his tong.

Thou drewe in scorne Cupide eke to recorde 100
Of thilkè rebell worde that thou hast spoken,
For whiche he wol no lengir be thy Lorde,
And Scogan, though his bowe be not ybroken,
He woll not with his arowes be iwroken,
On thee ne me, ne none of our figure,
We shall of hym have neithir hurte ne cure.

Now certis frende, I drede of thine unhappe,
Lest for thy gilte the wreche of love procede
On all'hem that ben hore and round of shap,
That be so likely folkè for to spede, 110
Then we shall of our labour have our mede,
But well I wot thou wolt answere and saie,
Lo oldè Grisill list to renne and plaie.

Naie Scogan saie not so, for I me' excuse,
God helpe me so in no rime doutles
Ne thinke I never of slepe wake my muse,
That rustith in my sheth still and in pese,
While I was yong I put her forthe in prese,
But al shall passin that men prose or rime, 120
That every man his tourne as for his tyme.

Scogan, thou knelist at the strem'is hedde
Of grace, of honour, and of worthinesse,
In the ende of whiche I am dull as dedde,
Forgotten in solitarie wildirnesse,

Yet Scogan thinke on Tullius kindenesse,
Mynd thy frende there it maie fructifie,
Farwell, and loke thou ner est love desie.

Prudent or wyse, or discret, or bely,
The dome of folkes in soth thou may nat see,
What evir thou doist trustith wel the,
A wnkid tonge wol alway dene un...

For in thy porte, or in thine appaile
If thou be cladde and honestly be faine,
Anone the peple of malice wol not faile
Without advice or reson for to faine,
That thin array is made or wrought in vain,
Suffre hem speke, and trustith right wel this,
A wickid tonge wol alway deme amis.

Thou wil to kingis be equipolent,
With grete lordis evin and peregal;
And if thou be to torne and al to rent,
Than wol they say, and jangle ovr al,
Thou art a hogarde that never thrive shal,
Suffre hem speke, and trustith right wel this,
A wickid tonge wol alway deme amis.

If it befallin that thou take a wife,
They wollin falsly say in ther entent,
Thou art likely evir to lyve in strife,
Voide of al rest, without aledgement,
Wivis ben mailtris, this is ther judgement,
Suffrin al ther speche, and trust right wel this,
A wickid tonge wol alway deme ami.

If thou be faire and exce'llent of beaute,
Yet wol they say that thou art amorous,
If thou be foule and ugle on to se,
They wol asfirme that thou art vicious,
The peple of langage is so dispitous,
Suffre al ther speche, and trustith right wel this,
A wickid tonge wol alway deme amis.

If so be that of holic parfitenesse
Thou hast vowid to live in chastite,
Than wollin folke of thy persone expresse,
Thou art impotent t' engendre in thy degre,
And thus wher thou be chaste or deslavia,
Suffre hem speke, and trustith right wel this,
A wickid tonge wol alway deme amis.

If thou be fattè, othir corpulent,
Than woll thei say thou art a grete gloton,
A devourir, or ellis vinolent,
Yf thou be lene or megre of fashion,
Cal The a nygarde in ther opinion,
Suffre them speke, and trustith right wel this,
A wickid tonge wol alway deme amis.

If thou be riche, some wol yve The laude
And say it cometh of prudent govirnaunce,
And some wol sain that it comith of fraude,
Othir by sleight, or false chevisaunce,
To sain the worst folke have so gret plesaunce,
What? Suffre hem say, and trust right wel this,
A wickid tonge wol alway deme amis.

If thou be sadde or sobre of countinaunce,
Men wollin sayn thou thinkist some trefon,
And if that thou be gladde of daliaunce,
Men wollin deme it desolucion,
And callin faire speche adulation,
Yet let him speke, and trustith right wel this,
A wickid tonge wol alway deme amis.

Who that is holy by perfeccion,
Men of malice wol clip him ypocrite,
And who is mery of clene entencion
Men sain in riot he doth hym delite,
Some moutne in black, some lovin clothis white,
Suffre men speke, and trustith right wel this,
A wickid tonge wol alway deme amis.

Honest araie men deme it pompe and pride,
And who goeth pore, men cal him a wastir,

And who goeth stil men marke him on the syde,
Seine that he is a spie or agilir,
Who wastir not men sain he hath trefoure, Wherof conclude and trustith right wel this,
A wickid tonge wol alway deme amis.

Who spekith moche men clepith him prudent,
Who that debateth, men sain that he is hardie,
And who saith litil with grete sentement,
Some folke yet wollin wite him of folie,
Trowth is put downe, and up goth flattiry,
And who list plainly knowe the cause of this,
A wickid tonge wol alway deme amis.

For though a man ywere as pacient,
As was David throw his humilitè,
Or with Salomon in wisdome as prudent,
Or in knighthode egale with Josue,
Or manly proved, as Judas Machabe,
Yet for al that ytrustith right wel this
A wickid tonge wol alway deme amis.

And though a man yhad the grete prowesse
Of worthy Hector, Troy's champioun,
The love of Troylus, or the kindnesse,
Or of Caesar the famous high renoun,
With al Alexandir's dominacioun,
Yet for al that ytrustith right wel this,
A wickid tonge wol alway deme amis.

Or thoughe a man of highe or lowe degre
Of Tullius had the sugrid cloquence,
Or of Seneca the moralite,
Or of Caton the foresight and providence,
Conquest of Charles, Arrures magnificence,
Yet for al that ytrustith right wel this,
A wickid tonge wol alway deme amis.

Touchyng women the parfit innocence
Thoughe that they hade, of Hester the noblesse,
Or of Grisilde the humble pacience,
Or of Judith the previd stabilnesse,
Or Polixene's virginal clenness,
Yet dare I seine, and trustith right wel this,
Some wickid tonge wol deme of them amis.

The wisely trouthè of Penelope,
Though they it had in ther possession,
Helene's beaute, the kindnesse of Medee,
The love unfained of Martia Caton,
Or Alceste's most trewe affection,
Yet dare I sain and trustith right wel this,
A wickid tonge wol alway deme amis.

Than sevirith it that no man maye eschewe
The swerde of tonges, but it wil kerve and bite,
Ful harde it is a man for to remewe,
Out of ther daungir him for to acquite,
Wo to the tongis that hem selfe delite
To hinder or sleaunders, and set their study in this,
And ther plesaunce to deme alwaye amis.

Moste noble princis, cherishers of vertue,
Remembrith you of high discrecion,
The first vertue moste plesing to Jesu,
(By the writing and sentence of Caton)
Is a gode tonge in his opinion,
Chastice the reverse of wisdome do this Voideth your heringe from al that deme amis.

A Balade in the praise and commendation of Maister Geffray Chaucer, for his golden eloquence.

MAistir Geffray Chaucer that now lieth in grave,
The noble Rhetoricien, and Poet of Grete
Bretaine,

Worthy was the laurie of Poetry to have,

A Balade made by Chaucer, teching what is gentilnes, or who is worthy to be caled gentil.

THE firste stocke fathir of gentilnes,
What man desirith gentill for to be,
Must folowe his trace, and all his wittis dres
Vertue to love, and viciis for to fle,
For unto vertue longith dignite,
And not the revers fastly dare I deme,
Al were he mitir, crowne or diademe.

This firste stocke was full of rightwisnes,
Trewe of his worde, sobir, pitous, and fre, 150
Clene of his goste, and lovid besinesse,
Against the vice of slouth, in honeste,
And but his eyre love vertue as did he;
He is not gentyl though he richè seme,
All were he mitir, crowne or diademe.

Vicè may wel be eyre to olde richesse,
But ther may no man, as men may well se,
By que the his eire his vertuous noblesse,
That is appropriated unto no degre,
But to the first fathir in majeste, 160
That makith his eyre him that can him queme,
Al were he mitir, crowne or diademe.

A Balade whiche Chaucer made against women unconstaunt.

MAdame, ye have for your newfanglenesse
Many a servaunt put out of your grace
I take my leve of your unstedfastnesse,
For well I wote, while ye to live have space.

Ye can not love full halfe yere in a place,
To new thingis, your luste is evere kene,
In stede of blew, thus may ye were al grene.

Ryght as a mirour that nothing may enpresse,
But lightli as it cometh, so mote it passe,
So fareth your love, your workis bereth witnes, 180
Ther is no faithè may youre herte embrace,
But as a weſ. cock, that turneth his face
With every winde, ye fare, and that is sene,
In sted of blew thus may ye were al grene.

Ye might be shrinid for your brotilnesse
Bettir than Dalila, Cresseide, or Candace,
For ever in chaunging stondeth your sikirnesse,
That tatche may no wight from your hert arace,
If ye lose one, ye can wel tweine purchace,
Allight for somar, ye wot wel what I mene, 190
In stede of blew thus may ye were al grene.

Explicit.

Here foloweth a Balade whiche Chaucer made in the praise, or rather dispreise, of Women for ther doublenes.

THis world is full of variaunce
In everye thinge who takith hede,
That faithè and truste, and all constaunce
Exilid ben, this is no drede,
And save only in womanhed,
I can yse no sikirnes,
But for al that yet, as I rede,
Beware alwaye of doublenes.

Al so that the freshe somir floures,
The white and rede, the blew and grene,
Ben sodenly with wintir shours 200
Made fente and fade, withoutin wene,
That trust is none, as ye may sene,
In no thing, nor no stedfastenes,
Except in women, thus I mene,
Yet aye beware of doublenes.

The crokid Mone, this is no tale,
Some while ishene, and bright of hewe,
And aftir that, ful derke and pale,
And every monith, chaungith newe,
That who the veray sothe knew 210
Al thinge is bilt on brotlenes,
Save that women alwaye be trewe,
Yet aye beware of doublenes.

The

The lusty freshe sommirs daye,
And Phœbus, with his bemis clere,
Towardis night they drawe awaye,
And non lengir list to appere,
That in this presente life now here
Nothinge abieth in his fairenes,
Save women aye be found intere,
And devoide of alle doublenes.

220

The Se eke with his sternè waves,
Eche daye yflowith new againe,
And by the concours of his lawes
The ebbe yflowith in certeine,
Aftir grete drought there cometh a raine,
That farewell here al stabilnes,
Save that women be whole and pleine,
Yet aye beware of doublenes.

Fortune's whele goith round aboute
A thousand timis daye and nighte,
Whose cours standith evir in doute
For to transmew, she is so lighte,
For whiche advertith in your sight
The' untrust of worldely sikilnes
Save women, whiche of kindly right
Ne hath no teche of doublenes.

230

What man ymay the wind restraine,
Or holdin a snake by the taile,
Who may a slippir elle constreine
That it will voide, withoutin faile,
Or who can drivin so a naile
To make suere newfongilnes,
Save women that can gie ther faile
To row ther bote with doublenes.

240

At every haven they can arive
Wher as they wote, is gode passage,
Of innocence they can not strive
With wawis, nor no rockis rage,
So happy is ther lodemanage,
With nedle' and stone ther cours to dresse,
That Salomon was not so sage
To finde in them no doublenes.

250

Therefore who so doth them accuse
Of any double entencion,
To speke rowne, othir to muse,
To pinch at ther condicion,
All is but false collusion,
I dare right wel the sothe expresse,
They have no bettir protection
But shroud them undir doublenes.

260

So wel fortunid is ther chaunce,
The dice to turnin uppe so doune,
With sife and sincke they can avaunce,
And than, by revolucioun,
They set a fel conclusioun
Of lombis, as in sothefastnes,
Though clerkis makin mencionioun
Ther kinde is fret with doublenes.

Sampson yhad experience
That women were ful trew ifound,
Whan Dalila, of innocence
With slieris gan his here to round,
To speke also of Rosamonde,
And Cleopatri's feithfulnes,
The stories plainly wil confounde
Men that apeche ther doublenes.

270

Single thinge ne is not ypraised,
Nor of olde is of no renoun,

In balaunce whan they be ypeised,
For lacke of waighte they be bore doune,
And for this cause of juste resoun
These women al of rightwisenes
Of chois and fre electioun
Most love eschaunge and doublenes.

280

L'envoye.

O Ye women whiche ben enclined
By influence of your nature
To ben as pure as golde yfined,
And in your trowth for to endure,
Armith your selfe in strong armure,
Lest men assaile your sikirnes,
Set on your brest, your self to assure,
A mightie shelde of doublenes.

This Worke folowinge was compiled by
Chaucer, and is caled the Craft of Lovers.

MOral is a symylytude, who list ther balades fewe,
The craft of lovirs curious arguments,
For som bin false and som ben foundin trewe,
And som bin double of entendements,
Thus lovirs with ther moral documents,
And eloquent langage can examplifye
The craft of love what it doth signifie.

300

Who list unto this Balades have inspeccion, Thinke that lov'is lordshipis excellent
Is remedy for disese and correccion
To woful herte and body impotent,
Suppose the maker that he be negligente
In his compilinge, holde him excusable,
Because his spi'rites be sory' and lamentable.

Soverain lady, surmounting your nobles,
O' intenuate Jenipre' and daisi delicious,
My trust, mine helth, my cordial foundresse,
O medi'cine sanatife to sores lango'rous,
Comfortable cature of lovirs amo'rous,
O' excellent herbir of loveli countinaunce,
Registir my love in your remembraunce.

310

Certis, sir, your ypeintid eloquence,
So gay, so freshe, and eke so taltatife,
It doth transcende the wit of dame Prudence,
For to declare your thought, or to discrive
So gloriously glad langage ye contrive,
Of your conseite, your thought and your entente
I wil be ware for drede or I be shent.

320

O rubi'cunde Rose, and white as the lyly,
Clarified Christal of worldly portraiture,
O Courfin figure, resplendent with glory,

Your fairnes exceedeth the craft of nature,
Most womanli your lovely countinaunce,
Registir my love in your remembraunce.

What availeth, sir, your proclamacion
Of curious talking, not touching sadnes,
It is but winde, flatering and adulacion,
Imesurable thought of worldly wildnes,
Whiche is chief cause of gostly feblenes,

330

Your

Your wil, your thought, your double entendement
I wil beware of drede; or I be shent.

My witte, my thought, and myne entencion;
Is for to plesse you my lady soveraine,
And for your love throw many a region
I would be' exiled, so ye wold not disdein 340
To have pity on me, when I compleine,
In wele and wo to suffre perturbatione,
So that ye wol have me in remembraunce.

What is your wil plainly ye doe expresse,
That maketh this curious supplicacion,
Sey on fir on hertely tendirnesse,
Beth wel advised of veine delectacion,
At beginning think on the terminacion,
Passe not your boundes, be not to negligente,
And er beware for dred or ye be shente. 350

Your behaving, beaute, and countinaunce,
Maketh me encline to do you reverence,
Your lovely loking, glorious govinaunce,
Oercometh my spirites, my wit, and prudence,
Some drop of grace, of your magnificence
Unto your servaunt ye shewe attendaunce
And register my love in your remembraunce.

O comberous thought of manne's fragilite,
O fervente wil of lustis furious,
O cruel corage causinge adversite, 360
Of women corrupcion, and contrariouse,
Remembir man that chaunge is perilous,
To breke the' virginite of virgines innocente,
Wherfore beware mankinde or thou be shent.

My peine is prevy' impossible to' deserne,
My lamentabel thoughtes by casting mourninge,
O general Juge Jesu sitting superne,
Graciously converte the love of my swete thing,
O' amiable lady gracious and benigne,
I put me wholly in your govinaunce, 370
Exile me not out of your remembraunce.

Me semeth by langage ye be some potestate,
Or els som curious glosir discevable,
What is your name mekely I make regrate,
Or of what science or craft commendable,
I' am a lady' excellent, and honorable,
He must be gay that should be to' min entente,
Wherfore I wil be ware or I be shent.

Lorde God, this is a sharpe examinacion
Of her that is most in my memorie, 380
Unto you lady' I make certification,
My name' is trew love of carnal desidery,
Of manne's copulacion the verye exemplary,
Which am one of your servauntes of plesaunce,
I must be chese callid to remembraunce.

I have sought true love of yeres gret proces,
Yet fond I never love but for a seson,
Some men be diverse, know no gentilnes,
And some lackin both wisdom and reson, 390
In som men is trust in som men is trefon,
Wherfore I wil conclude by avysemente,
And er beware for drede that I be shente.

The retour Tullius gay of eloquence,
And Ovide that sheweth craft of love expres,
With habundaunce of Salomon's prudence,
And pulcritude of Absalon's fairenesse,
And I wer possess'd with Job's grette richesse,
Manly' as Sampson my persone to avaunce,
Yet shuld I submit me' in your remembraunce.

Now sir yf that it plesse your nobilnesse 400
To gyve advertence to my question,
What thinge is the plesure of swetnesse,
And most bittir in final succession?
Or what thing gevith man occasion,
In tendir age to be concupiscent?
Resolve this question or drede sir ye' be shent.

My soveraigne lady', Ovide in his writinge
Saith desire of worldly concupiscence
As for a time is swete in his worching,
And in his ende he causith grette offence, 410
Notwithstandinge my lady dame Prudence,
Grene flowring age and manly countinaunce
Causith ladies to have' it in remembraunce.

Your godely answir, so notable' in substaunce,
Wold cause the hert of womanhede converte,
Unto delyte of natural plesaunce,
But of one thing I wold faine be experte,
Why menne's langage wol procure and transverte
The wil of women and virgines innocente, 420
Wherfore I am aferd or I be shente.

Let never the love of true love be losed,
My soveraigne lady, in no manir wise,
In your confidence my wordes I have closed,
My' amyable love to you I doe promise,
So that ye knit the knot of exercyse,
Both locke and key ye have in govinaunce,
Emprint my love in your remembraunce.

Of very trust and I were certified,
The plain entencion of your herte's cordial, 430
Me semeth in blisse than were I glorified,
Unto your plesure I would be' at your call,
But er I fere of chauncis casual,
Of fraude, disceipte, and langage insolente,
Then were I sure maidinshed should be shent.

Ther was ner tresour' of terrestiall richesse,
Nor precious stones rekened innumerabell,
To be' of comparison to your high godenes,
Above al creatures to' me most amiable,
Trust not the contrary' I was ner disceivabell, 440
Kepe wel true love, forge no dissemblaunce,
And graciously take me to' your remembraunce.

Me semeth by seiture of manly properte
Ye shuld be trusty' and trewe of comprimis,
I finde in you no false duplicite,
Wherfore, true love, ye have my hert I wis,
And ermore shal endure, so have I blis,
The fede'rasy made with gode avisement,
God graunt grace that nothir of us be shent.

Whan Phœbus freshe was in his chare splendente 450
In the moneth of Maye erly in a morninge,
I herd two lovirs prosir this argu'mente,
In the yere of our Lorde a M. by rekening,
CCCXL. and VII. yere folowing.
O potent princesse, conserve true lovers al,
Graunt them thy region and blisse celestial.
Explicit the craft of lovers.

A Balade.

O F ther nature they gretly them delite,
With holy face yfeinid for the nones,
In saintwarie ther frendis to visite,

More for reliquis than for faintis bones, 460
 Though they be clofid undir precious stones
 To gete them pardon, lyke ther olde usages,
 To kisse no shrines, but lusty quike images.

Whan maidens ar wedded and household have take,
 Al ther humility' is exiled awaye,
 And the' cruil hertes begynnith to awake,
 They do' al the besy cure they can or maye
 To vex ther householdes-maistirs soth to saye,
 Wherfore ye yong men I rede you forthy
 Beware alwaye, the blinde eteth many flye. 470

Of this matir I dare make no relation,
 In defaute of slepe my spirites wex fainte,
 In my studie I' have had long habitacion,
 My body' and goss are grevously attaint,
 And therfore I make no lengir complaint,
 But whethir that the blind ete flesch or fisch,
 I pray God kepe the fly out of my dishe.

Now' I make an ende, and laie me doune to rest,
 For I knowe by experience veramente,
 If maidinis and wivis knewe and wist 480
 Who made the mattir, he should sone be shent,
 Wherfore I praie that God omnipotent
 Hym save and kepin bothe night and daie;
 Writin in the lustie seson of Maie.

Explicit.

The X. Commaundementes of Love.

Certis ferre extendith yet my reson
 This matir as it should be to diserive,
 But I truste your grace will in this seson, Considir howe with conyng that I strive,
 For in his favour coud I ner arrive,
 Elo'quence this Balade hath in grete dispite, 490
 The makir lackith manir to endite.

Of Love's commaundementes x. is the number,
 As aftirward shall rudely be reherfed,
 And lovirs in no wise departe asunder,
 Where as thei be observid and redressed,
 Daungir and unkindnes yben oppressed,
 And he that is commaundid this to make
 Is your owne all othir for to forsake.

Faithc.

Faithc is the first and principally to tell,
 And verie love requirith soche credence, 500
 That eche beleve othir true as the Gospel,
 Without adulacion or flatteryng audience,
 In true menyng and trustie confidence.
 Paint not your conyng with colour ne fable,
 For then your love must nedis be unstable.

Entencion.

In the seconde to trete of Entencion,
 Your lovir to plesse doe your busie cure,
 For as myn auctor Romance maketh mencion,
 Without entent your love maie not endure,
 As women will thereof I am right sure 510
 Endeavour with ther herte, will, and thought
 To plesse hym onely that ther love hath sought.

Discrecion.

In your delyng evir ybe discrete,
 Set not your love there as it shall be losed,
 Advertise in your minde whether he be mete,
 That unto hym your herte maie be disclosed,
 And astir as you finde hym then disposed Pointe by discrecion your hour, time, and place, Conveniently metyng with armes to' embrace.

Pacience.

Of these commaundementes, the iiii. is pacience, 520
 Though by' irous corage your lovir be meved,
 With soft wordis and humble obedience
 His wrathe maie sone be swagid and releved;
 And thus his love obtainid and acheved
 Will in you rote, with gretir diligence,
 Bicause of your meke womanly pacience.

Secretnesse.

Secretlie behave you in your werkis,
 In shewing countenance or mevyng your eye,
 Though soche behavior to some folk be derke,
 He that hath lovid will it sone aspie, 530
 Thus you your self your counsaill maie descrie,
 Make privy to your delyng few' as ye maie,
 For iii. may kepe a counsel if twain be awaie.

Prudence.

Let prudence governe aye your bridil reine,
 Set not your love in so fervent a wise
 But that in godely hast ye may refreine,
 If that your lovirs list you to dispise,
 Romaunce min auctor wold you this advise,
 Ty slacke your love, for if ye doe not so,
 That wanton list will tourne you into wo. 540

Perseveraunce.

Stablishe your love in so stedfast a wise,
 If that ye thinke your lovir will be true,
 As entirely, as ere you can devise,
 Love hym onely, and refuse alle newe,
 Then shall not your worship ychaunge his hew,
 For certis, maistris, then is he to blame,
 But if that he will quite you with the same.

Pitie.

Be piteous to' hym, as womanhod requireth,
 That for your love endurith painis smerte,
 Whom so sorely your plesant loke enfireth, 550
 That printid is your beautie in his herte,
 And woundid lyith without knife or darte.
 There let your pitie spred without restrainte,
 For lacke of it let not your servaunt feint.

Mesure.

Take mesure in your talkyng be n'or outrage,
 For this reherfith Romance de la Rose,
 A man endued with plentous langage
 Oft tymis is denyid his purpose,
 Take mesure in langage, wisedome ingrose,
 For mesure, as rightwel proved is by reson, 560
 Thyngis unsefo'nable fettith in seson.

Mercie.

Soche daungir exile hym all uttirly,
 Ovir all mercie to' occupie his place,

To

To piteous complaintis your eres applie,
And receve your true servaunte into grace,
To him that boundin is in lov's lace
Shewe favour, ladie, and be not merciles,
Left ye be called a common murdires.

L'envoye.

When ye unto this balade have inspeccion,
In my makyng holde me excusable, 570
It is submittid unto your correccion,
Considir that my connyng is disable,
To write to you the figure uniable,
All devoide of connyng and experience,
Maner of indityng, refon, and eloquence.

Trust it well the makir is alle your owne,
You to obeie while his life maie endure,
To doe you service as a man unknowne,
No guerdone desiryng of yerthly trefure,
But if it might accorde with your plesure 580
For his true service hym for to avaunce,
And call hym into your remembraunce.

Explicit the X. Commaundementes of Love.

The ix. Ladies worthie.

Quene Sinope.

Profulgent in preciousnes O Sinope the quene,
Of all feminine berynge the sceptir and regalie,
Subduyng the large countrie of Armenie as it was sene,
For maugre ther mightis thou ybrought them for to applie,
Thin honor to encrefin, and thy power to magnific, O most renoumid Hercules with al thy pompous boste,
This princes toke the prisonir and put to fighte thine host.

Ladie Hippolyte.

Yet Hercules waxed red for shame, when I spake of Hippolyt 590
Chief patrones and captain of the peple of Sinope, Which with her amorous chere and with coragious might
She smote The unto the ground for all thy crueltie,
Wherefore the dukeship of Diamedes and dignitie
Unto her gretè laudè and glorie perpetuall Attributid by all is with triumphè Laureall.

Ladie Deiphile.

The most noble triumphè of this Ladie Deiphile
In releve and succor of the gret duke of Athenis,
She chastisid and brought into perpetual exile
The aureat citizeinis of the mightie Thebis, 600
The strongè brasin pilliris there haddin no reles,
But she with her sistir Argife them did dounè cast,
And with furious fire the cite ybrent at last.

Ladie Teuca.

O pulchrior sole in beaultie and full ylucid
Of all feminine ceturis the moste formous flour,
In Italy reigning with gret chevalry right fervent,
Chastisid the Romainis as maistris and conquèrour,
O lady Teuca mochil was thy glorie and honour,

Yet mochil more was to commende thy gretè benignite,
In thy perfite living and virginall chastitie.

Quene Penthesilea.

O ye Trojanis for this noble quene Penthesile, 610
Sorowe her mortalitie with dolorous compassion,
Her lovè was towardis you so pregnante and fertile,
Which that againist the proude Grekis made de-fension,
With her victorious hand was al her affection
To lashe the Grekis to ground, and with ther hert's joie
To revengin the coward deth of noble Hector of Troie.

Quene Thamyris.

O thou most rigorous quene Thamyris invincible,
Upon the strong and hideous peple of citres reining,
Whiche by thy gretè powir and by wittis sensible
Ytokist in bataille captive Cyrus the gretè King, 620
Of Persia and of Media, his hed in blode lying, Thou baddist him to drinkin of the blode he had thirstid,
And xxii. M. of his hoste there were distrestid.

Ladie Lampedo.

The famous loude trumpè ymade of gold yforgid so bright,
Hath blowin so up the fame and glory environ
Of this lady Lampedo with her sistir Masist,
That al the land of Feminie, Europe and Epheson,
Be yeldin and applied lowly to her subjeccion,
Many an high toure she raisid, and ybilt touris long,
Perpetuely to lastin with hugè wallis strong. 630

Quene Semiramis.

Lo here Semiramis the quene of gretè Babilon,
The moste gencrous gem and the floure of lovily favor,
Whose excellent powir from Mede unto Septentrion Florished in her regally as a mightie conqueror,
Subdued al Barbary and Zorast the king of honor,
She slue lithiop and conquirid Armenie and Inde,
In which non entrid but Alexander and she as I finde.

Ladie Menalippe.

Also the ladie Menalippe thy sistir so dere,
Whose martial powir there was no man that coud withstand,
For thorough the wide worldè there was not yfound her pere, 640
The famous Duke of Athenis Theseus she had in hande,
And she sorely chastisid him, and conquirid his lande,
The proude Grekis mightilie also she did assaile,
And overcame and vanquishid them bravely in bataile.

Explicit the Balade of the ix. Worthies of Ladies.

A Lone walkyng }
In thought plainyng } All desolare.
And sore sighyng }

Me remembryng
Of my livyng
My death wishyng } Bothe erly and late. 650

Infortunate
Is so my fate
That wote ye what } Out of mesure.

My life I hate
Thus desperate
In soche pore estate } Doe I endure.

Of othir cure
Am I not sure
Thus to endure } Is hard certain.

Suche is my ure
I you ensure
What creature } Maie have more pain?

My truthe so plain
Is take in vain
And grete disdaine } In remembraunce.

Yet I full faine
Would me complaine
Me to abstaine } From this penaunce.

But in substance
None allegeaunce
Of my grevaunce } Can I not finde. 670

Right so my chaunce
With displeaunce
Doeth me avaunce } And thus an ende.

A Ballade.

IN Feverere when that it was full colde, Froste, Snowe, Haile, Raine, hath dominacion,
With chaungable elementes, and windes manifolde,
Whiche hath of ground, floure, herbe jurisdiction,
For to dispose aftir their correccion,
And yet Aprilis with his plefant shoures 680
Dissolveth the snow, and bringith forthe his floures.

Of whose invencion lovirs maie be glade,
For thei bring in the Kalendis of Maie,
And thei with countenaunce demure, meke and sad,
Owe to worship the lustie floures alwaie,
And in speciall one called Se of the daie;
The Daisie a flowir white and rede,
And in Frenche callid La bel Margarete.

O commendable floure and moste in minde,
O floure and gracious of excellence, 690
O amiable Marga'rite, of natife kind,
To whom I must resort with diligence,
With hert, wil, thought, most lowly obedience
I to be your servaunt, ye my regent,
For life ne deth, nevir for to repent.

Of this processe now forth will I procede,
Whiche happith unto me with grete disdaine,
As for the time thereof I take left hede,
For unto me was brought the sore paine,
Therefore my cause was the more to complaine, 700
Yet unto me my grevaunce was the lesse,
That I was so nigh my ladie and maistresse.

There where she was present in this same place,
I having in herte grete adversite,
Except onely the fortune and gode grace
Of her, whose I am the whiche releved me,
And my grete dures unlasid hath she,
And brought me out of the ferfull grevaunce,
If it were her else it were to me plefaunce.

As for the wo whiche that I did endure 710
It was to me a verie plefant pain,
Seyng it was for that faire creature,
Whiche is my Ladie and my soverain,
In whose presence I would be passyng fain;
So that I wist it werin her plesure,
For she is from all distaunce my protectour.

Though unto me dredfull ywere the chaunce,
No maner of gentilnes oweth me to blame,
For I had levir suffre of deth the penaunce,
Than she should for me have dishonor or shame, 720
Or in any wise losin her gode name.
So wisely God for his endlesse mercie
Graunt every lovir joy of his lady.

A Ballade.

O Mercifull, and o merciabile,
Kyng of Kyngis, and fathir of pite,
Whose might and mercie is incomperable,
O Prince eterne, O mightie Lorde, saie we,
To whom mercie is given of propirtie,
On thy servaunt, that lieth in prison bounde;
Have thou mercie, or that his herte wounde. 730

And that thou wilt graunt to him thy prisoner,
Fre libertie, and lose hym out of pain,
All his desires, and all his hevie chere
To all gladnesse thei were restored again,
Thy high vengeance why should thou not refrain,
And shewe mercie, sith he is penitent?
Now helpe hym, Lorde, and let him not be shent.

But sith it is so, there is a trespas done,
Unto mercie let yelde the trespassour, 640
It is her office to redresse it sone,
For trespassse to mercie is a mirrour,
And like as the swete hath the price by soure,
So by trespassse mercie hath all her might,
Without trespassse mercie hath lacke of light.

What should phisike doe but if sikenes were?
What nedith salve, but if there were a sore?
What nedith drink, wher thirst hath no power,
What should mercie doe, but trespas go' afore?
But trespas mercie woll be litil store, 750
Without trespas ner execusion
Maie mercie have, ne chief perfeccion.

The cause at this tyme of my writyng,
And touchyng mercie, to whom I make mone,
Is for fereleft my soveraigne and swetyng,
I menin her, that lovelyr is none,
With me is displefed for causis more than one,
What causis thei be that knoweth God and she,
But so do n'ot I alas it forthinketh me!

What seshe in me, what defeaute or offence?
What have I doe that she on me disdaine? 760
How might I doe come into her presence,
To

To tell my complaint whereof I were faine?
I drede to loke, to speke or to complaine,
To her that hath my herte every dele,
So help me God I would al thing wer wele.

For in this case came I nevir or now,
In lov'is daunce so ferre in the trace,
For with myne ese escapin I ne mow
Out of this daungir, except her gode grace,
For though my countenance be mery in her face,
As semith to her by worde or by chere,
Yet her gode grace settith myne herte nere.

And if my soveraine have any marvaile
Why I to her now and afore ywrote,
She maie well thinke it is no grete travaile
To him that is in love brought so hote,
It is a simple tre, that fallerh with one stroke,
That mene I, though that my soveraine toforn
Me hath denied, yet grace may come to morn.

Maistris, for the gode will I have you ought,
And evir shall as long as life durith,
Pitie your servant, kepe him in your thought,
Give him som comfort or medi'cin, and curith
His ague, that encrefith, that renuith:
So grevous ben his pames and sighis fore,
That without mercy his dais be forlore.

Go litil bill, go forth and hic The fast,
Recommende me, and excuse me as you can,
For very feble am I at the last, 790
My pen is worn, my hew is pale and wan,
My eyen ben sonke, disfigured like no man,
Till deth his dart, that causith for to smert,
My corps have consumed them farwel swet hert.

Doughtre of Phœbus in vertuous apparence,
My love elect in my remembraunce,
My carefull herte distreined cause of absence,
Till ye my Empresse me relese my grevaunce,
Upon you 'is set my life, myne attendaunce,
Is sette without recure I wis untill 800
Ye grauntin my true herte to have his will.

Thus my dere swetyng in a traunce I lye,
And shal, til drops of pitie from you spring,
I mene your mercie, that lieth my herte nye,
That me maie rejoyce, and cause for to syng,
These termes of love, lo I have won the ring,
My godely maistris: thus of his gode grace
God graunt her blisse in heaven to have a place.

he slepyng by a fountain.

Pallas loquitur ad Parin.

Sonne of Priam gentill Paris of Troie,
Wake of thy slepe, beholde us Goddesse thre,
We havin brought to The encrese of joye, 810
To thy discrecion reportyng our beautie,
Take here this Appill, and well advise The;
Whiche of us is the fairist in thy sight,
And give thou it, we praie The, gentil knight?

Pallas loquitur primo.

If so be thou give it to me, Parise,

This shal I give unto thy worthines,
Honour, and conquest, nobley, lose and prise,
Victorie, courage, force and hardines,
Gode avinture, and famous manlines, 820
For that appil all this give I to The,
Confidir this, Parise, and give it me.

Venus loquitur ad Parin.

Naie give it me, and this I shall you give,
A glad aspekte with favour and fairnes,
And love of ladies also while ye live,
Famous stature and princely semelines,
According to your natise gentilnes,
Undirstand this gift well, I you advise,
And give it unto me hardly, Parise.

Minerva loquitur ad Parin.

Ye ye Parise takith hede unto me,
Thou art a prince yborne by thy discente, 830
And for to rule thy royall dignite
I shall The givin first intendemente,
Discrecion, prudence in right judgements,
Whiche in a prince is thing moll covenable,
Give it to me, I am to have it able.

A balade plesaunte.

I Have a Ladie where so that she be,
That seldome is she soveraine of my thought,
On whose beautie when I beholde and se,
Remembryng me how well she is ywrought,
I thanke fortune that to her grace me brought,
So faire is she, but nothyng angelike,
Her beautie is unto none othir like.

For hard'ly and she were made of brasle
Her face and all, she hath enough fairnesse,
Her eyen ben holow, and grene as any grassle,
And ravenish yelow is her countnesse,
Thereto she hath of every comelinetle
Soche quantitie givin her by nature,
That with the lest she is of her stature.

And as a bo't her browis ben ibent, 840
And betill browed she is also with all,
And of her witte as simple and innocent
As is a childe that can no gode at ail,
She is not thicke, her stature is but small,
Her fingirs ben litil, and nothyng long,
Her skin is smothe as any Ox's tong.

Thereto she is so wise in daliaunce,
And beset her wordis so womanly,
That her to here it doeth me displeaunce,
For that she saieth, is saied so comyngly, 850
That when there be no mo then she and I,
I had levir she were of talkyng skill,
Then that she should so godehe speche spill.

And slothe none shall ye have in her entresse,
So diligent is she, and vertulese,
And so busie aie all gode to undresse,
That as a she Ape she is harmelesse,
And as an Harnet meke and pitelesse,
With that she is so wise and circumspecte,
That prudence none her folie can infecte.

Is it not joye that soche one of her age
 Within the boundes of so grete tendirnesse
 Should in her werke be so sadde and so sage,
 That of the weddyng sawe all the noblesse
 Of queene Jane, and ywas tho as I gesse
 But of the age of yeris ten and five!
 I trowe there are not many soche alive.

For as Jesu my sinfull soule save
 There n'is creature in all this worlde livyng,
 Like unto her that I would gladly have, 840
 So plesith mine hert that godely swete thyng,
 Whose soule in haste unto his blis ybryng
 That first her formid to be a creature,
 For were she well, of me I did no cure.

Explicit the discrivyng of a faire Ladie.

An other Balade.

O Mossie Quince yhangyng by your stalke,
 The whiche no man dare plucke awaie nor take,
 Of all the folke that passe forthe by or walke,
 Your flouris freshe be fallen awaie and shake,
 I am right sorie, maistresse, for your sake,
 Ye seme a thyng that all men have forgotten, 890
 Ye be so ripe ye waxin almoste roten.

Your nglie chere deinous and froward,
 Your grene eyin frownyng and nothing glad,
 Your chekes enbolned like a melowe Costard,
 Colour of Orange your brestes Satournad,
 Gilt on wara'ntile the colour wil not fade,
 Bawsin buttockid, belied like a tonne,
 Men crie S. Barba'ry at the' losyng of your gonne.

Lovely leude maistris, take consideracion,
 I 'am so sorowfull there as ye be' absent, 900
 Floure of the barkfate foulest of al the nacion,
 To love you but a little' is myne entent,
 The swert hath swent you the smoke hath you shent,
 I trow ye' have ben laid on some kill to drie,
 You do such worship there as ye be present,
 Of al women I love you best a M. timis fie.

A balade warnyng men to beware of deceitfull women.

LOke well aboute ye that loviris be,
 Let not your lustis lede you to dorage,
 Be not enamoured on all thynges ye se,
 Sampson the forte, and Salomon the sage 910
 Decevid were for all ther grete courage,
 Men demin it right that thei se with eye,
 Beware therefore, the blind eteth many' a fie.

I mene of women, for all ther cheres queint
 Trust them not to moch ther truthe is but trefon,
 The fairist outward wel can thei ypaint,
 Ther stedfastnesse endurith but a seson,
 For thei faine frendlines and worchin trefon,
 And for thei are chaungable natu'rally,
 Beware therefore, the blind eteth many' a fie. 920

What wight on lyve ytrustith on ther cheres

Shall have at last his guerdon and his mede,
 Thei can shave nerir than rasours or sheres,
Al is not gold that shinith, men take hede
 Their galle is hid undir a sugrid wede,
 It is but queint ther fantasie to' aspie,
 Beware therefore, the blind eteth many' a fie.

Though all the worldè doe his busie cure
 To make women standin in stablenesse,
 It would not be, it is against nature, 930
 The worlde is doe, when thei lacke doublenes,
 For thei laugh and love not, this is expresse,
 To trust on them it is but fantasie,
 Beware therefore, the blind eteth many' a fie.

Women of kindè hath condicions thre,
 The first is that thei be full of disseite,
 To spinnin also is ther propertie,
 And women have a wondirfull conseite,
 For thei can wepe oft, and all is a fleite, 940
 And when thei list the tere is in the eye,
 Beware therefore, the blind eteth many' a fie.

In soth to saie, though all the yerth so wanne
 Wer parchement smoth, white and scribabbell,
 And the gret Se, that called is the' Ocean,
 Were tournid into ynke blackir then Sabell,
 Eche sticke a pen, eche man a scrivener abel,
 Not coud thei writin woman's trechirie,
 Beware therefore, the blind eteth many' a fie.

Explicit.

These Verses next folowing were compiled by Geffray Chaucer, and in the writen copies folowe at the ende of the complainte of pite.

THE longè nyghtis when every creature
 Shuld have ther rest in somewhat as by kind.
 Or ellis ne may ther life not longe endure,
 It fallith mooste into my woful minde,
 How I so farre have brought my self behind,
 That fawe the deth ther may nothing me lisse,
 So dispairid I am from alle blisse.

This same thought me lastith til the morow,
 And from the morowe forth til it be eve,
 There nedith me no care for to borow,
 For both I have gode laisir and gode leve, 960
 There is no wight that will my wo byreve,
 To wepe enough and wailin all my fyll,
 The fore sparke of peine now doth me spil.

This love that hath me set in soche a place
 That my desire he wil never fulfyl,
 For neithir Pite, Mercy, neithir Grace
 Can I not find, and yet my wofull herte
 For to be dede I can it not arace,
 The more I love the more she doth me smerte,
 Thorowe whiche I se withoute remedie
 That from the deth I may no wife asterte.

Now sothly what she hight I wol reherse, 970
 Her name is Bountie, set in womanhed,
 Sadnes in youth, and Beantie pridlese,
 And Pleaunce undir Govinaunce and drede,
 And her surname is eke faire Ruthlesse,
 The wise knit unto gode avinture,
 That for I love her, she sletch me gillese,
 Her love I best, and shall while I may dure:

Bete

Bett than my selfe a hundrid thousand dele,
Than al this world's richis or crétur,
Now hath not lovè me bestowid wel,
To lovin there I nevir shal have parte?
Alas right thus is turnid me the whele!
Thus am I flaine with lov's furious darte:
I can but love her best my swetè fo,
Love hath me taught nò morè of his arte,
But servin alwaye, and stint for nò wo.

Within my trewè carefull herte ther is So mochil wo, and eke so litil blisse,
That wo is me that evir I was bore!
For al that thinge which I desire I misse,
And al that evir I wolde not iwis
That finde I redy to me evirmore,
And of all this I n'ot to whom me plaine,
For she that might me out of this ybring
Ne rechith nought whethir I wepe or sing,
So litil routh hath she upon my paine!

Alas! whan slepinge tyme is then I wake!
Whan I shuld daunce, for fere lo than I quake!
This hevvy life I lede lo! for your sake!
Though ye therof in no wise hedè take,
Myn hert's lady, and whole my live's quene,
For truly durst I say as that I fele,
My semeth that your swetè herte of stele
Is whettid now against me to kene.

My derè herte, and best beloved fo,
Why lykith you to do me al this wo?
What have I don that grevith you, or faide?
But for I serve and love you and no mo,
And whilest I live I wil evir do so:
And therefore swete, ne bethe not il apaide,
For so gode and so faire as that ye be,
It wer a right gret wondir but ye had
Of al servauntis both of gode and badde,
And best worthy of al them I am he.

But nevir the lesse, my righte lady swete,
Though that I be unkonninge and unmete
To serve as I coulde best aye your highnes,
Yet is ther none fainir, that would I hete,
Than I to do you ese or ellis bete,
What so I wist that were to your highnes,
And had I might as gode as I have wil,
Than shuld ye fele wher it were so or none,
For in this world livinge than is ther none,
That fainir wolde your hert's wil fulfil.

For both I love and eke drede you so sore,
And aldgates more and have don you ful yore,
That bettir loved is non ne nevir shal,
And yet I would besече you of no more,
But lovith wel, and be not wroth therfore,
And let me serve you forth, lo this is al!
For I am nought so hardy, ne so wode,
For to desire that ye should lovin me,
For wel I wotte alas that may not be!
I am so litil worthy' and ye so gode,
For ye be one the worthyist on live,
And I the most unlikely for to thrive.

Yet for al this wetith ye full righte wel,
That ye ne shoulde me from your servyce drive,
That I ne wil aye with my witis five
Serve you truly what wo so that I fele,
For I am fet so hy upon your whele,
That though ye nevir wil upon me rewe,
I must you love and bene evir as trewe
As any man ycan or maye on live.

980 But the more that I love you godely fre,
The lasse finde I that ye lovin me,
Alas whan shal that hardè wit amende!
Wher is now al your womanly pite,
Your gentilnes and your debonaire!
1050 Wil ye nothinge therof upon me spend,
And so whole swete as I am youris all,
And so grete wil as I have to you serve?
Now certis, and ye let me thus ysterve
Yet have ye womin therupon but small.

990 For at my knowing I do nothing why,
And thus I wil besече you hertily,
That if evir ye finde whilis ye live
A truir servaunte to you than am I,
Levith than, and sleith me hardily,
1060 And I my deth to you wil al forgive,
And yf ye finde no trewir verily,
Wollin ye suffir than that I thus spil,
And for no manir gilt but my gode will?
As gode were than untrue as true to be.

A balade declaring that womens chastite doeth moche excel all trefure worldly.

IN womanhede, as auctours al ywrite,
Most thing commendid is chaste honelle,
Thing most slaund'rous ther nobles to awite,
As when women of hasty fraiche
Exceden the bondes of wifely chastite,
1070 For what availeth lynage or rial blode
When of ther lyving the report 'is not gode?

The holy bed defoiled of mariage
For ones defoiled may not recovered be,
The vice goth forth, and the troward langage
By many' a relme, and many' a grete cite,
Slaundir hath a custome, and that 'is grete pite,
That true or fals, by a contrarious sounne,
Onis areifd it goth not lyghtly downe.

For when a lechour by force or mastery
1080 Defoiled hath of virgins the clennes,
Widous oppressed, and lye in advoutry,
Afsailid wives that stode in stablenes,
Who may then ther slaunderous harme redresse,
When ther gode name is hurt by soch report?
For fame lost ones can ner have his resort.

A thefe may robbe a man of his richesse,
And by some mene make restitution,
And some man maye dytherit and oppresse
A povir man from his possession,
1090 And aftir make him satisfaccion,
But no man may restore in no degre,
A maid robbid of her virginite.

A man may also bate a castil doune,
And bilde it aftir more freshe to the sight,
Exile a man out of his regiounne,
And him revoke, whether it be wrong or right,
But no man hath the powir ne the might
For to restore the palace virginal
Of chastite when brokn is the wal. 1100

Men may also put out of ther service,
And officirs remove out of ther place,
And at a day, when fortune list devise,
They may again restorid be to grace,

But

But ther n'is tim' nothir set ne space,
Nor ner in story neithir rad ne sain,
That maydenhode lost recovered was again.

For whiche men shouldin have a conscience,
Rewe in ther hertis, and repentin fore,
And havin a remorse of gret offence, 1110
To ravishie thing, which they may not restore,
For it is faide, and hath be said ful yore,
The emerauld grene of parfie chastite
Stole on: away may not recovered be.

And hard it is ro ravishie a tresour,
Whiche of nature is not recuparable,
Lordship may not of Kinge nor Emperour

Reforme a thinge, whiche is nat reformable,
Rust of defame is inseparable,
And maidinhode ylost of newe or yore
No man on live may it again restore.

The Romanes olde thorough ther pacience
Suffrid tyrauntes in ther tyranyes,
On ther cites to do grete violence,
The peple to oppresse, with ther roberies,
But them to punishe, they set gret espies
On false avouterers as it is wel couth,
Which widowes ravish, and maidens in ther youth.

The Court of Love.

This Book is an Imitation of the Romaunt of the Rose, shewing that all are subject to Love, what impediments soever to the contrary, containing also those 20 Statutes that are to be observ'd in the Court of Love.

ith timorous herte, and trembling hand of drede,
Of cunning nakid, bare of eloquence,
Unto the flour of port in womanhede
I write, as he that none intelligence
Of metris hath, ne flouris of sentence,
Saufe that me list my writing to convey,
In that I can, to plesse her high nobley.

The blosomes fresh of Tullius gardein fore
Present thei not, my mattir for to borne
Poemes of Virgile takin here no rote,
Ne crafte of Galfride may not here sojourne,
Why n'am I cunning 'o wel maie I morne
For lacke of science, that I can nat write,
Unto the princes of my lyfe aright!

No termes are digne unto her excellence,
So is she spronge of noble stripe and high,
A world of honour and of reverence
There is in her, this wil I testifie,
Caliope, thou sistr' wife and sly,
And thou Minerva guide me with thy grace, 20
That langage rude my mattir not deface!

Thy sugir dropis swete of Helicon
Distil in me, thou gentle muse, I praye,
And The, Melpomene, I cal anone,
Of ignorance the miste to chace awaye,
And geve me grace so for to write and saie,
That she my lady of her worthinesse
Accept in gre this litil short tretesse,

That is entitlid thus, the Courte of Love,
And ye, that ben Metriciens, me excuse, 30
I you beseeche, for Venus sake above,
For what I mene in this ye nede not muse,
And if so be my lady it refuse
For lake of ornate speche, I wolde be wo,
That I presume to her to writin so.

But my entente and al my busie cure
Is for to write this tretesse as I can,
Unto my lady stable true and sure,

Faithful and kind sith firste that she began
Me to accept in service as her man, 40
To her be al the plesure of this boke,
That when her like she may it rede and loke.

When I was yong at xviii yere of age
Lusty and light, desirous of plesaunce,
Approching on full sadde and ripe corage,
Love artid me to do my observaunce
To his estate and done him obeisaunce,
Commaundinge me the Court of Love to se,
A lite beside the mounte of Cithere:

There Citherea goddesse was and quene, 50
Honourid highly for her majeste,
And eke her sonne, the mighty God I wene
Cupide the blind, that for his dignite
A M. lovirs worshipp on ther kne,
There was I bid in paine of deth to pere,
By Mercury the wingid messingere.

So than I went by strange and ferre countrees,
Enquiringe aye what coaste had to it drewe
The Court of Love, and thi'ward as bees
At last I se the peple gan pursue, 60
Anon me thought some wight was ther that yknew
Where that the Court was holdin ferre or nie,
And aftir than ful faste I ganne me hic.

Anon as I them ovirtoke I said
Heile frendis, whithir purpose ye to wend?
For soth (qð one) that answered lyche a maid,
To Lov's Courte, now go we, gentil frend;
Where is that place (qð I) my felowe hend?
At Citheron, sir, saide he, withoute doute,
The kinge of Love, and al his noble route, 70

Dwelling within a castil rially.
So than apace I journid forth amonge,
And as he saide, so fond I there truly,
For I behelde the touris high and stronge,
And high pinaclis large of hight and longe,
With plate of gold bespred on every side,

And

And precious stones, the stone werke for to hide.

No Saphire of Inde, no Rube riche of price,
There lackid then, nor Emèraude so grene,
Balis Turkis, ne thing to my devise,
That may the castil makin for to shene,
All was as bright as sterres in Wintir bene,
And Phœbus shone to make his pece ageine
For trespas done to high estat is tweine :

80

Venus and Mars, the God and Goddesse clere,
When he them founde in armis cheinid faste,
Venus was than ful sad of herte and chere,
But Phœbus bemis streight as is the maste
Upon the castil ginnith he to cast,
To plese the lady, princes of that place,
In signe he lokith aftir lov's grace.

90

For ther n'is God in heven or hel iwys
But he hath ben right soget unto love,
Jove, Pluto, or what so evir he is,
Ne créature in erth or yet above,
Of this the revers may no wight approve;
But furthir more the castill to deserie,
Yet sawe I nevir none so large and hie,

For unto heven it stretchith I suppose,
Within and out depeintid wondirly,
With many' a thousand daify rede as rose,
And white also, this sawe I verily,
But what tho deifis might do signifie
Can I not tel, saufe that the quen'is flour
Alceste it was that kept ther her sojoure,

100

Which undir Venus lady was and quene,
And Admete kyng and soverain of that place,
To whom obeied the ladies gode xix,
With many' a thousand othir bright of face,
And yong men fele came forth with lusti pace,
And agid eke ther homage to dispose,
But what they were I could not well disclose.

Yet nere and nere forth in I gan me dresse,
Into an halle of noble apparaile,
With arras spred and cloth of gold, I gesse,
And othir silke of esyir availe,
Undir the cloth of ther estate, fauns faile,
The king and quene there sat, as I beheld,
It passid joye of Helise the feld.

There faintis have ther cominge and resorte,
To seen the kinge so rially besene,
In purple clad, and eke the quene in sorte,
And on ther heddis sawe I crownis tweine,
With stonis fret, so that it was no paine
Withoutin mete and drinke to stand and se
The king'is honor, and the rialte.

120

And for to trete of statis with the king,
That ben of counsell chefe, and with the quene,
The king had Daungir nere to him standing,
The quene of love Disdain, and that was sene,
For by the faith I shal to God, I wene,
Was nevir straungir none in her degre
Than was the quene in castinge of her eye.

And as I stode perceving her aparte,
And eke the bemis shininge of her eyen,
Me thought they werin shapin lyche a darte,
Sharpe, and persinge, smale, and streight as a line,
And al her here it shone as golde so fine,
Disshivil, crispe, doune hanging at her backe,
A yard in length, and southely than I spake, 140

O bright Regina, who made The so faire?
Who made thy colour vermelet and white?
Wher wonneth the God, how far above the eyre?
Grete was his crafte, and grete was his delite,
Now marvil I nothing that ye do hight
The quene of love, and occupie the place
Of Cithare, now swete lady thy grace.

In mewet spake I, so that nought alsterde
By no condicion word that might be hard,
But in my inward thought I gan advertre,
And oft I said my wit is dul and hard,
For with her beautie thus God wor I ferde
As doeth the man yravishid with sight,
When I beheld her cristal eyen so bright,

150

No respecte havynge what was beste to done,
Till right anone beholding here and there
I spied a frend of myne, and that ful sone,
A gentil woman, was the chambirere
Unto the quene, that hote as ye shall here,
Philobone, that lovid al her life,
Whan she me sey she led me forth as blife,

160

And me demaundid how and in what wise
I thithir come, and what my crand was?
To sene the Courte (q's I) and al the guise,
And eke to sue for pardon and for grace,
And mercy aske for al my grete trespasse,
That I none erste come to the courte of love,
Foryeve me this, ye goddis al above.

That is wel said (q's Philobone) in dede,
But were ye not assomoned to appere,
By Mercurius, for that is al my drede?
Yes gentill feire (q's I) now am I here,
Ye, yet what tho? though that be true, my dere,
Of your fre wil ye shuld have come unsente,
For ye did not I deme ye will be shente.

170

For ye that reigne in youth and lustines,
Pampired with ese and jalous in your age,
Your dutie is as far as I can gesse
To lov's courte to dreslin your viage
Assene as nature makith you so sage,
That ye may know a woman from a swan,
Or what your fote is growin halfe a span.

180

But sithe that ye by wilful negligence
This xviii. yere hath kept your selfe at large,
The gretir is your trespas and offence,
And in your neck you more bere all the charge,
For bettir were ye ben withoutin barge
Amidde the Se in tempest and in rayne,
Then bidin here receving wo and pain,

That ordeined is for soche as them absente
Fro lov's courte by yeris long and fele,
I ley my life ye shal ful sone repente,
For love wil reive youre coloure, lust, and hele,
Eke ye must baite on many' an hevy mele.
No force iwis, I stired you longe agon
To drawe to courte q's litil Philobon.

190

Ye shal wel se how rough and angry face
The king of Love wil shewe when ye him se,
By myn advise knele down and aske him grace,
Eschewing peril and adverfire,
For wel I wot it wolde none othir be,
Comforte is none ne council to your ese,
Why wil ye then the king of Love displese?

200

O mercie God (q's iche) I me repent,
Caitise and wretche in hert, in wil and thought,

And aftir this shal be mine whole entent
To serve and plese, how dere that love be bought,
Yet sith I have mine owne penaunce ifought,
With humble spirite shal I it receive,
Though that the king of Love my life bereve. 210

And though that fervent lov'is qualite
In me did never worche truly, yet I,
With al obeisaunce, and humilite,
And benigne herte shal serve him til I die,
And he, that Lord of might is grete and hie,
Right as him list me chastice and correcte,
And punishe me with trespase thus enfecte.

These wordis said, she caught me by the lap,
And led me furth in til a temple round,
Bothe large and wide, and as my blessid hap 220
And gode avinture was, right sone I founde
A tabernacle reisid from the grounde,
Where Venus sat, and Cupide by her side,
Yet half for drede I can my visage hide.

And eft againe I lokid and behelde,
Seing ful sundry peple in the place,
And mistir folke, and som that might not welde
There limmis wele, me thought a woundir case,
The temple shone with windowes al of glasse,
Bright as the day, with manie' a faire ymage, 230
And there I se the freshe quene of Carthage

Dido, that brent her beaute for the love
Of fals Æneas, and the weimenting
Of her Anelida true as Turtill dove
To Arcite fals, and there was in peinting
Of many' a prince, and many' a doughty king,
Whole martirdom was shewed about the walles,
And how that fele for love had suffrid falles.

But fore I was abashid and astonied
Of al tho folke that there were in that tide, 240
And than I askid where they haddin woned?
In divers courtis (qð she) here beside,
In sondrie clothing mantilwise fall wide,
They were arraied, and did ther sacrifice
Unto the God and goddesse in ther guise.

Lo yondir folke (qð she) that knele in blewe!
They were the colour ay and evir shal,
In signe they were and evir wil be true,
Withoutin chaunge, and southely yondir all,
That ben in blak, with mourning crie and call 250
Unto the goddes, for ther lovis bene
Some ferre, som dede, som al to sherpe and kene.

Yea than (qð I) what done these prellis here,
Nonnis, and Hermites, Freris, and all tho,
That sit in white, in russet, and in grene?
Forsothe (qð she) they wailin of ther wo.
O mercie Lord may they so come and go
Frely to court, and have soche libertie?
Yea, men of eche condicion and degre,

And women eke, for truly there is none 260
Excepcion made, ne never was, ne may,
This courte is ope and fre for everichone,
The king of love he wil not say them nay,
He takith al, in pore or riche array,
That mekely sewe unto his excellence,
With al ther herte, and al ther revèrence.

And walking thus aboute with Philobone
I se where come a messengere in hie
Streight from the king, whiche let commaunde anone,
Throughout the courte to make an ho and crie, 270

All new come folke abide, and wote ye why?
The king'is lust is for to seen you sone;
Come nere, let se, his wil mote nede be done.

Than gan I me present tofore the king,
Trembling for fere, with visage pale of hewe,
And many' a lovir with me was kneling,
Abashed sore, til unto the time they knewe
The sentence yeve of his entent full trew,
And at the last the king hath me behold
With sterne visage, and seid what doth this olde

Thus ferre ystope in yeris com so late
Unto the courte? for sothe my liege (qð I)
An hundrid tyme I have ben at the gate
Afore thus tyme, yet coude I ner espie
Of myne' acqecintaunce eny if mine eye, 280
And Shamefastenes away me ganne to chace,
But now I me submitte unto your grace.

Wel, al is pardoned with condicion
That thou be trew from hensforth to thy might,
And servin love in thine entencion, 290
Swere this, and than as ferre as it is right
Thou shalte have grace here in my quen'is sight,
Yes by the faith I owe your crown I swere
Though deth therfore me thirlith with his speré.

And whan the kinge had sene us everychone,
He let commaunde an officir in hie
To take our faith, and shew us one by one
The statutes of the courte full besily,
Anon the boke was leide before ther eye,
To rede and se what thing we must observe, 300
In Lov'is Courte, till that we dye and sterve.

AND for that I was lettrid there I red,
The statutes whole of Lov'is Courte and hall;
The firste statute that on the boke was spred,
Was to be true in thought and dedis al,
Unto the king of love the Lorde ryall,
And to the quene as faithful and as kinde,
As I coude thinke with herte and will and minde.

The seconde statute, secretly to kepe
Council of love, not blowing every where 310
Al that I knowe, and let it sinke and flete,
It may not sowne in every wight'is ere,
Exiling flaundir ay for dred and fere,
And to my lady, whiche I love and serve,
Be true and kinde, her grace for to deserve.

The thirde statute was clerely writ also,
Withoutin chaunge to live and die the same,
None othir love to take for wele ne wo,
For blinde delite, for ernest, nor for game,
Without repent, for laughing or for grame, 320
To bidin stil in ful perseveraunce,
Al this was whole the king'is ordinaunce.

The fourth statute to purchase er to here,
And stirin folke to love and berin fire
On Venus auter here aboute and there,
And preche to them of love and hote desire,
And tel how love wil quitin wel ther hire,
This must be kept, and loth me to displese,
If love be wroth, passie, for therby is ese.

The V. statute not to be daungirous, 330
If that a thought would reve me of my slepe,
Nor of a sight to be ovir squemous,
And so verely this statute was to kepe,
To turne and wallowe in my bed, and wepe,
When

When that my lady of her crueltie
Would from her herte exilin al pite.

The VI. statute it was for me to use
Alone to wandir voide of company,
And on my lad's beautie for to muse,
And to thinkin no force to live or die, 340
And eft again to thinke the remedy,
How to her grace I might anon attain,
And tel my wo unto my soveraine.

The VII. statute was to be pacient,
Whethir my lady lady joyful were or wroth,
For wordis glad or hevy diligent,
Whe'Sir that she me heldin lefe or loth,
And hereupon I put was to mine othe
Her for to serve and lowely to obey, 350
And shewe my chere the xx. sith aday.

The VIII. statute to my remembraunce
Was for to speke and pray my lady dere,
With hourelly labour and gret entendaunce,
Me for to love with al her herte entere,
And me desire and make me joyful chere,
Right as she is surmounting every faire,
Of beautie wel, and gentil, debonaire.

The IX. statute with lettris writ of golde,
This was the sentence how that I and al
Shulde evir dred to be to ovirbolde 360
Her to dispiese, and truly so I shal,
But ben content for all thing that may fale,
And mekely take her chastisement, and yerde,
And to offende her evir ben aferde.

The X. statute was egally to' discerne
Betwene the lady', and thine abilite,
And thinke thy selfe arte nevyr like to yerne
By right her mercy, nor of equite,
But of her grace, and womanly pite,
For though thy selfe be noble in thy strenge, 370
A thousande folde more nobil is thy quene,

Thy liv'is lady, and thy soveraine,
That hath thin herte all whole in govirnaunce,
Thou maicst no wife it takin to disdaine
To put The humbille at her ordinaunce,
And give her fre the reine of her plessaunce,
For libertie is thing that women like,
And truely els the mattir is acroke.

The XI. statute thy signis for to knowe,
With eye and fingir, and with smilis softe, 380
And lowe to couche, and alwaie for to showe
For drede of spyis, for to winkin ofte,
But secretly to bryng a sigh alofte,
And eke beware of ovir moche resorte,
For that para'venture spillith all thy sport.

The XII. statute remembir to observe,
For all the paine thou hast for love and wo
All is to lite her mercie to deserve,
Thou musten then thinke wher er thou ride or go, 390
And mortall woundis suffre thou also,
All for her sake, and thinke it well befette
Upon thy love, for it maie not be bette.

The XIII. statute, whilome is to thinke
What thing maie best thy ladie like and plese,
And in thine hert'is botome let it sinke,
Some thing devise, and take for it thine ese,
And sende it her, that maie her herte appese,
Some herte or ryng, or lettir, or devise,
Or precious stonc, but spare not for no price.

The XIV. statute eke thou shalt assaie 400
Formely to kepe the moste parte of thy life,
Wisse that thy ladie in thine armis laie,
And nightly dreame, thou hast thy nighte's herte's wife
Sweetly in armis, straining her as blife,
And when thou seest it is but fantasie,
Se that thou sing not ovir merrily.

For to moche joye hath ofte a wasfull end,
It longith eke, this statute for to holde,
To deme thy ladie evirmore thy frende,
And thinke thy selfe in no wise a cocolde, 410
In every thyng she doeth but as she should,
Construe the best, beleve no talis newe,
For many' a lye is tolde, that semeth full true.

But thinke that she, so bounteous and faire,
Coud not be false, imagine this algate,
And think that tonges wickid would her appaire,
Slanderyng her name, and worshipfull estate,
And lovirs true to settin at debate,
And though thou seest a faute, right at thine eye,
Excuse it blive, and glose it pretilie. 420

The XV. statute, use to swere and stare,
And counterfeite a lesyng hardily,
To save thy ladie's honour every whare,
And put thy selfe to fightin boldily,
Saie she is gode, vertuous, and ghostly,
Clere of entent, and herte, and thought, and will,
And argue not for reson, ne for skill

Againe thy ladie's plesure, ne entent,
For love will not be counterpleted in dede,
Saie as she saierth, then shalt thou not be shent, 430
The Crowe is white; ye truly, so I rede;
And aye what thing that she The will forbede, Eschue all that, and give her soverainte,
Her appetite folowe in all degre.

The XVI. statute, kepe it, if thou maie,
Seven sith at night, thy ladie for to plese,
And seven at midnight, se'ven at morow daie,
And drinke a caudill, erely for thine ese,
Doe this, and kepe thine hedde from all disese,
And winne the garlande here of lovirs all, 440
That evir came in court, or evir shall.

Ful fewe think I, this statute hold and kepe,
But truely this my reson giveth me sele,
That some lovirs should rather fall aslepe,
Then take on hande to plese so oft and wele,
There laie none othe to this statute adele,
But kepe who might, as gave him his corage,
Now get this garlande, lustie folke of age.

Now win who maie, ye lustie folke of youth,
This garlande frish, of flouris red and white, 450
Purple and blewe, and colours fell uncouth,
And I shall croune hym kyng of all delite,
In all the courte, there was not to my sight
A lovir true, that he ne was adrede,
When he expresse hath herd the statute rede.

The XVII. statute, when age approcheth on,
And lust is laied, and all the fire is queint,
As frishly then thou shalt begin to fomme,
And dote in love, and all her image paint, 460
In thy remembraunce, till thou gin to faint,
As in the first seson thyne herte began,
And her desire, though thou ne maie ne can

Performe thy livyng actuell, and lust,
Registir this in thyne remembraunce,

Eke

Eke when thou maist not kepe thy thing from rust,
Yet speke and talke, of plesaunt daliaunce,
For that shall make thyne hert rejoyce and daunce,
And when thou maist no more the game assaie,
The statute bidde The praie for them that maie.

The XVIII. statute, wholly to commende, 470
To plesse thy ladie, is that thou eschewe
With fluttishnesse thy self for to offende,
Be joillife, freshe, and fete with thingis newe, Courtlye with manir, this is all thy due,
Gentill of porte, and lovyng clenlinesse,
This is the thing, that likith thy maistresse.

And not to wandir, liche a dullid Assle,
Raggid and torne, disguisid in araie,
Ribaude in speche, or out of mesure passe,
Thy bounde excedyng, thinke on this alwaie, 480
For women ben of tendir hertis aye,
And lightly set ther plesure in a place,
When thei misthinke, they lightly let it passe.

The XIX. statute, mete and drinke forgete,
Eche othir daie se that thou fast for love,
For in the courte thei live withoutin mete,
Save soche as cometh from Venus al above,
Thei take none hede, in pain of grete reprove,
Of mete and drinke, for that is all in vaine,
Onely thei live by sight of ther souveraine. 490

The XX. statute, last of of everichone,
Enrolle it in thyne hert's privite,
To wring and waile, to turne, and sigh, and grone,
When that thy ladie absent is from The,
And eke renewe the wordis all that she Betwene you twain hath said, and all the chere,
That The hath made thy liv'is lady dere.

And se thyne herte in quiete, ne in rest
Sojourne to tyme thou seen thy Ladie este,
But where she won, by South, or Est, or West, 500
With all thy force now se it be not leste,
Be diligent, till tyme thy life be refre,
In that thou maist thy ladie for to se,
This statute was of old antiquite.

An officir of high authorite,
Yclepid Rigour, made us swere anone
He n'as corrupt with parcialite,
Favour, prayir, ne gold that clerely shone,
Ye shall (qð he) now swerin here echone,
Both yong and old, to kepe in that thei maie, 510
The statutes truely, all aftir this daie.

O God! thought I, hard is to make this othe,
But to my powir shall I them observe,
In all this worlde n'as mattir halfe so lothe
To swere for all, for though my body sterve,
I have no might, them wholly to observe,
But herkin now the cace how it befell,
Aftir my othe was made, the trothe to tell.

I tournid levis, lokyng on this boke,
Where othir statutes were of women shene, 520
And right forth with rigour on me gan loke,
Full angrily, and saied unto the quene,
I traitour was, and chargid me let ben,
There maie no man (qð he) the statute knowe,
That long to woman, hie degre ne lowe.

In secrete wise, thei keptin ben full close,
Thei soune echone to libertie my frende,
Plesaunt thei be, and to ther own purpose,
There wote no wight of them, but God and fende,

Ne naught shall witte, unto the world's ende, 530
The quene hath yeve me charge, in pain to die,
Nevir to rede ne seen them with myne eye.

For men shall not so nere of counsaill ben
With womanhode, ne knowin of ther guife,
Ne what thei think, ne of ther wit th' engine,
I me report to Salomon the wise,
And mightie Sampson, which begilid thrise
With Dalila was, he wot that in a throwe,
There maie no man statute of women knowe.

For it pera'venture maie right so befall 540
That thei be bounde by nature to disceve,
And spinne and wepe, and sugre strew on gal,
The herte of man to ravishe and to reve,
And whet ther tonge, as sharpe as swerde or gleve,
It maie beride, this is ther ordinaunce,
So must thei lowlie doen ther observaunce,

And kepe the statute, yevin them of kinde,
Of soche as love hath yeve 'hem in ther life,
Men maie not wete, why turnith every wind,
Nor waxin wise, nor ben inquisitive 550
To knowe secrete of maide, widowe, or wife,
For thei ther statutes have to them reserved,
And nevir man to knowe them hath deserved.

Now dresse you forth, the God of love you guide,
Qð Rigour then, and seke the temple bright
Of Citherea, Goddes here beside,
Beseeche her by the influce and might
Of all her vertue you to teche aright
How for to serve your ladies, and to plesse,
Ye that ben sped, and set your herte in ese. 560

And ye that ben unpurveied, pray her eke,
Comforte you sone with grace and destinie,
That ye may set your hert, there ye maie like,
In soche a place, that it to love maie be,
Honour, and worship, and felicitie
To you for aie, now goeth by one assent.
Graunt mercie sir (qð we) and forth we went,

Devoutly soft and esie pace, to se
Venus the Godd'is Image all of golde, - e.s
And there we found a thousand on ther kne, 570
Some freshe and faire, some dedly to beholde,
In sondric mantils new, and some wer olde,
Some paintid were, with flamis red as fire,
Outward to shewe ther inward hote desire.

With dolefull chere, full fele in ther complaint,
Cried, "Ladie Venus, rewe upon our sore,
"Receve our billes, with teris all bedreint,
"We maie not wepe, there is no more in store,
"But wo and pain us frettith more and more,
"Thou blisefull Planet, lovirs sterre so shene, 580
"Have routh on us, that sigh and careful ben;

"And punishe, Ladie, grevously, we praie,
"The false untrue, with counterfeite plesaunce
"That made ther othe, be true to live or deie,
"With chere assurid, and with countinaunce,
"And falsly now thei forin lov'is daunce,
"Barain of routh, untrue of that thei saied,
"Now that ther lust, and plesure is alaid.

"Yet este againe a thousande milion,
"Rejoyfing love, ledyng ther life in blisse, 590
"Thei said Venus, redresse of all division,
"Goddes eternell, thy name heryed is,
"By lovirs bonde is knit all thing iwis,

"Best

" Best unto best, the yerth to watir wanne,
" Birde unto birde, and woman unto man.

" This is the life of joye, that we ben in,
" Resemblyng life of heavenly paradise,
" Love is exilir aie of vice and sinne,
" Love makith herr'is lustie to devise,
" Honour and grace have thei in every wise, 600
" That ben to lov'is lawe obedient,
" Love makith folke benigne and diligent,

" Aie steryng them, to dredin vice and shame,
" In ther degre it maketh them honourable,
" And swete it is of love to bere the name,
" So that his love be faithfull, true, and stable;
" Love prunith hym, to femin amiable,
" Love hath no faute, there it is exercised,
" But sole with them that have all love dispised.

" Honour to The, celestiaall and clere 610
" Goddes of Love, and to thy celsitude,
" That yevest us light so ferre doune from thy spere,
" Perfying our hertis with thy pulchritude,
" Comparison none of similitude
" Maie to thy grace be made in no degre;
" That hast us set with Love in unitie.

" Grete cause have we to praise thy name and The,
" For thorough The we live in joye and blisse,
" Blessid be thou, mozte soveraine to se,
" Thy holy courte of gladnesse maie not misse, 620
" A thousande sith we maie rejoyce in this,
" That we ben thine, with herre and all yfere,
" Enflamid with thy grace, and heavenly fere.

Musyng of tho, that spakin in this wise,
I me bethought, in my rememb'eraunce,
Myne orison right godely to devise,
And plesauntly, with herr'is obeisaunce,
Beseeche the Goddis voidin my grevaunce,
For I loved eke, saufe that I wist not where,
Yet down I set, and saied as ye shall here. 630

Fairist of all, that evir were or be,
Licour and light to pensife creature,
Myne whole affiaunce, and my ladie fre,
My Goddes bright, my fortune and my ure,
I yeve and yelde my herte to The full sure,
Humbly beseechyng, ladie, of thy grace,
Me to bestowin in some blessid place.

And here I vowe me, faithfull, true, and kind,
Without offence of mutabilitie,
Humbly to serve, while I have wit and mind, 640
Myne whole affiaunce, and my ladie fre,
In thilke place, there ye me signe to be,
And sith this thing of newe is yeve me aie
To love and serve, nedely must I obeie.

Be merciable with thy fire of grace,
And fixe myne herte, there beautie is and routh,
For hote I love, determine in no place,
Saufe only this, by God and by my trouth,
Troublid I was, with slombir, slepe, and slouth,
This othir night, and in a visioun 650
I se a woman romin up and doune,

Of mene stature, and semely to beholde,
Lustie, and freshe, demure of countinaunce,
Yong, and well shap, with here that shone as golde,
With eyen as cristall, fercid with plesaunce,
And she gan stirre mine herte a lite to daunce,
But sodainlie she vanishe gan right there,
Thus I maie saie, I love, and wote not where.

For what she is, ne her dwellyng, I n'ot,
And yet I fele, that love distreinith me 660
Might iche her knowe, that would I faine God wor,
Serve and obeye, with all benigntie,
And if that othir be my destinie,
So that no wise I shall her nevir se,
Then graunt me her, that best maie likin me;

With glad rejoyce to live in perfite hele,
Devoide of wrathe, repent, or variaunce,
And able me to doe that maie be wele
Unto my ladie, with herte's hie plesaunce,
And, mightie goddes, through thy purviaunce, 670
My wit, my thought, my lust, and love so guide,
That to thine honour I maie me provide,

To set mine hert in place there I maie like,
And gladly serve, with all affeccion,
Grete is the pain, which at mine hert doth sticke,
Till I be sped by thyne eleccion,
Helpe, Ladie Goddes, that possession
I might of her have, that in all my life
I clepin shall my quene, and herr'is wife.

And in the Courte of Love to dwell for aie 680
My will is, and doin The sacrifice
Daily with Diane eke to fight and fraie,
And holdin werre, as might will me suffice,
That Goddes chaste I kepin in no wise
To serve, a Figge for all her chastite,
Her lawe is for Religiolite.

And thus gan finishe prayir, laude, and preice,
Whiche that I yove to Venus on my kne,
And in myne herte to pondir and to peice,
I gane anone her Image freshe beautie, 690
Heile to that figure swete, and heile to The,
Cupide (q'd I) and rose, and yede my weie,
And in the temple, as I yede, I seie

A shrine surmountyng all in flonis riche,
Of whiche the force was plesaunce to mine eye,
With Diamonde or Saphire, nevir liche
I have none seen, ne wrought so wondirlic,
So when I met with Philobone, in hie
I gan demaunde, whose is this sepulture?
Forsothe (q'd she) a tendir creature 700

Is shrinid there, and Pitie is her name,
She sawe an Egle wreke hym on a flie,
And plucke his wing, and eke him, in his game,
And tendir herte of that hath made her die,
Eke she would wepe and morne right pitouly,
To seen a lovir suffre grete destresse,
In all the courte n'as none, as I do gesse,

That cond a lovir half so well availe,
Ne of his wo the torment or the rage
Askin, for he was sure withoutin faile 710
That of his grief she coud the herte aswage,
In fiede of Pitie spedith hote corage
The mattirs all of courte, now she is dedde,
I me reporte in this to womanhedde.

For weile, and wepe, and crie, and speke, and praie,
Women wou'd not have pitie on thy plaint,
Ne by that mene to ese thine herte convaie,
But The recevin, for ther owne talent,
And saie that Pitie causith them consent
Of reuth to take thy service and thy paine, 720
In that thou maiest, to p'iese thy soveraine.

But this is counsaill, kepe it secretly, (Q'd she) I n'olde for all the worlde about

The queene of Love it wist, and witte ye why?
For if by me this mattir springin out,
In courte no lengir should I out of doubt
Dwellin, but shame in all my life endry,
Now kepe it close (qð she) this hardily.

Well, all is well, now shall ye seen, she saied,
The fairist ladie undir Sonne that is, 730
Come on with me, demenie you lich a maide,
With shamefast drede, for ye shall speke ywis
With her, that is the mirroure, joie, and blisse,
But somewhat straunge, and sad of her demerie
She is, beware your countinaunce be sene.

Nor overlight, ne rechelesse, ne to bolde,
Ne malapert, ne rennyng with your tong,
For she will you obeisin and beholde,
And you demaunde, why ye wer hens so long
Out of this courte, without resort emong, 740
And Rosiall her name is hore aright,
Whose herte is yet yyevin to no wight.

And ye also ben, as I undirstonde,
With love but light avauncid by your worde,
Might ye by hap your fredom makin bohd,
And fall in grace with her, and wele accorde,
Well might ye thanke the God of Love and Lord,
For she, that ye sawe in your dreame appere,
To love soche one, what are thei then the nere?

Yet wote ye what? as my remembraunce 750
Me yevith now, ye faine where that ye saie,
That ye with love had nevir acquaintaunce,
Save in your dreame, right late this othir daie,
Why yes parde, my life that durst I laie,
That ye were caught upon an heth, when I
Sawe you complain, and sigh full pitously,

Within an herbir, and a gardein faire,
Where flowirs growe, and herbis vertuous,
Of whiche the favour swete was and the cire,
There were your self full hore and amorous, 760
Ywis ye ben to nice and daungirous,
I would ye now repent, and love some newe.
Naie by my trothe I saied, I nevir knewe

The godely wight, whose I shal be for aye,
Guide me the Lorde, that love hath made and me,
But forthe we went, into a chambre gaie,
There was Rosiall, womanly to se,
Whose stremis, sotill persyng of her eye,
Mine hert gan thrill for beautie in the stounde
Alas (qð I) who hath me yeve this wounde! 770

And then I drede to speke, till at the laste
I grete the ladie, reverently and wele,
When that my sigh was gone and ovirpasse,
And doune on knees full humbly gan I knele,
Besechyng her, my fervent wo to kele,
For there I toke full purpose in my mynde
Unto her grace my painfull herte to bynde.

For if I shall all fully her discrive,
Her hed was rounde, by compasse of nature,
Het here as gold, she passid all on live, 780
And Lillie forched had this creature,
With livelisse browis, flawe of colour pure,
Betwene the which was mene disleveraunce
From every browe, to shewin a distaunce.

Her nose directid streight, and even as line,
With forme and shape thereto convenient,
In which the godis milkewhite path doth shine,
And eke her eyen ben bright and orient

As is the Smaragde, unto my judgement,
Or yet these sterris heavenly small and bright, 790
Her visage is of lovely rede and white,

Her mouthe is short, and shitte in litil space,
Flamyng somdele, not ovir redde I mene,
With pregnannt lips, and thicke to kisse percace,
For lippis thinne not fat, but evir lene,
They serve of naught, they be not worth a bene,
For if the basse ben full, there is delite,
Maximian truly thus doeth he write.

But to my purpose, I saie white as snowe
Ben all her tethe, and in ordir thei stonde 800
Of one stature, and eke her breth I trowe
Surmountith all odours, that er I founde
In swetnesse, and her body, face, and honde
Ben sharply slendir, so that from the hedde
Unto the fote, all is but womanhedde.

I holde my pece of othir thingis hidde,
Here shal my soule, and not my tong bewraie;
But how she was arraied, if ye me bidde,
That shall I well discovir you and saie,
A benede of gold and silke, full freshe and gaie, 810
With her intresse ybroudirid full wele,
Right smothly kept, and shinyng every dele.

About her necke a flower of freshe devise,
With Rubies set, that lustie were to sene,
And she in gowne was light and sommir wise,
Shapin full wele, the colour was of grene,
With aureat sent aboute her sidis clene,
With divers stonis, precious and riche,
Thus was she raied, yet sawe I ner herliche.

For if that Jove had this ladie yseine, 820
Tho the faire Calisto, ne Alcmena,
Thei nevir haddin in his armis leine,
Ne he had lovid the faire Europa,
Ye ne yet Danac ne Antiopa,
For all ther beautie stode in Rosiall,
She semid lich a thyng celestially,

In bountie, favour, porte and similineffe,
Pleasant of figure, mirroure of delite,
Gracious to seen, rote of all gentilnesse,
With angell visage, lustie, redde, and white, 830
There was not lack, saufe daungir had alite
This godely freshe in rule and govirnaunce,
And somdele straunge she was for her plefaunce.

And truly sone I toke my leve and went,
When she had me enquirid, what I was,
For more and more impressin gan the dent
Of lov's darte, while I behelde her face,
And este againe I come to sekin grace,
And up I put my bill, with sentence clere,
That foloweth aftir, rede, and ye shall here. 840

O ye freshe lovelie, of beautie the rote,
That nature hath formid so wele and made,
Princes and queene, and ye that maie do bore
Of all my langoure, with your wordis glad,
Ye woundid me, ye made me wo bestad,
Of grace redresse my mortall grefe, as ye
Of all my harme the very caucir be.

Now am I caught, and unaware sodainly,
With perfaunt stremis of your eyin clere, 850
Subjecte to ben, and servin you mekely,
And all your man, ywis my ladie dere,
Abidyng grace, of whiche I you requere,
That

That mercilesse ye cause me not to sterue,
But guerdon me,liche as I maie deserve.

For by my trothe, the dayis of my breth
I am and will be your, in will and herte,
Pacient and meke for you to suffir deth,
If it require, now rue upon my smerte,
And this I swere, I nevyr shall out sterue
From lov'is courte, for none adversitie,
So ye would rue on my distresse and me.

My destinie, my fate; and houre I blisse,
That have me set to ben obedient Onely to you the floure of all ywis,
I trust to Venus nevyr to repent,
For evir redy glad and diligent
Ye shall me finde in service to your grace;
Till deth my life out of my bodie rale.

Humble unto your excellence so digne,
Enforcing aye my wittis and delite
To serve and plesse with glad herte and benigne,
And ben as Troilus, Troie's worthie knight,
Or Antonie for Cleopatra bright,
And nevyr you me thinkis to renay,
Thus shall I kepe unto myne endyng day.

Enprint my speche in your memoriall
Sadly, my princes, salve of all my fore;
And thinke that for I would becomin thrall,
And ben your owne, as I have saied before,
Ye must of pitie cherishe more and more
Your man, and tendir afir his deserte,
And give hym corage for to ben experte.

For where that one hath set his herte on fire;
And findith neithir refute ne plesaunce,
Ne worde of comforte, deth will quite his hire,
Alas that there ne is none allegaunce
Of all ther wo, alas the grete grevaunce
To love, unloved! but ye, my ladie dere,
In other wise maie governe this matere.

Truly, gramercie, frende, of your gode will, 890
And of your profir in your humble wife,
But for your service, take and kepe it still,
And wher ye saie I ought you well to' cherishe
And of your grefe the remedie devise,
I knowe not why, I n'am acquaintid well
With you, ne wote not sothly where ye dwell.

In art of love I write and songis make,
That maie be song in honour of the kyng,
And quene of love, and then I undirtake
He that is sadde, shall then full mery syng, 900
And daungirous not ben in every thyng,
Beseeche I you, but seen my will and rede,
And let your answere put me out of drede.

What is your name? reherse it here I praie,
Of whens and where, of what condicion
That ye ben of? let se come of, and saie,
Faine would I knowe your disposicion
Ye have put on your old entencion,
But whate ye mene, to serve me, I ne wote,
Saufe that ye saie, ye love me woundir hore.

My name alas, my herte why makes thou straunge
Philogenet I cal'd am ferre and nere,
Of Cambrige clerke, that nevyr thinke to chaunge
Fro you, that with your heavenly stremis clere
Ravishe myne herte and ghost, and all in fere,
Since at the first I write my bill for grace,
Me thinke I se some mercie in your face.

And what I mene, by God that al hath wrought,
My bille now makith finall mencion
That ye ben ladie in myne inward thought 920
Of all myne herte, withoutin offencion,
That I beste love, and have sith I begon
To drawe to courte, lo then what might I saie!
I yelde me here unto your high nobleye:

860 And if that I offende, or wilfully
By pompe of herte your precept disobaie,
Or doen againe your wille unskiltully,
Or grevin you for earnest or for plaie,
Correcite ye me right sharply then I praie,
As it is seen unto your womanhede, 930
And rewe on me, or els I n'am but dede.

Naie God forbede to sette you so with grace,
And for a word of lugrid eloquence
To have compassion in so lityl space,
Then were it tyme that some of us wer hens, 870
Ye shall not finde in me soche insolence,
Aye, what is this, maie ye not suffre sight?
How maie ye loke upon the candill light,

That clere is and hottir then is myne eye?
And yet ye saied the bemis perse and fete, 940
How shall ye then the candill light endrie?
For well wotte ye that hath the sharpir herte,
And there ye bidde me, you correct and bete,
If ye offende, naie that maie not be doen,
There come but few, that spedir here so sone.

Withdrawe your eye, withdrawe from presens eke,
Hurte not your self through foly with a loke,
I would be fory so to make you sicke,
A woman should beware eke whom she toke, 950
Ye beth a clerke, go serchin wel my boke,
If any women ben so light to winne,
Naie' abide a while, tho ye were all my kinne.

So sone ye maie not win myne hert in truth,
The guise of court will seen your stedfastnesse,
And as you doen to have upon you reuth,
Your owne deserte, and lowly gentilnesse,
That will reward you joye for hevinessse,
And tho ye waxin pale, and grene, and dede,
Ye muste it use a while withoutin drede,

And it accept, and grutchin in no wise, 960
But whereas ye me hastily desire
To bene to love, me thinke ye be not wise,
Cese of your language cese I you requere,
For he that hath this xx yere bene here
May nat optaine, than marvaile I that ye
Be now so bold of love to trete with me.

A mercy, hert, my lady and my love,
My rightwise princeisse and my lyv'is guide,
Nowe may I plein to Venus al above,
That routhles ye me gave this wounde so wide, 970
What have I done, why may it not betide,
That for my trouthe I may receivd be?
Alas than your daungir and crueltie!

In woful houre I gote was welawey!
In woful hour lostirid and yfedde,
In woful hour yborne, that I ne may
My supplicacion swetely have yspedde,
The frosty grave and cold muste be my bedde,
Withoute ye list your grace and mercy shewe,
Death with his axe so faste on me doth hewe. 980

So grete disese and in so litil while,
So litil joy that felte I nevyr yet,

And at my wo Fortune ginnith to smyle,
That nevir arst I felte so harde a fitte,
Confoundid ben my spirites and my witte;
Til that my lady take me to her cure,
Whiche I love beste of erthely creature.

But that I like that may I not come by,
Of that I plain that have I habondaunce,
Sorowe and thought they sit me wondir nye, 990
Me is withhold that might be my plesaunce,
Yet turne again my worldly suffisaunce,
O lady bright, and saufe your faithful true;
And or I die yet ones upon me rewe:

With that I fell in founde, and dede as stone,
With coloure slaine and wanne as ashie pale,
And by the hande she caught me up anon,
Arise (qð she) what have ye dronkin dwale?
Why slepin ye? it is no nitirtale.
Now mercy swete (qð I) iwis affraied: 1000
What thing (qð she) hath made you so dismaied?

Now wote I wel that ye a lovir be,
Your hew is witnesse in this thing she said,
Yf ye were secrete, ye might knowe (qð she)
Curteise and kinde all this shuld be aleide,
And now mync herte al that I have misleid
I shal amend, and fet your herte in esc,
That worde it is (qð I) that doth me plesse.

But this I charge that ye the stentis kepe,
And breke them not for sloth nor ignoraunce, 1010
With that she gan to smile and laughin depe:
Ywis (qð I) I will do your plesaunce,
The xvi statute doth we grete grevaunce,
But ye must that releffe or modifie:
I graunte (qð she) and so I wil truly.

And softly than her coloure gan appeire
As rose so red throughout her vilage al,
Wherefore me thinke that it is according here
That she of right be clepid Rosial.
Thus have I wonne with wordis gret and smal
Some godely worde of her that I love best,
And trust she shall yet sette mine herte in rest.

GOth on, she said to Philobone, and take
This man with you, and lede him al aboute
Within the courte, and shewe him for my sake
What lovirs dwel within, and al the route
Of officirs, for he is oute of doute
A straungir yet, come on (qð Philobone)
Philogenet, with me now must ye gon.

And stalking softe with esy pace I sawe 1030
Aboute the king yflondin environ
Attendauce, Diligence, and ther felow
Forthirir Asperaunce, and many one,
Dred to offende there stode, and not alone,
For there was eke the cruil adversarye
The lovirs so that cleped is Displeure,

Whiche unto me spake angrily and felle,
And said, my lady, me disleevin shall,
Trowest thou (qð she) that al that she did tell
Is true? nay nay but undir hony gall 1040
Thy birth and hers thei be nothing egal
Caste of thine herte, for all her wordis white,
For gode faith she lovith The but alite.

And eke remembre thine habilitie
May not compare with her, this wel thou wot, Ye than came Hope and said my frende, let be,

Beleve him nor, Dispaire he ginnith dote.
Alas (qð I) here is both cold and hote!
The tone me biddith love, the toðir nay,
Thus wote I not what me is best to say. 1050

But wel wote I my lady grauntid me
Truly to be my wound'is remedy,
Her gentillesse may not infectid be
With doubleness, thus trust I til I die.
So cast I voide dispairis company,
And takin hope to council and to frende,
Yea kepe that wel (qð Philobone) in minde.

And there beside, within a bay windowe
Stod one in grene ful large of bred and length,
His berd as black as fethirs of the Crow, 1060
Hisname was lust, of woundir might and strength,
And with Delite to argue there he thinkth,
For this was alway his opinion
That love was sinne, and so he hath begonne

To refon false, and ledge auctorite:
Nay (qð Delite) love is a vertue clere,
And from the soule his progresse holdith he,
Blinde appetite of lust doth oftin stere,
And that is sinne, for reson lackith there,
For thou doest think thy neighbour's wife to winne,
Yet thinke it wel that love may not be sinne.

For God and seint they love right verily,
Voide of al synne and vise, this know I well,
Affection of fleshe is sinne truly,
But verray love is vertue as I fele,
For verray love may freile desire ackele,
For love is love withoutin any sinne, Nowe stint (qð Luste) thou spekest not worth a pinne.

And there I left them in ther arguing,
Roming ferthir into the castil wide, 1080
And in a cornir Lier stode talking
Of lesings fast with Flattery there beside,
He said that women were attire of pride,
And men were founde of nature variaunte,
And coude be false, and shewin beau semblaunt.

Than flatiry bespake and said iwis,
Se so she goth on patins faire and fete,
It doth right well, what pretty man is this,
That romith here? now truly drink'ne mete
Nede I not have, mine herte for joye doth bete
Him to beholde, so is he godely freshe,
It semeth for love his herte is rendre' and nesshe.

This is the courte of lusty folke and glad,
And wel becometh ther abite and arraye,
O why be som so fory and so sadde,
Complaining thus in blak and white and gray?
Freris they ben and Monkis in gode fay,
Alas! for routh gret dole it is to sene,
To se them thus bewaile and fory bene!

Se how they crie and wring ther handis whit, 1100
For they so sone went to religion,
And eke the Nonnes with vail and wimple plight
Ther thought that they ben in confusion,
Alas! they fain we fain perfeccion
In clothis wide, and lacke our libertie!
But al the sinne mote on our frendis be.

For Venus wote we wold as faine as ye,
That bene attirid here and wel be sene,
Desyrin man and love in our degre,

Ferme and faithful, right as ywold the quene, 1110
Our frendis wicke in tendir youth and grene Ayenst our will made us religious,
That is the cause we mourne and wailin thus.

Than faide the Monke and Freris in the tide
Wel may we curse our Abbis and our place,
Our statutes sharpe to sing in copis wide,
Chastely to kepe us oute of lov's grace,
And nevir to fele comforte ne solace,
Yet suffre we the hete of lov's fire,
And affir othir happily we desire. 1120

O Fortune coursid, why nowe and wherfore
Hast thou, they said, berafte us libertie,
Sithe nature yave us instrument in store;
And appetite to love and lovirs be?
Why mot we suffer soche adversite,
Diane to serve and Venus to refuse?
Ful oftin sythe this matier doth us muse.

We serve and honour fore ayenst our will
Of chastite the goddes and the quene,
Us lefir were with Venus bidin stil, 1130
And have reward for love and so get bene
Unto these women courtely freshe and shene,
Fortune, we curse thy whele of variaunce,
Ther we were wel thou revist our plesaunce.

Thus love I them with voice of plaint and care
In raging wo cryng ful pitously,
And as I yede ful nakid and ful bare
Some I beholde loking dispiteously,
On povirte that dedly cast ther eye,
And welaway they cried, and were not faine,
For they ne might ther glad desire attaine,

For lacke of richesse worldly and of gode,
They banne and curse and wepe and fain alas!
That povertie hath us hent that whilom stode
At hertis ese and fre and in gode case,
But now we dare not shew our selfe in place,
Ne us embolde to dwel in company,
There as our hert wold love right faithfully.

And yet againewarde shrikid every nonne,
The pange of love so strainith them to crie, 1150
Now wo the time (q's they) that we be boun,
This hateful ordre nise wil doen us die,
We sigh and sobbe and bleding inwardly,
Fretting our selfe with thought and hard complaint,
That nye for love we waxin wode and faint.

And as I stode beholding here and there,
I was ware of a sorte ful languishing,
Savage, and wilde, of loking, and of chere,
Ther mantilles and ther clothisey tiring,
And ofte they were of nature complaining, 1160
For they ther membirs lackid fote and hand,
With visage wry and blinde I undirstand.

They lackid shap and beauteie to preferre
Them self in love, and said that God and kind
Hath forgid them to worshipping the sterre
Venus the bright, and lestin al behinde
His othir werkis clene and oute of minde,
For othir have ther full shappe and beauteie,
And we (q's they) ben in deformite.

And nye to them there was a company, 1170
That have the sustirs waried and mislaide,
I mene the thre of fatall destine,
That be our werdis sodenly abraide

Oute gan they crie, as they had ben affraid,
We curse (q's they) that evir hath nature
Yformid us this woful life to endure.

And there he was, contrite, and gan repent,
Confessing whole the wounde that Cithere
Hath with the darte of hote desire him sent,
And howe that he to love muste subj. & be, 1180
Than held he al his skornis vanite,
And said that lovirs lede a blissid life,
Yong men and olde, and widowe maid and wife.

Bereve me goddesse (q's he) of thy might My skornis al and skoffis that I have,
No powir for to mockin any wight,
That in thy service dwel, for I did rave,
This knowe I wel right now, so God me save,
And I shal be the chief post of thy faith,
And love uphold, the revers who so faith. 1190

Dissemble stode not ferre from him in trowth,
With party mantil, party hode, and hose,
And said he had upon his lady routh,
And thus he wound him in and gan to glose,
Of his ententful double I suppose,
And al the worlde he said he loved it wele,
But ay me thought he loved her nere adele.

Eke shamefastnesse was there, as I toke hede,
That blusid rede, and darst nat ben aknowe
She lovir was, for therof had she drede, 1200
She stode and hing her visage downe alowe,
But soche a sight it was to sene I nowe,
As of these rosis rody on ther stalke,
Ther could no wight her spy to speke or talke.

In lov's arte so gan she to abashe,
Ne durst not uttir al her privite,
Many a stripe and many a grevous lashe
She gave to them that woldin lovirs be,
And hindered fore the simple com'naltie, 1210
That in no wise durst grace and mercie crave,
For were not she, they nede but aske and have,

Where yf they now aprochin for to speke,
Than shamefastnesse returnith them again,
They thinke if we our secret counsel breke,
Our ladies wil have scorn on us certein,
And peravinture thinkin grete disdain,
Thus shamefastnesse may bringin in dispeire,
When she is dede the to'sir will be heire,

Come forth, Avauntir, now I ring thy Bel, 1220
I spied him sone to God I make a vowe,
He lokid black as fendis doth in hell,
The firste (q's he) that evir did I wowe
Within a worde she come I wotte not how,
So that in armis was my lady fre,
And so hath ben a thoulande mo than she.

In England, Britain, Spain, and Picardie,
Artois, and Fraunce, and up in hie Holande,
In Burgoine, Naples, and in Italye,
Navarre, and Grece, and up in Hethin lond, 1230
Was nevir woman yet that wolde withstond
To ben at commaundement whan I wolde,
I lackid neithir silvir coigne ne gold.

And there I met with this estate and that,
And here I brochid her, and here, I trowe,
Lo! there goeth one of myn, and wotte ye what?
Yon freshe attirid have I leide ful lowe,
And soche one yondir eke right wel I knowe,
I kepte the statute whan we lay if ere,

And yet yon fame hath made me right gode
chere. 1240

Thus hath Avauntir blowin every where Al that he knoweth, and more a thousande fold,
His auncistrie of kinne was to lier,
For firste he makith promise for to hold,
His ladis council, and it not unfolde,
Wherfore the secrete when he doth unshutte,
Than lyith he that all the worlde maye witte.

For falsing so his promise and beheste
I wondir fore he hath soche fantasie,
He lackith witte I trowe or is a beste, 1250
That can no bette himselfe with reson guy,
By mine advice love shall be contrarie
To his availe, and him eke dishonoure,
So that in courte he shall no more sojoure.

Take hede (qð she) this litil Philobone,
Where envie rockith in the cornir yonde,
And sittith derke, and ye shal se anone
His lene bodie, his fading face and honde,
Him self he frettith, as I undirstonde,
Witnesse of Ovide Metamorphosofe, 1260
The lovirs so he is, I wil not glose.

For where a lovir thinkith him promote,
Envie wil grutche repining at his wele,
It swellith fore about his hertis rote,
That in no wise he canne not live in hele,
And if the faithful to his lady stele,
Envie will noife and ringe it rounde aboute,
And sey moch worse than done is out of doute.

And privie thought, rejoycing of him selfe,
Stode not ferre thens in abite mervilous, 1270
Yon is, thought I, some spirite, or some elfe,
His sotil Image is so curious,
How is (qð I) that he is shadid thus
With yondir cloth I n'ot of what colour,
And nere I went, and gan to lere and pore.

And frainid him a question ful harde,
Whate is (qð I) the thing thou lovist beste?
Or what is bore unto thy painis harde?
Me thinke thou livist here in gret unrest,
Thou wandrist aye from south to est and west,
And est to northe as ferre as I canne se,
There is no place in Court may holdin The.

Whom solowest thou, wher is thy hert iset?
But my demaunde afoile I The require.
Me thought (qð he) no creature may let Me to ben here and where as I desire,
For whare as absence hath done out the fire,
My mery thought it kindeleth yet againe,
That bodily me thinke with my soveraine,

I stand, and speke, and laugh, and kisse, and halfe,
So that my thought comfortith me ful oft,
I think, God wote, though al the world be false
I wil be true, I thinke also howe softe
My lady is in speche, and this on loft
Bringith mine herte with joie and gret gladnesse
This privey thought alaieth mine hevinesse.

And whate I thinke or where to be no man
In al this erthe can tel ywis but I,
And eke there n'is no swalow swift ne swan
So wight of wing, ne halfe so yerne can flie, 1300
For I canne ben and that right sodenly
In heven, in hell, in paradise, and here,
And with my lady whan I wil desire.

I am of counfel ferre, and wide I wote,
With lorde and lady, and ther privite,
I wotte it al, and be it hore or colde,
They shall nor speke without licence of me,
I myne in soche as sesonable be,
For firste the thing is thought within the hert,
Er any worde oute from the mouth afterte. 1310

And what that word thought bad farewell and yede, with Eke furthe went I to sene the court's guife,
And at the dore came, in so God me spede,
Twenty courteurs of age, and of assise,
Liche high and brode, and as I me advise,
The goldin love, and ledin love they hight,
The tone was sad, the t'oðir glad and light.

Yes draw your hert, with all your force and might
To lustinesse, and ben as ye have seid,
And thinke that I no drope of favour hight, 1320
Ne ner had unto your desire obeide,
Til sodenly me thought me was affraied
To sene you waxe so dede of countinaunce,
And pite bade me done you some plesaunce.

Oute of her shrine she rose from deth to live,
And in mine ere ful privily she spake,
Doth not your servaunt hens away to drive,
Rosial (qð she) and than mine herte brake,
For tendiriche, and where I founde moch lacke
In your persone, then I my self bethought, 1330
And saide this is the man myne herte hath sought.

Gramercy Pite might I not suffice
To yewe due laude unro thy shrine of golde,
God wotte I wold, for sith that ye did rise
From deth to live for me I am behold
To thankin you a thousand tymis tolde,
And eke my lady Rosial the shene,
Whiche hath in comforte fet mine herte I wene.

And here I make myne protestacion,
And depely swere as mine powir to bene 1340
Faithful devoide of variacion,
And her forbere in angir or in tene,
And serviceable to my world's quene,
With al my reson and intelligence,
To done her honour high and reverence.

I had not spoke so sone the worde, but she,
My soverain did thanke me hertily,
And said abide, ye shal dwelle still with me,
Till seson come of May, for than truly.
The king of love and al his company 1350
Shall holde his feste ful rially and welle,
And there I bode til that the seson felle.

ON May-day whan the larke began to ryse,
To Matins went the lusty Nightingale,
Within a temple shapin hauthorn wise,
He might not slepe in all the nyghtirtale,
But Domine labia gan he crie and gale,
My lippis opin, lord of love, I crie,
And let my mouth thy prising now bewrye.

The Egle fang Venite bodics al, 1360
And let us joye to love that is oure helth
And to the deske anon they gan to fall,
And who came late he precid in by stelth,
Then saied the Faucon our owen hertis welth
Domine Dominus noster, I wote,
Tē be the God that donne us brenne thus hote.

Cæli enarrant said the Poppingay,
Your might is told in heven and firmament,
And then came in the goldfinche freshe and gay
And saied this Psalme with hertely glad intent,
Domini est terra, This latin intent,
The God of love hath yerth in govirnaunce,
And than the Wren gan scippin and to daunce,

Jube Domine, O Lorde of love I pray
Commaunde me: wel this lesson for to rede,
This legende is of al that woldin dye
Martirs for love, God yef the soulis spede,
And to The Venus singe we oute of drede,
By influence of al thy vertue grete,
Beseeching The to kepe us in our hete. 1380

The seconde lesson Robin Redebreste sang,
Hail to the God and Goddes of our lay,
And to the lectorn amorily he sprang,
Hail (qð he) O thou freshe selson of May,
Our monith glad, that singin on the spray,
Hail to the flouris rede and white and blewe,
Whiche by ther vertue makith our lust new.

The thirde lesson the Turtill dove toke up,
And therat lough the Mavis in a sorne,
He said O God as mote I dine or suppe, 1390
This solishe Dove wil gife us al an horne,
There bin right here a M. bettir borne
To rede this lesson, whiche as welas he,
And eke as hote, can love in al degre.

The Turtill dove said, welcom, welcom May,
Gladfom and light to lovirs that ben trewe,
I thanke the lord of love that doth purvey
For me to rede this lesson al of dewe,
For in gode soth of corage I pursue
To serve my make, tyll deth us must departe, —
And than Tu autem sang he al aparte.

Te Deum amoris sang the Thrustil cocke, Tuball him self the firste Musician
With key of armony coude not on locke
So swete a tewne as that the Thrustil can,
The lorde of love we praisin (qð he) than,

And so done al the foulis gret and lre
Honour we May in fals lovirs dispite.

Dominus regnavit said the Pecoche there,
The lord of love that mighty prince is, 1410
He is riccid here and every where.

Nowe Jubilate sang, what menith this?
Said than the Lynet, welcom Lord of blisse,
Oute sterte the Owle with Benedicite,
What menith al this mery tare (qð he.)

Laudate sang the Larke with voice ful shril,
And eke the Kight O amirabile,
This quire wil throw min cris pers and thril,
But what? welcom this May selson (qð he)
And honoure to the lord of love mote be, 1420
That hath this feste so solempne and so hie,
Amen said al, and so said eke the Pic.

And forth the Cockowe gan procede anon,
With Benedictus thanking God in hast,
That in this May wolde visite them echon,
And gladdin them al while the fest shal last,
And therewithal a laughtir oute he bralle,
I thanke it God that I shuld ende the song,
And al the Service whiche hath ben so long.

Thus sang they al the service of the felle, 1430
And that was done right erly to my dome,
And furth goth al the courte both moit and lest,
To fetch the flouris freshe, and braunch, and blome,
And namely hauthorn brought both page and grome,
With freshe garlantis party blew and white
And than rejoylin in ther grete delite.

Eke eche at othir threwe the flouris bright,
The Prymerose, the Violete and the gold,
So than as I beheld the roial sight,
My lady gan me sodenly behold, 1440
And with a trewe love, plitid many' a solde,
She smot me through the very herte as blive,
And Venus yet I thanke I am alive.

Explicit.

CHAUCER'S Dreame, never before the Year 1597. Printed.
That which heretofore hath gone under the name of his Dreame, is the Book of the Duchesse : or the Death of Blanch, Duchesse of Lancaster.

This Dreame devised by CHAUCER, semeth to be a covert report of the Marriage of John of Gaunt the King's sonne, with Blanch the daughter of Henry Duke of Lancaster, who after long love, (during the time wherof the Poet faineth them to be dead) were in the end by consent of friends happily married: figured by a bird bringing in her bill an hearbe, which restored them to lyfe againe. Here also is shewed CHAUCER's match with a certain Gentlewoman, who although she was a stranger, was notwithstanding so well liked and loved of the Lady Blanch, and her Lord, as CHAUCER himselfe also was, that gladly they concluded a marriage betweene them.

When Flora the quene of plesaunce,
Had whole achievid th' obeysaunce,
Of the fresh and the new soun,
Thorow out every region,
And with her mantle whole covert
That wintir made had discoverte,
Of avinture withoutin light,
In May I lay upon a night,
Alone, and on my lady thought,
And how the Lord that her ywrought,
Couth well entayle in Imagery,
And shewid had grete maistiry,
When he in so litil a space
Made such a body and a face,
So grete beautie with swich fetures,
More than in othir creatures.
And in my thoughtis as I lay,
Within a lodge out of the way,
Beside a well in a forest,
Where after hunting I toke rest,
Nature and kind to in me wrought,
That halfe on slepe they me ybrought,
And gan to dreame to my thinking
With mind of knowliche like making:
For what I dremid, as me thought,
I saw it, and I sleptin nought,
Wherefore is yet my full beleve,
That some gode spirit that ilke eve
By mene of some curious port,
Bare me, where I saw payne and sport:
But whether it were I woke or slept,
Well wot I oft I lough and wept,
Wherefore I woll in remembraunce,
Put whole the payne, and the plesaunce,
Which was to me axin and hele,
Would God ye wist it everydele;
Or at the lest, ye might o night
Of such anothir have a sight,
Although it were to you a payne,
Yet on the mo'row, ye would be fayne,
And wish that it might long endure,
Then might ye say ye had gode cure,
For he that dremes, and wenes he se,
Mochil the bettir yet maie he Ywit what, and of whom, and where,
And eke the lasse it woll hindere,
To thinke I se this with mine eene,
Iwis this may not dremè kene,

But signe or a signifaunce,
Of hasty thing souning plesaunce;
For on this wise upon a night,
As ye have herd withoutin light,
Not all wakyng, ne full on slepe,
About such hour as lovirs wepe,
And crie after ther ladies grace,
Befell me tho this wondir cace,
Which ye shall here and all the wise,
So wholly as I can devise:
10 In playne English evill writtin,
For slepe writir well ye wittin
Excusid is, though he do mis,
More than one whiche that waking is,
Wherefore here of your gentilnesse,
I you requyre my boistounnesse
Ye lettin passe, as thinge rude,
And herith what I woll conclude,
And of the' endityng taketh no hede,
20 Ne of the termes, so God you spede,
But let all passe as nothing were,
For thus befell, as you shall here. 70

Within an yle methought I was,
Where wall, and yate was all of glasse,
And so was closid round about,
That levelesse none come in ne out;
Uncouth and straunge to behold,
30 For every yate of fine gold,
A thousand fanis, aie turning,
Entunid had, and briddes singing,
Divers, and on eche fane a paire,
With opin mouth again the aire;
And of a sute were all the toures,
80 Subtily corvin after floures,
Of uncouth colours, during aye,
That never ben none sene in May,
With many a small turret hie;
40 But man on live could I non sic,
Ne creturis, save ladies play,
Which werin such of ther array,
That as me thought of godelihed,
They passeden all, and womanlied, 90
For to behold them daunce and sing,
It semid like none erthly thing,
Such was ther uncouth countinaunce,
In every play of right usaunce,

And

And of one age everichone
 They semid all save onely one,
 Which had of yeris suffisaunce,
 For she might neythir sing ne daunce,
 But yet her countenaunce was so glad,
 As she so fewe yeris had had,
 As any ladie that was there,
 And as litil it did her dere,
 Of lustines to laugh and tale,
 As she had full stufid a male
 Of disportis and new playis:
 Faire had she ben in her dayis,
 And maistresse semid well to be
 Of all that lusty companie,
 And so she might, I you ensure,
 For one the conningilt creature
 She was, and so said everichone,
 That er her knew, there failid none,
 For she was sober, and well avised,
 And from every fault disguised,
 And nothing used but faith and truth,
 That she n'as young it was grete ruth,
 For every where, and in ech place,
 She governid her, that in grace
 She stode alway with pore and riche,
 That at a word was none herliche,
 Ne halfe so' able maistres to be,
 To such a lusty companie.

Befell me so, when I avised
 Yhad the yle that me suffised,
 And whole th' estate every where,
 That in the lusty yle was there,
 Which was more wondir to devise,
 Than is the joyous paradise,
 I dare well say; for floure ne tre,
 Ne thing wherein plesaunce might be,
 There faylid none, for every wight,
 Had they desirid, day and night,
 Richis and hele, beauty and ese,
 With every thing that them might plesse,
 But thinke and have, it cost no more,
 In such a country there before
 Had I not ben ne herdin tell,
 That livis creature might dwell.
 And when I had thus all about
 The yle avised thoroughout,
 The state, and how they were arayed,
 In my hert I wexe well appayed,
 And in my selfe I me assured,
 That in my body' I was well ured,
 Sithin I might have such a grace,
 To se the ladies and the place,
 Which were so faire, I you ensure,
 That to my dome though that nature
 Would evir strive and do her paine,
 She should not con ne mow attaine
 The lest feture for to amend,
 Though she would all her conning spende,
 That unto beauteie might availe,
 It were but paine and lost travaile,
 Such part in ther nativite
 Was then alargid of beauteie,
 And eke they had a thing notable,
 Unto ther deth ay durable,
 And was, that ther beauty should dure,
 Which was never sene in creature,
 Save onily there (as I trow)
 It ne hath not be wist ne know,
 Wherefore I praise with ther conning
 That during beauteie, richè thing,
 Had they ben of ther lives certaine,
 They had ben quite of every paine,

And when I wend thus all have sene,
 The state, the riches, that might bene,
 That me thought impossible were
 To se one thing more than was there,
 That to beauteie or glad conning
 Serve or availe might any thing,
 All sodainly, as I there stode,
 This lady, that couth so much gode,
 Unto me came with smiling chere,
 And said benedicite! this yere
 Saw I never man here but you,
 Tell me how ye come hiðir now?
 And your name, and where that ye dwell?
 And whom ye seke eke mote ye tell,
 And how ye come be to this place,
 The soth well told may cause you grace,
 And ellis ye mote prisoner be Unto the ladies here, and me,
 That have the governaunce of this yle:
 And with that word she gan to smile,
 And so did all the lusty rout
 Of ladies that stode her about.
 Madame (qð I) this night ypast,
 Lodgid I was and slepte fast,
 In a forest beside a well,
 And now am here, how should I tell,
 Wot I not by whose ordinance,
 But onely fortune's purveiance,
 Which puttith many, as I gesle,
 To travaile, paine, and businesse,
 And lettith nothing for ther truth,
 But some sleeth eke, and that is ruth,
 Wherefore I doubt her brittilnes,
 Her variance and unstedfastnes,
 So that I am as yet afraid,
 And of my beyng here amaid,
 For wondir thing it semith me,
 Thus many fresh ladies to se,
 So faire, so cunning, and so yong,
 And no man dwelling them among:
 N'ot I not how I hiðir come,
 Madame (qð I) this all and some,
 What should I fane a long processe,
 To you that seme such a princesse?
 What plesith you commaund or say,
 Here I am redy to obay,
 To my powir, and all fulfill,
 And prisonir bide at your will,
 Till you duly enformid be
 Of every thing ye aske me.
 This lady there right well apaid,
 Me by the hande ytoke, and laid,
 Welcome prisoner adventurus,
 Right glad am I ye have said thus,
 And for ye doubt me to displese,
 I will assay to do you ese:
 And with that word, ye right anon,
 She, and the ladies everichon,
 Assemblid, and to counsaile went,
 And aftir that sone for me sent,
 And to me said on this manere,
 All word for word, as ye shall here.
 To se you here us thinke marvaile,
 And how withoutin bore or saile,
 By any subtilty or wyle,
 Ye get have entre in this yle,
 But not for that, yet shall ye se,
 That we gentill women ybe,
 Loth to displese in any wight,
 Notwithstanding our grete right,
 And for ye shall well undirstond
 The olde custome of this lond,

Which

Which hath continued many yere,
Ye shall well were that with us here
Ye may not bide, for causis twaine,
Which we be purposed you to saine.

The one is this, our ordinance,
Which is of long continuance,
Ne wold not, sothly we you tell,
That no man here among us dwell,
Wherefore ye mote nedis retourne,
In no wise may you here sojourne.

The othir is eke, that our Quene,
Out of the Relme, as ye maie sene,
Is, and may be to us a charge,
If we let goe you here at large,
For whichè cause the more we doubt
To doe a fault while she is out,
Or suffir that may be noysance,
Againe our old accustomance.

And when I had these causis twaine
Yherd, O God, what mochil paine
All sodainly about mine hert
There came at onis, and how smert!
In creping soft as who should slele,
Or doe me robbe of all mine hele,
And made me in my thought so fraid,
That in courage I stode dismaid.
And standing thus, as was my grace,
A Lady came more than apace,
With a huge preisè her about,
And told how that the Quene without
Was arivid, and would come in,
Well were they that hiðir might twin,
They hied so they would not abide
The bridling ther horse to ride,
By five, by sixe, by two, by thre,
There was not one abode with me,
The quene to mete everichone

They went, and bode with me not one,
And I went astir a soft pase,
Imagining how to purchase
Grace of the Quene, there to abide,
Till gode fortune some happy guide
Me sendin might, that would me bring
Where I was borne to my womn ng,
For way ne sote ne knew I none,
Ne whithirward I n'ist to gone,
For all was Se about the yle,
No wondir though me list not smile,
Seing the case uncouth and straunge,
And so in like a perilous chaunge,
Imagining thus walking alone,
I saw the Ladies everichone,
So that I might somewhat offer,
Sone astir that I drew me nere,
And tho I was ware of the Quene,
And how the Ladies on ther knene,
With joyous words, gladly advised,
Her welcomed so that it suffised,
Though she the princes whole had be
Of all environed is with Se:
And thus arising, with chere sad,
All sodainly I was right glad,
That gretir joy, as mote I thrive,
I trow had nevir man on live,
Than I tho, -ne an hert more light,
When of my lady I had sight,
Which with the Quene ycome was there,
And in one clothing both they were,
A knight also there well besene,
I saw that come was with the Quene,
Of whom the Ladies of that yle
Had hugè wondir a long while,
Till at the last right sobirly
The Quene her self full cunningly,

240 With softè wordis in gode wise,
Said to the Ladies yong and nise,
My sistirs, how it hath befall,
I trow ye know it one and all,
That of long time here have I bene,
Within this yle bidding as Quene,
Living at ese, that nevir wight
More parfit joy havin ne might,
And to you ben of govirnance,
Such as you found in whole plesance,

250 In evèry thing as ye know,
Astir our custome and our low,
Which how they first yfoundin were,
I trow ye wote all the manere,
And who the Quene is of this yle,
As I have ben this longè while,
Ech sevin yeres mote of usage,
Visit the heavenly armitage,
Which on a rock so high ystonds,
In strangè Se out from all londs,

260 That to makin the pilgrimage,
Is called a long per'ulous viage;
For if the wind be not gode frend,
The journey duris to the end
Of him whichè that it undirtakes,
Of twenty thousand one not scapes,
Upon which rock growith a tre,
That certaine yeres beres applis thre,
Which thre applis who so may have,
Ben from all displeaunce ysave,
That in the sevin yere may fall,
270 This wote ye well bothe one and all,
For the first apple and the hext,
Which ygrowith unto you next,
Yhath thre vertues notable,
And kepith youth aie durable,
Beauty and loke evir in one,
And is the best in everichone.

The second apple red and grene,
Onely with lokis of your yene
You nourishis in grete plesance,
280 Bettir than Partridge or Fesaunce,
And fedis every liv'is wight,
Plesantly onely with the sight.

And the third apple of the thre,
Which growith lowist on the tre,
Who it beris ne may not faile,
That to his plesance may availe,
So your plesure and beauty rich,
Your during youth evir yliche,
Your truth, your cunning, and your wele,
290 Hath aye flourid, and your gode hele,
Without sicknes, or displeaunce,
Or thing that to you was noysaunce,
So that you have as goddesles,
Livid above all princesses:

Now is befall, as ye may se,
To gathir these said applis thre
I have not failed againe the day,
Thithirward is to take the way,
Wening to spede as I had oft,
300 But when I come, I find aloft
My sistir, which that here ystands,
Having those applis in her hands,
Arising them, and nothing said,
But lokid as she were well paid:
And as I stode her to behold,
Thinking how my joyis were cold,
Sith I those applis have ne might,
Evin with that so came this knight,
And in his armes of me aware 310 Me toke, and to his ship me bare,
And said, though him I ner had sene,
Yet had I long his lady ben,

Wherefore

Wherefore I should with him ywend,
 And he would to his liv'is end
 My servant be, and gan to sing,
 As one that had wonne a rich thing :
 Tho were my spirits fro me gone
 So sodainly everichone,
 That in me apperid but deth,
 For I felt neithir life ne breth,
 Ne gode ne harme none I knewe,
 The sodaine paine me was so new,
 That had not the hasty grace be
 Of this lady, that fro the tre
 Of her gentillesse so hyid,
 Me to comfort, I had dyid,
 And of her thre applis she one
 Into mine hand there put anone,
 Which brought againe my mind and breth,
 And me recovered from the deth ;
 Wherefore to her so am I hold,
 That for her all things do I wold,
 For she was lech of all my smert,
 And from grete paine so quite mine hert,
 And as God wote, right as ye here,
 Me to comfort with frendly chere
 She did her prowesse and her might,
 And truly eke so did this knight,
 In that he couth, and oftin said,
 That of my wo he was ill paid,
 And cursed the ship that them there brought,
 The mast, the mastir that it wrought ;
 And as ech thing mote have an end,
 My sistir here your brothir frend,
 Con with her words so womanly
 This knight entrete and cunningly,
 For mine honour and his also,
 And said that with her we should go
 Both in her ship, where she was brought,
 Which was so wondirfully wrought,
 So clene, so rich, and so araid,
 That we were both content and paid,
 And me to comfort and to plesse,
 And mine hert for to put at ese,
 She toke grete paine in litil while,
 And thus hath brought us to this yle,
 As ye may se : wherfore echone
 I pray you thanke her one and one,
 As hertly as ye can devise,
 Or imagine in any wise.
 At once there tho men mightin seen,
 A world of Ladies fall on kneen,
 'Fore my Lady that there about
 Was left none standing in the rout,
 But altogether they went at ones
 To knele, they spared not for the stones,
 Ne for estate, ne for ther blode,
 Well shewid there they couth much gode :
 To my Lady they made such fest,
 And with such wordis, that the lest
 So frendly and so faithfully
 Ysaid was, and so cunningly,
 That wondir was seing ther youth,
 To here the language that they couth ;
 And wholly how they governed were,
 In thanking of my Lady there,
 And said by will and maundement,
 They were at her commaundement,
 Which was to me as grete a joy,
 As winning of the rounce of Troy
 Was to the hardy Grekis strong,
 When they it wan with sieg long,
 To se my Lady in such a place,
 And so recevid as she was.
 And when they talkid had a while
 Of this and that, and of the yle,

My lady, and the ladies there,
 Altogithir as they ywere,
 The Quene her self began to play,
 And to the agid lady say :
 Now semith you not gode it were,
 Sith we be altogithir here,
 To ordaine and devise the best,
 To set this knight and me at rest,
 For woman is a feble wight
 To rene a warre against a knight,
 And sith he here is in this place,
 At my lest in dangir, or grace,
 It were to me grete villany,
 To do him any tiranny ;
 But faine I would, now will ye here,
 In his owne country that he were,
 And I in pece, and he at ese,
 This were a way us both to plesse :
 If it might be, I you beseeche,
 With him hereof you fall in speche.
 This lady tho began to smile,
 Avising her a litil while,
 And with glad chere she said anone,
 Madam, I will unto him gone,
 And with him speke, and oftin seke,
 What he desiris every dele :
 And sobirly this lady tho
 Her selfe, and othir ladies two
 She toke with her, and with sad chere,
 Said to the knight on this manere.
 Sir, the grete princes of this yle,
 Whom for your plesance many mile
 Ye fought have, as I undirfond,
 Till at the last ye have her fond,
 Me sent hath here, and ladies twaine,
 To herin all thing that ye faine,
 And for what cause ye have her fought,
 Faine wold she wote, and whole your thought,
 And why you do her all this wo,
 And for what cause you be her so,
 And why of every wight unware,
 By force ye to your ship her bare,
 That she so nigh ywas agone,
 That mind ne spech ne had she none,
 But as a painfull creature,
 Dying, abode her advinture,
 That her to se indure that paine,
 Here we all say unto you plaine,
 Right on your selfe ye did amille,
 Seing how she a princes is ?
 This knight the which ycowth his gode,
 Right of his truth merid his blode,
 That pale he woxe as any led,
 And lok't as tho he wold be ded,
 Blode was there none in nothir cheke,
 Wordlesse he was and semid sicke,
 And so it provid well he was,
 For without moving any paas,
 All sodainly as thing dying,
 He fell at onis downe fowning,
 That for his wo this lady fraid
 Unto the quene her hyed and said,
 Cometh on anon as have you blisse,
 But ye be wise, thing is amille,
 This knight is ded or will be sore,
 Lo ! where he lyith in a swone,
 Withoutin word, or answiring
 To that I have said any thing !
 Wherefore I doubt moche that the blame
 Might be hindiring to your name,
 Which flourid hath so many yere,
 So longe that for nothing here
 I would in no wise that he dyed.
 Wherefore it gode were that he hyed,

His ye

His life to save at the lest,
 And after that his wo be cest,
 Commaundith him to voide, or dwell,
 For in no wise dar: I more mell
 Of thing wherein such perill is,
 As like is now to fall of this.
 This Quene right tho full of grete fere,
 With all the ladies present there,
 Unto the knight came where he lay,
 And made a Lady to him say:
 Lo! here the Quene awake for shame,
 What will you doe, is this gode game?
 Why lye you here, what is your mind?
 Now is well fene your wit is blind,
 To se so many Ladies here,
 And ye to make none othir chere;
 But as ye set them all at nought,
 Arise, for his love that you bought:
 But what she said, a word not one
 He spake, ne answere gave her none.
 The Quene of very pitty tho,
 Her worship, and his life also
 To save there she did her paine,
 And quoke for fere, and gan to faine:
 For woe alas! what shall I doe!
 What shall I say this man unto!
 If he die here, lost is my name,
 How shal I play this perillous game?
 If any thing be here amisse,
 It shall be said it rigour is,
 Whereby my name impayrin might,
 And like to die eke is this knight:
 And with that word her hand she laid
 Upon his brest, and to him said,
 Awake my knight, lo! it am I,
 That to you speke, now tell me why
 Ye faire thus, and this paine endure,
 Seing you be in country sure,
 Among such fiends that would you hele,
 Your hert's ese eke and your wele?
 And if I wist what you might ese,
 Or know the thing that you might plesse,
 I you ensure it should not faile,
 That to your hele you might availe:
 Wherefore with all my hert I pray
 Ye rise, and let us talke and play,
 And se how many Ladies here
 Be comen for to make gode chere.
 All was for nought, for still as ston
 He lay, and word ne spoke he none,
 Long while was or he might braid,
 And of all that the Quene had said
 He wist no word, but at the last,
 O mercy wise he cryid fast,
 That pittie was his voice to here,
 Or to behold his painefull chere,
 Which was not feined was well to sein,
 Both by his visage and his eyn,
 Which on the Quene at once he cast,
 And sighid as he would to braft,
 And after that eke he stright so,
 That wondir was to se his wo,
 For sithin that payne was first named,
 Was ner more wofull payne attained,
 For with voyce ded he gan to plaine,
 And to himselfe these wordis faine;
 I wofull wight full of malure,
 Am worse than ded, and yet I dure,
 And maugre any paine or deth,
 Against my will I fele my breth:
 Why n'am I ded sith I ne serve,
 And sith my lady will me serve?
 Where art thou deth, art thou agast?
 Well shall we mete yet at the last,

Though thou The hide, it is for nought,
 For where thou dwelst, thou shalt be fought,
 Maugre thy subtrill double face,
 Here will I die right in this place, 610
 To thy dishonour and myne ese,
 Thy mannir is no wight to plesse,
 What nedis The sith I The seche,
 So The to hide my payne to eche?
 And well wost thou I will not live,
 Who would me all this world here give,
 For I have with my cowardise
 Lost joy, and hele, and my servise,
 And made my soveraigne Lady so,
 That while she lives I trow my fo 620
 She will be evir to her end,
 Thus have I neithir joy ne frend;
 Wote I not whethir hast or sloth
 Hath causid this now by my troth,
 For at the hermitage full hie,
 When I her saw first with myne eye,
 I hyid till I was aloft,
 And made my pace small and soft,
 Till in mine armes I had her fast,
 And to my ship bare at the last, 630
 Whereof she was displeid so,
 That endles there semid her wo:
 And I thereof had so grete fere,
 That me repent that I come there,
 Which hast I trow gan her displese,
 And is the cause of my disese:
 And with that word he gan to cry,
 Now deth, deth, come twyis or thry,
 And morrid I n'ot what of slouth,
 And even with that the Quene of routh 640
 Him in her armis toke and sayd,
 Now mine owne knight be' not ill apayd,
 That I a lady to you sent,
 To have knowledge of your entent,
 For in gode faith I men't but well,
 And would ye wist it every dele,
 Nor will not do to you ywis,
 And with that word she gan him kisse,
 And prayed him rise, and said she would
 His welfare by her truth, and told 650
 Him how she was for his disese
 Right fory, and faine would him plesse,
 His lyfe to save: these wordis tho,
 She said to him, and many mo,
 In comforting, for from the paine,
 She would he were delivered faine;
 The knight tho up ycast his een,
 And when he saw it was the Quene,
 That to him had these wordis said,
 Right in his wo he gan to braid, 660
 And him up dressis for to knele,
 The Quene avising wondir wele:
 But as he rose he overthrew,
 Wherefore the Quene yet eft anew
 Him in her armis anone toke,
 And pitiously gan on him loke,
 But for all that nothyng she sayd,
 Ne spake nor like she were well payd,
 Ne no chere made, nor sad, ne light, 670
 But all in one to every wight,
 There was fene conning, with estate,
 In her without noyse or debate,
 For save onely a loke piteous
 Of womanhed undispiteous, 680
 That she showid in countenance,
 For semed her hert from obeisance,
 And not for that she did her reine,
 Him to recovir from the peine,
 And his hert for to put at large,
 For her entent was to his barge 680
 Him

Him for to bryng agaynst the eve,
 With certaine ladies, and take leve,
 And pray him of his gentilnesse,
 To suffir her thenceforth in pece,
 As othir Princis had before,
 And from thenceforth for evirmore,
 She would him worship in all wise,
 That gentilnesse ymight devise,
 And payne her wholly to fulfill,
 In honour, his plesure, and will.
 And during thus this knightis wo,
 Present the Quene and othir mo,
 My lady' and many' an othir wight,
 Ten thousand shippis at a sight,
 I saw come oer the wawy fode
 With sayle and ore, that as I stode
 Them to behold, I gan marvaile,
 From whom might come so many' a saile,
 For sith the tyme that I was bore,
 Such a navie there ne're before
 Had I not sene, ne so arayed,
 That for the sight my hert yplayed,
 Aye to and fro within my brest,
 For joy, long was or it would rest,
 For there was saylis full of floures,
 Aftir castils with hugè toures,
 Yfeming full of armis bright,
 That wondir lusty was the sight,
 With large toppis, and mastis long,
 Richly depeint, and reare among
 At certaine timis gan repayre,
 Sma'è birdis doune from the aire,
 And on the shippis bounds about
 Yfate and song with voyce full out
 Ballades and Layes right joyously,
 As they couth in ther harmony,
 That you to write that I there se,
 Mine excuse is, it may not be.
 For why? the matrir were to long,
 To name the birds and write ther song;
 Whercof anon the tydings there
 Unto the Quene sone brought ywere,
 With many' alas, and many' a doubt,
 Shewing the shippis there without;
 Tho gan the agid lady wepe,
 And said alas! our joy on slepe,
 Sone shal be brought, ye long or night,
 For we discried ben by this knight,
 For certes it may none othir be,
 But he is of yond companie,
 And they be come him here to seche,
 And with that word her faylid speche;
 Without reme'dy we be destroid,
 Full oft said all, and gan conclude,
 Wholy at onis at the last,
 That best was shifit ther yatis fast,
 And arme them all in gode langage,
 As they had done of old usage,
 And of fayre wordis make ther shor,
 This was ther counsaile and the knot,
 And othir purpose toke they none,
 But armid thus forth they all gone
 Toward the wallis of the yle,
 But or they comin there long while,
 They mettin the grete lord of bove,
 That callid is the God of Love,
 That them avisid with such chere,
 Right as he with them angry were,
 Avayled them not ther wals of glasse,
 This mighty lord let not to passe,
 The shuttyng of ther yatis fast,
 All they had ordained was but wast,
 For when his ships had foundin land,
 This lord anon with bow in hand,

Into this yle with hugè prefe,
 Yhyid fast, and would not cese,
 Till he came there the knight ylay,
 Of Quene ne lady by the way
 Toke he no hede but forth he past,
 And yet all followed at the last, 760
 And when he came where lay the knight,
 Well shewid he, he had grete might,
 And forth the Quene callid anone,
 And all the ladies everichone;
 And to them said, is not this routh,
 To se my servaunt for his trowth
 Thus lene, thus sicke, and in this payne,
 And wor not unto whom to playne,
 Save onely one withoutin mo,
 Which might him hele, and is his so? 770
 And with that word, his hevy brow
 He shewed the Quene, and lokid row;
 This mighty lord forth tho anone,
 With o loke her faultis echone,
 He can her shew in litil spech,
 Commaunding her to be his lech,
 Withoutin more, shortly to say,
 He thought the Quene sone should obay,
 And in his hond he shoke his bow,
 And said right sone he would be know, 780
 And for she had so long refused
 His service, and his lawes not used,
 He let her wit that he was wroth,
 And bent his bow and forth he goth
 A pace or two, and evin there
 A large draught, up to his ere,
 He drew, and with an arrow ground
 Bothe sharpe and new the Quene a wound
 He gave, that perfed unto the hert,
 Which aftirward full sore gan smert, 790
 And was not whole of many yere,
 And even with that, be of gode chere,
 My knight, qð he, I will The hele,
 And The restore to parfite wele,
 And for ech payne thou hast endured,
 To have two joies thou art enured;
 And forth he passid by the rout,
 With sobir chere walking about:
 And what he said I thought to here,
 Well wist he which his servaunts were, 800
 And as he passed anon he fond,
 My lady', and her toke by the hond,
 And made her chere as a Goddes,
 And of beaute called her princes,
 Of bounty eke gave her the name,
 And sayd there was nothyng to blame
 In her, but she was vertuuous,
 Saving she would no pity use,
 Which was the cause that he her sought,
 To put that far out of her thought; 810
 And sithin she had whole richesse
 Of womanhed, and trendlinesse,
 He said it was nothing siting,
 To void pity his owne kyggyng,
 And gan her prach, and with her play,
 And of her beauty told her aie,
 And said she was a creature,
 Of whom the name should endure,
 And in bokis full of plesaunce,
 Be put for er in remembraunce, 820
 And as me thoughtin more frendly,
 Unto my lady, and godelily
 He spake, than any that was there,
 And for the' applis, I trow, it were,
 That she had in possession,
 Wherefore long in proceffion,
 Many a pace arme undir other,
 He welke, and so did with nene other,
 7 H But

But what he would commaund or say;
 Forthwith nedis all must obay,
 And what he desired at the lest
 Of my lady, was by request,
 And when they long together had bene,
 He brought my lady to the Quene,
 And to her said, so God you spede,
 Shew grace and consent, that is nede;
 My lady tho full conningly,
 Right well avised, and womanly
 Downe gan to knele upon the floures,
 Which Aprill nourished had with shoures,
 And to this mighty lord gan say,
 That plesith you, I woll obay,
 And me restraine from othir thought,
 As ye woll all thyng shall be wrought,
 And with that word kneling she quoke.
 That mighty lord in armes her toke,
 And said you have a servaunt one,
 That truir living is there none,
 Wherefore gode were, seing his trowth,
 That on his painis ye had routh,
 And purpose you to here his spech,
 Fully avised him to lech,
 For of one thyng ye may be sure,
 He will be yours, while he may dure:
 And with that word right on his game
 Me thought he lough, and told my name,
 Which was to me marvaile, and fere,
 That what to do I ne wist there,
 Ne whethir was me bet or none
 There to abide, or thus to gone,
 For well wend I my lady wold
 Imagin, or deme, I had told
 My counsaile whole, or made complaint
 Unto that lord, that mighty saint,
 So verily ech thyng unfought,
 He said, as he had knowne my thought,
 And told my trowth and mine unese,
 But than I couth have for mine ese,
 Though I had studied all a weke,
 Well wist that lord that I was seke,
 And would be lechid wondir faine,
 No man me blame, mine was the paine:
 And when this lord had all ysaid,
 And long while with my lady plaid,
 She gan to smile with spirit glade,
 This was the answer that she made,
 Which put me there in double peine,
 That what to do, ne what to seine
 Wist I not, ne what was the best,
 Ferre was my hert then fro his rest;
 For as I thought, that smiling signe
 Was token, that the hert encline
 Would to requestis resonable,
Because smiling is favorable
To every thing that shall thrive;
 So thoughtin I tho anon blive,
That wofuldeste answer in no toun
Was tyme for obligation,
 Ne callid surety in no wise,
 Amongst them that callid ben wife.
 Thus was I in a joyous dout,
 Sure and unsurist of that rout,
 Right as mine hert ythought it were,
 So more or lesse wexin my fere,
 That if one thought ymade it wele,
 Anothir shent it everydele,
 Till at the last I couth no more,
 But purposed as I did before,
 To serve truly my lyv's space,
 Awaiting er the yere of grace,
 Which may yfall yet or I serve,
 If that it plesse her that I serve,

And servid have, and woll do ever,
 For thyng is none, that me is lever,
 Than is her service, whose presence
 Mine heven is whole, and her absence
 An hell all full of divers paines,
 Whych to the deth full oft me straines:
 Thus in my thoughtis, as I stode,
 That unneth felt I harme ne gode,
 I saw the Quene a litil paas
 Come where this mighty lord ywas,
 And knelid doune in presence there
 Of all the ladies that there were,
 With sobir countinaunce avised,
 In few wordis that well suffised,
 And to this lord anon present
 A bill, wherein whole her entent
 Was writtin, and how she besought,
 As he knew every will and thought,
 That of his godhed and his grace
 He would forgyve all old trespas,
 And undisplest be of time past,
 For she would evir be stedfast,
 And in his service to the deth
 Use every thought while she had breth;
 And sight and wept, and said no more,
 Within was writtin all the sore:
 At whyche bill the lord gan smyle,
 And said he would within that yle
 Be lord and syre, both est and west,
 And cal'd it there his new conquest,
 And in grete counsell toke the Quene,
 Long were the talis them betwene,
 And ovir her bill he red thrise,
 And wondir gladly gan devise
 Her fetures faire, and her visage,
 And bad gode-thrift on that Image,
 And saied he trowid her compleint
 Should astir cause her be corseint,
 And in his sleve he put the bill,
 Was there none that yknew his will,
 And forth he walke apace about,
 Beholding all the lusty rout,
 Halfe in a thought with smiling chere;
 Till at the last, as ye shall here,
 He turned unto the Quene ageine,
 And said to morne here in this pleine,
 I woll that ye be, and all yours,
 That purposid ben to were flours,
 Or of my lusty colour use,
 It may not be to you excuse,
 Ne to none of yours in no wife,
 That able be to my servise,
 For as I said have here before,
 I will be lord for evirmore
 Of you, and of this yle, and all,
 And of all yours, that havin shall Joy, pece, or ese, or in plesauce
 Your livis use without noysaunce,
 Here will I in state be ysene,
 And turned his visage to the Quene,
 And you give knowledge of my will,
 And a full answer of your bill;
 Was there no nay, ne wordis none,
 But very' obeisaunt femed echone,
 The Quene and othir that were there,
 Well semid it they had grete fere,
 And there toke lodging every knight,
 Was none departid of that night,
 And some to rede old Romances,
 Them occupied for ther plesances,
 Some to make veretaies and laies,
 And some to othir diverse plaies:
 And I to me a Romance toke,
 And as I reding was the boke,

Methought the spherè had so run,
That it was rising of the Sun,
And such a pres into the plaine
Assemble gone, that with grete paine
One might for othir gone stand,
Ne none take othir by the hand,
Withoutin they distourbid were,
So huge and gret the pres was there.

And aftir that within two houres,
This mighty lord clad all in floures
Of divers colours many a paire,
In his estate up in the aire,
Well nigh two fathom, as his hight,
He set him there in all ther sight,
And for the Quene and for the Knight,
And for my lady and every wight,
In hast he sent, so that ner one
Was there absent, but come echone:
And when they thus assemblid were,
As ye have herd me say you here,
Without more tarrying on hight,
There to be sene of every wight,
Up stode among the pres above
A counsaylir, servaunt of love,
Which semid well, of gret estate,
And shewid there, how no debate
Othir then godely might be used,
In gentilnesse and be excused,
Wherefore he said his lord's will
Was every wight there should be fill,
And in pees, and of one accord,
And thus commaundid at a word,
And can his tongue to swiche language
To turne, that yet in all mine age
Herd I never so conningly
Man speke, ne halfe so faithfully,
For every thing he said there,
Semid as it infelid were,
Or approvid for very trew:
Swiche was his cunning language newe,
And well according to his chere,
That where I be, me thinke I here,
Him yet alway, when I mine one,
In any place may be alone:
First con he of the lusty yle,
All the astate in lityl whyle
Reherse, and wholly every thing,
That causid there his lord's coming,
And every wele and every wo,
And for what cause ech thing was so,
Well shewed he there in etic spech,
And how the sicke had nede of lech:
And that whiche whole was, and in grace,
He toid plainly why ech thing was,
And at the last he con conclude,
Voidid every language rude,
And said, that Prince, that mighty Lord,
Or his departing, would accord
All the parties were there present,
And was the fine of his entent,
Witnesse his presence in your sight,
Which sits among you in his might:
And knelid downe withoutin more,
And not o word yspake he more.

Tho gan this mighty Lord him dresse,
With chere avised, to do largesse,
And said unto this knight and me,
Ye shall to joy restorid be,
And for ye have ben true ye twaine,
I graunt you here for every paine
A thousand joies every weke,
And loke ye be no lengir seke,

And both your ladies, lo hem here!
Take ech his own, beth of gode chere, 1050
Your happie day is new begun,
Sith it was rising of the sun,
And to all othir in this place
I graunt wholly to stand in grace,
That servith truely without flouth,
And to avauncid be by trouth.
Tho gan this knight and I downe knele,
Wening to doin wondir wele,
Seing, O Lord, your grete mercy 1060
Us hath enriched so opinly,
That we deserve may never more,
The lestè part, but evirmore
With soule and body truely serve
You and yours till that we ysterve.
And to ther Ladies there they stode:
This knight that couth so unkil gode,
Ywent in hast, and I also,
Joyous, and glad werin we tho,
And al so rich in every thought, 1070
As he that all hath and ought nought,
And them besought in humble wise,
Us to accept to ther service,
And shew us of ther frendly cheres,
Which in ther tresure many yeres
They keptin had, us to grete paine,
And toid how ther servauntis twaine,
We were, would be, and so had ever,
And to the deth chaunge would we never,
Ne doe offence, ne thinke like ill, 1080
But fill ther ordinance and will:
And made our othis freshe and new,
Our old service for to renew,
And wholly ther's for evirmore
We there become, what might we more?
And well awaiting, that in flouth
We made no fault, ne in our trouth,
Ne thought not do, I you ensure,
With our will, whilis we may dure.

This seson past, againe an eve,
This Lord of the Quene toke his leve, 1090
And said he would hastely returne,
And at gode leisure there sojourne,
Both for his honour and his ese,
Commaunding fast the knight to plesse,
And gave his statutes in papirs,
And ordent divers officirs,
And forth to ship the same night
He went and sone was out of sight.
And on the morow, when the aire
Attemprid was and wondir faire, 1100
Erly at rising of the sun,
Aftir the night away was run,
Yplaying us on the rivage,
My Lady spake of her voyage,
And said she madin small journies,
And held her in straunge counteries,
And forthwith to the Quene went,
And shewed her wholly her entent,
And toke her leve with chere weping,
That pitty was to se that parting: 1110
For to the Quene it was a paine,
As to a Martyr new yllaine,
That for her woe, and she so tender,
Yet I wepe oft when I remember,
She offerid there to resigne
To my Lady eight times or nine,
Th' astate, the yle, shortly to tell,
If it might plesse her there to dwell,
And said, for evir her linage
Should to my Lady doe homage, 1120
And hers be whole withoutin more,

Ye,

Ye, and all thers for evirmore:
 Nay, God forbid, my lady eft,
 With many conning word and soft,
 Said, that evir such thing should bene,
 That I consent should, that a Quene
 Of your estate, and so well named,
 In any wise should be attramed:
 But would be faine with all my hert,
 What so befell, or how me smert,
 To doin thing that you might plesse,
 In any wise or be your ese,
 And kistid there, and bad gode night,
 For which leve wept many a wight.
 There might men here my Lady praised,
 And such a name of her araised,
 What of cunning and frendlinesse,
 What of beauty with gentilnesse,
 And what of glad and frendly cheres,
 That she used in all her yeres,
 That wondir was here every wight
 To say well how they did ther might,
 And with a pres upon the morow
 To ship her brought, and what a sorow
 They made, when she should undir saile,
 That and ye wist, ye would mervaile.
 Forth goeth the ship, out goeth the sond,
 And I as a wode man unbond,
 For doubt to be left behind there,
 Into the Se withoutin fere
 Anon I ran, till with a waw
 All sodenly I was oerthraw,
 And with the watir to and fro
 Backward and forward travailed so,
 That mind and breth nigh was ygone,
 For gode ne harme ne knew I none,
 Til at the last with hokis twaine
 Men of the ship with mikil peine,
 To save my life, did such travaile,
 That and ye wist ye would mervaile,
 And in the ship me drewe on hie,
 And saidin all that I would die,
 And laid me long downe by the mast,
 And of ther clothis on me cast,
 And there I made my testament,
 And wist my selfe not what I ment,
 But when I said had what I would,
 And to the mast my wo all told,
 And tane my leve of every wight,
 And closed mine eyen, and lost my sight,
 Avised to die, without more spech,
 Or any remedy to sech
 Or grace new, as was grete nede,
 My lady of my paine toke hede,
 And her bethought how that for trouth
 To se me die it were grete routh,
 And to me came in sobir wise,
 And softly said, I pray you rise,
 Come on with me, let be this fare,
 All shall be wel, have ye no care,
 I will obey ye and fulfill Wholly in al that lordis will,
 That you and me not long ago
 Aftir his list commaundid so,
 That there againe no resistence
 May be withoutin gret offence,
 And therefore now loke what I say,
 I am and will be frendly aye,
 Rise up, behold this avauntage,
 I grauntin you in heritage,
 All peceably withoutin strive,
 During the dayis of your live,
 And of her applis in my sler
 One she yput, and toke her lere
 In wordis few, and said gode hele
 He that all made you send and wele,
 Wherewith my painis all at ones
 Tokin such leve, that all my bones,
 For the new durense plesaunce,
 So as they couth desired to daunce,
 And I as whole as any wight,
 Up rose with joyous hert and light,
 Whole and unsicke, right wele at ese,
 And all forger had my disese,
 And to my lady where she plaid
 I went anone, and to her said:
 He that all joies, persons to plesse,
 First ordainid with parfite ese,
 And every plesure can depart,
 Send you, madame, as large a part,
 And of his godis such plenty,
 As he has done you of beauty,
 With hele, and all that may be thought,
 He send you all as he all wrought:
 Madame (qð I) your servaunt trew
 Have I ben long, and yet will new,
 Withoutin chaunge or repentaunce,
 In any wise or variaunce,
 And so will do as thrive I ever,
 For thing is none that me is lever
 Than you to plesse how er I fare,
 Mine hert's lady and my welfare,
 My life, mine hele, my lech also
 Of every thing that doth me wo,
 My helpe at nede and my surete
 Of every joy that longs to me,
 My succours whole in alle wise,
 That may be thought or man devise,
 Your grace, Madame, such have I found,
 Now in my nede that I am bound
 To you for er, so Christ me save,
 For hele and live of you I have,
 Wherefore is resoun I you serve
 With due obeisaunce till I sterve,
 And ded and quicke be evir yours,
 Late, erly, and at alle hours.
 Tho came my lady small alite,
 And in plaine english con consite
 In wordis few whole her entent
 She shewed me there, and how she ment
 To me ward in every wise,
 Wholly she came at ther devise,
 Without processe or long travell,
 Charging me to kepin counsell,
 As I would to her grace attaine,
 Of which commaundement I was faine.
 Wherefore I passe oer at this time,
 For counsell cords not well in rime,
 And eke the oth that I have swore
 To breke, me were bettir unbore,
 Why? for untrue for evirmore
 I should be hold, that nevirmore
 Of me in place should be report
 Thing that availe might, or comfort
 To me wardis in any wise,
 And eche wight wouldin me dispise
 In that they couth, and me repreve,
 Which were a thing fore for to greve;
 Wherefore hereof more mencion
 Make I not now, ne long sermon,
 But shortly thus I me excuse,
 To rime a counsell I refuse:
 Sailing thus two dayis or thre
 My lady towards her countre,
 Ovir the wavis high and grene,
 Which werin large and depe betwene,
 Upon a time me called and said,
 That of my hele she was well paid,
 And of the Quene and of the yle
 She talkid with me a long while,
 And

And of all that she there had sene,
 And of th' estate, and of the quene,
 And of the ladies name by name,
 Two houres or mo this was her game;
 Till at the last the wind can rise,
 And blew so fast, and in such wise
 The ship, that every wight can say,
 Madame, er eve be of this day,
 And God tofore; ye shall be there,
 As ye would fainist that ye were,
 And doubtrith not within fixe hours
 Ye shall be there, as all is yours.
 At which wordis she gan to smile,
 And said that was no longe while,
 That they her set, and up she rose,
 And all about the ship she gose,
 And made gode chere to every wight,
 Till of the land she had a sight,
 Of which she glad God it wot
 She was abashid and abote,
 And forth goeth; shortly you to tell,
 Where she accustomed was to dwell,
 And recevid was as gode right,
 With joyous chere and hert's light;
 And as a glad new avinture,
 Pleisant to every creature:
 With which landing tho I awoke,
 And found my chambir full of smoke,
 My chekis eke unto the eres,
 And all my body wet with teres,
 And all so feble and in such wise
 I was, that unneth might I rise,
 So far travailid and so faint,
 That neithir knew I kirke ne faint,
 Ne what was what, ne who was who,
 Ne avised what way I would go;
 But by an adventurous grace,
 I rise and walkt, sought pace and pace,
 Till I a winding staire yfound,
 And held the vice aye in my hond;
 And upward softly so can crepe,
 Till I came where I thought to slepe,
 More at mine ese, and out of prece,
 At my gode leisure, and in pece,
 Till somwhat I recomfort were
 Of the travill and the grete fere,
 That I endurid had before,
 This was my thought withoutin more;
 And as a wight witlesse and faint,
 Without more, in a chambir paint
 Full of stories old and divers,
 More than I can as now reherse.
 Unto a bed full sobirly,
 So as I mightin full southly,
 Pace aftir other, and nothing said,
 Till at the last downe I me laid,
 And as my mind would give me leve,
 All that I dremid had that eve,
 Before that all I can reherse,
 Right as a child at schole his verse
 Doth aftir that he thinketh to thrive,
 Right so did I for all my live,
 I thought to have in remembraunce,
 Both the paine and eke the plesaunce,
 The dreame whole, as it me befell
 Which was as ye herin me tell;
 Thus in my thoughtis as I lay,
 That happy or unhappy day,
 Ne wot I not, so have I blame,
 Of the two which shulde be the name:
 Befell me so, that there a thought
 By proccesse new on slepe me brought,
 And me governed so in a while,
 That ones againe within the yle

Me thought I was, where of the knight,
 And of the ladies I had sight,
 And were assemblid on a grene,
 Bothe knight and lady, with the quene,
 At which assembly there was said,
 How that they all content and paid
 Werin wholly as in that thing,
 That the Knight there should be the king,
 And they would all for sure witnesse,
 Yweddid be both more and lesse,
 In remembraunce withoutin more,
 Thus they consent for evirmore,
 And was concludid that the knight
 Departin should the same night,
 And forthwith there toke his voiage,
 To journey for his marriage,
 And returnin with such an host,
 That weddid might be lest and most:
 This was concluded, written and seled,
 That it ne might not be repeled,
 In no wise but continue firme,
 And all should be within a terme,
 Without more excusation,
 Both fest and coronation.
 This knight, which had thereof the charge,
 Anon into a little barge
 Ybrought was late against an eve,
 Where of all he ytoke his leve,
 Which barge was as a man's thought Aftir his plesure to him brought,
 The Quene her selfe accustomed aye
 In the same barge oft for to play,
 It nedith neithir mast ne rothir,
 I have not herd of such another,
 No maistr for the govirnaunce,
 He saylid by thought and plesaunce,
 Withoutin labour Est and West,
 All ywas one, calme or tempest,
 And I went with at his request,
 And was the first praied to the fest.
 When he came into his countre,
 And passid had the wavy Se,
 In an havin bothe depe and large
 He left his rich and noble barge,
 And to the court shortly to tell,
 He went, where he wont was to dwell,
 And was recevid as gode right,
 As heire, and for a worthy knight,
 With all the statis of the lond,
 Which came anon at his first sond,
 With glad spiritis full of trouth,
 Loth to do fault, or with a slouth,
 Attaint to be in any wise,
 Ther richis was ther old servise,
 Which evir trew had ben yfond,
 Sith first inhabit was the lond.
 And so recevid thei ther King,
 That forgottin ywas no thing,
 That ought to be done ne might plesse,
 Ne ther sovaine Lord do ese,
 And with them so, shortly to say,
 As they of custome had done aye,
 For seven yere past was and more,
 The father, the old, wife and hore,
 King of the land, ytoke his leve
 Of all his barons on an eve,
 And told them how his dayis past
 Were all, and comin was the last,
 And hartily prayed hem to remember
 His sonne, which yong was and tender,
 That borne ywas ther prince to be,
 If he returne to that countre
 Might by adventure or by grace,
 Within any shorte time or space,

And to be true and frendly aye,
 As they to him had ben alway:
 Thus he them prayd, withoutin more,
 And toke his leve for evirmore.
 Knowin was, how tendir in age,
 This yonge prince a grete viage
 Uncouth and straung, honours to seche,
 Ytoke in hond with lityl speche,
 Which was to sekin a princes,
 That he desired more than riches,
 For her grete name that flourid so,
 That in that time there was no mo,
 Of her estate, ne so well named,
 For borne was none that er her blamed:
 Of which princes somewhat before
 Here have I spoke, and some will more.
 So thus befell as ye shall here,
 Unto ther lord they made such chere,
 That joy was there to be present,
 To se ther troth, and how they ment,
 So very glad they were ech one,
 That them among there was no one,
 Whiche that desired more riches,
 Than for ther Lord such a princes,
 That they might plesse, and that were faire,
 For fast desired they an heire,
 And said grete surety were ywis.
 And as they were speking of this,
 The prince himselfin him avised,
 And in plaine English undisguised,
 Them shewid wholly his journey,
 And of ther counsell can them prey,
 And told how he ensurid was,
 And how his day he might not passe,
 Withoutin diffame and grete blame,
 And to him for evir a shame;
 And of ther counsell and avise
 There he prayith them once or twise,
 And that they would within ten daies,
 Avise and ordaine him such waies,
 So that it were no displeaunce,
 Ne to this Relme oer grete grievance,
 And that he might have to his fest,
 Sixty thousand Gestes at the lest,
 For his intent within short while
 Was to returne unto this yle
 That he came fro, and kepe his day,
 For nothing would he be away.
 To counsaile tho the Lords anon
 Into a chambir everychone
 Togithir went, them to devise,
 How they might best and in what wise,
 Purvey for their Lord's pleasaunce,
 And the Relm's continuance Of honor, which in it before,
 Had continuid evirmore;
 So at the last they found the waies,
 How that within the next ten daies,
 All might with paine and diligence
 Be done, and cast what the dispence
 Might draw, and in conclusion,
 Made for ech thing provision.
 When this was done, wholly tofore
 The prince, the lordis all before
 Come, and shewid what they had done,
 And how they couth by no reson
 Findin that within the ten daies,
 He might departin by no waies,
 But would be siftened at the lest,
 Or he returne might to his fest:
 And shewed him every reson why
 It might not be so hastily
 As he desired, ne his day
 He might not kepe by no way,

For divers causis wondir grete,
 Which when he herd, in such an hete
 He fell, for sorow and was seke,
 Still in his bed whole that weke,
 And nigh the tothir for the shame,
 And for the doubt, and for the blame,
 That mightin on him be arer,
 And oft upon his brest he bet,
 And said alas! mine honour for aye,
 Have I here lost clenely this day,
 Ded would I be, alas my name
 Shall aye be more henceforth in shame,
 And I dishonoured and repreved,
 And nevir more shall be beleved:
 And made swich sorow, that in trowth,
 Him to behold it was grete routh:
 And so endured the dayes siftened,
 Till that the Lords on an even,
 Him come and told they redy were,
 And shewid in few wordis there,
 How and what wise they had purvey'd,
 For his estate, and to him said,
 That twenty thousand knights of name,
 And fourty thousand without blame,
 All come of noble ligine,
 Togithir in a compaign,
 Were lodgid on a river's side,
 Him and his plesure there t'abide.
 The prince tho for joy up arose,
 And where they lodgid were, he goes
 Withoutin more that same night,
 And these his suppir made to dight,
 And with them bode till it was dey,
 And forthwith to take his journey,
 Leving the streight, holding the large,
 Till he came to his noble barge:
 And when this prince this lustie knight,
 With his peple in armis bright
 Was comin where he thought to pas,
 And knew well none abiding was Behind, but all were there present,
 Forthwith anon all his intent
 He told them there, and made his cries,
 Thorough his Hostes that day twise,
 Commaunding every livis wight
 There being present in his sight,
 To be the morow on the rivage,
 Where he begin would his viage.
 The morow come, the cry was kept,
 But few was there that night that slept,
 But trussed and purveid for the morow,
 For fault of ships was all ther sorow,
 For save the barge, and othir two,
 Of shippis there saw I no mo:
 Thus in ther doubtis as they stode,
 Waxing the Se, comming the fode,
 Was cried to ship goe every wight,
 Then was but he, that he him might:
 And to the barge he thought echone,
 They went, without was left not one,
 Ne horse, ne male, trusse, ne baggage,
 Salad ne spere, gardbrace ne page,
 But was lodgid and rome ynough;
 At which shipping he thought I lough,
 And gan to marvaile in my thought,
 How evir such a ship was wrought,
 For what peple that can encrese,
 Ne ner so thicke might be the prese,
 But all had rome at ther will,
 There was not one was lodgid ill:
 For as I trowe, my selfe the last
 Was one, and lodgid by the mast,
 And where I loked I saw such rome,
 As all were lodgid in a towne.

Forth

Forth goth the ship said was the crede,
 And on ther knees for ther gode spece Downe knelid every wight a while,
 And prayid fast that to the yle
 They mightin comin in safety,
 The prince and all the company,
 With worship and withoutin blame,
 Or disclaundir of his gode name,
 Of the promise he should retourne,
 Within the time he did sojourne,
 In his londè biding his host,
 This was ther prayir lest and most:
 To kepe the day it might not ben,
 That he' appointid had with the quene,
 To returnin withoutin slouth,
 And so assurid had his trouth,
 For which default this prince this knight,
 During the time slept not a night,
 Such was his wo and his disese,
 For doubt he should the quene displese.
 Forth goith the ship with such spece
 Right as the prince for his grete nede
 Desirin would afir his thought,
 Till it unto the yle him brought,
 Where all in hast upon the sand
 He and his peple toke the land,
 With hertis glad, and cherè light,
 Wening to be in heven that night:
 But or they passid had a while,
 Entring in towardis that yle,
 All clad in blacke with chere pitcous,
 A lady, which ner dispitcous
 Had be in all her life tofore,
 With sory chere, and hert to tore,
 Unto this prince where he gan ride,
 Ycome and said, abide, abide;
 And have no hast, but fast retourne,
 No reson is ye here sojourne,
 For your untruth hath us discried,
 Wo worth the time we us allied
 With you that are so sone untrew,
 Alas! the day that we you knew!
 Alas! the time that ye were bore,
 For all this lond by you is lore,
 Accursed be he you hiðir brought,
 For all our joy is turnd to nought,
 Your acquaintance we may complaine,
 Which is the cause of all our paine.
 Alas! madame, qð tho this knight,
 And with that from his horse he light,
 With colour pale, and chekis lene,
 Alas! what is this for to mene,
 What have ye said, why be ye wroth?
 You to displese I would be loth,
 Knowe ye not full well the promesse,
 Which I made have to your princeesse,
 Which to perfourme is mine intent,
 So mote I spece as I have ment,
 And as I am her very trew, Withoutin change or thoughtis new,
 And al so fully her servand,
 As creature or man livand
 May be to lady or princeesse;
 For she mine heven, and whole richesse
 Is, and the lady of mine hele,
 My worldis joy and all my wele.
 What may this be, whence coms this spech,
 Tell me, Madame, I you besech?
 For sith the first of my living
 Was I so ferefull of nothing,
 As I am now to here you speke,
 For doubt I fele mine hert to breke:
 Say on, madame, tell me you will,
 The remnaunt is it gode or ill?

Alas (qð she) that ye were bore
 For for your love this land is lore,
 The quene is ded and that is ruth,
 For sorow of your gret untruth,
 Of two partes of the lusty rout
 Of ladies that were there about,
 That wont werin to talk and play,
 Now are thei ded and clene away,
 And undir earth tane lodging new,
 Alas! that er ye were untrew!
 For when the time ye set was past,
 The quene toke counsaile sone in hast,
 What was to doe, and said grete blame
 Your acquaintance cause would and shame,
 And the ladies of ther avise,
 Prayid, for nede was to be wise,
 In eschewing talis and songs,
 That by them makin would ill tongs,
 And sey they were lightly conquest,
 And prayid to a pore fest,
 And foully had ther worship weved,
 When so unwisely they conceived
 Ther richè trefour, and ther hele,
 There famous namè, and ther wele,
 To put in such an avinture,
 Of which the sclaundir evir dure
 Was like, without helpe of appele,
 Wherefore they nede had of counsele,
 For every wight of them would say,
 Ther closid yle an opin way
 Was become to every wight,
 And well apprevd by a knight,
 Which he alas! without payfaunce
 Had sone achevid th'obcisaunce:
 All this was moved at counsell thrise,
 And was concludid daily twise,
 That bet was die withoutin blame,
 Than lose the riches of ther name,
 Wherefore the deth's acquaintance
 They chese, and lest have ther plesaunce,
 For doubt to livin as repreved,
 In that they you so sone beleved,
 And made ther othes with one accord,
 That etc, ne drinke, ne speke o word,
 They should nevir, but er weping
 Bide in a place without parting,
 And use ther dayis in penaunce,
 Without desire of allegeaunce,
 Of which the truth anon con preve,
 For why? the quene forthwith her leve
 Toke at them all that were present,
 Of her defaults fully repent,
 And dyid there withoutin more,
 Thus are we lost for evirmore,
 What should I more hereof reherse?
 Comin within, come se her herse,
 Where ye shall se the pitcous sight,
 That er yet was shewin to knight,
 For ye shall sein ladies slond,
 Ech with a grete rod in her hond,
 Yclad in black with visage white,
 Redy ech othir for to smite,
 If any be that will not wepe,
 Or who that makes countenance to slepe,
 They be so bet, that all so blew
 They be as cloth that died is new,
 Such is ther parfite repentance,
 And thus they kepe ther ordinance,
 And will do evir to the deth,
 While them enduris any breth.

This knight tho in his armis twaine
 This lady toke and gan her saine,

Alas!

Alas ! my birth, wo worth my life,
 And even with that he drew a knife,
 And thorough gown, doublet, and shert,
 He made the blode come from his hert,
 And set him doune upon the grene,
 And tull repent closid his ene,
 And save that ones he drew his breth,
 Without more thus he toke his deth.
 For whiche cause the lusty host,
 Which in a battaile on the cost
 At once for sorrow such a cry
 Can rene, thorow the company,
 That to the heaven herd was the sowne,
 And undir th' erth als fer adowne,
 That wilde bestis for the fere,
 So sodanly afrayid were,
 That for the doubt, while they might dure,
 They ran as of their lives unsure,
 From the wodis unto the plaine,
 And from valleys the high mountaine
 They fought, and ran as bestis blind,
 That clene forgottin had ther kind.
 This wo not cesed, to counsaile went These Lords, and for that lady sent,
 And of avise what was to done,
 They her besought she say would sone;
 Weping full fore all clad in blake
 This lady softly to them spake,
 And said, my lordis, by my trouth,
 This mischefe it is of your slouth,
 And if ye had that judge would right,
 A prince that were a very knight,
 Ye that ben of allate echone,
 Die for his fault should one and one,
 And if he hold had the promesse,
 And done that longs to gentilnesse,
 And fulfilled the princes behest,
 This battie farne had ben a fest,
 And now is unrecoverable,
 And us a flaudir aye durable,
 Wherefore I say as of counsaile
 In me is none that may availe,
 But if ye list for remembraunce
 Purvey and make such ordinaunce,
 That the quene whiche that was so meke,
 With all her women dede or seke,
 Might in your land a chappill have,
 With some remembraunce of her grave,
 Shewing her end with the pity,
 In some notable old city,
 And nigh unto an high way,
 Where every wight might for her pray,
 And for all hers that have ben trew,
 And even with that she changid hew,
 And twise wishid aftir the deth,
 And fight, and thus passid her breth.
 Then laid the Lordis of the host,
 And so concludid lest and most,
 That they would in housis of thacke
 Ther livis lede and were but blacke,
 And forsake all ther plesaunces,
 And turne all joy to penaunces,
 And bere the ded prince to the barge,
 And namid them should have the charge,
 And to the herse where lay the Quene,
 The remnaunt went and doune on knene,
 Holding ther honds on high con crie,
 Mercy, mercy, everich thrie,
 And cursed the time that evir slouth,
 Should have soche mastirdome of trouth,
 And to the barge a longè mile
 They bare her forth, and in a while Allè the Ladies one and one,
 By companies were brought echone,

And past the Se and toke the land,
 And in new herfis on a sand,
 Put and brought werin all anon
 Unto a city closed with stone, 1790
 Where it yhad ben usid aye,
 The kingis of the land to lay,
 Aftir they raigned in honours,
 And writ was which were conquercours,
 In an abbey of Nunnis blake,
 Which accustomid were to wake,
 And of usage rise ech a night,
 To pray for every livis wight:
 And so befell as is the guile, 1800
 Ordeint and said was the servise,
 Of the prince and eke of the Quene
 So devoutly as might yben,
 And aftir that about the herfes
 Full many orisons and verses
 Withoutin note full softly,
 Said were and that full hertily,
 That all the night till it was day
 The peple in the Church con pray
 Unto the holy Trinitie,
 Of those soulis to have pitie. 1810

And when the night ypast and ronne
 Was, and the newe day begonne,
 The yong morow with rayis red,
 Which from the Sonne oer all con spred,
 Atempirid clere was and faire,
 And made a tyme of wholsome aire,
 Befell a wondir case and strange,
 Among the peple, and gan change
 Sone the word and every wo, 1820
 Unto a joy, and some to two:
 A bird all feðrid blew and grene,
 With bright rayis like gold betwene
 As small thred ovir every joynt,
 All full of colour strange and coint,
 Uncouth, and wondirfull to sight,
 Upon the quen's herse con light,
 And song full low and softly
 Thre songis in her harmony,
 Unlettid, of every wight, 1830
 Till at the last an agid knight,
 Which semid a man in grete thought,
 Like as he set all thing at nought,
 With visage and ein all forwept,
 And pale, as a man long unslept,
 By the herfis as he ystode
 With hasty hondling of his hode,
 Unto a prince that by him past,
 Ymade the bridde somewhat agast:
 Wherefore she rose and left her song,
 And departid from us among, 1840
 And spred her wingis for to passe
 By the place where he entrid was,
 And in his hast shortly to tell,
 Him hurt, that backward downe he fell,
 From a window richly ypeint
 With lives of many divers seint,
 And bet his wingis and bled fast,
 And of the hurt thus died and past;
 And lay there well an hour and more,
 Till at the last of briddes a score, 1850
 Come and assemblid at the place Where the window ybrokin was,
 And made swiche wamentacioun,
 That pity was to here the soun,
 And the warblis of ther throtis,
 And the complaint of ther notis,
 Which from joy clene ywas reverfed;
 And of them one the glas sone perfed,

And

And in his boke of colours nine,
 An herbe he brought flourelesse all grene,
 All full of small levis and plaine,
 Swart and long with many a vaine,
 And where his fellow lay thus dede,
 This herbe he down laid by his hede,
 And dressid it full softly,
 And hong his hed and stode thereby:
 Which herb in lesse than half an houre
 Gan oer all knir, and astir floure
 Full out and wexin ripe the fede,
 And right as one anothir fede
 Would, in his beke he toke the graine,
 And in his fellowes beke certaine
 It put, and thus within the third
 Up stode and prunid him the bird,
 Which ded had be in all our sight
 And both togethir forth ther flight
 Toke, singin from us, and ther leve,
 Was none disturb 'hem would ne greve.
 And when they partid were, and gone,
 Th' abbessle the fedis sone echone
 Gathirid had, and in her hand
 The herbe she toke, well avifand
 The lese, the fede, the stalke, the floure,
 And said it had a gode favour,
 And was no common herb to find,
 And well approved of uncouth kind,
 And than othir more vertuouse,
 Who so have it might for to use
 In his nede, flowre or lese, or graine,
 Of ther hile might ybe certaine:
 And laid it downe upon the herse
 Where lay the quene, and gan reherse,
 Echone to' othir that they had sene,
 And taling thus the fede wex grene,
 And on the drie herse gan to spring,
 Which me thought was a wondrous thing,
 And astir that floure and new fede,
 Of which the peple all toke hede,
 And said it was some grete miracle,
 Or medicine fine more than triacle,
 And were well done there to assay,
 If it might ese in any way
 The corfis, which with torchè light
 They wakid had there all that night.
 Sone did the lordis there consent,
 And all the peple' thereto content,
 With esse words and litil fare,
 And made the quen's visage bare,
 Which shewid was to all about;
 Wherefore in swone fell whole the rout,
 And were so sory most and lest,
 That long of weping they not cest,
 For of ther lord the remembraunce
 Unto them was such displeaunce,
 That for to live they called a paine,
 So were they very true and plaine.
 And after this the gode abbessle,
 Of the graine gan to chese and dressle,
 Thre, with her fingirs clene and smale,
 And in the quen's mouth by tale
 One astir othir esily,
 She put 'hem and full conningly,
 Which shewid sonè such vertue,
 That previd was the medicine true:
 For with a smiling countinaunce,
 The quene uprose, and of usaunce,
 As she was wont to every wight,
 She made gode chere; for whichè sight,
The peple kneeling on the stones
Thought they in heven were soule and bones:
 And to the prince where he ylay,
 They went to make the same assay,

And when the Quene it undirstode,
 And how the med cine was gode,
 She prayid she might have the graines,
 To relevin him from the paines
 Which she and he had both endured,
 And to him went and so him cured,
 That streight within a litil space
 Lusty and fresh on live he was, 1940
 And in gode hele, and whole of spech,
 And lough, and said, gramercy, lech:
 For which the joy throughout the town
 So gret was that the bellis town
 Afraied the peple, a journey
 About the cite every way,
 And come and askid cause and why
 They rongin were so statily?
 And astir that the quene, th' abbessle,
 Made diligence or they would cille, 1950
 Such, that of ladies sone a rout,
 Sewing the quene was all about,
 And called by name echone and told,
 Was none forgettin young ne old,
 There mighten men se joyis new,
 When the medicine fine and trew
 Thus restorid had every wight,
 So well the quene as the knight,
 Unto full perfit joy and hele,
 That fleting they were in such wele 1960
 As folke that wouldin in no wise
 Desire more parfit paradise.
 And thus when passed was the sorow,
 With mikil joye sone on the morow,
 The king, the quene, and every lord,
 With all the Ladies by' one accord,
 Hekle a generall assembly.
 Gret cry was made through the country,
 The which astir as ther intent
 Was turnid to a Parliament, 1970
 Where was ordainid and arised,
 Every thing and wel devised,
 That plesin might, to most and lest,
 And there concludid was the fest
 Within the yle for to behold
 With full consent of young and old.
 All in the same wise as before,
 As thing should be withoutin more,
 And ther shippid and thithir went,
 And into straunge Reunis sent, 1980
 To kingis, quenes, and duchesses,
 To divers princes and princeesses,
 Of ther linage, and can them pray,
 That it might like them at that day
 Of mariage, for ther disport,
 Come se the yle, and them disport,
 Where should be joullis and turnaies,
 And armis done in othir waies,
 Signifying oer all the day
 Astir Aprilis within May, 1990
 And was avised that ladies tweine,
 Of gode estate and well befeine,
 With certaine knightis and squiers,
 And of the quen's officers,
 In mannir of an embassade,
 With certan lettis closed and made,
 Should take the barge and depart,
 And seke my lady ev ry part,
 Till they her found for any thing,
 Both chargid have the quene and king 2000
 And as ther lady and mattres,
 Her to beke of gentilnes,
 At the day thre for to yben,
 And of her recommaund the quene,
 And prayis for all loves to halt,
 For but she come all woll be wast,

And the fest but a businesse
 Withoutin joy or lustinesse :
 And toke them tokins and gode spede
 Praid God send 'hem aftir ther nede.
 Forth went the ladies and the knights,
 And were out fourtene daies and nights,
 And brought my lady in ther barge,
 And had well sped and done ther charge :
 Whereof the quene so herti'ly glad,
 Was, that in soth such joy she had,
 When that the ship approchid lond,
 That she my lady on the sond
 Met, and in armis so constraine,
 That wondir was behold them twaine,
 Which to my dome during twelve houres,
 Neithir for hete ne watty shoures,
 Departid not no company,
 Saving themselfe but none them by,
 But gave them layfour at ther ese
 To reherfin joy and disese,
 Aftir the plesure and couragis,
 Of ther young and tendir agis :
 And aftir, with many a knight,
 Brought thei were, where as for that night
 They partid not, for to plesaunce,
 Content, was hert and countinaunce,
 Both of the quene, and my maistresse,
 This was that night ther businesse :
 And on the morow with huge rowt,
 This prince of lordis him about,
 Come and unto my Lady said,
 Of her comming glad and well paid
 He was, and full right conningly
 Her thankid, and full hertily,
 And lough and smiled, and said ywis,
 That was in doubt, in safery is :
 And commaundid do diligence,
 And spare for neithir gold ne spence ;
 But make redy, for on the morow,
 Yweddid with Saint John to borow
 He would ybe, withoutin more,
 And let them wite this lese and more.
 The morow come, and the service
 Of mariage in such a wise
 Ysaide was, that with more honour
 Was never prince ne conquerour
 Ywedde, ne with such company,
 Of gentilnesse in chivalry,
 Ne of Ladies so grette routs
 Ne so befeen as all abouts
 They werin there, I certifie
 You on my life, withoutin lie.

And the fest hold was in tentis,
 As to tell you mine entent is,
 In a some in a large plaine,
 Undir a wode in a champaine,
 Betwixt a rivir and a well,
 Where never had abbay, ne fell
 Yben, ne kirke, house, ne village,
 In time of any man's age :
 And durid thre moniths the fest
 In one estate, and never cest,
 From erly rising of the sonne
 Till the day spent was and yronne,
 In justing, dauncing, lustinesse,
 And all that sowned to gentilnesse.

And as me thought the second morow,
 Whan endid was all oldè sorow,
 And in surety every wight
 Had with his lady slept a night,

The Prince, the Quene, and all the rest,
 Unto my lady made request,
 And her besought oftin and praied,
 2010 To mewardes to be well apaied, 2080
 And confidir mine oldè trowth,
 And on my painis havin routh,
 And me accept to her servise,
 In such forme and in such wise,
 That we both mightin be as one,
 Thus praied the Quene, and everichone :
 And for there should ne be no nay,
 They stintin justing all a day,
 To pray my lady and requere,
 2020 To be content and out of fere, 2090
 And with gode hert make frendly chere,
 And said it was a happy yere :
 At which she smiled, and said ywis,
 I trow well he my servaunt is,
 And would my welfare as I trist,
 So would I his, and would he wist
 How and I knewè that his trowth
 Continue would withoutin slouth,
 And be such as ye here report,
 2030 Restraining both courage and sport, 2100
 I couth consent at your request,
 To be ynamid of your fest,
 And doin aftir your usaunce,
 In obeying of your plesaunce :
 At your request this I consent,
 To plesin you in your entent,
 And eke the sovèraine above,
 Commandid hath me for to love,
 And before othir him prefer,
 2040 Against which Prince may be no wer ; 2110
 For his powir ovir all raigneth,
 That othir would for nought him paineth.
 And sith his will and yours is one,
 Contrary in me shall be none,
 Tho (as me thoughtin) the promise
 Of marriage before the mese
 Desirid was of every wight,
 To be madin the same night,
 To put away all manir doubts
 2050 Of every wight thereabouts. 2120
 And so was do, and on the morow,
 When every thought and every sorrow
 Dislodgid was out of mine hert,
 With every wo and every smert,
 Unto a tent Prince and Princes,
 Me thought brought me and my maistres,
 And said we werin at full age,
 There to conclude our marriage,
 With ladies, knightis, and squiers,
 And a gret host of ministers 2130
 With instruments and sounes diverse,
 2060 That long werin here to reherse ;
 Which tent was church parochiall,
 Ordaint was in especiall
 For the fest and for the sacre,
 Where archbishop and archdiacre
 Ysongin full out the servise,
 Aftir the custome and the guise,
 And holie church's ordinaunce.
 And aftir that to dine and daunce 2140
 Brought were we, and to divers plaies, 2070 And for our spedè ech wight praies,
 And merry was both most and lest,
 And said amendid was the fest,
 And were right glad lady and lord,
 Of the marriage and th' accord,
 And wishid us hert'is plesaunce,
 In joy and hele continuaunce,
 And to the minstrels made request,
 That in encrefing of the fest, 2150
 They

They wouldin touchin ther cordis,
 And with some new joyeux accordis,
 Ymove the peple to gladnesse,
 And praidin of all gentilnesse,
 Ech to painin them for the day,
 To shew his cunning and his play.
 Tho began fownis mervelous,
 Entunid with accords joyous,
 Round about and in all the tents,
 With thousandis of instruments,
 That every wight to daunce them pained,
 To be merry was none that fayned:
 Which sowne me troublid in my slepe,
 That fro my bed anone I lepe,
 Wening to have be at the fest,
 But when I woke all was yfest,
 For there n'as lady ne creature,
 Save on the wals old portraiture
 Of horsmen, hawkis, and houndis,
 And hurt dere all full of woundis,
 Some like bittin, some hurt with floure,
 And as my dreme semed that was not.
 And when I wake, and knew the trouthe,
 And ye had seen of very routh,
 I trow ye would have wept a weke,
 For nevir man yet halfe so seke,
 Lwent escapid with the life,
 And was for fault that sword ne knife
 I find ne might my life t' abridge,
 Ne thing that kervid, ne had edge,
 Wherewith I might my wofull pains
 Have voidid with bleding of vams.
 Lo! here my blisse, lo! here my paine!
 Which to my lady I do complaine,
 And grace and mercy her requere,
 To end my wo and busie fere,
 And me accept to her servise,
 And to her service in such wise
 That of my dreme the substaunce
 Might turnin once to cognisaunce,
 And cognisaunce to very preve,
 By full consent, and by gode leve:
 Or els withoutin more I pray,
 That this same night, or it be day,
 I mote unto my dreme retourne,
 And sleping so forthe aie sojourne,

2160

2170

2180

2190

Aboutin the yle of plesaunce,
 Undir my lady's obeisaunce,
 In her service, and in such wise,
 As it plese her may to devise,
 And grace onis to be accept,
 Like as I dremid when I slept,
 And dure a thousand yere and ten,
 In her gode will, Amen, Amen.

2120

L'envoy.

Fairist of faire, and godelyist on live,
 All my secre to you I plaine, and thrive,
 Requiring grace and of my fore complaint
 To be helid or martired as a saint,
 For by my trowth I swere, and by this boke,
 Ye may both hele, and fle me with a loke.

2110

Go forth mine ownè true hert innocent,
 And with humblenesse do thine observaunce,
 And to thy lady on thy knees present
 Thy service new, and think how grete plesaunce
 It is to live undir the obeisaunce
 Of her which that may with her lokis soft
 Give The the blisse that thou desirist oft.

Be diligent, awake, obey, and drede,
 And be not to wild of thy countinaunce,
 But meke and glad, and thy nature yfede,
 To do ech thing that may her doe plesaunce,
 When thou shalt slepe have aie in remembraunce
 Th' image of her which may with lokis soft
 Give The the blisse that thou desirist oft.

2120

And if so be that thou her namè find
 Writtin in boke, or ellis upon wall,
 Loke that thou do as servaunt true and kind
 Thine obeisaunce, as she were therewithall,
 Fayning in love is breeding of a fall
 From the grace of her, whose lokis soft
 May give the blisse that thou desirist oft.

2130

Ye which that this Ballade yredin shall,
 I pray you that you kepe you fro the fall.

CHAUCER'S A. B. C. called La Priere de nostre Dame: Made, as some say, at the request of Blanch, Duchesse of Lancaster, as a praier for her private use, being a woman in her religion very devout.

A.
Almightie and allmerciable Quene,
To whom all this world fleith for soccour,
To have relese of sinne, of so'row, of tene,
Glorious Virgine of all flouris flour,
To The I fle confoundid in errour;
Helpe and releve, almightie, debonaire,
Have mercy of mine perillous langour,
Venquist me hath my cruill adversaire.

B.
Bountie so fixe hath in my hert his tent,
That well I wote thou wilt my succour be,
Thou canst not warnin that with gode entent
Axith thyne helpe, thine hert is aye so fre,
Thou art largesse of plaine felicitye,
Havin and refute of quiete and rest,
Lo how that Thevis sevin chasin me,
Helpe, Ladie bright, or that mine ship to brest.

C.
Comfort is none, but in you, Lady dere,
For lo! mine sinne and mine confusioun,
Which ought not in thin presence for to' apere,
Han taken on me a grevous action,
Of veray right and disperatioun,
And as by right they mightin well sustene,
That I were worthy mine damnation,
Ne were it of thy mercy blisfull Quene.

D.
Dout is there none, o Quene of misericord,
That thou n'art cause of grace and mercy here,
God vouchidesafe, throug The with us to' accord:
For certis, Christ's blisfull mo'sir dere,
Were now the bow ybent in swiche manere,
As it was first of justice and of ire,
The rightfull God would of no mercy here:
But through The han we grace, as we desire.

E.
Ever' hath mine hope of refute in The be:
For here beforeme full oft in many' a wise,
Unto mercy hast thou recevid me,
But mercy, Lady, at the gret assise,
When we shall come before the high Justise,
So litil frent shall then in me ben found,
That but thou or that day correctin me,
Of very right mine werke will me confound.

F.
Flying I fle for succour to thine tent,
Me for to hide fro tempest full of drede,
Beseking you, that ye you not absent,
Though I be wicke: O help yet at this nede,
All have I ben a best in wit and dede,
Yet, Lady, thou me close with thine owne grace,
Thine enemye and mine (Lady take hede)
Unto mine deth in point is me to chafe.

G.
Gracious maid and mo'sir, which that never Were bittir, nor in erth nor in the Se,

But full of swetenesse and of mercy ever,
Helpe that mine fa'sir be not wroth with me:
Speke thou, for I ne dare him not yse,
So have I done in erth, alas the while!
That certis but if thou mine succour be,
To sinke eterne he will mine ghost exile.

H.
He vouchidesafe, tell him, as was his will,
Become a man as for our alliaunce,
And with his blode he wrote that blisfull bill
Upon the crosse as generall acquitaunce,
To every penitent in full cryaunce:
And therefore, Lady bright, thou for us prey,
Then shalt thou stentin alle his grevaunce,
And maken our foe to faylin of his prey.

I.
I wote well thou wilt ben our succour,
Thou art so full of bountie in certaine,
For when a soule fallith in errour,
Thine pitie goeth, and halith him againe,
Then makist thou his pece with his soverain
And bringist him out of the crokid strete:
Who so The lovith, shall not love in vaine,
That shall he find, as he the life shall lete.

K.
Kalendiris enluminid ben they,
That in this world ben lightid with thine name,
And who so goith with The the right wey,
Him sar not dredin in soule to ben lame,
Now Quene of comfort, sith thou art the same,
To whom I sechin for my medicine:
Let not mine so no more mine wound entame,
Mine hele into thine hond all I resine.

L.
Lady, thine sorrow can I not portrey
Undir the crosse, ne his grevous punnaunce:
But for your bothis peine, I you do prey,
Let not our aldir so make his bostaunce,
That he hath in his levis with mischaunce,
Convict that, that ye both han bought so dere:
As I said erst, thou ground of all substaunce,
Continue' on us thin pitous cyin clere.

M.
Moyfes that saw the bosh of flambis rede
Brenning, of which then never a sticke brend,
Was signe of thine unwemmid maidinhede,
Thou art the bosh, on which there can descend
The Holy Ghost, the which that Moyfes wend
Had ben on fire: and this was in figure.
Now, Lady, fro the fire us defend,
Which that in hell eternally shall dure.

N.
Noble princeesse, that never haddist pere,
Certis if any comfort in us be,
That commith of The, Christis mo'sir dere,
We han none othir melodie ne gle,
Us to rejoyce in our adversite,

Ne advocat, that will and dare so prey
For us, and that for as lite hire as ye,
That helpin for an Ave'mary or twey.

O.

O very light of eyin tho ben blind,
O very lust of labour and distresse,
O tresore of bountie to mankind!
The whom God chese to moðer for humbleste,
From his ancille he made The maistresse
Of heven and erth, our bill up for to bede,
This world awatith ay on thine godenes,
For thou ne failed'est never wight at nede.

P.

Purpose I have sometime for to enquire,
Wherefore and why the Holy Ghost The sought,
When Gabriel's voice come to thine ere,
He not to werre us swich a wondir wrought,
But for to save us, that he sithin bought:
Then nedith us no wepon us to save,
But onely there we did not as us ought,
Do penitence, and mercy aske and have.

Q.

Queene of comfort, right when I me bethinke,
That I agiltid have both him and The,
And that mine soule is worthy for to sinke:
Alas! I carite, wher shall I fle?
Who shall unto thine sonne mine menè be?
Who but thine selfe, that art of pitie well?
Thou hast more routh on our adversite,
Than in this world might any tongue tell.

R.

Redresse me moðir, and eke me chastise,
For certainly my faðir's chastising
Ne dare I not abidin in no wise,
So hiddeous is his full reckining.
Moðir of whom our joy began to spring,
Be ye mine judge, and eke my soul's lech,
For ay in you is pitie abounding,
To each that will of pity you besech.

S.

Soth is that he ne grauntith no pite
Withoutin The, for God of his godenesse Forgivith none, but it like unto The:
He hath The made vicaire and maistresse
Of all this world, and eke govirneresse
Of hevin: and repressith his justise
Aftir thine will: and therefore in witnesse
He hath The crownid in so royall wise.

T.

Temple devout, ther God chese his wonning.
For which these misbelevd deprivid ben,
To you mine soule penitent I bring,
Receve me, for I can no ferthir seen.
With thornis venemous O hevin Quene,
For which the erth accursid was full yore,
I am so woundid, as ye may well sene,
That I am lost almost, it smert so sore.

V.

Virgine that art so noble of apparaile,
That ledist us into the highè toute
Of Paradise, thou me wise and counsaile,
How I may have thy grace and thy succour:
All have I ben in filth and in errour,
Lady, on that countrey thou me adjourne,
That clepid is thine bench of freshe flour,
There as that mercy evir shall sojourne.

X.

Xpen thine sonne that in this world alight
Upon a crosse to suffir his passioun,
And suffred eke that Longeus his hert pight,
And made his hert's blodè renne adoun,
And all this was for my salvatioun:
And I to him am fals and eke unkind,
And yet he will not mine dampnatioun:
This thanke I you, succour of all mankind.

Y.

Ysaac was figure of his deth certaine,
That so ferreforth his faðir would obey,
That him ne rought nothing for to be slaine:
Right so thy sonnè list a lambe to dey:
Now, Lady, full of mercy I you prey,
Sith he his mercy furid me so large,
Be ye not scant, for all we sing or say,
That ye ben fro vengeaunce alway our targe.

Z.

Zacharie you clepith the opin well,
That wisht his sinfull soule out of his guilt,
Therefore this lessoun out I will to tell,
That n'ere thine tendir hert, we werin spilt.
Now, Lady bright, sith that thou causst and wilt,
Ben to the fede of Adam merciabile,
Bring us unto that paleis that is built
To penitents, that ben to mercie able.

JACKE UPLAND.

In this Treatise is set forth the blind ignoraunce and variable discord of the Churchmen, how rude and unskilful they were in matters and principles of our Christian Institution. This is thought to be that Crede which the Pellican speaketh of in the Plowman's tale in these words:

Of Freris I have told before
Now, in a making of a Crede,
And yet I could tell worse and more,
But men would werrien it to rede.

Jacke Upland make my mone to very God, and to all true in Christ, that antichrist and his disciples (by colour of holines) walk and deceve Christ's church by many false figures; wherethrough (by antichrist and his) many vertues ben transposed to vices.

But the fellicst folke that ever Antichrist found, ben last brought into the church, and in a wonder wise, for they ben of diverse sects of antichrist, fown of diverse countries and kindreds. And all men knowne well, that they be not obedient to bishops, ne legemen to kings: neither they tillen, ne sownen, weden, ne repen wode, corne, ne grasse, neither nothing that man should helpe; but onely themselves ther lives to susteine. And these men han all manner power of God, as they sein, in heven and in yerth, to sell heven and hell to whom that them liketh, and these wretches were never where to ben themselves. And therefore (frere) if thine order and rules ben grounded on God's law, tell thou me, Jacke Upland, that I aske of The, and if thou be or thinkest to be on Christ's side, kepe thy paciens.

Saint Paule teacheth, That all our dedes should be do in charitie, and els it is nought worth, but outpleting to God and harme to our owne soules. And for that freres challenge to be gretest clerkes of the church, and next following Christ in living: men should for charitie aske them some questions, and pray them to ground ther answeres in reson and holy writ, for else ther answeres would nought be worth, be it flourished never so faire, and as me thinke men might skilfully aske thus of a frere.

1. Frere, how many orders be in erth, and which is the perfectest order? Of what order art thou? Who made thine order? What is thy rule? Is there any perfecter rule than Christ himself made? If Christ's rule be most perfect, why rulest thou The not thereafter? Without more, why shall a frere be more punished if he breke the rule that his patron made, than if he breke the bests that God himself made?

2. Approveth Christ any more religions than one, that S. James speket of? If he approveth no more, why hatt thou left his rule and takest another? Why is a frere apostata that levet his order, and taketh another sect, sith there is but one religion of Christ?

3. Why be ye weddid faster to your habits than a man is to his wife? For a man may leave his wife for a yere or two, as many men done: and if you leve your habite a quarter of a yere, ye should be holden apostataes.

4. Maketh your habit you men of religion or no? If it do, than ever as it wereth, your religion wereth, and after that your habit is better, your religion is better, and when ye have ligen it beside, then lig ye your religion beside you, and ben apostataes: why buy ye you so precious clothes, sith no man seeth such, but for vaine glorie, as Saint Gregorie sayth?

What betokeneth your grete hode, your scaplerie, your knotted girdle, and your wide cope. ~~*** H. 7.~~

5. Why use ye all one colour, more than other christian men do? What betokeneth that ye ben clothed all in one manner clothing?

If ye say it betokeneth love and charitie, certes then ye be oft hypocrites, when any of you hateth another, and in that that ye wol be said holy by your clothing.

Why may not a frere were clothing of another sect of freres, sith holinesse stondeh not in the cloths?

6. Why hold ye silence in one house more than another, sith men ought over all to speke the gode and leve the evill?

Why ete you flesh in one house more than in another, if your rule and your order be perfect, and the patron that made it?

7. Why get ye your dispensations to have it more ease? Certes, either it semeth that ye be unperfect, or he that made it, so hard, that ye may not hold it. And siker, if ye hold not the rule of your patrons, ye be not then ther freres, and so ye lie upon your selves.

8. Why make you as dede men, when ye be professed, and yet ye be not dede, but more quicke beggars than you were before? and it semeth evil a dede man to go about and beg.

9. Why will ye not suffer your novices here your counsels in your chapter-house, ere that they have ben professed, if your counsels ben true, and after God's law?

10. Why make ye you so costly houses to dwell in? sith Christ did not so, and ded men should have but graves, as falleth it to dede men, and yet ye have more courts than many lords of England: for ye now wenden thogh the relme, and ech night will lig in your own courts, and so mo but right few lords doc. ~~*** set you the king's house~~

11. Why hire you to ferme your limitors, giving therefore ech yere a certain rent, and will not suffer one in another's limitation, right as ye were your selves lords of countries?

Why be ye not under your bishops visitations, and legemen to our king? ~~***~~

5. yet. 12. moved or damp. 7. added. 7. added. a large lacuna to be supply'd out of H. 7. fol. 5. b. l. 10. & 11. ben confessor. &c. to fol. 6. b. l. 14. And therefore. &c. [Dec. 11.7]

Why aske ye no letters of bretherheds of other mens praers, as ye desire that other men should aske letters of you?

If your letters be gode, why grant ye them not generally to all maner of men for the more charitie?

12. Mowe ye make any man more perfect brether for your prayers, than God hath by our beleve? by our baptisme and his own grant? if ye mow, certes then ye be above God.

Why make ye men beleve that your golden trentall sung of you, to take therefore ten shillings, or at lest five shillings, woll bring soules out of hell, or out of purgatorie? if this be soth, certes ye might bring all soules out of paine, and that woll ye nought, and then ye be out of charitie.

13. Why make ye men beleve, that he that is buried in your habit, shal never come in hel, and ye wete not of your selfe whether ye shall to hell or no? and if this were soth ye should sell your high houses to make many habites for to save many mens soules.

14. Why stele ye mens children for to make hem of your sect, sith that theft is against God's helts, and sith your sect is not perfect? ye know not whether the rule that ye bind him to, be best for him or worst.

15. Why underneme ye not your brethren for ther trespasses after the law of the Gospell, sith that underneming is the best that may be? but ye put them in prison oft, when they do after God's law, and by S. Augustine's rule if any doe amisse, and would not amend him, ye should put him from you.

16. Why cover ye shrift, and burying of other mens parishens, and none other sacrament that falleth to christian folke?

Why busie ye not to here to shrift of pore folke, as well as of rich lords and ladies, sith they mow have more plentie of shrift fathers than pore folke mow?

Why say ye not the gospel in houses of bedrid men, as ye do in rich mens, that mowe goe to church and here the gospel?

Why cover you not to burie pore folke among you? sith that they ben most holy (as ye saine that ye ben for your povertie.)

17. Why will ye not be at ther diriges as ye have ben at rich mens? sith God praiseth hem more than he doth other men.

What is thy prayer worth? sith thou wilt take therefore, for all chapmen ye nede to be most wise for dred of simone.

What cause hast thou, that thou wilt not prech the gospel, as God saith that thou shouldst? sith it is the best lore and also our beleve.

Why be ye evill apaid that secular prestes should prech the gospel? sith God himselfe hath bodden hem.

18. Why hate ye the gospel to be preched, si h ye be so much hold thereto? for ye win more by yere with In principio, than with all the rules that ever your patrones made, and in this minstrels ben better than ye, for they contrarien not to the mirths that they maken, but ye contrarien the gospel both in word and dede.

19. Frere, when thou recevest a penie for to say a masse, whether sellest thou God's bodie for that penie, or thy praier, or els thy travell? if thou saiest thou wolt not travell for to say the masse, but for the penie, than certes if this be soth, then thou lovest to litle mede for thy soule: and if thou sellest God's bodie, other thy prayer, then it is very simonie, and art become a chapman worse than Judas, that sold it for thirgie pence.

20. Why writest thou ther names in thy tables that yever The mony? sith God knoweth al thing? for it semeth by thy writing, that God would not reward him, but thou writest in thy tables, God would els forgotten it.

Why bereft thou God in hand, and slanderest him that he begged for his mete? sith he was Lord over all, for then had he bene unwise to have begged, and have no nede thereto.

Frere, after what lawe rulest thou The? where findest thou in God's lawe that thou shouldst thus beg?

21. What manner men nedeth for to beg?

For whom oweth such men to beg?

Why beggest thou so for thy brethren?

If thou saiest, for they have nede, then thou doest it for the more perfection, or els for the lest, or els for the mene. If it be the most perfection of all, then should all thy brethren do so, and then no man neded to beg but for himselfe, for so should no man beg but him neded. And if it be the lest perfection, why lovest thou then other men more than thy selfe? For so thou art not well in charitie, sith thou shouldst seke the more perfection after thy power, living thy self most after God. And thus leaving that imperfection, thou shouldst not so beg for them. And if it is a gode mene thus to beg as thou doest, then should no man do so, but they ben in this gode mene, and yet such a mene granted to you may never be grounded on God's law, for then both leud and leud that ben in mene degre of this world, should go about and beg as ye do. And if all should do so, certes well nigh all the world should go about and beg as ye done, and so should there be ten beggers against one yever.

Why procurest thou men to yewe The ther almes, and saiest it is so nedeful, and thou wilt not thy selfe win The that mede?

22. Why wilt thou not beg for pore bedrid men, that bin porer than any of your sect, that ligen and mow not go about to help hemselfes, sith we be all brethren in God, and that bretherhed passeth any ether that ye or any man could make, and where most nede were, there were most perfection, either els ye hold them not your pure brethren, but worse, but then ye be unperfect in your begging?

Why make ye so many mailers among you, sith it is against the teching of Christ and his Apostles?

23. Whose ben all your rich courts that ye han, and all your rich jewels? sith ye seen that ye han nought ne in proper ne in common. If ye san they ben the popes, why gather ye then of pore men and lords so much out of the king's hand to make your pope rich? And sith ye san that it is grete perfection to have nought in proper but in common, why be ye so fast about to make the pope, that is your father, rich, and put on him imperfection? sithen ye saine that your godes ben all his, and he should by reson be the most perfect man, it semeth openlich that ye ben cursed children so to slander your father, and make him imperfect. And if ye saine that the godes be yours, then do ye ayentli your rule; and if it be not ayentli your rule, then might ye have both plough and cart, and labour as other gode men come, and not so to beg by losengery, and idle as ye done. If ye say that it is more perfection to beg, than to travell or to worch with your hand, why prech ye not openly, and tech all men to do so? sith it is the best and most perfect life to the help of ther soules, as ye make children to beg that might have ben rich hers.

Why make ye not your sects to pore men, and yever hem yests, as ye done to the rich? sith pore men han more nede than the rich.

What

10; 1. falslied.

1. mede.

1. the rich of your order.

What betokeneth that ye goe tweine and tweine together: it ye be out of charitie, ye accord not in soule.

Why beg ye and take salaries thereto more than other priests? sith he that most taketh, most chargeth.

24. Why hold ye not S. Francis' rule and his testament? sith Francis saith, that God shewed him this thing and this rule: and certes if it were God's will, the pope might not fordo it; or els Francis was a liar, that saied in this wise. And but this testament that he made, accord with God's will, or els erred, he is a liar that were out of charitie, and as the law saith, he is accursed that letteth the rightful last will of a ded man. And this testament is the last will of Francis that is a dead man, it semeth therefore that all his freres ben cursed.

25. Why will ye not touch no coined money with the crosse, ne with the king's hed, as ye done other jewels both of gold and silver? certes if ye despise the crosse or the king's hed, then ye ben worthy to be despised of God and the king: and sith ye will receive money in your herts, and not with your hands, it semeth that ye hold more holinesse in your hands than in your herts, and then be false to God.

26. Why have ye exempt you from our king's lawes, and visiting of our bishops more than other christen men that liven in this reime, if ye be not guilty of traitorie to our reime, or trespassers to your bishops? but ye will have the king's lawes for the trespasser doe to you, and ye will have power of other bishops more than other priests, and also have leve to prison your brethren as lords in your courts more than other folks that han ben the king's legemen.

27. Why shal som sect of your freres payeth a yere a certaine to ther generall provinciall or minister, or els to ther sovereynes, but if he stele a certaine number of children (as some men saine) and certes if this ben soth, then ye be constrained upon certein pain to do thes against God's commaundement, Non furtum facies.

28. Why be ye so hardie to grant by letters of fraternitie to men and women, that they shal have part and merite of all your gode dedes, and ye weten never whether God be apayed with your dedes because of your sinne? Also ye witten never whether that man or woman be in state to be saved or damned, then shal he have no merite in heven for his owne dedes ne for none other mans. And all were it so, that he shold have part of your gode dedes: Yet shold he have no more than God would give him after that he were worthie, and so much shal ech man have of God's yest without your limitation. But if ye will say that ye ben God's fellowes, and that he may not doe without your assent, then be ye blasphemers to God.

29. What betokeneth that ye have ordeined, that when such one as ye have made your brother or sister, and hath a letter of your sele, that letter mought be brought in your holie chapter, and there be rad, or els ye will not pray for him. And but ye witten pray especially for all other that were not made your brethren or sistren, then were ye not in right charitie, for that ought to be common, and namely in ghostly things.

30. Frere, what charity is this, to overcharge the peple by mightie begging, under colour of preching or praying, or masses singing? Sith holy writ biddeth not thus, but even the contrarie: for all such ghostly dedes shold be done frely, as God yeveth them frely. Thou shalt not be carried away.

31. Frere, what charitie is this, to beguile children or they comen to discretion, and bind hem to your orders, that ben not grounded in God's law, against ther frends will? Sithen by this follie bene many apostataes, both in will and dede, and many bene apostataes in ther will during all ther life, that would gladly be discharged, if they wist how, and so many ben apostataes, that sholden in other states have ben true men.

32. Frere, what charitie is this, to make so many Freres in every country to the charge of the peple? sith parsons and vicars alone, ye secular priests alone, ye monkes and cannons alone, with bishops above them were ynough to the church to doe the priests office? And to adde more than ynough is a foule error, and gret charge to the peple, and this openly against God's will, that ordained all thyngs to be done in weight, number, and mesure. And Christ himselfe was apayed with twelve apostles and a fewe disciples, to prech and doe priests office to all the whole world, then was it better doe than is now at this time by a thousand dele. And right so as foure fingers with a thombe in a man's hand, helpeth a man to worch, and double number of fingers in one hand shold let him more, and so the more number that there were passing the mesure of God's ordinance, the more were a man letted to worch: right so (as it semeth) it is of these new orders that ben added to the church, without grounde of holy write and God's ordinance.

33. Frere, what charity is this, to the peple to lie, and say, that ye follow Christ in povertie more than other men done? and yet in curious and costly housing, and fine and precious clothing, and delicious and liking feeding, and in trefure and jewels, and rich ornaments, freres passen lords and other rich worldly men, and sonest they shold bring ther cause about, (be it never so costly) though God's law be put abacke.

34. Frere, what charitie is this, to gather up the bokes of holy write, and put hem in treforie, and so emprison them from secular priestes and curats, and by this cautell let hem to prech the gospel frely to the peple without worldly mede, and also to defame gode priestes of heresie, and lien on hem openly for to let hem to shew God's law by the holy gospel to the christian peple?

35. Frere, what charitie is this, to faine so much holines in your bodily clothing, (that ye clepe your habit) that many blind soles desiren to die therein more than in another? And also that a Frere that leaveth his habit late founden of men may not be affoiled till he take againe, but is apostata as ye saine, and cursed of God and man both? The Frere beleveth truth, and patience, chastitie, mekenesse, and sobrietie, yet for the more part of his life he may sone be affoiled of his prior, and if he bring home to his house much gode by the yere (be it never so falsely begged and pilled of the pore and nedie peple in countries about) he shal be hold a noble Frere, O Lord! whether this be charitie?

36. Frere, what charitie is this, to prese upon a rich man, and to intice him to be buried among you from his parish church, and to such rich men give letters of fraternitie confirmed by your generall sele, and thereby to bere him in hand that he shal have part of all your masses, mattins, prechings, fastings, wakings, and all other gode dedes done by your brethren of your order (both whilest he liveth, and after that he is ded) and yet ye witten never whether your dedes be acceptable to God, ne whether that man that hath that letter be able by gode living to receive any part of your dedes, and yet a pore man (that ye wite well or supposen in certen to have no gode of) ye ne given to such letters, though he be a better man to God than such a rich man: nevertheless this pore man doth not retch therof. For as men supposen, such in the

such letters and many other that Freres behoten to men, be full false deceits of Freres, out of all reson, and God's law and christian mens faith.

37. Frere, what charitie is this, to be confessors of lords and ladies, and to other mightie men, and not amend hem in ther living? but rather as it semeth to be the bolder to pill ther pore tenants and to live in lechery, and there to dwell in your office of confessor for winning of worldlie godes, and to be hold grete by colour of such ghostly offices? this semeth rather pride of Freres, than charitie of God.

38. Frere, what charitie is this, to sain that who so liveth after your order, liveth most perfectlie, and next followeth the state of Apostles in povertie and penance, and yet the wisest and gretest clerkes of you wend or send, or procure to the court of Rome to be made cardinals or bishops of the pope's chaplens, and to be assoiled of the vow of povertie and obedience to your ministers, in the which (as ye sain) standeth most perfection and merit of your orders, and thus ye faren as Pharisees that sain one and do an other to the contrarie, thom

Why name ye more the patron of your order in your Confiteor when ye begin masse, than other Saints, Apostles, or Martyrs, that holy Church hold more glorious than hem, and clepe hem your patrons and your avowries?

Frere, whether was St. Francis in making of his rule that he set thine order in, a sole and a liar, or else wise and true? If ye sain that he was not a sole, but wise; ne a liar, but true: why shew ye contrarie by your doing, when by your suggestion to the Pope ye said; that your rule that Francis made was so hard, that ye mow not live to hold it without declaration and dispensation of the Pope, and so by your dede ye let your patron a sole that made a rule so hard that no man may well kepe, and eke your dede proveth him a liar, where he saith in his rule, that he toke and lerned it of the Holy Ghost. For how might ye for shame pray the Pope undo that the holy ghost bit, as when ye prayed him to dispense with the hardnesse of your order!

Frere, which of the foure orders of friers is best to a man that knoweth not which is the best, but would faine enter into the best, and none other? If thou saiest that thine is the best, then saiest thou that none of the other is as gode as thine, and in this ech frere in the thre other orders woll say that thou liest, for in the self same maner ech other frere woll say that his order is best. And thus to ech of the foure orders bin the other thre contrary in this point: in the which if any say soth, that is one alone, for there may but one be the best of foure. So followeth it, that if ech of these orders answered to this question as thou doest, thre were false, and but one true, and yet no man should wite who that were. And thus it semeth, that the most part of freres bin or should be liars in this point, and they should answer thereto. If you say that another order of the freres is better than thine, or as gode, why toke ye not rather thereto as to the better, when thou mightst have chose at the beginning? And eke why shouldst thou be an apostata to leve thine order and take The to that is better, and so why goest thou not from thine order into that?

Frere, is there any perfecter rule of religion than Christ God's sonne gave in his gospel to his brethren? Or than that religion that S. James in his epistle maketh mencion of? If you say yes, then putteth thou on Christ (that is the wisdom of God the father) ununning, unpower, or evill will: for then he could not make his rule so gode as an other did his. And so he had be ununning, that he might not make his rule so gode as an other man might, and so were he unmightie, and not God, as he would not make his rule so perfect as an other did his, and so he had bin evill willed, namely to himselfe.

For if he might, and could, and would have made a rule perfect without default, and did not, he was not God's sonne almighty. For if any other rule be perfecter, than Christe's, then must Christe's rule lacke of that perfection by as much as the other weren more perfecter, and so were default, and Christ had failed in making of his rule: but to put any default or failing in God, is blasphemie. If thou say that Christe's rule, and that religion which S. James maketh mencion of, is perfectest; why holdest thou not thilke rule without more? And why clepest thou the rather of S. Francis or S. Dominik's rule or religion or order, than of Christe's rule or Christe's order?

Frere, canst thou any default or assigne in Christe's rule of the gospel (with the which he taught all men sickerly to be saved) if they kept it to ther ending? If thou say it was to hard, then saiest thou Christ lied; for he said of his rule: My yoke is soft, and my burden light. If thou say Christe's rule was to light, that may be assigned for no default, for the better it may be kept. If thou saist that there is no default in Christe's rule of the Gospel, sith Christ himself saith it is light and esie: what nede was it to patrons of freres to adde more thereto? and so to make an harder religion to save freres, than was the religion of Christe's apostles and his disciples helden and were saved by? But if they wolden that ther freres saren above the apostles in heven for the harder religion that they kepen here, so would they sitten in heven above Christ himselfe, for ther more and strict observations, then so should they be better than Christ himself with mischance.

Go now forth and fraine your clerks, and ground ye you in God's law, and git Jacke an answer, and when ye han assoiled me that I have said sadly in truth, I shall soile The of thine orders, and save The to heven.

If freres can not or mow not excuse hem of these questions asked of hem, it semeth that they be horrible gilty against God, and ther even christian; for which gilts and defaults it were worthy that the order that they cal ther order were sordone. And it is wonder that men susteine hem or suffer them live in such maner. For holie write biddeth that thou do wel to the meke, and give not to the wicked, but forbed to give hem bred, lest they be made thereby mightier through you.

This Prologue and the Tale which follows it, were never before printed, and are taken out of a MS. borrowed from the Honourable Lady Thinn's; and not to be met with in any of the other MSS. which Mr. Urry had perused: So that if the sense and measure of the Verse are not so perfect here as in the other Tales, it must be attributed to the want of MSS. upon the authority of which all the other corrections are chiefly grounded: The Verse in all probability is of the same kind with that of Gamelyn, and were it to be found in as many MSS. might no doubt be as easily compleated, but having no other besides the forementioned, the Reader must be content with only a faithfull Transcript of it out of that MS.

The PROLOGUE,

Or, the mery adventure of the Pardonere and Tapstere at the Inn at Canterbury.

WHEN all this fresh fellowship were com to Cantirbury,
As ye have herde to fore with talys glad and mery;
Som of sotill sentence of vertue and of lore,
And som of othir mirthis, for them that hold no store
Of wisdom, ne of holynes, ne of chivalry,
Nethir of vertuouse matere, but to foly
Leyd wit and lustis all to such Japis
As hurlewaynes meyne in every hegg that rapes
Thorough unstabill mynde, ryght as the levis grene Stondewn ageyn the weðir, ryght so by them I mene.
But no more hereof nowc at this ilche tyme
In saving of my sentence, my prolog, and my ryme.
They toke their In and loggit them at mydmorowe
I trowe,
Alle cheker of the hope that many a man doth knowe;
Their hoost of Southworke that with them went, as ye have herde to fore,
That was rewler of them al of las and eke of more,
Ordeyned their dyner wisely, or they to chirch went,
Such vitailis as he sonde in town, and for noon othir sent,
The Pardonere behelde the besynes how statis wer i-
servid,
Diskenryng hym al prively and a syde swervid; 20
The hostelere was so halowid fro o plase to another,
He toke his staffe to the tapstere; welcom myne own
brother,
Qð she, with a frendly loke alreedy for to kys;
And he, as a man i lerned of such kyndnes,
Bracyd hir by the myddyll and made hir gladly chere,
As thoughe he had iknowen hir al the rathir yeer:
She halid hym into the rapstry there hir bed was ma-
kid
Lo here I ligg, (qð she) my self al nyght al nakid
Without manny's company, syn my love was dede, Jenkyn Harpoure, yf ye hym knewe, from fete to the hede 30
Was not a lustier persone to daunce ne to lepe,
Then he was, thoughe I it sey; and therewith to wepe
She made, and with hir napron feir and white ywash
She wyped soft hir even for teris that she out lath,
As grete as any myllstone, upward gon they stert,
For love of her swetyng, that sat so nighe hir hert.
She wept and waylid and wrong hir hondis and made much to done;
For they that loven so passyngly such trowes they have echon

She snyffith, sighith, and shoke hire hede, and made rouful cher;
Benedicite, qð the Pardonere, and toke hir by the swere, Yee make sorowe inowgh, qð he, your life though ye shuld lese;
It is no wondir, qð she than, and therewith she gan to sneise.
Aha, al hole, qð the Pardonere, your pennaunce is somewhat passid;
God forbede it els, qð she, but it were somewhat lassid;
I myght nat lyve els, thowe wotist, and it shuld long endure;
Now blessid be God of mendement of hele and eke of cure,
Qð the Pardonere tho anon, and toke hir by the chynne,
And sayd to hir these wordis tho, alas! that love is syn!
So kynd a lover as yee be oon, and so trew of herte,
For be my trewe conscience yit for yewe I smerte, so
And shall this month hereafter for your soden disese:
Now wele wer hym ye lovid, so he coud you plese.
I durst swere upon a book that trewe he shuld yewe
fynd:
For he that is so yore dede is grene in yeur mynd.
Ye made me a fory man, I dred ye wold have stervid.
Graunt mercy, gentil Sir, qð she, that yee unaservid;
Yee be a nobile man, iblessid mut yee be:
Sit down ye shul drynk, nay I wis (qð he,)
I am fastyng yit, myne own hert is rote,
Fastyng yit alas! qð she, therof I can gode bore. 60
She stert into the town and fet a py al hore,
And set to fore the Pardonere; Jenken, I ween I n'ote
Is that your name I yow prey ye I wis myne own fuskir;
So was I enformyd of them that did me fostir.
And what is yowrs? Kitt, iwis; so cleped me my dame,
And Godd's blessing have thow, Kitt; now broke wel thy name;
And privylich unlasid his both eyen liddes,
And lokid hir in the visage paramour amyddis;
And sighed there with a litil time, that she it here myghte,
And gan to rown and feyn this song, Now love then do me righte: 70
Ete and be mery, qð she, why breke ye nowt your fast?
To wait more fellowship it were but work in waste.
Whi make ye so dull chere? for your love at home?
Nay

Nay forsooth, myne own hert, it is for yow aloon,
For me? alas! what sey ye? that wer a simple prey.
Trewlich yit, qð the Pardonere, it is as I yewe sey.
Ye etith and beth mery, we wol speke thereof sone;
Brennyd Cat dredith feir; it is mery to be aloon:
For by our lady Mary, that bare Jesus on hir arm,
I could nevir love yit but it did me harm: 80
For evir my manere hath be to love ovirmuch.
Now Crist is blessing, qð the Pardonere, go with al such.
Lo! how the clowdis worchyn, ech man to mete his mach,
For trewly, gentil cristian I use the same tache,
And have ydo many a yer; I may it nat forbere;
For kynd w ll have his cours, though men the contrary
swere.
And therewith he stert up smertly, and cast down a grote,
What shal this do, gentil Sir? nay Sir for my cote
I n'old ye payd a peny her, and so sone pas.
The Pardonere swore his grett othe, he wold pay no las.
I wis, Sir, it is ovir do, but sith it is yowr will,
I wold putt it in my purse, lest yee it take in ill
To refuse your curtesy: and therewith he gan to bowe.
Now trewly, qð the Pardonere, your maners been to lowe.
For had ye countid freytly, and nothing left behind,
I might have wele ydemed that yee be unkind,
And eke untrew of hert, and sooner me forgete;
But ye list be my tresorer, for we shall offter mete.
Now certen, qð the tapster, ye have a rede ful even,
As wold to God ye couth as wele undo my sweven
That I my self did mete this nyght that is ypassid,
How I was in a chirch, when it was all ymassid;
And was in my devocioun tyl service was al doon,
Tyl the preest and the clerk boystly bad me goon,
And put me out of the chirch with an egir mode.
Now Seynt Daniel, qð the Pardonere, your swevyn turn to gode;
And I wold halfow it to the best, have it in your mynd;
For comynly of these swevyngs the contrary men shul
fynd.
Ye have be a lover glad, and litil joy yhad;
Plick up a lusty hert, and be mery and glad; 110
For ye shul have an husbond, that shall yewe wed to wyve,
That shal love yewe as hertly as his own lyve.
The preest that put yew out of chirch shal lede you in ageyne,
And helpe to your mariage with al his might and main:
This is the sweven al and som Kit, how likith The?
Be my trowith wondir wele; bleffid mut thowe be,
Then toke he leve at that tyme, tyll he com efftione,
And went to his feleship (as it was to doon) Thoughe it be no grete holynes to prech this ilk ma-
tere,
And that som list to her it, yit, Sirs, ner the latter
Endurith for a while and suffrith them that wold,
And ye shul her how the Tapster made the Pardonere pull
Garlik all the long nyghte til it was ner end day;
For the more chere she made of love, the faller was her lay.
But litil charge gaff she therof, tho she aquit his while,
For ethir is thought and tent was othir to begile;
As ye shul here hereaftir, when tyme comith and spase
To meve such matere——but now a litil spase
I wol return me ageyn to the company,
The knyghte and al the feleship and nothing for to ly,
Whan they wer al yloggit, as skil wold and reson,
Everich aftir his degre, to chirch then was seson
To pas and to wend, to make their offringis,

Righte as their devocioun was, of silver broch, and ryngis.
Then at chirch dorr the curtesy gan to ryse, Tyl the knyght, of gentilnes that knewe right wele
the guyse,
Put forth the prelatis, the parson, and his sere,
A monk, that took the spryngill with a manly chere,
And did as the manere is, moilid al their patis
Everich aftir othir, righte as they wer of statis. 140
The frer feynyd fetouilly the spryngill for to hold To spryng oppon the remnaunt; that for his cope he n'old
Have last that occupacioun in that holy plase;
So longid his holy conscience to se the Nonn's safe.
The knyght went with his compers toward the holy shryne,
To do that they wer com for, and aftir for to dyne,
The Pardonere and the miller and othir lewde fotes
Sought hem self in the chirch, right as lewd gotes;
Pyrid fast and pourid high upon the glafe,
Counterfetyng gentilmen the armys for to blafe,
Diskynering fast the peyntur and for the story mournid
And a red al so right as rammys hornid,
He berith a ballstaf, qð the toon, and els a raked end;
Thow failest, qð the miller, thow hast nat wel thy mynd;
It is a spere, yf thow canst se, with a prik tofore,
To bush a down his Enmy and through the shoulder bore.
Pese, qð the hoost of Southwork, let stond the wyn-dow glafid,
Goith up and doith your offerynge, ye semith half a-malid,
Sith ye be in company of honest men and good, Worchith somwhat aftir them and let the kynd of brode 160
Pas for a tyme, I hold it for the best;
For who doith after company may live the bet in rest.
Then passid they forth boystly gogling with their hedis,
Knelid adown to fore the shrine and hertlich their bedis
They preyd to seint Thomas, in such wyse as they couth;
And sith the holy reliques ech man with his mowith Kissid, as a goodly monk the names told and taught.
And sith to othir places of holynes they raught,
And wer in their devocioun tyl service wer al doon:
And sith they drowgh to dynerward, as it drew to noon, 170
Then, as manere and custum is, signes there they bought;
For men of contre shuld know whome they had sought.
Eche man set his silver in such thing as they likid:
And in the meen while the miller had ypickid
His bosom ful of signys of Caunterbury brochis;
Though the Pardonere and he pryvely in hir pouchis
They put them afterwards, that noon of them it wist,
Save the Sompner seid somwhat, and seyde to he list
Half part, qð he, prively roonyng on their ere:
Hush, pees, qð the miller, seist now nat the frere,
How he lowrith undir his hood with a doggish eye?
Hit shuld be a privy thing that he could nat aspy:
Of every craft he can somwhat our lady give hym so-
rowe.
Amen, tho qð the Sompner, on eve and eke on mo-
rowe.
So cursid a tale he told of me, the devill of hell hym spede,
And me, but yf I pay him wele and quyte wele his
mede,
Yf it hap homward that ech man tell his tale,
As we did hiðerward, though we shuld set at sale

All the shrewdnes that I can, I woll hym nothing spare,
 That I nol touch his takerd somewhat of his care.
 They set then signys upon their hedes, and som oppon their capp,
 And fith to the dyneward they gan for to stapp;
 Every man in his degre wissh and toke his sete,
 As they wer wont to doon at soper and at mete,
 And wer in silence for a tyme, tyl good ale gan arise,
 And then as nature axith as these old wise
 Knownen wele, when reynys been somewhat replete,
 The spirts wol flere, and also metis swete
 Causen oft myrthis for to be ymevid,
 And eke it was no tyme tho for to be ygrevid: 200
 Every man in his wyse made hertly chere,
 Telling his felowe of sportys and of chere,
 And of othir mirthis that fellyn by the wey,
 As custom is of pylgryms, and hath been many a dey.
 The hoost leid to his ere, of Southworke as ye knowe,
 And thenkid al the company both high and lowe,
 So wole kepeing the covenaut, in Southwork that was made,
 That every man shuld by the wey with a tale glade
 All the whole company in shorting of the wey;
 And al is wele performed, but than now thus I sey,
 That we must so homeward ech man tel anothir,
 Thus we wer accordit, and I shuld be a rathir
 To set yewe in governaunce by right ful jugement.
 Trevely hoost, qd the Frer, that was all our assent,
 With a litil more that I shall sey therto.
 Yee graunted of your curtesy that we shuld also
 All the holt company sope with yewe at nyght:
 Thus I trow that it was, what sey you, Sir knyght?
 It shal nat nede qd the hoost, to axe no witnes;
 Your record is good I now; and of your gentilnes
 Yit I prey yew est ageyn: for by seynt Thomas suryne
 And ye woll hold covenaut, I woll hold myne.
 Now trevely hoost, qd the knyght, ye have right wel yseyd;
 And as towching my persone, I hold me payde;
 And so I trowe that al doith. Sirs, what sey yee?
 The Monk and eke the Marchaunte and al seid, ye.
 Then al this affir-mere I hold it for the best
 To sport and pley us, qd the hoost, eche man as hym list,
 And go by tyme to soper and to bed also;
 So mowe we erly ryfen, our jorney for to do. 230
 The knyght arose therwithal, and cast on a fresher gown,
 And his sone anothir, to walk in the town.
 And so did all the remnaunt that wer of that aray,
 That had their chaungis with them, they made them fresh and gay;
 Sortid them togidur, right as their lustis lay,
 As they were more usid travelling by the way.
 The knyght with his meyne went to se the walle,
 And the wards of the town as to a knyght befall;
 Derising ententislich the strengthis al about,
 And apointid to his sone the perell and the dout, For shot of arblast and of bowe, and eke for shot of gonne, 241
 Unto the wardis of the town, and how it might be wone;
 And al defence ther ageyn affir his intent
 He declarid compendiously, and al that evir he ment,
 He sone perseyvid every poynt, as he was full abil,
 To armes and to travaile and persone covenabill
 He was of all factur affir fourm of kynd,
 And for to deme his governaunce it semed that his
 mynd
 Was much in his lady that he lovid best;
 That made hym offir to wake when he shuld have his rest. 250

The clerk that was of Oxenforth onto the Sompnore seyde;
 Me semeth of grete clerge that thou art a mayde;
 For thou puttest on the Frer in maner of repreff,
 That he knoweth falshe, vice, and eke a theff.
 And I it hold vertuouse and right commendabill
 To have very knowleche of things reprovabill.
 For who so may eschew it, and let it pas by,
 And els he myght fall theron unward and sodenly.
 And thoughe the Frer told a tale of a Sompnour;
 Thou oughtist for to take it for no dishonour: 260
 For of al craftis and of eche degre
 They be not al perfite, but som nyce be.
 Lo! what is worthy, seyde the knyght, for to be a clerk.
 To sommon among us them this mocionne was ful derke;
 I comend his wittis and eke his clerge;
 For of ether parte he saveth honeste.
 The Monk toke the Parson then and the grey Frer
 And preyd them for curtesy for to go in fere.
 I have ther acquaintaunce, that al this yeris thre-
 Hath preyd hym by his lettris that I hym wold se:
 And ye my brothir in habit and in possessioun.
 And now I am here, methinkith it is to doon,
 To preve it in dede what chere he wold me make,
 And to yew my frende also for my sake.
 They went forth togidur talking of holy matere;
 But woot ye wele, in certeyn they had no mind on watere
 To drynk at that tyme, when they wer met in fere:
 For of the best that myght be founde and therewith mery chere
 They had, it is no doute, for spycys and eke wine
 Went round about the gastoyne, and eke the ruyne.
 The wyfe of bath was so very she had no wyl to walk;
 She toke the Piores by the honde; Madam, wol ye stalk
 Pryvely into the garden to se the herbis growe?
 And affir with our host's wife in hir parlour rowe?
 I wol gyve yewe the wyne, and ye shul me also.
 For tyl we go to soper we have naught ellis to do.
 The Piores, as woman taught of gentil blood and hend,
 Assentid to hir counsel; and forth gon they wend,
 Passyng forth sofftly into the herbery:
 For many a herb grewe for sewe and surgery; 290
 And all the aleys feir and parid, and raylid, and y-makid:
 The savige and the isope yfrethid and ystakid;
 And othir beddis by and by fresh ydight,
 For comers to the hooste righte a sportful fight.
 The Marchaunt, and the Mancipill, the Miller, and the Reve,
 And the Clerk of Oxenforth, to townward gan they
 meve;
 And al the othir meyne; and lafft noon at home,
 Save the Pardoner, that pryvelich when al they wer goon
 Stalkid into the tapstry: for nothing wold he leve,
 To make his covenante in certeyn that same eve,
 He wold be loggit with hir, that was his hole enter-tiounne.
 But hap and eke fortune and all the constellaciounne
 Was clere hym ageyns, as ye shul affir here.
 For hym had better be yloggit al nyght in a myere,
 Then he was the same nyght or the sun was up:
 For such was his fortune he drank without the cupp,
 But thereof wist he no dele; ne no man of us alle
 May have that high connyng, to know what shal befall.
 He stappid into the tapstry wondir pryvely,
 And fond hir ligging liryng with half slopy eye, 310
 Pourid fellich undir hir hood, and sawe al his comyng,
 And

And lay ay still, as naught she knewe, but feynid hir slepyng.
 He put his hond to hir brest, awake, qð he, awake:
 A! benedicite, Sir, who wist yew her? out tho I myght be take
 Prisoner, qð the rapstere, being al aloon;
 And therwith breyd up in a frite, and began to groon:
 Now sith ye be my prisoner, yeld yew now, qð he,
 I must nedis, qð she, I may nothyng fle;
 And eke I have no strength and am but yong of age,
 And also it is no mastery to catch a mouse in a cage, 320
That may no where stert out, but closid wondir fast;
 And eke, Sir, I tell yew, though I had grete hast, Ye shuld have coughed when ye com, wher lern you curtesy;
 Now trewlich I must chide, for of right pryvety
 Women ben som tyme of day, when they be aloon.
 Wher coude I yew prey when ye com efttison?
 Nowe mercy, dere swetyng, I wol do so no more:
 I thank you an hundrit lithis; and also by your lore
 I wol do hereafter in what plase that I com.
 But lovers, Kitt, ben evil avysid full oft and to lom.
 Wherfor I prey you hertlich hold me excusid,
 And I behote yew trewly it shall no more be usid.
 But now to our purpose; how have ye fare,
 Sith I was wyth you last? that is my most care.
 For yf yee eylid eny thing othir wise then good,
 Trewly it wold chaunge my chere and my blood.
 I have farid the wars for yewe, qð Kitt, do ye no
 drede
 God that is above? and eke ye had no nede
 For to congir me, God woot, wyth your nygromancy,
 That have no more to vaunte me but oonly my body;
 And yf it were disteynid, then wer I on 400;
 I wis I trowe, Jenkyn, ye be nat to trust ro.
 For evir more ye clerkis con so much in book,
 Yee wol wynn a woman at first look.
 Thought the Pardonere, this goith wele; and made his beter chere,
 And axid of hir softly; love, who shall ligg here
 This nyght that is to comyng? I prey yewe tell me.
 Lwis it is grete nede to tell yewe, qð she:
 Make it nat overqueynt, though yew be a clerk, Ye knowe wele inough iwis, by loken, by word, by work. 350
 Shal I com than, christian, and fese away the cat?
 Shal ye com? per benedicite, what question is that?
 Wherfor I prey you hertly to be my Counsaill;
 Comyth somwhat late, and for nothing fail;
 The dorr shall stond thar up; put it from yew soft:
 But be wele avysid, ye wake nat them on lofft.
 Care ye nat, qð Jenkin, I can theron at best;
 Shal no man for my stepyng be wakid of his rest.
 Anoon they dronk the beverage, and wer of oon accord
 As it semed by their chere, and also by their word: 360
 And al a staunce she lovid hym wele, she toke hym by the swere;
 As though he had lernyd cury favel of som old frere,
 The Pardonere plukkid out of his purs, I trow the dowry;
 And toke it Kitt, in hir hond, and bad her pryvely
 To ordene a rere sopor for them both to,
 A cawdell ymade with swete wyne, and with sugir
 also;
 For trewly I have no talent to ete in yewr absence;
 So longith my hert toward yew to be in yewr presence.
 He toke his leve and went his wey as though nothing wer,
 And met wyth al the felship; but in what plase ne
 wher 370
 He spake no word therof, but held hym close and styll;

As he that hopid skirlich to have had al his wyl;
 And thought many a mery thought by hymself aloon;
 I am a loggit, thought he, best, how soevir it goon;
 And thoughte it have collid me, yit wol I do my peyn
 For to pike hir purs to nyghte and win my coll ageyn.
 Now leve I the Pardonere tyll that it be eve,
 And wol returne me ageyn righte ther as I did leve.
 Whan al wer com togidir in their herbegage,
 The hoost of Southwork, as ye knowe, that had no spice of rage, 380
 But al thing wrought prudencially as sobir man and wise;
 Now wol we to the soup, Sir knyght, seith yew avyse,
 Qð the hoost ful curteysly, and in the same wise.
 The knyght answer'd him ageyn, Sir as ye devyse
 I must obey, ye woot wele; but yf I fail wyte, Then takith thes prelatys to yewe and wasluth and go sit;
 For I woll be yewr Marchall and serve yewe ech one,
 And then the officers and I to soper shall we gone.
 They wish and sitt right as he bad, eche man wyth his lere,
 And begonne to talk of sportis and of chere, 390
 That they had the affir-mete whiles they wer out;
 For othir occupaciounes tyll they wer servid about
 They had nat at that tyme, but eny man kint a loff;
 But the Pardonere kept hym close, and told nothing of The myrth and hope that he had, but kept it for hymself;
 And thoughte he did it is no fors; for he had nede to solve.
 Long or it wer mydnyght, as ye shul her sone;
 For he met with his love in crokeing of the moon.
 They wer yservyd honelly, and eche man held hym payde:
 For of o manere of service their soper was a aide, 400
 As skill wold and reton, sith the lest of all
 Par idylke much, for growing of the gail.
 Buryit as curtesy axith, though it wer som dele streight,
 The stais that wer above had of the feyrest endreyte.
 Wherfor they did their gentilnes ageyn to all the rout,
 They dronken wyne at their cost onys round about,
 Now pass I lightly ovir, when they soupid had,
 Tho that were of governaunce as wyse men and sad
 Went to their rest, and made no more to doon;
 But Miller and the Coke dronken by the moon 410
 Twyes to eche othir in the repenyng.
 And when the Pardonere them espyd, anoon he gan to ling,
 Doubill me this bourden, chokelyng in his throte;
 For the Tapster shal here of his mery note.
 He clepid to hym the Sompnour that was his own discipill,
 The Yeman, and the Reve, and the Mancipill;
 And stoden so holowyn; for nothing wold they leve,
 Tyl the tyme that it was well within eve.
 The hoost of Southwork herd them wele, and the March unt both,
 As they wer at a countis, and wexen somewhat wroth.
 But yet they preyd them curteysly to lett for to wend,
 And so they did all the rout, they dronk and made an end:
 And eche man dronghe to usky to slepe and take his rest,
 Save the Pardonere, that drew apart, and weyr'd by a chesse
 For to hide hymself, tyl the candill wer out;
 And in the meen while, have ye no doute,
 The Tapster and hir Paramour, and the hosteler of the house
 Sitt togidir pryvelich, and of the best gouse
 That was y found in town and yset at sale
 They had there of sufficiant, and dronk but litill ale; 420

And sit and ete the cawdell, for the Pardoner that was made,
With sugir and with swete wyne, right as hymself bade:

So he that payd for all in feer had not a twynt;
For oft is more better ymerkid then ymynt.
And so farid he ful right, as ye have yherd.
But who is that a woman could not make his berd,
And she wer therabout and set hir wyt therto?
Ye woot wele I ly nat, and wher I do or no
I wol nat here termyn it, lest ladies stond in plase
Or els gentil women, for lesing of my grace 440
Of daliaunce and of sportis and of goodly chere;
Therfor anenst their estatys I wol in no manere
Deme ne determyn, but of lewd kitts,
As Tapsters, and othir such that hath wyi wyttis,
To pike mennys pursis, and eke to bler their eye;
So wele they make seme soth when they falsed by,
Now of Kitt Tapster, and of hir Paramour,
And the hosteler of the house that sit in Kittis bour,
When they had ete and dronk right in the same plase,
Kit began to rendir out all thing as it was: 450
The wowing of the Pardoner, and his cost also,
And how he hopid for to lygg al nyght wyth hir also;
But therof he shall be sikir as of God's cope.
And sodeynly kistid her Paramour; and seyde, we shul scope

Togisir hul by hul, as we have many a nyght:
And yf he com and make noyse, I prey yewe dub hym knyght.

Yes dame, qd hir Paramour, be thow not agast;
This is his own staff thou seyest, therof he shall a gast.
Now trewly, qd the hosteler, and he com by my lot
He shall drink for Kittis love wythout cup or pot;
And he be so hardy to wake eny gylt,
I make a vowe to the peacock there shal wake a soul mist,

And arose up therewithal and toke his leve anon;
It was a shrewid company, they had servid so many oon.

With such manere of feleship ne kepe I never to dele
Ne no man that lovith his worship and his hele.
Qd Kitt to hir Paramour, ye must wake a whyle
For trewlich I am sikir that within this myle
The Pardoner wol be comyng his here to aswage;
But loke ye pay hym redelich to kele his corage;
And therfor love dischance yewe not tyll this clik be do.

No for God Kitt that wol I no.
Then Kitt went to bed, and blewe out all the light;
And by that tyme it was ner hond quarter nyght,
Whan all was still, the Pardoner gan to walk,
As glad as eny goldfynch, that he herd no man talk;
And drowghe to Kittis dorrward to herken and to list,
And went to have sond the dor up by the hasp, and eke the twist

Held hym out a whils and the lok also;
Yit trowid he no gile, but went ner to, 480
And serapid the dorr welplich, and wynyd wyth his mowith,

Astir a doggis lyden, as nere as he couith.
Away dog with evill deth, qd he, that was within,
And made hym all redy the dorr to unpin.

A! thought the Pardoner, tho I trow my berd be made,

The Tapster hath a Paramour and hath made them glade

With the cawdell that I ordeyned for me as I gues:
Now the devill hir spede, such oon as she is.

She seid I had ycongerid hir, our lady gyve hir sorowe
Now wold to God she wer in stokis tyl I shuld hir borowe: 490

For she is the falsed that evir yit I knewe,
To pik the mony out of my purs; Lord! she made hir trewe.

And therewyth he caught a cardiakill and a cold for;
For who have love longing and is of corage hote,
He hath ful many a myry thought tofore his delyte;
And right so had the Pardoner, and was in evil plight:
For sayling of his purpose he was nothing in cse;
Wherfor he fill sodenlich into a wood rese;

Entryng wondir fast into a frensy,
For pur very angir, and for jelousy, 500
For when he herd a man within, he was almost wood;
And because the cost was his, no marvel tho the moud
Wer turned into vengauce, yf it myght b:
But this was the myschief, all so strong as he Was he that was within, and lighter man also;
As provid wele the bataile betwene them both to.
The Pardoner scrapid cftt ageyn, for nothyng wold
he blyn;

So feyn he wold have herd more of hym that was within.

What dog is that, qd the Paramour? Kit, wost thou ere?

Have God my trowith, qd she, it is the Pardoner.
The Pardoner with myscheff! God gyve hym evil preff.

Sir, she seid, by my trowith he is the same theff.
Therof thou liest, qd the Pardoner, and might nat long forbere,

A thy fals body, qd he, the devil of hell The tere!
For by my trowith a falscher sawe I never noon:

And nempnid hir namys many mo then oon.
Though to rech hir wer noon honeste,

Among men of good of worship and degre.
But shortly to conclude; when he had chid inowe,

He axid his staff spitoulich wyth wordis sharp and
rowe. 520

Go to bed, qd he within, no more noyse thow make,
Thy staff shal be redy to morowe I undertake,

In soth, qd he, I wol nat fro the dorr wend, Tyl I have my staff, thow bribour, then have the toðir end,

Qd he that was within; and leyde it on his bak,
Right in the same plase, as chapmen berith their pak;

And so he did to mo, as he coude a rede, Graspyng astir with the staff in length and eke in brede;

And fond hym othir whyle redlich inoughe
With the staffys end high upon the browe. 530

The hosteler ley oppon his bed, and herd of this af-
fray,

And stert hym up lightlich, and thought he wold asay:
He toke a staff in his hond, and highed wondir blyve

Tyl he wer with the feleship that shuld never thryve:
What be yee, qd the hosteler? and knew them both wele,

Hyult pefe, qd the Paramour; Jak, thow must be fele.
Ther is a theff I tell The within this hall dorr.

A theff, qd Jak? this is a nobill chere
That thou hym hast yfound; yf wee hym myght catch.

Yis, yis, care The nought; with hym we shul mach
Wele inowe, or he be go, yf so we had lighte;

For we to be stronge inowe with o man for to fighte.
The Devill of hell, qd Jak, breke this thev's bonis.

The key of the kitchen, as it wer for the nonys,
Is above with our dame? and she hath such usage,

And she be wake of her slepe, she fallith in such a rage,
That al the weke astir there may no man hir plese,

So she sterith aboute this house in a wood rese.
But now I am avysid bet how we shul have lyte;

I have too giftis within, that this same nyght 550
Sopid in the halle, and had a litill feir.

Go up, qd Jak, and loke and in the ashis pire;
And I wol kepe the dorr, he shall not stert out.

Nay for God that woll I nat, lest I catch a clout, Seid the toðir to Jak; for thou knowist bettir then I

All the estris of this house, go up thy self and spy.
Nay

Nay for soth, q̃ Jak, that were grete unrighte.
To aventur oppon a man that with hym did not fighte.
Sithens thou hast hym bete and with thy staff ypiit, Me thinkith it wer no reson that I shuld bere the gilt: 560
For by the blysyng of the cole he myght se myne hede,
And lightly leve me such a stroke my hond to be dede.
Then wol we do by common assent sech hym al about,
Who that metith hym first pay him on the snout:
For methought I herd hym here last among the pannys.
Kepe thou, the todir side, but ware the watir cannys,
And if he be herin, ryght sone we shull hym fynde;
And we to be strong inowghe o theffe for to bynde.
Aha ha, thought the Pardoner, beth the pannys aryn?
And drowghe oppon that side, and thought oppon a gynne; 570
So at last he fond oon, and set it on his hede.
For, as the case was fall, ther'to he had grete nede.
But yit he graspit ferthir more to have somewhat in honde,
And fond a grete ladill, right as he was gonde,
And thought for to sterre out betwene them both to;
And waytid wele the Paramour that had doon hym woo;
And set him with the ladill on the gruscill on the nose,
That all the week after he had such a pose,
That both his eyin waterid erlich by the morowe.
But she that was the cause of it had ther'of no fo-
rowe. 580
But now to the Pardoner; as he wold stert away
The hosteler met with hym, but nothyng to his pay:
The Pardoner ran so swith the pan fill him fro,
And Jak hosteler astir hym, as blyve as he myght go;
And stapid oppon a brondeal unware,
That hym had bin beter to have goon more aware:
For the egg of the pann met with his shynne,
And karff atoo a veyn, and the next syn.
But whils that it was grene he thought litil on,
But when the grenenefs was apast, the gteff sat ner
the bone. 590
Yit Jak leyd to his hond to grope wher it sere,
And when he fond he was yhurt, the Pardoner he gan to threte;
And swore by Seynt Amyas, that he shuld abigg
With stroks hard and fore, even oppon the rigg;
Yf he hym myght fynd, he nothyng wold hym spare,
That herd the Pardoner wele, and held hym bettir a square.
And thought that he had strokis ryght inough,
Wytnes on his armys, his bak, and his browe.
Jak then, q̃ the Paramour, wher is the theff ago?
I n'ote, q̃ tho Jak; right now he lept me fro, 600
That Crist's curs go with hym, for I have harm and spite;
Be my trowith and I also and he goith nat al quyte;
But and we myght hym fynd, we wold aray hym so That he shuld have legg, ne foot, to morowe on to go.
But how shull we hym fynd? the moon is adown, (As grace was for the Pardoner) and eke when they did roun,
He herd them evir wele inowe, and went the more asyde,
And drew him evir bakward, and let the strokis glide.
Jak, q̃ the Paramour, I hold it for the best,
Sith the moon is down, for to go to rest, 610
And make the gatis fast; he may not then astert,
And eke of his own staff he berith a redy mark,
Wherby thou mayest him knowe among all the route,
And thou ber a redy cy and weyt wele aboute,
To morowe when they shul wend; this is the best rede.
Jak, what seyst thou therto? is this wele yseyd?
Thy wit is clere, q̃ Jak, thy wit mut nedis stonde.

He made the gatis fast; ther is no more to doon,
The Pardoner stode asyde, his chekis ron and bled,
And was ryght evil at ese al nyght in his hede: 620
He must of force lige lyke a colyn swerd;
Yit it mevid him wondir fore for making of his berd,
He payd at full ther'fore, through a womans art,
For wyne, and eke for cawdill, and had ther'of no part;
He ther'for preyd Seynt Juliane, as ye mowe onder-
stonde,
That the devill her shulde spede, on watir, and on londe;
So to disleive a travellyng man of his herbegage;
And could not els, save curs, his angir to alwage;
And was distract of his wit, and in grete despayr;
For astir his here he caught a cold through the nyght's eyr; 630
That he was ner afoundit, and could none othir help,
But as he fought his loggyng, he happid oppon a whielp
That ley undir a fleyir, a grete Walssh dog,
That bare about his neck a grete huge clog;
Because that he was spetouse, and wold sone bite:
The clog was hongit about his nek, for men shuld nat wite
Nothyng the dogg's maister, yf he did eny harm;
So, for to excuse them both, it was a wyly charm.
The Pardoner wold have loggit hym ther, and lay somwhat nigh;
The Warrok was awakid and caught hym by the thigh, 640
And bote hym wondir spetoussly, defending wele his couch,
That the Pardoner myght nat ne hym nether touch,
But held hym a square by that othir side,
As holfom was at that tyme, for tereing of his hyde:
He could noon othir help, but leyd adown his hede
In the dogg's littir, and wisshid astir brede,
Many a time and oft, the dog for to plese,
To have yley more nere for his own ese.
But wish what he wold, his fortune seyde ney;
So trewly for the Pardoner it was a disinal dey. 650
The dog ley evir grownyng, redy for to snache;
Wher'for the Pardoner durst nat with hym mache;
But ley, as still as eny ston, remembryng his toly,
That he wold trust a rappler of a common holly:
For commonly for the moll part they ben wyly echon.
But now to alle the company a morrow, whan they shuld gon,
Was noon of all the feleship half so sone ydlight
As was the gentil Pardoner; for al tyme of the nyght
He was aredy in his aray, and had nothing to doon,
Saffe shake alite hiseris, and trus, and be goone. 660
Yet or he cam in company, he wissh away the blood,
And bond the sorys to his hede with the typet of his hood;
And made lightfom chere; for men shuld nat spy
Nothyng of his turment, ne of his luxury;
And the hosteler of the house, for nothyng he could pry,
He could nat knowe the Pardoner among the company.
Amorowe when they shuld wend, for ought that they could pour,
So wysely went the Pardoner out of the dogg's bour;
And blynched from the hosteler, and turned offr about,
And evir more beheld hym amyward of the rout; 670
And was evir syngyng to make al thyng good;
But yit his notis wer somewhat low, for aking of his hede.
So at that tyme he had no more grame;
But held hym to his hapynes to scape shame.
The knyght and al the feleship forward gon they wend,
Passyng forth merely to the town's end;

And

And by that tyme they wer ther, the day began to rype,
 And the Son merely upward gan he pike,
 Pleying undir the egge of the firmament.
 Now, q<sup>d</sup> the hoost of Southwork, and to the feship bent;
 Who sawe evir so feyr, or so glad a day?
 And how fore this seson is entring into May:
 The Thrushelis, and the Thrushis, in this glad mornyng,
 The Ruddok, and the Goldfynch, but the Nyghtyngale
 His amorous notis lo! how he twynyth small.
 Lo! how the trees grenyth, that nakid wer, and nothing
 Bare this month afore, but their sommer clothing!
 Lo! how nature makith for them everichone!
 And, as many as ther be he forgettith noone!
 Lo! how the seson of the yere, and averell shouris, 690
 Doith the busshis burgyn out blossoms, and flouris!
 Lo! the pryme rosis how fresh they ben to sene!
 And many othir flouris among the gras grene!
 Lo! how they spryng, and sprede, and of divers hue!
 Beholdith, and seith both rede, white, and blue!
 That lusty bin and comfortabill for mannys sight!
 For I sey for my self, it makith my hert to light.
 Now sith Almighty Soveryn hath sent so seir a dey,
 Let se now, as covenantis, in shorting of the wey,
 Who shall be the first that shall unlace his male, 700
 In comfort of us al, and gyn some mery tale?
 For and we shuld now begyn to draw lot,
 Peraventure it myght fal ther it ought not,

On som unlusty persone, that wer not wele awakid,
 Or semybously ovr eve, and had ysong, and crakid,
 Somwhat ovr much; how shuld he than do?
 For who shuld tell a tale he must have good wyll therto.
 And eke som men fastyng beth glewid, and ybound
 In their tongis; and some fastyng beth nothyng jo-cound;
 And som in the morning their mouthis beth adoun, 710 Tyll that they be charmyd their wordis woll not foun.
 So thys is my conclusioun, and my last knot,
 It wer grete gentilnes to tell without lot.
 By the rood of Bromholm, q<sup>d</sup> the Marchant tho,
 As fer as I have sailed, riden, and ygo,
 Sawe I never man yet, tofore this ilk day,
 So wele coud rule a company, as our hoost in fay.
 His wordis ben so comtortabill, and comyth so in seson,
 That my wit is ovircome, to make eny reson
 Contrary to his counsaill, at myn ymagynacioun, 720
 Wherfor I woll tell a tale to your consolacioun;
 In ensampill to yowe; that when that I have do,
 Anothir be right redy then, for to tell; ryght so
 To fulfyll our hoost's wyll, and his ordinaunce.
 There shall no fawte be found in me, gode wyl shal be my chauce,
 With this I be excusid of my rudines,
 Altho' I cannot peynt my tale, but tell it as it is;
 Lepyng ovr no sentenec, as ferforth as I may,
 But tell yewe the Yolke, and put the White away.

The MERCHANT'S second Tale, or the History of BERYN.

Hilom yeris passid in the old dawis,
 When rightfullich by reson governyd wer
 the lawis,
 And pryncipally in the cete of Rome that was so rich,
 And worthiest in his dayes, and noon to hym ilich,
 Of worship, ne of wele, ne of governaunce;
 For alle londis christened therof had dotance;
 And all othir nationis, of what feith they were;
 Whils the Emperour was hole, and in his paleys there
 Imainteyned in honour, and in Pop's Se,
 Rome was then obiede of all Cristiantie. 10
 But it farith therby, as it doith by othir thingis:
 For though nethir cete, regioun, ne kyngis
 Beth nat now so worthy, as wer by old tyme;
 As we fynd in romaunces, in gestis, and in ryme.
 For all things doith wast, and eke mannys lyff
Is more shorter then it was; and our wittis fyve Mowe nat comprehende, now in our dietes,
 As som tyme myght these old wise poetes.
 But sith that terrene things ben nat perdurabill;
 No mervaile is, though Rome be somewhat variabill 20
 Fro honour and fro wele, sith his frendis passid;
 As many anothir town is payrid, and ylassid
 Within these few yeris, as we mowe se at eye,
 Lo! sirs here fast by Wynchelse and Ry.
 But yit the name is evir oon of Rome, as it was groundit
 After Remus & Romulus, that first that cete foundit;
 That brethren weren both to, as old bokis writen;
 But of ther les and governaunce I wol nat now enditen;

But of othir mater, that fallith to my mynd,
 Wherfor, gentill sirs, ye that beth behind, 30
 Drawith somwhat nere thikker to a rout;
 That my wordis may soun to ech man about.
 Afir these 2 brethren Romulus and Remus, Julius Caesar was Emperour, that rightful was of Domus:
 This cete he governed nobilich wele,
 And conquered many a regioun, as cronicull doth us telle.
 For shortly to conclude, al tho wer adversaryes
 To Rome in his dayis, he made them tributaries:
 So had he in subjectione both frend and foen;
 Of which I tell yew trewly Englonde was oon. 40
 Yit afir Julius Caesar, and sith that Crist was bore, Rome was governed as wele as it was before.
 And namelich in that tyme, and in the same yeris,
 When it was governed by the doseperis:
 As semeth wele by reson, who so can entend,
 That a mannys wyt, ne wyll, may not comprehend
The boucheff and the myscheff, as may many bedis:
 Therfor ther operaciouns, ther domes, and ther dedes,
 Were so egallich ydoon; for in all cristen londis,
 Was noon that they sparid for to mend wrongis. 50
 Then Constantyne the third, afir these doseperis,
 Was Emperour of Rome, and regnyd many yeris.
 So shortly to pas ovr, after Constantyn's dayis,
 Phis Augustinus, as songen is in layes,
 That Constantyn's son, and of plener age,
 Was Emperour ychose, as fill by heritage;
 In whose tyme fikerlich, the 7 Sages were In Rome dwellyng decently; and yf yee lust to lere, How

How they were yclepid, or I ferther goon,
I woll tell you the names of them everichone; 60
And declare yeu the cause why they ther namys bere,
The first was ycleped Sother Legifcer;
This is thus much for to sey, as man bering the lawe;
And so he did trewly; for levir he had be sclawe,
Then do, or sey, eny thing that sownyd out of reson:
So cleen was his conscience yset in trowith and reson:
Marcus Stoycus the second, so pepill hym highte;
That is to mene in our constert, a keper of the right:
And so he did full trewe; for the record and the plees,
He wrote them evir trewly; and took noon othir fees,
But such as was ordeynid to take by the yere.
Now, Lord God? in Cristendom I wold it were so clere.
The thirde Crassus Asulus among men clepid was;
An house of rest, and ese, and counsail in every case;
For to onderstond that was his name full right,
For evirmore the counsaills he helpid wyth al his myght.
Antonius Judeus, the firth was yclepid:
That was as much to meen, as wele me myght have clepid,
As eny pposid of all the long yere,
That myght have made hym sory or chongit onys
chere, 80
But evirmore rejoycing, what that evir betid;
For his hert was evir mery, right as the somer bridd.
Summus Philopater was the fift's name:
That thoughe men wold flee hym, or do hym al the shame,
Angir, or difese, as evil as men couthe;
Yet wold he love them nevir the wers, in hert, ne in mowith.
His will was cleen undir his foot, and nothing hym above;
Therfor he was clepid fathir of perfite love.
The 6. and the 7. of these sevin Sages,
Was Stypio, and Sithero; as thes word astrolages 90
Was sirname to them both, astir their sciences.
For of Astronomy sikerlich the cours, and all the fences
Bothe they knowhit wele inoughe, and werright sotil of art.
But now to othir purpose for her I woll depart,
As lightly as I can, and draw to my matere.
In that same tyme, that these Sages were Dwellyng thus in Room, a litill without the walles,
In the subarbis of the town, of chambris, and of hallis,
And all othir howseing, that to a Lord belongir, Was noon wythyn the cete; ne noon so wele be-hongit;
With doers of highe pryse, ne wallid so aboute,
As was a Senatours hous, wythyn, and eke wythoute.
Favinus was his name, a worthe man, and rich;
And for to sey shortlych, in Room was noon hym lyche.
His portis and his estris were full evenaunte
Of tresour, and of lordshyp; also the most vailant
He was, and eke ycom of high lynage.
And at last he toke a wyff, like to his peerage;
For noriture, and connyng, bewte, and parentyne
Wer tho coun'id more worth, than gold or sylvir fyne. 110
But now it is al othir in many mannys thought;
For muk ys now ymarried, and vertu set at nought.
Fawnus and his worthy wyff wer to giðir aloon,
Fyvetene wyntir fullliche, and isfu had they noon.
Wherfor ther joyis wer nat half perfite;
For uttirlich to have a child was al ther delite,
That myght enjoy ther heritage, and weld their honour;
And eke, when they were febill, to their trew socoure

Their fastyng, and their preyir, and all that evir they wrought.
As pilgrimage, and almsded, ever they besought 120
That God would of his goodnes som fruyte betwene them send.
Fro gynnynge of their spousaill, the myddil, and the end,
This was their most besynes; and all othir desires,
And eke this world's rychis they set at litil price.
So at last, as God wold, it fill oppon a dey,
As this lady fro chirchward went in the wey;
A child gan stere in her womb, as Godd's wyl was;
Wherof she gan to mervill, and made shortir pas, Wyth colour pale, and eke wanne, and full in he-vynes;
For she had nevir, tofore that day, such manere seke-
nes. 130
The wymmen, that with her were, gon to behold
The lady and her chere, but nothyng they told;
But feir and soft wyth ese homward they her led:
For her soden sekeneis full fore they were adred.
For she was inlich gentil, kynd, and anyabill,
And eke trewe of hert, and nothyng variabill.
She lovid God above all thing, and dreed syn and shame;
And Agea sikerly was her rightfull name.
So astir in bruff tyme, when it was purseyvyd,
That she had done a womans dede, and had a child conseyvyd; 140
The joy that she made, ther may no tung tell:
And al so much, or more, yf I ne ly shell,
Favinus made in his behalf, for this glad tyding:
That I trowe, I love the Emperour, ne the Kyng,
Made no bettir cher to wyff, ne no more myrth,
Then Fawnus to Agea. And when the tyme of birth
Nyghid ner and ner, astir cours of kynd,
Werith wele in certen, that all the wyt and mynd
Of Fawnus was continuell of feir delyveraunce; Betwene Agea and his child; and made grete orde-
naunce, 150
Ageyn the tyme it shuld be bore, as it was for to doon.
So as God wold, whan tyme cam, Agea had a Son.
But joy that Fawnus made, was dobil tho tofore,
When that he knew in certen she had a son ybore:
And sent anoon for nurfis four, and no less,
To reule this child: afterward as yeris did pas,
The child was kept so tenderly, that it throff wel
the bet:
For what the norishes axir, anoon it was ysett.
In his chambir it norished was, to town it mut nat go; Fawnus lovid it so cherey, hit myght nat part hym
fro. 160
It was so feyr a creature, as myght be on lyve,
Of lymys, and of setours, and growe wondir blyve.
This child, that I of tell, Berinus was his name,
Was ovir much cherished, which turned hym into grame;
As yee shull here astir, when time comyth and spase:
For astir swete the soure comyth full oft, in many a plase.
For as sone as he coud go, and also speke;
All that he set his ey on, or astir list to beke,
Anoon he shuld it have; for no man hym wernyd.
But it had be well bettir, he had be wele ylernyd 170
Noriture, and gentilnes; and had yhad some hey.
For it fill so astir, wyth what child he did pley,
Yf the pley ne likid hym, he wold breke his hede;
Or wyth a knyff hym hurt, ryght nygh hond to be dede.
For ther nas knyght, ne squyer, in his faðirs house,
That thought his owne persone moste corajouse,
That did, or seyde, eny thing Berinus to displese,
That he n'old spetoussly anoon oppon him rese.
Wherof his faðir had joy, and his moðir also:
Yit it semeth to many a man, it was nat wisely do. 180 7 O When

When Beryn passid was 7 yere; and grew in more age, He wrought ful many an evil chek; for such was his corage,

That there he wist, or might, do eny evill dede;
He wold nevir lese, for ought that men him seid.
Wherfor many a pore man ful oft was agrevid:
But Fawnus and Agea ful light theron belevid:
And thoughe men wold pleyne, full short it shuld a-
vaile;

For Fawnus was so myghty, and cheff of all counsaill,
With Augustyn the Emperour, that all men hym drad,
And lete pas ovir mischefe, and harmys that they
had. 190

Berinus ferthermore lovid wel the disce,
And for to pley at hazard, and held therof grete pryse,
And all othir gamys, that losery was in;
And evirmore he lost, and nevir might wyn.
Berynus at hazard many a nyght he wakid;
And oft tyme it fill so, that he cam hom al nakid;
And that was all his joy: for right wele he knew,
That Agea his moðir wold cloth hym newe.
Thus Berynus lyvid, as I have told to fore,
Tyll he was of the age of 18 yere or more. 200

But othir whyls amongis for pleyntis, that were grete, Fawnus made amendis, and put them in quite:

So was the faðir cause the sone was so wyld:

And so have many mo such, of his own child

Be cause of his undoyng, al we mowe se al day;

For thing ytake is hard to put away;

As hors that evir trottid, trowlich I yew telle,

It were hard to make hym astir to ambill welle;

Ryght so by Beryn, when he had his lust and wyll, when he was lite,

It shuld be hevy afterward to reve his old delite; 210
Save the whele of fortune, that no man may with-
stonde;

For every man on lyve theron he is gond,

O spoke she turnyd bakward, righte at high noone,

All ageyn Berinus, as ye shull here sone.

Agea his moðir fell in grete sekenes,

And sent astir husbond wyth wordis hire to lis;

And for she wold tell hym hir hole hertis wyll,

Er she out of the world partid, as it was right and skill.

When Fawnus was ycome, and saw so rodylese

Hys wyff, that was so dere, that for love he chese; 220

No mervell, though his hert wer in grete mournyng,

For he purseyvyd fullich, she drewe to hir endyng:

Yit made he othir chere, then in his hert was,

To put away discomfourt, dissimilyng wyth his fise

The hevynes of his hert, wyth chere he did it close:

For such a manner craft ther is wyth them can glose,

Save that tournyth all to cantele: but Fawnus did
nat so,

For, werith wele, in certeyn his hert was full of wo,

For his wyff Agea; and yit for craft he couth

The teris fro his eyin ran down by his mowith; 230

When he saw the pangis of deth comyng so fast

Oppon his wyff Agea, almost his hert to brast.

Agea lyft up hir eyen, and beheld the chere

Of hir husbond Fawnus, that was so trew a fere;

And seyde, Sir, why do ye thus? this is an clyng fare,

In comfourt of us both, yf yee myght spare,

And put away thys hevynes; whyle that yee and I

Myght speke of othir thyngis; for Deth me nyghith nygh.

For to body, ne to soule, this vailyth nat a karfe.

Now tellyth on, qð Fawnus, and I wol lete it pas, 240

For the tyme of talkyng, as wele as I may:

But out of my remembraunce, onto my endyng day,

Yeur deth woll nevir, I woot it wele, but evir be in my mynd.

Then, good Sir, qð Agea, beth to my soule kynd,

When my body is out of sight; forther to have I nede:

For truer make, then yee be, in word, ne in dede,

Had nevir woman; ne more kyndnes

Hath shewed unto his make; I know, right wele iwis:

Now wold ye so her astir, in hert be as trewe,

To lyve wythout make; and on yeur sone rewe, 250

That litill hath ylernid, sithens he was bore.

Let hym have no stepmoðir; for children have tofore

Comelich they lovith nat. Wherfor wyth hert I prey,

Have chere onto yeur sone, astir my endyng day:

For so God me help, and I lastt yew behynd;

Shuld nevir man on lyve bryng it in my mynd

To be no more yweddit, but lyve soule aloon.

Now yee know all my wyll, good sir, think theron.

Certis, qð Fawnus, whils I have wyttis fyve,

I think nevir, astir yew, to have anothir wyff. 260

The Preeft was com therwythall, for to do hir rightis:

Fawnus toke his leve, and all the othir knyghtis,

Hir kyndrid, and frendis, kissed hir echone.

It is no nede to axe, wher ther was dole, or noon.

Agea cast hir ey up, and lokid all aboute,

And wold have kissid Beryn; but then was he wythoute

Pleying to the hazard, as he was wont to doon.

For as sone as he had ete, he wold ren out anoon;

And when she saw he was not ther, that she thought moft on;

Hire sekenes, and hire mournyng, berft her hert a-
noon. 270

A damfell tofore that was ron into the tounce

For to seche Beryn, that pleyed for his gowne,

And had almost lost it, right as the damfell cam;

And swore, and starid, as he was wood, as longit to the game.

The damfell seyde to Beryn, Sir, ye must com home:

For, but ye hygh blyve, that yee wer ycome,

Your mothir woll be dede; she is yit on lyve;

Yf ye wol speke wyth her, yee mull hygh blyve.

Who bad so, lewd Kitt? your faðir, sir, qð she;

Go home, lewd visenag, that evil mut thow the, 280

Qð Beryne to the damfell, and gan her fray and feer;

And bad the devill of hell hir shoud to tere.

Hast thow ought els to do but let me of my game?

Now by God in hevin, by Peter, and by Jame,

Quoth Beryn in grete angir, and swore be book and bell,

Reherfing many namys, mo than me lyst to tell;

N'er thow, my faðirs messenger wer thou shuldift
nevir ete brede;

I had levir my moðir, and also thou, wer dede,

Then I shuld lese the game, that I am nowgh in:

And smote the damfell undir the ere, the weert gon upward spyn. 290

The death of Agea he set at litill pryse:

So in that wrath frolick, Beryn threw the dysce,

And lost wyth that same cast al was leyde adown;

And stert up in a wood rage, and ballid on his crown,

And so he did the remnaunt, as many as wold abyde:

But, for drede of Fawnus, his felawis gan to hyde;

And nevir had wyll, ne list, wyth Beryn for to fyght,

But evir redy to pley, and wyn what they myght.

The deth of Agea sprang about the towne;

And every man, that herd the bell for her sowne, 300

Bemony'd her full fore; fast Beryn toke none hede,

But sought anothir feleship, and quyklik to them
yede,

To such manner company, as shuld nevir thryve,

For such he lovid, bettir then hir moðir's lyve:

And evirmore, it shuld be nyght or he wold home drawe;

For of his faðir, in certeyn, he had no manner awe.

For evir in his yowith he had al his wyll,

And was ypassid chastising; but men wold hym kyll.

Fawnus for Agea, as it was well fitting,

Made grete ordenaunce for hir baryng,

310
Of

Of prelatys, and of preeftis, and of al othir thyng;
As thoughe she had be a wyff of a worthy kyng,
It myght nat have be mendit; such was his gentilnes;

For at hir enteriing was many a worthy messe.
For four weeks full, or he did her intere,
She ley in lede wythyn his houle. But Beryn cam not
there,

Namelich into the place where his moðir ley,
Ne onys wold he a Pater noster for hir soule sey.
His thought was all in unthryft, lechery, and dyse,
And drawyng all to foly; for yowith is reches; 320
But there it is refreynd, and hath som manere eye.
And therfore methinkith, that I may wele sey,
A man ypassid yowith, and is wythout lore,
May be wele ylikened to a tre wythout more,
That may nat bowe, ne bere fruyte, but root, and ever wast.

Ryght so by yowith farith, that no man list to chast.
This mowe we know verely by experience,
That yerd makith vertu and benevolence
In childhode for to growe, as provith ymagynacioun;
A plant, whils it is grene, or it have dominacioun, 330
A man may wyth his fyngers ply it, wher hym lyst,
And make therof a shakill, a with, or a twist;
But let the plant stond, and yeris ovingrowe,
Men shull not wyth both his handis unnethis make it growe:

No more myght Fawnus make his sone Beryn,
When he grew in age, to his lore encline
For every day when Beryn rose, unwash he wold dyne,
And draw hym to his felship, as even as a lyne;
And then com home, and ete, and soop, and slepe at nyght:

This was al his besynes, but yf that he did sight. 340
Wherfor his faðir's heart Fawnus gan for to blede,
That of his moðir, that ley at home, he toke no more hede;

And so did all the pepill that dwellid in the town
Of Beryn's wildnes gon speke, and eke roun.
Fawnus oppon a dey, when Beryn cam at eve,
Was set oppon a purpose to make his sone leve
All his shrewd taichis, wyth goodnes if he myght,
And taught hym feir and soft: but Beryn toke it light,

And countid at litill pryse al his faðir's tale.
Fawnus saw it wold nat; with colour wan and pale
He partid from his sone, and wyth a sorowfull hert.
I ne can write halfynde, how sore he did smert
The disobeying of his sone, and his wyl's deth:
That, as the book tellith, he wished that his breth
Had ybeen above the serkill celestyne:
So servent was his sorowe, his angir, and his pyne.
So shortly to conclude Agea was interid;
And Fawnus livid wysles 3 yere wer ywerid;
Wherof ther was grete speche for his high honour.
Tyll at last word cam onto the Emperour, 360
That Fawnus was without wyfe, and seld was jo-counde,

But mourning for Agea, that he was to ybound,
And lyvid as an hermyte, soule and destitute,
Wythout consolacioun, penyff oft and mute.
Wherfor Augustinus, of Rome the Emperour,
Was inwardlich fory, and in grete dolour.
Wyth that the 7 Sagis and senatouris all
Were assemblid, to diseryve what shuld therof fall.
The wych seyð shortly, for a molestacioun
Ther was noon othir remedy, but a consolacioun. 370
For whofo wer in any thing displeid or agrevid,
Must by a like thing egall be remeid.

And when the Emperour knew all their determina-
cioun;
Quicklich in his mynd he had imaginacioun,
That Fawnus for Agea was in high distres,

And must ycurid be wyth passyng gentilnes
Of som lusty lady, that of pulchritude
Were excellent al othir; so shortly to conclude,
The Emperour had a love, tofore he had a wyf,
That he lovid as hertlich, as his own lyf. 380
As was as feir a creature, as Sone myght besyne;
So excellent of bewte, that she myght be thryne
To all othir wymmen, that wer tho lyvand.
But for the Emperour had a wyf, ye shul wele onder-flond,

He cam nat in hir company, to have his delite.
For cristendome and conscience was tho more perfite,
Then it is now adayis; yf I durst tell:
But I wold leve at this tyme. Than Fawnus al so swell

Was astir sent in hast, of seknes to be curyd.
So what for drede, and ellis, they wer both ensuryd 390
In presence of the Emperour; so Fawnus myght nat flee:

It was the Emperours wyll, it myght noon othir be.
So wythin a tyme Agea was forgete:
For Fawnus thought litill on that he hir belight.
For, as the 7 Sagis had afore declarid,
It cam all to purpos; for Fawnus hyl carid
For eny thyng at all, save his wyf to plesse,
That Rame was yclepid; for rell, nethir ese
Fawnus nevir had, but of her presence:
So was his hert on her yset, that he coud no defence, 400

Save evirmore be wyth hir, and flare on hir visage;
That the most part of Room held it for dotage;
And had much marvell of his variance.

But what is that Fortune cannot put in chance?
For ther n'as man on lyce on woman more bedotid,
Then Fawnus was in Rame, ne half so much ylotid.
Wyth that Rame had knowlech that Fawnus was ysmyt

Wyth the dart of love; yee mowe ryght wele it wyt,
That all that evir she coud cast or ythynek,
Was all ageyn Berynus, for many a sotill wrench 410
She thought, and wrought day by day, as meny we-men doon,

Tyll they have of their desire the full conclusioun.
For the more that Fawnus of Rame did made,
The more dangerous was Rame, and of chere fader;
And kept wele hir purpose undir covirture:
She was the las to blame, it grew of nature.
But though that Rame wrought so; God forbode that alle

Wer of that condicioun. Yet touch no man the gall;
It is my plein counsell, but doith as othir doith; Take your part as it comith, of roughe, and eke of smothe. 420

Yit noritur, wit, and gentilnes, reson, and perfite mynde,
Doth all these worthy women to worch ageyns kynde;
That thoughe they be agrevid they suffir, and endure,
And passith ovir, for the best, and folowith nothing nature.

But now to Rame's purpose, and what was hir desire
Shortly to conclude, to make debate and ire
Betwene the faðir and the sone, as it was likely tho;
What for his condicioun, and what for love also;
That Fawnus owt to his wyf, the rathir he must hir
leve,

And grant for to mend, yf ought hir did greve. 430
Berinus evir wrought, right as he did before,
And Rame made hym chere of love, ther myght no woman more,

And gaff hym gold and clothing, evir as he did lese,
Of the best that he coud ought wher in town chese;
And speke full feir wyth hym, to make al thyng dede: Yit wold she have yete his hert, wythout salt, or brede;

She

She hid so hir felony, and spak so in covert,
That Beryn myght nat spy it but lite of Ram's hert.
So shortly to pas ovir; it fill oppon a nyghte,
When Fawnus and his fresch wyf wer to bed ydight,
He toke hir in his armys, and made hir hertly chere,
Ther myght no man betir make to his fere;
And seyde, myn ertly joy, myne hertis full plesauce,
My wele, my woo, my paradise, my lyv'is sustenaunce
Why ne be ye mery? why be ye so dull?
Sith ye know I am your own, right as your hert woll.
Now tell on love, myn own hert, yf ye eyllith ought;
For and it be in my power, anon it shall be wrought.
Rame wyth that gan sighe, and wyth a weeping
chere
Undid the bagg of trechery, and seide in this ma-
nere; 450
No mervell though myn hert be fore and full of delc,
For when I to yew weddit was, wrong went my whele:
But who may be, ageyns hap and aventure?
Therfor, as wele as I may, myne I mut endure:
Wyth many sharp wordis she set his hert on feir,
To purchase with hir praetik that she did desire.
But hoolich all hir wordis I cannot wele reherse, Ne write, ne endite, how she did perce
Through Fawnys's hert, and his scull also:
For more petouse compleynt, of sorowe, and of woo,
Made nevir woman ne more petously,
Then Rame made to Fawnys; she smote full bitterly
Into the veyn, and through his hert blood;
She blodcrit so, and wept, and was so high, on mode,
That unnethe she myght speke but othir while among Wordis of discomfourt, and hir hondis wrong;
For alas! and woo the tyme, that she weddit was,
Was evir more the frestite, when she myght have spafe;
I am yweddit; ye, God woot best, in what maner and how:
For yf it wer so fall, I had a child by you; 470
Lord! How shuld he lyve? how shuld he com away?
Sith Beryn is your first sone, and heir aftir your day.
But yf that he had grace to scoole for to goo,
To have som maner connyng, that he myght trust to:
For as it now stondith it were the best rede;
For, so God me help, I had levir he wer dede,
Than wer of such condicioun, or of such lore
As Beryn your sone is, it wer bett he wer unbore.
For he doith nat ellis, save at hazard pley,
And comyth home al nakid, ech othir dey. 480
For within this month, that I have wyth yew be,
Fistene sithis, for verrey grete pite,
I have yclothid hym al new, when he was to tore:
For evirmore he seyde, the old were ylore.
Now, and he wer my sone, I had levir he were yfod;
For and he pley so long, half our lyvelode
Wold scarcely suffise hymself oon,
And n're yee wold be grevid: I swere be seynt John,
He shuld aftir this dey be clothid no more for me;
But he wold kepe them bettir, and draw fro nycete.
Now gentill wyff, gramey of your wise tale
I thynk wel the more, that I sey no fale:
For towchyng my grevaunce, that Beryn goith al na-
kid;
Treulich that grevaunce is somewhat asclakid.
Let hym aloon, I prey yew, and I woll con yew thank;
For in such losery he hath lost many a frank.
The devil hym spede that rech, yf he be to tore;
And he use it hereaftir, as he hath doon to fore.
Beryn arose a morowe, and cried wondir fast,
And axid aftir clothis, but it was all in wast:
Ther was no man tendant for hym in all the house;
The whele was ychaungit into anothir cours.
Fawnus herd his sone wele, how he began to cry;
And rose up anon, and to hym did high;
And had forgete nothyng, that Rame had yseyde.
For he boillid so his hert, he was nat well apayde;

He went into the chambir, ther his sone ley;
And set hym down in a chair, and thus he gan to sey;
My gentil sone Beryn, now feir I woll ye teche;
Rew oppon thy self, and be thyne own leche. 510
Manhode is ycom now, myne own dere sone,
It is tyme thow be aweynynd of thyn old wone;
And thow art 20 wynters, and naught hast of doctryne;
Yit woldist thow draw to persite, the worship wold be thyne,
To noritur, and goodship, and al honest thing,
Ther myght com to myn hert no more glad ryding.
Leve now al thy foly, and thy rebawdry,
As tablis, and mervellis, and the hazardry;
And draw The to the company of honest men and good,
Els leve thow me as wele as Criste died on the rode,
And for al menkynd his Ghost pas lete,
Thow shalt for me hereaftir stond on thyn own fete;
For I woll no longir suffir this aray,
To clothe The al new ecce othir dey.
Yf thow wolt draw The to wit, and rebawdry withdraw,
Of such good, as God have sent, yn part shalt thow have.
And yf thow wolt nat, my sone, do as I The tell;
Of me shalt thow naught have, trust me right well.
Wenyst thow wyth thy dise-pleying hold myn honoure,
Aftir my deth dey? then Beryn gan to loure, 530
And seide, is this a sermon? or a prechement?
Ye were nat wont herto, how is this ywent?
Sendith for some clothing, that I wer ago;
My fellowis lokith aftir me, I woot well they do so;
I woll nat leve my feleship, ne my reknelagis,
Ne my dise-pleying, for all your heretages:
Doith your best wyth them by your lyf day;
For when they fall to me, I wol do as I may.
Benedicite, fa'ir, who hath enformyd you?
And set you into ire? to make me chere rowe? 540
But I know wele inough whens this counsaill cam;
Trewlich of your own wyfe, that evil dame:
Com oppon hir body that fals putaigne,
For trewlich, fa'ir, yee dote on hir, and so al men seyne.
*Alas! that evir a man shuld, that is of high counsaile,
Set all his wysdom on his wyv's taile!*
Yee lovith hir so much, she hath benome your wyt;
And I may curs the tyme, that evir ye wer yknyt:
For now, I am in certen, I have a stepmo'ir:
They been shrewis, som ther been, but few othir. 550
Vel fikel flaptrail, such oon as she ys,
For all my pleying at dise, yit do yee more amys; Yee have ylost your name, your worship, and your feith;
So dote ye on hir, and levith all she sayith.
Fawnus, wyth the same word, gaff the chayir a but,
And lepe out of the chambir, as who seyde cut:
And swore, in verrey woodnes, be God omnipotent,
That Beryn of his wordis shuld fore repent.
Beryn set nought ther'of, with a proude hert
Answerd his fa'ir, and axid a new shert. 560
He gropid al about to have found oon,
As he was wont tofore, but ther was noon.
Then toke he such willokis as he fond ther,
And beheld hymself what man he wer:
For when he was arayde, then gan he first be wrothe:
For his womb lokid out, and his rigg both:
He stert aftir his fa'ir, and he began to cry,
For seth myn aray; for the villany
Ys as wele yours, as it is myne.
Fawnus let him clatir, and cry wel and fyne, 570
And passid forth still, and spak nat a word.
Then Beryn gan to think, it was nat al bord
That

That his faðir seyde, when he wyth hym was;
And gan to think all about; and therwyth seid, alas!
Now know I wele forsoth, that my moðir is dede:
For tho gan he to glow first a fory mann'ys hede.
Now kepe thy cur, Beryn; for thou shalt have a fit,
Somwhat of the world to lern betir wit:
For and thou wist fikerly what ys for to com,
Thou woldist wissh aftir thy deth full oft and ylome:
For *ther n'ys betyng half so fore wyth staff, nehir swerd,
As man to be bete with his own yerd.*
The pyry is yblowe, hop; Beryn, hop,
That ripe wol herastir, and on thyn hede drop.
Thou tokist noon hede, whils it shoon hoot;
Therfor wynter The nyghith afay by thy cote.
Beryn for shame to town durst he nat go;
He toke his wey to Churchward, his frend was made his foo.
For angir, sorowe, and shame, and hevynes that he had,
Unneth he might speke, but stode half as mad. 590
O alas! qð Beryn, what wyt had I?
That coud nat, tofore this dey, know fikerly.
That my moðir dede was; but now I know to fore:
And drede more, that eche dey hereastir more and more
I shall know, and fele, that my moðir is dede.
Alas! I smote the messangere, and toke of hir noon
hede.
Alas! I am right pore alas! that I am nakid:
Alas! I slept to fast, tyl sorowe now hath me wakid:
Alas! I hungir fore; alas! for dole and peyn!
For eche man me seith hath me in disdeyn: 600
This was all his mirth, to the churchward,
That of his moðir Agea he toke so litill reward.
When Beryn was within the chirch, then gan he wers
fray;
As sone as he saw the tomb where his moðir lay,
His colour gan to chaunge into a dedely hew:
Alas! gentil moðir, so kynd you wer, and trew,
It is no mervell, for thy deth though I fore smert.
But therewythal the sorowe so fervent smote his hert,
That sodenly he fil down stan dede in swowe;
That he had part of sorowe, methinkith that myght I avowe. 610
Beryn lay so long, or he myght awake,
For al his fyve wittis had clene hym forsake.
Wel myght he by hymself, when reson ycom were,
Undirstond that fortune had a sharp spere,
And eke grete power, among high and lowe,
Som to avaunce, and som to ovirthrowe.
So at last, when Beryn a litill wakid were,
He trampelid fast with his fete, and al to rare his ere,
And his visage both, right as a woodman,
With many a bitir tere, that from his eyen ran; 620
And sighid many a fore sigh, and had much hevynes;
And evirmore he cursid his grete unkyndnes
To foreyt his moðir, whils she was alyve;
And lenyd to hir tombe opon his tore sclyve;
And wisshid a thousand sichis, he had ybe hir by:
And beheld hir tombe with a petouse eye.
Now, glorious God, qð Beryn, that al thing madist of nought,
Heven and erth, man, and beste; sith I am mys-
wrought,
Of yewe I axe mercy, socour, and help, and grace,
For my mysdede, and foly, unthryffe, and trespass. 630
Set my sorowe and peyn somwhat in mesure
Fro dispeir and myscheff, as I may endure.
Lord of all Lordis, though fortune be my foo,
Yit is thy myght above, to turn hym to and fro.
First my moðirs lyfe fortune hath me berevid,
And sith my faðirs love, and nakid also me levid.
What may he do more? yis, take away my lyfe.
But for that wer myn ese, and end of al stryfe,

Therfor he doith me lyve, for my wers, I sey,
That I shuld evirmore lyve, and nevir for to dey. 640
Now leve I Beryn with his moðir, tyl I com aye,
And wol return me to Rame; that of hir forlitte
Bethoughte hir al aboute, when Beryn was agoon,
That it shuld be wittid hir; wherfor she anoon
In this wise seyde to Fawnus; Sir, what have ye do?
Althoughe I speke a mery word, to sullir your sone go
Nakid into the town? it was nat my counsaill.
What wol be seyde therof? skir without faile,
For I am his stepmoðir, that I am cause of alle
The violence, the wrath, the angir, and the gall, 650
That is betwene yew both, it wol be wit me:
Wherfor I prey you hertly, doith hym com hom aye.
Nay by trowith, qð Fawnus, for me comyth he nat yit;
Sithe he of my wordis so litil prife set;
As litil shall I charge his estate also.
Sorowe have that rechith, though he nakid go:
For every man knowith, that he is nat wise;
Wherfor may be supposid, his pleying at dise
Is cause of his aray, and nothyng yee, my wyff.
Yes iwis, qð Rame, the tale woll be ryft 660
Of me, and of noon othir, I know right wel asyne:
Wherfor I prey you, gentil sir, and for love myn,
That he wer yfet hom, and that in grete hast;
And let afay oft ageyn with feirnes hym to chaste:
And send Beryn clothis, and a new shert:
And made al wele in eche side, and kept close her hert.
Now sith it is your wyll, qð Fawnus, tho anoon
That Beryn shall home com; for your sake aloon
I woll be the message, to put your hert in ese:
And els, so God me help, wer it nat yew to plesse, 670
The gras shuld grow on pavement, or I hym home bryng.
Yet nethirles, forth he went, wyth too or thre, riding
From o strete to anothir, enqueryng to and fro
Aftir Beryn, in every plase wher he was wont to go;
Seching evry halk, howris too or thre,
With hazardours, and othir such, ther as he was wont to be;
And fond hym nat ther; but to Chirch went echone,
And at dorr they stode a while, and herd Beryn made his mone.
They herd all his compleynt, that petouse was to here.
Fawnus into the Chirch pryvely ch gan pise; 680
But al so sone as he beheld wher Agea lay,
His teris ran down be his chekis, and thus he gan to sey;
A! Agea, myn old love, and my new also!
Alas! that evir our hertis shuld depart atoo!
For in your graciouse dayis, of hertis trobilnes
I had nevir knowlech, but of all gladnes.
Remembryng in his hert, and evir gan renewe
The goodnes betwene them both, and hir hert trewe;
And drew hym ner to Beryn, with an hery mode.
But as sone as Beryn knew, and ondirstode 690
That it was his faðir, he wold no longir abide;
But anoon he voidit by the toðir side:
And Fawnus hym encountrid, and seyde; we have The sought
Through the town, my gentil sone, and therfor void
The nought,
Though I seyde a word or two, as me thought, for the best
For thyne erudicionne, to draw The onto lyfe honest;
Thou shuldist nat so fervently have take it to thyn hert.
But sith I know my wordis doith The so fore smert,
Shall no more hereastir; and eche dey our diete
Shall be mery and solase, and this shall be forgate. 700
For wele I woot, for thy moðir that thou art tofore;
Also thou hast grete sorowe, but onys madith and no
more;

And ther'for, sone, on my blessing, to put sorowe a-
wey;

Drawe The nowe herastir to honest myrth and pley.
Lo ther is clothing for yewe, and yeur hors ydight
Wyth harneys all freshe new; and if yee list be knyght,
I shall yit or eve that bergeyn undirtake,
That the Emperour for my love, a knyght shall you make:

And what that evir ye nede, anoon it shall be bought.
For whils that I have eny thing, ye shall lak naught. 710
Graunt mercy, q̃d Beryn, with an hevvy chere;
Of yeur worshipfull profir that ye have proferid me
here:

But ordir of knyghthode to take is nat my liking;
And sith yeur will is for to do somewhat my plesing;
Ye have a wyfe ye love wele, and so tendirlich,
That, and she have childrin, I know right sikerlich
All that she can devyse, both be nyght and dey,
Shall be to make her childryn heirs of that she may:
And eke sowe sedis of infelicite;
Wher'of wold growe devylsounne betwene yewe and me.
For yf ye spend on me yeur good, and thus riallich
Levith wele, in certen yeur wyfe wold sikerlich
Eche dey for angir her tuskis wher,
And to smyte with her tunge, yeur hert in wrath to set

Toward me from dey to dey, but ye wold aply
Somwhat to hir purpose, and astir hir yew guy;
She wold wex so oirtwart and of so lither tach,
And evir lour undir her hood, a redy for to snache;
She wold be shortyng of yeur lyfe, and that desire I naught.

Wher'for to plesse all about, my purpose and my thought 730

Is for to be a marchaunte, and leve myne heritage,
And relese it for evir, for shippis fyve of stage
Full of marchaundise, the best of all this londe.
And yf ye wol so, fa'ir, quyk let make the bonde.
Fawnus was right well apayd, that ilk word outstert,
But yit he seyde to Beryn; I mervell in myn hert
Wher haddist thou this counsaile, to leve thyne honour,
And lyve in grete aventure, and in grete labour.
And rid so forth talkyng, a soft chy pafe,
Homward to his plafe, ther that Rame was. 740
And as sone as Fawnus was ylight adown;
And highid fast to his wyfe, and with hir gan to rown;
And told hir all the purpose, and made Fawnus chere;
She did hym nat half so much, the tyme she was his fere.

She hullid hym, and mollid hym, and toke hym about the nekk,

And went low for the kite, and made many a bekk;
And seyde sir by yeur spech now right well i here,
That yf ye list, ye mowe do thing that I most desire;
And that is this yeur heritage, there yeu best likid,
That ye myght gyve, and evir among the brussh awey she pikid 750

From hir clothis here and there, and sighid therwithall:

Fawnus, of his gentilnes, by hir myddil smale
Hertlich hir bracyd, and seyde; I wold nat leve,
I suyr yew my trowith, that onys or it be eve
That I shall do my devoir without feintise,
For to plesse your hert fullich in all wyse.

Graunt mercy, myn own soverene, q̃d Rame, tho mekely;

And made protestatiounne, that she shuld sikerly,
All the dayis of hir lyfe, be to hym as hende.

As evir woman was to man; as ferforth as hir mynd
And wit hir wold serve, and made grete othe.

Fawnus bood no longir, but forth therwith he goith.
A! precious God in heven, kyng of majeste!

So plentivouse this world is of iniquite,
Why is to yfuffrid? that trowith is brought adown

Wyth trechery, and falsbede, in feld, and eke in town?

But now to Fawnus, and his entent. When he his sone met,

He toke hym soft by the hond, his tung he gan to whet

Sotilly to engyne him; first he gan to preche,
Leve thy foly, my dere sone, and do as I The teche;
Sith thou hast wit, and reson, and art of mannys age;
What nedith The be marchaunt? and shall have heritage.

For and thy good wer ylost, the sorowe wold be myne,
To tell the soth right, nigh peregall to thyne.

And yf that I were dede, whils thou wer oute,
Lond, and rent, and all my good, have thou no doute,
It wold be plukkid from The, thy part wold be left:
And also ferthermore, I make oon beheest,

That I trowe my moblis wol nat suffise
To charge fyve shippis ful of marchandise. 780

But yf I leyde in mortgage my lond, and eke my rent,
And that I leve be nat thy wyll, ne thyn entent:

Yit nethirles, yf thy hert be so inly set
For to be a marchaunt, for nothing wold I let,

That I n'yl do thy plessaunce, as ferforth as I mey,
To go ryght nygh myn own estate, but levir I had nay.

Their wordis, ne their dedis, ne matters them be-twene,

I wol nat tary now ther'on my perchemen to spene:
But fynallich to the end of their accordement;

Fawnus had so goon about, yturned, and ywent, 790
That he had brought his sone tofore the Emperour,

To relese his heritage, and al his honour,
That he shuld have aftir his dey, for shippis fyve, and full

Yled of marchaundise, of lynnyn, and of wool,
And of othir thingis, that wer yusid tho.

Engrosid was the covenante betwene them to,
Yn presence of the Emperour, in opyn and no rown,

Tofore the gretist Cenators, and eldest of the town.
So when the relese selid was with a fyde bonde;

They wer yleyd both in a meen honde, 800
Into the tyme that Beryn fullich selid were

In the fyve shippis, that I yew told ere.
But who was glad but Fawnus? and to his wyff went,

And seyde; now, my hert is swete, all thyn hole entent
Ys utirlich persourmyd; us lakkith now no more,

But marchaundise and shippis, as I told tofore.
That shall not fail, q̃d Rame, and began to daunce:

And aftirward they speken of the purveaunce.
Alas! this fals world so ful of trechery!

In whom shuld the sone have trust and feith sikirly, 810
If his fa'ir faylid hym? whether myght he go

For to fynd a sikir frend, that he myght trust to?
So when these 5 shippis wer rayid and dight;

Fawnus and his sone to the Emperour ful right
They went, and many a grete man for the same case,

To see both in possessiounne, as their covenante was.
Beryn first was selid in the shippis fyve;

And Fawnus had the relese, and bare it to his wyff:
And eche held them payde, and Rame best of all;

For she had conquerd thing, that causid most hir gall. 820

Now leve I Fawnys and his wyff: and of the gover-
naunce

Of Beryn I wol speke, and also of his chaunce.
When lodismen, and maryneris, in al thing redy was;

This Beryn into Alisaunder, yf God wold send hym
grace,

That wynde hym wold serve, he wold: so on a day,
The wynd was good: and they seyld on their wey

Too dayis fullich, and a nyght therwythal,
And had we'ir at wyll; tyll at last gan fall

Such a myst among them, that no man myght se othir; That wele was hym that had ther the blessing of his mo'ir. 830

For

For thre dayis incessantly the derknes among them was,
That no shipp myght se othir; wherfor, full oft alas!
They seyde, and to the high God they made their preyere,

That he wold of his grace them govern and sterc;
So that their lyvis myght yfavid be;
For they were cleen in dispeyr, because they myght nat se

The loder, wherby these shipmen ther cours toke echone.

So at last, the ferdh dey, making thus hirmone,
The dey gan clere; and then such wynd arose,
That blew their shippis, elswere then was their first purpose. 840

The tempest was so huge, and so strong also,
That wele was hym that coude bynde or ondo
Any rope within the shipp, that longit to the craft; Every man shewid his connyng, to fore the shipp, and bafft.

The wynd a wook the see to braft, it blew so gresly
fore,

That Beryn and all his company, of synnys las and more

Eche man round about shroff hymself to othir;
And put in Godd's gowernaunce lyf, shipp, and strothir.

For ther was shippis meyne, for owght they coude hale,
That myght abate of the shipp the thiknes of a scale:
The weðir was so fervent of wynd, and eke of thundir,
That every shipp from othir was blowe of light a-fondir;

And durid so al day and nyght; tyll on the morowe,
I trow it was no questionne wher they had joy or so-
rowe.

So aftirward, as God wold, the wynd was somewhat soft:

Beryne clepid a maryner, and bad hym fly on loft,
And weyte aftir our four shippis aftir us doith dryve;
For it is but grace of God, yf they be alyve.

A maryner anoon wyth that, right as Beryn bad,
Styed into the topcastell, and brought hym tydings glad.
Sir, he seith, beth mery; yeur shippis comith echone
Saff and sound, sailing, as ye shul se anoon;
And eke sir ferthermore, lond also I sigh:

Let draw our cors estward, thys tyde woll bryng us ny.
Blessed be God, qð Beryn, then wer our shippis com;
We have no nede to dout werr, ne molestatiounne;
For there n'ys wythin our shippis no thyng of spolia-
tiounne,

But al trew marchaundise; wherfor for Lodisman, Stere onys into the costis, as well as thou can;
When our shippis be ycom, that we mowe pas in fere, Lace on a bonnet or tweyn, that we mowe saile
nere.

And when they wer the costis nygh, was noon of them alle

That wist what lond it was. Then Beryn gan to calle

Out of every ship anoon a maryner or tweyne,
For to take counsell; and thus he gan to seyne;
The frontis of this ilk town been wondir feir wyth-
all;

Methinkith it is the best rede, what that evir befall,

That I my self aloon walk into the towne,
And here, and se, both her and there, upward and downe,

And enquere fullich of their gowernaunce. 880

What sey ye, Sirs? woll ye sent to this ordonaunce?
All they accordit well therto and held it for the best;
For thus yf it be profitabill, we mowe abide and
rest,

And yf it be othirwise, the rathir shall we go;
For aftir that The spedc, we woll work and do.

But nowe mowe ye her right, a wondir thing;
In all the world wyde, so fals of their lyyng
Was no pepill ondir sone, ne none so disleyvabill,
As was the pepill of this town, ne more unstabill;
And had a curfed usage of sotill ymaginaciounne, 890
That yf so wer the shippis of any straunge naciounne
Were com into the port; anoon they wold them hide
Within their own howfis, and no man go, ne ryde,
In no strete of alle the town; ascaunce that they wer lewde,

And coud no skill of marchandise, a skill it was a shrewde;

As ye shull here aftir, of their wrong and falshede:
But yit it fill, as worthy was, oppon their own hede,
Beryn arayd hym freschly, as to a marchand longith.
And set hym on a palfrey wel be sey and hongit;
And a page reunnyng by his hors fete: 900
He rode endlong the town, but no man coud he meet.

The dorrys wer yclosid in both too sidis;
Wherof he had mervell; yet ferthermore he ridis;
And waytid on his right hond a Mancipil's plafe,
All fresch and new, and thiðir gan he pafe:
The gatis wer wyde up, and thiðir gan he go;
For throughout the long town he fond so no mo.
Therin dwellid a Burgeyse the most scilper man
Of a l the town throughout, and what so he wan
With trechery and gile, as doith som freris, 910
Right so must he part with his comperis.

Beryn light down on his hors, and inward gan he dres,
And fond the good man of the house pleying at chesf
With his neyghbour, astrewe as he, that dwellid hym fast by.

But as sone as this burgeyse on Beryn cast his eye,
Sodenly he stert up and put the chesf hym fro;
And toke Beryn by the hond, and seyde these wordis
tho;
Benedicite! what manere wynd hath ybrought you
here?

Now wold to God I had wherof, or coud make yew
chere!

But ye shull lowe my good wyll, and take such as ther is;

And of yeur gentil paciens fustir that is amys.
For well he wist by his aray, and by his countenaunce,
That of the shippis, that wer ycom, he had som governaunce:

Wherfor he made hym chere, semeyng amyabill,
Icolerid all with cautelis, and wondir disleyvabill:
He bracyd hym by the myddil, and preyde hym sit a-down;

And lowly with much worshipp dressid his cosshon.
Lord God! seyde this burgeyse, I thank this ilk dey,
That I shuld see yew hole and found here in my con-tray;

And yf ye list to tell the cause of yewr comyng, 930
And yf ye have nede to any manere thing,
And it be in my power, and thoughe I shuld it sech
It shuld go right wonder streyte, I sey yew liker-lich,

But yee it had in haste, therwith yew to plese;
For now I see yew in my house, my hert is in grete ese.

The toðir burgeyse rose hym up, for to make rouse,
And axid of his felaw, that Lord was of the house, Whens is this worshipfull man? with wordis hend and low,

For it semith by the manere, that ye hym shuld knowe,
And have sey hym tofore this tyme I have sent, qð
the toðir, 940

Ye ywis an 100 sithis, and right as to my broðir,
I wold do hym plesaunce, in al that evir I can;
For trewlich in his contray he is a worshipful man.

For

For soth, Sir, and for your love, a thousand in this town
 Wold do hym worship, and be right feyne and boun
 To plese hym, and avail to have thonk of you.
 I woot wele, God them yeld, so have they oft er nowe.
 And arose up therewithall, and with his felaw spak
 Of such manere mater, that faylid nevyr of lakk.
 So when their counsell was ydo, this burgeyse preyd his fere 950
 To sit a down be Beryn, and do hym sport and chere:
 And in the while, I wol se to his hors;
 For every gentil hert, afore his own cors,
 Desirith that his riding best be servid and ydight, Rathir than hymself. Wherfor wyth all my myght.
 I woll have an eye therto; and sich parte wyyn,
 Wich tonne or pipe is best, and most fyne.
 Beryn was all abashid of his soden chere;
 But nethirles the burgeyse sat hym somewhat nere,
 And preyd hym, of his gentilnes, his name for to tell,
 His contrey, and his lynnage; and he answer'd Snell,
 Berinus I am ynamid, and in Rome ybore,
 And have fyve shippis of myn own, las and more,
 Full of marchaundise, ligging tofore the town,
 But much mervaille have I, the good man is so boun
 To serve me, and plese, and how it might be.
 Sir, seyde the burgeyse, no mervelle it is to me:
 For many a tyme, and oft, I cannot sey how lome;
 He hath be in your marchis; and as I trow, in Room
 Also he was ybore, yf I ne ly shall. 970
 Yf it be so, qð Beryn, no mervelle it is at all,
 Thoughe he me have ysey; and eke his gentill chere Previth it all opynly: but be hym that bought me
 dere,
 I have ther'of no knowlech, as I am now avysid.
 With that cam in the good man, with countenance disgisid,
 And had enqueryd of the child, that with Beryn cam, Fro gynnyng to the endyng, and told his mastris name,
 And of Agea his moðir, and all thing as it was:
 Wher-through he was ful perfitte, to answer to every cas.
 So entryng into the hall the Burgeys spak anon, 980
 A! my gentill Beryn, alas! that under stonne
 Myne own hert Agea, thy moðir, leff and dere!
 Now God assoyl hir soule: for nevyr bettir chere
 Had I of frend woman, ne nevyr half so good.
Benedicite! a marchaunt comyng ovir flood.
 Who brought yew in this purpos? and beth your faðir's heir.
 Now by my trew conscience, ryght nygh in dispeyr
 I wax for your sake; for now frendlesse
 Ye mowe welesey that ye been; but yit for nethirles
 Yee mut endure fortune, and hevynes put away; 990
 Ther is noon othir wisdom. Also your shippis gey, That been ycom in savete, ought to amend your mode;
 The wich, when we have dyned, I swere for by the Rood,
 We wol se them trewly, within and eke without,
 And have wyne wyth us, and drynk al about.
 They set, and wissh, and fed them, and had wherof
 plente;
 The burgeyse was a stuffid man, ther lakkid noon deynte.
 So when they had ydined, the cloth was up ytake;
 A chese ther was ybrought forth: but tho gan so-rowe to wake.
 The ches was all of ivory, the meyne fressh and new,
 I pulsshid, and ypikid, of white, asure, and blew.
 Beryn beheld the cheker, it semed passyng feir;
 Sir, qð the burgeys, ye shul fynd her a payr,
 That woll mate yew trewly, in las than half a myle.

And was yseyd of sotilte, Beryn to begile.
 Now in soth, qð Beryn, it myght wel hap nay,
 And n'er I must my shippis se, els I wold aslay.
 What nedith that, qð the burgeyse? trewlich I wol nat glofe;
 They been nat yit ysetelid, ne fixid in the wofe:
 For I have sent thries, sich ye hithir cam, 1010 To wait oppon their governaunce. Wherfor let set o game,
 And I shall be the first that shall yew atast
 The meyne wer yset up, and gon to pley fast:
 Beryn wan the first, the second, and the third;
 And at fourth game, in the ches amyde,
 The burgeyse was ymatid: but that lust him wele;
 And all was doon to bryng hym yn, as ye shul her snel.
 Sir, then, seyde Beryn, ye woot well how it is;
 Me list no more to pley; for yee know this;
 Wher is noon comparisoun, of what thing so it be,
 Lust and liking fallith ther; as it semeth me,
Ne myrth is nat commendabill, that ay is by o side,
But it rebound to the tothir; wherfor tyme is to ryde.
 And as many thonkis, as I can or may,
 Of my sport, and chere, and also of your pley.
 Nay iwys, gentill Beryn, I woot ye wol nat go;
 For noritur wol it nat, for to part so,
 And eke my condicioun; but I ley somthing,
 Is no more to pley, then who so shoke a ryng
 Ther no man is wythyn the ryngyng to answer;
 To shete a fethirles bolt, almost as good me were.
 But and ye wold this next game som maner wacer legg;
 And let the trowith, on both sidis, be morgage and yplegg,
 That whofo be ymatid, graunt and assent
 To do the toðirs bidding; and whofo do repent
 Drynk all the watir, that salt is of the See.
 Beryn belevid that he coud pley betir than he;
 And sodenly assentid, with hond in hond aslurid;
 Men that stode besides, ycappid, and yhurid,
 Wist wele that Beryn shuld have the wers mes; 1040
 For the burgeyse was the best pleyer at ches
 Of all the wyde marchis, or many a myle about.
 But that ne wyft Beryn of, ne cast ther'of no doute.
 He set the meyne effe ageyn, and toke betir hede
 Then he did tofore, and so he had nede.
 The burgeyse toke avysement long on every draught;
 So wyth an hour or too, Beryn he had ycaught
 Somwhat oppon the hipp, that Beryn had the wers.
 And albeit his mynd and wyll was for to curs,
 Yit must he dure his fortune, when he was so fer ygo.
For who is that that fortune may alway undo?
 And namelich stout even in eche side
 Of pro and contra; but God help, down woll he glide.
 But now a word of philosophy, that fallith to my mynd.
Who take hede of the begynnyng, what fal shall of the end,
He leyth a bussh tofore the gap, ther fortune wold in ryde;
 But comynlich yowith forgetith that throughout the world [wyde].
 Right so be Beryn I may wele sey, that confaillis in rakid
 Likly to lese his marchaundise, and go hymself al nakid.
 Beryn studied in the ches, although it nought availid:
 The burgeyse in the mene while, with othir men confaillid,
 To sech the fergauntis in the town, for thing he had ado.
 So when they com were, they walkid to and fro,
 Up and down in the hall, as skaunce they knew nought;
 And yit of all the purpose, wit, and mynd, and thought,
 Of the untrew burgeyse, by his messengeris
 They

They wer ful enformyd. Wherfor with eye and eris,

They lay await full doggidly, Beryn to arest;
For therfor they wer aftir sent, and was their charge and hest

Lord how shuld o sely lomb among wolvis weld, 1070
And scape unyharmyd? it hath been seyn feld.

Kepe thy cut now, Beryn, for thow art in the case.
The hall was full of pepill, the serjauntis shewid their mase:

Beryn kast up his hede, and was ful fore amayid;
For then he was in certen the burgeyse had hym betrayde.

Draw on, seyde the burgeyse; Beryn, ye have the wers:

And every man to othir the covenaut gan reherse.
The burgeys, whils that Beryn was in hevy thought,
The next draught aftir, he toke a rook for nought.

Beryn swat for angir, and was in hevy plight; 1080
And drede full fore in hert; for wele he wist al quyt

He shuld nat escape, and was in high distrefs;
And pryvelich in his hert, that evir he saw the ches

He curfid the day and tyme; but what awaylid that?
For wele he wist then, that he shuld be mate:

He gan to change his colour, both pale, and wan.
The burgeyse seith; comyth nere, ye shul se this man

How he shull be matid, with what man me list:
He droughe and seyde, chek mate. The serjauntis wer full prest,

And scfid Beryn by the scleve, and seyde, Sirs, what think ye for to do? 1090

Qd Beryn to the serjauntis, that ye me hondith so?
Or what have I offendit? or what have I seide?

Trewlich, qd the serjauntis, it vaylith nat to breyde;
Wyth us ye must a while, wher ye wol or no,

Tofore the steward of this town aryse, and trus,
and go:

And ther it shall be openyd, how wisely thow hast
wrought:

This is the end of our tale, make it nevir so tought.
Sirs, farith feir, ye have no nede to hale.

Pas forth, qd the serjauntis, we wol nat her thy tale.
Yis, Sirs, of your curtesy, I prey yew of o word;

Although my gentill hooft hath pleyd with me in borde,

And ywon a wager, ye have naught to doon;
That is betwene hym and me, ye have nothyng to doon.

The hooft made an hidouse cry, in gesolrent the haut,

And set his hond in kenebowe, he lakkid nevir a faute;

Wenyft thow, seid he to Beryn, for to scorne me?
What evir thow speke, or stroute, certis it woll nat be;

Of me shalt thow have no wrong; pas forth a betir pase;

In presence of our steward I woll tell my case.
Why, hooft, sey yee this in earnest, or in game? 1110

Ye know my contray, and my moðir, my lynnage, and my name;

And thus ye have yseyd me X sith on this dey.
Ye what though I seyde so? I know wele it is nay:

Ther lyth no more ther'to. But anothir tyme
Leve me so much the les, when thow comyst by me.

For all that evir I seyde was to bryng The in care;
And now I have my purpose, I woll nothyng The spare.

Thus janglyng to ech othir, endenting every pase,

They entrid both into the hall, ther the steward was:
Evandir was his name, that sotill was, and so fell,

He must be well avysid tofore hym shuld tell.
Anothir burgeyse wyth hym was, provost of the cete,

That Hanybald was yclepid, but of sotilte
He passid many anothir, as ye shul here sone.

Berynus hooft gan to tell al thyng as it was doon,

Fro gynyng to the endyng, the wordis wyth the
dede;

And how they made their covenaut, and wager how they leyde.

Now, Beryn, qd the steward, thow halt yherd this tale;

How and in what manere thow art ybrought in bale.
Thow must do his byddyng, thow maist yn no wyse

flee,
Or drynk all the watir, that salt is in the See:

Of these too thingis, thow must chese the toon;
Now be well avysid, and sey thy will anon.

To do yee both law, I may no betir sey,
For thow shalt have no wrong, as fertorth as I mey;

Chese The self right as The list, and wit thow nothing me,

Though thow chese the wers, and let the betir be.
Beryn stode astonyd, and no mervail was,

And preyde the steward, of a dey to answeere to the case:

For I might lightlich in som word be ycaught, 1140
And eke it is right herd to chese of to, that both right naught.

But and it wer your likyng to grant me day tyl to morowe,

I wold answer, through Godd's help. Then must thow fynd a borowe,

Seyde the steward to Beryn, and yit it is of grace.

Now herith me, qd Hanybald, I prey a litil spase:
He hath 5 shippis ondir the town, lyggyng on the strond,

The wich been sufficient, yfelid in our hond,

By me, that am your provost to execute the law
He must assent; qd Evander, let us onys here his saw.

I graunt wele, qd Beryn, sith it may be noon othir.

Then Hanybald arose hym up, to sese both ship and strothir;

And toke Beryn wyth hym; so talkyng on the wey, Beryn, qd Hanybald, I syyr The be my key,

That thow art much ybound to me this ilk dey;
So is thy ple amendit by me; and eke of such a wey

I am avysid in thy cause, yf thow wolt do by rede,
That lite or nought by my counsaill ought The to drede.

Yee know wele, to morowe the dey of ple is set,

That ye mut nedis answeere; or els wythout lett
I must yeld them your shippis, I may in no wyse

byn; 1160
So have I undirtake. But the merchaundise wythin is nat in my charge, ye knowe as wele as I,

To make therof no livery: wherfor now wysely

Worch, and do aftir rede; let all your merchaundise
Be voidit of your shippis; and at hiest prise

I wol have it every dele in covenaut; yf ye list,
To se myne house here onys tofore, I hold it for the best;

Wher ye shul se of divers londis, housis to or thre

Full of merchaundise, that through this grete cete
Is no such in preve, I may right well avowe. 1170

So when ye have all seyn, and I have your also;
Let som bargaen be ymade betwene us both too.

Graunt mercy sir, qd Beryn, your prosir is feir and good:

Feyn wold I do ther'astir, yf I ondirstood
I myght, wythout blame of breking of arest.

Yis, qd Hanybald, at my perell me trust.
So to Hanybald's house togiðir both they rode;

And fond, as Hanybald had yseyd, an honge house, long, and brode,

Full of merchaundise, as rich as it may be,
Passyng all the marchantis that dwellid in that cete. 1180

Thus

Thus when all was shewid; they dronk, and toke their leve,
To se Beryn's shippis in hast they gon to meve:
And when that Hanybald was avysid what charge
the shippis bere,
He gan to speke, in his wyse ascaunce, he rought
nere
Whethir he bargeynynd or no, and seyde thus; Beryn, frend,
Your marchaundise is feir and good, now let us make an end,
If yee list, I can no more, yee knowith how it is.
Com of short let tuk them yn, methinkith I sey nat mys,
And then yeur meyne, and ye, and I to my house shall we go,
And of the marchaundise I saw, I wol nat part therfro: 1190
Chese of the best of that ye find there,
Throughout the long house, ther shall no man yeu
dere;
And therwith shall yeur shippis be fillid all fyve;
I can sey no betir, yf ye list to dryve
This bargeyn, to the end, counsellith with yeur men:
I may nat long tary, I must nedis hen.
Beryn clepid his meyne, counsell for to take;
But his first mocionne was of the woo, and wrake,
And all the tribulaciounne, for pleying at ches,
That he had every dele, his shame, and his dures, 1200
Fro poynt to poynt, and how it stode, he told how it
was;
And then he axid counsaill, what best was in the case;
To chaunge with the burgeyse, or els for to leve:
Eche man seyde his avise; but al that they did meve,
It wer to long a tale for to tell it here.
But fynally at end, they cordit al in fere,
That the chaunge shuld stond; for as the case was fall,
They held it clerely for the best; and went forth wythall,
The next wey that they couth, to Hanybald's plase.
But now shull ye here the most sotill fallace, 1210
That evir man wrought till othir, and highest trechery, Wich Hanybald had wrought hymself to this company;
Go in, q<sup>d</sup> Hanybald, and chese, as thy covenaut is.
In goon thes Romeyns ech oon, and fond amys;
For there was nothing, that eny man might se,
Saff the wall, and tyle stonys, and tymbir made of tre.
For Hanybald had do void it, of all thing that was
there;
Whils he was at shippis his men away it bere.
When Beryn saw the house ler, that ful was ther'to-
fore
Of riche marchaundise; alas! thought he I am lore,
I am in this world, and wittith well, his hert
Was nat al in likeing, and outward gan he stert,
Like half a woodman, and bete both his lippis,
And gan to hast fast towards his own shippis,
To kepe his good within, wyth al that evir he myght,
That it were nat dischargit, as hym thought verrey right.
But al for naught was his hast; for 300 men,
As fast as they myght, they bere the good then;
Through ordenaunce of Hanybald, that pryvelich tofore.
Had purposid, and ycast, shuld be out ybore. 1230
Beryn made a swyff pase, ther myght no man hym let;
But Hanybald was ware inough, and with Beryn met,
All for nought; Beryn, thou knowist well and fyne,
The shippis ben areistid, and the good is myne.
What woldest thou do ther? thou hast ther nowght to do,
I wol hold thy covenaut, and thou myne also.

For yit saw I nevir man, that was of thy manere;
Sometyme thou wolt avaunte, and some tyme arere;
Now thou wolt, and now thou n'olt; wher shul men
The fynd?
Now sey oon, and sith anothir; so variant of mynd 1240
Saw I nevir tofore this dey man, so variabill: Sith I The fynd in such plyte; our bargin for to sta-bill,
We woll tofore the steward, ther we both shull have right.
Nay forsoth, q<sup>d</sup> Beryn. Yis treulich The tite, Q<sup>d</sup> Hanybald, wher thou wolt or no; and so I The charge,
As Provost; know, that yf me list, my warant is so large,
And thou make eny diffence, to bynym thy lyffe.
Take thyn hors, it gaynyth nat for to make stryffe.
So wyth sorowfull hert Beryn toke his hors;
And softly seyde to his men, of me, q<sup>d</sup> he, no fors; 1250
But wend to yeur shippis; I wol com when I may.
Ye seth well everichone, I may no bet away.
Now here by this same tale, both fre and bond
Mow sele in their wittis, and eke ondirstonde,
That litill vailith wysdom, or els governaunce;
Ther fortune evir werrith, and eke hap, and chaunce.
Or what availith bonnie, bewte, or riches,
Frendship, or sotile, or els hardines,
Gold, good, or catell, wyt, or by lynage,
Lond, or lordis service, or els high peerage? 1260
What may all this avayle, ther fortune is a foo?
I wis right litill, or nevir a dele: full oft it fallith so.
So shortly to pas ovir; they fill to such an end,
That Beryn shuld have day ageyn a morowe, and so to wend
He set hym in ful purpose to his shippis ward:
But yit or he cam ther, he fond the passage hard.
For how he was begiled, throughout all the towne
Ther and ther a coupill, gan to speke and to rounce;
And every man his purpose was to have parte,
With falsnes, and with sotiltees; they coud noon othir
art. 1270
Beryn rode forth in his wey, his page ran hym by,
Full sore adred in hert, and cast about his eye
Up and down, even long the strete, and for angir swer;
And er he had riden a stone's cast, a blynd man with him met;
And spak no word, but sesid hym fast by the lap;
And cried out, and harowe; and nere hym gan to stap.
All for nought, q<sup>d</sup> this blynd, what wenyft thou for to skape?
Beryn had thought to prik forth, and thought it had be jape.
The blynd man cast away his staff, and set on both his hondis;
Nay thou shalt nat void, q<sup>d</sup> he, for all thy rich londis, Tyll I of The have reson, lawe, and eke righte;
For trewlich, I may wit it The, that I have lost my fight.
So for ought that Beryn coud othir speke, or prey,
He myght in no wyse pas, ful sore he gan to may.
And namelich for the pepill throug hym so about,
And eche man gan hym hond; and seyde, without doute
Ye must nedis stond, and rest, and bide the lawe;
Be ye nevir so grete a man. So wold I, wondir fawe,
Q<sup>d</sup> Beryn, yf yee had cause; but I know noon.
No thou shalt know or thou go, thou hast nat al y-
doon, 1290
The blynd man seyde to Beryn; tell on then, q<sup>d</sup> he.
Here is no place to plete, the blynd man seyde age;
Also we have no juge here of autorite:
But Evandir the steward shall deme both The and me;
When I my tale have told, and thou hast made an-swere;

By

By that tyme men shull know how thow canst The clere.

Now, soveren God, I thank The of this ilk dey:
Then I may preve The be my lyve, of word, and eke of fay

Fals, and eke untrew of covenant, thow hast y-makid.

But litill is thy charge now, though that I go nakid,
That somertyme wer partinere, and rekenydft nevir yit,
But thou shalt here, or we depart, ther'of a litill witt.
For aftir comyn seyng, evir atte ende

The trowith wold be previd, how so men evir trend.
Thus they talkid to eche othir, tyl they com into the plase,

And wer yentrid in the hall, ther the steward was.
The blynd man first gan to spake, sir steward, for Godd'is sake

Herith me a litill while; for her I have ytake
He that hath do me wrong, most of man of mold;
Be my help, as law wold, for hym that Judas sold. 1310
Ye know wele that oft tyme I have to yew ypleynid,
How I was betrayed, and how I was ypeynid,
And how a man some tyme and I our yen did chaunge:
This is the same persone, though that he make it straunge.

I toke them hym but for a tyme, and wenyd trewly Myne to have yhad ageyn; and so both he and I
Were ensurid uttirlich, and was our both will;
But for myne the bettir were wrongfullich and ille
He hath them kept hiðirto, wyth much sorowe and pyne

To me, as ye wele knowith; because I have nat myne,
I may nat se with his; wher'for me is ful woo;
And evirmore ye feyd, that ye myght nothing do, Without presence of the man that wrought me this unquert:

Now sith he is tofore you now, let hym nat astert.
For many tyme and oft, yee behete me,
And he myght be take, he shuld do me gre.
Sith ye of hym be sefid, howevir so yee tave,
Let hym nevir pas, tyl I myn yen have.

Beryn, qð Evandir, herist thow nat thy selve
How sotilly he pletith, and ware by eche halve? 1330
Beryn stode all muët, and no word he spaké.

And that was tho his grace; ful sone he had be take,
And he had mysseyd onys, or els yseyd nay:
For then he had been negatyff, and undo for ay.

For they were grete Scviliouns, and usid probat law;
Where evirmore affirmaryf shuld preve his own saw.
Wher'for they wer so querclouse, of all myght com in mynd,

Though it wer nevir in dede ydo; such matere they wold fynd

To benym a man his good, through som manir gile.
For the blynd man wist right wele, he shuld have lost his whyle, 1340

To make his pleynt on Beryn, and suyde oppon his good,

For shippis, and eke marchaundise, in a balaunce stode;
Ther'for he made his chalenge his yen for to have:

Or els he shuld for them fyne, yf he wold them have,
And ligg for them in hostage, tyll the fynance cam:
This was all the sotille of the blynd man.

Beryn stode all muët, and no word he spak.
Beryn, qð Evander, lest thow be ytake

In defaute of answere, thou myghtist be condempnyd,
Be right wele avysid, sith thou art examenyd. 1350
Sir, seyde Beryn, it wold litill availe

To answere thus aloon, without good counsaill:
And also ferthermore, full litill I shuld be levid, Whatevir I answerd, thus stonyd, and reprevid;
And eke my wit doith faille, and no wondir is:

Wher'for I wold prey yew, of yewr gentilnes,
To graunt me dey tyll to morowe I might be avysid

To answere forth, wyth othir that on me been sur-myfid.

Deperdeux, qð the steward, I graunt wel it be so.
Beryn toke his leve, and hopid to pas and go: 1360

But as sone as Beryn was on his hors ryding,
He met a woman, and a child, wyth sad chere comyng,
That toke hym by the reyn, and held hym wondir fast;

And seid, sir, voidith nat, yit vailith nat to haste:
Ye mow in nð wyse scape, ye must nedis abyde;

For though ye list to know me nat, yit lien by your side

I have ful many a tyme, I can nat tell yew lome.
Come tofore the steward, ther shall ye here your dome,

Of thing that I shall put on yew, and no word for to ly:

To leve me thus aloon it is your villany. 1370
Alas! the day, and tyme that evir I was your make:

Much have I endurid, this too yere, for your sake.
But now it shall be know who is in the wronge.

Beryn was all abashid, the pepill so thik thronge
About hym in eche side; for ought that he couth peyn:

He must to the steward of fyne fors ageyn.
Now shull ye here how sotillich this woman gan hir tale,

In presence of the steward; with colour wan, and pale,

Petously she gan to tell; and seid, sir to yew
Full oft I have compleynyde, in what manere and how 1380

My child'is faðir left me, by my self aloon,
Wythout help, or comforte, as grete as I myght goon,

Wyth my son here and his, that shame it is to tell
The penury that I have yhad, that afors fell

I must nedis myne aray, wher me list or lothe,
Or els I must have beggit, for to fynd us both.

For there was nevir woman I leve, as I ges;
For lak of hede of lyvelode, that lyvid in more distres,

Then I my self for oft tyme, for lak of mete and drink:
And yit I trow no creature was feyner for to swinke 1390

My lyff to sustene: but as I mut nede,
Above all othir thingis, to his child take hede,

That wondir is and mervaile that I am alyve;
For the fokyng of his, right as it were a knyve

It ran into my hert, so low I was of mode
That well I woot in certen, without percell of my blode

His child I have ynorisshid, and that is by me seen;
For my rede colour is turnid into grene.

And he that cause is of all, here he stondith by me;
To pay for the fosteryng methinkith it is tyme. 1400

And sith he is my husbond, and hath on me no rowith,
Let hym make amendis in saving of his trowith.

And yf he to any word onys can say nay;
Lo! here my gage, al redy to preve all that I sey.

The Steward toke the gage, and spak in soft wyse;
Of this petouse compleynt a mann'ys hert may grise;

For I know in percell, hir tale is nat all lese;
For many a tyme and oft, this woman that here is,

Hath ybe tofore me, and pleynid of hir greffe;
But wythout a party hir cause myght nat preffe. 1410

Now thou art here present, that she plenyth on;
Make thy defence now, Beryn, as wele as thow con,

Beryn stode all muët and no word he spak.
Beryn, qð the steward, doist thow slepe, or wake?

Sey onys oon or othir; is it forh or nay,
As she hath declarid? tell on saunce delay.

Lord God! qð Beryn, what shuld it me availe,
Among so many wise, without right good counsaill,

To tell eny tale? full litil as I ges.
Wher'for I wold prey you, of your gentilnes, 1420

Graunt me day tyll to morowe to answer forth with othir.

I graunt wele, qð the steward, but for faðir and moðir:

Thow

Thow getist no lenger tyme, pleynty I The tell.
 Beryn toke his leve, his hert gan to swell
 For pure verrey anguyssh; and no mervail was.
 And who is that that u'old, and he wer in such case;
 For al his trist and hope in eny worldlich thing
 Was cleen from hym passid, save sorowe and myslykyng.

For body, good, and catell, and lyff, he set at nought:
 So was his hert ywoundit, for angir, and for thought.
 Beryn passyd softly, and to his hors gan go:

And when he was without the gatis, he lokid to and fro,

And coud noon othir countenance; but to his page
 he seyde,

Preciouse God in heven! how falsly am I betrayd?
 I trow no man alyve stont in wers plight.

And all is for my synne, and for my yong delite;
 And pryncipally, above all thyng, for grete unkyndnes

That I did to my moðir: for litill hede iwys

I toke of hir, this know I wele, whils she was alyve:

Therfor al this turment is sent to me so ryve. 1440

For ther was never woman kynder to hir child,

Then she was; and ther ageyns never thing so wyld,

Ne so evil thewid, as I was my self:

Therfor sorowe and happs environ me by eche helve;

That I note whiðir ryde, nethir up ne down,

Ther been so many devillis dwellyng in this town;

And so ful of gile, and trechery also,

That well I woot in certeyn, they woll me ondo.

Now wold to God in hevyn, what is my best rede?

He toke his hors to his page, and thus to hym he sayd; 1450

Lede my hors to shipward, and take it to some man;

And I woll go on foot, as pryvely as I can;

And allay, yf I may, in eny manere wise,

Escape unarrested more in such manner wise.

The child toke his maistir's hors, and laft hym there aloon,

Walking forth on foot, making oft his moon:

And in his most musing, I can nat sey how lome,

He wosshid, nakid as he was bore, he had be in Room.

And no mervail was it, as the case stode:

For he drad more to lese his ceyn, than he did his shippis, or his good. 1460

Now yee that listith to dwell and here of aventure,

How petously dame Fortune, Beryn to inure,

Turnyth hir whele about in the wers tide;

With hap of sorowe, and anguyssh, she gynyth for to ride.

Beryn passid toward the strond, ther his shippis were;

But yee now ondirstond, his hert was ful of tere:

Yet nethirles he sat hym down softly on a stall,

Semy'ryfe for sorowe; and lenyd to the wall,

For turment that he had, so very he was and feynt;

And to God above thus he made his pleynt; 1470

Glorious God in heven! that al thing madist of nought;

Why sufferist thou these cursid men to stroy me for nought?

And knowest well myn innocent, that I have no gilt

Of al that they pursu me, or on me is pilt:

And in the meen whils that Beryn thus gan pleyn,

A cachepoll stode besidis, his name was Machaign,

And herd all the wordis; and knew also tofore

How Beryn was turmented, both with las and more.

It was yspiong through the town, so was he full enfensid,

How he hym would engyne, as he had propensid; 1480

And had araid hym fortillich, as man of contemplacionne,

In a mantell wyth the list, with fals dissimulacionne,

And a staff in his honde, as thoughe he sebill were;

And drow hym toward Beryn, and seid in this ma-
 nere;

The high God of heven, that al thing made of nought;
 Bles yew, gentill sir, for many an hevvy thought Me thinkith that ye have, and no wondir is:

But good sir dismay yew nat, but levith yewr hevines;
 And yf ye list to tell me somwhat of yeur distres,

I hope to God Almighty in party it redres 1490

Through my pore counsaill, and so I have many oon;

For I have pete on yew, be God and by Seint Jön:

And eke pryvy hevines doith eche man apeir,

Sodenly, or he be ware, and fall in dispeir;

And who be in that plage, that man is incurabill;

For consequent comyth aftir sekenes abominabill:

And therfor, sir, diskeverith yewe, and be nothing adrad.

Graunt mercy, sir, qð Beryn, ye seme trew and sad;
 But o thing lyith in myn hert, I n'ote to whom to trust;

For tho that dynd me to dey ordeyned me to areft;
 A! sir, be yew that man? of yew I have yherd.

Gentill sir doutith nat, ne be nothing aferd

Of me; for I shall counsell yew as well as I can:

For trewlich in the cete dwellith many a fals man,

And usyn litil els but falshode, wrong and wyle;

And how they might straungers with trechery begile;

But ye shul do right wisely somwhat be my counsaill;

Speke with the steward; that may you most avail:

For ther is a comyn byword, yf ye it herd havith;

Wile setith be his peny, that the pound savith. 1510

The steward is a covetouse man, that long hath disirid

A knyff I have in kepeing, wherwith his hert I wirid;

Shall be yew to help, in covenante that yee

Shall give me fyve mark, yeur treu frend to be.

The knyff is feir, I tell yew; yit never tofore this day,

Myght the steward have it for aught he coud prey:

The wich ye shuld gyve hym, the betir for to spede,

And behote hym 20*l.* to help yew in yeur nede;

And yf he grauntith; trustith wele, ye stond in good plight:

For betir is, then lese all, the las the more quyt. 1520

And I woll go wyth yew straight to his plase,

And knele down, and speke first, to amend yewr case;

And sey yee be my cosin; the betir shul ye spede:

And when that I have all ytold; the knyff to hym yee bede.

Beryn thankid hym hertlich, and on hym gan trust;

With hond in hond ensurid, and all for the best;

Beryn thought noon othir, al that it othir was.

Machaign hym comfortid, talkyng of their case,

And passid forth styilly toward the steward blyve,

Beryn and Machaign; but Beryn bare the knyff; 1530

And trust much in his felawe to have som help.

But or they departid were, they had no cause to yelp

Of no maner comfort, as ye shull here anon;

For as sone as Machaign tofore the steward com,

He fill plat to the erth, a grevous pleynt and an huge

He made; and seyde sir steward, now be a trew juge

Ageyns this fals treytour, that stondith me belyde;

Let take of hym good hede, els he woll nat abide.

Now mercy God, steward, for yee have herd me yore

For my faðir Melan pleyn to you ful fore; 1540

That with 7 dromedarys, as I have told yew lome,

With marchandise chargit, went toward Rome;

And it is 7 yere ago, and a litill more,

Of hym, or of his gooddis, that I herd les or more.

And yit I have enquerid, as byfely as I couthe,

And met never man yit, that me coud tell with mowth

Any tyding of hym, onto this same day:

But now I know too much, alas! I may wel sey.

When Beryn herd these wordis, he kist down his hede;

Allas! he thought in hert, alas! what is my rede? 1550

And would fayn have voidit, and outward gan to stapp:

But Machaign arose, and sefid by the lapp;

Nay

Nay thou shalt nat void, he seid; my tale is nat ydo:
For be trowith of my body, yf thou scapidist so,
I shuld nevir have mery whils I wer on lyve,
And set hond fast on Beryn's othir seleve;
And seid, good sir steward, my tale to the end
I prey ye wold here; for wend how men wend,
There may no man hele murðir, but it will out at last:
The same knyff my faðir bere, when he of contre past, 1560

Let ferch wele this felon, ther ye shul hym find;
I know the knyff wele inough, it is nat out of my mynd:

The cotelere dwellith in this toun, that made the same knyff;

And for to preve the trowith, he shall be here as blyve.

Beryn swat for angir, his hert was full of fere;
He toke the knyff to the steward, or he ferchid where.
The steward onto Beryn, my frend, lo! qð he,
And thow think The well about, this is foule plee;
I can know noon othir, but thow must or thow go
Yeld the body of Melan and his good also. 1570

Now be well avysid ageyn to morowe day;
Then shalt thou have thy jugement; ther is no more to say.

When Beryn fro the steward thus departid was,
And was without the gate, he lokid oppon the plase,
And cursid it wondir bitterly in a fervent ire,
And wishid many tymes it had been a feir:

For I trowe that man of lyve was nevir wors betrayid Then I am; and therwithall my hert is cleen dis-mayid:

For here I have no frendship, but am all counselles;
And they been falssher then Judas, and eke mercyles: 1580

A Lord God in hevyn, that my hert is woo;
And yit suyrly I mervel nat though that it be so;
For yit in all my lyve, siþe I ought undirstode,
Had I nevir wyl for to lern good:

Foly I hauntid it evir, ther myght no man me let;
And now he hath ypaid me, he is cleen out of my dett.

For whils I had tyme, wysdom I myght have lernyd;
But I drow me to foly and wold nat be governed;
But had al myne own wyll and of no man aferd;
For I was nevir chastisid: but now myne own yerd Berith me to fore, the strokis been to hard:

For these devillis of this town takith but litil reward
To sclee my body to have my good; the day is set to morowe:

Now wold to God I wer in grave; for it wer end of sorowe.

I was iwis to much a sole; for hate I had to Rame
I wold forsake myn heritage; therfor sorowe and shame

Is oppon me fall, and right wele deservid;
For I toke none maner hede, when my moðir stervid;
And disobeyid my faðir, and set hym at naught also;
What wondir is it than though that I have woo? 1600

Fortune and eke wisdom have werrid with me evir,
And I with them in all my lyf, for fortune was me levir

Then eny wit or governaunce for them too I did hate;
And though I wold be at oon, now it is to late.
O myghtfull God in heven, wher was evir man
That wrought hymself more foly than I my self did than?

A cursid be the tyme that I out of Rome went;
That was my faðir's right heir, of lyvelode, and of rent,

And al the rial lordship that he hath in the town;
Had I had wit, and grace, and hold me low and boun, 1610

It wer my kynd now among my baronage,

To hawk, and to hunt, and eke to pley, and rage,
With feir freshe ladies, and daunce when me list:
But now it is to late to speke of had I wist.

But I fare like the man that for to swele his flyes
He stert into the bern, and aftir stre he hies,
And goith about the wallis with a brennyng wase,
Tyll it was at last that the leem and blase

Entrid into the chynys, where the wheate was,
And kissid so the evese, that brent was all the plase;
But first in the begynnyng, tyll feer smote in the rastris,

He toke no manere kepe, and thought of nothing aftir
What perell there myght fall: ne more did I ywis,
That wold forsake myn honour, for the unkyndnes

Of Rame, that was my stepmoðir, for yf I shall nat ly,

They beth soure: wherfor the more wisely
I shuld have wrought, had I had wit, and sustrid for a tyme,

And aftir com to purpose wel inowghe of myne;
But evil avengit he is deol, that for a litil mode,
And angir to his neybour, sellith away his good; 1630

And goith hymself a beggyng; aftir in bress tyme,
He mut be countid a lewd man in all manere ryme:
So have I wrought and wers; for I dout of my lyve,

How that it shal stond, for plukking of my seleve
The knyff that was me take, as ye have herd tofore:
And yit it grevith mine hert also much more

Of myn own pepill, that no disese aservid:
I wote wele aftir pleding, ryght nought woll be re-servyd

To sustene their lyvis, I trow ryght nought or lite,
And peraventur lightly stond in wors plight: 1640
Of me it is no fors, though I be thus arayed,

But it is dole and pete, that they shull be betrayid,
That hath nought aservid, but for my gilt aloon.
And when that Beryn in this wise had ymade his mone;

A crepill he saw comyng with grete spede and haste,
Oppon a stilt ondir his kne bound wondir fast;
And a crouch ondir his armys; with hondis al forskramyd:

Alas! qð this Beryn, shall I be more examenyd?
And gan to turn aside onto the see stronde:
And the crippill aftir, and wan oppon hym londe. 1650

Tho began Beryn to drede inwardlich fore,
And thought thus in his hert; shall I be comberid
more:

And it wer Godd's wyll my sorowe for to cese.
Methinkith I have inowghe: the crippill began to preche,

And had yraught nere hond Beryn by the seleve.
Beryn turnyd, as an hare, and gan to ren blyve:
But the crippill knew betir the pathis, smale and grete,

Then Beryn; so tofore hym he was, and gan hym mete.

When Beryn saw it vaylid naught to renne, ne to lepe;

What for dole and anguyssh, no word myght he speke; 1660

But stode still amafid, and starid fast about:
The crippill began to speke, sir, to drede or to dout
Of me wold ye right light, and ye knew myne hert:

So where ye like well or ill, fro me shall ye nat part,
Tyl I have tretid with yew, and yee with me also,
Of all your soden happis, yeur myschelf, and yeur wo;

For by the tyme that I have knowlech of yeur case,
Yeur rennyng, and yeur trotting into an cly pas,
I shall turn or that we twyn, so ye aftir my stole

Woll do, and as I rede yew; for yee wer a sole 1670
When ye cam first alonde, ye had met with me;
For I wold have ensensid yew all the iniquite

Of thes fals marchandis, that dwellen in this town,
And outid all your chaffare without gruch or groun:

For had ye dwellid within yeur shippis, and nat go them among;

Then had ye been undaungerid, and quyte of all their wrong

On yew that been surmysid through fals suggestioun.

Beryn gan to sigh, unneth he might founc,

Saf o word or tweyn, and mercy was the first;

Preying with all his hert, that he myght have his rest, 1680

And be no more enpledit, but pas fro hym quyte.

Good sir, qð Beryn, doith me no more dispite;

And suffir me to pas, and have on me routhe;

And I suy yew feithfully, have here my trowith,

To morowe when I have pedit, and eny thing be laft

Of ship or marchaundise, afore the ship or baft,

I woll shew yew all ifere, and opyn every chest,

And put it in yewr grace, to do what ye left;

And in the meen while that Beryn gan to clapp;

The crypill nyghid hym nere and nere, and hent hym
by the lap:

And as sone as Beryn knew that he was in honde;

He unlacyd his mantell, for drede of some command;

And pryvelich ovir his shuldris let hym down glide;

And had levir lese his mantell then abide.

The crypill all perceyvid, and hent hym by the scleve

Of his nethir surcote. Alas! now mut I strive,

Thought Beryn by hymself; now I am yhent,

There helpith naught save strength; therewith the sleve to rent

Beryn gan, to scape he sparid for no cost.

Alas! thought this crypill, this man wold be lost; 1700

And be ondo for evir; but he counsell have:

Iwis, thoughe he be lewde, my contremen to save.

Yit will I my besinesdo, and peyn that I may;

Sith he is of Room, for that is my contray.

This crypill was an hundrit yere full of age;

With a long thik berd, and a trew visage

He had; and manly, and july was he;

And Geffrey was his name, yknow, in that contre.

Alas! thought this Geffrey, this man hath grete drede

Of me, that by my power wold help hym in his nede. 1710

I wis, though he be nyce, untaught, and unwise,

I woll nat for his foly leve myne enpryse:

And lept astir Beryn, and that in right good spede.

Beryn was so fore agast, he toke no maner hede

To look onys bakward, tyll he to the watir cam;

Then lokid he behynd, and saw sir Clekam

Commaund wondir fast, with staff and with his stilt;

Allas! thought Beryn, I now am yspilt;

For I may no ferthir, without I wold me droune

In'ote, wich were the betir, or go ageyn to toun. 1720

Geffrey was so nygh com, that Beryn myght nat fle:

Good sir, qð this Geffrey, why do yee void me?

For by heven quene, that bare Crist in hir barme,

But right as to my self, I woll yew no more harme.

Sittith down here by me oppon this see stronde;

And yf ye drede any thing, clepe yewr men to londe;

And let them be here with us all our speche tyme:

For I woll nat feyn oon word, as makers doon to ryme,

But counsell yew as prudently as God woll send me
grace:

Take comfort to yw, and herk a litill spafe. 1730

And when that Beryn had yherd his tale to the end;

And how goodly as Geffrey spak, as he were his frende;

None obstant his drede, yet part of sapience

Stremyd into his hert, for his eloquence;

And seyde; God me counsaill for his high mercy;

For I have herd this same dey men as sotilly

Speke, and of yeur semblant, and in such manere,

And by herte me frendship outward by their chere,

But inward it was contrary their intellectuone;

Wherfor the blame is les, though I suspectioun. 1740

Have of yewr wordis, lest othir be yewr entent;

For I n'ote whom to trust, by God omnipotent;

Yit nethirles, yf your will is to com into the ship with me,

I woll somewhat do by yeur rede, how so it evir be:

Then, qð Geffrey, if it be so that I in yewr powere

Entir into your shippis, and yew help in yewr my-stere,

That yee ageyn yewr adversaryes shull have the betir syde,

And gyve yow such counsell to bate down their pride,

And that yee wyne in every pleynt, al so much or more

As they purpose to have of yew; yf they be down ybore, 1750

And ye have amendis for their inquite,

And I yew bring to this end, what shall my guerdon be?

In verrey soth, qð Beryn; yf I yew may trust,

I woll quyte yew trewly, I make yew beheft:

In feith then, qð Geffray, I woll with yew wende.

What is yewr name, seid Beryn, though my frende?

Geffrey, he seid; but in these marchis I was nat bore;

But I have dwellid in this cete yeeris heretofore

Ful many, and turmented wers then wer yee;

And endurid for my trowith much adverfite: 1760

For I wold in no wise suffir their falsheces;

For in all the world so corrupt of their dedis

Been noon men alyve, I myght ryght well avow;

For they set all their wittis in wrong, all that they mowe:

Wherfor full many a tyme, the grettist of them, and I,

Have stonden in altercacioun, for their trechery.

For I had in valew in trew marchaundise

A M. l. all have they take in such maner wise:

So ferforth to save my blode no longer myght I dryve dure;

For drede of wors, thus thought I my self to disfigure; 1770

And have among them 12 yere go right in this plight,

And evir have had in memory how I myght them
quyte:

And so I hope now, as sotill as they be,

With my wit engine them, and help yew and me.

My lymes been both hole and sound; me nedith stilt, ne crouch.

He cast asyde them both, and lepe oppon an huche,

And adown ageynes; and walkid to and fro,

Up and down, within the ship; and shewid his hondis
tho,

Stretching forth his fingris, in sight and all about,

Without knot, or knor, or eny sign of goute; 1780

And dyght them eft ageyns right disferirly,

Som to ride ech othir, and som aweward wry.

Geffrey was right myghty, and wele his age did bere;

For natur was more substantiall; when tho dayis wer,

Then now in our tyme; for all thing doith waste,

Saff vile and cursid lyving; that growith all to faste.

What shuld I tell more? but Geffrey sat hym down;

And Beryn hym besydis; the Romeyns gan to rown,

And marvelled much in Geffrey, of his disgifenes:

And Beryn had anothir thought, and spak of his di-stres; 1790

Now Geffrey, seid this Beryn, and I durst trust in yewe,

That and ye knewe eny man that is alyve anowe,

That had of discrecioun so much influence,

To make my party good to morowe in my defence,

And delivir me of sorowe, as ye behote have;

I wold become his legeman, as God my soule save.

That wer to much, qð Geffrey, that wold I yew relese;

But I desire of othir thing to have yewr promes;

That

That and I bryng yewr enmyes into such a traunce,
To make for yewr wrongis to you right high fe-
naunce; 1800

And so declare for you, that with you pas such dome;
That yee oppon your feith bryng me at Rome;
Yf God wol send yew weðir, and grace to repafe.
Qð Beryn, but I grant yew I wer lewder then an affe.

But or I fullich trust yew, holdith me excusid;
I woll go counsell with my men, lest they it refusid.
Beryn drew afyde, and spak with his meyne;
And expressid every word, in what plight and degre
That he stode, from poynt to poynt, and of his fals areftis:

His meyne were astonyd, and starid forth as bestis:
Spekith som word, qð Beryn, sith I am betrayd:
Yee have yherd what Geffrey to me hath sayd.
These Romeyns stode alle still; o word ne coud they
meve;

And eke it passid their wittis. Then Beryn gan re-
leve,

And to Geffrey eft ageyn; and mercy hym besought.
Help me, Sir, qð Beryn, for his love that us bought,
Dying on the rood, and wept full tendirly;

For but ye help, qð Beryn, ther is no remedy:
For comfort nethir counsaill of my men have I noon:
Help me, as God yew help, and els I am undoon.
When Geffrey saw this Beryn so distract and wept;

Pite into eche veyn of his hert crept:
Allas! qð Geffrey, I might nat do a more synful
dede,

I leve by my trowith, then sayl yew in this nede:
Faill me God in heven, yf that I yew faill;
That I shall do my besines, my peyn, and my tra-
vaile,

To help yew be my power; I may no ferther goo.
Yis yee behete me more, seid Beryn, tho
That yee wold help me, at all that I shuld stond cler:
Beryn gan to wepe and make wers chere. 1830

Stillith yew, qð Geffrey; for how so evir ye tire,
More than my power ye ought nat desire.
For thorough the grace of God ye shul be help welc;
I have therof no dout: but trewlich I you, tele,
That ye woll hold me covenante, and I woll yew
also,

To bryng me at Rome, when it is all ydo.
In signe of trowith of both sidis of our acordment,
Eche of us kys othir of our comyn assent;
And all was do. And aftirward Beryn commaundit wyne,

They dronk, and then Geffrey seid, Sir Beryne, 1840
Yee mut declare yeur maters to myne intelligence,
That I may the bet perseyve all inconvenience,

Dout, pro, contra, and ambiguite,
Thorough your declaracioun, and enformyd be:
And with the help of our soveren Lord celestiale,
They shall be behynd, and we shull have the ball.

For now the tyme aprochith, for their cursidnes
To be somewhat rewardit, and cause of yewr distres
Hath my hert yfetlid, and fixid them a nye,
As trowith woll and reson, for their trechery. 1850
For many a man, tofore this day, they have do out of daw,

Distroid, and turmentid, thorough their fals law.
For they think litill ellis, and all their wyttis fyve, Save to have a mann's good, and to benym his lyve:

And hath a cursid custom, all ageyns reson,
That what man they enpeche, they have noon enchefon,

Thoughe it be as fals a thing as God hymself is trewe:

And it touche a straunger, that is com of newe,
Arte first mocione that he begynneth to meve,

Ther stondith up an hundrit hym to repreve. 1860

The lawes of the cete stont in probacy;

They usen noon enquestis the wrongis for to try:

And yf thow haddist eny wrong, and woldist pleyn
The;

And were as trewe a cause as eny myght be,
Thow shuldist nat find o man to bere The witnes; Though every man in the town knew it, more or les;

So burrithe they togiðir, and holdith with eche o-
thir;

That as to counterplede them, though ye wer my brother,

I wold gyve yew no counsaill, ne their empechement
In no word to deny; for that wer combirment:

For then wer they in the affirmatyf, and wold preve
anoon:

And to yew that wer negatyff the law wold graunt
anoon:

So for to plede ageyn them it woll litill avail;

And yit to every mann's wit it ought be grete mer-
vaile:

For their lawes been so streyt, and peynous ordi-
naunce,

Is stallid for their falsheide; for this is their synaunce,
To lese their lyff for lesing; and lsope it may knowe
That Lord is riall of the town, and holdith them so
lowe:

Wherfor they have a custom a shrewid for the nonys;
Yf eny of them sey a thing, they cry all at onys, 1880

And ferm it for a soth, and it bere any charge;

Thus of the danger of lsope they kepe them ever at large:

And therfor wisdow weer, whoso might eschewe, Nevir to dele with them; for wer it wrong, or trewe,

It shuld litill avail ageyns their falsheides:

For they been acursid, and so been their dedes.

Wherfor we must, with all our wit sensibill,

Such answers us purvey, that they been insolibill:

To morowe at our aparaunce, and shall be respon-saill;

For of wele and ellis it is thy day fynall. 1890

Now soveren Lord celestiale, with many sorowful sighis,

Seyd Beryn to Geffray, ymmemorat of lyes,

Graunt me grace to morowe; so that God be plesid,

Make so myne answer; and I somewhat y-cfid

By The that art my counsaill, for othir help is noon,

Reherce me then, qð Geffrey, the causis of thy soon.

Fro poynt to poynt, al in fere, on The is surmysid;

Wherthorough I myght to morowe the betir be avisid.

Now in soth, qð Beryn, thoughe I shuld dy,

I cannat tell the tenyth part of their trechery; 1900

What for sorowe, and angir, that they to me have wrought;

So stond I clene desperat, but ye con help ought.

Deperdeux, seid Geffrey, and I The woll nat faill,

Sith I have enfurid The to be of thy counsaill;

And so much the more, that thou art nat wise,

And canst nat me enform of no maner avise.

Here therfore a while, and tend wel to my lore:

The Lord that dwellith in this town, whose name I told tofore,

lsope eft reherfid, is so inly wise,

That no man alyve can pas his devise; 1910

And is so grow in yeris, that lx yeer ago

He sawe nat-for age; and yit it stondith so,

That thorough his wit, and wisdom, and his gover-
naunce,

Who makith a fray cf, or slyrvith aught or mel to much or prauunce,

Within

Within the same cete, that he n'ys take anoon;
 And hath his pennaunce forthwith, for pardon usith he noon.
 For ther n'ys pore ne riche, ne what state he be,
 That he ny's undirfore for his iniquite;
 And it be previd on hym, ther shall no gold hym
 quyte,
 Right as the forfete axith, moch or lite:
 For geys his commaundment is noon so hardy quek,
 So hard fetith he his fote in every mann'ys nek:
 For undir sky and steris this day is noon alyve
 That coud amend hym in o poynt, al thing to di-stryve.
 The 7 sages of Rome, though al ageyn hym were,
 The shuld be insufficient to make his answere:
 For he can all langagis, Greek, Hebrew, and Latyne Caldey, Frensch, and Lombard, yee know well fyne;
 And all maner that men in bokis write;
 In poysse, and philosophie, also he can endite. 1930
 Cevile, and canoune, and al maner lawis;
 Seneca, and Sydrak, and Salamon'ys Sawys;
 And the 7 sciences, and eke law of armys, Experimentis, and pompery, and all maner charmys;
 As ye shul here aftir, er that I depart,
 Of his imaginaciouns and of his sotill art.
 For he is of age 300 yere and more:
 Wherfor of all sciences he hath the more lore.
 In Denmark he was gotten and ybore also;
 And in Grece ynorished, tyl he coud spek and go:
 Ther was he put to scole, and lernyd wondir fast;
 For such was his grace that all othir he past.
 But first in his begynnyng lital good he had;
 But lernyd evir passyngly, and was wise and sad;
 Of stature and of fature ther was noon hym like,
 Thorough the lond of Grece, though men wold hym seke.
 A kyng ther was in tho yeris, that had noon heir male,
 Saff a doughter, that he lovid as his own saal:
 Ifope was his servaunt, and did hym such plesaunce,
 That he made hym his heir, and did hym so avaunce,
 To wed his doughter, and aftir hym to bere crowne; Thorough prowes and his port so low he was and boun.
 So as fortune wold, that was Ilop's frend,
 This worthy kyng that same yere made his carnel
 end.
 That 27 yere is passid that Ifope thus hath reigned;
 And yit was ther nevir for wrong on hym compleyned,
 For no jugement that he gaff; yit som ageyn hym wylid,
 A grete part of his pepill, and wold have hym exilid:
 But his grete wisdom, and his manfulnes,
 His governaunce with his bounte, and his rightfulness
 Hath evir yit preserved hym unto this ilk day;
 And woll whyle that he lyvith, for aught that men can say.
 For who hath eny quarel or cause for to wonde,
 Within this same cete, quiklich woll he fond,
 And it be sotill matir, to Ifope for to fare,
 Fro gynnyng to the end, his quarrell to declare.
 And eve afore, as custom is, peple shal be on the mo-
 rowe;
 But whofo ly, he scapith nat wythout shame or forowe.
 Beryn, thow must go thiȝir, wher thyn enpechement
 Shull be ymevid; and therfor pas nat thens, 1970
 Tyll thou have herd them alle; and report them wele
 To me, that am thy counsell, and repeir snele:
 But so rial mancione, as Ifope dwellich in,
 Ther is noon in the world, ne so queynt of gyn;
 Wherfore be well avisid, how I enform The
 Of the wondir wayis, and of the pryvyte,
 That been wythyn his paleyse, that thou must pas by:

And when thou approachist, and art the castell nygh,
 Blench fro the brode gate, and enter thou nat there;
 For ther been men to keep it; yit have thou no
 fere; 1980
 Pas down on the right hond by the castell walle, Tyll thou fynd a wyndow; and what so The by fall,
 Entir ther, yf thou may, and be nothyng agast;
 But walk forth in that entre: then shalt thou see in haste
 A poricolysse The tofore; pas in boldly,
 Tyll thou com to an hall, the feyrift undir sky.
 The wallis been of marbill, yjoynid, and yclosid;
 And the pilours of crystall, grete and wele proposid;
 The keveryng of bove is of selondyn;
 And the pament beneth of gold and asure fyne. 1990
 But whofo passith thorough this hall hath nede to re-
 blyve;
 Or els he myght be disware of his own lyve;
 For ther wythin liith a stoon, that is so hote of kynd,
 That what thing com for by, anoon it woll atend,
 As bryght as eny kandell leem, and consume anoon:
 And so wold the hall also, n'er coldnes of a stoon
 That is yclepid Dionysse, that set is hym ageyn.
 So and thou lepe lightly, thou shalt have no peyn;
 For ethir ston in kynd proportioned they be
 Of hete, and eke of coldnes, of oon equalite. 2000
 Thou must pas thorough the hall; but tary nat I rede;
 For thou shult fynd a dur, up right afore thyn hede;
 When thou art entrid ther, and the dore apast;
 Whatso thou se ligg, or stond, be thou nat agast;
 And yf thou drede eny thing, do no more saff blowe
 But yit I rede The, beware that it be somewhat lowe:
 Ther been to libardis, lobs and untyed,
 If that thy blowing of that othir in eny thing be spied,
 Anoon he rakith on The to fese The by thy pate;
 For ther n'ys thing in erth that he so much doith hate, 2010
 As breth of mann'ys mowith: wherfore refreyn The,
 And blow but fair and soft; and when that nede be.
 When thou art passid this hall, anoon then shalt thou com
 Into the fayrest garden that is in Christendom:
 The wich thorough his clergy is made of such devise,
 That a man shall ween he is in paradise,
 At his first comyng in, for melody and song,
 And othir glorious thingis, and delectabill among;
 The wich Tholomeus, that somtyme paynym was,
 That of astronomy knew ev'ry poynt and case, 2020
 Did it so devise, thorough his high connyng,
 That ther n'ys best in erth, ne bird that doith sing,
 That he n'ys there in figur, in gold, and sylvir fyne,
 And mow, as they wer quyk, know the sotill engyne.
 In mydward of this gardyn stant a feir tre,
 Of all maner levis, that undir sky be,
 Yforgit, and yfourmit, eche in his degre,
 Of sylvir, and of gold fyne, that lusty been to sec.
 This gardeyn is evir grene, and full of May flowris,
 Of rede, white, and blew, and othir fresh colouris;
 The wich been so redolent, and sentyn so about,
 That he must be right lewde, therin shuld route.
 These monstrefull thingis I devise to The;
 Because thou shuldist nat of them abasheid be.
 When that thou comyst there, so thou be strong in thought,
 And do be my counsell, drede The right nought:
 For ther beth viii tregetours that this gardyn kepith;
 Four of them doith waak, whils the four slepith;
 The wich been so persite of nygramance,
 And of the art of apparenc, and of tragetrie, 2040
 That they make semen as to a mann'ys sight
 Abominabill wormys, that fore ought be a fright
 The hertiest man on erth; but he warnyd were
 Of the grisly sightis, that he shuld see there.

Among

Among all othir; there is a lyón white;
That, and he be a straungir, he rampith for to bite,
And hath tofore this tyme 500 men and mo
Devourid, and yete, that thereforth have ygo:
Yit shalt thou pas suyrly, so thou do as I tell.
The tre I told tofore, that round as eny bell 2050
Berith bow, and braunce, traylyng to the ground;
And thou touch oon of them, thou art saff and found;

The tre hath such vertu, there shall nothing The dere.
Loke that be the first, when thou comyst there.
Then shalt thou se an entre, by the ferther side;
Thoughe it be streyte tofore, inner large and wyde
It growith more and more, and as a dentour wryth;
Yit woll that wey The bryng there that I sope liith,
Into the feyrift chambir that evir man saw with eye.
When thou art there wythyn, govern The wisely:
For there shalt thou here al thyn enpechement,
Opynyly declarid, in Isop's present.
Report them wele, and kepe them in thy mynd;
And aftir thy relacioune, we shall so turn and wend, Thorough help of God above, such help for to make,
That they shall be acombrit, and we right well to scape.

Now in soth, qð Beryn, a manny's hert may grise
Of such wondir weyis; for al my marchandise
I had levir lese, then oppon me take Such a wey to pas. Then, Sir, for your sake 2070
I woll my self, qð Geffrey; sith I am ensuryd
To help The with my power, thou shalt be amyrid,
As ferforth as I may; that I woll do my peyn
To bryng yow plesaunt tyding, and retourn ageyn, Yit or the cok crow: and ther'for let me se,
Whils I am out, how mery ye can be.
Geffrey toke his leve: but who was sory tho,
But Beryn, and his company? for when he was go,
Thei had no maner joy; but dout, and hevynes;
For of his repeyryng thei had no sikernes. 2080
So every man to othir made his compleynt;
And wishid that of felony they had been atteynt:
And so them thought betir to end hevynes;
Then every day to lak brede atte first mes:
For when our good is go, what shall fal of us?
Evir to be their thrallis, and peraventure wers:
To lese our lyf aftir, yf we displese them ought:
Aftir Geffrey went, this was all their thought,
Throughout the nyght, tyl cokkis gan to sing:
But then encrefid anguishe; their hondis gan to wryng;
And cursid wynd and watir that them brought ther:
And wishid many tymes that he had been in bere:
And were apassid, and entrid into dispeyr,
In as much as Geffrey did nat repeir:
Eche man seyde to othir, it myght nat be ynayid,
But Geffray had uttirlich falsly them betrayid, Throughout all the long nyght:

.....
Tho went they to counsell, a litill tofore the day
And were all acordit for to sayl away: 2100
And so them thought betir, and leve their good ther;
Then abyde theroppon, and have more fere.

They made their takelyng redy, and wend the sail acros,

For to save their lyvis, and set nat of their los:
So fore they wer adred to be in servitude;
And hopid God above wold send them som refute;
By som othir costis ther wynd them wold bryng:
And therwithall cam Geffrey on his stilt lepeing,
And cried wondir fast by the watir syde;
When Beryn herd Geffrey; he bid his men abyde,
And to launch out a bote, and bryng Geffrey in;
For he may more avayl me now, then al my kyn;
And he be trew, and trusty, as myn hope is:
But yit ther'of had Beryn no full sikernes.
These Romeyns set in Geffrey with an hevy chere;

For they had levir sail forth, then put them in weer
Both lyve and goodis; and evill suspicioune
They had of this Geffrey: wherfore they gon rounne, Talkyng to eche othir; this man woll us betray.

Geffrey wist well inowghe, he was nat to their pay;
And for verry angir he threw into the see 2120
Both stilt and eke his crouch, that made wer of tre;
And gan them to comfort, and seid in this manere;
Benedicite, Beryn; why make ye such chere?

For and yee wex hevy; what shall yewr men do,
But take ensampill of yew? and have no cause to:
For yit or it be eve, yewr adversaryes all
I shall make them spurn, and have, a fore fall:
And yee go quyte, and all yewr good; and have of theirs too:

And they to be right feign for to scape so,
Wythout more daungir, and yewr wyl be. 2130

For of the lawys her such is the equitye;
That who pursu othir, and his pleynt be wrong,
He shall make amendis, be he never so strong;
Right as shuld the t'oðir, yf he condempned were:
Right so shall the pleyntiff, right as I yew here:
And that shall preve by them, have ye no doute,
Yit or it be eve, right low to yew to loute,
And submit them to yew, and put them in yewr
grace,

By that tyme I have ymade all my waulafe:
And in hope to spede well, let shape us for to dync.
Geffrey axid watir, and sith brede, and wyne;
And seit it is holsom to breke our fast betyme:
For the steward woll to the court at hour of pryme.
The sonne gan to shyne and shope a fair dey:
But for aught that Geffrey coude do or fey,
These Romeyns spekyn fast, all the dyner while,
That Geffrey with his sotill wordis wold them begile.
So when they had ydyned, they ryfen up echoone,
And drew them to counsell, what was best to doon:
Som seyde, the best rede that we do may, 2150
To throw Geffrey ovir the bord, and seyll forth our way:

But for drede of Beryn, som wold nat so:
Yit the more party assentid wele therto.
Geffrey, and Beryn, and worthy Romeyns tweyn,
Stood a part within the ship, to Geffrey gan to feyn;
Beryn beth avisid, your men beth in distaunce;
Sith ye been her soveren, put them in governaunce:
For methinkith they holdith contrary opynyounne;
And grace fayth comynlich wher is divisounne.

In the meen whyle that they gan thus to stryve; 2160
Hanybald was up, and ycom as blyve
To the brigg of the town, ther the shippis rood;
And herd much noyse, but litil while he bood:
For when he saw the saylis flond all acros;
Alas! qð this Hanybald, here growith a smert los
To me, that am provolt; and have in charge and heft
All these fyve shippis undir myn arelt;

And ran into the town, and made an hidouse cry,
And chargit all the cetezins to armys for to hy,
From o strete tyl anothir, and rerid up al the town;
And made the trompis blowe up, and the bellis soun;
And seyde that the Romeyns wer in poynt to pas:

Tyl ther wer a thousand, rather mo then les,
Men y-armyd cleen, walkyng to the stonde
When Beryn them aspied; now Geffrey in thy honde Stont lyf and goodis: doth with us what The list;
For all our hope is on The, comfort, help, and trift.
For we must bide aventure, such as God woll shape;
For now I am in certen we mow in no wise scape.
Have no dout, qð Geffrey, beth mery, let me aloon:
Get th a peir silours, shewith my berd anoon;
And aftirwerd lete top my hede hastilyen and blyve.
Som went to with selours, som wyth a knyffe;
So what for sorowe, and hast, and for lewd tole,
Ther was no man alyve bet like to a tole

Then Geffrey was, by that tyme they had al ydo, Hanybald clepid out Beryn, to mote hall for to go;
And stode upon the brigg, with an huge route
Geffrey was the first to Hanybald gan to loute,
And lokid out a foreship: God blesyew, Sir, qð he Wher art thou now, Beryn? com forth, behold and se,

Her is an huge pepill yrayd and ydight;
All these been my children, that been in armys bryght,
Yistirdey I gat them: is nat mervail
That they been hiðir ycom, to be of our counsaill,
And to stond by us, and help us in our ple.
A! myne own childryn, blessid mut ye be!

Qð Geffrey, with an high voise, and had a nyce vi-sage,

And gan to daunce for joy, in the fore stage.
Hanybald lok'd on Geffrey, as he wer amasid, 2200
And beheld his countenance, and how he was yrafid:

But evirmore he thought that he was a sole
Naturell of kynde, and had noon othir tool,
As semed by his wordis and his visage both:
And thought it had been foly to wex with hym wroth,
And gan to bord ageyn, and axid hym in game,
Sith thou art our laðir, who is then our dame?

And how, and in what plase, were we begete?

Yistirday, qð Geffrey, pleyng in the strete

At a gentil game, that clepid is the quek, 2210

A long peny halter was cast about my nek;

And yknet fast with a riding knot,

And cast ovir a perch, and hale along my throte.

Was that a game, qð Hanybald, for to hang thy selve?

So they seyde about me, a thousand eche by hymself.

How scapiddist thou, qð Hanybald, that thou wer nat dede?

Therto can I answer without any rede;

I bare thre dise in myn own purs:

For I go nevir without, fare, I betir or wers;

I kist them forth all thre, and too fill am'ys ase: 2220

But here now what fill astir, right a mervelouse case;

Ther cam a mowse lepe forth, and ete the third boon,

That pussid out her skyn, as grete as she myght goon;

And in this maner wise, of the mowse and me,

All ye be ycom my children, fair and fre:

And yit or it be eve, fall woll such a chaunce,

To stond in my power yew all to avaunce:

For and we plede well to day, we shall be riche i-nowghe.

Hanybald of his wordis hertlich loughe;

And so did all that herd hym, as they myght wele;

And had grete joy wyth hym for to tell.

For they knew hym noon othir but a sole of kynd;

And all this was his discrecioun, and that previd the end.

Thus whils Geffrey japid, to make their hertis light,

Beryn and his company were rayid and ydight,

And londit them in boris, ferefull how to spede;

For all their thoughtis in balance stode, betwene hope and drede.

But yit they did their peyn to make lightsome chere,

As Geffrey them had enfourmed, of port and all ma-
nere

Of their governaunce, all the long day, 2240

Tyll their plee wer endit; so went they forth their
wey,

To the court with Hanybald: then Beryn gan to sey,

What nedith this, sir Hanybald, to make such aray?

Sith we been pese-marchantis, and use no spoliacioun.

For soth sir, qð Hanybald, to me was made rela-
cioun

Yee wer in poynt to void; and yef yee had do so,

Yee had lost yewr lyvis without wordis mo.

Beryn held hym styll. Geffrey spak anoon;

No les wed then lyvis? Whi so good Sir Jon?

That wer somwhat to much, as it semeth me; 2250

But ye be oirwise that dwell in this cete:

For ye have begonne a thing makith you right bold;

And yit or it be eve, as folis shall yee be hold.

And, ekc yee devyne for shipmanny's craft,

And wotith litill what longith to afore the ship and bafft;

And namelich in the dawning when shipmen first arise.

My good frend, qð Hanybald, in a scornynge wise,

Yee must onys enfourm me thorough yowr discre-
cioun:

But first yee must answer to a questioune?

Why make men crof-saill in myddis of the mast? 2260

For to talow the ship and fesch more blast.

Why goon the yemen to bote ankirs to hale?

For to make them redy to walk to the ale.

Why hale they up stonys by the crane lyne?

To make the tempest sese and the somme sh'ne.

Why close they the port with the see bord?

For the mastir shuld awake at first word.

Thow art a redy reve, qð Hanybald, in fay:

Yee sir trewly, for sothe is that yew sey.

Geffrey evir clappid, as doith a watir myll, 2270

And made Hanybald to laugh al his hert fyll.

Beryn, qð this Geffrey, retourn thy men ageyn;

What shall they do with The at court? no man on them pleyn.

Plede thy case thy selve, right as thou hast ywrought,

To bide with the shippis my purpose is and thought.

Nay forsoth, qð Hanybald, thou shalt abyde on lond;

Wec have no folis but The; and toke hym by the hond;

For thou art wise in law to plede all the case.

That can I betir, qð Geffrey, then eny man in this plase.

What seyest thou therto, Beryn? shall I tell thy tale?

Hanybald likid his wordis wele, and forward gan hym hale.

Beryn made hym angry, and sighid wondir fore;

For Geffrey hym had enfourmid of every poynt tofore;

How he hym shuld govern all the long day.

Geffrey chasid hym ageyn; sey me ye or nay,

Mayst owe nat here speke some maner word;

Leve thy blab, lewd sole, me likith nat thy bord.

I have anothir thought, qð Beryn, wherof thou carist lite.

Clepeist thou me a sole, qð Geffrey? al that I may The wite.

But first when we out of Rome sailid both in fere;

Tho I was thy slawe and thy partinere;

For tho the marchandise was more then half myne;

And sith that thou com hiðir thou takist all for thyne.

But yit or it be eve, I wol make oon beheft;

But thou have my help, thy part shall be left.

Thyn help, qð Beryn; lewde sole, thou art more then malid:

Dres The to the shippis ward with thy crown yrasid;

For I myght nevir spare The bet, trus, and be agoo:

I woll go with The, qð Geffrey, wher thou wolt or no;

And lern to plede law, to wyn both howse and lond.

So thou shalt, qð Hanybald, and led hym by the
hond;

And leyde his hond oppon his nek: but and he had y-know

Whom he had led, in sikernes he had well levir in snowe

Have walkid xl myle, and rathir then fail more:

For he wisshid that Geffrey had ybe unbore

Full oft tyme in that day, or the ple wer do;

And so did all that wrought Beryn sham and woo.

Now

Now yee that list abide and here of sotilte,
Mowe know how that Beryn sped in his ple;
And in what aray to the court he went; 2310
And how Hanybald led Geffrey, disware of his en-tent.

But yet he axid of Geffrey, what is thy name I pray?
Gylhochet, qð Geffrey, men clepid me yistirday.
And wher weer thou ybore? I note I make a vow;
Seyd Geffrey to this Hanybald, I axe that of yew:
For I can tell no more, but here I stond nowc.

Hanybald of his wordis hertlich lowghe,
And held hym for a passyng sole to serve eny Lord.
Thus they romyd janglyng into the court ward:

But or they com ther, the steward was yset; 2320
And the grettist of the town a company ymet;
And gon to stryve fast, who shuld have the good
That com was with Beryn ovir the salt flood.
Som seyde oon and som seyde anothir;
Som wold have the shippis, the parell, and the ro-
thir;

Som his cyen, som his lyf wold have, and no les;
Or els he shuld for them fyne, or he did pas,
And in the mene, whils they wer in this afay,
Beryn and thes Romeyns wer com, in good aray
As myght be made of woll, and of colour graynyd;
They toke a fyde bench that for them was ordeynyd.
When all was hush and still, Beryn arose anoon,
And stode in the myddis of the hall tofore them everichone;

And seyde, sir steward, in me shall be no let:
I am ycom to answer, as my day is set;
Do me ryght and reson, I axe yew no more.
So shall I, qð the steward, for ther'to I am swore.
He shall have right, qð Geffrey, wher thou wolt
or no.

For and thou mys onys thy jugement ondo;
I wolt to the Emperour of Rome my cosyn; 2340
For of o cup he and I full oft have dronk the wyne;
And yit we shull herastir, as oft as we mete,
For he is long the gladder, when I send hym to grete.
This Geffrey stode upon a fourm, for he wold be sey
Above all othir the shuldris, and the cry;
And starid al about, with his lewd berd,

And was yhold a very sole of ech man hym herd.
The steward, and the officers, and the burgeyfis all,
Laughid at hym hertlich; the criour gan to call
The burgeyse, that had pleyd with Beryn at ches;
And he arose quiklich, and gan hym for to dres
Afore the steward at barr, as the maner is;
He gan to tell his tale wyth grete redines;
Here me, sir steward, this day is me set,
To haveright and reson; I axe yew no bet,
Of Beryn, that here stondith; that with me yistirday
Made a certen covenant, and at ches we did pley;
That whofo were ymatid of us both too,
Shuld do the toðir's bidding; and yf he wold nat so,
He must drink all the watir that salt wer in the Se: 2360
Thus I to hym surid, and he also to me.

To preve my tale trew, I am nat all aloon;
Up rose to burgeyfis quiklich anoon;
And affermyd eviry word of his tale soth;
And made them all redy for to do their othe.
Evander the steward, Beryn, now qð he,
Thow most answer nede; it wolt noon othir be;
Take thy counsell to The: spede on, I have doon,
Beryn held hym styll: Geffrey spak anoon;
Now be my trowith, qð Geffrey, I marvell much of yew 2370

To bid us go to counsell, and knowith me wile i-
nowghe,
And evir full avysid, in twynkelyng of an eye,
To make a short answer, but yf my mowith be dry.
Shuld we go to counsell for o word or tweyn?
Be my trowith we n'yll, let se mo that pleyen.

And but he be yanswer'd, and that right anoon:
I geve yew leve to rise and walk out everychoon,
And aspy redily yf ye fynd me there,
In the meen whils I wolt abyde here;

Nay, I tell trewly, I am wiser then ye ween: 2380
For ther n'ys noon of you woot redely what I meen.

Every man gan laughe all his hert fill,
Of Geffrey and his wordis; but Beryn held hym still
And was cleen astonyd; but yit ner the lattir;
He held it nat al foly that Geffrey did clattir;
But wisely hym governyd, as Geffrey hym taught;
For percell of his wisdom he had tofore smaught.
Sir steward, qð Beryn, I ondirflond wele
The tale of this burgeyse; now let anothir tell:

That I may take counsell, and answer all at onys. 2390
I graunt, qð the steward, then axing for the nonys;
Sith thou wolt be rewld by the fol's rede;
For he is right a wise man to help The in thy nede
Up aros the accusours queyntlich anoon;
Hanybald was the first of them everichoon,
And gan to tell his tale with a proud chere;
Yistirday, soverens, when I was here;
Beryn and thes burgeyse gon to plede fast
For pleying at ches; so ferforth at last,
Thorough vertu of myn office, that I had in charge
Beryn's fyve shippis, for to go at large,
And to be in answer her this same day:
So walkyng to the flondward we bargeynyed by the
wey,

That I shuld have the marchandise that Beryn with hym brought,

Wherof I am sefid, as ful sold and bought,
In covenante that I shuld his shippis fill ageyn
Of my marchandise; such as he tofore had seyn
In myn own plafe, howtis to or thre,
Full of marchandise as they myght be:

And I am evir redy, whensoever he wolt, 2410
Let hym go, or sende, and charge his shippis full
Of such marchandise as he findith there:
For in such wordis we acordit were.

Up rose x burgeyfis, not tho that rose tofore,
But othir; and made them redy to have swore.
That every word of Hanybald; from the begynnyng to the end,

Was soth and eke trewe; and with their mende
Full prest they wer to preve; and seyde they wer present

At covenant making by God omnipotent,
It shall nat nede, qð Geffrey, whils that I here stond.
For I wolt preve it my self with my right honde.
For I have been in four batellis heretofore,
And this shall be the lift; and therfor I am swore Beholdith, and seith, and turnyd hym about;
The steward and the burgeyse gamyd all about:
The Romeyns held them still and lawhghid but a lite.
Wyth that cam the blynd man his tale to endite,
That God hym grant wynnyng right as he hath aservid.

Beryn and his company stood all astyvyd
Betwene hope and drede, right in high distres; 2430
For of wele or of woo they had no sikernes.
Beryn, qð this blynd, thoughte I may nat see,
Stond nere yit the barr, my comyng is for The,
That wrongfullich thou withholdist my both to cyen,
The wich I toke The for a tyme; and quiklich to me hijen,

And take them me ageyn, as our covenant was.
Beryn, I take no reward of othir mennys case,
But oonlich of myn oon; that flont me most an hond Now blessid be God in heven, that brought The to this lond;

For sith our last parting, many bitir teris 2440
Have I lere for thy love, that som tyme partneris

Of wyunnyng and of lesing were yeris fele;
And evir I lond The trewe; tyl at the last thou didist fiele

Awey wyth my too eyen, that I toke to The,
To se the tregetours pley and their sotilte:
As yistirday, here in this same plase,
Tofore yew, sir steward, reherfid as it was.
Full trew is that byword, a man to serve sabill
Ledith ofi beand from his own stabill.
Beryn, by The I meen, though thou make it straunge;
For thou knowist trowly that I made no chaunge
Of my good eyen, for thyn that badder were.
Therwith stode up burgeyse four, witnes to bere.
Beryn held hym styil, and Geffrey spak anoon;
Now of thy lewd compleynt, and thy masid moon,
By my trowith, qd Geffrey, I have grete mervail.
For though thou haddist eyen-sight, it shuld litill a-raile;

Thou shuldist nevir fare the bet, but the wors in fay;
For al thing may be still now for The in house and
way;

And yf thou haddist thyn eyen, thou woldist no counsell hele; 2460

I know wele by thy fufnamy, thy kynd wer to fele;
And eke it is thy profite, and thyn cfe also,
To be blynd as thou art: for now wherso thou go,
Thou hast thy lyvode, whils thou art alyve;
And yf thou myghtist se, thou shuldist nevir thryve.
Al the louse throughtout, save Beryn and his seris, Lawghid of Geffrey, that watir on their leris
Ran down from their eyen for his masid wit.

Wyth that cam the woman, hir tung was nat sclyt,
Wyth 15 burgeyfis, and women also fele, 2470
Her quarel for to preve, and Beryn to apele,
With a feir knave child yloke wythin their armys;
And gan to tel hir tale of wrongis, and of armys,
And eke of unkyndnes, untrowith, and falsheide,
That Beryn had ywrought to hir; that queyntlich from hir gede

Anoon oppon her wedding, when he his wyll had doon,

And brought hir wyth chyld, and lete hir sit aloon Wythout help and comfort from that day; and nowith

He proferid me nat to kys onys with his mowith:
As yistirday, sir steward, afore yew ecche word 2480
Was reherfid here, my pleynt is of record;
And this dey is me set for to have reson:
Let hym make amendis, or els tell encheson
Why hym ought nat fynd, as man ought his wyf.
These siltene burgeyfis quyklich al so blyve,
And as fele wymen as stode by hir ther,
Seyd that they were present when they weddit were;
And that every word that the woman seyde
Was trew, and eke Beryn had hir so betray'd.

Benedicite. qd Geffrey, Beryn hast thou a wyf?
Now have God, my trowith, the dayis of my lyf
I shall trust The the les, thou toldist me nat to fore
As wele of thy wedding, and of thy sone ybore.
Go to and kys them both, thy wyf and eke thyn heir:

Be thou nat ashamyd, for they both be feyr.
This wedding was right privy, but I shall make it couthe:

Behold thy sone, it semith crope out of thy mowith;
And eke of thy condicounne both soft and some.
Now am I glad thyn heir shall with us to Rome;
And I shall teche hym, as I can, whils that he is young 2500

Every day by the strete to gaðir houndis dung;
Tyll it be abill of prentyse to craft of Taverner taury;
And aftir I shall teche hym for to cache a fly,
And to mend mytens, when they been to tore,
And aftir to cloute shoun, when he is elder more:

Yit for his parentyne, to pipe, as doith a mowse,
I woll hym teche, and for to pike a snayl out of his howse,

And to berk, as doith an hound, and sey baw baw:
And turn round about, as a cat doith wyth a straw,
And to blete as doith a shepe, and ney as doith an hors, 2510

And to low as doith a cow: and as myn own corps
I woll cherissh hym every day, for his moðirs sake.
And gan to stappe ner the child, to have ytake,
As semed by his countenance, although he thought
nat so.

But moðir was evir ware, and blenchid to and fro,
And leyd hir hond betwene, and lokid somwhat wroth:

And Geffrey in pur wrath beshrewid them all both.
For by my trowith, qd Geffrey, wel masid is thy pan:

For I woll teche thy sone the craftis that I can,
That he in tyme to come myght win his lyvode.
To wex therfor angry thou art verry wood.

Of husbond, wyf, and sone, by the Trynyte,
I note wich is the wisest of them all thre.

No sothly, qd the steward; it liith all in thy noll,
Both wit and wysdom, and previth by thy poll.

For all be that Geffrey wordit sotilly,
The steward and the burgeyfis held it for foly,
All that evir he seyde, and toke it for good game,
And had full litill knowleche he was Geffrey the lame. 2530

Beryn and his company stode still as stone,
Betwene hope and drede, disware how it shuld goon:
Saff Beryn trist in party that Geffrey wold hym help,
But yit into that hour he had no cause to yelp: Wherfor they made much sorowe that dole was and pete.

Geffrey herd hym sigh fore; what devil is yew, qd he?
What nede yew be fory, whils I stond here?
Have I nat enfourmid yew how, and in what ma-
nere,

That I yew wold help, and bryng them in the snare?
Yf ye coud plede as well as I, full litill wold ye care.
Pluk up thy hert, qd Geffrey Beryn I speke to The;
Leve thy blab lewd, qd Beryn to hym age,
It doith no thing avall, that sorowe com on thy
hede;

It is nat worth a fly al that thou hast seyde.

Have we nat els now for to think oppon,
Saff here to jangill? Machyn rose anoon,
And went to the barr, and gan to tell his tale;
He was as fals as Judas, that set Criste at sale.

Sir steward, qd this Machyn, and the burgeyfis all Knowith wele how Melan with purpill, and with pall,

And othir marchandise, seven yere ago, 2550
Went toward Rome, and how that I also Have enquired sith, as reson woll and kynde,
Sith he was my faðir, to know of his ende.
For yit sith his departing, tyl it was yistirday,
Met I nevir creature that me coud wissh or say
Reedynes of my faðir, dede othir alyve:

But blefid be God in heren, in this thev'is sclyve
The knyff I gaff my faðir was yistirday yfound:
Sith I hym apele, let hym be fast ybound.

The knyff I know wel inowe; also the man stont here,
And dwellith in this town, and is a cotelere,
That made the same knyff wyth his too hondis;
That wele I woot there is noon like to sech al cristen londis:

For 3 preciose stonys been wythin the haft
Perfidlich yconchit, and sotillich by craft
Endendir in the haft, and that right coriously;
A saphir, and a salidone, and a rich ruby.

The

The cotelere cam lepeing forth with a bold chere;
And seyde to the steward, that Machyn told now
here

Every word is trewe; so beth the stonys set; 2570
I made the knyff my self, who myght know it bet;
And toke the knyff to Machyn, and he me pay'd wele
So is this felon guilty; there is no more to tell.

Up arose burgeyis by 2 by 3 by 4
And seyde they wer present, the same tyme and hour, When Machyn wept fore, and brought his fader's gownd,

And gaf hym the same knyff oppon the See strond.
Beth ther eny mo pleyntifs of record
Qd Geffrey to the steward? and he ageynward.
How semeth The, Gylhochet, beth ther nat inowghe?
Make thyn answer, Beryn, case that thou mowe:
For oon or othir thou must sey, although it nat a-
vaile;

And but thou lese or thou go, methinkith grete mervail.

Beryn goith to counsell, and his company:
And Geffrey bode behinde to her more and fe,
And to shew the burgeyse somewhat of his hert;
And seyde, but I make the pleyntifs for to smert,
And alle that them meynthenith for aught that is yseyd,

I woll grant yew to kut the eris fro my hede.
My master is at counsell, but counsell hath he noon:
For but I hym help, he is cleen undoon.

But I woll help hym al that I can, and meyntene hym
also

By my power and connyng, so I am bound ther'to.
For I durst wage battell wyth yew, though yee be strong,

That my maister is in the trowith, and ye be in the wrong:

For and we have lawe, I ne hold yew but distroied:
In yewr own falschede, so be yee now aspied.

Wherfor yit or eve I shal abate yewr pride;
That som of yew shal be right feyn to synk away and hide.

The burgeyses gon to lawgh, and scornyd hym ther'to. 2600

Gylhochet, qd Evander, and thou cowdist so
Bryng it thus about, it were a redy wey.

He is a good fool, qd Hanybald, in fay,
To put hymself aloon in strengith, and eke in wit, Ageyns all the burgeyis that on this bench sit.

What clatir is this, qd Machyn, al day with a sole?
Tyme is now to worch with som othir tole.

For I am certeyn of their answer that they wol fail;
And lyf for lyf of my fader, what may that avail?

Wherfor beth avisid, for I am in no doute, 2610
The goodis been sufficient to part al aboute:

So may every party pleyntif have his part.
That is reson, qd the blind, a trewe man thou art;

And eke it were untrowith and eke grete syn,
But eche of us that pleyntith myght somewhat wyn.

Hanybald bote his lippis, and herd them both wele;
Towching the marchandise o tale I shal yew tell,

And eke make a vow, and hold my behest,
That of the marchandise yewr part shall be lest:

For I have made a bargeyn, that may nat be undo,
I woll hold his covenant, and he shal myn also.

Up roos quylich the burgeyse Syrophanes;
Hanybald, qd he, the law goith by no lanys,

But hold ferth the streyt wey, even as doith a lyne:
For yistirday when Beryn with me did dyne,

I was the first person that put hym in arest:
And for he wold go large, thou haddist in charge
and hest

To fesc both ship and goodis, til I were answerid; Then must I first be servid, this knowith al men ylerid. 2630

The woman stode besidis, and cried wondir fast;
Ful soth is that byword, to put who comyth last,
He worst is servid; and so it farith by me:

Yit nethirles, Sir Steward, I trust to yewr lentè,
That knowith best my cause and my trewe entent;
I axe yew no more but rightful jugement.

Let me have part with othir, sith he my husbond is:
Good Sir beth avisid, I axe yew nat amys.

Thus they gon to stryve, and wer of high mode,
For to depart emong them othir mennys good, 2640

Wher they tofore had nevyr properte,
Ne nevyr shuld thereafter by doom of equitye;

But they had othir cause then they had tho.
Beryn was at counsell, his hert was full woo,

And his meyny sory, distrakt, and al amayide;
For tho they levid noon othir, but Geffrey had be-trayide,

Because he was so long, they could no maner rede;
But everich by hymself wisshid he had be dede.

O myghtful God, they seyde, I trow tofore this day,
Was nevyr gretter treson, fere, ne affray, 2650

Ywrought onto mankind, then now is to us here;
And namelich by this Geffrey with his sotil chere.

So feithful he made it he wold us help echone,
And now we be ymyryd he letith us sit aloon.

Of Geffrey, qd Beryn, be as it be may:
We mut answer nede, ther is noon othir way;

And therfor let me know your wit, and your counsaile;

They wept, and wrong their hondis, and gan to waile

The tyme that they wer bore, and shortly of the lyve

They wisshid that they wer; with that came Geffrey blive, 2660

Passing them towards, and began to smyle.
Beryn axid Geffrey, wher he had be al the while?

Have mercy oppon us, and help us as thou hight.
I wol help yow right wele, through Grace of Godd's might:

And I can tell yow tiding of their governaunce.
They stond in altercacioun and stryf in poynt to prauce

To depart your goodis; and levith verrily
That it wer impossibill yew to remedy.

But their high pride and their presumpcioun 2670
Shal be, yit or eve, their confusioun;

And to make amendis ech man for his pleynt.
Let se therfor your good avise, how they might be ateynt.

The Romeyns stode still, as who had shor their hede.
In feith, qd Beryn, we can no maner rede,

But in God, and yew, we submit us all,
Body, lyf, and goodis, to stond or to fall;

And nevyr for to travers o word that thou seyft:
Help us good Geffrey as wele as thou mayft. 2680

Deperdeux, qd Geffrey, and I woll do me peyn
To help yow as my connyng woll strech and ateyn.

The Romeyns went to barr, and Geffrey altofore
With a nice countenaunce, barefote, and to tore,

Pleying with a yerd, he bare in his honde;
And was evir wisilyng at every pasc comaunde.

The steward and the burgeyis had game inowghe
Of Geffrey's nice comyng, and hertlich lowghe;

And eche man seyde, Gylhochet, com nere;
Thow art right welcome, for thou makist us chere.

The same welcom, qd Geffrey, that yee woll us,
Fall oppon yewr hedis, I prey to God, and wers.

They held hym for a verrey sole, but he held them wel more:

And so he made them in breff tyme, all though they wer nat shore.

Styntith now, qd Geffrey, and let make pefe,
Of myrthis and of japis tyme is now to cefe,

And speke of othir mater that we have to doon:
For and we hew amys eny maner ston;
We know wele in certeyn what pardon we shul have:
The more is our nede us to defend and save.
My master hath be at counsell, and ful avisid is 2700
That I shall have the wordis, speke I wele or mys:
Wherfor, Sir steward, and ye burgeydis all, Sittith up right, and writith nat, for aventuris that may fall.

For and ye deme untréwly, or do us eny wrong,
Ye shall be refourmyd, be ye never so strong,
Of every poynt and injury, and that in grete haste;
For he is nat unknowe to us that may yow chaste.
Hold forth the right wey, and by no lide lanys.
And as towching the first pleyntif Syrophanes,
That pleyd with my master ystirday at ches, 2710
And made a certeyn covenante, who that had the wers

In the last game, al thoughe I wer nat there,
Shuld do the todir's bidding, whatsoevir it wer,
Or drynk all the watir that salt wer in the See;
Thus I rowe, Sir steward, ye woll record the ple:
And yf I have ymissid, in lettir, or in word,
The lawe wol I be rewliid aftir yewr record:
For we be ful avisid in this wise to answeere.
Evander the steward and al men that wer there
Had mervil much of Gessrey, that spak so redely, Whole wordis tofore semyd al foly;
And wer allynyed clen, and gan for to drede;
And evry man tyl othir lenyd with his hede;
And seyde, he reported the tale right formally;
He was no fole in certen, but wise, ware, and sely;
For he hath but yjapid us, and scornyd heretofore;
And we have hold hym a fole, but we be wel more.
Thus they stodied on Gessrey, and laughid tho right naught.

When Gessrey had aspied they wer in such thought,
And their hertis trobelid, pensyf, and anoyed; 2730
Hym lyst to dryve in bet the nayl, till they wer fully cloyid:

Soveren Sirs, he seyde, sith that it so is,
That in reporting of our ple ye fynd nothing amys,
As provirith wele yowr seience, eke ye withleyth nat
O word of our tale, but clene without spot;
Then to our answer I prey yow take hede;
For we wol sey al the trowith, right as it is in dede.
For this is soth and certen, it may nat be withseyd,
That Beryn that here stondith was thus ovirpleid
In the last game, when wagir was opon: 2740
But that was his sufferance, as ye shul here anon.
For in all this cete ther n'ys no maner man
Can pley betir at ches, then my mastir can;
Ne bet then I, though I it sey, can nat half so much:
Now how he lost it by his wyll, the cause I woll teche.
For ye wend and ween that ye had hym engyned;
But ye shul sele in every veyn that ye be undirmined,
And ybrought at ground, and eke ovirmusid.
And agens the fult that Beryn is acusid
Herith now ententylich: When we wer on the See,
Such a tempest on us fill, that noon myght othir se,
Of thundir, wynd, and lightenyng, and stormys ther
among;

Fiftene dayis during the tempest was so strong,
That eche man till othir began hym for to shryve;
And made their avowis, yf they myght have the lyve,
Som to se the sepulkir, and som to othir plase,
To sech holy seyntis for help and for grace;
Som to fast, and do pennaunce, and som do almyf-
dede:

Tyl at last, as God wold, a voise to us seyde,
In our most turment, and desperat of mynde, 2760
That yf we wold be saved, my maister must hym bynd
Be seith and eke be row, when he cam to lond,
To drink al the salt watir within the See strond;

Without drinking eny soper of the fresch watir:
And taught hym al the sotilte, how and in what ma-
nere

That he shuld wurch by engyne, and by a sotill charm,
To drink all the salt watir, and have hymself no harm;

But stop the fresch rivers by every cost side,
That they entir nat in the See thorough the world wyde.
The voise we herd, but naught we saw; so wer our witts ravid: 2770

For this was end fynally, yf we lust be saved.
Wherfor my master Beryn, when he cam to this port,
To his avow and promys he made his first resort,
Or that he wold bergeyn eny marchandise.
And right doith these marchandis in the same wise;
That maken their avowis in saving of their lyv'is;
They completyn their pilgremagis or they se their wyvis.

So mowe ye ondirstond, that my master Beryn
Of fre will was ymatid, as he that was a pilgrym,
And myght nat perfourm by many thousand part 2780
His avow and his best, wythout right sotil art,
Without help and strengith of many mennys myght.
Sir steward, and sir burgeyse, if we shul have right,
Sirophanes must do cost and aventure,
To stop al the fresch ryvers into the See that entir.
For Beryn is redy in al thing hym to quyte,
So he be in defaute must pay for the wite.
Sith ye been wise al; what nede is much clatir?
Ther was no covenante them betwene to drink fresch watir.

When Sirophanes had yherd al Gessrey's tale; 2790
He stode al abasheid, with colour wan and pale,
And lokid oppon the steward with a rewful chere,
And on othir frendship and neyghbours he had there;
And preyde them of counsell the answeere to reply.

These Romeyns, qd the steward, been wondir sely,
And eke right ymmagytyf, and of sotil art;
That I am in grete dowte how yee shul depart Without harm in oon side; our lawis, well thow woll,

Is to pay damagis, and eke also the cost
Of every party plentyf that fallith in his pleynt, 2800
Let hym go quyt I counsell, yf it may so be queynt.
I merveil, qd Sirophanes, of their sotilte;

But sith that it so stondith, and may noon othir be;
I do woll be counsell, and grauntrid Beryn quyte.
But Gessrey thought anothir, and without respite
Sirs, he seyde, me wetith wele that ye wol do us right,
And so ye must nedis, and so ye have us highre;
And therefore, sir steward, ye occupy our plase;
And ye know wele what law wol in this case:

My mastir is redy to perfourm his avow. 2810
But natheless, qd the steward, I cannot were how To stop all the fresch watir were possibillite.

Yis in soth, qd Gessrey, who had of gold plente
As man coude wish, and it myght well be do.
But that is nat our defaute, he hath no tresour to.
Let hym go to in haste, or find us suerte,
To make amendis to Beryn for his iniquite,
Wrong, and harm, and trespas, and undewe vexa-
cioune,

Lost of sale, and marchandise, difese, and tribula-
cioune,

That we have sustenyd thorough his iniquite. 2820
What vaylith it to tary us? for though ye sotil pry,
We shul have reson wher ye wol or no:

So woll we that ye knowe, what that we woll do;
In certen full avisid to llope for to pafe;
And declare every poynt, the more and eke the lase,
That of your opyn errours hath pleyn correctioun,
And ageyns his jugement is noon protectioun:
He is yewr lord riall, and soveren jugge, and lele;
That and ye work in eny poynt, to hym liith our apele

So when the steward had yherd, and the burgeyfis alle,
How Geffrey had ysteryd, that went so nighe the gall;
What for shame, and drede of more harm, and re-preffe,

They made Sirophanes, weer hym looth or leffe,
To take Beryn gage, and plegg find also,
To byde the ward and jugement of that he had mysdo.
Now ferthermore, qð Geffrey, sith that it so is,
That of the first pleyntyf we have sikernes;
Now to the marchant we must nedis answere,
That bergeyned with Beryn, al that his shippis bere,
In covaunte that he shuld his shippis fill ageyn
Of othir marchandise, that he tofore had seyn 2840
In Hanybald's plase, howfis to or thre,
Full of marchandise as they might be.

Let us pas thiðir, yf eny thing be there
At our lust and liking, as they acordit were.
I graunt wele, qð Hanybald, thow axist but righte.
Up arose these burgeyfis, thow axist but right;
The steward and his comperis entrid first the howse,
And saw nothing within, straw, ne leff, ne mowse,
Save tymbir, and the tyle stonys, and the wallis white.
I trow, qð the steward, the wyunnyng woll be but lite
That Beryn woll now get in Hanybald's pleynte:
For I can se noon othir but they woll be terynt:
And clepid them in echone, and went out hymselfe;
As sone as they were entrid, they saw no maner selve,
For foris of their hert; but as tofore is seyde,
The howse was cleen yfwept: then Geffrey feir they preyde

To help yf he coud; let me aloon, qð he,
Yit shul they have the wers as sotill as they be.
Evander the steward, in the mene while,
Spak to the burgeyse, and began to smyle; 2860 Though Sirophanes be yhold thes Romeyns for to curs;

Yit I trow that Hanybald woll put hym to the wers:
For I am suyr and certeyn, within they shul nat fynd.
What sey ye be my pleynt, sirs, qð the blynd?
For I make a vow, I woll nevyr cese
Tyl Sirophanes have of Beryn a pleynt relese;
And to make hym quyte of his submissioun:
Els wol I have no pete of his contritioun;
But folow hym al so ferly as I can or may,
Tyll I have his eyen both to away. 2870

Now in feith, qð Machyn, and I wol have his lyfe.
For though he scape yew all, with me woll he nat stryffe;

But be right feyn in hert all his good forsake,
For to scape wyth his lyf, and to me it take.
Beryn and his feleshyp wer within the house;
And speken of their answer, and made but litill rouse;
But evyr preyde Geffrey, to help yf he coud ought.
I woll nat fail, qð Geffrey, and was tofore bethought
Of to botirfliis, as white as eny snowe;
He lere them flee within the house, that astir on the wowe 2880

They clevid wondir fast, as their kynd woll,
Astir they had flew to rest anothir pull.
When Geffrey saw the botirfliis cleving on the wall,
The steward and the burgeyse in he gan call:
Lo! sirs, he sayd, whofo evyr repent,
We have chose marchandise most to our talent,
That we fynd herein. Behold, Sir Hanybal,
The yondir botirfliis that clevith on the wall;
Of such ye must fill our shippis al fyve.
Pluk up thy hert Beryn, for thow most nedis thryve:
For when we out of Rome in marchantfare went,
To purchase botirfliis was our most entent.
Yit woll I tell the cause especial and why:
There is a leche in Room, that hath ymade a cry
To make an oyntement to cure all tho ben blynde,
And al maner infirmytees, that growith in mankynde.

The day is short, the work is long: Sir Hanyball, ye mut hy.

When Hanybald herd this tale, he seyde pryvely
In counsell to the steward; in soth I have the wers:
For I am sikir by this pleynt that shall I litil purs. 2900
So me semeth, qð the steward, for in the world rounde

So many botirfliis wold nat be founde
I trow o ship to charge. Wherfor me thinkith best,
Let hym have his good ageyn, and be in pefe and rest.
And yit is an aventure and thow scape so,
Thy covaunt to relese without more ado.

The burgeyfis everichone, that were of that cete,
Were anoyid sore, when they herd of this plee.
Geffrey with his wisdom held them hard and streyte,
That they were acombrit in their own distreyte. 2910
When Hanybald with his frendis had spoke of this ma-
tere;

They drow them towards Beryn, and seid in this ma-
nere;

Oonly for botirfliis ye com fro your contrey;
And we you tell in sikirnes, and opon our fey,
That so many botirflyes we shul nevyr gete:
Wherefore we be avifid othirwise to trete;
That Hanybald shall relese his covaunt that is ma-
kid,

And delyver the good ageyn, that from you was ransakid;

And wexe you no more, but let you go in pefe.
Nay forsoth, qð Geffrey, us nedith no relese: 2920
Ye shul hold our covaunt, and we shul yours also;
For we shul have reson, wher ye woll or no,
Whils I hope is alyve, I am nothing aserd;
For I can wipe all this plee cleen from your berd,
And ye blench onys out of the high wey.

Thei proferid hym plegg and gage, without more de-
ley.

Now ferthirmore, qð Geffrey, us ought to procede:
For to the blynd mann's poynt we must answer nede;
That, for to tell trowith, he lyvith all to long,

For his own fawte, and his own wrong, 2930
On Beryn he hath surmysid, as previth by his plee:
And that ye shul opynlich know wele and see.

For as I undirstode hym, he seyde that fele yeris
Beryn, that here stondith, and he, were peryneris
Of wyunnyng and of lesyng, as men it use and doith;

And that they chaugir eyen, and yit this is sothe:
But the cause of chaunging yit is to yow onknow:
Wherfore I woll declare it, both to high and lowe
In that same tyme that this burgeyse blynd,
And my master Beryn, as fast as feith might bynde,
Were marchaundis in comyn of al that they myght
wyn,

Saff of lyf, and lym, and of dedely syn;
Ther fill in tho marchis of al thing such a derth,
That joy, comfort, and solas, and al maner myrth
Was exilid cleen; saff oonly molestatioun,
That abood contenuell, and also dispiratioun.

So when that the pepill wer in most myschessie;
God that is above, that al thing doith releve,
Sent them such plente of mony, fruyte, and corn,
Wich turnid al to joy their mournyng al to forny; 2950
Then gaf they them to mirth, revel, pley, and song;

And thankid God above, evyr more among
Of their relevacioun from woo into gladnes:
For astir four when swete is com, it is a plesant mes.

So in the meen whie of this prosperite,
Ther cam such a pleyer into the same contre,
That nevyr thertofores was seyn such anothir;

That wele was the cecture that born was of his moðir,
That myght se the mirthis of this jogeloure:
For of the world wide tho dayis he bare the floure.

For there n'as man ne woman in that regioun,
That set of hymself the flore of a boton,

Yf he had not fey his myrthis and his game.
 So oppon a tyme, this pleyer did proclame
 That al manere of pepill his pleyis wold fe,
 Shuld com oppon a certen dey to the grete cete:
 Then among othir, my master here Beryn
 And this same blynd, that pledith now with hym,
 Made a certen covenant, that they wold fe
 The mervellis of this pleyer, and his sotilte: 2970
 So what for hete of somir, age, and febilnes,
 And eke also the long way, this blynd for werryne
 Fill flat adown to the erth, o fote ne myght he go;
 Wherfor my master Beryn in hert was full woo,
 And seyde, my frende, how now? mow ye no farther pas?
 No, he seyde, by hym that first made mas:
 And yit I had levir, as God my soule save,
 Se thes wondir pleyis then all the good I have.
 I cannat els, qd Beryn, but yf it may nat be,
 But that ye and I mut retourn age, 2980
 Astir ye be refreschid of your werynes;
 For to leve yew in this plite it wer no gentilnes.
 Then seyde this blynd, I am avisid bet:
 Beryn, ye shull wend thiðir without eny let;
 And have myn eyen with yew, that they the pley mow fe;
 And I woll have yeurs tyll ye come age.
 Thus was their covenant made, as I to yow report,
 For ese of this blynd, and most for his comfort.
 But wotith wele the whole science of all surgery
 Was unyd, or the chaunge was made of both eye, 2990
 With many sotill enchantours, and eke nygramancers,
 That sent were for the nonys, mastiris and scoleris;
 So when all was complete, my mastir went his wey
 With this mann's eyen, and saw all the pley;
 And hastily retourned into that plase age;
 And fond this blynd seching on hondis and on kne,
 Grasping all aboute to fynd that he had lore,
 Beryn his both eyen that he had tofore:
 But as sone as Beryn had pleyn knowleche
 That his eyen were ylost, unneth he myght areche
 O word, for pure anguysh that he toke sodenly,
 And from that day till now ne myght he nevir spy
 This man in no plase, ther law was ymevid;
 But now in his presence the soth is full yprevid;
 That he shall make amendis or he hens pas;
 Right as the lawe wol deme, ethir more or las.
 For my mastir's eyen were betir and more clere
 Then thes that he hath now, to se both fer and nere;
 So wold he have his own, that propir were of kynd:
 For he is evir redy, to take to the blynde 3010
 The eyen that he had of hym, as covenant was;
 So he woll do the same. Now, soverens, in this case
 Ye mut take hede for to deme right;
 For it wer no reson my mastir shuld lese his sight,
 For his trew hert and his gentilnes.
 Beryn, qd the blind, tho I woll The relese,
 My quarell, and my cause, and fall fro my pleynt.
 Thow mut nede, qd Geoffrey, for thow art areynt:
 So mut thow profir gage, and borowis fynd also,
 For to make amendis, as othir have ydo. 3020
 Sir steward do us law, sith we desire but right:
 As we been pefe marchandis, us longith nat to fight;
 But pleyn us to the law, yf so we be agrevid.
 Anoon opon that Geoffrey thes wordis had ymevid,
 The blynd man fond borowis for all his maletalent,
 And were yentrid in the court to byde the jugement:
 For thoughe that he blynde were, yit had he good
 plente,
 And more wold have wonne through his iniquite.
 Now herith sirs, qd Geoffrey, thre pleyntifs been affu-
 rid:
 And as anenst the ferth, this woman hath arerid 3030
 That pleyntith here on Beryn, and seyth she is his wyfe,
 And that she hath many a dey led a peynous lyfe,

And much forow endurid his child to sustene,
 And al is soth and trew: now rightfullich to deme
 Whether of them both shall othir obey,
 And folowe will and lustis, sir steward, ye mutsey.
 And therewith Geoffrey lokid aside on this woman;
 How she chaungit colours, pale, and eke wan:
 All for nought, qd Geoffrey, for ye mut with us go;
 And endure with your husbond both wele and woo:
 And wold have take her by the hond; but she away did breyde,
 And with a grete sighing, thes wordis she feyd;
 That ageyns Beryn she wold plede no more:
 But gaged with too borowis, as othir had do tofore.
 The steward sat as still, as who had shor his hede;
 And specially the pleyntifs were in much drede.
 Geoffrey set his wordis in such maner wise,
 That wele they wist they myght nat scape in no wise,
 Without los of goodis, for damage, and for cost;
 For such wer their lawis, wher pleyntis wer ylost. 3050
 Geoffrey had full perseyte of their encombirment;
 And eke he was in certen that the jugement
 Shuld pas with his mastir. Wherfor he anoon, Soveren sirs, he seyde, yit must we ferthir goon;
 And answe to this Machyn, that seith the knife is his
 That found was on Beryn, therof he seith nat amys.
 And for more prefe he seith in this manere
 That here stondith present the same cotelere
 That the knyfe made, and the precious stonys thre
 Within the haft been couchid, that in crystyanite, 3060
 Thoughe men wold of purpose make serch and seche, Men shuld nat fynd in al thing a knyfe that were it liche:
 And more opyn prefe than mann's own knowleche
 Men of law ne clerkis con nat tell ne teche.
 Now sith we be in this manere thus ferforth ago,
 Then were spedfull for to know, how Beryn cam first to
 To have possessioun of the knyfe, that Machyn seith is his:
 To yew unknowe I shall enfourm the trowith as it is.
 Now 7 yere and passid opon a tuisday
 In the passioun-week, when men leven pley, 3070
 And use more devocioun, fastyng, and preyer,
 Then in othir tyme, or seson of the yere;
 This Beryn's faðir erlich wold arise,
 And barefote go to chirch to Godd's servise,
 And lay hymself aloon from his own wyfe,
 In reverence of the tyme, and mending of his lyfe.
 So on the same tuisday, that I tofore nempt,
 This Beryn rose, and rayd hym, and to the chirch went,
 And mervelid in his hert his faðir was nat there:
 And homeward went ageyn, with drede, and eke
 fere, 3080
 Into his faðir's chambir, sodenlich he rakid,
 And fond hym ligg standede, oppon the straw al nakid,
 And the clothis halid from the bed away.
 Out alas! qd Beryn, that evir I saw this dey!
 The meyne herd the noise, how Beryn cried alas!
 And cam into the chambir, al that therein was;
 But the dole, and the sorowe, and anguysh that was
 there,
 It vaylith nat at this tyme to declare it here;
 But Beryn had most of all, have ye no doute:
 And anoon they serchid the body al aboute, 3090
 And fond this same knyfe, the poynt right at his hert
 Of Beryn's faðir, whose teris gan outstert
 When he drowgh out the knyfe of his faðir's wound:
 Then standede I saw hym fall down to the ground,
 In sight of the most part that beth with hym now
 here;
 And they aftermyd it for soth, as Geoffrey did them
 lere:

And

And yit had I nevir suspicioun, from that day tyll noweth,
Who ded that cursed dede; tyll Machyn with his moweth

Afore yew hath knowlechild that the knyfe is his:
So mut he nedis answer for his deth, ywis. 3100

When Machyn had yherd al Geffrey's tale,
He rose of bench sodenly, with colour wan, and pale,
And seyde unto Beryn; Sir ageyn The
I woll plete no more; for it wer gret pete
To combir yew with actions, that beth of nobill kynde.
Graunt mercy Sir qd Geffrey, but yit ye shull fynde Borrowis, or ye pas, amendis for to make
For our undewe Vexacioun, and gage also us take In sign of submyssioun for your injury,
As law woll and reson; for we woll uttirly 3110
Procede tyll we have jugement finall:

And ther'for, Sir Steward, what that evir fall,
Delay us no longer, but gyve us jugement:
For tristith ye noon othir, but we be fullich bent
To Ifope for to wend, and in his high presence
Reherce al our ptees, and have his sentence:
Then shull ye make fynys, and highlich be agrevid.
And as sone as the Steward herd thes wordis mevid, Reson ryght and law, scyd the Steward tho,
Ye mut nedis have, wher I woll or no. 3120

And to preve my full wyll, or we terther goon, Quicklich he commaundit, and sparid nevir oon.
24 Burgeyis in law best ylerid,
Reherfing them the ptees, and how Geffrey answerid,
And on lyf, and lym, and forsetur of good,
And as they wold nat lese the ball within their hood
To draw a-part togiðir, and by their all assent
Spare no man on lyve to gyve trew jugement:
And when thes 24 Burgeyis had yherd
The charge of the Steward; right fore they wer aferd
To lese ther own lyvis, but they demed trowith;
And eke of their neybours they had grete rowith.
For they perseyvid clerlich, in the plee throughout,
Their frendis had the wors side, ther'of they had no dout.
And yf we deme trewly, they woll be fore anoyid;
Yit it is betir then we be shamyd and distroyid.
And anon they wer acordit, and scyd with Beryn,
And demed every pleyntif to make a grete lyne
With Beryn, and hym submyt hoolich to his grace,
Body, good, and catell, for wrong and their trespass; 3140
So forth, tyll at last it was so bonte ybore,
That Beryn had the doubill good, that he had tofore:
And wyth joy and myrth, wyth all his company,
He droughe hym to his shippis ward, wyth long, and melody.

The Steward and the Burgeyse from the Court bent,
Into their own placis; and evir as they went,
They talkid of the Romeyns, how sorill they wer,
To aray hym like a sole, that for them shuld answer.
What vaylith it, qd Hanybald, to angir or to curs?
And yit I am in certen, I shall fare the wers 3150
All the dayis of my lyfe, for this day's pleding;
And so shal al the Remnaunt; and their hondis wryng, Both Syrophanes, and the blynd, the Woman, and Ma-chyn,

And be bet avisid er they estsonys pleyne;
And al othir persounys wythyn this Cete
Mell the les wyth Romeyns, whils they here be;
For such anothir sole was nevir yit yborn;
For he did naught ellis but evir with us scorn,
Tyll he had us caught, even by the shyn,
With his sotill wittis, in our own grene. 3160

Now woll I retourn to Beryn ageyn:
That of his grete lukir in hert was right feyne;
And so was all his meyne, as them ought wele,
That they wer so delyverid from turment like to hell;
And graciously relevid out of ther grete myschef,
And yset above in comfort and bouchef.

Now in soth, quoð Beryn, it may nat be denied,
N'ad Geffrey, and his witt be, we had be distroyid:
Ithankid be Almyghty God Omnipotent,
That for our Consolacioun Geffrey to us sent: 3170
And in protest opynly, here among yew alle,
Half my good, whils that I lyve, whatever me befall,
I graunt it here to Geffrey, to gyve, or to sell,
And nevir to part from me, yf it wer his wyl;
And fare as well as I, a morrow and eke on eve,
And nevir for man on lyve his company for to leve.
Graunt mercy Sir, quoð Geffrey, yewr proflir is feir and grete;

But I desire no more, but as ye me behete,
To bryng me at Room, for this is Covenante.
It shall be do, [qd] Beryn, and all the Remnaunt. 3180
Deperdeux. qd Geffrey, ther'of we shull wele do:
He rayid hym othirwise; and without wordis mo,
They went to the dyner the hole company,
With pipis, and wyth trompis, and othir melody;
And in the myddis of their mete, gentil Women fyve,
Maidens fresch atirid, as myght be on lyve,
Com from the Duke Ifope, lord of that Regioun,
Everich wyth a present, and that of grete renown:
The first bare a cup of gold, and of asure fyne,
So corouse and so nobill, that I can nat devyne. 3190
The second brought a swerd yshethid, wyth seyntur
Istetid all with perelorient and pure.

The third had a Mantell, of lusty fresch colour;
The uttir part of purpill, yfurrid with pelour.
The fersth a cloth of gold, a worthy and a riche,
That nevir man tofore saw cloith it liche.
The fift bare a palme, that stode tofore the deyle,
In tokyn and sign of trowith and pefe:
For that was the custum through all the contray.
The message was the levir and more plesant to pay: 3200
The cup was uncoverid, the swerd was out ybrayid,
The mantell was unfold, the cloth along ylayid;
They knlid adown echone right tofore Beryn;
The first did the messagè, that taught was wel and fyne:
Ifope, she seyde, Sir Beryn, that is our Lord riail,
And gretith yew, and sendith yew thes presentis all;
And joy hath of yewr wisdom, and of yewr gover-
naunce;

And preyd you to com and have with hym plesance
To morowe, and se his palyse, and to sport you there, Yee and a lyour company. Beryn made noon answer,
But sat styll, and beheld the Women, and the sondis;
And afterward avisely the swerd first he hondis;
And commaundit therewithall the Wymmen wassh and sit,

And pryvelich chargit Officers, that with al their wit
To serve them of the best, and make them hertly chere; Resleyving al the presentis in worshiþful manere.

I cannot wele expresse the joy that they had:
But I suppose, tofore that day, that they wer nat so glad,
That they wer so ascapid fortune and myschefe;
And thonkid God above that al thing doith relesce. 3220
For astir mysty cloudis ther comth a cler soune;
So astir bale comyth bote, whofo hyde conne.

The joy and nobley that they had, whils they wer at mete,

It vaylith nat at this tyme ther'of long to trete.
But Geffrey sat with Beryn, as he had servid wele,
Their hedis they leyde togiðir, and begon to tell
In what maner the Wymen shuld be answered.
Geffrey evir avisid Beryn ther'of he leryd,
And of othir thingis, how he hym shuld govern:
Beryn faverid wele ther'on, and fast he gan to lern. 3230
When all wer up, the Wymmen cam to take their leve;
Beryn, as fat hym wele of blode, them toward gan releve,
And preyd them hertly hym to recommend Unto the worthy Lordship of Ifope; that you send To me that am unworthy, save of his grete nobley;
And thank hym of his gyftis, as ye can best and fey.

To morow I woll be redy his hest to fulfill;
 With this I have save condit, I may com hym tyll,
 For me, and al my feleship, salf to com and go;
 Trusting in his discrecioun, that thoughe I ax so, 3240
 He wol nat be displeid: for in my Contray
 It hath evir be the custom, and is into this day,
 That yf a Lord riall desirith for to see
 Eny maner persone, that is of las degre;
 Er he approche his presence, he wol have in his honde
 A salf condit enfeld, or els som othir bonde,
 That he may com and pas without disturbaunce;
 Throughout all our Marchis it is the observaunce.
 Thus Wymmen toke their leve without wordis mo;
 Repeyring onto Ifope, and al as it was do 3250
 They reherfid redely, and faylid nevir a word,
 To Ifope with his Baronage ther he sat at his borde,
 Talking fast of Romainys, and of their high prudence,
 That in so many daungers made so wise defence.
 But as sone as Ifope had pleylich yherd
 Of Beryn's governaunce, that first sefid the swerd,
 Afore al othir presentis; he demed in hys minde,
 That Beryn was ycom of som nobill kynde.
 The nyght was past, the morowe cam; Ifope had nat forgete:
 He chargit Barons twelf with Beryn for to mete, 3260
 To cond hym salf, and his meyne; and al perfourmyd
 was.
 Thre dayis ther they sportid hym in myrth and solas;
 That throughe the wise instructioun of Geffrey, nyght and dey,
 Beryn plesid Ifope with wordis al to pay;
 And had hym so in port, and in governaunce,
 Of all honest myrthis, and witty daliaunce,
 That Ifope cast his chere to Beryn so groundly,
 That at last ther was no man with Ifope so pryvy:
 Resorting to his shippis, comyng to and fro, Throughe the wit of Geffrey, that eche day it fil so, 3270

That Ifope coude no wher chere, when Beryn was absent:

So Beryn must nedis eche day be aftir sent;
 And chefe he was of counsell, within the first yere;
 Thorough the wit of Geffrey, that eche dey did hym
 lere.

This Ifope had a doughtir, betwene hym and his wyfe,
 That was as feir a creature as myght bere lyfe, Wyse, and eke bountevouse, and benyng with all;
 That heir shuld be, aftir his dey, of his Lordshippis alle.
 So shortly to conclude, the Mariage was made Betwene hir and Beryn; many a man to glade, 3280 Saff the Burgeyis of the Town, of falshe that were rote:

But they wer evir hold so low ondir fote;
 That they might nat regne, but at last sawe
 To leve their condicioun, and their fals lawe:
 Beryn and Geffrey made them so tame,
 That they amendit eche dey, and gat a betir name.
 Thus Geffrey made Beryn his enemyes to ovircom,
 And brought hym to worship thouroughe his wysdom.
 Now God us graunt grace to fynde such a frende,
 When we have nede: And thus I make an ende. 3290

CHAUCER's Wordes unto his own Scrivenere.

A Dam Scrivenere, yf ever it The befall Boece or Troiles for to write new Under thy longe lockes thou maist have the scalle
 But after my makynge thou write more true
 So ofte adaye I mote thy werke renew
 It to correcte and eke to rubbe and scrape
 And al is thorow thy negligence and rape.
